- (26) Or who is converted while I am not with you (v. Rashi, a.l.) i.e., while Israel is in exile and forsaken by God.
- (27) Isa. LIV, 15, according to the Midrashic interpretation of R. Eleazar. The rt. גור which E.V. renders 'to gather' is here interpreted 'to become a proselyte', 'to be converted'.
- (28) The suspicion.
- (29) Who were present during the misconduct.
- (30) Lit., 'I would say'.
- (31) Lit., 'dozing and lying'.
- (32) V. supra p. 147. nn. 9' 12 and 13.
- (33) To whom she was married after her first husband had divorced her.
- (34) The paramour.
- (35) V. supra note 3.
- (36) By his marriage. The testimony of the witnesses surely caused her to be permanently prohibited to the paramour.
- (37) Why the paramour need not divorce her once he has married her.
- (38) How then could Rab maintain that she is taken away Only where there are witnesses?
- (39) The paramour.
- (40) Only if he already married her may she in this case remain with him.
- (41) That the paramour must divorce her.
- (42) From the first husband.
- (43) A divorce would be regarded as a confirmation of the suspicion, and the children would thereby be tainted as bastards.
- (44) Lit., 'uncleanness'.
- (45) The paramour.
- (46) Which shews, contrary to the Opinion of Rab, that when see has no children 'she is to part from her paramour even where witnesses are not available.
- (47) הוציאה lit., 'they (i.e. Beth din) took her away'.
- (48) הוציאה, lit., 'he (i.e., the husband) brought her out'.
- (49) No wife may be taken away from her husband because of a mere rumour or suspicion.
- (50) Which requires a wife who had no children to leave her husband even where no witnesses are available.
- (51) Who forbids a wife to her husband even on the grounds of a rumour or suspicion. According to the other Rabbis, however, who are the majority, the woman, as Rab said, need not be taken away where no witnesses are available, even if she has no children.
- (52) רוכל Rashi explains rokel as dealer in women's perfumes.
- (53) The סינר was a kind of breech-cloth or petticoat women wore as a matter of chastity (v. Rashi, a.l.).
- (54) Even if there were no witnesses that misconduct took place.
- (55) After the pedlar had left the house.
- (56) Only the woman lying face upwards could have spat on that spot Intercourse may. therefore, be suspected.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 25a

if shoes¹ lie under the bed, since the thing is ugly,² she must, said Rabbi, go.³ 'Shoes'?⁴ One can surely see whose they are! — Say rather the marks⁵ of shoes.⁶

The law is in accordance with the view of Rab,⁷ and the law is in accordance with the view of Rabbi.⁸

This, then, represents a contradiction between one law and the other! — There is no contradiction. One⁹ refers to a rumour that had ceased;¹⁰ the other, to a rumour that had not ceased. Where the rumour has not ceased, though no witnesses are available, [the law is] according to Rabbi; where the rumour has ceased but witnesses are available [the law is] according to Rab.

For how long [must a rumour continue in order to be regarded] as uninterrupted? Abaye replied: Mother¹¹ told me that a town rumour¹² [must remain uncontradicted for] a day and a half. This has been said Only in the case where It was not interrupted in the meantime. If, however, it was interrupted in the meantime, well, it was interrupted.¹³ This, however, is only when the interruption was not due to intimidation, but if it was due to intimidation, well, it was due to intimidation.¹⁴ This,¹⁵ however, has been said only in the case where no enemies are about, but where enemies are about, well, it must have been the enemies who published the rumour.¹³

We learned elsewhere: If a man divorced his wife because of a bad name,¹⁶ he must not remarry her; if on account of a vow he must not remarry her.¹⁷ Rabbah son of R. Huna¹⁸ sent to Rabbah son of R. Nahman: Will our Master Instruct us as to whether he¹⁹ must part with her if he did remarry her? The other replied: We have learnt It: IF A MAN IS SUSPECTED OF INTERCOURSE WITH A MARRIED WOMAN WHO [IN CONSEQUENCE] WAS TAKEN AWAY FROM HER HUSBAND²⁰ HE MUST LET HER GO EVEN THOUGH HE HAS MARRIED HER!²¹ He said to him: Are these two cases at all alike? There²² she was taken away;²³ here he²⁴ had let her go.²⁵

And Rabbah son of R. Nahman?²⁶ — In our Mishnah also we learned, ‘He let her go’.²⁷ But even now, are they at all alike? Here²⁸ it is the husband;²⁹ there³⁰ it is the seducer!³¹ — The other replied: They are indeed alike.³² For here³⁰ the Rabbis said, ‘he³³ must not marry her, and if he did marry he must let her go’ and there²⁷ also the Rabbis would Say, ‘he³⁴ must not remarry her and if he did remarry he must let her go’. This, however, is not [much of an argument]. There³⁰ he lends colour to the rumour,³⁵ while here it might well be assumed that he³⁴ investigated the rumour and found it to be groundless. MISHNAH. A MAN WHO BRINGS A LETTER OF DIVORCE FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA³⁶ AND STATES, ‘IT WAS WRITTEN IN MY PRESENCE AND IT WAS SIGNED IN MY PRESENCE’, MUST NOT MARRY THE [DIVORCER'S] WIFE.³⁷ [SIMILARLY, IF HE STATES]. ‘HE DIED’, ‘I KILLED HIM’, OR ‘WE KILLED HIM’, HE MUST NOT MARRY HIS WIFE. R. JUDAH SAID:

[IF THE STATEMENT IS], ‘³⁶ KILLED HIM’, THE WOMAN MAY NOT MARRY [ANY ONE];³⁸ [IF, HOWEVER, IT IS], ‘WE KILLED HIM’,

THE WOMAN MAY MARRY AGAIN.³⁹

GEMARA. The reason then⁴⁰ is because he came FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, in which case we have to entirely upon him;⁴¹ but [had he come] from the Land of Israel, in which case we need not depend upon him,⁴² would he have been allowed to marry the divorcer's wife? But, surely, when the Statement is, ‘HE DIED’, in which case we do not depend entirely upon him since a Master said, ‘a woman⁴³ makes careful inquiry before she marries’⁴⁴ and yet it was stated, HE MUST NOT MARRY HIS WIFE! — There,⁴⁵ no document exists, but here⁴⁶ a document⁴⁷ does exist. For thus we have learned: Wherein lies the difference between [the admissibility of] a letter of divorce and [that of evidence of] death?⁴⁸ In that the document⁴⁷ supplies the proof.⁴⁹

[SIMILARLY, IF HE STATES], ‘HE DIED’, ‘I KILLED HIM’, OR ‘WE KILLED HIM’, HE MUST NOT MARRY HIS WIFE. Only he, then, must not marry his wife, she, however, may be married to another man? But, surely, R. Joseph said: [If a man stated], ‘So-and-so committed pederasty with me against my will’, he and any other witness may be combined⁵⁰ to procure his execution; [if, however, he said], ‘with my consent’,⁵¹ he is a wicked man concerning whom the Torah said, Put not thy hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness!⁵² And were you to reply that matrimonial evidence⁵³ is different because the Rabbis have relaxed the law in its case,⁵⁴ surely, [it may be pointed out], R. Manasseh stated:

- (1) So MSS. Cur. edd. add. 'overturned'.
 - (2) The shoes indicating the presence of an unknown stranger on the bed.
 - (3) Even if there were no witnesses that misconduct took place.
 - (4) So MSS. Cur. edd. add. 'overturned'.
 - (5) Lit., 'place of', i.e., the shoes have left marks on the floor.
 - (6) Cur. edd. contain the following addition. 'Overturned under the bed, said Rabbi, since the thing is ugly she shall go'. All this with the exception of the first word is enclosed in parentheses. Cf. Rashal.
 - (7) That no rumour or suspicion is to be relied upon in forbidding a wife to her husband. Only the evidence of witnesses may be acted upon.
 - (8) Cf. supra p. 150, n. 7.
 - (9) The law according to Rab.
 - (10) I.e., when a contradictory rumour obtained currency.
 - (11) His foster-mother. V. Kid. 31b.
 - (12) דומי, 'suspicion' or 'gossip'.
 - (13) And it cannot any more be regarded as 'an uninterrupted rumour'.
 - (14) The force of the rumour is not thereby impaired.
 - (15) That an uninterrupted rumour is relied upon.
 - (16) Suspected immorality.
 - (17) V. Git., Sonc. ed. pp. 200ff, q.v. notes.
 - (18) So Emden. Cur. edd: Omit 'R'.
 - (19) Who divorced his wife 'because of a bad name'.
 - (20) [So MS.M. in conformity with the text of our Mishnah. Cur. edd.: and he had let her go.]
 - (21) So also in the case under discussion, though he married her, he must part from her.
 - (22) In our Mishnah.
 - (23) By the Beth din acting on the evidence of witnesses.
 - (24) Her husband at his own discretion.
 - (25) And the prohibition to remarry her is only Rabbinical. Hence it is possible that once he has remarried her he need not part from her.
 - (26) How can he draw a comparison between two dissimilar cases?
 - (27) Though there were no witnesses. Consequently, the woman is forbidden to her paramour Rabbinically only on the ground of suspicion (cf. supra p. 148. n. 10) and yet it was stated that he must part with her, which proves that even where the prohibition to marry is Rabbinical only (cf. supra note 9) the woman must be parted from the man.
 - (28) Rabbah b. R. Huna's enquiry.
 - (29) Whose remarriage of his former wife is obviously not suggestive of any immorality.
 - (30) Our Mishnah.
 - (31) Whose marriage with the woman undoubtedly lends colour to the rumoured suspicion. In such circumstances it is quite reasonable to order their separation. How can this, however, be used as an example for the case in the enquiry? (Cf. supra n. 13).
 - (32) Since the prohibition in both cases is only Rabbinical.
 - (33) Her paramour.
 - (34) The woman's former husband.
 - (35) Lit., 'he enforces the rumour'. Cf. supra n. 15.
 - (36) מדינת הים, lit., 'country of the sea', a term applied to all countries of the world exclusive of Palestine and Babylonia.
 - (37) Since the validity of the divorce is entirely dependent on his word (v. infra n. 6) he may be suspected of giving false evidence with a view to marrying the woman himself. As, however, a woman is permitted to marry even if only a single witness had testified to the death of her husband, she is allowed to marry any other man.
 - (38) Having admitted murder he cannot any longer be regarded as a reliable witness.

- (39) This is explained infra.
- (40) Why the man who brings the letter of divorce may not marry the divorcer's wife.
- (41) The divorce not being valid unless the carrier of the letter of divorce can testify that it was written and signed in his presence. (V. Git. 20).
- (42) Reliance being placed on the qualified scribes of Palestine, there is no need for the carrier of a letter of divorce to declare that he witnessed the writing and the signing of it.
- (43) Ab death of whose husband is attested by one witness Only.
- (44) And for this reason is allowed to remarry. Infra 53 b, 115a. 116b.
- (45) In the case of evidence of death.
- (46) Divorce.
- (47) The letter of divorce.
- (48) I.e., why are certain relatives accepted as legally qualified. carriers of a letter of divorce but not as witnesses to the death of a husband?
- (49) V. Git. 23b, infra 117a.
- (50) The two together forming a pair of witnesses, the minimum required for bringing about a man's condemnation by a court of law.
- (51) Was the crime committed.
- (52) Ex. XXIII, which shews that a man who admitted a criminal offence may not act as a witness at all!
- (53) In allowing a woman to marry on the evidence of the death of her husband.
- (54) In other cases two witnesses are required and in this case one is sufficient.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 25b

'One who is Rabbinically regarded as a robber¹ is eligible to be a witness in matrimonial matters;² one, however, who is Biblically regarded as a robber is ineligible to act as witness in matrimonial matters;³ would it then be necessary to assume that R. Manasseh holds the same opinion as R. Judah?⁴ - R. Manasseh can answer you: My statement may be reconciled even with the view of the Rabbis, but the reason of the Rabbis⁵ here is the same as that of Raba. For Raba said, 'A man is his own relative and consequently⁶ no man may declare himself wicked'.

Must it then be assumed that R. Joseph⁷ is of the same opinion as R. Judah?⁸ — R. Joseph can answer you: 'My Statement may be in agreement even with the view of the Rabbis, but matrimonial evidence⁹ is different, since the Rabbis relaxed the law in its case;¹⁰ and it is R. Manasseh who adopted the view of R. Judah'.

'I KILLED HIM' etc., 'WE KILLED HIM ... MAY MARRY etc. What is the practical difference between 'I killed him' and 'we killed him'?¹¹ — Rab Judah said: [Our Mishnah speaks of the case] where he said, 'I was present together with his murderers' —¹² Has it not, however, been taught: They said to R. Judah, 'It once happened that a robber when led out to his execution in the Cappadocian Pass¹³ said to those present,¹⁴ "Go and tell the wife of Simeon b. Kohen that I killed her husband when I entered Lud" [others Say: When he entered Lud], and his wife was permitted to marry again'¹⁵ He answered them: Is there any proof from there? [It was a case] where he said, 'I was present together with his murderers'.¹² But it was stated, 'a robber'! — He was apprehended on account of robbery.¹⁶ But it was stated, 'led out to his execution'! — [He was sentenced by] a heathen court of law who executed without due investigation.¹⁷

MISHNAH. A SAGE WHO HAS PRONOUNCED A WOMAN FORBIDDEN TO HER HUSBAND BECAUSE OF A VOW¹⁸ MUST NOT MARRY HER HIMSELF.¹⁹ IF, HOWEVER, A WOMAN MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL²⁰ OR PERFORMED HALIZAH IN HIS PRESENCE, HE MAY MARRY HER, SINCE HE [WAS BUT ONE OF THE] BETH DIN.²¹

GEMARA. This implies that if he had disallowed her vow, he would have been permitted to marry her!²² What then are the circumstances?²³ If [he acted] alone, could one disallow a vow? Surely²⁴ R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Amram that it was taught: The disallowance of vows is to be carried out by three! If, however, three were Present, would they be suspected? Surely we learned, IF, HOWEVER, A WOMAN MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL OR PERFORMED HALIZAH IN HIS PRESENCE, HE MAY MARRY HER, SINCE HE [WAS BUT ONE OF THE] BETH DIN!-The fact is that [he acted] alone, and²⁵ as R.

Hisda said in the name of R. Johanan, 'By a fully qualified individual',²⁶ so here also it is a case of one fully qualified individual.²⁶

IF A WOMAN MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, OR PERFORMED HALIZAH etc. The reason, then,²⁷ is because [he was one of a] Beth din,²⁸ but had he been one of a group of two only. would he not [have been permitted]? Wherein, then, does this case differ from the following concerning which it was taught:²⁹ If witnesses signed on [a document relating to] a purchased field or on a letter of divorce, the Rabbis do not apprehend such collusion!³⁰ — It is this very thing that he taught us,³¹ viz., that the opinion of him who said that a declaration of refusal may be made in the presence of two is to be rejected and that one is to infer³² that a declaration of refusal must be made in the presence of three.³³

The question was raised: If he³⁴ married her³⁵ must he part from her? R. Kahana said: Though he married, he must part from her. R. Ashi said: Once he has married, he need not part from her.

R. Zuti at the School of R. Papa recited [a teaching] in accordance with the opinion of him who said that if he³⁴ married her³⁵ he need not part from her. Said the Rabbis to R. Ashi: Is this³⁶ a tradition or a matter of opinion? He answered them: It is a Mishnah: If a man is suspected of intercourse with a slave who was subsequently emancipated, or with a heathen who subsequently became a proselyte, lo, he must not marry her; if, however, he did marry her the marriage need not be dissolved. Which proves

(1) A gambler, for instance, who is not Biblically forbidden to act as a witness. V. R.H. 220.

(2) V. note 4.

(3) Which proves that even in matrimonial matters a murderer (a man Biblically regarded as wicked) is not eligible as a witness.

(4) Who in our Mishnah rejected the evidence of the man who admitted murder. The halachah being according to the Rabbis who are the majority, would R. Manasseh ignore the majority in favour of a minority?

(5) For admitting the evidence of a man who announced himself as a murderer.

(6) As no relative is admitted as witness.

(7) Who does not admit the evidence of the man who declared himself a murderer, (supra 25a).

(8) V.p. 154, n. 9.

(9) V. p. 154, n. 4.

(10) V. supra p. 154, n. 5. Hence they also admitted the evidence of one who declared himself to be a murderer.

(11) In either case he admitted murder.

(12) But did not himself participate in the crime.

(13) Or 'ford'.

(14) Lit., 'to them'.

(15) Tosef. Yeb. IV; which proves that the evidence of a murderer is accepted.

(16) V. n. 10. He was Only present during the robbery.

(17) The condemned man, however, was not a murderer.

(18) Which the woman made. If she vowed, for instance, to derive no benefit from her husband, and he did not annul her vow; and on consulting the Sage and finding no ground for the remission of her vow (v. Ned. 22b), her vow was not disallowed and her husband was consequently forbidden to her.

(19) To avoid the suspicion that his motive in forbidding the woman was to marry her himself.

(20) V. Glos. s.v. mi'un.

(21) Declarations of refusal and the performance of halizah, unlike the disallowance or confirmation of vows, must always take place in the presence of a court of three; and a court of three would not be suspected.

(22) If her husband subsequently divorced her or died.

(23) Lit., 'in what are we engaged'.

(24) Cur. edd. add in parentheses. 'Rab said'.

(25) As to the difficulty of the implication that one individual should be in a position to disallow vows.

(26) A mumhe (v. Glos.) who, like a lay court of three, is empowered to disallow vows by himself. Ned. 78b, B.B. 120b, 121a.

(27) Why the Sage may marry the woman in question.

(28) Which consists of no less than three members.

(29) Cur. edd., we learned'.

(30) Lit., 'this thing'. They do not, as a precaution against collusion, forbid the witnesses the subsequent purchase of the field from the buyer. or the marriage with the woman in whose divorce they assisted. This obviously shews that even a group of two is not to be suspected!

(31) By mentioning Beth din which implies three members.

(32) From the mention of Beth din in our Mishnah.

(33) And not, as has been assumed, that only three are not to be suspected. Two also are above suspicion.

(34) The Sage referred to in our Mishnah (Rashb. and Asheri). The Sage or the man who delivered a letter of divorce mentioned in the previous Mishnah (Rashi and Maimonides). V. Wilna Gaon, Glosses, a.l.

(35) The woman who was forbidden to her husband or the one divorced (v. previous note).

(36) The statement R. Ashi made.

that [once a woman was married she] is not taken away because of a mere rumour; and so here also [the woman married] is not to be taken away because of a rumour.

MISHNAH. IF ALL THESE¹ HAD WIVES² WHO [SUBSEQUENTLY] DIED, [THE OTHER WOMEN]³ ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY THEM.⁴ IF THEY³ WERE MARRIED TO OTHERS⁵ AND WERE [SUBSEQUENTLY] DIVORCED,⁶ OR WIDOWED, THEY MAY BE MARRIED TO THESE.⁷ THESE⁸ ARE ALSO PERMITTED TO THEIR⁶ SONS OR BROTHERS.⁹

GEMARA. Only if they¹⁰ died¹¹ but not if they were divorced.¹² Said R. Hillel to R. Ashi: Surely, it was taught: Even if they were divorced! — This is no difficulty: The one¹³ refers to the case where they led¹⁴ a quarrelsome life;¹⁵ the other,¹⁶ where they¹⁷ had no quarrels.¹⁸ If you prefer I might say that the one as well as the other [refers to the case] where there were no quarrels, and yet there is no difficulty: The former¹⁶ is a case where the husband had led on [to the divorce];¹⁹ in the latter,²⁰ she led on to the divorce.

IF THEY WERE MARRIED etc. It was now assumed that death²¹ has reference to the case of death,²² and divorce²³ to that of divorce.²⁴ Must it then be said that our Mishnah²⁵ is in disagreement the delivery of the letter of divorce by the messenger, or the evidence of the man who testified to their husbands' deaths. with the view of Rabbi? For had it been in agreement with Rabbi, [a third marriage would not have been allowed], for he said that two occurrences constitute a hazakah.²⁶ — No;²⁷ death²⁸ [has reference] to divorce,²⁹ and divorce²⁸ to death.³⁰

THESE ARE ALSO PERMITTED TO THEIR SONS OR BROTHERS. Wherein is this different from the following where it was taught:³¹ A man who is suspected of intercourse with a woman is forbidden to marry her mother, her daughter and her sister.³² -It is the usual thing for women to pay frequent visits to other women;³³ it is not usual, however, for men to pay frequent visits to other men.³⁴ Or [this] also:³⁵ Women who do not cause one another to be forbidden by their cohabitation³⁶ do not particularly mind one another;³⁷ men, however, who do cause one another to be forbidden by their cohabitation³⁸ do mind one another.³⁴ If so,³⁹ [the same law⁴⁰ should] also [apply to] one's father!⁴¹ -The meaning is, 'There is no need',⁴² [thus]: There is no need [to state that the law⁴⁰ is applicable to] one's father before whom a son is shy;⁴³ but [in the case of] one's son⁴⁴ before whom a father⁴⁴ is not shy it might have been assumed [that this law was] not [to be applied], hence we were informed [that the same law was applicable to a son also].

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE OF] FOUR BROTHERS, TWO OF WHOM WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, IF THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED TO THE SISTERS DIED, BEHOLD. THESE⁴⁵ MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE [BY THE BROTHERS].⁴⁶ IF THEY HAD ALREADY⁴⁷ MARRIED THEM, THEY MUST DISMISS THEM. R. ELIEZER SAID: BETH SHAMMAI HOLD THAT THEY MAY RETAIN THEM, AND BETH HILLEL HOLD THAT THEY MUST DISMISS THEM.

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS⁴⁸ WAS FORBIDDEN TO ONE [OF THE BROTHERS] UNDER THE PROHIBITION OF INCEST,⁴⁹ HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT MAY MARRY HER SISTER,⁵⁰ WHILE TO THE SECOND BROTHER BOTH ARE FORBIDDEN.

[IF ONE SISTER]⁴⁸ WAS FORBIDDEN BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT⁵¹ OR BY VIRTUE OF HOLINESS⁵¹ SHE MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS⁴⁸ WAS FORBIDDEN TO ONE BROTHER UNDER THE LAW OF INCEST AND THE OTHER SISTER WAS FORBIDDEN TO THE OTHER UNDER THE LAW OF INCEST, SHE WHO IS FORBIDDEN TO THE ONE IS PERMITTED TO THE OTHER AND SHE WHO IS FORBIDDEN TO THE OTHER IS PERMITTED TO THE FIRST. THIS IS THE CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT HAS BEEN SAID: WHEN HER SISTER IS HER SISTER-IN-LAW⁵² SHE MAY EITHER PERFORM HALIZAH OR BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁵³

GEMARA. This then⁵⁴ implies that a levirate bond exists;⁵⁵ for if no levirate bond exists, observe this point: These widows come from two different houses,⁵⁶ let one brother take in levirate marriage the one and the other brother the other!⁵⁷ — As a matter of fact it may still be assumed that no levirate bond exists⁵⁵ [but the levirate marriage is nevertheless forbidden] because he⁵⁸ is of the opinion that it is forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage, it being possible that while one of the brothers married [one of the widowed sisters] the other brother would die,⁵⁹ and the precept of levirate marriage would be annulled.⁶⁰ If so,⁶¹ [the same applies to] three [brothers] also!⁶² — This may be regarded as the case of 'There is no need etc.';⁶³ thus: There is no need to state three,⁶⁴ since the precept of levirate marriage would inevitably have to be annulled;⁶⁵ but [in the case of] four⁶⁶ [it might have been assumed that] one need not take precautions against [possible] death,⁶⁷ hence we were informed [that even in such a case levirate marriage is forbidden].⁶⁸ If so,⁶⁹

(1) Lit., 'and all of them'. The Sage, the messenger who brought a letter of divorce and the man who testified to the death of a husband. (V. previous two Mishnahs, supra 250, 25b).

(2) At the time of their action which resulted in enabling the women there mentioned to marry.

(3) I.e. the women concerned in their respective actions. V. previous note.

(4) Having had their own wives at the time they were engaged in the other women's affairs they are not to be suspected of any ulterior motives. Cf. supra p. 153, n. 2 and p. 155. n. 12.

(5) After the decision of the Sage,

(6) By their second husbands.

- (7) Cf. supra p. 157, n. 6.
- (8) V. p. 157, n. 8.
- (9) The prohibition being limited to themselves.
- (10) The wives of the Sage, messenger and witness (cf. supra p. 157, n. 6).
- (11) Lit., 'they died, yes'; only then is it permissible for the husbands to marry the women whom they had helped to obtain permission to marry.
- (12) It being possible that their action in favour of the women and the subsequent divorces were dictated by the same ulterior motive.
- (13) The Baraitha quoted by R. Hillel.
- (14) Before their respective husbands had acted in favour of the other women.
- (15) With their husbands. It is consequently obvious that the divorces were due to the domestic differences, and that the husband's subsequent actions were not dictated by ulterior motives.
- (16) That implied in our Mishnah.
- (17) V. supra note 5.
- (18) As husbands and wives lived in peace until the former had met the other women, there is good reason to suspect that the divorces were due to these meetings.
- (19) Hence there is cause for suspicion.
- (20) V. supra note 8.
- (21) Of the second husbands with whom marriage had taken place In the meanwhile.
- (22) In the second clause of the Previous Mishnah but one (supra 25a), where evidence was given that the woman's first husband had died or was killed.
- (23) Cf. supra n. 16.
- (24) Where a letter of divorce was brought by a messenger, (v. the first clause of the Mishnah supra 25a).
- (25) Which allows a woman to marry a third husband though her first two husbands had died or divorced her.
- (26) V. Glos. An established characteristic or defect in the woman, physical or moral, which confirms her as the cause of the death of her husbands or as the cause of the divorces. Hence, she should not have been permitted ever to marry again.
- (27) Our Mishnah does not differ from Rabbi.
- (28) V. p. 158, n.16. .
- (29) V. p.158,n.19.
- (30) V. supra p. 158. n. 17. Hence no two husbands died or divorced the same woman, and no hazakah could, therefore, have been constituted.
- (31) Cur. edd., 'we learned'.
- (32) Because there is reason to suspect that the marriage was planned by the man as a mere means of bringing him into closer association and intimacy with his paramour. Why, then, is this suspicion disregarded in the case of our Mishnah?
- (33) Misconduct may, therefore, occur and suspicion (v. previous note) is justified.
- (34) And suspicion that any intimate intercourse might take place would, therefore, be groundless.
- (35) May be said in reply.
- (36) With one another's husbands. The husband is not forbidden to his wife if cohabitation occurred between him and another woman.
- (37) V. note 8.
- (38) With one another's wives. The wife of one with whom the other cohabited is forbidden to her husband.
- (39) That men are watchful of one another, and that consequently there is no ground for suspicion.
- (40) Permitting the marriage of any of the women in question.
- (41) Why, then, does our Mishnah mention sons and brothers only?
- (42) Lit., 'it is not required he said'.
- (43) And would not venture to be too intimate with his wife.
- (44) Or brother.
- (45) The sisters.
- (46) The reason is explained in the Gemara, infra.
- (47) Lit., 'anticipated' (the ruling of the court).
- (48) In the case mentioned in the first paragraph of our Mishnah.
- (49) E.g., as a mother-in-law.

- (50) Who is not forbidden on account of her rival since the latter is biblically forbidden to the levir and cannot be regarded as his zekukah (v. Glos.).
- (51) The term is used in the Mishnah supra 20a and discussed in the Gemara loc. cit.
- (52) The wife of her husband's brother.
- (53) V. supra 20a. Cf. supra p. 162, n. 6.
- (54) The first clause of our Mishnah.
- (55) Between the widow of a deceased childless brother and his surviving brothers, in consequence of which each widow being a zekukah (v. Glos.), is forbidden as the sister of a zekukah.
- (56) They are the widows of two different husbands and neither of them stands in any marital relationship with any of the surviving brothers (v. previous note).
- (57) A levirate bond then obviously does exist. That being so, why has the question of the existence of a levirate bond remained a matter of dispute in Ned. 742 and supra 17b?
- (58) The author of our Mishnah.
- (59) And thus be prevented from marrying the other widow.
- (60) Because the surviving brother would then not be able either to marry, or to participate in the halizah with the second widow who by that time will have become his wife's sister. If, however, halizah only is performed with one brother and the death of the other should occur before the second widow had performed halizah with him, no difficulty would arise, since the first brother may then participate in the halizah of the second also.
- (61) That the reason for the prohibition of the levirate marriage with the widowed sisters is not the existence of a levirate bond but the endeavour to prevent the annulment of the precept of levirate marriage.
- (62) If two of them died childless and both their widows become subject to the levirate marriage or halizah of the third. In this case too the third brother must only participate in halizah; for, should he marry one of the sisters, the other would be forbidden, as the sister of his wife, either to marry him or to perform halizah with him.
- (63) Lit., 'it is not required, do we say'.
- (64) That where one of three brothers survived, no levirate marriage must take place.
- (65) Were he to marry one of the widows. Cf. supra p. 162, n. 8.
- (66) Brothers, two of whom survived.
- (67) And that consequently one brother should marry one of the widows and the other brother the other.
- (68) Because provision must always be made against possible death.
- (69) v. previous note.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 26b

the same applies to five brothers also!¹ -The possibility that two might die² need not be taken into consideration.

Rabbah³ son of R. Huna said in the name of Rab: If three sisters who are sisters-in-law fell to the lot of two brothers who are their brothers-in-law, one of the brothers participates in her halizah with one, and the other brother participates in the halizah with the other, but the third,⁴ requires halizah from both. Said Rabbah to him: Since you say that the third widow requires submission to halizah by both brothers, you must be holding the opinion that a levirate bond exists⁵ and that the halizah is of an impaired character,⁶ and that as an impaired halizah it must go the round of all the brothers;⁷ but if so, [the same should apply to] the first [two sisters] also!⁸ — If they⁹ had become subject [to the levirs] at the same time the law would indeed have been so;¹⁰ [the statement of our Mishnah, however,] was required only in the case where they become subject [to the levirs] one after another. When the first sister became subject to the obligation of the levirate marriage. Reuben¹¹ participated in her halizah;¹² when the second came Under the obligation. Simeon¹³ participated in her halizah;¹⁴ when the third came under the obligation.¹⁵ if the one brother participated in her halizah he removed his own levirate bond,¹⁶ and when the other participated in the halizah he likewise removed his own levirate bond. But, surely. Rab said that no levirate bond exists!¹⁷ — This statement¹⁸ he made in accordance with the opinion of him who maintains that a levirate bond does exist.

Samuel, however, stated that one brother participates in the halizah with all of them. But consider: We have heard Samuel say that a proper halizah is required for Samuel said:

- (1) Two of whom who were married to two sisters died and three survived. In this case also, if provision is to be made against the possibility of death, no levirate marriage should be allowed to any of the three survivors, since it might happen that two of the survivors would also die and the last and only surviving brother would be precluded from levirate marriage and halizah because the widows would then be his wife's sisters.
- (2) Lit., 'for the death of two'.
- (3) So Emden. Cur. edd., 'Raba'.
- (4) Lit., 'the middle one'.
- (5) V. supra p. 162, n. 3'
- (6) Since each brother may only participate in halizah with the widow but may not, as she is the sister of his haluzah (v. Glos.) marry her. Such a halizah is not of the same validity as one which is the alternative of a permitted levirate marriage.
- (7) The levirate bond between the widow and the other brothers cannot be dissolved by such a halizah with one of them. [Me'iri seems to have had a shorter and smoother text: . . . that a levirate bond exists and that an impaired halizah must go the round of all the brothers'.]
- (8) Since they, like the third, are subject to the levirate bond, and with them also only halizah, but not levirate marriage may take place, and their halizah also is consequently of an impaired character.
- (9) All the three sisters.
- (10) Halizah would have had to be performed by every one of them with every brother.
- (11) I.e., the first brother. Reuben was Jacob's first son (Gen. XXIX, 32).
- (12) This was a proper halizah since at that time he could have married her if he wished.
- (13) I.e., the second brother. Simeon was the second son of Jacob. (Cf. Gen. XXIX, 33)'
- (14) This also was a proper halizah since he could marry her if he wished. She is no longer the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.) since the first brother had already performed with that zekukah proper halizah and had thereby severed the levirate bond between her and Simeon as well as between her and himself.
- (15) Levirate marriage is no more possible since, in the case of each brother, she is the sister of his haluzah, while exemption from !halizah cannot be granted because the prohibition to marry the sister of one's haluzah is only Rabbinical and cannot supersede the Biblical precept which requires halizah where no levirate marriage takes place.
- (16) Which otherwise could not have been severed. V. previous note.
- (17) Supra 17b.
- (18) Reported supra by Rabbah b. R. Huna.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 27a

if he¹ participated in the halizah with the sisters, the rivals are not exempt;² how then should Reuben,³ where the halizah of Simeon⁴ has the force of a valid halizah,⁵ participate in an impaired halizah?⁶ — By saying. 'One brother participates in the halizah with all of them' he also meant 'the third widow'.⁷ But surely, 'All of them' was stated!⁸ -As the majority is on his side⁹ it may be described as 'All of them'. If you prefer I might say: Only in respect of exempting one's rival¹⁰ did Samuel say that proper halizah was required; as regards exempting herself, however, [any halizah]¹¹ sets her free.¹²

[To turn to] the main text,¹³ Samuel said: If he¹⁴ participated in the halizah with the sisters, the rivals are not exempt;¹⁵ ff with the rivals. the sisters are exempt.¹⁶ If he¹⁷ participated in the halizah with the one¹⁸ who had been divorced,¹⁹ her rival is not thereby exempt;²⁰ if with the rival²¹ the divorced woman is exempt —²² If he¹⁷ participated in the halizah with one¹⁸ to whom he addressed a ma'amar, her rival is not thereby exempt;²³ if with the rival,²⁴ the widow to whom the ma'amar had been addressed is exempt.²⁵

In what respect are the sisters different that [by their halizah] the rivals should not be exempted?

Apparently because [each one of them] is 'his wife's sister' through the levirate bond;²⁶ [but for this very reason] the sisters also, if he participated in the halizah with their rivals, should not be exempt, since those are the rivals of 'his wife's sister' through the levirate bond!²⁷ — Samuel holds the opinion that no levirate bond exists. But, surely, Samuel said that a levirate bond did exist!²⁸ -He was here speaking in accordance with the view of him who maintains that a levirate bond does not exist. If so,²⁹ why are not the rivals exempt when he participated in the halizah with the sisters? One can well understand why Rachel's³⁰ rival is not exempt; for, as he had already participated in the halizah of Leah³¹ and only subsequently participated in the halizah of Rachel, Rachel's halizah is a defective one;³² but Leah's rival should be exempt!³³ -When he³⁴ said that 'The rivals are not exempt', he meant indeed the rival of Rachel. But, surely, he used the expression 'rivals'!³⁵ -Rivals generally. If so,³⁶ how could the sisters be exempt if he participated in the halizah with their rivals? Is Rachel exempt by the halizah of her rival!³⁷ Surely we learned: A man is forbidden to marry the rival of the relative of his halizah³⁸ — Samuel also [is of the same opinion] but draws a distinction according to the manner in which³⁹ one began or did not begin: If one began with the sisters⁴⁰ he must not finish with the rivals,⁴¹ for we learned, 'A man is forbidden to marry the rival of the relative of his haluzah';⁴² but if he began with the rivals⁴³ he may finish even with the sisters,⁴⁴ for we learned, 'A man is permitted to marry the relative of the rival of his haluzah'.⁴⁵

R. Ashi said: Your former assumption⁴⁶ may still be upheld, and [yet no difficulty⁴⁷ arises] because the levirate bond is not strong enough to make the rival equal to the forbidden relative herself.⁴⁸

It was taught in agreement with the view of R. Ashi: If the levir participated in the halizah with the sisters, their rivals are not thereby exempt; but if with the rivals, the sisters are thereby exempt. What is the reason? Obviously⁴⁹ because he is of the opinion that a levirate bond exists and that that bond is not strong enough to make the rival equal to the forbidden relative herself.

R. Abba b. Memel said: Who is the author of this?⁵⁰ Beth Shammai; for we learned: Beth Shammai permit the rivals to the [surviving] brothers.⁵¹ If so,⁵² let them⁵³ be taken in levirate marriage also!⁵⁴ [This is] in agreement with R. Johanan b. Nuri who said: Come, let us issue an ordinance that the rivals perform the halizah but do not marry the levir.⁵⁵ But did not a Master say that they had hardly time to conclude the matter before confusion set in?⁵⁶ — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: After him⁵⁷ they re-ordained it.

The question was raised:

- (1) A levir whose two deceased childless brothers were survived by two widows who were sisters, each of whom had also a rival.
 - (2) Because the halizah with the sisters is defective, the levir not being in a position to marry either of them. Cf. supra p. 263, n. 11,
 - (3) Cf. supra note 2,
 - (4) cf. note 4.
 - (5) Simeon, having participated in no halizah, the second sister is not the sister of his haluzah.
 - (6) In the case of Reuben who had already participated in the halizah of one sister, the halizah with the second is a halizah performed by the sister of his haluzah, which is not a completely valid operation.
 - (7) I.e., the second brother, after he participated in the halizah with the second widow, also participates in the halizah with the third (who is now the sister of his as well as of his brother's haluzah): and there is no need, according to Samuel, for a defective halizah to go the round of all the surviving brothers.
 - (8) How- then could the expression 'all' refer to the second and third widows only?
 - (9) Simeon having participated in the halizah of two widows out of the three.
 - (10) As he actually said, 'The rivals are not exempt'.
 - (11) Even a defective one.

- (12) In the case of the three widows mentioned above, where there are no rivals, the defective halizah is, therefore, valid even according to Samuel.
- (13) A passage from which was cited supra top of page.
- (14) V.p. 164,n. 10.
- (15) V.p. 164, n.11.
- (16) As the prohibition to marry the rivals is not so severe as that of the sisters, the halizah with the former is of greater validity and force than that with the latter. Cf. supra p. 163,n.11.
- (17) The levir.
- (18) Of two sisters-in-law, widows of the same brother.
- (19) By the levir prior to the halizah.
- (20) A halizah after a divorce is defective, since the levirate bond had already been partially severed by the divorce that preceded it.
- (21) Since no letter of divorce was given to her.
- (22) Infra 51a.
- (23) Since the halizah alone does not in this case exempt the widow; a divorce also, owing to the ma'amar, being required.
- (24) To whom no ma'amar had been addressed.
- (25) infra 53a.
- (26) In consequence of which he may marry neither of them and the halizah in which he participates is for this reason of a defective character.
- (27) A rival taking the place of a forbidden relative, being subject to the same restrictions as the relatives, is also forbidden to be taken in levirate marriage.
- (28) Supra 18b.
- (29) That no levirate bond exists and the halizah with the sisters is consequently perfectly valid.
- (30) I.e., the sister who was second to perform the halizah. Rachel was Jacob's second, Leah his first wife (v. Gen. XXIX, 23-28).
- (31) I.e., the first sister. Cf. previous note.
- (32) Because Rachel cannot any more be married to him owing to her being the sister of his haluzah.
- (33) Leah's halizah having been perfect, since the levir could have married her if he wished.
- (34) Samuel.
- (35) The plural.
- (36) That the expression of 'rivals' refers only to rivals of the sister who was second to perform the halizah and not to those of the first also.
- (37) Would the sister of a haluzah be exempt by the halizah of her rival?
- (38) Infra 40b. As he cannot marry the rival of Rachel who is his haluzah's sister, his halizah with her would be of a defective character which, consequently, could not exempt Rachel.
- (39) Lit., 'he said'.
- (40) Participated in the halizah with one of them.
- (41) By participating in the halizah with the rival of the second sister. Such halizah would not exempt the sister.
- (42) Much more so the relative herself. The halizah, therefore, being defective, would have to be performed by both the second sister and her rival.
- (43) If he participated in the halizah with the rival of the first sister.
- (44) He may participate in halizah not only with the rival of the second sister and thus exempt the sister herself, but also with the second sister and thus exempt her rival.
- (45) Rachel (the second sister), being the relative of Leah (the first sister) who is the 'rival' of the haluzah, is consequently permitted to marry the levir, and her halizah is, therefore, perfectly valid and exempts also her rival.
- (46) That the rivals are not exempted by the halizah of the sisters, owing to its defectiveness which is due to the existence of the levirate bond (cf. supra p. 164, n. 21).
- (47) As to why the halizah of the rival of the relative of a haluzah should be more valid than that of the relative of the haluzah herself (v. supra p. 266, n. 2).
- (48) The Rabbis who forbade the marriage of a zekukah owing to the levirate bond did not extend the prohibition to her rival. The halizah of the latter is, therefore, more valid and exempts also the former.

(49) Lit., 'not'?

(50) The Baraitha quoted.

(51) Supra 132, 'Ed. Iv, 8; as marriage with the rivals is permitted, their halizah also (cf. supra p. 163, n. 11) is perfectly valid.

(52) That the Baraitha quoted represents the view of Beth Shammai.

(53) The rivals.

(54) Why then was only halizah mentioned?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 27b

Between the one¹ who was given² a letter of divorce and the other¹ to whom a ma'amar had been addressed² who is to be preferred?³ Is she who was divorced to be preferred.⁴ or is, perhaps, she to whom the ma'amar had been addressed to be preferred since she is nearer to him in respect to intercourse? — R. Ashi replied, Come and hear: R. Gamaliel, however, admits⁵ that a letter of divorce⁶ after a ma'amar,⁷ and a ma'amar⁶ after a letter of divorce⁸ is valid.⁹ Now, if a letter of divorce has the preference.¹⁰ the ma'amar after it should have no validity; and if the ma'amar has the preference, the divorce after it should have no validity. Consequently it must be concluded that they have both equal validity. This proves it.

R. Huna¹¹ said in the name of Rab: If two sisters who were sisters-in-law became subject to one levir, the one is permitted¹² when he¹³ has participated in her halizah; and the other is permitted¹⁴ when he has participated in her halizah. If the first¹⁵ died¹⁶ he¹⁷ is permitted [to marry] the second,¹⁸ and there is no need to state that if the second¹⁹ died¹⁶ the first is permitted,¹⁴ since, as a sister-in-law who was permitted,²⁰ then forbidden²¹ and then again permitted,²² she returns to her former state of permissibility. R. Johanan, however, said: If the second¹⁹ died¹⁶ he¹⁷ is permitted to marry the first,²³ but if the first²⁴ died he is forbidden to marry the second.¹⁹ What is the reason? Because any sister-in-law to whom the injunction. Her husband's brother shall go in unto her²⁵ cannot be applied at the time of her coming under the obligation of the levirate marriage²⁶ is, indeed,²⁷ like the wife of a brother who has children and is, consequently, forbidden. But does not Rab hold the same view?²⁸ Surely Rab said: Any woman to whom the injunction, Her husband's brother should go in unto her²⁵ cannot be applied at the time of her coming under the obligation of the levirate marriage is, indeed, like the wife of a brother who has children and is, consequently, forbidden!²⁹ -That statement³⁰ applies only to the case where the woman is faced with the prohibition of 'a wife's sister', which is Pentateuchal,³¹ here, however, [the prohibition due to] the levirate bond is only Rabbinical.³²

R. Jose b. Hanina raised the following objection against R. Johanan:³³ IN THE CASE OF FOUR BROTHERS, TWO OF WHOM WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, IF THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED TO THE SISTERS DIED, BEHOLD, THESE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. But why? Let one of the brothers take on the duty of participating in the halizah with the second widow, and thus place the first widow, in relation to the second, in the category of a deceased brother's wife that was permitted- then forbidden, and then again permitted,³⁴ and thus she would return to her former state of permissibility! — The other replied: I do not know who was the author of the statement concerning the sisters.³⁵ But let him rather reply that the meaning of the expression of MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH, which had been used, indeed signifies that only one is to perform the halizah!³⁶ -The expression used was THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH.³⁷ Then let him reply that the expressions THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH³⁷ refers to women generally³⁸ who perform the halizah!-It was stated, BEHOLD THESE.³⁹ Let him, then, reply that [this is a case] where halizah was already performed by the first!⁴⁰ -[The expression] THESE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH

- (1) Of two widows of the same husband who was survived by one brother.
- (2) By the surviving brother.
- (3) In respect of the halizah, if that halizah is to exempt the rival. None of these widows may be taken in levirate marriage: the one, because a letter of divorce was given to her, and the other, because she is the rival of the former. The only question is, which of the two should perform the halizah and which should thereby be exempt.
- (4) I.e., shall she perform the halizah and thus exempt her rival? Cur. edd. add., 'because he began with her with halizah'. Rashal (Glosses. a.l.) reads, 'divorce' for 'halizah'. Both additions are absent in MSS, v. Tosaf. s.v. בעלה -

- (8) Given first to the other.
- (9) Infra 51a. Lit., 'there is'. If the ma'amar was made first, the subsequent divorce forbids the marriage of the second and also that of the first, the ma'amar to her not being regarded as actual marriage, and if the divorce was first and the ma'amar afterwards, the second widow also requires a divorce, the divorce of the first not having the force of halizah to invalidate the ma'amar addressed to the second.

is an instruction as to what it is the proper thing to do.¹ Let him reply that it² was a preventive measure against the possibility of the levir's participating first in the halizah of the first!³ — It was stated, BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, i.e., the law of the levirate marriage is not applicable here at all.⁴ Let him, then, reply that it⁵ was a preventive measure in case he⁶ might die,⁷ it being forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage!⁸ — R. Johanan makes no provision against possible death.⁹ Then let him reply that it⁵ is the ruling of R. Eleazar¹⁰ who said that so long as she remained forbidden to him for one moment she is forbidden to him for ever!¹¹ — Since the latter clause [represents the view of] R. Eleazar,¹² the first clause cannot represent his view. Then let him reply that it¹³ is a case where they¹⁴ fell under the obligation¹⁵ at the same time, and that it represents the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean who maintains that it is possible to ascertain simultaneity!¹⁶ — The Tanna would not have recorded an anonymous Mishnah in agreement with the view of R. Jose the Galilean. Let him reply [that it¹³ is a case] where it is not known which¹⁷ came under the obligation¹⁵ first!¹⁸ — If that were the case¹⁹ how could it have been stated,²⁰ EVEN IF THEY HAD ALREADY MARRIED THEM THEY MUST DISMISS THEM! In the case of the first,²¹ at least, one can understand [the reason].²² since he can be told, 'Who permitted her to you'?²³ In the case, however, of the second,²⁴ the levir²⁵ could surely claim, 'My friend²⁶ has taken the second in levirate marriage²⁷ and I take the first' ²⁸ This, then,²⁹ is the reason why he³⁰ said to him,³¹ 'I do not know who was the author of the statement concerning the sisters'.³²

We learned: IF ONE OF THE SISTERS WAS FORBIDDEN TO ONE [OF THE BROTHERS] UNDER THE PROHIBITION OF INCEST,³³ HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT MAY MARRY HER SISTER, WHILE TO THE SECOND BROTHER BOTH ARE FORBIDDEN. It was now assumed that his mother-in-law³⁴ came under the obligation³⁵ first.³⁶ Now, why [should both sisters be forbidden]?³⁷ Let the son-in-law undertake the duty of marrying first that sister who is not his mother-in-law,³⁸ and his mother-in-law, in relation to the other levir, would thereby come into the same category as a sister-in-law that was permitted,³⁹ then forbidden,⁴⁰ and then permitted again,⁴¹ who returns to her former state of permissibility! R. Papa replied: [They are forbidden] in a case where she who was not his mother-in-law came under the obligation⁴² first.⁴³

R. ELIEZER SAID: BETH SHAMMAI HOLD etc. The following was taught: R. Eliezer said: Beth Shammai hold that they may retain them, and Beth Hillel hold that they must dismiss them. R. Simeon said: They may retain them. Abba Saul said: Beth Hillel uphold in this matter the milder rule, for it was Beth Shammai who said that the women must be dismissed while Beth Hillel said they may be retained.⁴⁴

Whose view does R. Simeon represent?⁴⁵ If that of Beth Shammai,⁴⁶ he is merely repeating R. Eliezer; if that of Beth Hillel,⁴⁶ he is repeating Abba Saul! It was this that he meant: In this matter there is no dispute at all between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS etc. But we have learned this already: When her sister is her sister-in-law she may either perform halizah or be taken in levirate marriage!⁴⁷ — [Both are] necessary. For had the law been stated there⁴⁸ it might have been assumed [to apply to that case alone],⁴⁹ because there is no need to enact a preventive measure against a second brother,⁵⁰ but not [to the case] here where it might be advisable to issue a preventive measure against a second brother.⁵⁰ And had the law been stated here,⁵¹ it might have been assumed [to apply to this case alone] because there is a second brother who proves it⁵² but not [to that case] where no second brother exists.⁵³ [Hence were both] required.

BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT etc. But we have [already] learned this also:

- (1) And not as to what is to be done in certain eventualities. Lit., 'for as at the beginning, it was taught'.
- (2) The provision that both widows are to perform halizah and that none may be taken in levirate marriage.
- (3) And then he would marry the second, in his erroneous assumption that, as he may participate in the halizah of the second and marry the first, so he may participate in the halizah of the first and marry the second. This, however, does not imply that if he already did participate in the halizah of the second he may not, after her death, marry the first. In this latter case the reason for the marriage with the first would be obvious and would leave no room for erroneous conclusions.
- (4) Even if halizah was first performed by the second.
- (5) The provision in our Mishnah that both widows must perform halizah and none of them may be taken in levirate marriage.
- (6) One of the surviving brothers who intended to marry one of the widowed sisters.
- (7) After the second brother had married the second widow and had thus become disqualified from marrying or participating in the halizah of the other — who is now forbidden to him as the sister of his wife.
- (8) And this only is the reason for the prohibition of the levirate marriage with either of the sisters. Had this prohibition been due to the levirate bond, as suggested, the first would certainly have been permitted to marry the levir after halizah with the second, which had severed the levirate bond, had taken place. Consequently, in the case discussed by R. Johanan, where the second died, and the preventive measure is not applicable, the first may indeed be taken in levirate marriage!
- (9) The ruling in our Mishnah could not, therefore, be due to a preventive measure.
- (10) Bah a.l. reads, 'Eliezer' throughout the context.

- (17) Of the two widowed sisters.
- (18) So that there is no known 'second' widow with whom to participate in the halizah
- (19) That the prohibition in our Mishnah to marry the two widowed sisters is entirely due to the fact that it is not known which of them was the first to become a widow and which was second; and that, had the fact been known, the first would have been permitted to be taken in the levirate marriage.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 28b

If she is forbidden by virtue of a commandment or by virtue of holiness she must perform halizah and may not be taken in levirate marriage!¹ -There¹ it is a question of one forbidden by virtue of a commandment alone,² but here [it is a case of one] forbidden by virtue of a commandment and [by virtue of] her sister.³ Since it might have been assumed that the prohibition by virtue of a commandment shall take the same rank as the prohibition by the law of incest⁴ and [her sister] should, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage, hence we were taught [that the law is not so].

But how could she⁵ possibly be taken in levirate marriage? Since Pentateuchally she⁶ is to submit to him,⁷ he would come in contact with the sister of his zekukah⁸ -It might have been thought that such provision⁹ was made by the Rabbis for the sake of the precept,¹⁰ hence we were taught [that it was not so].

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS etc. What need was there again for this statement? Surely, it is precisely identical [with the one before]!¹¹ For what difference is there whether [a woman is forbidden] to one or to two?- [Both are] required. For had the former only¹² been stated, it might have been assumed [that the law was applicable there only] because there exists a second brother to indicate the cause,¹³ but not here where there is no second brother to indicate it.¹⁴ And if the statement had been made here only it might have been assumed on the contrary that both brothers afford proof in regard to each other,¹⁵ but not in the other case;¹⁶ [hence both were] required.

THIS IS THE CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT HAS BEEN SAID etc. What is the expression, THIS IS intended to exclude?¹⁷ -To exclude the case [where one sister was forbidden by] Virtue of a commandment to the one [brother]. and [the other sister was forbidden] by virtue of a commandment to the other. But what need was there for this [additional statement]? Surely it is precisely identical [with that mentioned before];¹⁸ for what difference is there whether it relates to one or to two! — It might have been thought that only where there is the necessity of providing for a preventive measure against a second brother do we not say that the prohibition by a commandment takes the same rank as a prohibition by the law of incest,¹⁹ but that where there is no necessity to provide against a second brother we do say that in the case of the one brother the prohibition by a commandment is to be given the same force as the prohibition by the law of incest, and that also in the case of the other brother the prohibition by a commandment is to be given the same force as the prohibition by the law of incest, and that the sisters may consequently be taken in levirate marriage; hence we were taught [that such an assumption is not to be made].

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab and so did R. Hiyya teach: In the case of all these²⁰ it may happen that she who is forbidden to one brother²¹ may be permitted to the other,²² and that her sister who is her sister-in-law may either perform the halizah or be taken in the levirate marriage;²³ and Rab Judah interpreted it²⁴ [as referring to those]²⁵ from one's mother-in-law onward but not to the first six categories. What is the reason? Because this²⁶ is only possible in the case of a daughter born from a woman who had been outraged.²⁷ but not in that of a daughter born from a legal marriage.²⁸ [and the author of that Mishnah]²⁹ deals only with cases of legal matrimony and not with those of outraged women.³⁰

Abaye. however, Interprets it²⁴ as referring also to a daughter from a woman that had been outraged. because, since [the application of Rab's statement]³¹ is quite possible in her case, it matters not whether she was born from a woman who was legally married or from one that had been outraged; but not to the 'wife of a brother who was not his contemporary' since this³¹ is possible only according to the view of R. Simeon³² and not according to that of the Rabbis and he³³ does not deal with any matter which is a subject of controversy. But R. Safra interprets [it³⁴ as referring] also to the 'wife of a brother who was not his contemporary', and this³⁴ is possible in the case of six brothers in accordance with the view of R. Simeon.³⁵ And your mnemonic is, 'died, born, and performed the levirate marriage; died, born, and performed the levirate marriage'.³⁶ [Suppose. for instance]. Reuben and Simeon³⁷ were married to two sisters, and Levi and Judah were married to two strangers. When Reuben died, Issachar was born and Levi took the widow in levirate marriage. When Simeon died, Zebulun was born and Judah took [the second widow] in levirate marriage. When Levi and Judah subsequently died without issue and their widows fell under the obligation of the levirate marriage before Issachar and Zebulun, she³⁸ who is forbidden to the one³⁹ is permitted to the other⁴⁰ while she⁴¹ who is forbidden to the other⁴² is permitted to the first.⁴³

In the example of 'her sister who is her sister-in-law',⁴⁴ what need was there⁴⁵ for Judah to contract the levirate marriage? Even if Judah did not contract any levirate marriage it is also possible!⁴⁶ — Owing to the rival.⁴⁷ This⁴⁸ satisfactorily explains the case of the rival; what can be said, however, in respect of the rival's rival?⁴⁹ — If, for instance, Gad and Asher also subsequently married them.⁵⁰

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, OR TO A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER, OR TO A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER, OR TO A WOMAN AND HER SON'S DAUGHTER, BEHOLD, THESE⁵¹ MUST⁵² PERFORM THE HALIZAH⁵³ BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁵⁴ R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, EXEMPTS THEM.⁵⁵

IF ONE OF THEM⁵⁶ WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM BY THE LAW OF INCEST, HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF, HOWEVER, THE PROHIBITION IS DUE TO A COMMANDMENT OR TO HOLINESS, THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Simeon exempts both from the halizah and the levirate marriage. for it is said in the Scriptures, And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her:⁵⁷ when they become rivals to one another,⁵⁸ you may not marry even one of them.

IF ONE OF THEM WAS etc. What need was there again for this statement? Surely it is the same!⁵⁹ -It was necessary because of the opinion of R. Simeon: As it might have been assumed that, since R. Simeon had said that two sisters were neither to perform halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage. A preventive measure should be enacted⁶⁰ against two sisters generally.⁶¹ hence we were taught⁶² [that it was not so].⁶³

IF, HOWEVER, THE PROHIBITION IS DUE TO A COMMANDMENT etc.

(1) Supra 202, Sanh. 532.

(2) Only one sister-in-law being concerned.

(3) Since two sisters, the widows of the two brothers, are here involved, and one of them is forbidden not only as the sister of his zekukah but also by virtue of a commandment.

(4) As the one is not regarded as a zekukah so neither is the other.

(5) The sister of one forbidden by virtue of a commandment.

(6) The sister-in-law forbidden by virtue of a commandment.

(7) To levirate marriage; her prohibition being only Rabbinical.

(8) Which cannot obviously be permitted. What need, then, was there for a law that is so obvious.

(9) The permission to marry the sister of his zekukah.

(10) Of the levirate marriage. In order that this precept may be fulfilled they may have removed the prohibition of the marital bond, which is only Rabbinical, in cases where the woman is not forbidden by the law of incest but by virtue of a commandment only.

(11) Where one sister-in-law is similarly forbidden to one levir, and he is permitted to marry her sister.

(12) Lit., 'there'.

(13) Since one brother is forbidden to marry either sister it will be obvious that the brother was permitted to marry one of the sisters for a special reason.

(14) Since both brothers marry respectively the two sisters, it might be assumed that any levir may marry the sister of his zekukah.

(15) Since each brother is permitted to marry only one particular sister and not the other, it is obvious that the other is forbidden to him. The law of zekukah could not consequently be mistaken.

(16) Where there is only one brother, and no other brother to indicate that there is a special reason why the sister of his apparent zekukah. should be permitted to be taken in levirate marriage.

(17) THIS IS implies this and no other.

(18) In our Mishnah: [IF ONE SISTER] WAS FORBIDDEN BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT... SHE MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH AND MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

(19) V. supra p. 174. n. 6.

(20) The fifteen forbidden categories enumerated in the Mishnah, supra 2af.

(21) As a forbidden relative under the law of incest.

(22) With whom she is not so closely related.

(23) The prohibition of the one under the law of incest removes the marital bond, and her sister who, in consequence, is no longer the 'sister of a zekukah', may, therefore, be married to, or perform the halizah with the levir to whom the former is forbidden.

(24) Rab's statement.

(25) Of the fifteen relatives enumerated in the Mishnah mentioned.

(26) That two sisters shall be the daughters of two brothers, and that the one forbidden to one brother shall be permitted to the other brother. V. n. 8.

(27) If, of four brothers, A, B, C and D, A had a daughter from a woman he had outraged. and B had a daughter from the same woman whom he outraged after A, and these daughters of A and B, who are maternal sisters, married their father's brothers, C and D, who subsequently died without issue, A's daughter is permitted to B (who is her brother-in-law but otherwise a complete stranger) and is forbidden to A her father. For similar reasons A's daughter is permitted to A and forbidden to B. Thus it is possible for two sisters to marry the two levirs respectively because each one of them is a daughter of the other levir to whom she is forbidden by the law of incest.

(28) Since the mother of such a daughter would be forbidden to marry her husband's brother, even though she had been divorced by her husband after the birth of that daughter.

(29) Supra 2a, which is now under discussion.

(30) And since the case of a daughter could not be included (v. supra nn. 8 and 9), the other five cases which also bear on a daughter had equally to be excluded.

(31) V. supra p. 176. n. 7.

(32) Supra 18b. V. also R. Safra's interpretation and notes, Infra.

(33) Rab or R. Hiyya.

(34) Rab's statement.

(35) Who in certain circumstances permits the marriage of the 'widow of a brother who was not his contemporary'. V. supra 18b.

(36) v. infra, when (a) death, (b) birth and (c) marriage occurred in this order in the case of both groups of brothers.

(37) Jacob's sons, the sequence of whose births is known (v. Gen. XXIX. 32-XXX, 20), are taken here as an illustration of the possibility of the application of Rab's statement in certain circumstances of birth, death and marriage.

(38) The widow of Levi.

(39) To Issachar, because he was born before the marriage of Levi had removed the levirate bond between Reuben's widow and the other brothers, and thus came under the prohibition of marrying 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'.

(40) To Zebulun who was born after she had married Levi and the levirate bond between her and the other brothers had been removed.

(41) The wife of Judah.

(42) To Zebulun, to whom the widow of Simeon stands in the same relation as the widow of Reuben to Issachar. (V. supra note 9).

(43) Issachar who was Simeon's contemporary.

(44) Supra.

(45) In R. Safra's interpretation.

(46) For one sister to be forbidden to one brother and permitted to the other, and vice versa. Suppose Reuben died, and then Issachar was born, and Levi married the widow; then Simeon died, Zebulun was born, and Levi died; and the widows of Simeon and Levi came under the obligation of the levirate marriage with Issachar and Zebulun. Levi's widow is forbidden to Issachar owing to the levirate bond originating from her first husband, Reuben, (v. supra p. 177, n. 9) and is permitted to Zebulun (v. p. 177, n. 10), while Simeon's widow is forbidden to Zebulun (v. p. 177, n. 12) and permitted to Issachar (v. p. 177. n. 13). Now, since the point may be illustrated by five brothers, why was it necessary to bring in six?

(47) As the Mishnah under discussion (supra 2af) speaks of the rivals it was desired to give an illustration which may be applicable to rivals as well as to the forbidden relatives, and this could only be done by assuming that Judah married Simeon's widow. Had he not married her, the rival would have had to be not Judah's but Simeon's wife who would thus be forbidden to Zebulun not as 'rival' but as 'the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary'.

(48) The illustration with the six brothers.

(49) How is it possible that one rival's rival shall be forbidden to one brother and permitted to the other while the other rival's rival should be forbidden to the other brother and permitted to the first?

(50) The first wives of Levi and Judah (the rivals of their second wives, the widows of Reuben and Simeon). If Gad who married, say. the widow of Judah, and Asher who married, say. the widow of Levi died subsequently without issue and were survived by their wives who are now subject to the levirate marriage with Issachar and Zebulun the surviving brothers, Gad's first wife, the rival of his second wife (the widow of Judah) who was the rival of Simeon's wife, is forbidden to Zebulun as the rival's rival of the wife of Simeon who was not his contemporary, but is permitted to Issachar. Similarly Asher's first wife is forbidden to Issachar and permitted to Zebulun.

(51) The women enumerated.

(52) If their husbands, the two brothers, died without issue.

(53) With the third surviving brother.

(54) By that brother; since both are related to him by the 'levirate bond' and each is forbidden to him as the consanguineous relative of the woman connected with him by such bond.

(55) Even from the halizah. V. Gemara infra.

(56) The sisters.

(57) Lev. XVIII, 18.

(58) The Ievirate bond which subjects both to the same levir causing them to be rivals.

(59) As that which had been taught in an earlier Mishnah in the case of four brothers, supra 26a.

(60) Forbidding levirate marriage even where the prohibition of one is due to the law of incest.

(61) Lit., 'of the world'. If permission to marry one of the sisters were given where one is forbidden by the law of incest, it might be mistakenly concluded that levirate marriage is allowed even when none was forbidden by the law of incest.

(62) By the statement in our Mishnah that one IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER.

(63) The similar statement in the earlier Mishnah (supra 262) does not prove this point as far as R. Simeon is concerned, since it refers to the view of the Rabbis according to whom the marriage of the sister of a zekukah is only Rabbinically forbidden and no preventive measure is obviously required against a possible infringement of such a prohibition. According to R. Simeon, however, who regards the marriage of a sister of a stekukah as incest, a preventive measure might have been expected had not our Mishnah proved the contrary.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 29a

But did not R. Simeon state that two sisters¹ are neither to perform the halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage!² — This³ is a preventive measure against any other case where the prohibition is due to a commandment —⁴ This is a satisfactory explanation in respect of herself;⁵ what, however, can be said in respect of her sister?⁶ — The provision was made in the case of her sister as a preventive measure against herself.⁷ But, surely, no such preventive measures were made in the case where one was forbidden as incest!⁸ — A case of incest is different because people are well acquainted with it⁹ and it¹⁰ is well known.¹¹

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS UNMARRIED,¹² AND WHEN ONE OF THE SISTERS HUSBANDS DIED, THE UNMARRIED BROTHER ADDRESSED TO HER¹³ A MA'AMAR,¹⁴ AND THEN HIS SECOND BROTHER DIED, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HIS WIFE¹⁵ [REMAINS] WITH HIM WHILE THE OTHER IS EXEMPT¹⁶ AS BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER.¹⁷ BETH HILLEL, HOWEVER, MAINTAIN THAT HE MUST DISMISS HIS WIFE¹⁸ BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE¹⁹ AND BY HALIZAH,²⁰ AND HIS BROTHER'S WIFE BY HALIZAH.²¹ THIS IS THE CASE IN REGARD TO WHICH IT WAS SAID: WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS WIFE, AND WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS BROTHER'S WIFE.²²

GEMARA. What was THIS IS meant to exclude?²³ — To exclude the statement²⁴ of R. Joshua,²⁵ [and to indicate] that we do not act in accordance with his view but either in accordance with that of R. Gamaliel or that of R. Eliezer.

R. Eleazar said: It must not be assumed that a ma'amar according to Beth Shammai constitutes a perfect kinyan,²⁶ so that, if he²⁷ wishes to dismiss her, a letter of divorce is sufficient; but rather that, according to Beth Shammai, a ma'amar constitutes a kinyan only so far as to keep out the rival.²⁸ Said R. Abin: We also have learned the same thing: Beth Shammai said, 'They may retain them',²⁹ which implies that they may only retain them³⁰ but [that they may] not [marry them] at the outset.³¹

(1) Who are both subject to Ievirate marriage.

(2) Owing to the levirate bond which Pentateuchally binds both sisters to the levir. Why, then, should halizah be performed here where Pentateuchally both sisters are subject to the levirate marriage and each is, consequently, forbidden as the sister of a zekukah?

(3) The provision that halizah shall be performed.

(4) Were halizah to be discarded in this case, an erroneous conclusion might be formed that it is to be discarded in all cases where the prohibition is due to a commandment (as if it had been due to the Pentateuchal laws of incest). even if the question of the sister of a zekukah did not arise.

(5) The sister forbidden by a commandment.

(6) Why is she not exempt from the halizah as the sister of a zekukah?

(7) לְחַלּוּץ 'her ill-luck'. Others render, 'company'. As the sister who is forbidden by a commandment is subject to halizah (as a preventive measure, for the reason previously stated) so must her sister (so that one case be not mistaken for the other) be also subject to the same measure.

(8) V. our Mishnah: HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER, and no preventive measure against the sister was enacted.

(9) And would know that one sister was forbidden because of incest.

(10) The cause why the second sister is taken in levirate marriage.

(11) Lit., 'it has a voice'. And no one would in consequence permit elsewhere the marriage of the sister of another zekukah who is not forbidden by the laws of incest.

(12) מוֹנֵה 'empty'.

(13) The widow.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) The sister-in-law to whom he addressed the ma'amar though he had not actually married her. A ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes legal marriage in this respect. V. infra.

(16) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(17) Since her sister is regarded as legally married she is no more the sister of the levir's zekukah but of his wife.

(18) Cf. supra n. 4.

(19) Since the ma'amar is partially regarded as marriage.

(20) A ma'amar, according to Beth Hillel, does not constitute a proper marriage, and she is now the sister of a zekukah. V. following note.

(21) v. previous note. As the ma'amar did not constitute a proper marriage with her sister she is the sister of a zekukah who may not contract levirate marriage but must perform halizah.

(22) V. infra 109a. The second widow who becomes subject to him through the levirate law is not only herself forbidden to marry him (cf. note 10) but deprives him also of the first widow, his virtual wife. (Cf. note 9)-

(23) THIS IS implying this but not other cases.

(24) Lit., 'that'.

(25) Infra 109a.

(26) V. Glos., i.e., perfect marriage.

(27) The levir.

(28) I.e., her rival who is her sister does not cause her to be forbidden to the levir as the 'sister of a zekukah'.

(29) Supra 26a, in the case where the levirs married the sisters-in-law before consulting the Beth din as to the permissibility of their action.

(30) If they had already married them.

(31) Because each one is the sister of a zekukah. Lit., 'they may retain, yes; for as at the start, not'.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 29b

Now, if it could be assumed that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes a perfect kinyan, let the one levir address a ma'amar¹ and constitute thereby a kinyan,² and let the other also address a ma'amar¹ and thereby constitute a kinyan.³ What then! [Is it your inference that] it⁴ keeps the rival completely out?⁵ Let then one levir address a ma'amar¹ and keep her out⁶ and let the other levir also address a ma'amar¹ and keep her out!⁷ What, however, may be said in reply? That a permitted ma'amar⁸ does keep the rival out, while a forbidden ma'amar⁹ does not keep her out; so also here, even according to him who maintains that a ma'amar constitutes a perfect kinyan, only a permitted ma'amar¹⁰ constitutes a kinyan. but a forbidden one⁸ does not.

R. Ashi taught it¹¹ in the following manner: R. Eleazar said: It must not be assumed that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, keeps the rival¹² completely out, and that she does not require even halizah; but rather it¹³ keeps her out¹⁴ and still leaves [a partial bond].¹⁵ Said R. Abin: We also have learned the same thing: Beth Shammai said, 'they may retain them',¹⁶ which implies that they may only retain them¹⁶ but [that they may] not [marry them] at the outset.¹⁷ Now, if it could have been assumed that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, keeps a rival out completely. let the one levir address a ma'amar,¹⁸ and thus keep her out.¹⁹ and let the other also address a ma'amar¹⁸ and so keep her out.²⁰ But. surely. it was taught. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HIS WIFE [REMAINS] WITH HIM WHILE THE OTHER IS EXEMPT AS HIS WIFE'S SISTER!²¹ — The fact is, a yebamah who is eligible for all²² is also eligible for a part;²³ a yebamah who is not eligible for all²⁴ is not eligible for a part.²⁵

Rabbah inquired: Does a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitute marriage or betrothal? — Said Abaye to him: On what practical issue [does this question bear]? Shall I say on [the issue] of inheriting from her,²⁶ defiling himself to her²⁷ or annulling her vows?²⁸ surely. [it could be answered that] seeing that in the case of²⁹ ordinary betrothal³⁰ R. Hiyya taught, that where the wife has only been betrothed³¹ [the husband] is neither subject to the laws of onan³² nor may he defile himself for her.²⁷ and she in his case is likewise not subject to the laws of onan³³ nor may she defile herself for him,³⁴ and that if she dies he does not inherit from her though if he dies she collects her kethubah;³⁵ is there any need [to speak of the case where] a ma'amar had been addressed!³⁶ Rather. [the question is] in respect of introduction into the bridal canopy: Does it³⁷ constitute a marriage and, therefore. no introduction into the bridal canopy is required.³⁸ or does it perhaps constitute betrothal and, consequently, introduction into the bridal canopy is required? The other replied: If where he did not address to her any ma'amar it is written [in Scripture]. Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,³⁹ even against her will, is there any need [to speak of the case where] he has addressed to her a ma'amar!⁴⁰ The former retorted: Yes;⁴¹ since I maintain that whenever a levir has addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law, the levirate bond disappears and she comes under the bond of betrothal. What [then is the decision]? — Come and hear: In the case of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir.⁴² whether there be one levir or two levirs, R. Eliezer said. he⁴³ may annul [her vows]. R. Joshua said: [Only where she is waiting] for one and not for two.⁴⁴ R. Akiba said: Neither when she [is waiting] for one nor for two.⁴⁵ Now we pondered thereon: One can well understand R. Akiba, since he may hold that no levirate bond exists even in the case of one;⁴⁶ according to R. Joshua, the levirate bond may exist where there is one levir but not where there are two levirs.⁴⁷ According to R. Eliezer, however, granted that a levirate bond exists, one can understand why, in the case of one, he may annul, but why also in the case of two?⁴⁸ And R. Ammi⁴⁹ replied: Here it is a case where he addressed to her a ma'amar, and the statement represents the opinion of Beth Shammai who maintain that a ma'amar constitutes a perfect kinyan.⁵⁰ Now, if it be granted that it⁵¹ constitutes a marriage, it is quite intelligible why he may annul her vows. If. however, it be assumed that it constitutes only a betrothal, how could he annul her vows? Surely we learned: The vows of a betrothed girl may be annulled by her father in conjunction with her husband!⁵² -Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: What is meant by annulment? Jointly.⁵³

According to R. Eleazar, however, who holds that a ma'amar, In the opinion of Beth Shammai, constitutes a kinyan only so far as to keep out the rival, how⁵⁴ could the annulment be effected even jointly?⁵⁵ — R. Eleazar can answer you: When I said that it⁵¹ constitutes a kinyan so far only as to keep out the rival, [I meant to indicate] that a letter of divorce was not sufficient⁵⁶ but that halizah also was required;⁵⁷ did I say anything. however, as regards the annulment of vows! And if you prefer I might say. R. Eleazar can answer you: Is it satisfactorily explained according to R. Nahman b. Isaac?⁵⁸ Surely it was not stated 'they may annul' but 'he may annul'!⁵⁹ Consequently this must be a case where he⁶⁰ appeared before a court⁶¹ and⁶² a specified sum for alimony was decreed for her out of his estate; and [this is to be understood] In accordance with the statement R. Phinehas made in the name of Raba. For R. Phinehas stated in the name of Raba: Any woman that utters a vow does so on condition that her husband will approve of it.⁶³

- (5) V. supra p. 181, n. 17.
- (6) v. p. 181, n. 17.
- (7) V. supra p. 181, n. 17, and supra n. 6. Why, then, was levirate marriage with the two sisters forbidden!
- (8) One addressed to a sister-in-law in a case where levirate marriage with her was permissible at the time.
- (9) When two sisters were subject to the levirate marriage before the ma'amar had been addressed.
- (10) V. note 11.
- (11) The previous statement of R. Eleazar and R. Abin etc.
- (12) The sister-in-law who, like her sister (the other sister-in-law), is subject to the levirate bond.
- (13) The ma'amar.
- (14) So that she cannot cause the prohibition of the other to whom the ma'amar had been addressed.
- (15) Which necessitates her performing the halizah if she wishes to marry a stranger before he levir had properly married her sister.
- (16) V. supra p. 182, n. 1.
- (17) V. supra p. 182, n. 3.
- (18) v. supra p. 182, n. 4.
- (19) Cf. supra p. 181, n. 17.
- (20) Consequently it must be concluded that a ma'amar still leaves a partial bond, and that before the other sister had performed the halizah the first is forbidden as the sister of one's zekukah.
- (21) Which shews that no halizah at all is required!
- (22) For both levirate marriage and halizah, as in the case of our Mishnah where the ma'amar was addressed to one sister before the death of the husband of the other had subjected that other also to the same levir.
- (23) To the ma'amar which, in such circumstances, completely keeps out the other when she also, through her husband's subsequent death, comes under the obligation.
- (24) As in the Mishnah, supra 26a, where both widows were equally subject to the levirs at the time the ma'amar had been addressed, and none was eligible for both the levirate marriage and the halizah.
- (25) I.e., for the ma'amar which, in such a case, does not keep out the sister.
- (26) As a husband who is the heir of his wife.
- (27) If he is a priest who may defile himself by attending on the dead bodies of certain relatives of whom a wife is one.
- (28) A husband may annul the vows of his wife. v. Num. XXX. 7ff
- (29) Lit.. 'now'.
- (30) Lit., 'a betrothed in the world', i.e., ordinary betrothal which is pentateuchally valid.
- (31) But not yet married.
- (32) A mourner prior to the burial of certain relatives is called onan (v. Glos.) and is subject to a number of restrictions. If his betrothed died he may, unlike one whose married wife died, partake of holy things.
- (33) She also is allowed to partake of holy things.
- (34) During a festival when not only priests but also Israelites and women are forbidden to attend on the corpses of those who are not their near relatives. (V. R.H. 16b). Others render. 'nor need she defile etc'. Cf. Tosaf. a.l., s.v. ס
- (35) v. Glos., in a case where such a document was given to her at the betrothal, prior to the marriage (v. Keth. 89b).
- (36) A ma'amar is only a Rabbinical enactment. If Pentateuchal betrothal has not the force of a marriage in respect of the laws mentioned, how much less the Rabbinical ma'amar!
- (37) The ma'amar.
- (38) She being regarded as his wife even if connubial intercourse took place against her will, and should he wish to part with her, a Get will suffice without additional halizah.
- (39) Deut. XXV, 5-
- (40) Where there is, in addition to his claim as levir, the force of the ma'amar.
- (41) So Bah. a.l.
- (42) שומרת יבם V. Glos. s.v. shomereth yabam.

- (43) Any one of the levirs.
- (44) In the latter case neither of the levirs is entitled to annul her vows.
- (45) Ned. 74a.
- (46) Hence a levir is never entitled to the privilege of a husband in respect of the annulment of vows.
- (47) Since it is not known to which of them she is really subject, the bond between them and the widow is necessarily a weak one.
- (48) Only both together. but not one only, should be allowed to annul her vows.
- (49) Cur. edd. enclose in parentheses 'b. Ahabah'.
- (50) Ned. loc. cit.
- (51) The ma'amar.
- (52) But not by her husband alone. And, since the levir alone may here annul, a ma'amar must have the force of marriage.
- (53) The levir and her father, as in the case of a betrothal. Hence no proof may be adduced from here as to whether a ma'amar has the force of a marriage or of a betrothal.
- (54) Not having the force even of a betrothal.
- (55) Cf. supra note 8.
- (56) In the case of a yebamah to whom a ma'amar had been addressed.
- (57) If he did not wish to marry her.
- (58) Who holds that the father and husband jointly annul the vows of the widow to whom a ma'amar has been addressed.
- (59) The reading is יפר (sing.). not יפרו (plur.). How, then, could he state that two jointly annul her vows!
- (60) The levir. So Bah a.l. Cur. edd., 'she'.
- (61) Either before he addressed the ma'amar (according to R. Nahman b. Isaac) or after the ,na'amar (according to R. Ammi).
- (62) As he refused either to marry, or to submit to her halizah.
- (63) Since she is maintained out of his estate he is regarded by her as husband and her vows are subject to his will. Hence he may also annul them. With the whole passage cf. Ned. 74a. Sonc. ed. pp. 233ff, q.v. notes.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 30a

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS DIED AND THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER MARRIED HIS WIFE AND THEN DIED HIMSELF, THE FIRST¹ IS EXEMPT² AS BEING A WIFE'S SISTER, AND THE SECOND IS EXEMPT² AS BEING HER RIVAL. IF, HOWEVER, HE HAD ONLY ADDRESSED TO HER³ A MA'AMAR AND DIED, THE STRANGER IS TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁴

GEMARA. The reason⁵ is because he had addressed to her³ a ma'amar;⁶ had he, however, not addressed a ma'amar to her,³ the stranger also would have had to be taken in levirate marriage.⁷ This proves, said R. Nahman, that no levirate bond exists⁸ even in the case of one brother.⁹

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND WHEN THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED, ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS MARRIED HIS WIFE AND THEN DIED HIMSELF, THE FIRST¹⁰ IS EXEMPT¹¹ IN THAT SHE IS HIS WIFE'S SISTER, AND THE OTHER¹² IS EXEMPT AS HER RIVAL. IF, HOWEVER, HE HAD ONLY ADDRESSED TO HER¹³ A MA'AMAR AND DIED, THE STRANGER MUST PERFORM HALIZAH¹⁴ BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. What need was there again [for the law in this Mishnah]? Surely it is the same:¹⁵ If there,¹⁶ where the wife's sister is only a rival to the stranger¹⁷ it has been said that the stranger is forbidden,¹⁸ how much more so¹⁹ here where the stranger is the rival to a wife's sister!²⁰ -The Tanna had taught first this,²¹ while the other²² was regarded by him as a permissible case, and so he permitted her.²³ Later, however, he came to regard it as a case that was to be forbidden;²⁴ and, as it was dear to him,²⁵ he placed it first; while the other Mishnah²⁶ was allowed to stand in its original form.²⁷

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND WHEN ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS DIED THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER MARRIED HIS WIFE, AND THEN THE WIFE OF THE SECOND BROTHER DIED, AND AFTERWARDS THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED ALSO, BEHOLD, SHE²⁸ IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM²⁹ FOR ALL TIME, SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT.³⁰

GEMARA. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Any yebamah to whom the instruction Her husband's brother shall go in unto her³¹ cannot be applied at the time she becomes subject to the levirate marriage, is indeed like the wife of a brother who has children, and is consequently forbidden.³² What new thing does he³³ teach us? Surely we have learned, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ALL TIME SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT! — It might have been assumed that this³⁴ applies only to the case where she³⁵ was not suitable for him³⁶ at all during the period of her first subjection;³⁷ but that where she³⁸ was at all suitable for him³⁹ during her first subjection⁴⁰ it might have been assumed that she³⁸ should be permitted, hence, he⁴¹ taught us [that It was not so].

But we have learned this also: If two brothers were married to two sisters, and one of the brothers died and afterwards the wife of the second brother died, behold, she⁴² is forbidden to him for all time, since she was forbidden to him for one moment!⁴³ — It might have been assumed [that this law is applicable] only there because she was completely forced out of that house;⁴⁴ but here, where she was not entirely forced out of that house,⁴⁵ it might have been said that as she is suitable for the brother who married the stranger she is also⁴⁶ suitable for the other brother,⁴⁷ hence he⁴¹ taught us [that she was not].

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS DIVORCED HIS WIFE, AND WHEN THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED HE WHO HAD DIVORCED HIS WIFE MARRIED HER AND THEN DIED HIMSELF- THIS IS A CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT WAS SAID: AND IF ANY OF THESE DIED OR WERE DIVORCED. THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED.⁴⁸ GEMARA. The reason⁴⁹ is because he⁵⁰ had divorced [his wife first] and [his brother]⁵¹ died afterwards,⁵² but [if the other]⁵¹ had died [first] and he⁵⁰ divorced [his wife] afterwards,⁵³ she⁵⁴ is forbidden.⁵⁵ Said R. Ashi: This proves that a levirate bond exists,⁵⁶ even where two brothers are involved.⁵⁷

But as to R. Ashi's [inference] does not that of R. Nahman⁵⁸ present a difficulty?-R. Ashi can answer you: The same law, that the stranger is to perform the halizah and that she is not to be taken in levirate marriage, is applicable⁵⁹ even to the case where no ma' amar had been addressed; and the only reason why ma'amar was at all mentioned⁶⁰ was in order to exclude the ruling of Beth Shammai. Since they maintain that a ma'amar constitutes

(1) Widow, who is now also the widow of the second deceased brother.

(2) From levirate marriage and halizah with the surviving brother.

(3) The first widow.

(4) With the surviving brother.

(5) Why the stranger is not to be taken in levirate marriage.

- (6) Since our Mishnah makes the stranger's exemption dependent on the ma'amar, whereby she became the first widow's rival.
- (7) Despite the fact that the first widow is also subjected to the levir for the levirate marriage.
- (8) Between the widow of the deceased brother and the levirs.
- (9) As here, where only one brother could possibly marry her, she being forbidden to the other as his wife's sister. Even in such a case the mere subjection of the widow to the levir (to be taken in levirate marriage or to perform the halizah) does not constitute a levirate bond to attach her to him as if she had been his actual wife.
- (10) Wife of the second deceased brother.
- (11) From marriage and halizah with the surviving brother.
- (12) The stranger. whom the second deceased brother had taken in levirate marriage.
- (13) To the stranger.
- (14) With the surviving brother.
- (15) As the law implied in the previous Mishnah.
- (16) In the previous Mishnah.
- (17) Who was the first and proper wife.
- (18) To be taken in levirate marriage.
- (19) Should the stranger be forbidden to be taken in levirate marriage.
- (20) Who was the first and proper wife.
- (21) The second Mishnah.
- (22) Mishnah, which is now the first.
- (23) I.e., allowed the stranger to be taken in levirate marriage by the surviving brother, because the prohibition that arose from her husband's 'wife's sister' was imposed upon her later, after she had been lawfully married to her husband and after a period during which, had he died without issue, she would have been permitted to be taken in levirate marriage by his brother. It was not the Tanna's Intention, therefore, to include this case in a Mishnah at all.
- (24) Since her rival was, after all, the surviving brother's wife's sister.
- (25) Owing to its novelty.
- (26) The second Mishnah.
- (27) Lit., 'did not move from its place'. though in the light of the newly added Mishnah it had obviously become superfluous.
- (28) The wife of the first brother.
- (29) The surviving brother.
- (30) Lit., 'hour'. When her husband died she was forbidden to his brother who was married to her sister as his 'wife's sister'. This prohibition remains permanently in force and is not removed even when her sister subsequently dies and she is no longer the levir's 'wife's sister'.
- (31) Deut. XXV, 5'
- (32) Even later when the cause of the prohibition is removed. Cf. our Mishnah.
- (33) Rab.
- (34) The law in our Mishnah.
- (35) The widow of the first brother.
- (36) The brother who was married to the second sister.
- (37) I.e., if her sister, the wife of the second brother, did not die until after she had married the brother whose wife was the stranger.
- (38) The widow of the first brother.
- (39) The brother who was married to the second sister.
- (40) If her sister died before she (the first widow) had married the other brother.
- (41) Rah.
- (42) The widow of the first brother.
- (43) Infra 32a.
- (44) When her husband died and she was not permitted to marry his only surviving brother whose wife's sister she was, her connection with her husband's family had been completely severed, she remaining free to marry any stranger.
- (45) Since she was still under the obligation of marrying the third brother who was married to the stranger.
- (46) Thanks to the levirate bond with a member of her deceased husband's family.

- (47) Who was the husband of her sister, now that the latter is dead.
- (48) The stranger who was taken in levirate marriage was never the rival of the sister of the wife of the surviving brother, since the sister had been divorced before the levirate marriage with the stranger had taken place.
- (49) Why the stranger who was taken in levirate marriage by one of the husbands of the sisters is permitted to the last surviving brother.
- (50) The brother who divorced his wife.
- (51) The first husband of the stranger.
- (52) So that the stranger was not even for one moment the rival of one of the sisters, either through marriage or through the levirate bond of subjection.
- (53) In which case the stranger came for a certain period under the levirate bond in respect of the husbands of the two sisters.
- (54) The stranger.
- (55) To marry the last surviving brother. Since she was, for a period at least, the rival of one of the sisters, through the levirate bond, she may never be married to the husband of that sister's sister (being forbidden to him as the rival of his wife's sister) even if the sister whose rival she was had been subsequently divorced and ceased to be her rival.
- (56) Between the widow of a deceased childless brother and the levirs.
- (57) Since, in the case under discussion, the widow whose husband died before one of the sisters had been divorced was subject to two levirs and is, nevertheless, regarded as the rival of the divorced sister, in consequence of which she is forbidden to the last surviving brother.
- (58) From a Mishnah supra, that no levirate bond exists even in the case of one brother.
- (59) Contrary to R. Nahman's inference.
- (60) In that Mishnah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 30b

a perfect kinyan,¹ he taught us² that [the halachah is] not in accordance with Beth Shammai.

But then as to R. Nahman's [inference] does not that of R. Ashi present a difficulty? And should you reply that the same law, that her rival is permitted,³ is also applicable to the case where he⁴ died first and the other brother⁵ divorced his wife afterwards,⁶ what [it could be objected] would THIS IS exclude? It might exclude the case where he⁵ married her⁷ first and then divorced his wife.⁸ This might be a satisfactory explanation if he⁹ holds the view of R. Jeremiah who said, 'Break it up: He who taught the one did not teach the other,'¹⁰ [for, if this is so]. one Tanna may hold the opinion that it is death¹¹ that causes the subjection¹² while the other might be of the opinion that it is the original marriage¹¹ that causes the subjection,¹³ and THIS IS would thus exclude the case where he first married⁷ and then divorced;¹⁴ if, however, he is of the same opinion as Raba who said, 'Both statements may in fact represent the views of one Tanna, it being a case of "this and there is no need to state that"',¹⁵ what does THIS IS exclude?¹⁶ — He⁹ has no alternative but to adopt the view of R. Jeremiah.

And according to Raba,¹⁷ the explanation would be satisfactory if he held the View of R. Ashi,¹⁸ for then, THIS IS would exclude the case of one who died without first divorcing his wife;¹⁹ if, however, he holds the same view as R. Nahman,²⁰ what would THIS IS exclude?²¹ — He²² has no alternative but to accept the view of R. Ashi. MISHNAH. [IF IN THE CASE OF ANY ONE OF] ALL THESE²³ THE BETROTHAL OR DIVORCE²⁴ WAS IN DOUBT, BEHOLD, THESE RIVALS MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH²⁵ BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.²⁶ WHAT IS MEANT BY DOUBTFUL BETROTHAL? IF WHEN HE THREW TO HER A TOKEN OF BETROTHAL²⁷ IT WAS UNCERTAIN WHETHER IT FELL NEARER TO HIM²⁸ OR NEARER TO HER,²⁹ THIS IS A CASE OF DOUBTFUL BETROTHAL. DOUBTFUL DIVORCE? IF HE WROTE A LETTER OF DIVORCE IN HIS OWN HANDWRITING AND IT BORE NO SIGNATURES OF WITNESSES,³⁰ OR³¹ IF IT BORE SIGNATURES BUT NO DATE, OR IF IT BORE A DATE BUT THE SIGNATURE OF ONLY ONE WITNESS, THIS IS A CASE OF DOUBTFUL DIVORCE.

GEMARA. In the case of divorce, however, It is not stated IT WAS UNCERTAIN WHETHER IT FELL NEARER TO HIM OR NEARER TO HER; what is the reason?³² -Rabbah replied: This woman³³ is in a state of permissibility to all men;³⁴ would you forbid her [marriage] because of a doubt?³⁵ You must not forbid her because of a doubt!³⁶ Said Abaye to him: If so, let us also in the matter of betrothal say: This woman³⁷ is in a state of permissibility to the levir;³⁸ would you forbid her³⁹ because of a doubt? You must not forbid her because of a doubt! — There⁴⁰ [it leads] to a restriction.⁴¹ But it is a restriction which may lead to a relaxation! For, sometimes, he would betroth her sister⁴² by betrothal that was not uncertain, or it might occur that another man would betroth her also by a betrothal that was not uncertain and, as the Master has forbidden her rival to be taken in levirate marriage. it would be assumed that the betrothal of the first⁴³ was valid and that that of the latter was not!⁴⁴

(1) And not even halizah is required.

(2) By stating that halizah must be performed.

(3) To the third surviving brother.

(4) The first husband of the stranger.

(5) The brother who divorced his wife.

(6) The levirate bond with the stranger, prior to the divorce of his wife, not constituting the one woman a rival of the other.

(7) The stranger.

(8) In such a case, since she was actually married, the stranger is regarded as the rival of the third brother's wife's sister, though at the time she becomes subject to him she and his wife's sister have ceased to be rivals.

(9) R. Nahman.

(10) Supra 13a.

(11) Of the childless brother.

(12) Of the widow to the levir.

(13) v. previous note and supra p. 65, n. 7.

(14) His wife.

(15) V. supra p. 65, n. 14 and cf. p. 65, n. 12, so that even if marriage of the stranger took place prior to the divorce of the other, the former, after divorce had taken place, is permitted, even according to the Tanna of our Mishnah.

(16) When the levirate marriage is permitted in both these cases.

(17) Who holds that the subjection to the levirate marriage is caused by the death of the childless brother, and that the rival is permitted to the surviving levir even if the deceased had married her prior to his divorcing his wife, who is the sister of the surviving levir's wife.

(18) That a levirate bond exists.

(19) And without marrying the stranger who would, nevertheless, be forbidden to the surviving third brother on account of the levirate bond.

(20) That no levirate bond exists.

(21) In view of the fact that levirate marriage is permitted in all cases except one, where the second brother took the stranger in levirate marriage and did not divorce his wife, a case which was explicitly stated and required no expression like THIS IS to exclude it.

(22) Raba.

(23) Fifteen relatives enumerated in the first Mishnah of the Tractate, supra 2af.

(24) On the part of the deceased childless brother.

(25) Since it is possible that the betrothal was, or that the divorce was not valid, and they are consequently the rivals of a forbidden relative.

(26) It being possible that the betrothal was not, or that the divorce was valid and they are, therefore, not rivals of a forbidden relative.

(27) While they were both standing in a public domain and a distance of exactly eight cubits intervened between them.

(28) I.e., within the four cubits nearest to him.

- (29) Within her four cubits. The person within whose four cubits the object rested is deemed to be the legal possessor.
- (30) A document in one's own handwriting, even though it is not signed by witnesses, is within certain conditions and limitations deemed to be valid. V. B.B. 175b.
- (31) Where it is not in his own handwriting.
- (32) Why should not even halizah on the part of the rival, be required in such a case?
- (33) The rival.
- (34) Lit., 'to the market', i.e., the public. The rival of a forbidden relative, not being subject to levirate marriage or halizah, is permitted to marry any one she desires.
- (35) The possibility that the forbidden relative's divorce was valid.
- (36) The doubt here being whether the forbidden relative was divorced at all. In the three cases of divorce mentioned in our Mishnah, however, the prohibition is not due to doubtful divorce but to a defect or an irregularity in the document itself.
- (37) The rival.
- (38) Had her husband died childless before he married the forbidden relative.
- (39) To be taken in levirate marriage.
- (40) The case of doubtful betrothal.
- (41) The prohibition to marry the levir.
- (42) The sister of the one whose betrothal was doubtful.
- (43) Since her rival is forbidden.
- (44) Because, in the first case, he betrothed his wife's sister; and, in the second, he betrothed a married woman. In the latter case, the betrothal being regarded as invalid, the woman might illegally marry another man. In the former case, should he die without issue, his maternal brother might illegally marry her, believing her never to have been the wife of his brother.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 31a

— Since she is required to perform halizah it is sufficiently known that it¹ is a mere restriction.² If so, let him, in the case of divorce also,³ state it,⁴ and require her to perform halizah, and it will be sufficiently known that it⁵ was a mere restriction!⁶ — Were you to say that she was to perform halizah it might also be assumed that she may be taken in levirate marriage.⁷ But here also,⁸ were you to say that she is to perform halizah, she might also be taken in levirate marriage!⁷ -Well, let her be taken in levirate marriage and it will not matter at all since thereby she only retains her former status.⁹

Abaye raised the following objection against him:¹⁰ If the house collapsed upon him¹¹ and upon his brother's daughter.¹² and it is not known which of them had died first, her rival must perform halizah¹³ but may not contract the levirate marriage.¹⁴ But why? Here also it may be said, 'This woman finds herself in the status of permissibility to all,¹⁵ would you forbid her [marriage on the basis] of a doubt? You must not forbid her [on the basis] of a doubt'! And should you suggest that here also the prohibition is due to a restriction, [it may be retorted that] it is a restriction which may result in a relaxation, for should you say that she is to perform the halizah she might also be taken in levirate marriage! — In respect of divorce which is of frequent occurrence the Rabbis enacted a preventive measure;¹⁶ in respect of the collapse of a house which is not of frequent occurrence the Rabbis did not enact any preventive measure. Or else:¹⁷ In the case of divorce, where the forbidden relative is demonstrably alive, were her rival to be required to perform halizah, it might have been thought that the Rabbis¹⁸ had ascertained that the letter of divorce was a valid document,¹⁹ and the rival might, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage. In the case of a house that has collapsed, however, could the Rabbis¹⁸ have ascertained [who was first killed] in the ruin!²⁰

Have we not learned a similar law in the case of divorce? Surely we learned: If she²¹ stood in a public domain, and he²² threw it²³ to her, she is divorced if it fell nearer to her; but if nearer to him she is not divorced. If it was equidistant,²⁴ she is divorced and not divorced. And when it was asked,

‘What is the practical effect of this’,²⁵ [the reply was] that if he was a priest she is forbidden to him;²⁶ and if she is a forbidden relative, her rival must perform the halizah.²⁷ We do not say, however, that were you to rule that she must perform halizah she might also be taken in levirate marriage!²⁸ -Concerning this statement, surely, it was said: Both Rabbah and R. Joseph maintain that here we are dealing with two groups of witnesses, one of which declare that it²³ was nearer to her and the other declares that it²³ was nearer to him, which creates a doubt involving a Pentateuchal [prohibition] —²⁹ Our Mishnah, however, speaks of one group.³⁰ where the doubt involved is only Rabbinical.³¹

Whence is it proved that our Mishnah speaks of one group? — On analogy with betrothal:³² As in betrothal only one group is involved so also in divorce³³ one group only could be involved. Whence is it known that in betrothal itself only one group is involved? Is it not possible that it involves two groups of witnesses! — If two groups of witnesses had been involved, she would have been allowed to contract the levirate marriage, and no wrong would have been done.³⁴ Witnesses stand and declare that it³⁵ was nearer to her,³⁶ and you say that she may be taken in levirate marriage and no wrong will be done!³⁷ Furthermore, even where two groups of witnesses are involved the doubt is only Rabbinical, since it might be said ‘Put one pair against the other and let the woman retain her original status’!³⁸ This indeed is similar to [the incident with] the estate of a certain lunatic. For a certain lunatic once sold some property. and a pair of witnesses came and declared that he had effected the sale while in a sound state of mind, and another pair came and declared that the sale was effected while he was in a state of lunacy. And R. Ashi said: Put two against two

- (1) The prohibition to take her in levirate marriage.
 - (2) And is not due to the fact that the betrothal of the forbidden relative was valid.
 - (3) As in the case of betrothal.
 - (4) The case of uncertainty as to whether the letter of divorce rested nearer to the husband or nearer to the wife (v. our Mishnah).
 - (5) The halizah.
 - (6) Seeing that levirate marriage was forbidden to her.
 - (7) And by marrying the rival of a forbidden relative one might become subject to the penalty of kareth.
 - (8) In the case of doubtful betrothal.
 - (9) Of being permitted to marry the levir.
 - (10) Rabbah.
 - (11) Who was childless.
 - (12) To whom he had been married.
 - (13) With the daughter's father, the brother of the deceased. Though the dead woman was his forbidden relative, since it is possible that she had been killed before the man, her rival becomes subject to the obligation of performing halizah.
 - (14) Infra 67b. Since it is also possible that the man was killed first and the rival remained forbidden to the levir as the rival of his daughter.
 - (15) v. supra p. 192, n. 12.
 - (16) That wherever the divorce is doubtful the rival must not perform halizah in order that this performance might not lead also to levirate marriage.
 - (17) It may be replied.
 - (18) The scholars or experts who dealt with the case.
 - (19) And the forbidden relative was no more the wife of the deceased.
 - (20) It would be obvious, therefore, that the requirement of halizah was a mere restriction.
 - (21) The wife.
 - (22) The husband.
 - (23) The letter of divorce.
 - (24) Lit., ‘half on half’.
 - (25) The statement that she is divorced and not divorced.
 - (26) A priest must not marry or continue to live with a divorced woman.

(27) Git. 78a.

(28) Which shews that even in the case of divorce no preventive measure has been enacted.

(29) As two witnesses declare that the letter of divorce was nearer to the woman, and as evidence of two witnesses is Pentateuchally valid, the possibility that her rival is no more the rival of a forbidden relative must be taken into consideration, and she cannot be permitted to marry a stranger without previous halizah with the levir.

(30) One witness of which is contradicting the other.

(31) Hence, in the matter of betrothal, where the rival enjoyed the status of permissibility to the levir, the law that halizah is required in the case of such contradictory evidence could well be applied, since she cannot be deprived of her status by the evidence of the single witness who states that the token of betrothal was nearer to her. In the case of divorce, however, where the rival has the status of permissibility to marry any stranger, the law that halizah is required in the case of contradictory evidence of two single witnesses could not be applied. since the evidence of one witness is not sufficient to deprive her of that right. particularly as it can also be claimed that were she required to perform halizah she might be taken in levirate marriage also.

(32) Divorce and betrothal being mentioned side by side in this Mishnah.

(33) Had it been included in our Mishnah.

(34) Since the evidence of one pair would have been sufficient to confirm the rival in her status of permissibility to the levir. Hence, as levirate marriage was forbidden it cannot be a case of two groups of witnesses.

(35) The token of betrothal.

(36) Thus presenting a Pentateuchal doubt (cf. supra p. 195. n. 9).

(37) This, surely, might result in the breach of a Pentateuchal law!

(38) Why, then, even in the case of divorce itself, when the two groups of witnesses cancel each other, should the rival, who was hitherto in a state of permissibility to marry anyone, be required to perform halizah!

and let the land remain in the possession of the lunatic! — Rather, said Abaye. Its friend telleth concerning it:¹ that which was taught in connection with betrothal² is also to be applied to divorce,³ and what was taught in connection with divorce⁴ is also to be applied to betrothal.

Said Raba to him: If its friend telleth concerning it' what was the object of stating THIS IS?⁵ -Rather, said Raba, whatever is applicable to betrothal⁶ is also to be applied to divorce, but certain points are applicable to divorce,⁷ which cannot be applied to betrothal. And THIS IS⁸ which was mentioned in the case of divorce is not to be taken literally. as THIS IS was used in connection with betrothal⁹ only because it was also used in connection with divorce.

What was THIS IS mentioned in connection with betrothal meant to exclude? — To exclude the question of date which is inapplicable to betrothal.¹⁰ And wherefore was no date ordained to be entered in [documents of] betrothal? This¹¹ may well be satisfactorily explained according to him who holds [that the date is required In a letter of divorce]¹² on account of the usufruct,¹³ since a betrothed woman has no [need to reclaim] usufruct —¹⁴ According to him, however, who holds [that it¹⁵ was ordained] on account of one's sister's daughter.¹⁶ the insertion of a date should have been ordained [in the case of betrothal also]!¹⁷ — Since some men betroth with money¹⁸ and others betroth with a document the Rabbis did not ordain the inclusion of a date.

Said R. Aha son of R. Joseph to R. Ashi: What about the case of a slave of whom some acquire possession by means of money and others by means of a deed, yet the inclusion of a date has nevertheless been ordained by the Rabbis! — In that case¹⁹ acquisition is generally by means of a deed; here,²⁰ it is generally by means of money. If you prefer I might say: Because it is impossible.²¹ For how should one proceed? Were it²² to be left with her, she might erase it.²³ Were it²² to be left with him, it might happen that the betrothed might be his sister's daughter and he would shield her.²⁴ Were it to be left with the witnesses-well, if they remember²⁵ they could come and tender their evidence;²⁶ and if they do not,²⁷ they may sometimes consult the document and then come and tender evidence, while the All Merciful said, 'out of their mouth'²⁸ but not out of their writing. If so, let the same argument²⁹ be applied to divorce also! — There,³⁰ it³¹ comes to save her,³² here,³³ it³¹ comes to condemn her.³⁴

MISHNAH. IN THE CASE WHERE THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO THREE WOMEN WHO WERE STRANGERS [TO ONE ANOTHER]. AND ONE OF THEM HAVING DIED³⁵ THE SECOND BROTHER ADDRESSED TO HER³⁶ A MA'AMAR³⁷ AND DIED, BEHOLD, THESE³⁸ MUST PERFORM HALIZAH³⁹ BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE; FOR IT IS SAID. AND ONE OF THEM DIED [ETC.] HER HUSBAND'S BROTHER SHALL GO IN UNTO HER.⁴⁰ ONLY SHE WHO IS BOUND TO ONE LEVIR⁴¹ BUT NOT SHE WHO IS BOUND TO TWO LEVIRS.⁴² R. SIMEON SAID: HE MAY TAKE IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WHICHEVER OF THESE HE WISHES⁴³ AND THEN PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH THE OTHER.⁴⁴

GEMARA. If, however, the levirate bond with two levirs⁴⁵ is Pentateuchal,⁴⁶ even halizah should not be required! — But it⁴⁷ is only Rabbinical,⁴⁸ a preventive measure having been enacted against the possible assumption that two sisters-in-law coming from the same house⁴⁹ may both be taken in levirate marriage. Then let one be taken in levirate marriage and the other be required to perform halizah! — A preventive measure has been enacted against the possible assumption that one house was partially built

- (29) Used in respect of betrothal, that there is no safe or proper place to keep the deed.
- (30) In the case of divorce.
- (31) The document.
- (32) Unless she produced it, were she ever to be accused of adultery. she would certainly be condemned since she was known as a married woman. The letter of divorce being her sole protection, it being the sole proof that her married state had ended, she should in her own interest carefully preserve it intact for fear that should she tamper with it, the deed may be declared invalid. (Cf. Tosaf. s.v. הצדקה, a.l.).
- (33) The case of betrothal.
- (34) The document is proof that she had passed out of her unmarried state and that henceforward she is forbidden to all men except her betrothed. She (or any friend of hers) is not anxious to preserve such a document; and, should an accusation of adultery ever be brought against her, she could either destroy it or erase the date and claim her previously confirmed status of an unmarried woman. - (43) v. supra 19a. If the ma'amar has the validity of marriage, the surviving levir is marrying his second brother's wife, and if a ma'amar is invalid he is marrying either the wife of his first brother or the wife of the second.
- (44) The levirate marriage of the one cannot exempt the other from the halizah, since it is possible that a ma'amar is invalid and the two widows are consequently of different brothers. He may not marry the two, since a ma'amar may be valid and he would thus be marrying two widows of the same brother.

and partially pulled down.¹ Well, let the assumption be made!² — Had he first contracted the levirate marriage and then participated in the halizah, no objection could be raised —³ The preventive measure, however, has been enacted against the possibility of his participating in the halizah first and contracting the levirate marriage afterwards and thus placing himself under the prohibition of That doth not build up,⁴ the All Merciful having said, 'Since he had not built⁵ he must never again build'.⁶

Raba said: If he⁷ gave a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amar, her rival⁸ is permitted;⁹ but she herself is forbidden, because she might be mistaken for one who is the holder of a letter of divorce.¹⁰ Others say that Raba said: If he¹¹ gave a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amar even she herself becomes permitted.¹² What is the reason? — Because what he has done to her he has taken back.¹³

MISHNAH. IF TWO BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, AND ONE OF THE BROTHERS DIED, AND AFTERWARDS THE WIFE OF THE SECOND BROTHER DIED, BEHOLD, SHE¹⁴ IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM¹⁵ FOREVER, SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT.¹⁶ GEMARA. Is not this obvious? If there,¹⁷ where she¹⁸ was not entirely excluded from that house¹⁹ it has been said, 'No',²⁰ how much more so here²¹ where the widow is completely excluded from that house!²² -The Tanna had taught first this,²¹ while the other²³ was regarded by him as a permissible case,²⁴ and so he permitted it —²⁵ Later, however, he came to regard it as a case that was to be forbidden;²⁶ and, as it was dear to him²⁷ he placed it first; while our Mishnah was allowed to remain in its original form.²⁸

Our Rabbis learned: If he²⁹ had intercourse with her,³⁰ he is guilty on account of both 'his brother's wife'³¹ and 'his wife's sister';³² so R. Jose. R. Simeon said: He is guilty on account of 'his brother's wife' only. But, surely, it was taught that R. Simeon said: He is guilty on account of 'his wife's sister' only! — This is no difficulty: There, it is a case where the surviving brother had married first³³ and the deceased had married afterwards;³⁴ here it is a case where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother afterwards.³⁵ As to R. Simeon, in the case where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother married afterwards, let her, since the prohibition of wife's sister cannot take effect, be permitted even to contract the levirate marriage! — R. Ashi replied: The prohibition of wife's sister remains suspended, and as soon as the prohibition of brother's wife is removed³⁶ the prohibition of wife's sister comes into force; hence It cannot be treated as non-existent.³⁷

Does, then, R. Jose hold the view that one prohibition may be imposed upon another? Surely, it was taught: A man who committed a transgression which involves two death penalties³⁸ is punished by the severer one. R. Jose said: He is to be dealt with in accordance with that prohibition which came into force first.³⁹ And it was taught: How is one to understand R. Jose's statement that sentence must be in accordance with the prohibition which came into force first? [If the woman was first] his mother-in-law⁴⁰ and then became also a married woman, he is to be sentenced for [an offence against] his mother-in-law; if she was first a married woman and then became his mother-in-law, he is to be sentenced for [an offence against] a married woman!⁴¹

(1) And the same procedure would unlawfully be followed in the case of two widows of the same brother.

(2) What objection can be raised against it?

(3) Lit., 'thus also', the assumption would not have mattered.

(4) אִשָּׁר לֹא יִבְנֶה Deut. XXV, 9.

(5) I.e., refused to marry his brother's widow, but participated in her halizah.

(6) Must never marry the other widow. The imperfect יִבְנֶה may be rendered as a past, present or future.

(7) The second brother who had addressed a ma'amar to the first brother's widow. V. our Mishnah.

(8) I.e., his first wife.

- (9) To the third surviving brother if the second also died without issue. The two widows are no longer rivals since the divorce has annulled the ma'amar, and they, being the widows of two different brothers, are now coming from two different houses.
- (10) . That was given to her in respect of the levirate bond as well as of the ma'amar, v. infra 52b. Such a sister-in-law is forbidden under the prohibition of 'That doth not build up (v. supra and notes 3, 4 and 5)' since in her case the levirate bond also had been severed.
- (11) V. note 6.
- (12) And she is thus subject to the third brother as the widow of the first.
- (13) The ma'amar by which he bound her he has himself annulled.
- (14) The widow.
- (15) The surviving brother.
- (16) Prior to his wife's death and after the death of her husband, however short that period may have been, she was forbidden to him as his wife's sister.
- (17) The third Mishnah, on fol. 30a supra, where there were three brothers involved, two of whom were married to two sisters and one to a stranger.
- (18) The widow of the first brother.
- (19) For though she had been forbidden to the second brother, who was married to her sister, she was permitted to the third and she remained in the family.
- (20) I.e., she has been forbidden to the second brother, after the death of the third brother who had married her, owing to the original prohibition which may have lasted one moment only. even after his wife (her sister) had died.
- (21) Our Mishnah where only two brothers are involved.
- (22) When her husband died there was not a single brother whom she was permitted to marry. What need, then, was there for our Mishnah?
- (23) v. note 1.
- (24) Since, there, she was not entirely forced out of the family.
- (25) Hence he did not consider it necessary to enunciate It 10 a Mishnah.
- (26) As, after all, in the case of the second brother, the levirate marriage was for a time forbidden to her.
- (27) Owing to its novelty and its wider range.
- (28) Lit. — 'did not move from its place'. Though in the presence of the other Mishnah it is indeed superfluous.
- (29) The levir.
- (30) The widow (v. our Mishnah), while his wife was still alive.
- (31) Since she is exempt from the levirate marriage she is forbidden to the levir as any widow of a brother who has issue.
- (32) So that if the offence was committed unwittingly he is liable to bring two sin-offerings.
- (33) One of the sisters; and thus the prohibition of 'wife's sister' came into force first.
- (34) The other sister. The added prohibition of 'brother's wife' could not take effect where one prohibition was already in force.
- (35) Cf. previous two notes mutatis mutandis.
- (36) פקע, lit., 'to split', hence removed'.
- (37) Lit., 'it is not removed'. The levirate marriage is consequently forbidden.
- (38) Intercourse, for instance, with a mother-in-law (which is punishable by burning) who was at the time a married woman (the penalty for which is strangulation).
- (39) Tosef. Sanh. XII, Sanh. 81a.
- (40) Having been a widow or divorcee at the time of his marriage.
- (41) Though the penalty in this case (strangulation) is lighter than that for an offence against a mother-in-law (burning). This proves that one prohibition may not be imposed upon another. Had it been otherwise, the severer penalty should have been inflicted though the prohibition which had caused it came into force later.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 32b

— R. Abbahu replied: R. Jose admits¹ where the latter prohibition is of a wider range.²

This is satisfactory in the case where the surviving brother had married³ first and the deceased had married⁴ afterwards, since the prohibition. having been extended in the case of the brothers, had also been extended in his own case.⁵ What extension of the prohibition is there, however, where the deceased had married³ first⁶ and the surviving brother had married⁴ afterwards?⁷ And were you to reply: Because thereby⁸ he is forbidden to marry all the sisters,⁹ [it may be retorted that] such is only a comprehensive prohibition!¹⁰

The fact is, said Raba, he is deemed¹¹ to have committed two offences,¹² but is liable for one only.¹³

Similarly when Rabin came¹⁴ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: The offender is deemed¹¹ to have committed two offences, but he is only liable for one. What practical difference does this¹⁵ make?- That he must be buried among confirmed sinners.¹⁵

This¹⁶ is a question on which opinions differ. For It was stated: A common man¹⁷ who performed some Temple service on the Sabbath, is. R. Hiyya said, liable for two offences.' Bar Kappara said: He is only liable for one.¹⁸ R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath. 'By the Temple',¹⁹ [he exclaimed]. 'so have I heard from Rabbi:²⁰ two'! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, 'By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi:²⁰ one'! R. Hiyya began to argue the point thus: Work on the Sabbath was forbidden to all [Israelites,] and when it was permitted in the [Sanctuary], it was permitted to the priests, hence it was permitted to the priests only, but not to common men. Here, therefore, is involved the offence of Temple service by a common man, and that of the desecration of the Sabbath. Bar Kappara began to argue his point thus: Work on the Sabbath was forbidden to all [Israelites]. but when it was permitted in the Sanctuary, it was permitted [to all], hence only the offence of Temple service by a common man is here involved.

A priest having a blemish who performed [some Temple] services²¹ while unclean is. R. Hiyya said, guilty of two offences. Bar Kappara said: He is guilty of one offence only. R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath, 'By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi: two'! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, 'By the Temple, thus have I heard from Rabbi: one'! R. Hiyya began to reason: [Temple service during one's] uncleanness was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary,²² it was permitted to priests who had no blemish — Hence it must have been permitted only to priests who had no blemish, but not to those who had. Consequently. both the offence of service being done by one with a blemish and that of service during one's uncleanness are here involved. Bar Kappara began to reason thus: [Temple service during] uncleanness was forbidden to all. When it was permitted at the Sanctuary.²³ was [universally] permitted.²⁴ Consequently. only one offence, that of service by one who had a blemish, is involved.

A common man who ate melikah²⁵ is. R. Hiyya said, guilty of two offences. Bar Kappara said: He is guilty only of one. R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath, 'By the Temple. so I heard from Rabbi: two'! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, 'By the Temple. so I heard from Rabbi: one'! R. Hiyya began to reason thus: Nebelah²⁶ was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary²⁷ it was permitted in the case of the priests. Hence it must be permitted to priests only and not to common men. Consequently. both the offence of consumption²⁸ by a common man, and that of melikah are here involved. Bar Kappara began to reason: Nebelah²⁶ was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary²⁷ it was [universally] permitted — Consequently. only the offence due to consumption²⁸ by a common man is here involved.

(1) That one prohibition may be imposed upon another.

(2) אסור מוסף lit., 'a prohibition which adds', i.e., one which causes an object (or a person) to be forbidden to others to whom it was not previously forbidden. Hence he admits the imposition of the prohibition of 'brother's wife' upon that of 'wife's sister', even where the latter prohibition was already in force, because the former, unlike the latter, is applicable not only to him alone but to the other brothers also. In the case, however, of a married woman who became his mother-in-law where the first prohibition was of a wider range (the woman being forbidden to all men except her husband) and the later one (forbidden to him only) of a restricted range, the second prohibition cannot be imposed upon the first. The reason why in the case of a mother-in-law who became a — married woman the sentence is to be that for an offence against a mother-in-law is not because the latter (which is of a wider range) cannot be imposed upon the former, but because wherever two penalties are to be inflicted the severer one (burning) supersedes the lighter one (strangulation).

(3) One of the sisters.

(4) The other sister.

(5) V. supra p. 202, n. 9.

(6) Bringing Into force the prohibition of brother's wife which is applicable to all brothers.

(7) Adding the prohibition of wife's sister which, being applicable to himself only, is of a more restricted range, and cannot consequently be imposed on that of brother's wife, which preceded it.

(8) By marrying the other sister.

(9) While before this marriage the widow only was forbidden.

(10) אִיסוּר כּוֹלֵל lit., 'a prohibition which includes'. The additional prohibition includes the widow in the same manner only as it does the other sisters but, unlike an issur mosif (the prohibition of the wider range, v. supra p. 202, n. 9), it does not place any additional restriction as far as the widow herself is concerned upon any other men.

(11) Lit., 'I bring upon him'.

(12) I.e., in this sense only is R. Jose's statement, that he is guilty of two offences (supra 32a), to be understood.

(13) Because R. Jose. in fact, does not admit the imposition of one prohibition upon another.

(14) From Palestine to Babylon. (13) The fact that he is theoretically guilty of two offences.

(15) The Beth din had at its disposal two burial places, and offenders who were executed or died were buried in the one or the other according to the degree of their respective offences. (V. Sanh. 46a). The reference here will consequently be to an intentional transgression.

(16) Whether one act involving two transgressions is deemed to be one offence or two offences.

(17) זָר lit., 'a stranger', I.e., a non-priest.

(18) This is explained infra.

What is the point at issue between them?¹ -R. Jose's view² with regard to a comprehensive prohibition.³ R. Hiyya is of the opinion that in the case of a comprehensive prohibition R. Jose deems the transgressor guilty of two offences,⁴ while Bar Kappara is of the opinion that he deems him guilty of one offence only.⁵ But what comprehensive prohibition. is here involved? In the case of a common man⁶ this⁷ may well be understood, since at first⁸ he was permitted to do ordinary work though forbidden to perform the Temple service, and when Sabbath came in, as he was now forbidden to do any other work,⁹ so he was also forbidden to perform the Temple service.¹⁰ [Similarly with a priest] who had a blemish,¹¹ since he was at first¹² permitted to eat [of sacrificial meat] though forbidden to perform the Temple service, now that he became defiled, as he was forbidden to eat of sacrificial meat¹³ so he was also forbidden to perform the Temple service.¹⁴ Mehkah, however, is only an illustration¹⁵ of prohibitions that set in simultaneously¹⁶ but not of a comprehensive prohibition!¹⁷ -Rather, the point at issue between them¹⁸ is that of simultaneous prohibitions' and R. Jose's view¹⁹ regarding them. R. Hiyya is of the opinion that in the case of simultaneous prohibitions R. Jose deems the transgressor guilty of two offences,²⁰ while Bar Kappara is of the opinion that he deems him guilty of one offence only.²¹ But how are here simultaneous prohibitions possible?²² — In the case of a common man who performed the Temple service on the Sabbath, when, for instance, he grew two hairs²³ on the Sabbath, so that the prohibitions of Temple service by a common man and of work on the Sabbath have simultaneously arisen.²⁴ [In the case of a priest] who had a blemish, also, when, for instance, he grew two hairs,²³ while he was unclean, so that [his disability as] a man with a blemish and his uncleanness²⁵ have simultaneously arisen.²⁶ Or else, if a man cut his finger with an unclean knife.²⁷

Now according to [the statement of] R. Hiyya it is quite possible to explain²⁸ that he²⁹ was taught³⁰ in accordance with the view of R. Jose, and that Bar Kappara was taught in accordance with the view of R. Simeon.³¹ According to [the statement of] Bar Kappara, however,³² did R. Hiyya swear falsely?³³ -Rather, the question at issue between them³⁴ is that of simultaneous prohibitions, and the view of R. Simeon³⁵ on the subject.

One can well understand why R. Hiyya took an oath. He did it in order to weaken the force³⁶ of R. Simeon's view.³⁷ What need, however, was there for Bar Kappara to take an oath? — This is a difficulty.

Now according to [the statement of] Bar Kappara, it is possible to explain³⁸ that when Rabbi taught him he was enunciating the opinion of R. Simeon,³⁹ and that when he taught R. Hiyya he was enunciating the opinion of R. Jose.⁴⁰ According to [the statement] of R. Hiyya, however,⁴¹ did Bar Kappara⁴² tell a lie?⁴³ R. Hiyya can answer you:⁴⁴ When Rabbi taught him, he taught him two instances⁴⁵ only where the transgressor is exempt⁴⁶

(1) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(2) Who maintains supra that in certain circumstances a prohibition may be imposed upon a prohibition which is already in force.

(3) אִסּוּר כּוֹלֵל Cf. supra p. 203. n. 8.

(4) Nebelah and melikah. V. supra. no. 3 and 4.

(5) And R. Jose's statement supra that the transgressor is guilty of two offences is, according to Bar Kappara, applicable only where the surviving brother had married one of the sisters before the deceased had married the other. (V. supra p. 203. nn. 1ff and relevant text). R. Simeon's statement, (supra 32a) that 'he is guilty on account of brother's wife only', which has been interpreted as referring to the case where the deceased had married prior to the surviving brother, is according to Bar Kappara, to be deleted from the Baraita.

(6) Who performed some Temple service on the Sabbath.

(7) That a comprehensive prohibition is involved.

(8) Before the Sabbath.

(9) Owing to Sabbath.

(10) The prohibition being 'comprehensive' in that it included both ordinary work and Temple service. It is not a 'prohibition of a wider range' since the prohibition of Temple service itself was in no way extended.

(11) Cf. supra, n. 2.

(12) Prior to his defilement.

(13) Owing to his uncleanness.

(14) The prohibition comprehending the Temple service as well as the consumption of sacrificial meat. Cf. supra. n' 5'

(15) Lit., 'it is found'.

(16) בְּתִּי אֶחָת 'at once', 'at the same moment'. Before the head of the fowl was pinched off there was only the prohibition of nebelah (v. Glos.) which included also priests. The two prohibitions of nebelah and melikah as far as common men are concerned had set in simultaneously at the moment of the pinching off of the fowl's head.

(17) Since both have been simultaneous. How then could the dispute on melikah be dependent on the principle of a 'comprehensive prohibition'?

(18) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(19) V. supra p. 205. n. 8.

(20) R. Jose's statement (supra 32a). that the transgressor is guilty of the offences of (a) brother's wife and (b) wife's sister, is taken to refer to the case where the two brothers appointed an agent to betroth for them the two sisters, who in turn appointed an agent to act on their behalf. At the moment the agents carried out their mission both prohibitions had set in.

(21) Cf. supra p. 205, n. 11.

(22) As has been shewn, the instances mentioned, with the exception of melikah, are 'comprehensive prohibitions!'

(23) The marks of puberty.

(24) In this particular case, since prior to the manifestation of the marks of puberty he was considered a minor, and not subject to legal penalties.

(25) I.e., his liability to penalties for performing Temple service under such conditions.

(26) Cf. note 4, mutatis mutandis.

(27) Which act caused both the blemish and the uncleanness to set in at the very same instant.

(28) To reconcile the contradictory statements made by R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara both in the name of Rabbi.

(29) R. Hiyya.

(30) By Rabbi. Lit., 'when he taught him (it was)'.

(31) And that Bar Kappara may have misunderstood Rabbi to give him the opinion of R. Jose.

(32) Who asserts that Rabbi recognizes one offence only according to R. Jose.

(33) If R. Jose allows the lighter punishment, how much more so R. Simeon. If R. Hiyya. then, made the statement that Rabbi taught him that a double offence had been committed he could not have spoken the truth since according to Bar Kappara no authority ever held such a view.

(34) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(35) R. Hiyya maintains that R. Simeon subjected the transgression to one offence only in the case of a 'comprehensive prohibition'; but that in a 'simultaneous prohibition' he admits, like R. Jose, a double offence. Bar Kappara, on the other hand, maintains that R. Simeon disagrees with R. Jose even in regard to simultaneous prohibitions, always admitting one offence only.

(36) By his oath he affirmed that R. Simeon is in favour of the lighter course only in the case of a 'comprehensive prohibition' but not in that of 'simultaneous prohibitions'.

(37) Which is known to favour the lighter penalty.

(38) I.e., to reconcile the contradictory statements. v. supra, p. 207. n. 8.

(39) Favouring the lighter penalty.

(40) Who imposes the heavier penalty; but R. Hiyya mistook him to be reporting R. Simeon and thus the discrepancy arose.

(41) Who submitted that the heavier penalty was imposed even by R. Simeon, much more so by R. Jose.

(42) Who submitted that Rabbi taught him that the lighter penalty only was to be imposed.

(43) He could not have spoken the truth if R. Hiyya's report was at all correct. v. note 6.

(44) Bar Kappara did not tell a lie.

(45) The first two—that of a non-priest who performed the Temple service on the Sabbath and that of a priest who had a blemish and performed the Temple service while he was unclean.

(46) From one of the penalties.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 33b

. and [thereby he, in fact.] taught him the law of comprehensive prohibition¹ in accordance with the view of R. Simeon. Bar Kappara. however, considered the case of a common man who ate melikah and, as it seemed to be similar to the others, he treated it like the others.² When, later, he examined it³ and found it to be possible only as a case of simultaneity of prohibitions. he imagined that as this one³ is a case of simultaneity so are also the others cases of simultaneity;⁴ and as the others are cases where the transgressor is exempt⁵ so [he assumed] is this also one in which the transgressor is exempt.⁵

An objection was raised: If a common man performed some Temple service on the Sabbath, or if a priest having a blemish performed Temple service while he was levitically unclean, the offences of service by a common man and the desecration of the Sabbath or those of service by a man with a blemish and levitical uncleanness are here respectively involved. These are the words of R. Jose. R. Simeon who said: Only the offence of service by a common man or that of service by a man with a blemish respectively is here involved.⁶ [The case of] melikah, however, is here omitted.⁷ Now, on account of whom was it omitted?⁸ If it be suggested, on account of R. Jose⁹ [it may be retorted], if¹⁰ R. Jose subjects one to two penalties where the prohibition is comprehensive, how much more so¹¹ when it is simultaneous. Consequently It must have been¹² on account of R. Simeon¹³ who thus grants exemption only where the prohibition is comprehensive¹⁴ but imposes both penalties when the prohibitions are simultaneous —¹⁵ This, then, is a refutation against Bar Kappara!¹⁶ This is indeed a refutation.

‘If a common man performed some Temple service on the Sabbath’. Of what nature? If slaughtering, slaughtering is permitted by a common man.¹⁷ If reception¹⁸ or carriage.¹⁹ this involves only a mere movement.²⁰ If burning,²¹ surely R. Jose said, ‘The prohibition of kindling a fire [on the Sabbath]²² was mentioned separately²³ in order to [indicate that its transgression is] a prohibition only’!²⁴ — R. Aha b. Jacob replied: The slaughtering of the bullock of the High Priest,²⁵ and in accordance with the view of him who stated that the slaughtering of the bullock of the High priest on the Day of Atonement by a common man Is Invalid.²⁶ If so, what reason is there for mentioning a common man? Even a common priest would have been equally forbidden!²⁷ -What was meant was one who is a common man as far as It Is concerned.²⁸

R. Ashi demurred: Was any mention made of sin-offerings or of negative precepts?²⁹ Surely, only forbidden acts were spoken of!³⁰ — The point at issue is whether he is to be buried among confirmed sinners.³¹

MISHNAH. IF TWO MEN BETROTHED TWO WOMEN, AND AS THESE WERE ENTERING INTO THE BRIDAL CHAMBER, THEY EXCHANGED THE ONE FOR THE OTHER, BEHOLD, THEY³² ARE GUILTY OF AN OFFENCE AGAINST A MARRIED WOMAN. IF THEY³² WERE BROTHERS THEY ARE GUILTY ALSO OF AN OFFENCE AGAINST A BROTHER'S WIFE. IF [THE BETROTHED WOMEN] WERE SISTERS, THEY³³ ARE GUILTY ALSO ON ACCOUNT OF THE PROHIBITION, [AND THOU SHALT NOT TAKE] A WOMAN TO HER Sister.³⁴ IF THESE³⁵ WERE MENSTRUANTS [THEY³³ ARE GUILTY ALSO] ON ACCOUNT OF [THE LAW OF THE] MENSTRUANT.³⁶

THEY³⁵ MUST BE KEPT APART³⁷ FOR THREE MONTHS, SINCE IT IS POSSIBLE THAT THEY ARE PREGNANT.³⁸ IF THEY³⁵ WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN, THEY MAY BE RESTORED³⁹ AT ONCE. IF THEY³⁵ WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN THEY ARE DISQUALIFIED FROM THE PRIESTHOOD.⁴⁰

GEMARA. THEY EXCHANGED?⁴¹ Are we discussing wicked men!⁴² Furthermore, [there is the difficulty] of the statement made by⁴³ R. Hiyya. that⁴⁴ sixteen sin-offerings⁴⁵ are here [involved]. Is any sacrifice brought⁴⁶ where the act⁴⁷ was wilful?⁴⁸ Rab Judah replied: Read THEY WERE EXCHANGED.⁴⁹ This⁵⁰ may also be proved by logical reasoning. For in the latter clause it was stated, IF THEY WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN THEY MAY BE RESTORED AT ONCE. Now, if the act⁴⁷ had been wilful, would [this⁵¹ have been] permitted! — This is no difficulty. The seduction of a minor is deemed to be an outrage, and an outraged woman is permitted to an Israelite.⁴² But, then, what of that which is stated, that THEY MUST BE KEPT

APART FOR THREE MONTHS, SINCE IT IS POSSIBLE THAT THEY ARE PREGNANT, implying that if they were not pregnant they would be permitted. Now if the act⁵² had been wilful would she be permitted! Consequently⁵³ the reading must have been⁵⁴ THEY WERE EXCHANGED.⁵⁵ This may be taken as proved.

And who is this Tanna¹ that admits the force² of a 'comprehensive prohibition', a 'prohibition of a wider range' and 'simultaneous prohibitions'?³ -Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: It is R. Meir; for we learnt:⁴ A man may sometimes consume one piece of food⁵ and incur thereby the penalty of four sin-offerings and one guilt-offering. [If. e.g., a man levitically] unclean ate suet⁶ that remained over from holy sacrifices,⁷ on the Day of Atonement⁸ R. Meir said: If this happened on⁹ the Sabbath and [the consumer] carried out [the suet] in his mouth, liability is incurred [for this act¹⁰ also].¹¹ They said to him: This¹⁰ is an offence of a different character.¹²

Whose view, however, IS R. Meir¹³ following? If he follows R. Joshua.¹⁴ surely the latter had said that he who made a mistake in respect of a commandment¹⁵ is exonerated!¹⁶ — Rather he follows the view of R. Eliezer.¹⁷ If you prefer I might say: He may, in fact, follow the view of R. Joshua, for R. Joshua's statement, that he who made a mistake in respect of a commandment is exonerated, may only be applicable to the case of the children,¹⁸ where one is pressed for time.¹⁹ but not in such a case as this,²⁰ where time is not pressing.²¹

What about terumah,²² where one is not pressed for time, and he²³ nevertheless exonerates! For we learnt: In the case of a priest who was In the habit of eating terumah and it then transpired that he was the son of a divorced woman or of a haluzah,²² R. Eliezer imposes payment of the principal and of a fifth,²⁴ and R. Joshua exonerates!²⁵ — Surely, in relation to this it was stated that R. Bibi b. Abaye said: We are here speaking of terumah²⁶ on the Eve of Passover when time is pressing.²⁷ If you prefer I might say: [Our Mishnah speaks] of simultaneous prohibitions, and may represent even the View of R. Simeon.²⁸

All these,²⁹ it may well be conceded, may occur [simultaneously] where [the brothers] appointed an agent³⁰ and [the sisters also] appointed an agent³¹ and one agent met the other;³² but how could such [simultaneity] occur with menstruation?³³ - R. Amram in the name of Rab replied: When the women's menstrual discharge continued from [the men's] thirteenth, until after their thirteenth [birthday], when these become subject to legal punishments; and from their own twelfth, until after their twelfth [birthday], when they themselves become subject to punishments.³⁴

THEY MUST BE KEPT APART. Surely, no woman conceives from the first contact.³⁵ R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abuha: Where contact was repeated. Why, then, did R.

Hiyya state, 'Behold sixteen offerings are here involved',³⁶ when, in fact,³⁷ there should be thirty-two?³⁸ And according to your line of reasoning, following the opinion of R. Eliezer who deems they are guilty for every sexual effort, are there not more?³⁹ But [your own answer would be] that he only takes into consideration the first effort. Well, here also, only the first contact is taken into consideration.

Said Raba to R. Nahman:

(1) In our Mishnah.

(2) Lit., 'to whom there is'.

(3) Wherever they can all be applied to the same person. If, e.g., A the brother of B betrothed C the sister of D, C is forbidden to B as 'his brother's wife' and as 'a married woman', both prohibitions having come into force simultaneously. If B subsequently betrothed D, her sister C becomes forbidden to him, by the comprehensive prohibition of 'his wife's sister', (comprehending all the sisters of D inclusive of C). When C becomes a menstruant she is forbidden to B as a menstruant also, this last being a prohibition of a wider range extending as it does the prohibition of the woman to A also.

(4) Cur. edd., 'it was taught'.

(5) Lit., 'there is one eating'.

(6) Forbidden fat.

(7) Nothar, v. Glos.

(8) The four sin-offerings are due for the eating of (a) holy food while the man is levitically unclean, (b) forbidden fat, (c) nothar and (d) food on the Day of Atonement; while the guilt-offering (asham me'iloth) is incurred for the benefit the consumer (even though he were a priest) had from holy things which were to be burnt on the altar.

(9) Lit., 'it was'.

(10) Carrying on the Sabbath.

(11) Thus it is shewn that R. Meir recognizes the validity of the three kinds of prohibition: When the animal was consecrated, the prohibition of having any benefit from any part of it has been added to that of eating its suet (wider range). and when a piece of the suet became nothar (since it is thereby forbidden to be offered up on the altar, which is an added restriction) the prohibition of nothar has also been imposed in respect of its consumption by the priests (again wider range). When the priest becomes unclean and is consequently forbidden to consume any holy meat he is also forbidden to consume the nothar (comprehensive), and with the advent of the Day of Atonement the prohibition of the consumption of food generally on that day falls also on the nothar (again comprehensive). Finally, at the moment Sabbath sets in two more prohibitions are imposed (simultaneous) that of carrying on the Sabbath and that of eating on the Day of Atonement (Rashi) or those of carrying on the Sabbath and on the Day of Atonement (Tosaf., s.v. והוצתא a.l.).

(12) Lit., 'it is not from the (same) designation'. Shab. 102a, Shebu. 24b, Ker. 13b.

(13) Who, as has been shown, is represented by the Tanna of our Mishnah who admits the imposition of one prohibition upon another even where the performance of a commandment (e.g., marriage) was intended.

(14) Who is at variance on a similar question with R. Eliezer (Shab. 1370). Both R. Joshua and R. Eliezer were R. Meir's teachers.

(15) I.e., if his intention was to fulfil a precept and, through an error, his act resulted in a transgression. Cf. the case in our Mishnah and v. supra n. 1 —

(16) While our Mishnah declares the men guilty!

(17) v. supra. n. 2.

(18) One of whom had to be circumcised on the Sabbath and by mistake another child was circumcised who was born a day later. Only circumcision which takes place on the eighth day of birth is permitted on the Sabbath. Any other is forbidden like all manual labour.

(19) One is anxious to perform the commandment at its proper time, and one's anxiety that the day shall not pass without its performance may easily result in an error.

(20) Marriage. spoken of in our Mishnah.

(21) One may contract marriage during any time of his life.

(22) V. Glos.

- (23) R. Joshua.
- (24) The disqualified priest, having consumed terumah which was forbidden to him, must pay compensation as any layman, as prescribed in Lev. V, 16.
- (25) Ter. VIII, 1; Pes. 72b, Mak. 11b.
- (26) Containing 'leaven' or any other hamez.
- (27) After a certain hour on that day all hamez, would have to be burnt.
- (28) Who agrees with R. Meir that simultaneous prohibitions do rank as equal in force, and both may be imposed.
- (29) Prohibitions, enumerated in our Mishnah.
- (30) To betroth the women on their behalf.
- (31) To accept on their behalf the tokens of betrothal.
- (32) So that all prohibitions took effect at the very same moment.
- (33) Which would naturally occur either before, and thus prevent the other three prohibitions from coming into force; or after, and thus be prevented itself from coming into force.
- (34) A male becomes legally liable to punishments on the termination of his thirteenth, and a female on that of her twelfth year of age. If the respective agents of the two parties who were of the same age to a day, met sometime prior to the conclusion of the last day of the year (twelfth of the females and thirteenth of the males), and arranged for the betrothals to take effect on the following day when both parties become 'of age' (as otherwise the betrothals would not be valid) the betrothals and the prohibitions simultaneously come into force.
- (35) What, then, is the need for the precaution?
- (36) Supra 33b.
- (37) Since our Mishnah represents the view of R. Eliezer (or Eleazar).
- (38) Sixteen for each contact. V. infra 92a, Ker. 15a.
- (39) Sin-offerings involved.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 34b

Surely Tamar¹ conceived from a first contact! The other answered him: Tamar exercised friction with her finger;² for R. Isaac said: All women of the house of Rabbi who exercise friction³ are designated Tamar. And why are they designated Tamar? — Because Tamar exercised friction with her finger. But were there not Er and Onan?⁴ — Er and Onan indulged in unnatural intercourse.

An objection was raised: During all the twenty-four months⁵ one may thresh within and winnow without;⁶ these are the words of R. Eliezer. The others said to him: Such actions are only like the practice of Er and Onan!⁷ -Like the practice of Er and Onan, and yet not [exactly] like the practice of Er and Onan: 'Like the practice of Er and Onan', for it is written in Scripture, And it came to pass, when he went in unto his brother's wife, that he spilt it on the ground;⁸ and 'not [exactly] like the practice of Er and Onan', for whereas there it was an unnatural act, here it is done in the natural way.

[The source for] Onan's [guilt] may well be traced, for it is written in Scripture, That he spilt it on the ground;⁸ whence however, [that of] Er?—R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is written, And He slew him also,⁹ he also died of the same death.¹⁰

[The reason for] Onan's [action] may well be understood, because he knew That the seed would not be his;⁸ but why did Er act in such a manner? — In order that she might not conceive and thus lose some of her beauty.

Our Rabbis taught [The woman also] with whom [a man shall lie],¹¹ excludes a bride;¹² so R. Judah. But the Sages say: This excludes unnatural intercourse.

Said Hon son of R. Nahman to R. Nahman: Does this imply that R. Judah is of the opinion that the Torah had consideration for the bride's make-up?¹³ — The other replied: Because no woman conceives from her first contact —¹⁴ On what principle do they differ? — The Rabbis are of opinion that 'carnally'¹¹ excludes the first stage of contact, and 'with whom'¹¹ excludes unnatural intercourse; but R. Judah is of the opinion that the exclusion of unnatural intercourse and the first stage of contact may be derived from 'carnally'.¹¹ while 'with whom'¹¹ excludes a bride.

When Rabin came¹⁵ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: A woman who waited ten years after [separation from] her husband, and then remarried, would bear children no more. Said R. Nahman: This was stated only in respect of one who had no Intention of remarrying: if, however, one's intention was to marry again she may conceive.

Raba said to R. Hisda's daughter:¹⁶ The Rabbis are talking about you. She answered him: I had my mind on you.

A woman once appeared before R. Joseph, and said to him: Master, I remained unmarried after [the death of] my husband for ten years and now I gave birth to a child — He said to her: My daughter, do not discredit the words of the Sages. She thereupon confessed, 'I had intercourse with a heathen'.¹⁷

Samuel said: All these women,¹⁸ with the exception of a proselyte and an emancipated slave who were minors, must wait three months.¹⁹ An Israelitish minor, however, must wait three months. But how [was she separated]?²⁰ If by a declaration of refusal,²¹ surely. Samuel said that she²² need not wait!²³ And if by a letter of divorce, surely Samuel has already stated this once! For Samuel said: If she' formally refused him²¹ she need not wait three months; if he gave her a letter of divorce she must wait three months!²⁴ -[It²⁵ was] rather in respect of unlawful intercourse,

(1) V. Gen. XXXVIII, 15, 18, 24ff.

(2) Having thus destroyed her virginity she was capable of conception from a first contact.

(3) To destroy their virginity.

(4) Who were married to Tamar prior to the incident with Judah (v. Gen. XXXVIII, 6ff) and her virginity would presumably have been destroyed then.

(5) After the birth of a child, i.e., during the period in which the mother is expected to breast-feed her child.

(6) Euphemism. This would prevent possible conception which might deprive the young child of the breast feeding of his mother.

(15) From Palestine to Babylon.

(16) Whom he married after a period of ten years had passed since the death of her husband, Rami b. Hama.

(17) During the ten years.

(18) Enumerated infra 41a, 42b.

(19) Before they marry again.

(20) From her former husband.

(21) Mi'un, v. Glos.

(22) A minor.

(23) Three months.

(24) Keth. 100b; why, then, should he repeat it here?

(25) Samuel's statement.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 35a

the Rabbis having made the provision¹ in the case of a minor² as a precaution against one who is of age.³ But is provision made in the case of a minor as a precaution against one who is of age? Surely we learnt, IF THEY WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN THEY MAY BE RESTORED AT ONCE! — R. Giddal replied: This⁴ was a special ruling.⁵ Does this imply that such a case had actually occurred!⁶ — Rather [this is the meaning:] It⁴ was like a special ruling, since the exchange of brides is an unusual occurrence.⁷

[Others adopt] a different reading: Samuel said: All these women,⁸ with the exception of a proselyte and an emancipated slave who were of age. must wait three months.⁹ An Israelitish minor, however, need not wait three months. But how [was she separated]? If by a declaration of refusal, Surely Samuel has already stated this one! And if by a letter of divorce, Samuel surely stated that she' must wait! For Samuel said: If she exercise her right of refusal against him, she need not wait three months; if he gave her a letter of divorce she must wait three months! [It was] rather in respect of harlotry. and harlotry with a minor⁸ an unusual occurrence.⁷

Let, however, a preventive measure¹⁰ be made in respect of a proselyte and an emancipated slave with whom harlotry is not unusual! — He holds the same view as R. Jose. For it was taught: Proselytes,¹¹ captives¹¹ or slaves¹¹ who were redeemed, or embraced the Jewish faith or were emancipated, must wait three months; so R. Judah. R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage.¹² Rabbah said: What is R. Jose's reason? He is of the opinion that a woman who plays the harlot makes use of an absorbent in order to prevent conception.¹²

Said Abaye to him: This¹³ is intelligible in the case of a proselyte; as her intention is to embrace the Jewish faith she is careful¹⁴ in order to know the distinction between the seed that was sown in holiness and the seed that was sown in unholiness. It¹³ is also [intelligible In the case of] a captive and a slave; since on hearing from their masters¹⁵ they exercise care.¹⁶ How is this¹³ to be applied. however, in the case of one who is liberated through the loss of a tooth or an eye?¹⁷ And were you to suggest that wherever something unexpected happens¹⁸ R. Jose admits,¹⁹ surely it was taught:²⁰ A woman who had been outraged or seduced must wait three months; so R. Judah. R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage!²¹ — Rather, said Abaye,²² a woman playing the harlot turns over In order to prevent conception.²³ And the other?²⁴ -There is the apprehension that she might not have turned over properly.²⁵

IF THEY WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN etc. Only²⁶ priestly women but not an Israelitish woman?²⁷ -Read, 'If they were the wives of priests'.²⁸ Only 'priests' wives,²⁹ but not Israelites' wives?³⁰ Surely R. Amram said, 'The following statement was made to us by R. Shesheth who threw light on the subject³¹ from our Mishnah:³² An Israelite's wife³³ who was outraged, though she is permitted to her husband, is disqualified from the priesthood.³⁴ — Raba replied: It is this that was meant:³⁵ IF THEY WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN³⁶ married to Israelites THEY ARE DISQUALIFIED from eating terumah at their parents' home.³⁷ [

(1) That three months must be allowed to pass.

(2) Though she is not capable of conception.

CHAPTER IV

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE¹ WHO WAS SUBSEQUENTLY FOUND TO BE PREGNANT, AND SHE GAVE BIRTH, HE IS, WHEREVER THE CHILD IS VIABLE,² PERMITTED TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES,³ AND HE DOES NOT RENDER HER UNFIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD;⁴ BUT WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE,⁵ THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST.

IF A LEVIR MARRIED HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE¹ WHO IS FOUND TO HAVE BEEN PREGNANT,⁶ AND SHE GAVE BIRTH, HE, WHEREVER THE CHILD IS VIABLE, MUST⁷ DIVORCE HER. AND BOTH ARE UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF BRINGING AN OFFERING;⁸ BUT IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE, HE MAY RETAIN HER. IF IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER IT IS A NINE-MONTHS CHILD OF THE FIRST [HUSBAND] OR A SEVEN-MONTHS CHILD OF THE SECOND [HUSBAND]. SHE MUST BE DIVORCED, AND

THE CHILD IS LEGITIMATE,⁹ BUT THEY ARE UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF AN ASHAM TALUI.¹⁰ GEMARA. It was stated: In the case of a levir who participated in halizah with a pregnant woman who subsequently miscarried, R. Johanan said, She need not perform the halizah with the brothers; and Resh Lakish said: She must perform halizah with the brothers. 'R. Johanan said, She need not perform halizah with the brothers', because the halizah of a pregnant woman¹¹ is deemed to be proper halizah and marital contact with a pregnant woman is deemed to be proper marriage.¹² 'Resh Lakish said: She must perform halizah with the brothers', because the halizah with a pregnant woman is not deemed to be a proper halizah, nor is marital contact with a pregnant woman deemed to be a proper marriage. On what principle do they¹³ differ? — If you wish I might say: In the interpretation of a Scriptural text. And if you prefer I might say: On a logical point. 'If you wish I might say: In the interpretation of a Scriptural text';¹⁴ R. Johanan is of the opinion that the All Merciful said, And have no child,¹⁵ and this man¹⁶ surely has none; while Resh Lakish is of the opinion that And have no [en lo] child¹⁷ implies. 'Hold an inquiry¹⁸ concerning him'.¹⁹ 'And If you prefer I might say: On a logical point'; R. Johanan argues: Had Elijah²⁰ appeared and announced that the woman would miscarry. would she not have been subject to halizah or levirate marriage?²¹ Now also²² the fact is established retrospectively. And Resh Lakish maintains that a fact cannot be said to have been established retrospectively.

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish: WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST. This is quite correct according to my view: Since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a proper halizah he, consequently, renders her unfit. According to you, however, who maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not proper halizah, why does he render her unfit to marry a priest? — The other answered him: It²³ is only Rabbinical and it is a mere restriction.²⁴

Others say: Resh Lakish raised an objection against R. Johanan: WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a proper halizah it was justly stated as a restriction,²⁵ that HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST but not that 'she requires no halizah from the brothers';²⁶ according to you, however,²⁷ it should have been stated that 'she requires no halizah from the brothers'!²⁸ — The other replied: It should have been indeed;²⁹ only because in the first clause it was stated, HE DOES NOT RENDER HER UNFIT³⁰ it was also³¹ stated in the latter clause, HE RENDERS HER UNFIT.³²

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish: IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE, HE MAY RETAIN HER. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a proper halizah and marital contact³³ with a pregnant woman is a proper marriage. it was rightly stated HE MAY RETAIN HER.³⁴ According to you, however, who maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a valid halizah and the marital contact³⁵ with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, it should have been stated, 'He must repeat contact and only then he may retain her'! — The meaning of HE MAY RETAIN HER is that he must repeat contact and then HE MAY RETAIN HER, but not otherwise.³⁶

Others say: Resh Lakish raised an objection against R. Johanan: IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE HE MAY RETAIN HER. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a valid halizah and marital contact with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, it was rightly stated HE MAY RETAIN HER, [meaning that] he must repeat contact and then HE MAY RETAIN HER, since otherwise this³⁷ would not have been permitted.³⁸ According to you,³⁹ however, it should have been stated, 'If he wishes he may divorce her and if he prefers he may continue to live with her'! — It should have been indeed;⁴⁰ only because in the earlier clause it was stated HE MUST DIVORCE HER, it was also stated in the latter clause HE MAY RETAIN HER.

An objection was raised: 'Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, since it is possible that the child would be viable'. On the contrary! If the child were viable her rival would be exempt!⁴¹ — But read: Since it is possible that the child would not be viable.⁴² Now, if it could be imagined that marital contact with a pregnant woman is to be regarded as a valid marriage, why may not her rival be married? She should be exempted through the marital contact of her associate! — Abaye replied: Both⁴³ agree that by marital contact she does not exempt [her rival]; they differ only on the question of halizah. R. Johanan is of the opinion that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a valid halizah, though marital contact with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, while Resh Lakish is of the opinion that marital contact with a pregnant woman is no valid marriage, nor is halizah with a pregnant woman a valid halizah. Said Raba: Whatever is your opinion? If marital contact with a pregnant woman is a valid marriage, the halizah of a pregnant woman should be a valid halizah; or if marital contact with a pregnant woman is no valid marriage, the halizah of a pregnant woman also should be no proper halizah; for we have an established rule

- (43) R. Johanan and Resh Lakish.

that whosoever is subject to the obligation of levirate marriage is also subject to halizah, and whosoever is not subject to the obligation of the levirate marriage is not subject to halizah!¹ Rather, said Raba, it is this that was meant:² Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, because it is possible that the child would be viable, and marital contact with a pregnant woman is no proper marriage nor is the halizah of a pregnant woman proper halizah, while the child does not bring exemption until he is actually born.³

It was taught in agreement with the view of Raba: Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, because it is possible that the child would be viable, and neither marital contact nor halizah but only the child brings exemption; and the child brings exemption only after he is born.

The reason, then,⁴ is because it is possible that the child might be viable, but where the child is not viable her rival is exempt;⁵ does this imply an objection against Resh Lakish?⁶ — Resh Lakish can answer you [that the Baraitha] is thus to be interpreted:⁷ Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married; since it is possible that the child may not be viable, and the halizah of a pregnant woman is no valid halizah nor is the marital contact with a pregnant woman a proper marriage; and were you to suggest that one should be guided by the majority of women, and the majority of women bear healthy children, [it could be retorted that] a child brings no exemption until he is actually born.⁸

Said R. Eleazar: Is it possible that there should exist [such a ruling as] that of Resh Lakish and that we should not have learnt it in a Mishnah? When he went out he carefully considered the matter and found one. For we learned: If people came to a woman whose husband and rival had gone to a country beyond the sea and told her, ‘Your husband is dead’,⁹ she may neither be married¹⁰ nor be taken in levirate marriage¹¹ until she has ascertained whether her rival¹² is pregnant.¹³ One can well understand why she may not be taken in levirate marriage, since it is possible that the child¹⁴ may be viable and [the levir] would thus¹⁵ infringe the Pentateuchal prohibition against [marrying] a brother's wife: but why should she not perform the halizah? It is possible to understand the reason why she must not perform the halizah within the nine months¹⁶ and also contract a marriage within nine months,¹⁶ since such [procedure would naturally be forbidden on account of the] doubt;¹⁷ but let her perform the halizah within the nine months¹⁶ and be married after the nine months!¹⁸ — But even in accordance with your view,¹⁹ let her perform the halizah and be married after the nine months!²⁰ The fact, however, is that nothing may be inferred from this;²¹ for both Abaye b. Abin²² and R. Hinena b. Abin²² stated:²³ It is possible that the child²⁴ might be viable²⁵ and you would then subject her to the necessity of an announcement²⁶ in respect of the priesthood.²⁷ — Well, let her be subjected!²⁸ — It may happen that someone would be present at the halizah and not at the announcement,²⁶ and would form the opinion that a haluzah was permitted to a priest.

Said Abaye to him: Was it stated, ‘She shall neither perform halizah nor be taken in levirate marriage’? The statement, surely, was, ‘She shall neither be married nor be taken in levirate marriage’²⁹ without halizah; if halizah, however, had been performed³⁰ she would indeed have been permitted!³¹

It was taught in agreement with Resh Lakish: Where a levir participated in the halizah with a pregnant woman who subsequently miscarried, she is required to perform halizah with the brothers.

Raba said: The law is in accordance with the views of Resh

!!

If on the other hand, a viable child had been born, exemption took effect at his birth, and subsequent marriage would consequently be lawful. As the Mishnah, however, forbids halizah and marriage even after the nine months, unless definite information about the rival had been received, it must be assumed to represent the view of Resh Lakish who deems a halizah invalid wherever the child is not viable and the ceremony took place during pregnancy. Lakish in the following three rulings.³² One is the ruling just spoken of. Another is his ruling in connection with the following Mishnah:³³ If a man³⁴ distributed his property verbally³⁵ and gave to one [son] more and to another less, or if he assigned to the firstborn a share equal to that of his brothers,³⁶ his arrangements are valid.³⁷ If, however, he said, ‘As an inheritance’,³⁸ his instructions are disregarded.³⁹ If he wrote⁴⁰ either at the beginning or the end or the middle, ‘as a gift’,⁴¹ his instructions are valid.⁴²

(1) Supra 3a.

(2) By the Baraita cited.

(3) Lit., ‘he went forth into the air of the world’.

(4) Why the rival is not exempt.

(5) On the strength of the marital contact which took place prior to the miscarriage of the child, no repeated contact being necessary.

(6) Who does not regard the marital contact of a pregnant woman as a valid marriage

(7) Lit., ‘thus he taught’.

(8) Lit., ‘he went forth unto the air of the world’.

(9) And has left no issue.

(10) To a stranger.

(11) By the levir.

(12) Who went together with her husband.

(13) Infra 119a. Only if she learns that her rival is not pregnant may she contract the levirate marriage.

(14) That might be born from the rival.

(15) By marrying the widow of his brother who did not die without issue.

(16) After the death of her husband.

(17) It being uncertain whether the child would be viable or not. Should he be viable, neither the halizah nor the marriage would be valid, while exemption on his account would not come into force until his actual birth.

(18) This should be permitted according to the view of R. Johanan at all events: If the rival had been pregnant and miscarried or had not been pregnant at all, the halizah was, surely, valid.

- (19) That halizah is forbidden because of the possibility that the rival was pregnant at the time halizah took place.
- (20) When all doubt as to pregnancy would have been removed. Why, then, has it been stated that she may not marry until she had ascertained (even though many years have passed), whether her rival had been pregnant.
- (21) Mishnah. Lit., 'but outside of that'. No support to the view of Resh Lakish may be derived from it.
- (22) Cur. ed., 'Abaye'.
- (23) The reason why no halizah may take place.
- (24) Of the rival.
- (25) The birth of a viable child renders the halizah invalid and the woman is consequently permitted to marry a priest.
- (26) That the halizah was unnecessary and therefore invalid.
- (27) V. supra n. 7.
- (28) Lit., 'required'.
- (29) [Rashi apparently omits this and reads: 'She shall neither be married' without halizah].
- (30) Even within nine months.
- (31) To marry at the end of that period; the Baraita will then afford no support to Resh Lakish.
- (32) B.B. 129b, Hul. 77a.
- (33) Lit., 'because we learned'.
- (34) Lying on his death-bed.
- (35) I.e., explicitly intimated his desire and did not die intestate (v. Rashi, a.l.).
- (36) Lit., 'he made the firstborn equal to them', though Biblically he is entitled to a double portion.
- (37) Lit., 'his words stand', because a man is entitled to dispose of his property, as a gift, in any manner that may appeal to him.
- (38) I.e., if he distributed the shares as portions of an inheritance and not as gifts.
- (39) Lit., 'he said nothing'. One has no right to give instructions which are contrary to the law of the Torah which entitled every son to a portion and the firstborn to a double portion in the father's estate.
- (40) In disposing of his property in a written will.
- (41) I.e., used an expression denoting 'gift', even though it was accompanied by one denoting 'inheritance'. If he wrote, for instance, let a certain field (a) be presented to X that he may inherit it (beginning), or (b) inherited by X and be presented to him that he may inherit it (middle), or (c) be inherited by X and be presented to him (end).
- (42) B.B. 126b. V. supra note 6. So long as the expression of 'gift' was used, the other expression of 'inheritance' that may have been coupled with it, does not in any way affect the validity of the testator's instructions.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 36b

And [in connection with this] Resh Lakish stated: No possession is ever acquired,¹ unless the testator had said, 'Let X and Y inherit this and that particular field which I have assigned to them as a gift, so that they may inherit them'.² And the third³ is his ruling in connection with the following Mishnah:⁴ If a man assigned all his estate, in writing, to his son⁵ [to be his]⁶ after his⁷ death, the father may not sell it⁸ because it is assigned to the son, and the son may not sell it because it is in the possession of the father. If the father sold the estate, the sale is valid until his death.⁹ If the son sold it, the buyer has no claim whatsoever upon it until the father's death.¹⁰ And it was stated: If the son sold the estate¹¹ during the lifetime of his father, and died while his father was still alive, R. Johanan said: The buyer does not acquire ownership;¹² and Resh Lakish said: The buyer does acquire ownership.¹³ R. Johanan said that 'the buyer does not acquire ownership', because possession of usufruct is like possession of the capital;¹⁴ and Resh Lakish said that 'the buyer does acquire ownership', because possession of usufruct is not like possession of the capital.¹⁵

BUT IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE etc. A Tanna taught: It has been said in the name of R. Eliezer that¹⁶ he must put her out by means of a letter of divorce.¹⁷

Said Raba: R. Meir and R. Eliezer taught the same law.¹⁸ R. Eliezer, in the ruling just mentioned, R. Meir [in the following Baraita] wherein it was taught: A man shall not marry the pregnant, or nursing wife of another;¹⁹ and if he married, he must put her out and never remarry her; so R. Meir.

But the Sages said: He shall let her go.²⁰ and at the proper time²¹ he may marry her again.²²

Abaye said to him:²³ How do you arrive at such a conclusion which may possibly be wrong?²⁴ R. Eliezer's ruling might extend to the present case²⁵ only because the levir is encroaching²⁶ upon the prohibition of 'brother's wife', which is Pentateuchal,²⁷ but there,²⁸ where the prohibition is only Rabbinical,²⁹ he may hold the same view as the Rabbis. Alternatively, it is possible that R. Meir's ruling extends only to that case because the prohibition is Rabbinical,²⁹ and the Sages have given more force to their provisions than to those which are Pentateuchal,³⁰ but not to the case here,³¹ where the prohibition is Pentateuchal,²⁶ and people as a rule keep away from it.³²

Raba said: Even according to the ruling of the Rabbis³³ he must let her go from him by means of a letter of divorce.³⁴ Said Mar Zutra: This may also be deduced, since the expression used was 'he shall put her out'³⁵ and not 'he shall let her part'.³⁶ This proves it.

R. Ashi said to R. Hoshaia son of R. Idi: 'Elsewhere it was taught.'³⁷ "R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Any human child³⁸ that survived for thirty days cannot be regarded as a miscarriage.³⁹ Had he not lived so long,⁴⁰ however, he would have been a doubtful case.⁴¹ But it was also stated: Where he⁴² died within thirty days⁴³ and she⁴⁴ was subsequently⁴⁵ betrothed,⁴⁶ Rabina said in the name of Raba that if she⁴⁴ was the wife of an Israelite⁴⁷ she must perform the halizah⁴⁸ and if she was the wife of a priest⁴⁹ she must not perform the halizah.⁵⁰ R. Mesharsheya⁵¹ said in the name of Raba: The one as well as the other must perform the halizah. Said Rabina to R. Mesharsheya:⁵¹

- (1) Where two fields were given to two persons and the expression of 'inheritance was used together with that of 'gift'.
 - (2) Both acquire possession of the respective fields because the testator had used the expression, 'which I have assigned to them as a gift', implying that the gift was made before it was assigned as an 'inheritance' (v. R. Gershom, B.B. 129a).
 - (3) Lit., 'and the other', the third ruling of Resh Lakish, which is an accepted halachah.
 - (4) Lit., 'because we learned'.
 - (5) Inserting the formula 'From this day and after my death'. The law that follows applies also to a gift made by any other person.

 - (11) Assigned to him by his father for possession after his death.
 - (12) Even after the father's death, since the estate has never come into the son's possession.
 - (13) After the death of the father, as the representative of the son, who, were he alive, would have been entitled to the inheritance.
 - (14) Since the usufruct was in the ownership of the father, the capital, i.e., the soil, is also regarded as being in his possession, and the son, therefore, during the lifetime of his father is not entitled to transfer it to the buyer.
 - (15) B.K. l.c., B.B. 136af. The soil, therefore, was the undisputed property of the son who, consequently, was fully entitled to transfer it to the buyer.
 - (16) Contrary to the law of our Mishnah which allows the levir to continue his connubial association with his sister-in-law wherever the child is not viable.
 - (17) Though the death of the child has proved retrospectively that the levirate marriage was lawful, divorce is imposed upon such a union as a penalty for contracting it at a time when, owing to the uncertainty of the result of the pregnancy, it was of doubtful legality.
 - (18) Lit., 'said one word', that the penalty of divorce is imposed upon any union the legality of which was doubtful at the time the marriage was contracted.
 - (19) Though she is now a widow or divorced.
 - (20) V. infra for meaning.

of a child.

(24) Lit., 'from what? perhaps it is not (so)'.

(25) Lit., 'R. Eliezer did not so far say (his ruling) here'.

(26) It being possible that the child would be viable.

(27) For such a serious offence a penalty is rightly imposed.

(28) Marriage with an expectant. or nursing mother.

(29) Biblically one need not wait twenty-four months before marrying her.

(30) As people might be lax in the observance of a Rabbinical law it was necessary to impose a penalty for its non-observance.

(31) Marriage with an expectant yebamah.

(32) Or 'her', i.e., from marrying an expectant yebamah. No penalty. therefore, need be imposed upon an occasional offender.

(33) Who permit marriage after the period of twenty-four months had elapsed.

(34) Mere separation is not enough.

(41) And his mother would have had to perform halizah only, but would not have been allowed to contract the levirate marriage.

(42) The child of a sister-in-law whose husband had died without having left any other issue.

(43) Of his birth.

(44) His mother, the widow of his deceased father.

(45) Lit., 'stood up.'

(46) To a stranger; believing that the birth of the child was sufficient to exempt her from the obligations of the levirate marriage and the halizah.

(47) I.e., if the man who betrothed her was an Israelite who may marry a haluzah.

(48) With the levir.

(49) Cf. supra 8. A priest may not marry a haluzah.

(50) Were she to perform it. her husband could not subsequently be allowed to live with her. Hence she is granted exemption from halizah by virtue of the child's birth alone.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 37a

Raba said so¹ in the evening, but on the following morning he retracted.² The other exclaimed, "So you have permitted;³ would that you permitted also abdominal fat!"⁴ Now, what is the law here in respect of the pregnant, or nursing wife of another man who was married to a priest? Did the Rabbis make any provision for a priest⁵ or not?' — The other⁶ replied:⁷ What a comparison!⁸ [The distinction]⁹ is well justified there;¹⁰ since the Rabbis differ from R. Simeon b. Gamaliel in maintaining that the child is deemed to be sound even though he did not live long enough,¹¹ we may, in the case of a priest's wife, where no other course is open,¹² act in accordance with the view of the Rabbis.¹³ Here,¹⁴ however, in accordance with whose view could we act? If in accordance with that of R. Meir, he surely stated that he¹⁵ must put her out and never remarry her! And if in accordance with the view of the Rabbis, they, surely, stated [that she must be sent away] by means of a letter of divorce!¹⁶

It was stated: [The case of the man who] betrothed a woman¹⁷ within the three [months]¹⁸ and fled, is one concerning which R. Aha and Rafram are at variance. One holds that the man is to be placed under the ban,¹⁹ but the other holds that his flight is sufficient.²⁰ Such an incident once happened, and Rafram ruled,²¹ 'His flight is sufficient'.²⁰

IF IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER IT IS A NINE-MONTHS CHILD etc. Said Raba to R. Nahman. Let the ruling be that one is to go by the majority of women, and the majority of women bear at nine months!²² — The other replied: Our women bear at seven months. 'Are your women', the first retorted, 'the majority of the world'! — 'What I mean', the other replied, 'is this: Most women bear at nine months and a minority at seven, and the embryo in the case of every woman who bears at nine is recognizable after a third of the period of her pregnancy;²³ and in the case of this woman, since her embryo was not recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy²³ [her presumption to belong to] the majority is impaired'.

If in the case of every woman, however, who bears at nine the embryo is recognizable after a third of the period of her pregnancy. it is obvious that with this [woman], since her embryo had not been recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy, it must be a seven-months child of the second²⁴ husband! — But say rather: When a woman bears at nine months, her embryo in most cases is recognizable after a third of her pregnancy. and with this woman, since her embryo was not recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy, [her presumption to belong to] the majority is impaired.

Our Rabbis taught: The first [child]²⁵ is fit to be a High priest,²⁶ and the second²⁷ is deemed a bastard owing to his doubtful origin.²⁸ R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He is not of doubtful bastardy.²⁹ What does he³⁰ mean?³¹ — Abaye replied: It is this that he meant, 'The first child²⁵ is fit to be a High priest²⁶ while the seconds is one of doubtful bastardy²⁹ and is consequently forbidden to marry a bastard.³² R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He is not one of doubtful bastardy but an assured bastard, and is consequently permitted to marry a bastard'. Raba replied: It is this that was meant: 'The first³³ is fit to be a High priest³⁴ and the second,³⁵ on account of his doubtful origin,³⁶ is deemed to be an assured bastard and is consequently permitted to marry a bastard; but R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He cannot be deemed an assured bastard on account of his doubtful origin;³⁶ he is, however, regarded as one of doubtful bastardy and is consequently forbidden to marry a bastard.³⁷ And they³⁸ differ in [the interpretation of a ruling] of R. Eleazar. For we learned: 'R. Eleazar said, persons of confirmed illegitimacy may [intermarry] with others of confirmed illegitimacy, but those of confirmed illegitimacy may not intermarry with those of doubtful illegitimacy;³⁹ nor those of doubtful, with those of confirmed illegitimacy; nor those of doubtful, with others of doubtful illegitimacy. And the following are of doubtful legitimacy: The shethuki,⁴⁰ the asufi⁴¹ and the Samaritan.⁴² And [in connection with this] Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab, 'The halachah is in accordance with the ruling of R. Eleazar, but when I stated this in the presence of Samuel⁴³ he said to me, "Hillel taught that the following ten different genealogical classes went up from Babylon:⁴⁴ priests, Levites, Israelites, profaned priests,⁴⁵ proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,⁴⁶ shetkuki⁴⁰ and asufi,⁴¹ and all these may inter marry",⁴⁷ and you state that the halachah is in accordance with the ruling of R. Eleazar'!⁴⁸ Now Abaye upholds the opinion of Samuel who stated that the halachah is in agreement with the ruling of Hillel and consequently brings the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob into harmony with the halachah so that there may be no contradiction between the one halachah and the other.⁴⁹ Raba, on the other hand, upholds the opinion of Rab who stated that the halachah is in agreement with the ruling of R. Eleazar, and so he brings the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob into harmony with the halachah in order that there may be no contradiction

In all these cases the legitimacy is doubtful: in the first two, because the father is unknown; and in the last, because the Samaritans did not observe all the laws of betrothal, and any Samaritan might be the issue of an illicit union between his father and a woman who had been legally betrothed to another man.

between one halachah and the other.

Said Abaye: Whence do I infer that R. Eliezer b. Jacob treats any doubtful case as a certainty? — [From] what was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said, 'Behold, when a man has intercourse with many women and does not know with which particular woman¹ he had intercourse, and, similarly, when a woman with whom many men had intercourse does not know to which particular man her conception is due, the consequences are that a father will be marrying his daughter and a brother his sister, and the whole world will be filled with bastards,² and concerning this it was said, And the land became full of lewdness'.³ And Raba?⁴ — He can answer you: It is this that was meant, 'What might be the result'?⁵

More than that⁶ was said by R. Eliezer b. Jacob: A man shall not marry a wife in one country and then proceed to marry one in another country, since [their children]⁷ might marry one another and the result might be that a brother would marry his sister.⁸

But, surely, this could not be [the accepted ruling], for Rab, whenever he happened to visit Dardeshir,⁹ used to announce, 'Who would be mine¹⁰ for the day'? So also R. Nahman, whenever he happened to visit Shekunzib,¹¹ used to announce, 'Who would be mines for the day'?¹² — The Rabbis came under a special category since they are well known.¹³

But did not Raba say: A woman who had an offer of marriage and accepted must allow a period of seven ritually clean days to pass!¹⁴ — The Rabbis sent their representatives and these presented the announcements to the women.¹⁵ And if you prefer I might say: The Rabbis only had them¹⁶ in their private rooms;¹⁷ for the Master said, 'He who has bread in his basket cannot be compared to him who has no bread in his basket'.¹⁸

A Tanna taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: A man must not marry a woman if it is his intention to divorce her, for it is written, Devise not evil against thy neighbour, seeing he dwelleth securely by thee.¹⁹

If the 'doubtful son'²⁰ and the levir came to claim a share²¹ in the estate of the deceased,²² the 'doubtful son' pleading, 'I am the son of the deceased and the estate is mine', while the levir pleads, 'You are my son and you have no claim whatsoever upon the estate', it is a case of money of doubtful ownership,²³ and money the ownership of which is doubtful must be divided.²⁴

Where the 'doubtful son'²⁰ and the sons of the levir came to claim their share²¹ in the estate of the deceased, the 'doubtful son' pleading, 'I²⁵ am the son of the deceased and the estate is mine while the sons of the levir plead, 'You are our brother and you have only a share equal to ours', it was the intention of the Rabbis to submit to R. Mesharsheya that this was a case [identical with that] of a Mishnah wherein we learned, 'He²⁶ does not inherit from them²⁷ but they inherit from him',²⁸ since here the case is just the reverse:²⁹ There they tell him, 'produce proof and take [your share]'³⁰ while here he tells them, 'produce proof and take your share'.³¹ R. Mesharsheya, however, said to them, 'Are [the two cases] equal? There, their claim is a certainty³² while his is doubtful,³³ while here both are doubtful!³⁴ If, however, a case is to be compared to a Mishnah it is to the following: That of a 'doubtful son'³⁵ and the sons of the levir who came to claim³⁶ shares in the estate of the levir himself, where they can say to him: produce proof that you are our brother and take your share'.³⁷

If a 'doubtful son'³⁵ and the sons of the levir came to claim³⁶ their shares in the estate of the levir after the levir had received his share in the estate of the deceased, the sons of the levir pleading, 'produce proof that you are our brother and you will receive [your share]', the 'doubtful son' can tell them, 'Whatever you wish: If I am your brother, give me a share among you;³⁸ and if I am the son of the deceased, return to me the half which your father received when he shared the estate with me'.

Said R. Abba in the name of Rab: The judgment must stand.³⁹ R. Jeremiah said: The judgment is to be reversed.⁴⁰

May it be suggested that they⁴¹ differ on the same principle as that which underlies the dispute between Admon and the Rabbis? For we learned: If a man went to a country beyond the sea and [in his absence] the path to his field was lost,⁴² he shall, Admon said, use the shortest cut;⁴³ but the Sages said: He must purchase a path even though it will cost him a hundred maneh or else fly in the air.⁴⁴ And in discussing this [Mishnah it was pointed out] against the Rabbis that Admon was perfectly right; and Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab that here it is a case where [the fields of] four persons surrounded it on its four sides.⁴⁵ But [it was asked] what is Admon's reason? And Raba replied: Where four persons⁴⁶ derive their rights of possession from four persons⁴⁷ or where four persons derive it from one⁴⁵ all agree that these⁴⁸ can refuse⁴⁹ him; the dispute only concerns one person who derived his rights from four. Admon is of the opinion that he⁵⁰ can tell him, 'At all events⁵¹ my path is in your fields',⁵² while the Rabbis hold that the other can answer him, 'If you will keep quiet, well and good;⁵³ and if not, I will return the deeds to their original owners whom you will have no chance to call to law'.⁵⁴ May it, then, be suggested that R. Abba⁵⁵ holds the view of the Rabbis⁵⁶ and R. Jeremiah⁵⁷ that of Admon?⁵⁸ R. Abba can tell you: I may even hold the view of Admon; he made his ruling there⁵⁹ only because he⁶⁰ can say to him,⁶¹ 'Whatever you wish to plead,

- (29) While in the Mishnah cited their claim is certain and his is not, in this case his claim is certain while theirs is not. His claim is certain since at all events he is entitled either to all the estate (if he is the son of the deceased) or to a part at least (if he is the son of the levir), their claim, however, is doubtful since it is possible that he is the son of the deceased and they, as the sons of the levir, have no claim whatsoever upon the estate.

- (38) And the half he already received he would return. This, of course, applies to the case only where one share in the levir's estate exceeds half the estate of the first deceased brother.
- (39) Once the levir received a half of the estate of his deceased brother it cannot again be taken away from his heirs. The second claim of the 'doubtful son' is, therefore, invalid.

my only path lies in your fields', but could such a plea be advanced here! And R. Jeremiah can tell you: I may uphold even the view of the Rabbis, for the Rabbis made their ruling there only because he can tell him, 'If you keep silence, well and good, and if not I will return the deeds to their original owners and you will have no chance to call them to law', but could such a plea be advanced here!

Where a 'doubtful son'¹ and a levir came to claim their shares² in the estate of the grandfather,³ the former⁴ pleading, 'I am⁵ the son of the deceased and half of the estate belongs, therefore, to me', while the levir pleads, 'You are my own son and you have, therefore, no share whatsoever', the levir's claim being a certainty⁶ and that of the 'doubtful son' a doubtful one,⁷ doubt may not supersede⁸ a certainty.

and the levirate bond of a married woman renders her 'doubtfully married'.¹ 'The levirate bond of a betrothed woman renders her doubtfully betrothed', for were we to assume that she is regarded as definitely betrothed, [how could both] BETH SHAMMAI AND BETH HILLEL AGREE THAT SHE MAY SELL IT OR GIVE IT AWAY AND THAT HER ACT IS LEGALLY VALID when we learned: If she came into the possession of property while she was betrothed, Beth Shammai said, she may sell it, and Beth Hillel said, she may not sell it, but both agree that if she had sold or had given it away her act is legally valid!² Consequently³ it must be inferred that the levirate bond of a betrothed woman renders her 'doubtfully betrothed'.⁴ 'The levirate bond of a married woman renders her doubtfully married', for had it been possible to assume that she is regarded as definitely married, [how could] Beth Shammai state that THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE IT WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER when we learned: If she came into the possession of property while she was married, both⁵ agree that, if she had sold or given it away, her husband may seize it from the hand of the buyers!⁶ Consequently it must be inferred that the levirate bond of a married woman renders her 'doubtfully married'.⁷

Said Rabbah to him:⁸ Why, then, do they⁹ dispute on [the question of the estate] itself after the death [of the widow]? Let them rather dispute on the question of the usufruct while she is alive! No, said Rabbah, both clauses deal with property which came into her possession while she was married; and the levirate bond of a married woman stamps her as doubtfully married. In the first clause, therefore, where she is alive, she is the certain possessor¹⁰ while they are only doubtful possessors, and doubt cannot override a certainty.¹¹ In the final clause, however, where she is dead, both groups come equally as heirs¹² and are, therefore,¹³ to take equal shares.¹⁴

Abaye pointed out an objection against him:¹⁵ Cannot a doubt, in accordance with the view of Beth Shammai, override a certainty? Surely we learned: [In the case where] a¹⁶ house collapsed upon a man¹⁷ and his father or upon a man¹⁷ and those whose heir he was,¹⁸ and that man had against him the claim of his wife's kethubah¹⁹ or that of a creditor,²⁰ [and in the first case], the heirs of the father plead that the son died first and the father afterwards,²¹ while the creditor pleads that the father died first and the son afterwards,²² Beth Shammai hold [that the amount in dispute is] to be divided,²³ and Beth Hillel hold that the estate is to remain in its former status.²⁴ Now here, surely, [the claim of] the heirs of the father is a certainty²⁵ and that of the creditor is only a doubt²⁵ and yet²⁶ the doubtful claim overrides the certainty!²⁷ — Beth Shammai are of the opinion that a bond of indebtedness which is due for repayment is regarded as [already] repaid!²⁸

And whence do you derive this?²⁹ — [From] what we learned: If their husbands³⁰ died before they drank,³¹ Beth Shammai rule that they are to receive their kethuboth³² and that they need not drink,³³ and Beth Hillel rule that they either drink³³ or they do not receive their kethuboth.³⁴ [But how can it be ruled,] 'They either drink', when the All Merciful said, Then shall the man bring his wife³⁵ and he is not there! Consequently [the meaning must be that] as they do not drink they are not to receive their kethuboth.³² Now here, surely, it is a matter of doubt, it being uncertain whether she did play the harlot³⁶ or not,³⁷ and yet the doubt overrides the certainty.³⁸ Consequently³⁹ it must be inferred that a bond of indebtedness which is due for repayment is regarded as already repaid.⁴⁰

Abaye,⁴¹ then,⁴² should have raised his objection from this!⁴³ — [The law of] a wife's kethubah might be different owing to considerations of courtesy.⁴⁴

Then let him⁴⁵ raise his objection from the law of the kethubah in our Mishnah!⁴⁶ They⁴⁷ do not dispute this point.⁴⁸

But do they not? Surely we learned,⁴⁹ IF SHE DIED, WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH HER

KETHUBAH AND WITH PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER? BETH SHAMMAI SAID: THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE IT WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER; BETH HILLEL SAID: THE PROPERTY IS TO REMAIN WITH THOSE IN WHOSE POSSESSION IT IS! — It is this that was meant: IF SHE DIED, WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH HER KETHUBAH? and then [the enquiry] was abandoned. As to PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER, BETH SHAMMAI SAID: THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER AND BETH HILLEL SAID: THE PROPERTY IS TO REMAIN WITH THOSE IN WHOSE POSSESSION IT IS.

Said R. Ashi: The inference from the expressions in our Mishnah leads to the same conclusion;⁵⁰ for it was stated, THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER⁵¹ and it was not stated ‘the heirs of the father [are to share it] with the heirs of the husband’.⁵² This proves it.

[Reverting to the previous question,]⁵³ Abaye replied: The first clause [deals with property] that came into her possession while she was awaiting [the decision of] the levir,⁵⁴ and the latter clause [with such] as came into her possession while she was still with her husband.

(1) Cf. supra n. 3.

(2) Keth. 78a., Sonc. ed. pp. 490ff q.v.

(3) Since in the case of a definite betrothal Beth Hillel, contrary to the opinion of Beth Shammai do not allow the widow the right of sale or gift, while in the first clause of our Mishnah they do.

(4) Hence Beth Shammai, who concede to the widow the right to sell and to give away even where her betrothal was certain, with all the more reason concede such rights to the widow spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah where her betrothal is only doubtful. Beth Hillel, too, since in the case of a definite betrothal they agree that a sale or gift that had already taken place is valid, may rightly concede to the widow in the case of doubtful betrothal the full rights of selling and giving away.

(5) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

(6) Keth. loc. cit.

(7) And so both Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel, who in the case of a definite marriage recognize the husband's right to seize from the buyers even property that his wife had already sold, agree that in the case of our Mishnah, the status of marriage being a matter of doubt, the husband's rights are also a matter of doubt. Hence Beth Shammai might well maintain that the property which is of doubtful ownership should be equally divided between the rival claimants, while Beth Hillel may maintain that the widow's right of possession is to be given priority since she came into the possession of the property at a time when her married status was a matter of uncertainty.

(8) ‘Ulla.

(9) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

(10) Since the property is in any case hers.

(11) Hence Beth Shammai as well as Beth Hillel agree that she is fully entitled to sell the property or to give it away.

(12) Lit., ‘those come to inherit’ (bis). Had the levirate bond borne the same force as marriage the estate would undoubtedly have become the property of the levir only. Had it not borne the same force as marriage the estate would have been given to her father's heirs only, and the levir would have had no claim whatsoever. The claims of either group are consequently evenly balanced.

(13) Since the claim of either is equally doubtful.

(14) According to Beth Shammai. Beth Hillel's view, on the other hand, may be justified on the ground that the widow's father's heirs are her certain relatives and are, therefore, entitled to inherit that which was in her possession. No such claim, however, could be advanced by the husband's relatives since the husband himself was never for one moment in definite and undisputed possession of the property in question.

(15) Rabbah.

(16) Lit., ‘the’.

(17) Lit., ‘upon him’.

(18) Brothers, for instance, or other relatives, who had no other heirs but him.

(19) V. Glos.

(20) And he left no other money or possessions wherewith to meet his obligations, while those whose heir he was did leave possessions.

(21) The son did not consequently inherit from his father whose estate would, therefore, belong to the surviving heirs.

(22) And the son had, therefore, inherited his father's estate which may consequently be seized in payment of the son's debts.

(23) Between the creditor and the heirs, their respective claims being regarded by Beth Shammai as of equal force.

(24) B.B. 157a; With the heirs of the father. The claim of the heirs is regarded by Beth Hillel as a certainty, since they are in possession of the estate either as heirs of the father or as heirs of the son, while the claim of the creditor, being dependent on his being put into possession of the estate by the court, is of doubtful validity, and 'doubt cannot override a certainty'.

(25) v. supra n. 8.

(26) According to Beth Shammai.

(27) Lit., 'and doubt comes and takes away from the hands of certainty'. V. supra n. 8.

(28) Sot. 25a. The amount of the debt is deemed to be in the virtual possession of the creditor. The claims respectively of the heirs and the creditor are, consequently, of equal force. If the father died first his son inherited his estate and the creditor had immediately come into the legal possession of a share of the estate equal to the amount of his debt. If the son died first the heirs come into possession of the entire estate. As it is not known who died first the claims of the two parties are equally doubtful and of equal validity.

(37) And is consequently entitled to receive it.

(38) Cf. supra p. 243, n. 12. Despite the doubt as to whether she is entitled to her kethubah she receives it, according to Beth Shammai; and she thus takes away the amount of her kethubah from the heirs of her husband who are the undoubted successors to his property.

(39) Since the rule is that 'doubt cannot override certainty's

(40) The kethubah is, therefore, deemed to have been collected as soon as the husband died, and the widow is consequently deemed to be the virtual possessor of such a portion of his estate as would cover the amount of her kethubah.

(41) Whose objection to Rabbah, supra, was based on a Mishnah from Baba Bathra.

(42) Since the principle of virtual possession did not occur to him as the reason for allowing a doubtful claim in face of certain one.

(43) The Mishnah just cited which is embodied in the Tractates of Sotah and Kethuboth both of which belong to the same order as our Tractate. Since the principles in both Mishnahs are identical, why did Abaye resort to a Mishnah in another order when one was available in our order of Nashim.

(44) חינה 'gracefulness', 'loveliness'. It is possible that in order that pleasant and cordial relations may exist between husband and wife the law has been enacted that, despite the general rule that 'doubt cannot override a certainty', a woman shall be privileged to collect her kethubah even when her own claim is of a doubtful character and that of her litigants is a certain one. No objection could, therefore, be put forward from such a special case; and Abaye had consequently to resort to a Mishnah in Nezikin. Other explanations of משום חינה (v. Jast.): 'In order to make her attractive', 'that women may be willing to marry'.

(45) Abaye.

(46) Where, according to Beth Shammai, the heirs of the father (by virtue of his being heir to his daughter, the widow), though their claim is of a doubtful nature, share the amount of the kethubah with the heirs of the husband whose rights to the amount of the kethubah (as the heirs of the husband) are certain. At the moment it is assumed that Beth Shammai's disagreement with Beth Hillel extends to the KETHUBAH as well as to the PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER; and 'considerations of courtesy' could not, of course, apply when the woman is dead and the claimants are her male heirs. Cf. Keth. 97b.

(49) So MS.M. Cur. edd. 'it was taught'.

(50) That Beth Shammai's disagreement with Beth Hillel does not extend to the question of the kethubah.

(51) I.e., the former take a share in that which is virtually in the possession of the latter, viz., the melog property which belongs to the heirs of the wife's father.

(52) Which would have referred to the kethubah which is in the virtual possession of the husband's heirs,

(53) Supra 38a, 'Whereby does the first clause etc.

(54) As the levirate bond is not strong enough to give the levir any right over that property, it is generally agreed that she and, in case of her death, her heirs also are entitled to dispose of it in any manner they like.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 39a

And Abaye¹ maintains that a husband's rights² have the same force as his wife's.³ Said Raba to him:⁴ If she came into possession of property while she was still With her husband, no one⁵ would dispute the view that his rights are superior to hers.⁶ Both [clauses of our Mishnah], however, [deal with property] which came into her possession while she was awaiting [the decision of] the levir; the first clause speaking of one to whom a ma'amar had not been addressed,⁷ and the final clause, of one to whom a ma'amar had been addressed.⁸ And Raba is of the opinion that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, renders [the widow] definitely betrothed and doubtfully married. She is deemed to be definitely betrothed in respect of excluding her rival;⁹ and she is deemed to be doubtfully married in respect of taking a share in the property.¹⁰

A statement was made in the name of R. Eleazar in agreement with Raba and a statement was made in the name of R. Jose son of R. Hanina in agreement with Abaye. Could R. Eleazar, however, have made such a statement? Surely R. Eleazar said: A ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes a kinyan in so far only as to keep out the rival!¹¹ — Reverse [the statements]. If you prefer I might say: There is really no need to reverse [them, for] R. Eleazar can tell you, 'What I said [amounted to this]: that a letter of divorce alone is not enough¹² but that she requires also halizah; did I state, however, that the ma'amar constitutes no kinyan even in respect of taking a share in her property'!¹³

Said R. Papa: The inference from our Mishnah is in agreement with the opinion of Abaye,¹⁴ although 'IF SHE DIED' presents a difficulty.¹⁵ Seeing that it was stated PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER, what is meant by COMES IN and what by GOES OUT? Obviously,¹⁶ 'COMES INTO the possession of her husband'¹⁷ and 'GOES OUT from the possession of her husband into the possession of her father'.¹⁸

'Although IF SHE DIED presents a difficulty': Why should they¹⁹ dispute [on the question of the property] itself, which can arise only in the event of the woman's death²⁰, let them rather dispute on the question of the usufruct which arises even when the woman is still alive!²¹ The fact is that no further objection [can be raised].²²

WHERE HE MARRIED HER, SHE IS DEEMED etc. For what practical law [was this statement needed]? — R. Jose b. Hanina replied: To indicate that he may divorce her by means of a letter of divorce²³ and that he may remarry her.

'He may divorce her by means of a letter of divorce'; Is not this obvious?²⁴ — It might have been assumed that, since the All Merciful said²⁵ And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,²⁶ she retains the obligation of the first levirate relationship²⁷ and so may be set free²⁸ only through halizah but not through a letter of divorce, hence it was necessary to teach us [that the law is not so].

‘He may remarry her’; Is not this obvious?²⁹ — It might have been assumed that since he³⁰ has already performed³¹ the commandment which the All Merciful has imposed upon him, she shall now be forbidden to him as the wife of his brother, hence it was necessary to teach us [that he may nevertheless remarry her]. Might it not be suggested that the law is so indeed?³² — Scripture stated, And take her to him to wife;³³ as soon as he has taken her she is deemed to be his wife in every respect.

SAVE THAT HER KETHUBAH etc. What is the reason? — A wife has been given³⁴ to him³⁵ from heaven.³⁶ If, however, she is unable nothing more’. The inference from our Mishnah is undoubtedly in agreement with the view of Abaye, the only difficulty being the one mentioned. to obtain her kethubah from her first [husband], provision was made that she [is to receive it] from the second³⁷ in order that it may not be easy for him to divorce her.³⁸

MISHNAH. THE DUTY OF THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE IS INCUMBENT UPON THE ELDEST [OF THE SURVIVING BROTHERS].³⁹ IF HE DECLINES, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN.⁴⁰ IF THEY ALL DECLINE, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED AND HE IS TOLD, ‘THE DUTY IS INCUMBENT UPON YOU; EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR PERFORM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF HE⁴¹ WISHED TO SUSPEND ACTION⁴² UNTIL A MINOR⁴³ BECOMES OF AGE, OR UNTIL THE ELDEST⁴³ RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA OR [UNTIL A BROTHER WHO WAS] DEAF⁴⁴ OR AN IMBECILE [SHOULD RECOVER],⁴⁵ HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO, BUT IS TOLD, ‘THE DUTY IS INCUMBENT UPON YOU; EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR PERFORM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. It was stated: [On the relative importance of] the intercourse of a younger, and the halizah of an elder brother there is a difference of opinion between R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi. One holds that the intercourse of the younger is preferable and the other holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable. ‘One⁴⁶ holds that the intercourse of the younger is preferable,’ because the commandment, surely, is to perform the levirate marriage;⁴⁷ and ‘the other⁴⁶ holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable’, because in the presence of an elder brother the intercourse of the younger is valueless.⁴⁸

We learned, IF HE DECLINED, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN. Does not this mean that he declined to contract the levirate marriage but [was willing] to submit to the halizah? And yet it was stated, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN, which proves⁴⁹ that the intercourse of a younger brother is preferred! — No; he wished neither to submit to halizah nor to perform the levirate marriage. Similarly, then, in the case of the other brothers, [the meaning is that] they declined both halizah and levirate marriage;⁵⁰ why, then, is THE ELDEST AGAIN APPROACHED with the object of bringing pressure upon him? Let pressure be brought to bear upon them!⁵¹ — As the duty⁵² is incumbent upon him, pressure also must be used against him.

We learned, IF HE WISHED TO SUSPEND ACTION UNTIL A MINOR BECOMES OF AGE ... HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO. But if the intercourse of a minor is to be preferred, why IS HE NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since on becoming of age he might contract the levirate marriage! — Following your view [it might similarly be objected], why [if he wished to wait] UNTIL THE ELDEST RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA . . . HE IS

NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since on his return he might contract the levirate marriage!⁵³ The fact is that the performance of a commandment must not be delayed.⁵⁴

(1) Since he explains the latter clause to be dealing with property that came into the wife's possession while her husband was still alive.

(2) To his wife's melog property.

(3) Lit., 'his hand is like her hand'. The husband's rights, according to Beth Hillel, he maintains, are in no way superior to those of his wife. Hence, when he dies and the widow comes only under the levirate bond, the levir's rights, which cannot have the same force as those of a husband, are inevitably inferior to those of the widow. The property, therefore, must remain in the possession of herself or her heirs. Beth Shammai, on the other hand, maintain that a husband's rights have more force than those of his wife. When he dies and the levir steps in by virtue of the levirate bond, the latter's rights, though inferior to those of the husband, are of equal force with those of the widow whose rights also are inferior to those of her husband.

(4) Abaye.

(5) Lit., all the world', even Beth Hillel.

(6) Lit., 'his hand is better than her hand', and the husband's heirs would consequently have been entitled to the property.

(7) By the levir, before the property came into her possession. The levirate bond alone is not sufficient to effect a transfer of the property to the levir.

(8) And after that the property came into her possession. As the ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, is regarded as virtual marriage (v. supra 29a), the levir also is entitled to the property. Hence it must be divided. Beth Hillel, on the other hand, not regarding a ma'amar as marriage, deny the levir all rights upon the property which is, therefore, to remain with the heirs of the woman.

(9) Her sister who does not cause her to be forbidden to the levir as 'his zekukah's sister'. V. supra 29a.

(10) The levir is not entitled to all the property as if he had actually married the widow, but only to a share of it.

(11) Supra 29a, Ned. 74a.

(12) When a ma'amar had been addressed to the widow.

(13) Certainly not. Consequently his statement in agreement with the view of Raba may be perfectly authentic.

(14) That the final clause deals with property that came into the woman's possession while she was still living with her husband.

(15) This is explained infra.

(16) Lit., 'not?'

(17) At the time they came into her possession.

(18) When she dies. The property must consequently have come into her possession when she was still living with her husband, as Abaye maintains.

(19) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

(20) Lit., 'and after death'.

(21) Lit., 'in her life and concerning the fruit'.

(22) Lit., 'and

(23) And no halizah is required.

(24) Since with the levirate marriage she assumes the status of a married woman.

(25) So MS.M. Cur. edd., add, 'It is written, And take her to wife'.

(26) Deut. XXV, 5; although it was already stated in the same verse, and take her to wife.

(27) So MS.M., cur. edd., 'the levirate relationship of the first'.

(28) Lit., 'yes'.

(29) Cf. supra n. 2.

(30) The levir.

(31) By his first marriage.

(32) That a brother's widow with whom levirate marriage was performed still requires halizah and may not be remarried by the levir after he had divorced her.

(33) Deut. XXV, 5; where only the latter part of the verse, And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her would have been sufficient. V. supra 8a.

(34) Lit., 'they caused him to acquire'.

- (35) The levir.
- (36) He has neither chosen her nor has he undertaken any obligations towards her. She was imposed upon him by the divine law of the levirate marriage. The claim of her kethubah must, therefore, be a charge upon the estate of her first husband whose choice she had been.
- (37) The levir.
- (38) Lit., 'that she may not be easy in his eyes to cause her to go out'.
- (39) V. supra 24a.
- (40) In the descending order of age.
- (41) The eldest brother present on the spot. (Rashi).
- (42) Lit., 'he hung' or 'suspended'. [Aliter. He referred (the action) to; v. n. 9].
- (43) Brother.
- (44) in Rabbinic literature usually signifies one who is deaf from birth. Hence 'a deaf-mute'.
- (45) [Tosaf.: He referred her to a deaf brother etc.].
- (46) Lit., 'he who'.
- (47) Halizah being merely a substitute for it.
- (48) Since the duty is, in the first instance, incumbent upon the elder.
- (49) Since the younger brothers are asked to contract the levirate marriage when the elder expressed his willingness to submit to halizah.
- (50) Since the same expression of unwillingness is used.
- (51) If the eldest had only refused marriage but was willing to submit to halizah, as has first been assumed, one could explain our Mishnah to mean that 'THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED with a view to halizah'; he being the eldest, halizah also is first offered to him. If, however, he refused both halizah and marriage, as has now been explained, and the object of approaching him is coercion, why should the Beth din be troubled to summon him again in order to coerce him when any of the brothers who happens to be near at hand might just as well be coerced?
- (52) Of the levirate marriage. V. our Mishnah.
- (53) So marginal gloss. Cur. edd., 'and submits to halizah'.
- (54) And this is the only reason why his request is not granted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 39b

Some say: As regards intercourse all agree that the intercourse of a younger brother is preferred.¹ They only differ on the halizah of a younger brother. And the statement² ran thus: [On the relative importance of] the halizah of a younger, and the halizah of an elder brother there is a difference of opinion between R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi. One holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable, and the other holds that both are of equal importance. 'One³ holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable'⁴ because the commandment surely, is incumbent upon the elder. And the other [maintains that] the statement, 'the commandment is incumbent upon the elder', [was made] in respect of the levirate marriage; in respect of the halizah, however, they are both of equal importance.

We learned, IF THEY ALSO DECLINE, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED. Does not this mean that they declined to contract the levirate marriage but [were willing] to submit to halizah? And yet it was stated, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED, which proves that the halizah of the elder is preferred! — No; they declined the halizah as well as the levirate marriage.

Similarly, in the case of the eldest brother, he declined the halizah as well as the levirate marriage;⁵ why, then, IS THE ELDEST AGAIN APPROACHED with the object of coercing him? Let coercion be used against them!⁶ — As the duty⁷ is incumbent upon him, coercion also must be used against him.

Come and hear: IF HE WISHES TO SUSPEND ACTION . . . UNTIL THE ELDEST RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA . . . HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO. But if the

halizah of the eldest is preferable why IS HE NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since it is possible that when he returns he will submit to halizah! — Following your view [it might similarly be objected], why [if he wishes to postpone action] UNTIL A MINOR BECOMES OF AGE . . . HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since, on becoming of age, he might contract the levirate marriage!⁸ The fact is that the performance of a commandment must not be delayed.⁹

We learned elsewhere: At first, when the object was the fulfilment¹⁰ of the commandment, the precept of the levirate marriage was preferable to that of halizah; now, however, when the object is not the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of halizah, it was laid down, is preferable to that of the levirate marriage.¹¹ Rab said: But no coercion¹² may be used.¹³

When they¹⁴ came before Rab he addressed them thus: 'If you¹⁵ wish, submit to halizah; if you prefer, contract the levirate marriage; the All Merciful has given you the choice:¹⁶ And if the man like not to take his brother's wife,¹⁷ implying, if he likes he may, whenever he wishes, submit to halizah or, if he prefers, contract the levirate marriage.'

Rab Judah also is of the opinion that no coercion may be applied; since Rab Judah has ordained [the following formula] for a deed of halizah: '[We certify] that So-and-so daughter of So-and-so brought before us into court her brother-in-law So-and-so, and we have ascertained him to be the paternal brother of the deceased. We told him, "If you wish to contract the levirate marriage, contract it, and if not, incline¹⁸ towards her your right foot". He inclined¹⁹ towards her his right foot and she removed his shoe from off his foot and spat out before him, a spittle which has been seen by the court upon the ground'.

R. Hiyya b. Iwya in the name of Rab Judah concluded²⁰ as follows: 'And we read before them [the relevant passage] that is written in the Book of the Law of Moses'.

'We ascertained him'. On this, R. Aha and Rabina are in dispute. One says: Through [qualified] witnesses. The other says: Even a relative and even a woman²¹ [may tender the evidence].

The law is that it²² is a mere intimation, and that even a relative and even a woman [may tender the evidence].

'At first, when the object was the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of the levirate marriage was preferable to that of halizah; now, however, when the object is not the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of halizah, it was laid down, is preferable to that of the levirate marriage'. Said Rami b. Hama in the name of R. Isaac: It was re-enacted that the precept of the levirate marriage is preferable to that of halizah.

Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to him: Have the generations improved in their morals? — At first they held the opinion of Abba Saul, and finally they adopted that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: Abba Saul said, 'If a levir marries his sister-in-law on account of her beauty, or in order to gratify his sexual desires or with any other ulterior motive, it is as if he has infringed the law of incest; and I am even inclined to think that the child [of such a union] is a bastard'. But the Sages said, 'Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,²³ whatever the motive'.²⁴

Who is the Tanna of the following statement which our Rabbis taught: 'Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,²³ is a commandment; for originally²⁵ she stood in relation to him in the status of permissibility, then²⁶ she was forbidden to him, and then again²⁷ permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she reverts to her original status of permissibility, hence it was specifically stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,²³ it is a commandment'. — Who, now, is the Tanna? — R. Isaac b. Abdimi replied. It is [the statement of] Abba Saul, and it is this that he meant: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,²³ is a commandment; for originally²⁵ she stood in relation to him in the status of permissibility; he could have married her, if he wished, on account of her beauty and he could have married her, if he wished, in order to gratify his sexual desires; then²⁸ she was forbidden to him, and then again²⁹ permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she reverts to her original status of permissibility,³⁰ hence it was specifically stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her³¹ only with the intention of performing the commandment.³²

Raba said: You may even say [that the authorship³³ is that of] the Rabbis,³⁴ and it is this that was meant: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,³¹ is a commandment; for originally³⁵ she was in the status of permissibility; he could have married her if he wished and, if he preferred, he could have abstained from marrying her; then²⁸ she was forbidden to him, and then again²⁹ permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she was to revert to her original status of permissibility, so that, if he wished, he might marry her and, if he preferred, he could abstain from marrying her. [You say,] 'If he preferred he could abstain from marrying her'? Surely she is tied to him;³⁶ can she be set free by no act whatever! — Say rather: [It might have been assumed that] if he wished he might marry her, and, if he preferred, he might submit to halizah, hence it was specifically stated her husband's brother shall go in unto her,³¹ it is a commandment.³⁷

Read, then,³⁸ the first clause: 'It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place,³⁹ is a commandment;

for originally¹ its status in relation to him was one of permissibility; then² it was forbidden, and again³ permitted; consequently one might assume that it reverts to its first status of permissibility, hence it was specifically stated, 'It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place,⁴ it is a commandment'. Now, according to Raba who said that it⁵ represents the view of⁶ the Rabbis, one could well explain that what is meant here⁷ is this: It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place⁴ is a commandment, for at first⁸ its status in relation to him was one of permissibility since, if he desired, he could eat it and, if he preferred, he could abstain from eating it; then⁹ it was forbidden, and again³ permitted; consequently it might be assumed that it reverts to its first status of permissibility¹⁰ so that, if he wished, he could eat it and, if he preferred, he could abstain from eating it. — [You say,] 'If he preferred he could abstain from eating it'? Surely it is written in the Scriptures, 'And they shall eat those things wherewith atonement was made'¹¹ which teaches that the priests must eat them, and that the owner attains thereby atonement! Say rather: [it might be assumed that] if he wished, he¹² may eat it¹³ himself and, if he preferred, another priest may eat it, hence it was specifically stated, 'It shall be eaten' without leaven in a holy place,¹⁴ it is a commandment.¹⁵ According to R. Isaac b. Abdimi, however, who said that it¹⁶ [represents the view of] Abba Saul, what two alternatives¹⁷ exist here?¹⁸ And were you to suggest¹⁹ that if he wished he could eat it¹³ to appease his appetite and, if he preferred, he could devour it gluttonously [can eating gluttonously] [it may be retorted] be described as proper eating? Surely Resh Lakish said, 'He who eats gluttonously on the Day of Atonement²⁰ is exempt [from kareth],²¹ since [Scripture has stated], 'Shall not be afflicted'!²² [Were you to suggest], however,²³ that if he wished he could eat it²⁴ unleavened and, if he preferred, he could eat it leavened, surely [it might be retorted] it is written in Scripture, 'It shall not be baked with leaven their portion'²⁵ from which Resh Lakish inferred that even their portion²⁶ must not be baked with leaven! Again [Were you, to suggest,]²³ that if he wished he could eat it²⁴ unleavened and, if he preferred, he could eat it as a dumpling,²⁷ how [it could be retorted] is one to imagine [such a dumpling]? If it is unleavened, well, then it is unleavened;²⁸ and if it is not unleavened, the All Merciful, surely, has said without leaven!²⁹ — No;³⁰ it³¹ may indeed be assumed to be unleavened; but the object of the exposition of the Scriptural text³² was to forbid it.³³ In respect of what practical issue, then,³⁴ has it been stated that a dumpling may be regarded as unleavened bread? — [The statement was made] to indicate that a man may perform with it³¹ his duty³⁵ on the Passover. Though he made it first into a dumpling, it is nevertheless designated the 'bread of affliction', since he subsequently baked it in an oven. Consequently a man may perform with it his duty³⁵ on the Passover. MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE HE IS REGARDED AS ONE OF THE OTHER BROTHERS IN RESPECT OF INHERITANCE.³⁶ IF, HOWEVER, THE FATHER³⁷ WAS LIVING,³⁸ THE ESTATE BELONGS TO THE FATHER.³⁹

HE WHO MARRIES HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE GAINS POSSESSION OF HIS BROTHER'S³⁷ ESTATE. R. JUDAH SAID: IN EITHER CASE,⁴⁰ IF THE FATHER³⁷ WAS LIVING³⁸ THE ESTATE BELONGS TO THE FATHER.

GEMARA. Is not this⁴¹ obvious? — It might have been presumed that halizah takes the place of the levirate marriage and he receives, therefore, all the estate, hence it was taught [that he does not].⁴² If so,⁴³ why was it stated that HE IS REGARDED AS ONE OF THE OTHER BROTHERS when it should have been stated, he is to be regarded only as one of the brothers! — In truth [this is the purpose of our Mishnah]: It might have been assumed that because he deprived her [of levirate marriage]⁴⁴ he shall be penalized,⁴⁵ hence we were taught [that he does receive a share].

IF, HOWEVER, THE FATHER WAS LIVING, [THE ESTATE BELONGS TO HIM], for a Master said that a father takes precedence over all his lineal descendants.⁴⁶

HE WHO MARRIES HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE etc. What is the reason? — The All Merciful said, Shall succeed in the name of his brother,⁴⁷ and behold he⁴⁸ has succeeded.

R. JUDAH SAID etc. Said 'Ulla: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah, and R. Isaac Nappaha likewise said: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah.

'Ulla, furthermore, (others say, R. Isaac Nappaha) said: What is R. Judah's reason? — Because it is written in Scripture, And it shall be, that the firstborn that he beareth,⁴⁹ [he is] like the firstborn; as the firstborn has nothing while his father is alive, so has this one⁵⁰ also nothing while his father is alive. If [one were to suggest that] as the firstborn receives a double portion after his father's death so shall this one also receive a double portion⁵¹ after his father's death, [it might be retorted]: Is it written, 'Shall succeed in the name of his father'? It is written, surely, Shall succeed in the name of his brother,⁵² not 'in the name of his father'.⁵³ Might it be suggested that, where the father is not alive to receive the inheritance,⁵⁴ the law of the levirate marriage should be carried out, but where the father is alive [and the levir] does not receive the inheritance the law of the levirate marriage shall not be carried out? — Has the All Merciful in any way made the levirate marriage dependent on the inheritance? The levir must contract the levirate marriage in any case, and if any inheritance is available he receives it; if not, he does not receive it.

The Bible teacher, R. Hanina, once sat before R. Jannai, and as he sat there he stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah. The other called out to him: Go out, read Biblical verses outside,⁵⁵ the halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah.

A tanna recited in the presence of R. Nahman: The halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah. The other said to him: In agreement with whom, then? In agreement with the Rabbis? This is surely obvious, [since in a dispute between] one individual and a majority the halachah is in agreement with the majority! — 'Shall I', the first asked him, 'reject it'?⁵⁶ 'No', the other replied, 'you were taught [that] the halachah is [in agreement with R. Judah] which, presenting to you a difficulty,⁵⁷ you reversed;⁵⁸ and in so far as you reversed it your wording is well justified.'⁵⁹

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES.⁶⁰

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 40b

HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER MOTHER, HER MOTHER'S MOTHER AND HER FATHER'S MOTHER; HER DAUGHTER, HER DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER AND HER SON'S DAUGHTER; AND ALSO HER SISTER WHILE SHE¹ IS ALIVE. THE OTHER BROTHERS, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED.² SHE¹ IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS FATHER AND HIS FATHER'S FATHER;³ HIS SON AND HIS SON'S SON; HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON.

A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH BUT IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY THE RIVAL OF THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH.

GEMARA. The question was raised: Were relatives of the second degree⁴ forbidden⁵ in the case of a haluzah as a preventive measure,⁶ or not? Did the Rabbis forbid marriage with relatives of the second degree, as a preventive measure,⁶ only in respect of a relative who is pentateuchally forbidden,⁷ but in respect of a haluzah⁸ the Rabbis did not forbid relatives of the second degree as a preventive measure, or is there perhaps no difference?⁹ — Come and hear: HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER MOTHER AND HER MOTHER'S MOTHER, but 'her mother's mother's mother' is not mentioned!¹⁰ [No.] It is possible that the reason why this relative was omitted¹¹ is because it was desired to state in the final clause, THE OTHER BROTHERS, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED, and, were 'her mother's mother's mother' also mentioned it might have been presumed that the brothers are permitted [to marry] her mother's mother's mother only¹² but not her mother's mother or her mother.¹³ Then let 'her mother's mother's mother' be mentioned, and let it also be stated: The brothers are permitted to marry all of them!¹⁴ — This is a difficulty.

Come and hear: SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS FATHER AND HIS FATHER'S FATHER. 'His father's father,' at any rate, was mentioned. Is not this¹⁵ due to¹⁶ the levir who participated in the halizah, through whom she is the daughter-in-law of his¹⁷ son?¹⁸ — No; this¹⁹ is due to the deceased through whom she is the daughter-in-law of his²⁰ son.²¹

Come and hear: AND HIS SON'S SON, Is not this¹⁹ due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is the wife of his²² father's father?¹⁸ — No; it¹⁹ is due to the deceased through whom she is his²² father's father's brother's wife.²¹ But, surely, Amemar permitted the marriage of one's father's father's brother's wife!²³ — Amemar interprets that²⁴ to refer to the son of the grandfather.²⁵ If so, [HIS SON, AND SON'S SON] are the same as HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON!²⁶ — Both his paternal brother and his maternal brother were specified.²⁷

Come and hear what R. Hiyya taught:²⁸ Four [categories of relatives are forbidden]²⁹ Pentateuchally³⁰ and four Rabbinically.³¹ His³² father and his³³ son, his³⁴ brother and his³⁵ brother's son are Pentateuchally forbidden;³⁰ his father's father³⁶ and his mother's father,³⁷ his son's son³⁸ and his daughter's son³⁹ are forbidden Rabbinically.⁴⁰ 'His father's father', at any rate, is mentioned here. Is not this⁴¹ due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his son's daughter-in-law?⁴² — No; it⁴¹ is due to the deceased⁴³ whose son's daughter-in-law she is.

Come and hear: 'His mother's father'.⁴⁴ Is not this⁴¹ due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his⁴⁵ daughter's daughter-in-law?⁴⁶ — No; it⁴¹ is due to the deceased⁴⁷ through whom she is his⁴⁵ daughter's daughter-in-law.

Come and hear: 'And his son's son'.⁴⁸ Is not this⁴¹ due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his father's father's wife?⁴² — No; it⁴¹ is due to the deceased⁴⁷ through whom she is his father's father's brother's wife. But, surely, Amemar permitted the marriage of one's father's father's brother's wife!⁴⁹ — Amemar explains that⁵⁰ to be due to the levir who participated in the halizah,⁵¹ but is of the opinion that relatives of the second degree were forbidden as a preventive measure even in respect of a haluzah.⁵²

Come and hear: 'And the son of his daughter'.⁴⁸ Is not this⁴¹ due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his mother's father's wife?⁴² — No; it⁴¹ is due to the deceased⁴⁷ through whom she is his mother's father's brother's wife. But, surely, no prohibition as a preventive measure was made in respect of the second degrees of incest!⁵³ Consequently⁵⁴ it must be due to the levir who participated in the halizah,⁵⁵ and thus it may be inferred that relatives of the second degree were forbidden as a preventive measure even in the case of a haluzah. This proves it.

A MAN IS PERMITTED etc. R. Tobi b. Kisna said in the name of Samuel: Where a man had intercourse with the rival of his haluzah the child [born from such a union] is a bastard. What is the reason? — Because she⁵⁶ remains under her original prohibition.⁵⁷

Said R. Joseph: We also have learned [to the same effect]: A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH. Now, if you grant that the rival is excluded⁵⁸ one can well understand why the man is permitted to marry her sister.⁵⁹ If it be maintained, however, that the rival has the same status as the haluzah, why [should her sister] be permitted [to him]?⁶⁰

May it be suggested that this⁶¹ furnishes an objection against R. Johanan who stated: Neither he⁶² nor the other brothers are subject to kareth either for [the betrothal of] a haluzah or for [the betrothal of] her rival?⁶³ — R. Johanan can answer you: Do you understand it!⁶⁴ Is the sister of a haluzah Pentateuchally forbidden?⁶⁵ Surely Resh Lakish said: Here⁶⁶ it was taught by Rabbi that the prohibition to marry the sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchal and that that of the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical!⁶⁷

Why is there a difference [in the law] between the one and the other?⁶⁸

(1) The haluzah (v. Glos.).

(2) To marry the enumerated relatives of the haluzah.

(3) Bomberg ed. adds, 'and his mother's father'.

(4) E.g., the haluzah's mother's mother's mother or her father's mother's mother (Rashi). Cf. supra 21a.

(5) Rabbinically.

(6) Against marriage with relatives of the first degree.

(7) I.e. 'a wife's relatives whose prohibition is specifically stated in the Pentateuch.

- (8) Whose relatives, even of the first degree, are only Rabbinically forbidden.
- (9) In respect of the law of incest, between the relatives of a wife who are Pentateuchally forbidden and those of a haluzah who are only Rabbinically forbidden.
- (10) V. supra p. 259, n. 9.
- (11) Lit., 'that he did not teach'.
- (12) Because even in the case of one's wife she is not Biblically forbidden.
- (13) Who, in the case of one's wife, are Pentateuchally prohibited.
- (14) And the possible misinterpretation would thus be avoided.
- (15) Prohibition to marry a father's father.
- (16) Lit., 'what not, owing to'.
- (17) The father's father.
- (18) I.e., a relative of the second degree, which proves that even such relatives were forbidden in respect of a haluzah.
- (19) V. supra note 9.
- (20) V. supra n. 20.
- (21) In whose case the prohibition is Pentateuchal and provides no answer to our enquiry.
- (22) The son's son.
- (23) Supra 21b. How, then, according to Amemar, could this case be included among forbidden relatives?
- (24) The SON'S SON in our Mishnah.
- (25) The father of both the deceased and of the levir who submitted to the halizah. Our Mishnah is thus interpreted: HIS FATHER is the father of the deceased and of the levir who participated in the halizah; HIS SON, i.e., the son of the FATHER mentioned, who is the brother of the deceased and of the levir who participated in the halizah; and HIS SON'S SON is the son of the son of the father mentioned, to whom the haluzah is forbidden as the wife of his father's brother.
- (26) V. supra n. 1.
- (27) The former by HIS SON AND HIS SON'S SON (v. supra n. 1) and the latter by HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON, the prohibitions being Pentateuchal since they are due to the woman's relationship with the deceased as his wife, and not to her relationship with the levir as haluzah, the prohibitions resulting from which could only be Rabbinical.
- (28) In respect of a haluzah.
- (29) To marry her.
- (30) Lit., 'from the words of the Torah', i.e., owing to their relationship to the haluzah as the wife of the deceased, and the prohibition to marry whom is specifically mentioned in the Pentateuch.
- (31) Lit., 'from the words of the Scribes'.
- (32) The levir's (who participated in the halizah). The prohibition is Pentateuchal, it being due to his brother, the deceased, whose wife and whose father's daughter-in-law the haluzah was.
- (33) The levir's (v. supra n. 8). The haluzah is forbidden to him Pentateuchally as the wife of his father's brother.
- (34) The levir's (v. supra n. 8), who is also the brother of the deceased, and the haluzah is forbidden to him Pentateuchally.
- (35) The levir's (v supra n. 8), the deceased also having been his father's brother, and the prohibition is consequently Pentateuchal.
- (36) To whom the haluzah is forbidden as his son's daughter-in-law.
- (37) The prohibition being that of one's daughter's daughter-in-law.
- (38) It is now assumed that the prohibition to marry this relative is due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his father's father's wife.
- (39) Whose mother's father's wife she was.
- (40) Cf. supra note 7, all being cases of the second degree, forbidden by a provision of the Rabbis only.
- (41) The prohibition to marry this relative.
- (42) Which proves that, even in respect of a haluzah, relatives of the second degree are prohibited.
- (43) In whose case the prohibition is Pentateuchal, and supplies no answer to our enquiry.
- (44) This is a citation from R. Hiyya's Baraita supra.
- (45) His mother's father's.
- (46) V. supra n. 2.
- (47) The prohibition being a preventive measure against the infringement of a Pentateuchal law. Consequently it supplies no proof in respect of our enquiry which is concerned with a preventive measure against an infringement of a Rabbinical law.

(48) V. supra n. 4.

(49) How then could such a case be included among forbidden relatives?

(50) 'Son's son' in R. Hiyya's Baraitha.

(51) The prohibition being that of 'his father's father's wife', as first assumed.

(52) According to those, however, who, contrary to the opinion of Amemar, forbid marriage with a father's father's brother's wife, the prohibition in R. Hiyya's Baraitha might still be attributed to the deceased (v. supra n. 7), and the original enquiry as to whether relatives of the second degree were forbidden in the case of a haluzah still remains unanswered.

(53) How then could it be suggested that the prohibition is due to the fact that the haluzah is the 'wife of the mother's father's brother' of the deceased?

(54) Lit., 'what, not'?

(55) The prohibition being that of 'his mother's father's wife' who is a relative of the second degree.

(56) The rival.

(57) Of 'brother's wife', which is subject to the penalty of kareth. Children born from a union that is forbidden under such a penalty are deemed to be bastards.

(58) [Lit., 'outside'. Rashi reads: 'Stands outside'.] From the restrictions of the haluzah, the latter not being regarded as her agent or representative.

(59) Since she herself remains forbidden to the levir as 'brother's wife', her sister is not the 'sister of a haluzah'.

(60) She should be forbidden as the sister of a haluzah! As she is permitted, however, it must be granted that the rival of a haluzah remains under the original prohibition of 'brother's wife', which entails the penalty of kareth. (V. supra n. 5).

(61) The inference from our Mishnah. (V. supra n. 8 second clause).

(62) The levir who submitted to halizah.

(63) Supra 10b; while from the inference of our Mishnah, as has been proved, the penalty for contracting a union with the rival of a haluzah is kareth!

(64) R. Joseph's argument.

(65) As R. Joseph implies by his assumption that if the rival had the same status as the haluzah her sister would be forbidden.

(66) In the following Mishnah to which he refers.

(67) The reason why the sister of a rival of a haluzah is permitted is not that assumed by R. Joseph. but the following: As the prohibition of the sister of a haluzah herself is only Rabbinical, the prohibition was not extended to the sister of the rival of the haluzah also.

(68) The first and second case of the final clause of our Mishnah. THE RIVAL OF THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH is surely as much of a stranger to him as THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 41a

— The Rabbis have enacted a preventive measure¹ in respect of her who accompanies the haluzah to court;² in the case, however, of her who does not accompany her to court³ the Rabbis enacted no preventive measure.⁴

MISHNAH. WHERE HE PARTICIPATED IN A HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE, AND HIS BROTHER MARRIED HER SISTER AND DIED,⁵ THE WIDOW⁶ MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁷

SIMILARLY⁸ WHERE A MAN DIVORCED HIS WIFE AND HIS BROTHER MARRIED HER SISTER AND DIED⁵ THE WIDOW IS EXEMPT.⁹

HIS BROTHER HAS PARTICIPATED WITH THE WIDOW IN THE HALIZAH OR CONTRACTED WITH HER THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, HE MAY MARRY HIS [BETROTHED] WIFE. GEMARA. What [is meant by] SIMILARLY?¹⁴ — Read: BUT WHERE A MAN DIVORCED.

Resh Lakish said: Here¹⁵ it was taught by Rabbi¹⁶ that [the prohibition to marry the] sister of a divorced wife is pentateuchal [and that of] the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical.

HAD BETROTHED [THE SISTER OF THE] WIDOW WHO WAS AWAITING THE LEVIR'S DECISION etc. Samuel said: The halachah is in agreement with the view of R. Judah b. Bathyra.¹⁷

The question was raised: If his wife¹⁸ died may he marry his sister-in-law?¹⁹ — Both Rab and R. Hanina stated: If his wife died he is permitted to marry his sister-in-law. But both Samuel and R. Assi stated: If his wife died he is forbidden to marry his sister-in-law. Said Raba: What is Rab's reason? — Because she is a deceased brother's wife who was permitted²⁰ then forbidden²¹ and then again permitted²² and who consequently reverts to her first state of permissibility.

R. Hamnuna raised an objection: If two of three brothers were married to two sisters and the third was unmarried, and when one of the sisters' husbands died the unmarried brother addressed to the widow a ma'amar, and then the second brother²³ died,²⁴ and after him his wife also died,²⁵ that sister-in-law must perform halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage.²⁶ But why?²⁷ Let her be regarded²⁸ as a deceased brother's wife who was permitted²⁹ then forbidden,³⁰ and then again permitted²² who reverts to her former state of permissibility!³¹ He remained silent. After the other went out he said: I should have told³² him that it³³ represents the view of R. Eleazar who maintains that once she has been forbidden to him for one moment she is forbidden to him for ever! Subsequently he remarked: It might be contended that R. Eleazar held that view only where she was not fit³⁴ at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage;³⁵ did he express such an opinion, however, in the case where she was fit³⁴ at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage?³⁶ Subsequently however, he said: Yes,³⁷ for, surely, it was taught: R. Eleazar said: If his³⁸ yebamah died, his wife is permitted to him; if his wife died, that yebamah must perform halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage.

Must it then be assumed that Samuel and R. Assi are of the same opinion as R. Eleazar?³⁹ — The may be said to be in agreement even with the Rabbis. For the Rabbis differed from R. Eleazar⁴⁰ only because from the time she became subject to the levirate marriage and onward she was no longer forbidden to him.⁴¹ Here,⁴² however, where she was so forbidden⁴³ even the Rabbis agree.⁴⁴

MISHNAH. THE DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE⁴⁵ SHALL NEITHER PERFORM THE HALIZAH NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED.⁴⁶ SIMILARLY ALL OTHER WOMEN⁴⁷ SHALL BE NEITHER BETROTHED NOR MARRIED BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED⁴⁶ WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS, WHETHER DIVORCEES OR WIDOWS,⁴⁸ WHETHER MARRIED OR BETROTHED.

R. JUDAH SAID: THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED MAY BE BETROTHED [FORTHWITH], AND THOSE WHO WERE BETROTHED MAY EVEN BE MARRIED [FORTHWITH], WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THE BETROTHED WOMEN IN JUDEA, BECAUSE THERE THE BRIDEGROOM WAS TOO INTIMATE⁴⁹ WITH HIS BRIDE.⁵⁰

R. JOSE SAID: ALL [MARRIED] WOMEN⁵¹ MAY BE BETROTHED [FORTHWITH] EXCEPTING THE WIDOW⁵²

- (1) The prohibition to marry the rival of the relative of one's Haluzah.
- (2) I.e., her sister whom she takes with her to court when she goes to perform the halizah. The public, not being aware which of the sisters is the haluzah, might subsequently mistake the one for the other. Hence the rival of the sister was forbidden to the levir who participated in the halizah in order that people might not think that he married the rival of the haluzah herself.
- (3) The widow does not take her rival with her when she goes to court to perform halizah.
- (4) Since no one is likely to mistake the rival for the haluzah. Hence the law that the relative of the rival is permitted.
- (5) Without issue.
- (6) Being the sister of a haluzah.
- (7) The sister of a haluzah is (a) Pentateuchally permitted but (b) Rabbinically forbidden. Because of (a) she is subjected to the levirate bond and requires halizah, and because of (b) she is forbidden to contract the levirate marriage.
- (8) This expression is discussed in the Gemara infra.
- (9) From the halizah as well as from the levirate marriage. The sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchally forbidden to the divorcee.
- (10) With the consummation of the marriage.
- (11) I.e., until he had either contracted the levirate marriage or submitted to halizah. Before such action the sister of the widow is forbidden to him, as to all the other brothers, as the sister of their zekukah.
- (12) Being the only surviving brother and, consequently, the only one to whom the widow is subject.
- (13) Being the sister of his divorced wife she is not permitted to contract with him the levirate marriage. (Cf. supra p. 264, n. 11.
- (14) Seeing that the clause introduced by this expression is not at all similar to the previous one.
- (15) In the first two clauses of our Mishnah,
- (16) R. Judah the Prince, Redactor of the Mishnah.
- (17) That the levirate bond between the widow and all the surviving brothers remains in force until one of the brothers has contracted the levirate marriage or has submitted to halizah.
- (18) The sister of the widow of his deceased brother.
- (19) I.e., the widow whose deceased sister is now no more his wife.
- (20) When her husband died without issue.
- (21) When the brother had betrothed her sister.
- (22) When her sister died.
- (23) Of the two who married the two sisters.
- (24) And his widow, the sister of the first widow to whom the ma'amar had been addressed by the third brother, had thus come under the levirate bond and consequently caused her sister's prohibition to the third brother as 'the sister of his zekukah'.
- (25) When the first widow, the surviving sister, is no more the 'sister of his zekukah'.
- (26) Cf. supra 29a.
- (27) If Rab's reason as given by Raba is to be accepted, why should not the widow, now that her sister had died, be permitted to enter into levirate marriage?
- (28) On the analogy of Rab's reasoning.
- (29) When her husband died and the unmarried brother addressed a ma'amar to her.
- (30) When the second brother, the husband of the other sister, died.
- (31) Why then was it stated that she may not contract the levirate marriage and that she is restricted to halizah only?
- (32) Lit., 'why did I not tell'.
- (33) The Baraitha cited by R. Hamnuna.
- (34) To be married by the levir.
- (35) R. Eleazar's view was expressed in connection with a woman who had been divorced (and had thus become forbidden to the levir as the 'divorcee of his brother'), and then was remarried, and finally, on the death of her husband, became subject to the levir as the wife of his deceased childless brother (v. infra 108bf). In this case, when the widow became subject to the levirate obligations, she had been already, for a time, forbidden to the levir as the 'divorcee of his brother'.

(36) As is the case in the Baraita cited by R. Hamnuna. The prohibition there arose after she had become subject to the obligations of the levirate.

(37) I.e., R. Eleazar forbids levirate marriage for ever, if the widow was unfit for such a marriage for one single moment, even if at the time when she became subject to the levirate obligations she (the widow) was quite fit to contract the marriage.

(38) The levir's, who betrothed the sister of his yebamah.

(39) Who is in a minority, against that of the Rabbis. Would they agree with a minority against the ruling of the majority?

(40) In the case of a woman who had been divorced and then remarried and then became subject to the levirate obligation, infra 108b. Cf. supra p. 266, n. 16.

(41) The prohibition having ceased with the death of her husband when the obligation of the levirate had arisen.

(42) The case cited by R. Hamnuna.

(43) Because after she became subject to the levirate obligations he was for a time, owing to the death of his second brother, forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah.

(44) That only halizah must be performed, levirate marriage being forbidden.

(45) Whose husband died without issue, and who became subject to the levirate obligations.

(46) From the date of her husband's death. The reasons are discussed in the Gemara infra.

(47) Whose husbands have died.

(48) The distinctions between these classes are discussed in the Gemara.

(49) Lit., 'his heart is bold', and cohabitation might have taken place.

(50) Cf. Keth. 12a,

(51) Whose husbands have died.

(52) Who must allow a period of thirty days to pass.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 41b

OWING TO HER MOURNING.¹

GEMARA. It is quite reasonable that she² shall not be taken [forthwith] in levirate marriage, since the child [whom she might bear] may be viable,³ and the levir would thus infringe the prohibition of marrying a brother's wife, which is Pentateuchal; but why should she not [forthwith] perform the halizah?⁴ Does this,⁵ then, present an objection against R. Johanan who said that the halizah of a pregnant woman is deemed to be a valid halizah?⁶ But has not an objection against R. Johanan once been raised?⁷ — [The question is whether] it may be assumed that an objection arises from here also?⁸ — No; here, the reason⁹ is this: The child might be viable;¹⁰ and you would in consequence subject her to the need for an announcement¹¹ in respect of the priesthood.¹² Well, let her be subjected!¹³ — It may happen that some people would be present at the halizah but would not be present at the announcement, and they would consider her ineligible to marry a priest.

This quite satisfactorily explains the case of a widow; what can be said, however, in respect of a divorced woman?¹⁴ — Because she would thereby¹⁵ lose her maintenance.¹⁶ This provides a quite satisfactory explanation in the case of a married woman; what can be said, however, in respect of a betrothed divorcee?¹⁷ — The reason¹⁸ is rather the ruling of¹⁹ R. Jose. For it was taught: A man once appeared before R. Jose and said to him; 'May halizah be performed within three months'? The master replied, 'She must not perform the halizah'. — 'Let her perform the halizah! What would she lose'?²⁰ Thereupon he recited for him this Scriptural text: If the man like not,²¹ [implying] that if he likes he may contract the levirate marriage; whosoever may go up²² to contract the levirate marriage may also go up to perform the halizah etc.²³

R. Hinena raised an objection: In doubtful cases halizah is performed and no levirate marriage may be contracted. Now, what is meant by 'doubtful cases'? If it be assumed to mean doubtful betrothal;²⁴ why, indeed, should no levirate marriage be contracted? Let the widow be taken in levirate marriage since no objection could possibly be raised!²⁵ Consequently,²⁶ the doubt must consist in the betrothal of two sisters when the man is uncertain which of them he betrothed;²⁷ and yet it was stated that halizah was to be performed!²⁸ — How now! There,²⁹ if Elijah were to come and point out the sister that was betrothed, she would be eligible for both halizah and levirate marriage;³⁰ here,³¹ however, were Elijah to come and declare that the widow was not pregnant, would anyone heed him and allow her to contract the levirate marriage? Surely even a minor who is incapable of pregnancy must wait three months!³²

Our Rabbis taught: A yebamah³³ is maintained during the first three months out of the estate of her husband. Subsequently³⁴ she is not to be maintained either out of the estate of her husband or out of that of the levir. If, however, the levir appeared in court³⁵ and then absconded, she is maintained out of the estate of the levir. If she became subject to a levir who was a minor she receives nothing from the levir. Does she, however, [receive her maintenance] from her husband's estate? — On this question, R. Aha and Rabina are in dispute. One holds that she receives and the other holds that she does not. And the law is that she receives nothing; for her penalty comes from heaven.

Our Rabbis learned: A yebamah,³⁶ with whom the brothers had participated in halizah within the three months, must wait three months.³⁷

- (1) Which terminates on the thirtieth day.
 - (2) The deceased brother's wife spoken of in our Mishnah.
 - (3) And the levirate obligations would thereby be removed.
 - (4) Marriage with an outsider could thus take place after three months, if she is found to be without child or if she miscarried.
 - (5) The implication that halizah is forbidden because it is possible that the woman will miscarry after the ceremony and, believing the halizah to have been valid, would remarry without performing the ceremony again while, in fact, the law is that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not valid.
 - (6) Supra 35b.
 - (7) V. n. 11; why then doubt it?
 - (8) So that if the first objection should ever be removed the second would still remain.
 - (9) Why halizah also must be postponed until three months have passed.
 - (10) And his birth would render the halizah invalid, and his mother would consequently be permitted to marry a priest whom, as a haluzah, she would not have been allowed to marry.
 - (11) That the halizah was invalid and that the widow is eligible to marry a priest.
 - (12) V. p. 268 n. 15.
 - (13) To the necessary announcement. What loss could such an announcement cause her?
 - (14) I.e., who had been a divorcee prior to her marriage with the deceased brother. Having been divorced once, she is forever ineligible to marry a priest, even though she were no haluzah. Why, then, should she be forbidden to perform the halizah forthwith?
 - (15) By performing the halizah before the three months have passed.
 - (16) Which she receives from her deceased husband's estate for a period of three months. This would cease with the performance of the halizah. [On this view the Mishnah does not state a prohibition but a piece of sound advice (Tosaf.)]
 - (17) A woman who has been betrothed whilst she was a divorcee and became a widow before the marriage took place. As a betrothed she is not entitled to maintenance from the dead man's estate, and as a divorcee she is not eligible to marry a priest. Why, then, should she not be allowed forthwith to perform the halizah?
 - (18) V. supra p. 268, n. 14.
 - (19) Lit., 'because of'.
 - (20) Lit., 'and what in it'.
 - (21) Deut. XXV, 7.
 - (22) Sc. to the gate (cf. loc. cit.) i.e., to court.
 - (23) 'And whosoever may not go up to contract the levirate marriage may not go up to perform the halizah' (v. supra 20a, 36a, infra 44a). Since the widow may not contract levirate marriage within three months, she may not perform halizah either. This, however, presents no objection to R. Johanan's ruling since, though it is improper to arrange a halizah within the three months, if halizah had actually taken place it is valid.

(24) Such as are dealt with in the Mishnah and subsequent Gemara supra 30b.

(25) Lit., 'and there is nothing in it'. If the widow's betrothal by the deceased was valid, the levirate marriage is also valid; and if it was not valid, the so-called widow is in reality an unmarried woman and may be married as a stranger.

(26) Lit., 'but not?'

(27) And he died without issue.

(28) Though no levirate marriage may be contracted owing to the doubt in the case of each sister that she might be the 'sister of a zekukah'. How, then, could it be said that halizah may be performed only where levirate marriage also is possible?

(29) Where it is uncertain which sister was betrothed.

(30) Each sister may consequently be regarded as virtually fit for the levirate marriage.

(31) A widow within the first three months after her husband's death.

(32) As levirate marriage is thus absolutely forbidden for the time being, the halizah also must be postponed until the time when levirate marriage would be permitted. [Where, however, the prohibition to contract levirate marriage is absolute, as, for example, in the case of a sister of a haluzah (supra 41a) halizah may be performed (Rashi).]

(33) Who awaits halizah or levirate marriage which is not to take place before three months have passed.

(34) Lit., 'from now and onwards'.

(35) In response to the widow's claim that he should contract levirate marriage or submit to halizah.

(36) V. p. 270, n. 10.

(37) Dating from her husband's death, and may contract marriage after that period.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 42a

If [the halizah was performed] after the three months, she need not wait three months.¹ Thus it may be inferred that the three months spoken of are [to be dated] from the time of the husband's death and not from the time of the levir's halizah.

Why [is the law here]² different from that of a letter of divorce where Rab maintains [that the waiting period is to date] from the time of the delivery³ and Samuel maintains [that it is to date] from the time of writing?⁴ — Raba replied: A minori ad majus, if you permitted marriage⁵ where a prohibition under the penalty of kareth is involved,⁶ how much more so [should marriage be permitted⁵ where only] an ordinary prohibition⁷ [is involved]!⁸

SIMILARLY ALL OTHER WOMEN. The case of a sister-in-law⁹ one can well understand, as has just been explained,¹⁰ but why ALL OTHER WOMEN?¹¹ — R. Nahman replied in the name of Samuel: Because Scripture said, To be a God unto thee and unto thy seed after thee,¹² a distinction must be made between the seed of the first husband and the seed of the second.

Raba raised an objection: Hence must a male proselyte and a female proselyte¹³ wait three months.¹⁴ Now, what distinction is there to be made here? — Here also there is the distinction to be made between seed that was sown in holiness and seed that was not sown in holiness.

Raba said: This¹⁵ is a preventive measure against the possibility of his¹⁶ marrying his paternal sister,¹⁷ contracting levirate marriage with the wife of his maternal brother,¹⁸ setting his mother free to marry anybody¹⁹ and releasing his sister-in-law to all the world.²⁰

R. Hanania raised an objection: In all these²¹ I read a provision against incest, but here²² it is a provision in favour of the child.²³ Now, if this²⁴ is tenable, all²⁵ would be due to a provision against incest! — The meaning of 'a provision in favour of the child' is that the child might not infringe a prohibition of incest'.²⁶

It is easy to understand why [a divorcee or widow] shall not marry after waiting a period of just two months because that would create a doubt as to whether the child is a nine-months one of the first²⁷ or a seven-months one of the second.²⁷ Let her wait, however, one month only and then marry, so that, should she give birth at seven months, the child would be a seven-months one of the last husband;²⁸ and should she give birth at eight months the child would obviously be a nine-months one of the first!²⁷ — Even if she gave birth at eight months it might still be assumed to be the child of the last husband since it may be that her conception was delayed one month.²⁹

Let her, then, wait two months and a half and marry, so that, were she to give birth at seven months, the child would obviously be a seven-months one of the last,²⁷ and were she to give birth at six months and a half, the child would naturally be a nine-months one of the first;³⁰ for had he been the son of the last he would not be viable as a six-and-a-half-months child. — Even if she gave birth at six and a half months it is still possible to assume the child to be that of the last husband, for Mar Zutra stated: Even according to him who said that a woman who bears at nine months does not give birth before the full number of months had been completed,³⁰ a woman who bears at seven months ‘does give birth before the full number of months has been completed;³⁰ for it is stated in Scripture, And it came to pass, after the cycles of days,’³¹ the minimum of ‘cycles’³² is two, and the minimum of ‘days’ is two.³³ Let her, then, wait a little³⁴ and marry, and when the three months³⁵ will have been fulfilled she might be examined!³⁶ — R. Safra replied: Married women are not examined, in order that they may not become repulsive to their husbands. Then let her be examined by her walk!³⁷ — Rami b. Mama replied: A woman conceals the fact³⁸ in order that her child may inherit his share in her [second] husband's estate. Where, however, it has been ascertained that she³⁹ was pregnant, let her be permitted to marry! Why then was it taught: A man shall not marry the pregnant, or nursing wife of another;⁴⁰ and if he married, he must divorce her and never again remarry her! — This⁴¹ is a preventive measure against the possibility of turning the foetus into a sandal.⁴² If so, [this should apply in the case] of one's own wife also!⁴³ — If according to him who said, ‘With an absorbent’,⁴⁴ she uses⁴⁵ an absorbent; and if according to him who said, ‘Mercy will be shewn from heaven’,⁴⁶ mercy will be shewn from heaven. Here also⁴⁷ [it could be argued]: If according to him who said, ‘With an absorbent’, she uses an absorbent; if according to him who said, ‘Mercy will be shewn from heaven’, mercy will be shewn from heaven! — [The prohibition]⁴⁸ is due, rather, to [the danger of abdominal] pressure.⁴⁹ If so, [this⁵⁰ applies in the case] of one's own wife also!⁵¹ — A man has consideration for his own.⁵² Here also⁵³ one would have consideration for the child!⁵⁴ — [The reason is]⁵⁵ rather because a pregnant woman is usually expected to breast-feed her child [and were she to marry during pregnancy] she might conceive again, her milk would become turbid, and she might thereby¹ cause the death of the child. If so, [this applies in the case] of the man's own child also! — His own child she would sustain with eggs and milk. Would she not sustain her own child also with eggs and with milk? — Her husband would not give her the means. Let her claim it² from the heirs!³ — Abaye replied: A woman would shrink from going to court⁴ and would rather let her child die.

WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS. Who are the VIRGINS and who are the BETROTHED?⁵ Who are NON-VIRGINS and who are MARRIED women?⁶ — Rab Judah replied, It is this that was meant: WHETHER VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS who became widows or were divorced⁷ either after betrothal or after marriage.⁸

R. Eleazar did not go one day⁹ to the Beth Hamidrash. On meeting R. Assi he asked him, 'What did the Rabbis discourse at the Beth Hamidrash?' The other replied 'Thus said R. Johanan: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose'.¹⁰ — Does this, then, imply that only individual opinion¹¹ is against him?¹² — Yes; and so it was taught: A [married woman] who was always anxious¹³ to spend her time¹⁴ at her paternal home,¹⁵ or who had some angry quarrel at her husband's home,¹⁶ or whose husband was in prison¹⁷ or was old or infirm,¹⁶ or who was herself infirm,¹⁸ or had miscarried after the death of her husband, or was barren, old, a minor, incapable of conception or in any other way incapacitated from procreation, must¹⁹ wait three months.²⁰ These are the words of R. Meir. R. Judah²¹ permits immediate betrothal and marriage.²²

R. Hiyya b. Abba said: R. Johanan retracted.²³ Said R. Joseph: If he retracted, he did so on account of what has been taught at the Vineyard.²⁴ For it was taught: R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: I heard from the mouth of the Sages in the Vineyard of Jabneh that all women must wait three months.²⁵

Said R. Jeremiah to R. Zerika: When you visit R. Abbahu point out to him the following contradiction: Could R. Johanan have said, 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose' seeing that he stated elsewhere 'the halachah is in agreement with the anonymous Mishnah',²⁶ and we learned, ALL OTHER WOMEN SHALL BE NEITHER MARRIED NOR BETROTHED BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED, WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS!²⁷ The other replied, 'The one who pointed out to you this contradiction did not care much for [the quality of] flour.'²⁸ This is an anonymous Mishnah that was followed by a dispute,²⁹ where the halachah does not agree with the anonymous Mishnah; for R. Papa or, some say, R. Johanan stated: When a disputed ruling is followed by an anonymous one,³⁰ the halachah is in agreement with the anonymous ruling; when, however, an anonymous ruling is followed by a dispute,³¹ the halachah is not in agreement with the anonymous ruling.

R. Abbahu once walked leaning upon the shoulder of his attendant,³² R. Nahum, whilst gathering from him information as to traditional rulings.³³ He inquired of him: What [is the halachah] where a dispute is followed by an anonymous statement? The other replied: The halachah is in agreement with the anonymous statement, 'What [is the halachah]', the first enquired, 'when] an anonymous statement is followed by a dispute'? The other replied: The halachah is not in agreement with the anonymous statement. 'What if the anonymous statement occurs in a Mishnah and the dispute in a Baraitha'? The other replied: The halachah is in agreement with the anonymous statement. 'What if the dispute is in the Mishnah and the anonymous statement in the Baraitha'? The other replied:

- (1) Since she would either feed him with contaminated milk or deprive him altogether of her breast milk.
- (2) The extra cost of the maintenance.
- (3) Of her first husband.
- (4) To litigate with the heirs.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 43a

If Rabbi¹ has not taught it,² whence would R. Hiyya³ know it! The first said to him: Surely we learned: A hackle for flax, whose teeth were broken off and two remained, is [susceptible to levitical] uncleanness, but [if only] one [tooth remained,⁴ it is levitically] clean.⁵ All the teeth, however, if they were removed one by one are individually [susceptible to levitical] uncleanness.⁶ A wool [comb] whose alternate teeth⁷ are broken off is levitically clean.⁸ If three consecutive⁹ teeth, however, remained, it is susceptible to levitical uncleanness. If one of these was a side tooth,¹⁰ [the comb] is levitically clean.¹¹ If two [teeth] were removed and someone used them as pincers, they are susceptible to levitical uncleanness. One [tooth also] that was adopted for [snuffing] the light,¹² or as a spool,¹³ is susceptible to levitical uncleanness.¹⁴ And we have it as a traditional ruling that the halachah is not in agreement with this Mishnah!¹⁵ — The other replied, ‘With the exception of this;¹⁶ for both R. Johanan and Resh Lakish stated: This is not [an authoritative] Mishnah’.

What is the reason? — R. Huna b. Manoah replied in the name of R. Idi son of R. Ika: Because the first clause is in contradiction to the second one. For at first it was stated that ‘a wool comb whose alternate teeth are missing is levitically clean’ from which it follows that if two consecutive teeth did remain it would be susceptible to uncleanness, while immediately afterwards it was stated, ‘If three consecutive teeth, however, remained it is susceptible to levitical uncleanness’ from which it follows that only three but not two! — What difficulty is this? It is possible that one¹⁷ refers to the internal,¹⁸ and the other¹⁹ the external teeth!²⁰

The contradiction, however, arises from the following:²¹ It was taught first, ‘all the teeth, however, if they were removed one by one are individually susceptible to levitical uncleanness’ [implying], even though each tooth was not adapted [for the purpose] . Now read the final clause: ‘One tooth that was adapted for snuffing the light, or as a spool, is susceptible to levitical uncleanness’, [implying,] only when he adapted it but not when he did not adapt it! — Abaye replied: What is the difficulty? It is possible that the one [refers to a tooth] with a handle²² and the other [to a tooth] without a handle! R. Papa replied: What is the difficulty? It is possible that the one refers to small,²³ and the other to thick teeth.²⁴ [The reason]²⁵ is rather because accurate scholars add this conclusion: ‘These are the words of R. Simeon’.²⁶

R. Hiyya b. Abin sent the following message: Betrothal may take place within the three months, and the practice [of the Sages]²⁷ is also in accordance with this ruling. And R. Eleazar, too, taught us the same law in the name of R. Hanina the Great: The greater part of the first month, the greater part of the third one, and the full middle month.²⁸

Amemar permitted betrothal on the ninetieth day.²⁹ Said R. Ashi to Amemar: But, surely, both Rab and Samuel stated that the widow must wait three months exclusive of the day on which her husband died and exclusive of the day of her betrothal! — This ruling was stated in connection with a nursing mother; for both Rab and Samuel stated: She must wait twenty-four exclusive of the day on which the child was born and exclusive of the day of her betrothal.³⁰ Did not, however, a man once arrange a betrothal feast on the ninetieth days³¹ and Raba spoilt his feast!³² — That was a wedding feast.

The law is that [a nursing mother] must wait twenty-four months, exclusive of the day on which the child was born and exclusive of the day on which she is to be betrothed. Similarly. One [who is not a nursing mother] must wait three months, exclusive of the day on which her husband died and exclusive of the day on which she is to be betrothed.

EXCEPTING THE WIDOW etc. R. Hisda said: [Cannot the law³³ be deduced by inference] from major to minor?³⁴ If when washing of clothes is forbidden,³⁵ betrothal is permitted, how much more should betrothal be permitted when the washing of clothes is permitted!³⁶ What is it?³⁷ — We learned: During the week in which the Ninth of Ab occurs it is forbidden to cut the hair and to wash clothes. On the Thursday, however, this is permitted in honour of the Sabbath.³⁸ And [in connection with this Mishnah] it was taught: Before this time³⁹ the public must restrict their activities in commerce, building and plantings but it is permissible to betroth though not to marry, nor may any betrothal feast be held!⁴⁰ — That was taught in respect of the period before that time.⁴¹ Said Raba, Even in respect of the ‘period before that time’⁴² [the law might be arrived at by inference from] major to minor: If where it is forbidden to trade it is permitted to betroth, how much more should betrothal be permitted where trade also is permitted! — Do not read, R. JOSE SAID: ALL [MARRIED] WOMEN⁴³ MAY BE BETROTHED but read, ‘ALL MARRIED WOMEN⁴³ may be married’.⁴⁴

 - (19) The final clause, implying that if only two teeth remained the comb is no more susceptible to uncleanness.
 - (20) Two of which are useless. A wool comb had two sets of teeth, external and internal. The former were used for the main work, and no less than three were required. The latter served only the purpose of holding up the wool, and two of these were quite sufficient for that purpose. It should be noted that the ‘side tooth’ mentioned in the Baraitha does not refer to these but to the first or last tooth of the row (v. supra p. 278, n. 7).

(37) I.e., where does the law concerning washing and betrothal occur.

(38) Ta'an. 26b.

(39) This is now assumed to mean, before the Ninth of Ab and during the week in which the fast occurs.

(40) Which shews that betrothal is permitted even when washing of clothes is forbidden. How, then, could R. Jose forbid betrothal where even washing was permitted? (V. supra note 7).

(41) Lit., 'before of before', prior to the week in which the fast occurs, when washing also is permitted. During the week itself, however, betrothal as well as washing is forbidden.

(42) V. supra p. 280, n. 12.

(43) Whose husbands died.

(44) R. Jose's disagreement with R. Judah has no bearing on the question of marriage during mourning on which R. Judah and R. Jose are in agreement, the former also admitting that no marriage may be celebrated during the mourning period. R. Jose's disagreement relates to the general question of the remarriage of a married woman within three months after her husband died (or divorced her). While R. Judah permits a married woman within three months betrothal only, but not marriage, R. Jose permits marriage also.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 43b

Does not R. Jose, then, hold the view that it is necessary to make a distinction?¹ — If you wish I might say² that he does not. And if you prefer I might say that he does, in fact, hold [this view],³ but read, 'R. Jose said: All betrothed women who were divorced may be married'.⁴ If so, it⁵ is the same view as that of R. Judah!⁶ — The point at issue between them is the question of the betrothal⁷ of a married woman. R. Judah maintains that a married woman may be betrothed,⁷ while R. Jose maintains that a married woman may not be betrothed.⁷ But is R. Jose of the opinion that a married woman is forbidden betrothal?⁷ Surely it was taught, 'R. Jose said: All women⁸ may be betrothed,⁷ excepting the widow, owing to her mourning. And how long does her mourning continue? Thirty days. And all these must not marry before three months have passed'! — What an objection is this!⁹ If it be argued: Because it was stated, 'R. Jose said: All women may be betrothed', is this [it may be retorted] of greater force than our Mishnah? As that was interpreted to mean that 'betrothed women who were divorced may be married' so here also [it might be interpreted to mean], 'All betrothed women who were divorced may be married'! — [The objection,] however, [arises from] the final clause where it was stated, 'And all these must not marry before three months have passed', [implying that] only marriage is forbidden to them but they may well be betrothed!¹⁰ — Raba replied: Explain and reconstruct it¹¹ as follows:¹² R. Jose said: Betrothed women who were divorced may be married, excepting the widow owing to her mourning. And how long does her mourning continue? Thirty days. And married women may not be betrothed before three months have passed.¹³ But is any mourning to be observed by an erusin¹⁴ widow? Surely R. Hiyya b. Ammi taught: In the case of a betrothed wife,¹⁵ the husband is neither subject to the laws of onan¹⁶ nor may he defile himself¹⁷ for her;¹⁸ and she, [in his case,] is likewise not subject to the laws of onan¹⁶ nor may she defile herself for him;¹⁹ if she dies he does not inherit from her, though if he dies she collects her kethubah!²⁰ — The fact, however, is that this²¹ is a question in dispute between²² Tannaim. For it was taught: From the first day of the month²³ until the fast,²⁴ the public must restrict their activities in trade, building and planting, and no betrothals or marriages may take place.²⁵ During the week in which the Ninth of Ab occurs it is forbidden to cut the hair, to wash clothes;²⁶ and others say that this is forbidden during the entire month.²⁷ R. Ashi demurred: Whence is it proved that betrothal means actual betrothal! Is it not possible that it is only forbidden to give²⁸ a betrothal feast but that betrothal itself is permitted?²⁹ — If so, does 'no marriage may take place' also mean that the giving of a wedding feast is forbidden but marriage itself is permitted! — How now! In the case of a marriage without a feast there is still sufficient rejoicing;³⁰ in the case of betrothal, however, is there any rejoicing when no feast is held?³¹ The fact is, said R. Ashi, that recent mourning³² is different from ancient mourning,³³ and public mourning³³ is different from private mourning.³⁴ MISHNAH. WHERE FOUR BROTHERS WHO WERE MARRIED TO FOUR WOMEN DIED, THE ELDEST³⁵ MAY, IF HE DESIRES, CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH ALL OF THEM.

WHERE A MAN WHO WAS MARRIED TO TWO WOMEN DIED, COHABITATION OR HALIZAH WITH ONE OF THEM EXEMPTS HER RIVAL.

- (1) Between a child of the first, and one of the second husband. (V. supra 42a). If he does, how could he permit marriage within the three months?
- (2) V. Bah a.l. Wanting in cur. edd.
- (3) He admits the necessity for a distinction between the children of the two husbands.
- (4) Forthwith. In such cases the question of pregnancy does not arise. Hence, immediate marriage is permitted except in the case of mourning (v. our Mishnah final clause).
- (5) R. Jose's view.
- (6) Who stated, THOSE WHO WERE BETROTHED MAY EVEN BE MARRIED FORTHWITH.
- (7) Forthwith.
- (8) Even married women.
- (9) The point of the objection is explained infra.
- (10) How, then, could R. Jose say here that betrothal is forbidden.
- (11) The second Baraitha cited.
- (12) Lit., 'and say thus'.
- (13) R. Jose in the Baraitha, in thus forbidding betrothal, advances the same opinion as R. Jose in our Mishnah in accordance with the interpretation supra.
- (14) V. Glos.
- (15) Before her marriage has taken place.
- (16) A mourner for certain relatives prior to their burial (v. Glos.) who is subject to a number of restrictions.
- (17) If he is a priest who is forbidden to come in contact with dead bodies except those of very near relatives among whom a wife is included. Aliter: 'nor need he defile himself'; v. supra 29b.
- (18) A 'betrothed wife' not being regarded as being as near of kin as a married wife.
- (19) During a festival when Israelites and women (and not only priests) are forbidden to attend on a dead body (unless they are engaged in its burial) if they are not near relatives (cf. R.H. 16b). Others render, 'nor need she . . . him'. (V. Rashi a.l. and Tosaf. supra 29b s.v.).
- (20) V. Glos. in a case where the document was given to her at the betrothal. Supra 29b, B.M. 18a, Keth. 53a. The reference in the Mishnah hence cannot be to an erusin widow but to the prohibition of the betrothal of a widow within thirty days, which brings us back to the original question of R. Hisda.
- (21) Whether betrothal is forbidden or permitted before the Fast of Ab.
- (22) Lit., 'but it'.
- (23) Of Ab.
- (24) On the ninth of the month.
- (25) Ta'an. 26b.
- (26) Cut. edd. insert in parentheses, 'and it is forbidden to betroth'.
- (27) Ta'an. 29b. The Tanna of this Baraitha thus forbids betrothal before the Ninth of Ab though the Tanna of the Baraitha previously cited (supra 43a) permits it. The objection against R. Jose raised by R. Hisda from the first Baraitha is, therefore, untenable, since R. Jose may disagree with that Tanna and follow the view of the one in the second Baraitha, who forbids betrothal. R. Jose's statement in our Mishnah may consequently be read and interpreted as originally assumed, viz., that ALL (MARRIED) WOMEN MAY BE BETROTHED, the point at issue between him and R. Judah being the question of mourning during which in the opinion of the first betrothal is, and in the opinion of the latter is not forbidden.
- (28) Lit., 'to make'.
- (29) Cf. infra note 10.
- (30) Hence it is quite conceivable that marriage, even though no wedding feast is held, should be forbidden.
- (31) It is quite possible, therefore, that the 'betrothal' forbidden is only one celebrated with the holding of a festive meal, while betrothal alone is permitted. The second Baraitha would thus be in agreement with the first. How, then, could R. Jose, contrary to the rulings of the two Baraithas maintain that betrothal during mourning is forbidden?

(32) After a personal bereavement.

(33) That before the Fast of Ab in commemoration of historical events.

(34) Personal and recent grief is more poignant, and is subject to more stringent regulations than those of public mourning which is less rigid. Hence there need be no contradiction between R. Jose's ruling concerning the prohibition of betrothal during the widow's personal mourning and the permission of betrothal in the Baraithas which speak of public mourning. Consequently the assumption that the two Baraithas are in disagreement and that R. Jose follows the latter is no longer necessary. Both Baraithas, in fact, may permit betrothal before the Fast of Ab, and R. Jose also may share the same view.

(35) Surviving brother; v. Gemara.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 44a

IF ONE OF THESE, HOWEVER, WAS ELIGIBLE¹ AND THE OTHER INELIGIBLE,¹ THEN IF HE² SUBMITS TO HALIZAH IT MUST BE FROM HER WHO IS INELIGIBLE,³ AND IF HE CONTRACTS LEVIRATE MARRIAGE IT MAY BE EVEN WITH HER WHO IS ELIGIBLE.

GEMARA. FOUR BROTHERS? Is this conceivable!⁴ — Read, FOUR of the BROTHERS.

MAY. And is he allowed?⁵ Surely it was taught: Then the elder's of his city shall call him,⁶ 'they' but not their representative; 'and speak unto him'⁶ teaches that he is given suitable advice. If he,² for instance, was young and she⁷ old, or if he was old and she was young, he is told, 'What would you with⁸ a young woman'? or 'What would you with an old woman'? 'Go to one who is [of the same age] as yourself and create no strife in your house'⁹ — This is applicable to that case only where he can afford it.¹⁰ If so, even more wives also!¹¹ — Sound advice was given: Only four but no more, so that each may receive one marital visit a month.¹²

WHERE A MAN WHO WAS MARRIED etc. Let him contract levirate marriage with both! — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture stated, That doth not build up his brother's house,¹³ he builds one house¹⁴ but does not build two houses. Then let him submit to halizah from both of them! — Mar Zutra b. Tobia replied: Scripture stated, The house of him who had his shoe drawn off,¹⁵ he submits to the drawing off of the shoe in respect of one house but must not submit to the drawing off of the shoe in respect of two houses. Then let him submit to halizah¹⁶ from one and contract levirate marriage with the other! — Scripture stated, That doth not build,¹⁷ as he has not built¹⁸ he must never again build. Then let him contract levirate marriage with one and submit to halizah from the other! — Scripture states, If he like not,¹⁹ if, however, he liked, he may contract levirate marriage; whosoever may go up²⁰ to contract levirate marriage, may also go up to perform halizah and whosoever may not go up¹⁷ to contract levirate marriage²¹ may not go up to perform halizah. Furthermore, in order that it be not said that the same house²² is partially 'built' and partially 'drawn off'. But let them say! — If he had first contracted levirate marriage and then submitted to halizah this would have been so indeed;²³ it is possible, however, that he may submit to halizah and subsequently contract levirate marriage and thus place himself under the prohibition of that doth not build.²⁴

Might it be suggested that where there is only one,²⁵ the law of the levirate marriage shall be observed, but that where there are two, the law of levirate marriage shall not be observed! — If so, what need was there for the All Merciful to prohibit marriage with the rival of a forbidden relative? If any two rivals, it has been said, are not both subject to halizah and the levirate marriage, was there any need [to mention the exemption of] a rival of a forbidden relative! Why not? It is certainly needed! For it might have been assumed that the forbidden relative stands excluded, and her rival may, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage, hence it was taught that she also was forbidden! — But in fact [this is the proper explanation:] The repetition of his brother's wife²⁶ widened the scope.²⁷

IF ONE OF THEM, HOWEVER, WAS ELIGIBLE. Said R. Joseph: Here²⁸ it was taught by Rabbi²⁹ that a man should not pour the water out of his cistern while others may require it.³⁰

MISHNAH. A MAN WHO REMARRIED HIS DIVORCED WIFE,³¹ OR MARRIED HIS HALUZH, OR MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZH MUST DIVORCE HER, AND THE CHILD³² IS A BASTARD; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. AKIBA. BUT THE SAGES SAID: THE CHILD IS NOT A BASTARD. THEY AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT WHERE A MAN MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE THE CHILD³² IS A BASTARD.

GEMARA. Does R. Akiba hold the view that the child of a man who MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZH is a bastard? Surely Resh Lakish stated: Here³³ it was taught by Rabbi³⁴ [that the prohibition to marry] the sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchal and that that of the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical!³⁵ — Read,³⁶ THE RELATIVE OF HIS divorcee. This view may also logically be supported. For it was stated in the final clause, THEY AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT WHEN A MAN MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE THE CHILD IS A BASTARD. Now, if you grant that her case³⁷ was under discussion one can well see the reason why the expression of THEY AGREE had been used; if you contend, however, that her case³⁷ was not under discussion what is the purport of THEY AGREE?³⁸

Is it not possible that we were informed³⁹ that the [offspring of a union] of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth is a bastard?⁴⁰ — This surely is taught below: ‘Who is a bastard? [The offspring of a union with] any consanguineous relative with whom cohabitation is forbidden; so R. Akiba. Simeon⁴¹ the Temanite said: [The offspring of any union] the penalty for which is kareth at the hands of heaven. And the halachah is in agreement with his view.⁴² But is it not possible that the Tanna⁴³ intended to indicate by his anonymous statement that the halachah is according to Simeon⁴¹ the Temanite?⁴⁴ — If so, he should have stated, ‘Others who are subject to the penalty of kareth’, why then [specify] THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE? Consequently it must be inferred that this case⁴⁵ was under discussion. But is it not indeed possible to maintain that it⁴⁵ was not under discussion, but because THE MAN WHO REMARRIED HIS DIVORCED WIFE OR MARRIED HIS HALUZH OR THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZH was spoken of,⁴⁶ he also introduced THE RELATIVE OF his divorcee’?⁴⁷

Would consequently [the offspring of a union with] the RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZH, according to R. Akiba,⁴⁸ be a bastard!⁴⁹ — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan, This is R. Akiba's reason: Because Scripture stated, The house of him that had his shoe drawn off,⁵⁰ Scripture thus called it his house.⁵¹

R. Joseph stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Rabbi: All agree that, where a man remarried his divorced wife,

(1) To marry a priest. V. Lev. XXI, 7.

(2) The levir.

(3) So that the halizah shall not disqualify the eligible widow from marrying a priest.

(4) If there were only four brothers and all of them died, how could levirate marriage take place?

(5) To marry four wives.

(6) Deut. XXV, 8.

(7) The widow, his sister-in-law.

(8) Lit., ‘what to thee at’.

(9) Infra 101b. Similarly in the case of our Mishnah also the levir should have been advised not to undertake the responsibility of maintaining four wives.

(10) When he possesses the means.

(11) Should be allowed. Why then were FOUR only mentioned.

- (12) Once a week, on Friday evenings, is the time when scholars in moderate health should pay their marital visits (Keth 62b). More than four wives would reduce each one's visits to less than one per month.
- (13) Deut. XXV, 9: emphasis on 'house' (sing.).
- (14) I.e., marries one widow.
- (15) E.V., loosed, ibid. 10, emphasis on 'house'.
- (16) For this insertion v. Bah a.l.
- (17) Ibid. 9, emphasis on 'not build'.
- (18) I.e., did not contract levirate marriage.
- (19) Ibid. 7.
- (20) Sc. to the gale (ibid.), i.e., the court.
- (21) As is the case with the rival who may not contract levirate marriage, for the reason given supra, 'he builds one house but does not build two houses'.
- (22) Of the one brother.
- (23) What people might say about 'partially built' etc. would not have mattered.
- (24) V. supra note 5, 'as he has not built he must never again build'.
- (25) Widow.
- (26) Deut. XXV, 7.
- (27) Indicating that even where there are two rivals the precept of levirate marriage is to be observed.
- (28) By the instruction that halizah is to be performed by the ineligible, and not by the eligible widow.
- (29) R. Judah the Prince, Redactor of the Mishnah.
- (30) Though the levir himself would lose nothing by disqualifying the widow from marriage with a priest, he must not be the cause of her disqualification out of consideration for a priest who might wish to marry her.
- (31) After she had been married to another man.
- (32) The offspring of any such union.
- (33) In the Mishnah supra 41a to which Resh Lakish refers.
- (34) The Redactor of the Mishnah.
- (35) Supra 40b, 41a. The offspring of a union that is only Rabbinically forbidden would not be a bastard.
- (36) In R. Akiba's statement in our Mishnah.
- (37) That of the relative of a divorcee.
- (38) One does not AGREE in respect of a case that never was in dispute!
- (39) By the use of the expression AGREE.
- (40) I.e., the Rabbis AGREE in this case because it involves kareth, though they maintain that the offspring of those who are subject to the penalty of flogging only is not a bastard, AGREE would consequently provide no proof that R. Akiba spoke of the relative of a divorcee!
- (41) Cur. edd. add 'R'.
- (42) Infra 49a. The halachah must obviously be in agreement with the Rabbis who form the majority. Consequently there was no need for the Rabbis to state the same halachah in our Mishnah also. THEY AGREE must, therefore, imply that R. Akiba also spoke of the relative of a divorcee.
- (43) Of our Mishnah.
- (44) Hence the repetition in Our Mishnah of the one infra 49a. Cf. supra n. 5 second clause.
- (45) The case of the relative of one's divorcee.
- (46) And on which the Rabbis disagreed with R. Akiba. In the case of the RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH, however, R. Akiba, it might still be contended, regards the child as a bastard.
- (47) In whose case the Rabbis agree with R. Akiba.
- (48) Since the expression RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH in R. Akiba's statement is not amended to 'RELATIVE OF HIS divorcee'.
- (49) On what ground could R. Akiba maintain such an opinion?
- (50) Deut. XXV, 10.
- (51) The relative of a haluzah, according to R. Akiba, is consequently, like that of a divorcee, forbidden Pentateuchally. The offspring of a union with such a relative is, therefore, a bastard.

the child¹ is tainted in respect of the priesthood.² Who [is meant by] 'All agree'? — Simeon the Temanite. For although Simeon the Temanite stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging is not a bastard, he agrees that, though he is not a bastard, he is nevertheless tainted.³ This is deduced a minori ad majus from the case of a widow: If in the case of a widow married to a High Priest, the prohibition of whom is not applicable to all,⁴ her son¹ is tainted,³ how much more should the son of a divorcee be tainted, whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.⁵ [This argument, however], may be refuted: A widow's case may well be different⁶ because she herself becomes profaned and;⁷ and, furthermore, it is written in Scripture, She is an abomination,⁸ 'she'⁹ only is an abomination but her children are not an abomination. — Furthermore, it was taught: Where a man remarried his divorced wife, or married his haluzah, or married the relative of his haluzah, R. Akiba said, his betrothal of her is not valid,¹⁰ she requires no divorce from him, she is disqualified,¹¹ her child is disqualified,¹² and the man is compelled to divorce her. And the Sages said: His betrothal of her is valid, she requires a divorce from the man, she is fit, and her child is fit. Now, in respect of what?¹³ Obviously in respect of the priesthood!¹⁴ — No; in respect of entering the congregation.¹³

If so, in respect of whom is she¹⁵ fit? If it be suggested 'in respect of entering the congregation', is not this [it may be retorted] obvious? Has she become ineligible to enter the congregation because she played the harlot!¹⁶ Consequently it must mean in respect of the priesthood. Now, since she is [untainted] in respect of the priesthood, her child also must be [untainted] in respect of the priesthood!¹⁴ — Is this an argument? The same term may bear different interpretations in harmony with its respective subjects.¹⁷ This¹⁸ is also logically sound. For in the first clause¹⁹ it was stated, 'She is disqualified and her child is disqualified'. Now, in respect of what is 'she disqualified'? If it be suggested, 'in respect of entry into the congregation', does she [it may be retorted] become disqualified for entry into the congregation because she played the harlot!²⁰ Consequently it must mean 'in respect of the priesthood!' Now, again, in respect of what is 'her child disqualified'? If it be suggested, 'in respect of the priesthood' thus implying that he is permitted to enter the congregation, surely [it may be objected] R. Akiba stated that the child is a bastard!²¹ Obviously then 'in respect of entry into the congregation'.²² And, as in the first clause the same term bears different interpretations in harmony with its respective subjects, so may the same term in the final clause bear different interpretations in agreement with its respective subjects.²³ Also as to the expression²⁴, This is an abomination it [may be interpreted]: 'She is an abomination but her rival is no abomination'.²⁵ Her children, however, are an abomination.²⁶

The objection, however, from the 'widow' [still remains, thus]: 'A widow's case may well be different²⁷ because she herself becomes²⁸ profaned'²⁹ — But [the fact is that] if any statement was made³⁰ it was as follows:³¹ R. Joseph stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Rabbi, 'All agree that where a man cohabited with any of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth³² the child³³ is tainted'.³⁴ Who [is referred to by] 'All agree'? — R. Joshua. For although R. Joshua stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of kareth is not a bastard, he agrees that, though he is no bastard, he is nevertheless tainted.³⁵ This is deduced a minori ad majus from the case of a widow: If in the case of a widow married to a High Priest, the prohibition of whom is not applicable to all,³⁶ her son³⁷ is tainted,³⁵ how much more should the son of this woman be tainted whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.³⁸

And were you to object: A widow's case may be different³⁹ because she herself becomes profaned,⁴⁰ [it may be retorted that], here also, as soon as the man had any connubial relations with her he stamped her as a harlot.⁴¹

Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: All agree that where a slave or an idolater had intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite the child is a bastard. Who is meant by 'All agree'? —

Simeon the Temanite. For although Simeon the Temanite stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging is not a bastard, his statement applies only

(1) The offspring of such a union.

(2) פגום defective, inferior (in status). If a male he is disqualified from the priesthood: and if a female she is ineligible to marry a priest. [Rashi reads simply: 'the child is tainted', so MS.M.]

(3) And disqualified for the priesthood.

(4) A widow is forbidden to a High Priest only, but not to an ordinary priest or an Israelite.

(5) No one, priest or Israelite, may remarry his divorced wife after she had been married to another man.

(6) I.e., her son may indeed be tainted.

(7) Having once married a High Priest unlawfully, she may not marry after his death even an ordinary priest (v. Kid. 77a), and if she is a priest's daughter she loses her privilege to eat terumah (v. infra 68a). In the case of a remarried divorcee these restrictions do not apply, since she is permitted to eat terumah if she is a priest's daughter (v. infra 69a) while her prohibition to marry a priest is not due to her remarriage, but to her previous divorce.

(8) Deut. XXIV, 4.

(9) ה"י rendered by E.V., it; lit, 'she', is taken to refer to the woman. The Talmudic text here is not very clear. (V. supra 11b for a smoother text and further notes, and cf. Bah a.l.).

(10) Unions subject to the penalty of flogging are in his opinion invalid.

(11) May not marry a priest.

(12) Being deemed a bastard.

(13) Is the child regarded as fit. I.e. fit to marry a proper Israelite; v, Deut. XXIII, 1ff.

(14) Which is contrary to the conclusion arrived at by the argument a minori ad majus!

(15) The remarried divorcee.

(16) I.e., contracted a forbidden marriage.

(17) Lit., 'that as it is and that etc.'. The term 'untainted' in the case of the woman may have reference to priesthood, but in the case of the child it may refer to entry into the congregation; while in respect of the priesthood the child may well be regarded as tainted.

(18) The thesis that the interpretation of the same term may vary in harmony with its respective subjects though both appear in the same context.

(19) Of the cited Baraita.

(20) I.e., contracted a forbidden marriage.

(21) Who may not enter into the congregation. (V. Deut. XXIII, 3).

(22) Although the same term, in the same context, when applied to the mother, referred to the priesthood.

(23) V. supra p. 289. n. 10, for lit. meaning.

(24) From which it has been sought to prove supra that the inference from the case of a widow married to a High Priest cannot be upheld.

(25) I.e., the exclusion refers to her rival who may contract levirate marriage.

(26) I.e., disqualified from the priesthood. as has been inferred supra.

(27) I.e., her son may indeed be tainted.

(28) V. supra p. 288, n. 13.

(29) Which leads to the conclusion that no inference a minori ad majus may be drawn from the case of the widow. How, then, could R. Joseph state in the name of R. Simeon, supra, that all agree that the child is disqualified?

(30) By R. Joseph in the name of R. Simeon, on the subject under discussion.

(31) Lit., 'thus it was said'.

(32) For that cohabitation.

(33) The offspring of such a union.

(34) V. supra p. 282, no. 8ff.

(35) And disqualified for the priesthood.

(36) A widow is forbidden to a High Priest only, but not to an ordinary priest or Israelite.

(37) The offspring of such a union.

(38) No one, priest or Israelite, may remarry his divorced wife after she had been married to another man.

(39) I.e., her son may indeed be tainted.

(40) V. supra p. 288, n. 13.

(41) Because of the forbidden union, and she, like the widow who was married to a High Priest, is in consequence forbidden to marry even a common priest.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 45a

to the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging, since the betrothal in such a case is valid¹ but here, in the case of an idolater and a slave, since betrothal in their case is invalid,² they are like those whose union is subject to the penalty of kareth.³

An objection was raised: If a slave or an idolater had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard. R. Simeon b. Judah said: A bastard is only he who [is the offspring of a union which] is forbidden as incest and is punishable by kareth!⁴ — No, said R. Joseph, who [is referred to by] 'all cable only according to the view of R. Akiba who regards a haluzah as a forbidden relative',⁵ while he himself does not share the same view,⁶ he agrees⁷ in the case of an idolater and a slave. For when R. Dimi came⁸ he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abudimi in the name of our Master,⁹ 'If an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard'.

R. Aha, the governor of the castle,¹⁰ and R. Tanhum son of R. Hiyya of Kefar Acco¹¹ once redeemed some captives who were brought from Armon to Tiberias,¹² [Among these] was one who had become pregnant from an idolater. When they came before R. Ammi he told them: It was R. Johanan and R. Eleazar and R. Hanina who stated that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child born is a bastard.

Said R. Joseph: Is it a great thing to enumerate persons?¹³ Surely it was Rab and Samuel in Babylon and R. Joshua b. Levi and Bar Kappara in the Land of Israel — (others say, 'Bar Kappara' is to be altered to¹⁴ the 'Elders of the South')¹⁵ — who stated that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite, the child born is untainted! — No, said R. Joseph, it¹⁶ is [the opinion of] Rabbi.¹⁷ For when R. Dimi came⁸ he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abudimi that it was reported in the name of our Masters that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard.

R. Joshua b. Levi said: The child¹⁸ is tainted. In respect of what?¹⁹ If it be suggested in respect of entry into the congregation, surely [it may be retorted] R. Joshua b. Levi stated that the child was fit! It must be then in respect of the priesthood;¹⁹ for all Amoraim who declare the child¹⁸ fit admit that he is ineligible for the priesthood.²⁰ This is inferred by deduction from the case of a widow a minori ad majus. If in the case of a widow who was married to a High priest whose prohibition is not equally applicable to all²¹ her son²² is tainted,²³ how much more should the son of this woman²⁴ be tainted whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.²⁵ The case of a widow who was married to a High Priest may be different, since she herself becomes profaned!²⁶ — Here also,²⁷ as soon as cohabitation occurred the woman is disqualified;²⁸ for R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Simeon:²⁹ Whence is it inferred that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of a priest, of a Levite or of an Israelite, he disqualified her?³⁰ It was stated But if a priest's daughter be a widow, or divorcee;³¹ Only in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood or divorce is applicable;³² an idolater and a slave are consequently excluded since in relation to them no widowhood or divorce is applicable.³³

Said Abaye to him:³⁴ What reason do you see for relying upon R. Dimi?³⁵ Rely rather on Rabin!³⁶ For when Rabin came³⁷ he reported that R. Nathan and R. Judah the Prince ruled that such a child is legitimate;³⁸ and³⁹ R. Judah the Prince is, of course, Rabbi!

And Rab also ruled that the child is legitimate.⁴⁰ For once a man⁴¹ appeared before Rab and asked him, 'What [is the legal position of the child] where an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite?' 'The child is legitimate', the Master replied. 'Give me then your daughter' said the man. 'I will not give her to you' [was the Master's reply]. Said Shimi b. Hiyya to Rab. 'People say that in Media⁴² a camel can dance on a kab;⁴³ here is the kab, here is the camel and here is Media, but there is no dancing'!⁴⁴ 'Had he been⁴⁵ equal to Joshua the son of Nun I would not have given him my daughter', the Master replied. 'Had he been like Joshua the son of Nun', the other retorted, 'others would have given him their daughters, if the Master had not given him his; but with this man, if the Master will not give him, others also will not give him'.⁴⁶ As the man refused to go away he fixed his eye upon him and he died. R. Mattena also ruled that the child is legitimate.⁴⁷ Rab Judah also ruled that the child is legitimate.⁴⁷ For when one⁴⁸ came before Rab Judah, the latter told him, 'Go and conceal your identity⁴⁹ or marry one of your own kind'.⁵⁰ When such a man⁵¹ appeared before Raba he told him, 'Either go abroad or marry one of your own kind'.⁵²

The men of Be-Mikse⁵³ sent [the following enquiry] to Rabbah: What [is the law in respect of the legitimacy of the child of] one who is a half slave and half freed man⁵⁴ who cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite? — He replied: If [the child of] one who is fully a slave has been declared legitimate, is there any need [to question the case of the child of one who is only] a half slave!

R. Joseph said: The author of this traditional ruling⁵⁵

(3) The offspring from which is a bastard.

(4) Now this Tanna, whose view is exactly the same as that of Simeon the Temanite, indicates quite clearly that the offspring of a union with an idolater or slave is not a bastard! (V. supra n. 10). (12) That cohabitation with a deceased brother's wife after halizah with her rival has not the force of marriage and no divorce is required. The child from such a union would consequently be deemed a bastard.

is, of course,¹ Rab Judah.² But surely Rab Judah had explicitly stated: Where one who is a half slave and half freed man cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child born from such a union can have no redress!³ — Rab Judah's ruling⁴ was made only in the case where he⁵ betrothed⁶ the daughter of an Israelite,⁷ in consequence of which his partial slavery cohabits with a married woman.⁸

But did not the Nehardeans state in the name of R. Jacob that according to him who regards [the offspring]⁹ as illegitimate, the child is so regarded even [where cohabitation had taken place] with an unmarried woman; and according to him who regards [the child] as legitimate, the child is so regarded even [if the cohabitation had taken place] with a married woman! And the deduction by both¹⁰ was made from none other than the wife of one's father.¹¹ He who regards the child⁹ as illegitimate is of the opinion that as with the wife of one's father, betrothal with whom is invalid, the child is a bastard. So is the child a bastard in the case of all those¹² betrothal with whom is invalid. And he who regards the child as legitimate is of the opinion [that the comparison is]: As with the wife of one's father, betrothal with whom is invalid in the case of the son only,¹³ but is valid in the case of others;¹⁴ an idolater and a slave betrothal with whom is in all cases invalid are consequently excluded!¹⁵

Hence the statement of R. Judah¹⁶ must have been made in respect of one¹⁷ who had intercourse with a married woman, so that his emancipated side¹⁸ cohabits with a married woman.¹⁹

Rabina said: R. Gaza told me, 'R. Jose b. Abin happened to be at our place when an incident²⁰ occurred with an unmarried woman and declared the child to be legitimate: [and when it occurred] with a married woman he declared the child to be illegitimate'.

R. Shesheth said: R. Gaza told me that it was not R. Jose b. Abin but R. Jose son of R. Zebida, and that he declared the child to be legitimate, both in the case of the married, as well as in that of the unmarried woman.²¹

R. Aha son of Raba²² said to Rabina: Amemar once happened to be in our place and he declared the child²³ to be legitimate in the case of a married, as well as in that of an unmarried woman.

And the law is that if an idolater or a slave had cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is legitimate, both in the case of a married, and in that of an unmarried woman.²¹

Raba declared R. Mari b. Rache²⁴ to be a legitimate Israelite and appointed him among the pursers²⁵ of Babylon. And although a Master said: Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee . . . one from among thy brethren,²⁶ all appointments which you make must be made only 'from among thy brethren', [means that] such a man,²⁷ since his mother was a descendant of Israel, may well 'be regarded as 'one from among thy brethren'.

The slave of R. Hiyya b. Ammi once made a certain idolatress bathe for a matrimonial purpose.²⁸ Said R. Joseph: I could declare her to be a legitimate Jewess²⁹ and her daughter³⁰ to be of legitimate birth.³¹ In her case, in accordance with the view of R. Assi; for R. Assi said, 'Did she not bathe for the purpose of her menstruation'?³² In the case of her daughter, because when an idolater or a slave has intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite, the child [born of such a union] is legitimate.³³

A certain person was once named 'son of the female heathen'.³⁴ Said R. Assi, 'Did she not bathe for the purpose of her menstruation'?

A certain person was once named 'son of the male heathen'.³⁵ Said R. Joshua b. Levi, 'Did he³⁶ not bathe in connection with any mishap³⁷ of his'?³⁸

R. Hama b. Guria said in the name of Rab: If a man bought a slave from an idolater and [that slave] forestalled him and performed ritual ablution with the object of acquiring the status of a freed man, he acquires thereby his emancipation. What is the reason?

(1) Lit., 'who is it'?

(2) So that Rabbah's decision in the case of the half slave is based on a ruling of Rab Judah.

(3) I.e., he is a bastard, and may never marry a Jewess, How, then, could Rabbah regard the child of such a union as legitimate?

(4) That he can have no redress.

(5) The half slave,

(6) Not merely cohabited without betrothal.

(7) The betrothal, as far as his partial status of a slave is concerned, is invalid, while in respect of his partial state of emancipation it is valid. The Jewess is consequently his legal wife.

(8) The slave in him having cohabited with the woman who is legally betrothed to the emancipated part of him causes the offspring of the union to be deemed a bastard, as is the case with the offspring of any union between a betrothed or married woman and a stranger, be the latter Israelite, idolater or slave. If, however, cohabitation only between the half slave and a Jewess took place, 'without previous betrothal, the woman is not the legal wife of the 'half freed man' and the child born from the union is the child of an unmarried woman and is consequently legitimate, as Rabbah ruled. In the case of a full slave the question of betrothal does not arise since even if betrothal did take place it is invalid and the woman is legally deemed to be unmarried.

(9) Of a union between a Jewess and an idolater or a slave.

(10) He who regards the child as legitimate and the other who regards him as illegitimate.

(11) Betrothal of whom by the son is invalid and the offspring of any union between them is a bastard.

(12) Such as an idolater or a slave,

(13) Lit., 'to him'.

(14) So in all such cases, A child born from such unions only is illegitimate.

(15) The cases of these being different from that of 'father's wife', the child born from a union between a Jewess and any of these must be deemed to be legitimate. The father is entirely eliminated and the child is ascribed to the mother. Now, since the statement of the Nehardeans proves that there is no difference between an unmarried and a married (or betrothed) woman, the distinction drawn supra between cohabitation after a betrothal and one in the absence of betrothal is obviously untenable. The objection then against Rabbah's ruling remains!

(16) That the child has no redress.

(17) The half slave and half freed man spoken of.

(19) Cf. supra p. 295, n. 14. As the offspring of a union between an Israelite and a married woman is a bastard, so is that of the union between the semi-emancipated (cf. supra n. 10) and a married woman.

(20) A child was born from a union between a slave and a Jewess.

(21) For the reason given supra Cf. supra p. 296, nn. 6. 7 and text.

(29) Though the bath was taken for menstrual purification yet since an idolatress takes no such baths, it may be regarded as one for the purpose of her conversion also. Usually, before he may be admitted as a legitimate proselyte, the convert must both be circumcised and bathe in a ritual bath for the specific purpose of the conversion. V, infra 46b.

(30) Born from the slave and herself,

(31) Though she is the offspring of a union between a slave and a woman who, at the time of giving birth to her, had already enjoyed the status of a Jewess.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 46a

— The idolater has no title to the person [of the slave]¹ and he can transfer to the Israelite only that which is his. And [the slave], since he forestalled him and performed ritual ablution for the purpose of acquiring the status of a freed man, has thereby cancelled the obligations of his servitude, in accordance with the ruling of Raba. For Raba stated: Consecration,² leavened food³ and manumission⁴ cancel a mortgage.⁵

R. Hisda raised an objection: It happened with the proselyte Valeria⁶ that her slaves forestalled her and performed ritual ablutions⁷ before her. And when the matter came before the Sages they decided that the slaves had acquired the status of freed men.⁸ [From here it follows that] only if they performed ablution before her,⁹ but not if after her!¹⁰ — Raba replied: ‘Before her’ they acquire their emancipation whether the object of their bathing had, or had not been specified;¹¹ ‘after her’ emancipation is acquired only when the object had been specified,¹² but not when it had not been specified.¹³

R. Iwya said: What has been taught¹⁴ applies only to one¹⁵ who buys¹⁶ from an idolater; but the idolater himself¹⁷ may well be acquired;¹⁸ for it is written in Scripture, Moreover from the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them may ye buy:¹⁹ you may buy of them but they may not buy of you, nor may they buy of one another.²⁰ ‘But they may not buy of you’. — What can this refer to? If it be suggested [that it refers] to one's manual labour, may not an idolater, [it may be asked,] buy an Israelite to do manual labour? Surely it is written, Or to the offshoot of a stranger's family,²¹ and a Master said that by ‘stranger's family’ an idolater was meant?²² Consequently it must refer to his person;²³ and the All Merciful said, ‘You may buy of them,²⁴ even their persons’. R. Aha objected: It²⁵ might be said [to refer to acquisition] by means of money and ritual ablution!²⁶ — This is a difficulty.

Samuel said: He²⁷ must be firmly held²⁸ while he is in the water;²⁹ as [was done with] Menjamin, the slave of R. Ashi who wished to perform ritual ablution,³⁰ and was entrusted to Rabina and R. Aha son of Raba. ‘Note’, [R. Ashi] said to them, ‘that I shall claim him from you’.³¹ They put a chain³² round his neck, and loosened it and again tightened it. They loosened it in order that there might be no interposition.³³ They then tightened it again in order that he might not forestall them and declare,³⁴ ‘I perform the ablution in order to procure thereby the status of a freed man’. While he was raising his head from the water they placed upon it a bucket full of clay and told him, ‘Go, carry it to your master's house.

R. Papa said to Raba: The master must have observed the men of Papa b. Abba's house who advance sums of money on people's accounts in respect of their capitation taxes,³⁵ and then force them into their service. Do they,³⁶ when set free, require a deed of emancipation or not? He replied: Were I now dead I could not have told you of this ruling. Thus said R. Shesheth: The surety for these people³⁷ is deposited in the king's archive, and the king has ordained that whosoever does not pay his capitation tax shall be made the slave of him who pays it for him.³⁸

R. Hiyya b. Abba once came to Gabla³⁹ where he observed Jewish women who conceived from proselytes who were circumcised but had not performed the required ritual ablution;⁴⁰ he also noticed that idolaters were serving⁴¹ Jewish wine and Israelites were drinking it,⁴² and he also saw that idolaters were cooking lupines and Israelites ate them;⁴³ but he did not speak to them on the matter at all. He called, however, upon R. Johanan who instructed him: Go and announce that their children are bastards; that their wine is forbidden as nesek wine;⁴⁴ and that their lupines are forbidden as food cooked by idolaters, because⁴⁵ they⁴⁶ are ignorant of the Torah.

‘That their children are bastards’, R. Johanan ruling in accordance with his view. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: A man cannot become a proper proselyte unless he has been circumcised and has also performed ritual ablution; when, therefore, no ablution has been performed he is regarded as an idolater; and Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan that if an idolater or a slave cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard.

‘That their wine is forbidden as nesek wine’, because a nazirite⁴⁷ is told, ‘Keep away; go round about; approach not the vineyard’.⁴⁸

‘That their lupines are forbidden as food cooked by idolaters, because they are ignorant of the Torah’. [Would their lupines have been] permitted if the men had been acquainted with the Torah? Surely R. Samuel b. R. Isaac stated in the name of Rab, ‘Any foodstuff that may be eaten raw does not come under the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters’, and since lupines cannot be eaten raw the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters should apply!⁴⁹ — R. Johanan holds the view as expressed in a second version. For R. Samuel b. R. Isaac stated in the name of Rab, ‘Whatever is not served on a royal table as a dish to be eaten with bread is not subject to the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters. The reason, therefore,⁵⁰ is because they were ignorant of the Torah;⁵¹ for had they been acquainted with the Torah [their lupines would have been] permitted.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘If a proselyte was circumcised but had not performed the prescribed ritual ablution, R. Eliezer said, ‘Behold he is a proper proselyte; for so we find that our forefathers⁵² were circumcised and had not performed ritual ablution’. If he performed the prescribed ablution but had not been circumcised, R. Joshua said, ‘Behold he is a proper proselyte; for so we find that the mothers⁵³ had performed ritual ablution but had not been circumcised’. The Sages, however, said, ‘Whether he had performed ritual ablution but had not been circumcised or whether he had been circumcised but had not performed the prescribed ritual ablution, he is not a proper proselyte, unless he has been circumcised and has also performed the prescribed ritual ablution.

Let R. Joshua also infer from the forefathers, and let R. Eliezer also infer from the mothers! And should you reply⁵⁴ that a possibility⁵⁵ may not be inferred from an impossibility,⁵⁶ surely [it may be retorted] it was taught: R. Eliezer said, ‘whence is it deduced that the paschal lamb⁵⁷ of later generations⁵⁸ may be brought from hullin⁵⁹ only? Those in Egypt were commanded to bring⁶⁰ a Paschal lamb and those of later generations were commanded to bring a Paschal lamb; as the Paschal lamb spoken of in Egypt could be brought from hullin⁵⁹ only, so may also the paschal lamb which had been commanded to later generations be brought from hullin only’. Said R. Akiba to him, ‘may a possibility be inferred from an impossibility!’⁶¹ The other replied. ‘Although an impossibility, it is nevertheless a proof of importance and deduction from it may be made’!⁶² — But

(1) As will be explained infra, no idolater may acquire the person of another idolater.

(2) For the altar, of a pledged animal,

(3) Which is pledged to a non-Israelite but kept in the possession of an Israelite when the time for its destruction on the Passover Eve arrived. No leavened food may be kept in Jewish possession (though pledged to a non-Jew) from midday of Passover Eve until the conclusion of the Passover festival.

(4) Of a mortgaged slave, v. Git. 40b.

(5) Similarly here, the ritual ablution of the slave, for the purpose of procuring his manumission, cancelled his obligations to his idolatrous master, and ipso facto to his Jewish master who is only the representative of the former and can lay no greater claim to the slave than he.

- (9) Are they manumitted; because, in that case, they were already proselytes while she was still an idolatress with no title to them.
- (10) Lit., 'before her, yes: after her, no'. Thus it has been shewn that if the owner is an Israelite, ritual ablution does not procure the slave's manumission, which is in contradiction to what R. Hama stated in the name of Rab!

- (12) When the slave specifically stated that his ablution was performed for the purpose of procuring his manumission: cf. the statement of R. Hama b. Guria.

- (25) The authorization to buy the person of an idolater.
- (26) As a slave of a Jew. A heathen, bought as a slave by a Jew, had to submit to circumcision and ritual ablution and thereby acquired partly the status of a Jew: in respect of observances he was on the same footing as Jewish women and minor sons. What proof, however, is there that an idolater does not acquire his freedom if he performed ritual ablution with the specific object of procuring thereby his manumission?
- (27) An idolatrous slave who is performing his ablution on his initiation into Judaism as a slave of a Jew.
- (28) To indicate that he is performing his ablution as a slave.
- (29) Unless some outward mark of slavery accompanied the ablution the slave can procure his manumission by making a declaration, while he is still in, the water, that he performs his ablution for the purpose of procuring thereby his freedom.

- (45) The reason applies to the prohibition of the lupines. v. infra.

- (46) The men of Gabla.
- (47) V. Num. VI, 2ff.
- (48) I.e., a man must be so careful in the observance of a commandment that he must not only keep away from a prohibition itself but also from that which is permitted but might lead to an infringement of a prohibition, A nazirite who is forbidden to drink wine must not even approach a vineyard. Similarly nesek wine is forbidden only when an idolater has actually touched it; but as a preventive measure it has been forbidden, as here, even when contact was indirect.
- (49) What need then was there to give as a reason, 'because they are ignorant of the Torah'?
- (50) Why the lupines of the men of Gabla were forbidden,

- (56) The mothers who left Egypt may have been admitted to Judaism by ritual ablution only because the other rite was in their case an impossibility.
- (57) V. Ex. XII, 3ff.
- (58) Subsequent to the generation that brought the first Paschal lamb in Egypt.
- (59) חולין 'profane', animals that had not previously been consecrated. In the case of the Paschal lamb consecrated animals could only be such as had been set aside as 'second tithe' the law of which had not been promulgated till after the Exodus.
- (60) Lit., 'it was said'.
- (61) The Paschal lamb in Egypt could not possibly have been brought from consecrated animals. V. supra n. 7, second clause.
- (62) Men. 82a, which proves that even from an impossibility an inference may be drawn. The difficulty, therefore, remains, why does not R. Eliezer, like R. Joshua, infer from the mothers?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 46b

all agree¹ that ritual ablution without circumcision is effective; and they differ only on circumcision without ablution. R. Eliezer infers from the forefathers,² while R. Joshua [maintains that] in the case of the forefathers also ritual ablution was performed. Whence does he³ deduce it?⁴ If it be suggested, 'From that which is written, Go unto the people, and sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their garments,⁵ if where washing of the garments is not required⁶ ablution is required,⁷ how much more should ablution be required where washing of the garments is required',⁸ [it may be retorted that] that⁹ might have been a mere matter of cleanliness.¹⁰ — It is rather from here:¹¹ And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people,¹² and we have a tradition that there must be no sprinkling without ritual ablution.¹³

Whence does R. Joshua infer that the mothers performed ritual ablution? — It is a logical conclusion, for, otherwise,¹⁴ whereby did they enter under the wings of the Shechinah!¹⁵

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: A man can never become a proselyte unless he has been circumcised and has also performed the prescribed ritual ablution.¹⁶ Is not this obvious? [In a dispute between] an individual and a majority the halachah is, surely, in agreement with the majority!¹⁷ — The expression 'Sages' is in fact meant for¹⁸ 'R. Jose'. For it was taught: If [a proselyte] came and stated, 'I have been circumcised but have not performed ritual ablution' he is 'permitted to perform the ablution'¹⁹ and [the proper performance of the previous circumcision] does not matter;²⁰ so R. Judah.

R. Jose said: He is not to be allowed ablution,²¹ Hence²² it is permissible for a proselyte²³ to perform the prescribed ablution on the Sabbath;²⁴ so R. Judah. R. Jose, however, said: He is not to be allowed to perform the ablution.²⁵

The Master said, 'Hence it is permissible for a proselyte to perform the prescribed ablution on the Sabbath; so R. Judah'.²⁶ Seeing that R. Judah stated that one²⁷ suffices is it not obvious that, if circumcision has been performed in our presence, he is permitted to perform ablution! Why then, 'Hence'?²⁸ — It might have been assumed that in the opinion of R. Judah, ablution forms the principal [part of the initiation],²⁹ and that ablution is not to take place on the Sabbath because, thereby, a man is improved;³⁰ hence we were taught³¹ that R. Judah requires either the one or the other.³²

'R. Jose, however, said: He is not to be allowed to perform the ablution'. Is not this obvious? Since R. Jose said that both³³ are required [ablution must be forbidden as] the improvement of a man³⁴ may not be effected on the Sabbath! — It might have been assumed that in the opinion of R. Jose circumcision forms the principal [part of the initiation] and that the reason there³⁵ is because the circumcision had not been performed in our presence³⁶ but where the circumcision had taken place in our presence³⁷ it might have been assumed that a proselyte in such circumstances³⁸ may perform the prescribed ablution even on the Sabbath, hence we were taught³⁹ that R. Jose requires both.³³

Rabbah stated: It happened at the court of R. Hiyya b. Rabbi (and R. Joseph taught: R. Oshaia b.⁴⁰ Rabbi;⁴¹ and R. Safra taught: R. Oshaia b. Hiyya)⁴¹ — that there came before him a proselyte who had been circumcised but had not performed the ablution.⁴² The Rabbi told him, 'Wait here until tomorrow⁴³ when we shall arrange for your ablution'. From this incident three rulings may be deduced. It may be inferred that the initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three men;⁴⁴ and it may be inferred that a man is not a proper proselyte unless he had been circumcised and had also performed the prescribed ablution; and it may also be inferred⁴⁵ that the ablution of a proselyte may not take place during the night.

Let it be said that from this incident it may also be inferred that qualified scholars are required!⁴⁶ — Their presence might have been a mere coincidence.⁴⁷

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: The initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three men; for law⁴⁸ has been written in his case.⁴⁹

Our Rabbis taught: As it might have been assumed that if a man came and said, 'I am a proselyte' he is to be accepted,⁵⁰ hence it was specifically stated in the Scriptures With thee,⁵¹ only when he is well known to thee. Whence is it inferred that if he came, and had his witnesses with him, [that his word is accepted]? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, And if a proselyte sojourn . . . in your land.⁵²

(1) Even R. Eliezer.

(2) Who, he maintains, did not perform any ritual ablution when they were admitted to Judaism.

(3) R. Joshua.

(4) That the forefathers had performed ritual ablution.

(5) Ex. XIX, 20,

(6) E.g., after nocturnal pollution; keri. v. Glos.

(7) V. Lev. XV, 26,

(8) As was the case when Israel received the Torah and were thus admitted into Judaism. (V. Ex, XIX, 10).

(9) The washing of the garments.

(10) And had no reference to Levitical purity. Such washing, therefore, can have no bearing on the question of the ritual ablution of proselytes.

(11) Is R. Joshua's deduction made.

- (12) Ex. XXIV, 8.
- (13) Ker, 9a.
- (14) Lit., 'for if so', if even ablution was not performed.
- (15) V. Glos. They could not have been initiated without any ceremonial whatsoever.
- (16) Ber. 47b.
- (17) And this view is held (supra 46a) by the Sages who obviously form a majority against the individual or joint opinions of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.
- (18) Lit., 'who are the Sages'?
- (19) And by this act alone he is admitted as a proper proselyte.
- (20) Lit., 'and what is there in it'. Whether the circumcision had been valid, having been performed for the specific ritual purpose of the proselyte's initiation into Judaism, or whether it had been invalid because it was carried out as a mere surgical operation or as a non-Jewish sectarian rite, is of no consequence, since the present performance of the ritual ablution is alone sufficient for the initiation.
- (21) Because both circumcision and ablution are required. As the validity of the former is in doubt (v. supra note 1) the latter must not be allowed unless some act of circumcision (causing a few drops of blood to flow) had again been carried out specifically for the purpose of the initiation.
- (22) Since according to R. Akiba one act, either ablution or circumcision, suffices.
- (23) Who had been circumcised on Sabbath Eve in the ritually prescribed manner.
- (24) The ablution being of no consequence (v. supra on. 3 and 4), the proselyte's person in no way being improved by it, it is an act which is permitted on the Sabbath.
- (25) The ablution completes the initiation and thus effects the proselyte's improvement, which is an act forbidden on the Sabbath. Thus it has been shewn that the author of the view that both ablution and circumcision are required, given supra as the opinion of 'the Sages', is in fact R. Jose.
- (26) V, Bah. Cur. edd. omit the last three words.
- (27) Either circumcision or ablution.
- (28) — Hence etc.'. There is no need, surely, to state the obvious.
- (29) Since circumcision he stated supra does not matter.

- (50) As a legitimate proselyte, and he should require no [initiation ceremonial].

(51) Lev. XIX, 33. And if a proselyte (גר E.V., 'stranger') sojourn with thee.

(52) Ibid., i.e., as long as he is in your land even if he is not well known to you. Cf. n. 4, supra. Cur. edd. include here 'with thee' which should be omitted since the phrase has been previously employed as proof to the contrary that the proselyte must be well known.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 47a

From this I only know [that the law is applicable] within the Land of Israel, whence is it inferred [that it is also applicable] within the countries outside the Land? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, With thee, i.e., ‘wherever he is with thee’.¹ If so, why was the Land of Israel specified? — In the Land of Israel² proof must be produced;³ outside the Land of Israel⁴ no such proof need be produced; these are the words of R. Judah. But the Sages said: Proof must be produced both within the Land of Israel and outside the Land.

‘If he came and had witnesses with him,’ what need is there for a Scriptural text?⁵ R. Shesheth replied: Where they⁶ state, ‘We heard that he be came a proselyte at a certain particular court’. As It might have been taught that we are not to believe them,⁷ we were taught [that we do believe them].

‘In your land,’⁸ from this I only know [that the law is applicable] within the Land of Israel, whence is it inferred [that it is also applicable] within the countries outside the Land? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, With thee, i.e., wherever he is with thee’. But this,⁹ surely, had been expounded already!¹⁰ — One is derived from With thee¹¹ and the other from With you.¹²

‘But the Sages said: Proof must be produced both within the Land of Israel and outside the Land’. But, it is written, surely, in your land!¹³ — That expression is required [for the deduction] that proselytes may be accepted even in the Land of Israel. As it might have been assumed that there they become proselytes only on account of the prosperity of the Land of Israel, and at the present time also, when there is no prosperity, they might still be attracted¹⁴ by the Gleanings,¹⁵ the Forgotten Sheaf,¹⁶ the Corner¹⁷ and the Poor Man's Tithe,¹⁸ hence we were taught [that they may nevertheless be accepted].

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan, ‘The halachah is that proof must be produced¹⁹ both in the Land of Israel and outside the Land’. Is this not obvious? [In a dispute between] an individual and a majority the halachah is, of course, in agreement with the majority!²⁰ — It might have been suggested that R. Judah's view is more acceptable since he is supported by Scriptural texts, ‘A hence we were taught [that the halachah is in agreement with the Sages].

Our Rabbis taught: And judge righteously between a man and his brother, and the proselyte that is with him;²¹ from this text²² did R. Judah deduce that a man who becomes a proselyte²³ in the presence of a Beth din is deemed to be a proper proselyte; but he who does so privately is no proselyte.²⁴

It once happened that a man came before R. Judah and told him, ‘I have become a proselyte privately’. ‘Have you witnesses?’ R. Judah asked. ‘No’, the man replied. ‘Have you children?’ — ‘Yes’, the man replied. ‘You are trusted’, the Master said to him, ‘as far as your own disqualification is concerned but you cannot be relied upon to disqualify your children.’²⁵

Did R. Judah, however, state that a proselyte is not trusted in respect of his children? Surely it was taught: He shall acknowledge²⁶ implies, ‘he shall be entitled to acknowledge him before others?’²⁷ From this did R. Judah deduce that a man is believed when he declares, ‘This son of mine is firstborn’,²⁸ And as a man is believed when he declares, ‘This son of mine is firstborn’ so is he believed when he declares, ‘This son of mine is the son of a divorced woman’ or ‘the son of a haluzah’.²⁹ But the Sages say: He³⁰ is not believed!³¹ — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is this that he³² really told him,³³ ‘According to your own statement you are an idolater, and no idolater is eligible to tender evidence’.³⁴

Rabina said: It is this that he³⁵ really told him,³⁶ ‘Have you children?’ [And when the other replied] ‘Yes’ [he asked] ‘Have you grandchildren’. [The reply being again] ‘Yes’, he told him ‘You are trusted so far as to disqualify your own children³⁷ but you cannot be trusted so far as to disqualify your grandchildren’.

Thus it was also taught elsewhere: R. Judah said, ‘A man is trusted in respect [of the status of] his young son but not in respect of that of his grown-up son; and R. Hiyya b. Abba explained in the name of R. Johanan that ‘young’ does not mean actually a minor and ‘grown-up’ does not mean one who is actually ‘of age’, but any young son who has children is regarded as of age while any grown-up son who has no children is deemed to be a minor. And the law is in agreement with R. Nahman b. Isaac.³⁸ But, surely, [a Baraita] was taught in agreement with Rabina!³⁹ — That statement was made with reference to the law of acknowledgement.⁴⁰

Our Rabbis taught: If at the present time a man desires⁴¹ to become a proselyte, he is to be addressed as follows: ‘What reason have you for desiring⁴² to become a proselyte; do you not know that Israel at the present time are persecuted and oppressed, despised, harassed and overcome by afflictions’? If he replies, ‘I know and yet am unworthy’,⁴³ he is accepted forthwith, and is given instruction in some of the minor and some of the major commandments. He is informed of the sin [of the neglect of the commandments of] Gleanings,⁴⁴ the Forgotten Sheaf,⁴⁵ the Corner⁴⁶ and the Poor Man’s Tithe.⁴⁷ He is also told of the punishment for the transgression of the commandments. Furthermore, he is addressed thus: ‘Be it known to you that before you came to this condition, if you had eaten suet⁴⁸ you would not have been punishable with kareth, if you had profaned the Sabbath you would not have been punishable with stoning; but now were you to eat suet⁴⁸ you would be punished with kareth; were you to profane the Sabbath you would be punished with stoning’. And as he is informed of the punishment for the transgression of the commandments, so is he informed of the reward granted for their fulfilment. He is told, ‘Be it known to you that the world to come was made only for the righteous, and that Israel at the present time are unable to bear

- (40) Lit., 'he shall acknowledge' (Deut. XXI, 17), i.e., the reference is not to a proselyte but to an Israelite whose word is accepted when he testifies that his son is either a firstborn, or the son of a divorced woman or the son of a haluzah. It is in connection with this only that it was stated that the father, being believed in respect of his children, but not his grandchildren, is trusted in the case of his son who has no children, but not in the case of one who has children.

either too much prosperity. or too much suffering'. He is not, however, to be persuaded or dissuaded too much.¹ If he accepted,² he is circumcised forthwith. Should any shreds³ which render the circumcision invalid remain, he is to be circumcised a second time. As soon as he is healed arrangements are made for his immediate ablution, when two learned men must stand by his side and acquaint him with some of the minor commandments and with some of the major ones.⁴ When he comes up after his ablution he is deemed to be an Israelite in all respects.

In the case of a woman proselyte, women make her sit in the water up to her neck, while two learned men stand outside and give her instruction in some of the minor commandments and some of the major ones.

The same law⁵ applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave; and only where a menstruant may perform her ablution⁶ may a proselyte and an emancipated slave perform this ablution;⁷ and whatever is deemed an interception in ritual bathing⁸ is also deemed to be an interception in the ablutions of a proselyte, an emancipated slave and a menstruant.⁹

The Master said, 'If a man desires to become a proselyte . . . he is to be addressed as follows: "What reason have you for desiring to become a proselyte . . ." and he is made acquainted with some of the minor, and with some of the major commandments'. What is the reason? — In order that if he desire to withdraw let him do so;¹⁰ for R. Helbo said: Proselytes are as hard for Israel [to endure] as a sore,¹¹ because it is written in Scripture. And the proselyte¹² shall join himself with them, and they shall cleave¹³ to the house of Jacob.¹⁴

'He is informed of the sin [of the neglect of the commandment of] Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, the Corner and the Poor Man's Tithe'. What is the reason? — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: Because a Noahide¹⁵ would rather be killed than spend so much as a perutah¹⁶ which is not returnable.¹⁷

'He¹⁸ is not, however, to be persuaded, or dissuaded too much'. R. Eleazar said: What is the Scriptural proof? — It is written, And when she saw that she was steadfastly minded to go with her, she left off speaking unto her.¹⁹ 'We are forbidden', she²⁰ told her,²¹ '[to move on the Sabbath beyond the] Sabbath boundaries'!²² — 'Whither thou goest' [the other replied] 'I will go'.²³

'We are forbidden private meeting between man and woman'!²⁴ — 'Where thou lodgest. I will lodge'.²³

'We have been commanded six hundred and thirteen commandments'! — 'Thy people shall be my people'.²³

'We are forbidden idolatry'! — 'And thy God my God'.²³

'Four modes of death²⁵ were entrusted to Beth din'!²⁶ — 'Where thou diest, will I die'.²⁷

'Two graveyards²⁸ were placed at the disposal of the Beth din'! — 'And there will I be buried'.²⁷ Presently she saw that she was steadfastly minded etc.¹⁹

'If he accepted, he is circumcised forthwith'. What is the reason? — The performance of a commandment must not in any way be delayed.

'Should any shreds which render the circumcision invalid remain etc.', as we learned: These are the shreds which render the circumcision invalid: Flesh which covers the greater part of the corona,²⁹ [a priest having been so circumcised] is not permitted to eat terumah; and R. Jeremiah b. Abba explained in the name of Rab: Flesh which covers the greater part of the height of the corona.³⁰

'As soon as he is healed arrangements are made for his immediate ablution'. Only after he is healed but not before!³¹ What is the reason? — Because the water might irritate the wound.

'When two learned men must stand by his side'. Did not R. Hiyya, however, state in the name of R. Johanan that the initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three? — But, surely. R. Johanan told the tanna:³² Read, 'three'.

'When he comes up after his ablution he is deemed to be an Israelite in all respects'. In respect of what practical issue? — In that if he retracted and then betrothed the daughter of an Israelite he is regarded as a non-conforming Israelite and his betrothal is valid.³³

‘The same law applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave’. Assuming this³⁴ to apply to the acceptance of the yoke of the commandments,³⁵ the following contradiction may be pointed out: This³⁶ applies only to a proselyte. but an emancipated slave need not accept!³⁷ — R. Shesheth replied: This is no contradiction, One statement is that of R. Simeon; the other, that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: And bewail her father and her mother etc.³⁸ This only applies when she did not accept,³⁹ but if she did accept,³⁹ her ablution may be arranged, and he is permitted to marry her forthwith. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Even though she did not accept³⁹ he may force her to perform one ablution as a mark of her slavery and a second ablution as a mark of her emancipation, and having liberated her

(9) Although the purpose of these ablutions is not, like that of the usual ablutions, to qualify for the eating, or the handling of, levitically clean things. The ablutions of the proselyte and the slave are only a part of their initiation ceremonial, while that of the menstruant has for its object the woman's permissibility to her husband.

he is permitted to marry her forthwith.¹

Raba said: What is R. Simeon b. Eleazar's reason?² — Because it is written, Every man's slave that is bought for money;³ [could it mean] the slave of a man and not the slave of a woman?⁴ But [this is the implication]: The slave⁵ of a man may be forcibly circumcised but no son of a man⁶ may be forcibly circumcised. And the Rabbis?⁷ — 'Ulla replied: As you, admittedly, may not by force circumcise the son of a man⁸ so you may not forcibly circumcise the slave of a man. But, surely, there is the Scriptural text, Every man's slave!⁹ — That text is required for a deduction made by Samuel. For Samuel stated: If a man declared his slave to be ownerless that slave acquires thereby his freedom and requires no deed of emancipation; for it is stated in Scripture. Every man's slave that is bought for money,³ [could it mean] the slave of a man and not the slave of a woman?¹⁰ But [the meaning is that] a slave who is under his master's control is a proper¹¹ slave but he who is not under his master's control is not a proper¹¹ slave.¹²

R. Papa demurred: It might be suggested that the Rabbis were heard¹³ in respect of a woman of goodly form¹⁴ only,¹⁵ because she¹⁶ is under no obligation to observe the commandments; but that in respect of a slave,¹⁷ who is under the obligation of observing commandments, even the Rabbis agree!¹⁸ For it was indeed taught. 'Both a proselyte and a slave bought from an idolater must make¹⁹ a declaration of acceptance'.²⁰ Thus it follows²¹ that a slave bought from an Israelite need not make a declaration of acceptance.²⁰ Now, whose view is this? If that of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, he, surely, had stated that even a slave bought from an idolater need make no declaration of acceptance!²² Consequently it must be the view of the Rabbis; and so it may be inferred that only a slave bought from an idolater is required to make a declaration of acceptance²⁰ but a slave bought from an Israelite is not required to make a declaration of acceptance.²³ But then the contradiction from the statement 'The same law applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave'²⁴ remains! — That²⁵ was taught only with reference to the ablution.²⁶

Our Rabbis taught: And she shall shave her head, and do²⁷ her nails,²⁸ R. Eliezer said, 'She shall cut them'.²⁹ R. Akiba said, 'She shall let them grow'. R. Eliezer said:³⁰ An act³¹ was mentioned in respect of the head, and an act was mentioned in respect of the nails;³² as the former signifies removal, so does the latter also signify removal. R. Akiba said:³⁰ An act³¹ was mentioned in respect of the head and an act was mentioned in respect of the nails;³² as disfigurement is the purpose of the former so is disfigurement the purpose of the latter. The following, however, supports the view of R. Eliezer: And Mephibosheth the son of Saul came down to meet the king, and he had neither dressed his feet, nor had he done³³ 'his beard,'³⁴ by 'doing,'³⁵ removal was meant.

Our Rabbis taught: And bewail her father and her mother;³⁶

- (1) Thus it has been shown that while the first Tanna requires the slave's acceptance of the obligation of Judaism, R. Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 48b

R. Eliezer said: 'Her father' means her actual father; 'Her mother', her actual mother. R. Akiba said: 'Her father and her mother' refer to idolatry; for so Scripture says, Who say to a stock;¹ 'Thou art my father', etc.² A full month, 'month' means thirty days. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Ninety days. For 'month' means thirty days; 'full',³ thirty days; 'and after that' thirty days. Rabina demurred: Might it not be suggested that 'month' means thirty days; 'full', thirty days; 'and after that' as many again!⁴ — This is a difficulty.

Our Rabbis taught: Uncircumcised slaves may be retained; this is the opinion of R. Ishmael. R. Akiba said: They may not be retained.⁵ Said R. Ishmael to him: Behold it is written, And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed!⁶ 'This text', the other replied. speaks of a slave that has been bought at twilight,⁷ when there was not time enough to circumcise him.⁸

All at any rate agree that And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed⁶ was written in respect of an uncircumcised slave; whence may this be inferred? — From what has been taught: And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed,⁶ Scripture speaks of an uncircumcised slave. You say. 'Of an uncircumcised slave'; perhaps it is not so⁹ but of a circumcised slave? Since it has been stated 'That thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou,'¹⁰ the circumcised slave has already been spoken of; to what then is one to apply 'And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed?'¹¹ Obviously to an uncircumcised slave. And the stranger¹² refers to a domiciled proselyte.¹³ You say. 'It refers to a domiciled proselyte'; perhaps it is not so,¹⁴ but to a true proselyte?¹⁵ Since it was stated, No' thy strange' that is with its thy gates,¹⁰ the true proselyte has already been mentioned; to what then is one to apply, and the stranger?¹² Obviously, to the domiciled proselyte.

R. Joshua b. Levi said: If a man bought a slave from an idolater, and the slave refused to be circumcised, he may bear with him for twelve months. [If by that time he had] not been circumcised, he must re-sell him to idolaters.

The following was said by the Rabbis in the presence of R. Papa: In accordance with whose view?¹⁶ Obviously not in accordance with that of R. Akiba, since he¹⁷ stated [that uncircumcised slaves] may not be retained.¹⁸ R. Papa answered them: It may be said to be the view even of R. Akiba; for this¹⁹ applies when no definite consent has ever been given,²⁰ but where definite consent²¹ had once been given,²² his original decision is taken into consideration.²³

R. Kahana stated: I mentioned this reported discussion in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea and he said to me: If so, instead of R. Akiba replying²⁴ that '[the text speaks] of a slave that has been bought at twilight'. he should rather have given this reply!²⁵ — He gave him one of the two available solutions.

Rabin sent a message in the name of R. Il'ai, [adding]. 'All my masters have so reported in his name': Who is an uncircumcised slave that may be retained? He who was bought by his master with the intention of not having him circumcised.

The Rabbis argued the following in the presence of R. Papa; In accordance with whose view?²⁶ Obviously not in accordance with that of R. Akiba, since he²⁷ stated that [uncircumcised slaves] may not be retained! R. Papa answered: It may be said to be the view even of R. Akiba, for this²⁸ applies where he had made no stipulation with him,²⁹ but where a stipulation²⁹ was made, that stipulation must be taken into consideration.³⁰

R. Kahana said: When I mentioned the reported discussion in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea, he said to me: If so, instead of R. Akiba having recourse to the answer³¹ [that 'the text speaks] of a slave who has been bought at twilight when there was not time enough to circumcise him' he should rather have given this reply!³²

But even if your argument is admitted he should rather have given that reply!³³ But [the fact is], he mentioned one of two or three solutions.

R. Hanina b. Papi. R. Ammi, and R. Isaac Nappaha once sat in the ante-chamber³⁴ of R. Isaac Nappaha, and while there, they related: There was a certain town in the Land of Israel where slaves refused to be circumcised, and after bearing with them for twelve months they re-sold them to idolaters. In accordance with whose view? — In accordance with that of the following Tanna. For it was taught: If one bought a slave from an idolater, and the slave refused to be circumcised, he bears with him for twelve months. [If by that time] he has not been circumcised, he re-sells him to idolaters. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: In the Land of Israel he must not be kept owing to [possible] damage to levitically clean foodstuffs,³⁵ and in a town which is near the frontier³⁶ he must not be kept at all, since he might overhear some secret and proceed to report it to a fellow idolater.³⁷

It was taught: R. Hanania son of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Why are proselytes at the present time oppressed and visited with afflictions? Because they had not observed the seven Noahide³⁸ commandments.³⁹

R. Jose said: One who has become a proselyte is like a child newly born.⁴⁰ Why then are proselytes oppressed? — Because they are not so well acquainted with the details of the commandments as the Israelites.⁴¹

Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eleazar: Because they do not do it⁴² out of love⁴³ but out of fear.⁴⁴ Others said: Because they delayed their entry under the wings of the Shechinah. Said R. Abbahu, or it might be said R. Hanina: What is the Scriptural proof?⁴⁵ — The Lord recompense thy work, and be thy reward complete from the Lord, the God of Israel, under whose etc. thou art come to take refuge.⁴⁶

MISHNAH. WHO IS DEEMED TO BE A BASTARD?¹ [THE OFFSPRING OF A UNION WITH] ANY CONSANGUINEOUS RELATIVE WITH WHOM COHABITATION IS FORBIDDEN;² THIS IS THE RULING OF R. AKIBA. SIMEON THE TEMANITE SAID: [THE OFFSPRING OF ANY UNION] THE PENALTY FOR WHICH IS KARETH AT THE HANDS OF HEAVEN; AND THE HALACHAH IS IN AGREEMENT WITH HIS VIEW, AND R. JOSHUA SAID: [THE OFFSPRING OF ANY UNION]. THE PENALTY FOR WHICH IS DEATH AT THE HANDS OF BETH DIN.

GEMARA. What is R. Akiba's reason? — Because it is written A man shall not take his father's wife and shall not uncover his father's skirt,⁷ he shall not uncover the skirt which his father saw; and he⁸ holds the same opinion as R. Judah who said that this Scriptural text⁷ speaks of a woman whom his father had outraged,⁹ and who is classed among those forbidden to him under the penalty for a negative precept;¹⁰ and since close to this [text occurs the commandment], A bastard shall not enter the assembly of the Lord,¹¹ it is obvious that the offspring of any such union¹² is deemed to be a bastard. According to R. Simai also who includes¹³ [the offspring of] any other union that is forbidden by a negative precept even though [the offenders are] not consanguineous relatives,¹⁴ and according to R. Yeshebab who includes¹³ even the offspring of a union forbidden under a positive commandment,¹⁵ the deduction¹⁶ is made from And . . . not.¹⁷

And Simeon the Temanite?¹⁸ — He holds the same opinion as the Rabbis who stated that the text¹⁷ speaks of a woman¹⁹ awaiting the levirate decision of his father,²⁰ the union with such a woman²¹ being forbidden under the penalty of kareth; and since close to this text appears. A bastard shall not enter,¹¹ it proves that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of kareth is deemed to be a bastard.

And R. Joshua?²² — The All Merciful should have written²³ 'Shall not uncover' only!²⁴ What need was there for 'Shall not take'?²⁵ Must it not, consequently, be concluded that it is this that was meant?²⁶ [The offspring] of [a union with her who is explicitly mentioned between] 'Shall not take' and 'Shall not uncover'²⁷ is deemed to be a bastard, but no others²⁸ are to be regarded as bastards.²⁹

Abaye said: All agree that if one cohabited with a menstruant

(1) V. Deut. XXIII, 2.

(2) Under the penalty of flogging (incurred for the infringement of a negative precept).

(3) Such a union is punishable by death at the hands of Beth din,

(4) After her divorce.

(5) The widow of his brother who died without issue.

(6) After the halizah.

(7) Deut. XXIII, 1.

(8) R. Akiba.

(9) Not his lawful wife. Infra 97a.

(10) Flogging (v. supra note 1).

(11) Deut. XXIII, 3.

(12) Forbidden under the penalty for a negative precept (v. supra p. 321, n. 1).

(13) In R. Akiba's category of bastards.

(14) Keth, 29b, Kid. 68a, the marriage, e.g., with one's divorced wife.

(15) The union, e.g., with an Edomite or an Egyptian (v. Deut. XXIII, 8-9) the prohibition of which is derived from the positive precept. The third generation that are born unto then, may enter into the assembly of the Lord (ibid. 9) from which it follows that only the third generation may enter; but not the first, or the second generation. Any prohibition that is derived from a positive precept has only the force of a positive precept and does not involve the penalty of flogging, much less that of kareth. V. Keth. 29b.

(16) That these categories are also classed as bastards.

(17) Deut. XXIII, 1b.

(18) Whence, in view of R. Akiba's deduction, does he derive his ruling in our Mishnah?

(19) Whose husband died without issue.

- (20) Who most decide whether to contract with her the levirate marriage or to submit to halizah from her.
- (21) As one's father's brother's wife.
- (22) Whence does he derive his ruling in our Mishnah?
- (23) If the text of Deut. XXIII, 1b speaks of a woman outraged by one's father (as R. Judah maintains) or of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir (as Simeon the Temanite asserts).
- (24) From which text alone R. Judah and the Rabbis could have deduced their respective rulings, while the case of one's father's wife would follow logically by inference a minori ad majus.
- (25) Cf. Rashal. Cur. edd. insert in parentheses, 'And shall not uncover.'
- (26) By the addition of the text Shall not take.
- (27) I.e., one's father's wife, forbidden under the death penalty at the hands of Beth din.
- (28) The offspring of unions which are forbidden under the penalty of kareth or flogging.
- (29) The proximity of Deut. XXIII, 3 (the text relating to the bastard) to that of v. 1, according to R. Joshua, beats on the case of a father's wife only (v. 2a). The mention of 'shall not uncover' (v. 1b) implies, if it refers to one's father's brother's widow awaiting the levir's decision (the view of the Rabbis and Simeon the Temanite), that cohabitation with her is forbidden to the levir's son by two negative precepts, those of Lev. XVIII, 24 and Deut. XXIII, 1b; and if it refers to a woman whom one's father has outraged (the view of R. Akiba and R. Judah). the text is required to lay down this very prohibition.

or with a sotah,¹ the child [born from either union] is no bastard.² 'A menstruant', since betrothal with her is valid because it is said, And her impurity be upon him,³ even at the time of her menstruation betrothal with her is valid.⁴ 'A sotah' also, since her betrothal is valid.⁵ It has been taught likewise: All agree that if one cohabited with a menstruant or with a sotah or with a widow awaiting the decision of a levir, the child [born from any such union] is no bastard.⁶ And Abaye?⁷ — He was in doubt in the case of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir as to whether [the law⁸ is] in agreement with Rab or with Samuel.⁹

SAID R. SIMEON B. AZZAI etc. [A tanna] recited: Simeon b. 'Azzai said, 'I found a roll of genealogical records in Jerusalem and therein was written "So-and-so is a bastard [having been born] from a forbidden union with] a married woman" and therein was also written "The teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is small in quantity¹⁰ but thoroughly sifted".¹¹ And in it was also written, "Manasseh slew Isaiah"'.¹²

Raba said: He¹² brought him to trial and then slew him. He¹² said to him: Your teacher Moses said, 'For men shall not see Me and live'¹³ and you said, 'I saw the Lord sitting on a throne, high and lifted up'.¹⁴ Your teacher Moses said, 'For what [great nation is there, that hath God so nigh unto them], as the Lord our God is whosoever we call upon him',¹⁵ and you said, 'Seek ye the Lord when he may be found'.¹⁶ Your teacher Moses said, 'The number of thy days I will fulfil'¹⁷ but you said, 'And I will add on to your days fifteen years'.¹⁸ 'I know', thought Isaiah, 'that whatever I may tell him he will not accept; and should I reply at all, I would only cause him to be a wilful [homicide]'. He thereupon pronounced [the Divine] Name and was swallowed up by a cedar. The cedar, however, was brought and sawn asunder. When the saw reached his month he died. [And this was his penalty] for having said, 'And I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips'.¹⁹

[Do not] the contradictions between the Scriptural texts, however, still remain? — 'I saw the Lord',²⁰ [is to be understood] in accordance with what was taught: All the prophets looked into a dim glass,²¹ but Moses looked through a clear glass.²² As to 'Seek ye the Lord when he may be found [etc.] one [verse]¹⁶ applies to an individual,²³ the other²⁴ to a congregation. When [is the time for] an individual? — R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: The ten days between the New Year²⁵ and the Day of Atonement.²⁵ Concerning the number of thy days I will fulfil,²⁶ Tannaim are in disagreement. For it was taught: The number of thy days I will fulfil²⁶ refers to the years of the generations.¹ If one is worthy one is allowed to complete the full period; if unworthy. the number is reduced; so R. Akiba. But the Sages said: If one is worthy years are added to one's life;² if unworthy, the years of his life are reduced. They said to R. Akiba: Behold, Scripture says,³ And I will add unto your days fifteen years!⁴ He replied: The addition was made of his own,⁵ You may know [that this is so]⁶ since the prophet⁷ stood up and prophesied: Behold, a son shall be born to the house of David, Josiah by name,⁸ while Manasseh⁹ had not yet been born.¹⁰ And the Rabbis!¹¹ — Is it written 'from Hezekiah'? It is surely written, 'To the house of David';⁸ he¹² might be born either from Hezekiah or from any other person.¹³

IF A MAN'S WIFE DIED etc. IF A MAN'S SISTER-IN-LAW DIED etc. R. Joseph said: Here Rabbi taught an unnecessary Mishnah.¹⁴

CHAPTER V

MISHNAH. R. GAMALIEL SAID: THERE IS NO [VALIDITY IN A] LETTER OF DIVORCE AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE,¹⁵ NOR IN A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR¹⁶ NOR IN AN ACT OF COHABITATION AFTER ANOTHER ACT OF

COHABITATION,¹⁷ NOR IN A HALIZAH AFTER ANOTHER HALIZAH.¹⁸ THE SAGES, HOWEVER, SAID: A LETTER OF DIVORCE HAS VALIDITY AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE,¹⁹ AND A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR;²⁰ BUT THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT AFTER COHABITATION OR HALIZAH.²¹

HOW [IS THE RELEASE FROM THE LEVIRATE BOND²² EFFECTED]? — IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO HIS SISTER-IN-LAW AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH WITH HIM.²³ IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND PARTICIPATED IN THE HALIZAH, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN FROM HIM A LETTER OF DIVORCE.²⁴ IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, BEHOLD THIS IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT.²⁵

IF THE LEVIR GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN [A SECOND] LETTER OF DIVORCE²⁶ AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH.²⁷ IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH.²⁸ IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT²⁹ AFTER HALIZAH HAD BEEN PERFORMED.

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER HALIZAH³⁰

(1) The span of life allotted to every human being at his birth.

(2) The meaning of fulfil is addition to the allotted span of life.

(3) II Kings XX, 6.

(4) Emphasis on add.

(5) Years which were originally allotted to him and then curtailed.

(6) That the years added were only those allotted to Hezekiah at his birth and reduced at his illness.

(7) In the days of Jeroboam, long before the birth of Hezekiah.

(8) I Kings XIII, 2.

(9) From whom Josiah descended.

(10) At the time of Hezekiah's illness. Manasseh, in fact, was born three years after his father's illness (v. II Kings XXI, 2); and since the birth of his son Josiah was prophetically announced long before the birth of his father Hezekiah, it is obvious that the years allotted to Hezekiah at his birth extended beyond the year of his illness (to include the year of Manasseh's birth). Consequently, the original number must have been reduced at his illness; and, at his recovery, only that was added which was first reduced.

(11) How could they, in view of the argument advanced, maintain that view years were added to Hezekiah's life?

(12) Josiah.

(13) Of the house of David.

(14) Since the laws therein enumerated are self-evident. Lev. XVIII, 18, from where the prohibition of marrying the sister of one's wife originates, distinctly limits the prohibition to the wife's life-time: And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister . . . in her life-time. V. Rashi a.l. According to Tosaf (s.v. שנה a.l. q.v.) the unnecessary Mishnah is only that portion which relates to the sister-in-law whose case could be inferred from that of the wife a minori ad majus.

(15) Given in succession by one levir to two sisters-in-law, i.e., the widows of a deceased childless brother, or by two levirs to one sister-in-law. (The term sister-in-law used throughout this chapter is to be understood in the sense defined). The second divorce is invalid and the relatives of the second widow are, therefore, permitted to the levir, and so are the relatives of the one widow to the second levir. Whether the first divorce is valid or not, the second is at all events valueless. For if the first is valid the levirate bond with both the widows is thereby severed and the second widow (in the case of one levir) or the one widow (in the case of two Levirs) when receiving the second letter of divorce, is a complete stranger to the levir. If, on the other hand, the first divorce was invalid, the second also, for the same reason, is invalid.

(16) Addressed in succession (a) by one levir to two sisters-in-law or (b) by two levirs to one sister-in-law. The first ma'amar has satisfied all the requirements of the levirate obligations and, consequently, (a) the second widow, or (b) the one widow to whom the second ma'amar was addressed, requires no letter of divorce from (a) the one levir or (b) the second levir respectively. The second widow, moreover, does not cause the prohibition to the levir of the first widow, and her relatives also are permitted to the levir as are those of the one widow to the second levir.

(17) The second act by the one levir with the second widow or by the second levir with the one widow respectively, is deemed to be one of mere adultery and has no matrimonial validity to cause the prohibition of her relatives to the levir.

(18) Cf. supra n. 2. The first halizah has finally severed the levirate bond between the levir or the levirs and the widow or the widows. The second halizah is, therefore, valueless.

(19) The relatives of the second widow are, therefore, forbidden to the levir (as relatives of his legal divorcee), and the relatives of the one widow are similarly forbidden to the second levir. The first letter of divorce, the Sages maintain, is only partially valid since halizah also is required. The levirate bond consequently is not thereby completely severed and the second divorce brings the widow under the category of a divorced woman. Cf supra 327 n. 1.

(20) The first ma'amar effected only partial matrimony and the levirate obligations were not fully satisfied before the consummation of the marriage took place. The second ma'amar, since it was made before consummation had taken place, is, therefore, valid.

(21) Either of these acts satisfies fully all the requirements of the levirate obligations. The former effected complete union; the latter final severance. No act in connection with the levirate obligations that follows either of these can, therefore, have any validity.

(22) Between one levir and one sister-in-law. This section has no reference to the dispute in the previous section. V. Gemara infra.

(23) But no levirate marriage may now be contracted. The ma'amar alone has not completely satisfied the requirements of the levirate obligations (cf. supra n. 1), hence the need for halizah. Since, however, a divorce had been given the levir had placed himself under the prohibition of Deut. XXV, 9 'That doth not build': if he once refused to build he must never again build (v. supra 10b), hence the prohibition of the levirate marriage.

(24) To annul the ma'amar which, in some respects, has the force of a betrothal. The halizah alone is not enough since it only severs a levirate bond but does not annul a ma'amar.

(25) This is discussed in the Gemara infra.

(26) Even according to R. Gamaliel. The divorce is required to annul the ma'amar since it is possible that the first divorce was invalid and the ma'amar had, therefore, been valid. According to the Sages, who regard the divorce as partially valid, the ma'amar also is partially valid and a divorce is required to annul that part.

(27) In order to sever thereby the levirate bond. Levirate marriage, however, must not take place now after the delivery of the first letter of divorce (v. supra p. 325, n. 4 final clause).

(28) Levirate marriage is forbidden owing to the first divorce (v. supra p. 325, n. 4, final clause), a letter of divorce is required owing to the act of cohabitation, while halizah is necessary to sever the levirate bond.

(29) Whether it be the addressing of a ma'amar or cohabitation. The levirate bond has completely disappeared.

(30) Cf. supra n. 3. This refers to the cases where halizah was performed first. With reference to the last three cases, where cohabitation took place first, the expression should be 'no act is valid after cohabitation'. V. Gemara infra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 50b

AND THE LAW IS THE SAME WHETHER THERE IS ONE SISTER-IN-LAW TO ONE LEVIR OR TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW TO ONE LEVIR.

HOW?¹ — IF THE LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO THE ONE² AND A MA'AMAR TO THE OTHER,² TWO LETTERS OF DIVORCE³ AND ONE HALIZAH⁴ ARE REQUIRED.⁵ IF HE ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO ONE AND GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO THE OTHER, [THE ONE] REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE⁶ AND [THE OTHER MUST PERFORM] THE HALIZAH.⁷ IF HE ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO ONE AND COHABITED WITH THE

OTHER, BOTH REQUIRE LETTERS OF DIVORCE⁸ AND [ONE MUST PERFORM] THE HALIZAH.⁹ IF HE ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER, IT IS NECESSARY FOR THE FIRST TO OBTAIN A LETTER OF DIVORCE.¹⁰

IF THE LEVIR GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER, HALIZAH IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH.¹¹ IF HE GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND COHABITED WITH THE OTHER, [THE SECOND] REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE¹² AND MUST ALSO PERFORM THE HALIZAH.¹³ [IF HE GAVE] A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO THE OTHER, [THE SECOND] REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND [ONE OF THEM MUST PERFORM] THE HALIZAH. [IF HE GAVE] A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS THE HALIZAH.¹⁴

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE ONE AND FROM THE OTHER, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH [FROM ONE] AND ADDRESSED [TO THE OTHER] A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH THE ONE AND WITH THE OTHER, OR COHABITED [WITH THE ONE] AND ADDRESSED [TO THE OTHER] A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER THE HALIZAH.¹⁵ [THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW] WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR TO TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW OR TWO LEVIRS TO ONE SISTER-IN-LAW.¹⁶

[IF THE LEVIR]¹⁷ SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER¹⁸ A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER THE HALIZAH, WHETHER [IT WAS PERFORMED] IN THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE,¹⁹ OR AT THE END.²⁰ IN THE CASE OF COHABITATION, IF IT TOOK PLACE FIRST NO ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT HAS ANY VALIDITY; IF IT OCCURRED, HOWEVER, IN THE MIDDLE²¹ OR AT THE END²² SOMETHING VALID²³ STILL REMAINS.²⁴ R. NEHEMIAH SAID: WITH COHABITATION AS WITH HALIZAH, WHETHER IT TOOK PLACE IN THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE, OR AT THE END, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT.²⁵

GEMARA. Their difference²⁶ concerns only a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce and a ma'amar after another ma'amar, but one letter of divorce to one sister-in-law or one ma'amar to one sister-in-law is valid.²⁷

Why did the Rabbis say that a letter of divorce to one sister-in-law is valid?²⁸ — Because it is also valid elsewhere.²⁹ For should you suggest that it is not valid,³⁰ it might be argued that since a letter of divorce serves to release a woman and halizah serves to release a woman, as the letter of divorce is of no effect,³¹ so is the halizah also of no effect, and thus one would come to consummate marriage after halizah.³²

And why did the Rabbis say that a ma'amar with one sister-in-law is valid?³³ — Because it is valid elsewhere.³⁴ For should you say that it is not valid,³⁵ it might be argued that since a ma'amar serves the purpose of acquisition³⁴ and cohabitation serves the purpose of acquisition,³⁶ as a ma'amar is of no effect,³⁷ so is cohabitation also of no effect³⁸ and one would thus consummate marriage³⁹ after an act of cohabitation.⁴⁰

And why did the Rabbis say that after an invalid cohabitation something⁴¹ lingers?⁴² — It might be replied that if it is a cohabitation⁴³ after a letter of divorce,⁴⁴ a preventive measure was made⁴⁵ against cohabitation after halizah;⁴⁶ and if it is a cohabitation⁴³ after a ma'amar⁴⁴ a preventive measure had to be made⁴⁷ against cohabitation after cohabitation.⁴⁸

And why did the Rabbis say that after the invalid halizah⁴⁹ nothing lingers?⁵⁰ — It may be replied: What kind of preventive measure could have been enacted! Should halizah after a letter of divorce be forbidden as a preventive measure against halizah after halizah?⁵¹ Under such circumstances, surely, halizah might well be indefinitely continued!⁵² And should halizah after a ma'amar be forbidden as a preventive measure against halizah after cohabitation?⁵³ Surely [it may be replied] is not in the case of halizah after a ma'amar, a letter of divorce required in respect of one's ma'amar? So also in the case of halizah after cohabitation, a letter of divorce is required in respect of one's cohabitation.⁵⁴

Raba said:

- (1) How are the obligations of the levirate carried out where there is one levir and two sisters-in-law?
 - (2) Sister-in-law.
 - (3) One for each woman, in accordance with the view of the Sages in our Mishnah that a ma'amar after a ma'amar is valid.
 - (4) With either. The halizah with one exempts her rival.
 - (5) Levirate marriage, however, is now forbidden since one must not build two houses'. V. supra.
 - (6) Marriage with her must not be consummated on account of the divorce of the second; hence the necessity for a divorce to annul the ma'amar which the halizah cannot do.
 - (7) To sever thereby the levirate bond which a letter of divorce cannot do.
 - (8) On account of the ma'amar and the cohabitation respectively. The second widow may not be retained in matrimony owing to the bond of the ma'amar with the first.
 - (9) The other becoming thereby exempt from the levirate obligations. The divorce alone does not set the second free because the cohabitation with her was not the performance of a legal commandment but an unlawful act.
 - (10) The halizah of this second cannot annul the force of the ma'amar of the first.
 - (11) The halizah is performed by one who thereby exempts the other. V. Gemara infra.
 - (12) She is forbidden to the levir on account of the divorce of the first.
 - (13) Divorce alone is not enough since the cohabitation was unlawful (cf. supra note 3).
 - (14) The halizah of the second sets both widows free; and the divorce of the first is of no consequence.
 - (15) Cf p. 329, n. 4. The relatives of the second widow are permitted to him as if he had not acted at all after the first halizah.
 - (16) And the two levirs performed the above mentioned acts with the same widow.
 - (17) Where there was only one levir and one sister-in-law.
 - (18) The same sister-in-law.
 - (19) Between a ma'amar and a divorce. If, e.g., he gave a letter of divorce to one, submitted to halizah from the other and then addressed a ma'amar to one of them.
 - (20) After a ma'amar and a divorce. The halizah is invariably valid, and any ma'amar addressed subsequently has no validity at all, and the widow requires no divorce.
 - (21) If, e.g., he divorced one, cohabited with the other and addressed a ma'amar to a third, in which case the cohabitation, owing to the previous divorce, was unlawful.
 - (22) If he divorced one, addressed a ma'amar to the other, and then cohabited with one of them. V. supra n. 7.
 - (23) Of the levirate bond.
 - (24) Hence, in the first case (v. supra n. 7), the relatives of the last widow are forbidden to him, and in the second case (v. supra n. 8), halizah is required, since the levirate bond cannot be severed by a letter of divorce.
 - (25) After cohabitation a letter of divorce without halizah is enough, and betrothal of the other after cohabitation with the first is invalid.
 - (26) That of R. Gamaliel and the Sages in our Mishnah.

- (27) The divorce prevents subsequent levirate marriage under the prohibition of 'that doth not build' etc. (v. supra p. 328, n. 4, second clause); and the ma'amar prevents the levirate marriage of a rival under the injunction, 'a levir may build one house but not two houses', and necessitates also a letter of divorce should it be desired to cancel the ma'amar.
- (28) In the Pentateuch, surely, only halizah was prescribed and the prohibition under 'that doth not build' should apply to the prescribed ceremony only!
- (29) In the release of all married women.
- (30) And that the levir may marry the widow even after he gave her a letter of divorce.
- (31) v. supra n. 4.
- (32) And thus infringe a Pentateuchal prohibition.
- (33) Forbidding levirate marriage with her rival. Since, according to the Pentateuch, acquisition of the sister-in-law is effected by the consummation of the levirate marriage, that consummation only should have had the force of forbidding marriage with the rival.
- (34) The usual betrothal between man and woman, which is as binding as the consummation of marriage.
- (35) And that after a ma'amar had been addressed to a sister-in-law her rival may be married.
- (36) Cf. supra n. 7.
- (37) Without subsequent cohabitation.
- (38) Unless there was also a ma'amar.
- (39) With a rival.
- (40) With one of the widows. Such a marriage, however, would infringe (v. supra note 1) a Pentateuchal prohibition.
- (41) Of the levirate bond.
- (42) Halizah being required in the case of the second widow in addition to the letter of divorce. V. supra p. 330, nn. 6 and 7.
- (43) With one sister-in-law.
- (44) To the other.
- (45) V. p. 332. n. 16.
- (46) Were a letter of divorce alone, without halizah, permitted, it might have been assumed that as unlawful cohabitation is so effective it might also be effective enough to annul a previous halizah.
- (47) Cf. p. 332, n. 26, and p. 330, nn. 2 and 3.
- (48) It might have been assumed that as unlawful cohabitation has the force of validity even after a ma'amar which is a legal kinyan, it has also the same force after a kinyan that had been effected through lawful cohabitation. Acting on this argument one would infringe the prohibition of marriage with one's brother's wife.
- (49) Performed after a divorce or a ma'amar.
- (50) Should the levir subsequent to such a halizah address a ma'amar or give a letter of divorce to a third sister-in-law his act would have no validity whatsoever.
- (51) So that a levir does not submit to the halizah of two sisters-in-law in succession, and two levirs do not submit in succession to the halizah of one sister-in-law.
- (52) And none will be the worse for it.
- (53) That it be not assumed that halizah without a letter of divorce is sufficient after an act of cohabitation.
- (54) The implication of 'nothing lingers after an unlawful halizah' is the invalidity of all subsequent acts. Any previous act such as ma'amar or cohabitation is valid, and a letter of divorce to annul it is certainly required.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 51a

What is R. Gamaliel's reason?¹ — Because he was in doubt whether a letter of divorce does, or does not set aside [the levirate bond, and whether] a ma'amar does, or does not effect a kinyan.² 'Whether a letter of divorce does, or does not set aside the levirate bond': If the first³ does set aside [the levirate bond], what purpose could the latter serve?⁴ If the first³ does not set aside [the levirate bond], the latter also does not set it aside. 'Whether a ma'amar does, or does not effect a kinyan': if the first⁵ does effect a kinyan, what purpose could the latter serve?⁴ And if the first⁵ effects no kinyan, the latter also does not.

Abaye raised the following objection against him: R. Gamaliel, however, admits that 'there is [validity in] a letter of divorce after a ma'amar,⁶ in a ma'amar after a letter of divorce,⁷ in a letter of divorce after cohabitation and a ma'amar,⁸ and in a ma'amar after cohabitation and a letter of divorce'.⁹ Now, if R. Gamaliel was in doubt,¹⁰ the cohabitation¹¹ should be regarded as if it had taken place at the beginning,¹² and thus constitute a kinyan; for surely we have learnt, IN THE CASE OF COHABITATION, IF IT TOOK PLACE FIRST, NO ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT HAS ANY VALIDITY!

But, said Abaye, though obvious to R. Gamaliel that a letter of divorce does set aside the levirate bond and that a ma'amar does effect a kinyan,¹³ the Rabbis have nevertheless ruled that with the sister-in-law a letter of divorce is partially valid and a ma'amar is partially valid. Consequently, a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce does not set aside the levirate bond since this¹⁴ was already set aside by the first,¹⁵ and a ma'amar after a ma'amar does not constitute a kinyan since this kinyan¹⁶ has already been constituted by the first,¹⁵ with a letter of divorce after a ma'amar, and a ma'amar after a letter of divorce, however, the one act¹⁷ sets aside¹⁸ while the other¹⁹ effects a kinyan.²⁰ (And the Rabbis?²¹ — [They hold that] the Rabbis have instituted for every levir a letter of divorce and a ma'amar in respect of every sister-in-law.)²²

But as to an invalid cohabitation²³ [according to R. Gamaliel]²⁴ it is [in one respect] of superior force to a ma'amar and [in another respect] of inferior force to a ma'amar. It is superior to a ma'amar, since whereas a ma'amar after another ma'amar is not effective,²⁵ an act of cohabitation after a ma'amar is effective.²⁶ It is inferior to a ma'amar, for whereas a ma'amar after a letter of divorce constitutes a kinyan of all that the letter of divorce has left,²⁷ cohabitation after a letter of divorce does not constitute a kinyan of all that the divorce has left.²⁸

Our Rabbis taught; How [are we to understand] R. Gamaliel's statement that there is [no validity in] a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce? If two sisters-in-law have fallen to the lot of one levir, and he gave a letter of divorce to one as well as to the other, he submits, in accordance with R. Gamaliel's statement, to halizah from the first,²⁹ and is forbidden to marry her relatives,³⁰ though the relatives of the second one are permitted to him.³¹ But the Sages said: If he gave a letter of divorce to one and to the other, he is forbidden to marry the relatives of both³² and he submits to halizah from either of them. And the same law applies where there are two levirs³³ and one sister-in-law.

What did R. Gamaliel mean by his statement that³⁴ there is no [validity in] a ma'amar after another ma'amar'? If two sisters-in-law have fallen to the lot of one levir, and he addressed a ma'amar to the one as well as to the other, he gives, according to R. Gamaliel, a letter of divorce to the first, submits also to her halizah, and is in consequence forbidden to marry her relatives,³⁵ though the relatives of the second are permitted to him.³⁶ The Sages, however, said: He gives letters of divorce to both, and the relatives of both are forbidden to him,³² while he submits to halizah from one of them. And the same law is to be applied where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law.³⁷

The Master said, 'If he gave³⁸ a letter of divorce to one as well as to the other, he submits, according to R. Gamaliel's statement, to halizah from the first and is forbidden to marry her relatives, though the relatives of the second are permitted to him'. Must this be assumed to present an objection against a ruling of Samuel, since Samuel stated, 'If he submitted to halizah from the one³⁹ who had been divorced,⁴⁰ her rival⁴¹ is not thereby exempt'!⁴² — Samuel can answer you: What I said was in agreement with him who maintains that a levirate bond exists,⁴³ while R. Gamaliel holds the opinion that no levirate bond exists.⁴⁴

Since R. Gamaliel, however, is of the opinion that no levirate bond exists,

(1) In our Mishnah, v. supra p. 327, nn. 1 and 2.

(2) To constitute a legal marriage.

- (3) Letter of divorce.
- (4) Obviously none. Consequently it is valueless.
- (5) Ma'amar.
- (6) If the ma'amar was addressed to one of the widows and the letter of divorce was subsequently given to the other, the first also is forbidden levirate marriage, while the relatives of both are forbidden to the levir.
- (7) If a letter of divorce was given to one of the widows first, and a ma'amar was subsequently addressed to the second, a letter of divorce must also be given to the second in order to annul thereby the force of the ma'amar.
- (8) Which was addressed to one of the widows prior to the cohabitation with the second that preceded the letter of divorce to the third. The validity of the letter of divorce causes the prohibition to the levir of the relatives of the third widow.
- (9) Given to one of the widows prior to the cohabitation with the second that preceded the ma'amar addressed to the third. The ma'amar constitutes a kinyan, and the relatives of the third widow are forbidden to the levir, while she herself can be released by a letter of divorce only.
- (10) As to the validity of a letter of divorce and a ma'amar given or addressed respectively to a sister-in-law.
- (11) Which took place between the other two acts.
- (12) And the act that follows it, whether it be the delivery of a letter of divorce or the addressing of a ma'amar, should in any case be invalid: In the case of a ma'amar, cohabitation, and divorce, if the ma'amar with the first was valid and effected kinyan, the cohabitation with the second was obviously invalid and much more so the letter of divorce that was given to the third. If, on the other hand, the ma'amar to the first was invalid, the cohabitation with the second widow that followed was obviously valid and there could consequently be no validity in the letter of divorce that was subsequently given to the third. Similarly in the case of divorce, cohabitation and ma'amar, if the letter of divorce given to the first widow was valid the cohabitation that followed had no validity and much more so the ma'amar that came last. If, on the other hand, the letter of divorce given to the first widow was invalid, the cohabitation with the second widow that followed was obviously valid and consequently there could be no validity in the ma'amar that was subsequently addressed to the third widow. In both cases, then, cohabitation which took place between the other two acts should be as valid as if it had taken place at the beginning.
- (13) Cohabitation, therefore, that follows either of these acts cannot have the same force as cohabitation that takes place first.
- (14) Whatever part of the levirate bond a divorce can set aside.
- (15) And the second can add nothing to it.
- (16) As far as a ma'amar has the force of constituting it.
- (17) The divorce.
- (18) Partially.
- (19) The ma'amar.
- (20) V. supra n. 4. In the case of a divorce after a ma'amar, that part of the levirate bond with the first widow which the ma'amar did not effect is set aside by the letter of divorce that was given to the second. Similarly, where there are two levirs and one widow, whatever was not covered by the kinyan of the ma'amar of the first levir is set aside by the letter of divorce of the second. So also in the case of a ma'amar after a letter of divorce, whatever part of the levirate bond remained after the letter of divorce had been given to the first widow (or to one widow by the first levir) is brought under the kinyan constituted by the ma'amar that has been addressed to the second widow (or to the one widow by the second levir).
- (21) The Sages in our Mishnah. How, in view of what has just been explained — can they maintain that A LETTER OF DIVORCE HAS VALIDITY AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE, AND A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR?
- (22) The divorce or ma'amar of one levir does not in any way affect the validity of that of any other levir, nor does any of these acts, performed by a levir in respect of one sister-in-law, affect his performance of these acts in respect of another sister-in-law. The divorce or ma'amar in respect of the first sister-in-law does not, therefore, affect that of the second, and the performance of the same acts by the first levir in respect of one sister-in-law does not invalidate the performance of these acts in respect of the same sister-in-law by the other levir. Hence the opinion of the Rabbis in our Mishnah.
- (23) That which was preceded by divorce or ma'amar.
- (24) Who stated that a letter of divorce following a cohabitation which followed a ma'amar, and a ma'amar following a cohabitation which followed a letter of divorce are valid.

(25) As has been stated supra.

(26) As may be inferred from the ruling concerning 'a letter of divorce after cohabitation and a ma'amar', which implies that cohabitation after a ma'amar is valid (Rashi). Cf. Tosaf. s.v. עדיפא, and תוספות ישנים a.l.

(27) For should a ma'amar, subsequent to the first, be addressed to a third widow it would be altogether invalid, R. Gamaliel invariably admitting no ma'amar after another ma'amar whether the first one was, or was not preceded by a letter of divorce.

(28) A ma'amar being valid even if it was addressed after an act of cohabitation that followed a letter of divorce.

(29) Though he could certainly submit to halizah from the second, the letter of divorce to whom is invalid, and thereby exempt the first also. He is advised, however, to submit to halizah from the first because by so doing he averts the prohibition to him of the second widow's relatives who, had he submitted to her halizah, would have become forbidden to him as the 'relatives of his haluzah'. The prohibition to him of the relatives of the first as 'relatives of his haluzah' is of no practical consequence since they are already, owing to the divorce he had given her forbidden to him as the 'relatives of his divorcee'.

(30) They being the relatives of both his divorcee and his haluzah. Cf. supra p. 336, n. 7.

(31) Because she is neither his haluzah nor his divorcee, the halizah not having been performed by her and the letter of divorce that was given to her being invalid.

(32) Both divorces being valid.

(33) And each of them gave a letter of divorce to the one sister-in-law. According to R. Gamaliel, halizah is performed with the first levir and the second levir is permitted to marry her relatives; while according to the Rabbis her relatives are forbidden to both levirs and the halizah is performed with either of them.

(34) Lit., 'how'.

(35) As the 'relatives of his haluzah'.

(36) Since she is neither his wife nor his haluzah nor his divorcee.

(37) Cf. supra n. 4.

(38) The Heb. uses here the present participle instead of the perfect used supra in the original.

(39) Of two sisters-in-law, the widows of his deceased childless brother.

(40) By him, prior to the performance of the halizah.

(41) Who had not been divorced and whose levirate bond has consequently still its full force.

(42) Supra 27a. A halizah performed by one whose levirate bond had been weakened by divorce cannot sever the levirate bond of the other which had never been weakened by divorce and had retained therefore its full force (v. supra n. 2). This is contradictory to R. Gamaliel's view according to which the halizah of the first, though it followed her divorce which had weakened her levirate bond, is effective enough to exempt her rival whose levirate bond retained its full force, since her divorce was invalid and might be regarded as never having taken place.

(43) Between the levir and the sister-in-law. This levirate bond can only be severed by a halizah which is free from all objection.

(44) v. infra 109a. Hence, even a halizah which is not free from objection is effective enough to sever it.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 51b

the Rabbis are presumably of the opinion that a levirate bond does exist,¹ and yet it was stated in the final clause, 'And the same law applies where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law'!² Must it then be said that this represents an objection to a statement made by Rabbah son of R. Huna in the name of Rab? For Rabbah son of R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: A halizah of an impaired character must go the round of all the brothers!³ — Rabbah son of R. Huna can answer you: Both according to the view of R. Gamaliel and that of the Rabbis no levirate bond exists,⁴ and their difference here extends only to the question of a divorce that followed another divorce and a ma'amar that followed another ma'amar.

The Master said, 'If he addressed a ma'amar to the one as well as to the other, he gives, according to R. Gamaliel, a letter of divorce to the first, submits also to her halizah, and is in consequence forbidden to marry her relatives, though the relatives of the second are permitted to him'. Now, consider! Since R. Gamaliel holds that there is no [validity in a] ma'amar that follows another ma'amar, the first [sister-in-law] should even be permitted to contract the levirate marriage!⁵ — A preventive ordinance had to be made⁶ against the possibility of the levir's marrying the second.

R. Johanan said: R. Gamaliel, Beth Shammai, R. Simeon b. 'Azzai and R. Nehemiah are all of the opinion that a ma'amar constitutes a [fairly]⁷ perfect kinyan:⁸

As to R. Gamaliel, there is the statement already mentioned.⁹

Beth Shammai? — For we learned: If two of three brothers were married to two sisters and the third was unmarried, and when one of the sisters' husbands died, the unmarried brother addressed to her a ma'amar and then his second brother died, Beth Shammai say: His wife¹⁰ [remains] with him¹¹ while the other is exempt¹² as being his wife's sister.¹³ cannot have any validity¹⁴ if, however, the cohabitation of the first has no validity, then that of the second also has no validity.¹⁵ Now, the cohabitation of one who is nine years of age has been given by the Rabbis¹⁵ the same force as that of a ma'amar¹⁶ and yet R. Simeon stated that such cohabitation¹⁷ has no validity.¹⁸

Ben 'Azzai? — For it was taught: Ben 'Azzai stated, 'A ma'amar is valid after another ma'amar where it concerns two levirs¹⁹ and one sister-in-law,²⁰ but no ma'amar is valid after a ma'amar where it concerns two sisters-in-law and one levir'.²¹

R. Nehemiah? — For we learned, R. NEHEMIAH SAID: WITH COHABITATION AS WITH HALIZAH WHETHER IT TOOK PLACE AT THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE, OR AT THE END, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT. Now, an invalid cohabitation has been given by the Rabbis the same force as a ma'amar,²² and yet it was stated, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT.²³

HOW . . . IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR etc.

(1) It is now assumed that, as the Rabbis disagreed with R. Gamaliel on the question of a divorce that followed another divorce, they disagreed also on that of the levirate bond.

(2) According to which the Rabbis maintain that either levir may submit to the halizah (v. supra p. 337, n. 4) and the performance of this impaired halizah exempts the other brother,

(3) V. supra 26b. The performance of it by one brother does not exempt any of the others!

(4) While Rabbah son of R. Huna himself does not follow this view but that of the authority who maintains that a levirate bond does exist.

(5) Since the ma'amar to the second had no validity at all.

(6) That levirate marriage shall not be contracted with the first.

(7) V. Rashi, a.l.

(8) I.e., it is regarded as a perfect kinyan in some, though not in all respects. Cf. Tosaf. s.v. דְּתַנִּי supra 19a.

(9) Supra, that a ma'amar is invalid after another ma'amar, because the first had already constituted an kinyan.

(10) I.e., the widow to whom he had addressed the ma'amar.

(11) Because the ma'amar he had addressed to her constituted a kinyan and she is regarded as his wife. Her sister, when she subsequently became subject to the levirate marriage through the death of her husband, could no more be married to him since at that time she was already 'his wife's sister'.

(12) Even from halizah.

(13) 'Ed. IV, 9, supra 29a. (10) Of two young levirs of the ages of nine years and one day. According to the Rabbis, if two levirs of such an age cohabited successively with their sister-in-law, the widow of their deceased brother, their acts have the same force as that of a ma'amar that followed a ma'amar. As with a ma'amar the second has also the validity of a betrothal and causes the prohibition of the sister-in-law to the first, so with cohabitation, the act of the second levir causes the sister-in-law to be forbidden to the first levir also. R. Simeon, however, regards the first act only as a valid kinyan. The other consequently is invalid. V. infra 96b. (11) Effecting a kinyan.

(14) The kinyan of the first would not admit it.

(15) Infra 96b.

(16) V. supra p. 339, n. 10.

(17) By the second levir.

(18) Obviously because the kinyan had been effected by the cohabitation of the first. Thus it follows that a ma'amar also (cohabitation and ma'amar having equal validity) effects kinyan.

(19) Each one of whom had addressed to the widow only one ma'amar.

(20) Since each levir is entitled to a ma'amar. V. supra 51a.

(21) The second ma'amar has no validity, because by the first ma'amar the levir had already effected the kinyan of the sister-in-law to whom he had addressed it.

(22) Since in both cases, divorce alone is not enough to sever the levirate bond, halizah also being required.

(23) Obviously because the cohabitation like a ma'amar had constituted a kinyan.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 52a

Is this an illustration of a letter of divorce after a letter of divorce?¹ Rab Judah replied it is this that was meant: [The illustration of] A LETTER OF DIVORCE AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE and OF A MA'AMAR AFTER AN OTHER MA'AMAR is as stated;² but³ HOW IS THE RELEASE [FROM THE LEVIRATE BOND EFFECTED] where there is one levir and one sister-in-law? — IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO HIS SISTER-IN-LAW AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH WITH HIM.⁴

IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, BEHOLD THIS IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT. Might it be suggested that this provides support for R. Huna? For R. Huna stated: The precept of marriage with a sister-in-law is properly performed when the levir first betroths, and then cohabits with her.⁵ — One might read,⁶ THIS IS also IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT. Is not this obvious? — It might have been presumed that since a Master stated, 'If the levir addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law, the levirate bond disappears, and he comes under the bond of betrothal and marriage',⁷ he⁸ is not performing the commandment,⁹ hence we were taught [that he does].

[To turn to] the main text. 'R. Huna said: The precept of marriage with a sister-in-law is properly performed when the levir first betroths and then cohabits with her. If he cohabited with her, and then addressed to her a ma'amar a kinyan is nevertheless constituted.' 'If he cohabited with her and then addressed to her a ma'amar is so obvious,¹⁰ since he had acquired her by the cohabitation!¹¹ — Read, rather, 'If he cohabited with her without previously addressing to her a ma'amar a kinyan is nevertheless constituted'. But was it not taught that the penalty of flogging¹² is inflicted upon him?¹³ — Chastisement¹⁴ was meant, which is a Rabbinical penalty.¹⁵ For Rab ordered the chastisement¹⁶ of any person who betrothed by cohabitation,¹⁷ who betrothed in the open street,¹⁸ or who betrothed without previous negotiation;¹⁹ who annulled a letter of divorce,²⁰ or who made a declaration against a letter of divorce;²¹ who was insolent²² towards the representative of the Rabbis,²³ or who allowed a Rabbinical ban upon him to remain for thirty days and did not come to the Beth din to request the removal of that ban; and of a son-in-law who lives in his father-in-law's house. [You say,] only if he lives,²⁴ but not if he only passes by? Surely, a man once passed by the door of his father-in-law's house, and R. Shesheth ordered his chastisement! — That man was suspected of immoral relations with his mother-in-law. The Nehardeans stated: Rab ordered the chastisement of none of these²⁵ except him who betrothed by cohabitation without preliminary negotiation. Others say: Even with preliminary negotiation; because [such a practice is sheer] licentiousness. Our Rabbis taught: How is betrothal effected with a ma'amar? — If he gave her²⁶ some money or anything of value.²⁷ And how is it effected by a deed? — 'How is it effected by a deed'? Surely as has been stated:²⁸ If he wrote for her on a piece of paper or on a sherd, although it was not worth even a perutah,²⁹ 'Behold thou art be trothed unto me'!³⁰ Abaye replied, It is this that was meant: How is the deed of the kethubah³¹ in a levirate marriage [to be drawn up]? He writes for her. 'I, So-and-so, son of So-and-so, undertake to feed and maintain in a suitable manner my sister-in-law So-and-so, provided that her kethubah remains a charge upon the estate of her first husband'.³² If, however, she is unable to obtain it from her first husband, provision was made by the Rabbis [that she is to receive it] from the second,³³ in order that it may not be easy for him to divorce her.³⁴

Abaye enquired of Rabbah: What is the law if he gave her³⁵ a letter of divorce and said, 'Behold thou art divorced from me, but thou art not permitted to any other man'?³⁶ The divorce of a sister-in-law being Rabbinically valid, [shall I say that] only a divorce which is valid in the case of a married woman is valid in the case of a sister-in-law, but a divorce which is invalid in the case of a married woman is also invalid in the case of a sister-in-law,³⁷ or [had provision to be made here³⁸ against] the possibility of mistaking it for an unqualified divorce?³⁹ — The other replied: Provision has to be made against the possibility of mistaking it for an unqualified divorce.³⁴ Rabbah b. Hanan demurred: Now then,⁴⁰ had he given her a mere scrap of paper would he also have disqualified her?⁴¹ The other replied: There [the scrap of paper] does not cause the woman to be unfit for a priest;⁴² here, however, [the qualified divorce] does cause the woman to become unfit for a priest⁴³, for it was taught, Neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband,⁴⁴ even if she was only divorced from her husband⁴⁵ they may not take her,⁴⁶ and that is what was meant by the 'scent of the divorce' that causes a woman's unfitness for a priest.⁴⁷

Rami b. Hama said: It has been definitely⁴⁸ stated that if a man said to a scribe, 'Write a letter of divorce for my betrothed so that when I have married her I may divorce her' the letter of divorce is valid,⁴⁹ because it was in his power⁵⁰ to divorce her;⁵¹

(1) The Sages speak of a letter of divorce another letter of divorce, while the illustration which follows describes a ma'amar that was followed by a letter of divorce!

(2) In the Baraitha supra 51a, 'Our Rabbis taught: How . . . R. Gamaliel's statement etc.' The Mishnah, however, provides no explanation of illustration of these cases, and proceeds to another point.

(3) This is the meaning of what follows.

(4) V. supra p. 325, n. 4.

(5) And ma'amar and betrothal are essentially the same form of kinyan

(11) What need then was there to state the obvious?

(12) Malkoth (v. Glos.) inflicted for the transgression of Pentateuchal negative precepts.

(13) For the omission of the ma'amar, prior to his cohabitation, A ma'amar is consequently (v. supra n. 9) a Pentateuchal requirement. How, then, could it be said that a kinyan may be constituted though the ma'amar had been omitted!

- (25) Cases, enumerated supra.
- (26) The levir to the sister-in-law.
- (27) And addressed to her the ma'amar in the prescribed form: 'Be thou betrothed unto me by this levirate ma'amar. Though betrothal with money in the case of an ordinary union constitutes perfect kinyan, in the case of betrothal by a levir (to whom a sister-in-law is ordinarily forbidden, and betrothal with whom is consequently invalid) betrothal alone, even when it concerns a levirate union, is not sufficient to constitute a kinyan until consummation of the marriage has taken place.
- (28) In the case of any other betrothal that is effected by means of a deed.
- (29) V. Glos.
- (30) Kid. 9a. As betrothal by money in the case of a levirate union takes the same form as that of an ordinary betrothal so should betrothal by deed!
- (31) By 'deed' the kethubah (v. Glos.) was meant and not the 'deed of the ma'amar'.
- (32) The deceased brother (supra 38a) because 'a wife has been given to him from heaven' (v. supra 39a and notes).
- (33) The levir who married her.
- (34) Cf. supra 39a.
- (35) The levir to the sister-in-law.
- (36) Does such a qualified divorce effect the prohibition of the widow to the levir and to his brother as if an unqualified divorce had been given to her? In the case of a married woman no divorce can release her unless it was free from all qualifying conditions.
- (37) Hence there is no validity in this divorce, and the sister-in-law remains permitted to the levirs as if no divorce had ever been given.
- (38) That the divorce is valid despite its qualification (v. supra n. 7).
- (39) Were the widow to be permitted to the levir after a qualified divorce she might erroneously be permitted even after an unqualified, and valid, divorce.
- (40) If provision has to be made against mistaking a valid, for an invalid document.
- (41) From subsequently marrying the levir.
- (42) Having no validity whatsoever it could never be mistaken for a proper divorce.
- (43) A priest causes his wife to be forbidden to him even if the divorce he gave her was only a qualified one.
- (44) Lev. XXI, 7.
- (45) I.e., if she was given a qualified divorce which does not set her free to marry any other man.
- (46) Since such a divorce has the validity of causing the woman's prohibition to her husband who is a priest it might easily be mistaken for a valid divorce. Hence the provision mentioned.
- (47) Git. 82b, infra 94a.
- (48) Lit., 'behold'.
- (49) If he gave it to her after marriage.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 52b

if¹ for any other woman, the letter of divorce has no validity,² because it was not in his power to divorce her.³ Rami b. Hama inquired, however, what is the law if⁴ for one's sister-in-law?⁵ Is she, because she is bound to him,⁶ regarded as his betrothed⁷ or perhaps, since he addressed no ma'amar to her, she is not so regarded. This is undecided.⁸

R. Hanania inquired: What is the law if he⁹ wrote a letter of divorce in respect of his levirate bond but not in respect of his ma'amar, or in respect of his ma'amar and not in respect of his levirate bond?¹⁰ Is the ma'amar imposed upon the levirate bond,¹¹ so that the levir's action¹² is like that of divorcing half a woman,¹³ and when a man divorces half a woman his action, surely, has no validity at all; or do they remain independent of one another?¹⁴ — Might not this enquiry be solved by reference to Raba's ruling? For Raba ruled: If he¹⁵ gave her a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amar, her rival¹⁶ is permitted!¹⁷ — This was obvious to Raba; to R. Hanania, however, it was a matter of doubt. What, then, is the decision? — This remains undecided.¹⁸

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: This¹⁹ is the view of R. Akiba who holds that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalties of a negative precept is of no validity; the Sages, however, maintain that there is some validity in acts after halizah. But how can you ascribe it²⁰ to R. Akiba? In the first section, surely, it was stated, IF THE LEVIR GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN [A SECOND] LETTER OF DIVORCE AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH, while if [this Mishnah represented the view of] R. Akiba would a ma'amar to her be valid after a letter of divorce had already been given to her? Surely it was taught: R. Akiba said, 'Whence is it deduced that if a man gives a letter of divorce to his sister-in-law she is thereby forbidden to him for ever? Because it was stated Her former husband, who sent her away, may not [take her again to be his wife],²¹ [i.e., immediately] after sending her away'!²² R. Ashi replied: A divorce given by levirs is only Rabbinically valid,²³ and the Scriptural text is a mere prop.²⁴ Likewise it was also taught: Rabbi said, this statement²⁵ was made only in accordance with the view of R. Akiba who treated a haluzah as a forbidden relative;²⁶ the Sages, however, maintain that there is some validity in acts after halizah; and I say, 'When [is betrothal after halizah valid]? Only when he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony,²⁷ but if he betrothed her for levirate union,²⁸ there is no validity in any such act after the halizah.²⁹ It was taught elsewhere: If a man submitted to halizah from his sister-in-law and then betrothed her, Rabbi said, 'If he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony it is necessary for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce, but if as for a levirate union there is no need for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce'. The Sages, however, said: 'Whether he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony or as for the levirate union it is necessary for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce'.

Said R. Joseph: What is Rabbi's reason?³⁰ — It was given the same legal force as that of the action of a person digging in the estate of a proselyte³¹ believing it to be his own,³² which constitutes no kinyan.³³ Said Abaye to him:³⁴ Are the two cases alike? There³⁵ he³⁶ had no intention at all of acquiring possession,³⁷ but here³⁸ his intention, surely, was to acquire possession!³⁹ This, indeed, could only be compared to the case of a person who digs in the estate of one proselyte and believes it to be that of another, where he does acquire possession!⁴⁰ No, explained Abaye, here we are dealing with a case where the levir said to her, 'Be thou betrothed to me by the ma'amar of the levirate union'. Rabbi is of the opinion that the ma'amar can only be imposed upon the levirate bond,⁴¹ but here⁴² the halizah had already previously removed the levirate bond.⁴³ The Rabbis, however, are of the opinion that the one is independent of the other.⁴⁴ If, then, the levir had said to her at first,⁴⁵ 'Be thou betrothed unto me by this ma'amar of the levirate union', would not his kinyan have been valid?⁴⁶ Consequently it is now also valid.

Raba said: Had he said to her,⁴⁷ 'By the ma'amar of the levirate union', there would be no disagreement [among the authorities] that it is valid; but here⁴⁸ we are dealing with a case where the levir said, 'Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate'. Rabbi is of the opinion

(1) The scribe was asked to write the letter of divorce.

(2) Even if it was given to the woman after he had married her.

(3) Since at that time she was to him a complete stranger.

(4) The scribe was asked to wrote the letter of divorce.

(5) The letter of divorce having been written before the levirate marriage, and delivered to the widow after it had taken place.

(6) By the levirate bond.

(7) And the divorce is consequently valid.

(8) Teku, v. Glos.

- (9) A levir after he addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law.
- (10) Is she thereby forbidden to him as if a valid divorce had been given to her?
- (11) And becomes united with, and inseparable from it.
- (12) In severing the bond or annulling the ma'amar.
- (13) Since the divorce in respect of his one connection with the woman has no validity in respect of his other connection which forms together with the first one complete whole.
- (14) Lit., 'that stands alone' (bis). The ma'amar and the levirate bond constitute separate and independent connections between the levir and the widow. Hence, if the divorce was for the levirate bond alone, the widow is forbidden to the levir who gave her the divorce (under the prohibition 'that doth not build etc.') as well as to his brothers (the levirate bond having been severed); and if the divorce was for the ma'amar only, the widow, though forbidden to the levir who gave her the divorce (for the reason stated), is nevertheless permitted to his brothers, since the levirate bond has never been severed.
- (15) The second of three brothers who had addressed a ma'amar to the first brother's widow. V. Mishnah supra 31b.
- (16) The second brother's first wife who, while the ma'amar remained in force, was forbidden to the third brother.
- (17) To the third surviving brother if the second brother also died without issue. The two widows, owing to the divorce which had annulled the ma'amar, are no longer rivals; and being now the widows of two different brothers, are in fact both permitted to the third brother. The widow to whom the divorce had been given is forbidden only as a preventive measure (v. supra 32b). From the fact, however, that the second brother's first wife is permitted to the third surviving brother it follows that the divorce (a) annuls the ma'amar and (b) does not sever the levirate bond. Had it not annulled the ma'amar, the widow would have been forbidden owing to the levirate bond emanating from two levirs; while if the levirate bond also had been severed she would have been forbidden to the third brother as 'brother's wife'. Why then was R. Hanania doubtful on the point?
- (18) Teku, v. Glos.
- (19) That no act is valid after halizah.
- (20) The quoted section of our Mishnah, and presumably all our Mishnah.
- (21) Deut. XXIV, 4.
- (22) Even before she had been married to a second husband. (V. Deut, XXIV, 2-4). The superfluous expression 'who sent her away' implies that divorce in a certain case, viz., in that of a sister-in-law, causes the permanent prohibition of the divorced woman to the man who divorced her immediately after divorce had taken place. Now, since betrothal of a sister-in-law by a levir who divorced her is forbidden by the negative precept of Deut. XXIV, 4, how could a ma'amar addressed to her after divorce have any validity?
- (23) Pentateuchally it has no validity at all.
- (24) Since the prohibition is not Pentateuchal the ma'amar is obviously valid.
- (25) That no act is valid after halizah.
- (26) As no act of betrothal is valid in the case of the latter so is no such act valid in that of the former.
- (27) By a form of betrothal prescribed in ordinary cases other than those of a levir. Such betrothal is valid even where it involves the transgression of a negative precept.
- (28) By addressing to her a ma'amar.
- (29) The halizah having severed the levirate bond, there is no room any more for the levirate betrothal. The action of any levir using it is consequently null and void.
- (30) For regarding as invalid a betrothal for a levirate union, when ordinary betrothal with the same woman would have been valid.
- (31) Who was survived by no Jewish heirs. Anyone digging in such ownerless property with the intention of acquiring it gains thereby full legal title thereto.
- (32) It having been situated in close proximity to his own estate.
- (33) As the digging (though a legal form of kinyan) is invalid because there was no intention to constitute a kinyan thereby, so also betrothal (though a legal kinyan) is invalid because the levir's intention was not to constitute an ordinary betrothal (which would indeed have been valid) but a levirate betrothal which after a halizah has no validity.
- (34) R. Joseph.
- (35) Digging in the estate of a proselyte.
- (36) The digger.
- (37) Since he believed the field to be his own.

- (38) Betrothal by the levirate formula.
 (39) Of his sister-in-law as his legal wife.
 (40) Since his intention was to execute by his act a legal kinyan, the mistake he made as to its owner is of no consequence. Similarly, here, the mistake in the nature of the union he was contracting should not affect the legality of the kinyan which he at all events intended.
 (41) Only where the levirate bond is still in force has the ma'amar the required validity.
 (42) Where halizah had been performed.
 (43) Hence the invalidity of the ma'amar.
 (44) A ma'amar is consequently valid even where no levirate bond exists.
 (45) Before the performance of the halizah.
 (46) Certainly it would. The force of the ma'amar irrespective of the levirate bond (v. supra n. 2) would have executed the kinyan.
 (47) After the introductory formula, 'Be thou betrothed unto me'.
 (48) The dispute between Rabbi and the Rabbis.

that a levirate bond does exist¹ but the halizah had previously removed that [levirate] bond.² The Rabbis, however, hold that no levirate bond exists.³ If, then, he had said to her at first,⁴ 'Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate' would not his word have been valid?⁵ Consequently it is now also valid.

R. Sherabia said: Had a proper halizah been performed all would agree that if he said to her,⁶ 'Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate', there is no validity in his betrothal. Here, however, the dispute relates to a halizah of an impaired character. One Master⁷ holds that a halizah of an impaired character provides [all the necessary] exemption,² and the Masters hold that a halizah of an impaired character provides no exemption.⁸

R. Ashi said: [No;] All agree that a halizah of an impaired character provides no exemption. Here,⁹ however, the dispute centres round the question whether a condition¹⁰ may affect the validity of halizah.¹¹ The Masters hold that a condition¹¹ does affect the validity of a halizah¹² and the Master¹³ holds that no condition may affect the validity of a halizah.¹⁴

Rabina said: [No;] All agree that a condition does affect a halizah. Here,⁹ however, the dispute is dependent on the question of the doubled condition.¹⁵ The Master¹³ holds that a doubled condition is essential¹⁶ and the Masters hold the opinion that a doubled condition is unnecessary.¹⁷

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER etc. It should also have been stated, 'No act is valid after cohabitation'!¹⁸ — Both Abaye and Raba replied: Read,¹⁹ 'NO ACT IS VALID AFTER cohabitation'. But our Tanna?²⁰ — [The statement regarding] the permissibility of the sister-in-law to marry anyone²¹ was preferred by him.²²

THE LAW IS THE SAME WHETHER THERE IS ONE SISTER-IN LAW . . . OR TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW. Our Mishnah²³ is not in agreement with the ruling of Ben 'Azzai. For it was taught: Ben 'Azzai stated: A ma'amar is valid after another ma'amar where it concerns two levirs²⁴ and one sister-in-law,²⁵ but no ma'amar is valid after a ma'amar where it concerns two sisters-in-law and one levir.²⁶ HOW? . . . A MA'AMAR TO THE ONE etc. May it be suggested that this²⁷ provides support to a ruling of Samuel, Samuel having stated that if the levir had participated in the halizah with her to whom he addressed a ma'amar, her rival was not thereby exempt; and an objection to the ruling of R. Joseph?²⁸ — Does it state: He may participate in the halizah? What it states is 'had participated', implying a fait accompli.²⁹

A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO THE ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER etc. May it be suggested that this³⁰ provides support to Rabbah son of R. Huna. For Rabbah son of R. Huna stated, 'A halizah of an impaired character must go the round of all the brothers'?³¹ — By IT IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH, widows generally³² were meant.³³

IF HE GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER. May it be suggested that this³⁴ provides support to the ruling of Samuel³⁵ and presents an objection against the ruling of R. Joseph?³⁶ — Does it state: He may participate in the halizah? What it states is 'had participated', implying a fait accompli.³⁷

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE ONE AND FROM THE OTHER, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH etc. It should also have been stated, 'No act is valid after cohabitation'!³⁸ Both Abaye and Raba replied: Read,³⁹ 'no act is valid after cohabitation'.

But our Tanna?⁴⁰ — [The statement on] the permissibility of the sister-in-law marrying anyone⁴¹ was preferred by him.⁴²

THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR TO TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW etc. According to R. Johanan who ruled that the whole house⁴³ stands under the prohibition of a negative precept,⁴⁴ it is intelligible why it was necessary to inform us⁴⁵ that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalties of a negative precept is invalid;⁴⁶ according to Resh Lakish, however, who ruled that all the house⁴⁷ is subject to the penalty of kareth,⁴⁸ was there any need to inform us that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves kareth is invalid?⁴⁹ — Resh Lakish can answer you: And even according to your conception was it necessary to tell us in the final clause, which speaks of the case where the LEVIR COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, that there was no validity in a betrothal with a married woman?⁴⁹ But the fact is that as he taught concerning the permissibility⁵⁰ of one levir and one sister-in-law,⁵¹ he also taught concerning two sisters-in-law and one levir. And since he taught concerning two sisters-in-law and one levir, he also taught concerning two levirs and one sister-in-law.

(1) I.e., the validity of such a formula elsewhere is absolutely dependent on the existence of the levirate bond.

(2) Hence the invalidity of the formula that followed it.

(3) The levirate bond does not in any way add to, or subtract from the force of the formula.

(4) Before the performance of the halizah.

(5) V. supra note 4.

(6) After the halizah, for instance, which has been performed after a divorce.

(7) Rabbi.

(8) The original bond remains and the halizah is altogether disregarded. Hence the validity of the formula after an improper halizah.

(9) The dispute between Rabbi and the Rabbis.

(10) Made by the levir. If, e.g., he submitted to the halizah on the understanding that the widow would give him a certain sum of money or render him some service.

(11) Where the condition had not been fulfilled.

(12) As the halizah is invalid (v. supra n. 3) the original bond remains and the formula is consequently valid.

(13) Rabbi.

(14) Even if the condition was not fulfilled the halizah remains valid. Hence there could be no force in the formula that follows it.

(15) תנאי כפול a stipulation and its alternative. The classical example is the condition made by Moses with the children of Gad and Reuben: If they passed the Jordan, the land of Gilead would be given to them; if they did not pass the Jordan, they would take their share in the land of Canaan. V. Num. XXXII, 29f.

- (16) As the levir's condition was not a 'doubled one' it has no validity. The halizah is consequently valid and the formula following it is invalid.
- (17) The condition being valid, the halizah depending on it, where it is unfulfilled, is invalid. Hence the validity of the levirate formula.
- (18) Since that section of our Mishnah deals not only with (a) certain acts after halizah but also with (b) certain acts after cohabitation.
- (19) [Var. lec., 'Both Abaye and Raba read'. The reading that follows actually occurs in Tosef. Yeb. VII. Cf. תוספות ישנים]
- (20) Why did he omit the mention of cohabitation?
- (21) I.e., the permissibility though halizah.
- (22) Hence halizah only was mentioned. After cohabitation the sister-in-law is permitted to one man (the levir) only. As the Tanna preferred the case of halizah to that of cohabitation and as the invalidity of any acts after cohabitation may be inferred from the invalidity of those after halizah, the Tanna did not consider it necessary to mention cohabitation at all.
- (23) Which admits the validity of a ma'amar after another ma'amar in the case of two sisters-in-law and one levir,
- (24) Each one of whom in turn addressed a ma'amar to the sister-in-law.
- (25) Each levir being entitled to a ma'amar. V. supra 51a.
- (26) The second ma'amar, contrary to the ruling of our Mishnah, has no validity because by the first ma'amar, in the opinion of Ben 'Azzai, the levir had exhausted all his rights.
- (27) The statement, THE ONE REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THE OTHER, but not the first to whom the ma'amar had been addressed, MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH because, obviously, halizah with the first does not exempt the second, her rival.
- (28) 'Who stated, supra 44a, 'A man should not pour the water out of his cistern while others may require it', i.e., a levir shall not cause the disqualification, by halizah, of the widow who is not otherwise disqualified, when the halizah could well be performed by the other widow who was in any case disqualified. In our Mishnah, contrary to R. Joseph's ruling, halizah is performed by the second who would in consequence be disqualified from marrying a priest, and not by the first who is already disqualified by the divorce she had been given.
- (29) The proper procedure, however, might still be for the halizah to be performed by the widow to whom the ma'amar had been addressed.
- (30) The statement in our Mishnah that HALIZAH IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH, which seems to imply that each widow must perform halizah where there is only one levir and, since the Mishnah also stated THAT THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR AND TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW OR TWO LEVIRS AND ONE Sister-IN-LAW, that where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law halizah must be performed with both levirs.
- (31) Supra 26b, 51a.
- (32) In similar circumstances,
- (33) But in every case the halizah is performed by one widow only and the other is thereby exempt. V. supra p. 330, n. 5.
- (34) The ruling that halizah is performed by the second widow and not by the first to whom the divorce had been given.
- (35) Who stated, supra 27a, that if the levir had participated in the halizah with her whom he had divorced, her rival is not thereby exempt. Consequently, as was stated in our Mishnah, the halizah is to be performed by the second.
- (36) V. p. 350, n. 6.
- (37) Cf. supra p. 350, n. 7.
- (38) Cf. p. 350, n. 6.
- (39) Cf. p. 349, n. 11.
- (40) Cf. p. 349, n. 12.
- (41) Cf. p. 349, n. 13.
- (42) Cf. p. 349, n. 14.
- (43) I.e., all the brothers of the deceased including the levir who submitted to the halizah.
- (44) Both the levir and the other brothers (v. supra n. 13) are forbidden by the negative precept 'that doth not build' to marry the halizah or her rival. V. supra 10b.
- (45) By the statement that a ma'amar is invalid after halizah.
- (46) Had not this been indicated it might have been assumed that a betrothal of a woman forbidden only by a mere negative precept is legally valid.

(47) V. supra p. 351, n. 13.

(48) If any one of the brothers married the rival of the haluzah, or if any of them (other than the levir who participated in the halizah) married the haluzah herself; the prohibition in all these cases being that of marriage with 'a brother's wife' which is punishable by kareth. The prohibition of the levir who participated in the halizah to marry the haluzah herself is, of course, even according to Resh Lakish, only that of a negative precept (v. supra 10b).

(49) Such a ruling is surely obvious!

(50) I.e., that there is no validity in the betrothal.

(51) A ruling which was necessary, even according to Resh Lakish, since he also, like R. Johanan, subjects the marriage between the levir who submitted to the halizah and the haluzah to the penalty of a negative precept only (v. supra n. 3).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 53b

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR [and] GAVE etc. One can well understand why it was necessary [to lay down a rule¹ where] THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR; since it might have been assumed that provision was to be made² for a ma'amar that followed halizah³ as a preventive measure against a ma'amar that preceded halizah,⁴ it was consequently necessary to tell us that no such preventive measure was to be made. What need, however, was there for the ruling⁵ where THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE?⁶ — Read, then, according to your own view, the final clause, IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR or if he cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE. One can well understand [it might be argued here also] why it was necessary [to lay down a ruling⁷ where] the levir cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE; since it might have been assumed that provision was to be made for a divorce that followed cohabitation⁸ as a preventive measure against a divorce that preceded cohabitation,⁹ it was consequently necessary to tell us that no such preventive measure was required. But what need was there [for the ruling¹⁰ where] HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR?¹¹ But [the fact is that] as he taught, IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR,¹² he also taught: IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR. And since he desired to teach the rule where 'he cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE' he also taught, IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE.

IF IT TOOK PLACE¹³ etc. Our Mishnah cannot be reconciled with the opinion of the following Tanna: For it was taught: Abba Jose b. Johanan of Jerusalem reported in the name of R. Meir, 'Alike in the case of cohabitation or of halizah, [if it took place] first,¹⁴ no act that follows has any validity; but if it occurred in the middle¹⁴ or at the end,¹⁴ something valid still remains'. On this question, in fact, three different views have been expressed. The first Tanna is of the opinion that in the case of cohabitation, where a preventive measure is required,¹⁵ a preventive measure was made,¹⁶ but in the case of halizah where no preventive measure is called for¹⁷ no preventive measure was made. R. Nehemiah, on the other hand, is of the opinion that in the case of cohabitation also no preventive measure is called for.¹⁸ And as to your possible objection that provision should be made where cohabitation followed a letter of divorce as a preventive measure against cohabitation that followed a halizah,¹⁹ [it may be replied that] as halizah is a Pentateuchal law it is well known.²⁰ And as to your objection that provision should be made where cohabitation followed a ma'amar as a preventive measure against cohabitation that followed another cohabitation, [it may also be replied that] as kinyan by cohabitation is a Pentateuchal law it is certainly well known.²⁰ And Abba Jose b. Hanan,²¹ again, holds the same view as the Rabbis²² who ordained a preventive measure in the case of cohabitation,²³ and he made similar provision in the case of halizah as a preventive measure against cohabitation.

CHAPTER VI

MISHNAH. IF A MAN COHABITED WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE²⁴ WHETHER IN ERROR²⁵ OR IN PRESUMPTION,²⁶ WHETHER UNDER COMPULSION OR OF HIS OWN FREE WILL, EVEN IF HE ACTED IN ERROR AND SHE IN PRESUMPTION, OR HE IN PRESUMPTION AND SHE IN ERROR, OR HE UNDER COMPULSION AND SHE NOT UNDER COMPULSION, OR SHE UNDER COMPULSION AND HE NOT UNDER COMPULSION, WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST, OR ALSO THE FINAL STAGE OF CONTACT, HE CONSTITUTES THEREBY A KINYAN,²⁷ IRRESPECTIVE OF THE NATURE²⁸ OF THE INTERCOURSE.²⁹

SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE³⁰ WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES ENUMERATED IN THE TORAH, OR WITH ANY OF THOSE WHO ARE INELIGIBLE TO MARRY HIM AS, FOR INSTANCE, A WIDOW WITH A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALUZAH WITH A COMMON PRIEST, A BASTARD OR A NETHINAH³¹ WITH AN ISRAELITE OR THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WITH A BASTARD OR A NATHIN, HE HAS THEREBY RENDERED HER INELIGIBLE,³² IRRESPECTIVE OF THE NATURE OF THE INTERCOURSE.²⁹ GEMARA. What is the purport of EVEN? — [The formula of] 'It is not necessary' is thereby to be understood: It is not necessary [to state that a kinyan is constituted where] he acted in error³³ and her intention was the performance of the commandment³⁴ or where he acted in presumption and her intention was the performance of the commandment,³⁵ but even if he acted in error and she in presumption,³⁶ or³⁷ he in presumption and she in error, so that the intention of neither of them was the fulfilment of the commandment,³⁸ a kinyan is nevertheless effected.

R. Hiyya taught: Even if both acted in error, both in presumption, or both under compulsion.³⁹ How is one to understand the action UNDER COMPULSION in our Mishnah? If it be suggested [that] idolaters compelled him to cohabit with her, surely [it may be pointed out] Raba stated: There can be no compulsion in sexual intercourse since erection depends entirely on the will! But when he slept?⁴⁰ Surely Rab Judah ruled

(1) That there is no validity in the ma'amar.

(2) Even according to R. Akiba.

(3) By giving to the ma'amar the force of a valid betrothal and by subjecting the sister-in-law, in consequence, to the necessity of a divorce.

(4) Were the former to be regarded as invalid, the latter also might erroneously be so regarded.

(5) That there is no validity in the divorce where there is only one levir and one sister-in-law. (V. supra p. 331, n. 3).

(6) What possible consequences could ensue from the presumed validity of such a divorce that are not already in force as a result of the halizah? The halizah, like a divorce, causes the prohibition of the widow to the levir, and her relatives also are thereby forbidden as the relatives of his haluzah'!

(7) That nothing of the levirate bond remains after cohabitation and that, consequently, the divorce alone is a valid act and there is no need for halizah also.

(8) By requiring halizah in addition to the divorce.

(9) Were halizah to be dispensed with in the former case it might erroneously be presumed that as a letter of divorce alone is valid enough in this case it is also valid in the latter case, and thus divorce might be allowed to supersede the halizah of any sister-in-law.

(10) That there is no validity in the ma'amar.

(11) Of what consequence could the ma'amar be after cohabitation whereby the woman had become the levir's proper wife?

(12) Which was certainly necessary, as has just been explained.

(13) Lit., 'in the time when it is'.

(14) For an explanation of this term v. notes on our Mishnah supra.

- (15) Since something of the levirate bond remains after an improper cohabitation.
- (16) Hence he ruled that only when cohabitation had taken place at the beginning (but not when in the middle or at the end) does the levirate bond completely disappear.
- (17) Because in his opinion even an improper halizah is valid in all respects.
- (18) Maintaining as he does that nothing of validity remains either after halizah or after cohabitation.
- (19) Were the former to be regarded as valid the latter also might be so regarded.
- (20) And no one would draw comparisons between the two.
- (21) Abbreviation of 'Johanan'.
- (22) In our Mishnah.
- (23) V. supra 50b.
- (24) The widow of his deceased childless brother.
- (25) Not knowing that she was his sister-in-law.
- (26) To gratify his passions and with no intention of fulfilling the precept of the levirate marriage.
- (27) Lit., 'he acquires her'. The widow is deemed to be his legal wife. He is entitled to the heirship of her estate; and she can be released only by a letter of divorce.
- (28) Lit., 'and he made no distinction'.
- (29) Whether it was natural or unnatural.
- (30) In any of the circumstances mentioned.
- (31) Fem. of nathin, v. Glos.
- (32) To marry a priest, and to eat terumah even if she had previously been eligible to eat of it. This, of course, does not apply to the bastard and nethinah who are from birth ineligible either to marry a priest or to eat terumah. Their inclusion among the others merely serves the purpose of indicating that in their case also the penalty for illicit intercourse is imposed whether it was ONLY IN THE FIRST, OR ALSO IN THE FINAL STAGE.

that one in sleep cannot acquire his sister-in-law!¹ But when accidental insertion occurred?² Surely Rabbah stated: One who fell from a roof and his fall resulted in accidental insertion, is liable to pay an indemnity³, for four things,⁴ and if the woman was his sister-in-law no kinyan is thereby constituted!⁵ — It is⁶ when, for instance, his intention was intercourse with his wife and⁷ his sister-in-law seized him and he cohabited with her.

How is one to understand, 'Both under compulsion', taught at the School of R. Hiyya? — When, for instance, his intention was intercourse with his wife and idolaters seized him,⁸ brought him and her⁹ into close contact and he cohabited with her.

Whence these words?¹⁰ — From what our Rabbis taught: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her¹¹ is a commandment.¹² Another interpretation: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will.¹³ But, surely, deduction has already been made from this text that it¹⁴ is a commandment!¹⁵ — That it¹⁴ is a commandment¹⁶ may be inferred from And if the man like not¹⁷ which implies that if he likes he contracts the levirate marriage;¹⁶ so that the other text¹¹ may serve the purpose of deducing,¹⁸ 'whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will'.¹⁹

Another [Baraita] taught: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,¹¹ in the natural way; and take her,¹¹ even though in an unnatural way;²⁰ and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto²¹ her,¹¹ only the cohabitation consummates her marriage, but neither money²² nor deed²² can consummate her marriage; and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,¹¹ even against her will.²³

The Master said:²⁴ 'Another interpretation: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her whether in error etc.' But, surely, deduction has been made from this text¹¹ that it²⁵ must be in the natural way! — This may be deduced from To raise up unto his brother a name,¹⁷ [i.e.,] only where a name is raised up;²⁶ so that the other text¹¹ may be employed for the deduction,²⁷ 'whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will.'²⁸

[To turn to] the main text. 'Rab Judah ruled that one in sleep cannot acquire his sister-in-law, for Scripture stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,²⁹ only when the cohabitation was intentional'.³⁰ But, surely, it was taught: Whether he was awake or asleep! — Read: Whether she was awake or asleep. But, surely, it was taught: Whether he was awake or asleep; or whether she was awake or asleep! — This statement refers to one who was in a state of drowsiness. What state of drowsiness is hereby to be understood? R. Ashi replied: When a man is half asleep and half awake³¹ as, for instance, when he answers on being addressed but is unable to give any sensible reply, and when he is reminded of anything he can recall it.

[To turn to] the main text. Rabbah stated: One who fell from a roof, and his fall resulted in accidental insertion, is liable to pay an indemnity for four things, and if the woman was his sister-in-law no kinyan is thereby constituted. [He must pay her for] bodily injury, for pain inflicted, for enforced unemployment, and for medical expenses; but he is not liable to indemnify her for indignity, for a Master said, 'One is not liable to pay any indemnity for indignity unless it was intentionally caused'.³²

Raba said: If a levir's intention was to shoot³³ against a wall and he accidentally shot at his sister-in-law, no kinyan is thereby constituted;³⁴ if he intended, however, to shoot at a beast and he accidentally shot at his sister-in-law, kinyan is thereby constituted, since some sort of intercourse had been intended.

WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST . . . STAGE. 'Ulla stated: Whence is it proved that the first stage of contact is pentateuchally forbidden?³⁵ — It is said, And if a man shall lie with a menstruant woman,³⁶ and shall uncover her nakedness, he hath made naked her fountain³⁷ it is deduced from this text that the first stage of contact³⁸ is pentateuchally forbidden. Thus the case of a menstruant has been arrived at; whence that of other forbidden unions?³⁹ And were you to suggest that [their case] might be inferred from that of the menstruant, [it might be retorted] the menstruant is different since she causes the defilement of the man who cohabited with her.⁴⁰ — Rather the deduction³⁹ is made from 'a brother's wife' concerning whom it is written, And if a man shall take his brother's wife, she is a menstruant.⁴¹ Now is a brother's wife always menstruant?⁴² But [the meaning is] 'like a menstruant as with a menstruant the first stage constitutes the offence, so does the first stage constitute an offence with a brother's wife. But a brother's wife [it may be objected] is different since it is in his⁴³ power to increase the number, for should he wish, he could go on betrothing as many as a thousand!⁴⁴ — The deduction⁴⁵ is rather made from the 'father's sister' and 'the mother's sister'. For it is written in Scriptures And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister, for he hath made naked his near kin.⁴⁶ But it may be objected that a father's sister and a mother's sister come under a different category, since the prohibition in their case is natural.⁴⁷ — If it⁴⁵ cannot be deduced from one category⁴⁸ then let it⁴⁹ be deduced from the two categories.⁵⁰

From which⁵¹ however shall deduction be made? Were it made from a brother's wife⁵² and a father's sister⁵³ and a mother's sister,⁵³ [it might be objected that] those stand in a different category, since the prohibition of these is due to relationship!⁵⁴ — Deduction is rather made⁵⁵ from the menstruant⁵⁶ and a father's sister and a mother's sister. Those however [it may be objected] are in a different category since the prohibition is natural!⁵⁷ — The deduction⁵⁵ is rather made from the menstruant and a brother's wife; since no⁵⁸ objection can be raised [against the two].⁵⁹

R. Aha son of R. Ika demurred: A menstruant and a brother's wife are different,⁶⁰ since marriage with them cannot be permitted during the lifetime of the man who caused their prohibition! Would you, then, apply [their restrictions] to a married woman who might be permitted to marry even during the lifetime of the man who caused her prohibition?⁶¹

Said K. Aha of Difti to Rabina: Are a menstruant and a brother's wife forbidden to marry only during the lifetime of the man who caused their prohibition but permitted after that?⁶² With a menstruant, surely, the prohibition depends on the number of days,¹ and with a brother's wife the All Merciful made her prohibition dependent on the birth of children!² — But the objection may be raised thus: A menstruant and a brother's wife are different,³ since the man who caused them to be forbidden cannot cause them to be permitted.⁴ Would you [then] apply their restrictions to a married woman whose permissibility is brought about⁵ by the man who caused her to be forbidden? But, said R. Johanan, or as some say, R. Huna son of R. Joshua, Scripture stated, For whosoever shall do any of these abominations, even the souls that do them shall be cut off,⁶ all forbidden unions were compared to the menstruant;⁷ as the first stage constitutes the offence with the menstruant so does the first stage constitute the offence with all the others.

What need, then, was there⁸ to mention the menstruant in the context of brother's wife?⁹ — For an inference like that of R. Huna. For R. Huna stated: Whence in the Torah may an allusion to the sister-in-law¹⁰ be traced? [You ask,] 'Whence'? Surely it is written in Scripture, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her!¹¹ — [The query is] rather, whence the allusion that a sister-in-law is forbidden¹² during the lifetime of her husband?¹³ But surely this is a logical inference: Since the All Merciful said that she¹⁴ is permitted to marry after the death of her husband, it may be inferred that during the lifetime of her husband¹³ she is forbidden! — [No] for is it not possible [to maintain] that after the death of her husband it¹⁵ is a commandment, and during the lifetime of her husband it¹⁵ is only optional? Or else, [though] indeed,¹⁶ only after the death of the husband,¹⁷ and not during the lifetime of her husband; yet being a negative commandment¹⁸ that is derived from a positive one¹⁹ it has only the force of a positive commandment!²⁰ — Scripture stated: And if a man shall take his brother's wife, she is a menstruant.²¹ Now is a brother's wife always a menstruant?²² But the meaning is, 'like a menstruant': as a menstruant, although permitted afterwards,²³ is forbidden under the penalty of kareth during the period of her prohibition, so also a brother's wife, though permitted afterwards,²⁴ is forbidden under the penalty of kareth during the lifetime of her husband.

What need, however, was there to mention the first stage in connection with a father's sister or a mother's sister?²⁵ — For an inference like that mentioned in the following question which Rabina addressed to Raba: What is the law if a man passed the first stage in pederasty? [You ask,] 'What is the law in pederasty'? Surely it is written, As with womankind!²⁶ — But [the query is] what is the law when one passed the first stage with a beast? The other replied: No purpose is served by the text²⁷ in [forbidding] the first stage in the case of a father's sister and a mother's sister, since in their case the prohibition is arrived at by the comparison of R. Jonah, apply that text to the first stage with a beast.

Observe! Intercourse with a beast is among the offences subject to the death penalties of a Beth din; why then was the first stage in relation to it enumerated among offences that are subject to the penalty of kareth?²⁸ It should rather have been written among those which are subject to the death penalty of the Beth din,²⁹ and thus one offence that is subject to the death penalty of a court would be inferred³⁰ from a similar offence that is subject to the death penalty of a court! — Since the entire context³¹ was to serve the purpose of exposition,³² this thing³³ was also included that it may serve the purpose of exposition.

What is the exposition?³⁴ — It was taught, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister,³⁵ whether she is paternal or maternal. You say, 'Whether she is paternal or maternal', perhaps it is not so, but only when she is paternal and not when maternal? — This³⁶ is only logical: A man is subject to a penalty³⁷ in this case and he is also subject to penalty³⁷ in the case of his sister; as with his sister it is the same whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also³⁸ it is the same whether she is paternal or maternal. But might it not be argued³⁹ in this way: A man is subject to a penalty³⁷ in this case and is also subject to a penalty³⁷ in the case of his aunt;⁴⁰ as his aunt is forbidden only when she is paternal⁴¹ but not when maternal,⁴² so here also³⁸ when she is paternal and not when maternal! — Let us consider whom it more closely resembles. A prohibition which is natural⁴³ ought to be inferred from a prohibition which is also natural⁴⁴ but let no proof be adduced from an aunt whose prohibition is not natural.⁴⁵ But might it not be argued⁴⁶ thus: The relatives of a father⁴⁷ should be inferred from the relatives of a father⁴⁰ but let no proof be adduced from a sister who is one's own relative! Hence it was stated,⁴⁸ Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister,⁴⁹ implying⁵⁰ whether paternal or maternal, and Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister,⁵¹ implying also whether paternal or maternal.

What need was there to write it⁵² in respect of a father's sister and also in respect of a mother's sister?⁵³ — R. Abbahu replied: Both are required. For had the All Merciful written it⁵² in respect of a father's sister [it might have been assumed to apply to her alone] because her relationship is legally recognized,⁵⁴ but not to a mother's sister.⁵⁵ And had the All Merciful written it⁵⁶ in respect of a mother's sister [it might have been assumed to apply to her alone] because her relationship is certain, but not to her father's sister.⁵⁷ [Hence both were] required.

As to one's aunt concerning whom the Tanna had no doubt that she must be paternal⁵⁸ and not maternal, whence does he derive it? Raba replied: It is arrived at by a comparison between the words 'His uncle' [in two passages]: Here it is written, He hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness,⁵⁹ and there it is written, Or his uncle or his uncle's son may redeem him,⁶⁰ as there he must be paternal and not [necessarily] maternal⁶¹ so here also, he⁶² must be paternal⁶³ and not [necessarily] maternal. And whence is it⁶⁴ proved there? — Scripture stated, Of his family may redeem him,⁶⁰ and only a father's family may be called the proper family, but the mother's family cannot be called the proper family.⁶⁵

But surely we learned: If a man was told, 'Your wife is dead', and he married her paternal sister; [and when he was told] 'She⁶⁶ also is dead', he married her maternal sister; 'She⁶⁷ too is dead', and he married her paternal sister; 'She⁶⁸ also is dead', and he married her maternal sister, he is permitted⁶⁹ to live with the first,⁷⁰ third⁷¹ and fifth⁷² who also exempt their rivals;⁷³ but he is forbidden to live with the second and the fourth,⁷⁴ and cohabitation with one of these does not exempt her rival. If, however, he cohabited with the second after the death of the first, he is permitted to live with the second⁷⁵ and with the fourth⁷⁶ who also exempt their rivals,⁷³ but he is forbidden to live⁷⁷ with the third and with the fifth.⁷⁸

(1) Even after the death of her husband she remains forbidden to marry anyone until the prescribed number of seven unclean days has passed.

(2) If she gave birth to any child she remains forbidden to her husband's brothers even after his death.

(3) From the other women one is forbidden to marry.

(61) As will be shewn anon.

(62) The husband of his aunt.

(63) His father's paternal brother.

(64) That the relationship must be paternal.

(65) V. supra note 7.

(66) His second wife.

(67) His third wife.

(68) The fourth.

(69) If it is found that all these are alive.

(70) Since the marriage with her was valid.

(71) As the union with the second was unlawful, on account of her being his wife's sister, the marriage with her had no validity. As she is not his wife, her sister is a perfect stranger to the man who married them both in succession. The marriage with her sister (his third wife) is consequently valid.

(72) The union with the fourth being unlawful, owing to the legal marriage with her sister (the third wife) the marriage with the fifth is consequently legal. Cf. note 5.

(73) If he died without issue, and one of his brothers submitted to halizah from one of them.

(74) Because the legality of his marriage with the first and third renders them respectively forbidden as 'his wife's sister'. Cf. note 5.

(75) As the death of the first has removed from her the prohibition of 'wife's sister', the marriage with her is legal.

(76) As the marriage with the second was legally valid, that with the third (as wife's sister) was invalid. The fourth (sister of the third) being in consequence a mere stranger is therefore permitted to be married. Cf. supra note 5.

(77) Cf. previous notes mutatis mutandis.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 55a

From this it clearly follows that a wife's sister, whether she is paternal or maternal, is forbidden.¹ Whence, however, is this derived? — Deduction is made from one's sister; as a sister [is forbidden] whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also² whether she is paternal or maternal. But let the deduction³ be made from one's aunt; as one's aunt [is forbidden only when she is] paternal⁴ and not when maternal, so here³ also [the prohibition should apply when she is] paternal and not when maternal! — It stands to reason that the deduction should be made from one's sister, since [laws concerning] his own relatives⁵ [should be inferred] from [laws concerning others of] his own relatives.⁶ On the contrary! Deduction⁷ should have been made from one's aunt, since a relationship effected through betrothal⁸ [should be inferred] from one effected through betrothal!⁹ — The deduction⁷ is rather made from a brother's wife, since her relationship¹⁰ is through betrothal, and she is of his own relatives.

Whence, however, is [the law concerning] a brother's wife herself derived? — From what was taught: Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife,¹¹ whether he is paternal or maternal. You say, 'Whether he is paternal or maternal', perhaps it is not so, but only when paternal and not when maternal? This is a matter of logical argument: He is subject to a penalty here¹² and he is also subject to penalty [for intercourse] with his sister; as [the prohibition of] his sister applies whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also¹² [the prohibition applies] whether he¹³ was paternal or maternal. But might it not be argued¹⁴ thus: He is subject to a penalty here¹² and he is also subject to penalty [for intercourse] with his aunt. As therefore [the prohibition of] his aunt applies only when she is paternal¹⁵ and not when only maternal, so here¹² also [the prohibition applies only when he¹³ is] paternal and not when only maternal! Let us observe whom the case¹⁶ more closely resembles. Deduction concerning one's own relatives should be made from one's own relatives, and let no proof be adduced from one's aunt whose relationship is due to his father. But might it not be argued as follows:¹⁴ Deduction should be made concerning a relationship which is due to betrothal¹⁶ from a relationship that is due to betrothal,¹⁷ but let no proof be adduced from a sister the prohibition of whom is natural!¹⁸ — For this reason¹⁹ it was specifically stated in Scriptures, It is thy brother's nakedness,²⁰ implying²¹ whether he is paternal or only maternal.

Might it not be suggested that the one as well as the other²² speaks of the wife of a paternal brother, the one referring to a brother's wife who had children during the lifetime of her husband,²³ while the other refers to a brother's wife who had no children during the lifetime of her husband! — The case of one who had no children during the lifetime of her husband may be deduced from the statement of R. Huna.²⁴

Might not both²⁵ still speak of the wife of a paternal brother, the one referring to a brother's wife who had children during the lifetime of her husband and the other to one who had children after the death of her husband! — The case of one who had children after the death of her husband requires no Scriptural text; for since the All Merciful said that she who had no children was permitted, it is obvious that if she had children she is forbidden.

Is it not possible that she who has no children is forbidden to all men but permitted to the levir

while she who has children is permitted both to all men and to the levir! Or else: If she has no children it is a commandment²⁶ but if she has children it is optional! Or else: [Though indeed] the levir may marry her if²⁷ she has no children but he may not if she has children, yet [as the prohibition²⁸ is] a negative commandment that is derived from a positive one²⁹ it has only the force of a positive commandment!³⁰ — For this reason Scripture wrote another text,³¹ He hath uncovered his brother's nakedness.³² But might it be said that the wife of a maternal brother is like the wife of a paternal brother, and that as the wife of a paternal brother is permitted³³ after the death of her husband, so is also the wife of a maternal brother³⁴ permitted after the death of her husband! — Scripture said, She is,³⁵ she retains her status.³⁶

What need was there to specify the penalty of kareth for intercourse with one's sister?³⁷ — To infer a ruling like that of R. Johanan. For R. Johanan stated: If one committed all these offences³⁸ in one state of unawareness, he is liable for every one of them.³⁹ According to R. Isaac, however, who stated, 'All those who are subject to the penalty of kareth were included in the general rule; and why was the penalty of kareth for [intercourse with] a sister stated separately? In order to indicate that his⁴⁰ penalty is kareth and not flogging',⁴¹ whence is the division⁴² deduced? — It is deduced from, And unto a woman . . . as long as she is impure by her uncleanness,⁴³ that guilt is incurred for every single woman.⁴⁴

For what purpose did the All Merciful write, They shall be child less⁴⁵ in the case of one's aunt?⁴⁶ — It is required for an exposition like that of Rabbah. For Rabbah pointed out the following contradiction: It is written, They shall be childless,⁴⁵ and it is also written, They shall die childless!⁴⁷ How [are these two versions to be reconciled]? If he has children he will bury them; if he has no children, he will be childless.⁴⁸

And it was necessary to write They shall be childless,⁴⁵ and it was also necessary to write, They shall die childless.⁴⁷ For had the All Merciful written only, They shall be childless,⁴⁵ it might have been assumed to refer to children born before the offence⁴⁹ but not to those born subsequent to the offence,⁵⁰ hence the All Merciful wrote, They shall die childless.⁴⁷ And had the All Merciful written, They shall die childless,⁴⁷ it might have been assumed to refer to those born subsequent to the offence,⁵¹ but not to those who were born previously,⁵⁰ [hence both texts were] required.

Whence [is the prohibition of] the first stage among those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments⁵² to be inferred? — As the All Merciful specified carnally⁵³ in the case of a designated⁵⁴ bondmaid,⁵⁵ it may be inferred that among all the others who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments,⁵⁶ the first stage by itself constitutes the offence.⁵⁷ On the contrary! As the All Merciful specified the first stage in the case of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth,⁵⁸ it may be inferred that among those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments consummation only constitutes the offence! — R. Ashi replied: If so,⁵⁹ Scripture should have omitted [the reference]⁶⁰ in the case of the designated handmaid.⁶¹

Whence [is the prohibition of] the first stage inferred in the case of offences for which priests alone are subject to the penalty of negative commandments?⁶² — This is arrived at by an analogy between the expressions of 'taking'.⁶³

Whence [is the prohibition⁶⁴ in respect of] those who are subject⁶⁵ to the penalty of a positive commandment⁶⁶ inferred?

(1) Since the third, the maternal sister of the second, is permitted only on account of the illegality of the marriage of the second, but is forbidden where the marriage with the second is legal.

(2) A wife's sister is forbidden.

(3) In respect of a wife's sister.

- (4) When her husband is his father's paternal brother.
- (5) A wife's sister whose relationship to him is due to his own (and not his father's) act of marriage with her sister.
- (6) His sister. An aunt's relationship, however, is due not to his own, but his father's relationship with her husband. V. supra.
- (7) In respect of a wife's sister.
- (8) A man's wife's sister is related to him through betrothal of her sister (his wife).
- (9) The aunt whose relationship to him is due to her betrothal by his uncle.
- (10) Like that of his wife's sister.
- (11) Lev. XVIII, 16.
- (12) For intercourse with a brother's wife.
- (13) The brother.
- (14) V. supra p. 363, n. 11.
- (15) When her husband is his father's paternal brother.
- (16) A brother's wife.
- (17) V. supra note 5.
- (18) It is due to vicissitudes of birth and not to any act of his.
- (19) To exclude this argument.
- (20) Lev. XVIII, 16b.
- (21) Since, in view of Lev. XVIII, 16a, it is superfluous.
- (22) The two sections of the verse cited.
- (23) Who divorced her.
- (24) Supra 54b; and no special text is needed for the purpose.
- (25) The two sections of the verse cited.
- (26) That the levir marries her.
- (27) Lit., 'yes'.
- (28) Not to marry a wife of a deceased brother if she has children.
- (29) Her husband's brother shall go in unto her if she has no children.
- (30) The penalty for the transgression of which is not that of kareth!
- (31) Which, in view of the texts from Lev. XVIII, 16a and b, is superfluous.
- (32) Lev. XX, 21, to indicate that the prohibition is to apply to all cases whether that of a paternal or only that of a maternal brother.
- (33) To marry the levir if her husband died without issue.
- (34) Who died childless.
- (35) E.V. 'it is'. Lev. XVIII, 16, which speaks also, as deduced supra, of the wife of a maternal brother.
- (36) As she was forbidden to the levir during the lifetime of her husband she remains so after his death.
- (37) Her case, surely, is included in Lev. XVIII, 29, among all the others with whom intercourse is forbidden under the penalty of kareth!
- (38) Of forbidden intercourse.
- (39) Mak. 14a, Ker. 2b. Because the penalty of kareth was specifically mentioned in the case of intercourse with a sister who is taken as an example for all the others included in the general statement in Lev. XVIII, 29. This is in accordance with the principle that if any case is included in a general rule and is then made the subject of a special statement, that which is predicated of it is to be applied to the whole of the general rule. Had not the sister been mentioned separately it might have been assumed that as all the offences were included in the general prohibition, and as they were all committed in one state of unawareness, one liability only is incurred for all.
- (40) The brother's.
- (41) Even though he had been duly warned.
- (42) That liability is incurred for every single offence even though all were committed in one state of unawareness.
- (43) Lev. XVIII, 19, emphasis on woman. Since, instead of the longer expression 'A woman . . . as long as she is impure by her uncleanness', the shorter one, 'a menstruant could have been used.
- (44) With whom intercourse took place; v. Mak. Sonc. ed. pp. 97ff.
- (45) Lev. XX, 21.
- (46) By childless ערירים the penalty of kareth is understood: Not only the offender but his children also are thereby cut off.

(47) Ibid. 20.

(48) V. infra nn. 5ff.

(49) The expression shall be childless would have been taken to imply that the children born prior to the offence would die as a result of the offence. The parents, however, would not die childless because the children born after the offence would live.

(50) Who would live. V. supra note 5.

(51) Shall die childless, being preceded by They shall bear their sin (Lev. XX, 20), implying that the penalty would affect only those children who were born after the sin had been committed.

(52) I.e., to flogging but not to kareth.

(53) Lev. XIX, 20, implying the second stage of consummation.

(54) חרופה This form of the kinyan by a Jewish slave of a Canaanitish bondwoman takes the place of the ordinary betrothal of a free woman.

(55) Intercourse with whom is forbidden by a negative commandment and is consequently subject to the penalty of flogging, in addition to the prescribed guilt-offering (v. Lev. XIX, 21f).

(56) Such as a bastard and an undesignated bondmaid.

(57) As only the designated bondmaid must pass the second stage in order to constitute an offence for which liability to a guilt-offering is incurred, it follows that in all the other cases, where no guilt-offering is ever incurred, the offence is constituted with the first stage alone.

(58) In Lev. XVIII, 29.

(59) That with all the others who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments the offence is not constituted unless, as with the designated bondmaid, the second stage was passed.

(60) 'Carnally'. Lit., 'let the text keep silence.'

(61) Since, however, the second stage was specifically postulated in her case, it follows that with all the others the first stage by itself constitutes the offence.

(62) From the designated maid supra only such prohibitions may be inferred as are applicable to all and not to priests only.

(63) The expression of 'taking' is used in the case of intercourse with a sister (Lev. XX, 17) which is punishable by kareth, and a similar expression is used in the case of marriages forbidden to priests under the penalty of a negative commandment (Lev. XXI, 7).

(64) Of the first stage.

(65) For intercourse with an Israelite's daughter.

(66) An Egyptian or an Edomite, for instance, (v. Deut. XXIII, 8, 9) whose prohibition to marry an Israelite's daughter is based on the positive precept, The third generation . . . shall (E.V. may) enter into the assembly of the Lord, which implies that the first and second generations must not. A negative precept derived from a positive one has the force of a positive precept.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 55b

— It is arrived at by an analogy between the two expressions of 'coming'.¹

Whence [the prohibition of a yebamah]² to a stranger?³ — If [one follows] him who holds that it⁴ is a negative precept,⁵ [it would be subject to the same restrictions as any other] negative precept;⁶ if [one follows] him who holds that it⁷ is a positive precept,⁸ [it would be subject to the same restrictions as any other] positive precept.⁶ Whence, however, [its⁹ force¹⁰ in respect of] the yebamah and the levir? — It is arrived at by the analogy between the two expressions of 'coming'.¹¹

Whence [its⁹ force¹² in respect of the kinyan], between husband and wife? — It is arrived at by comparison between the expressions of 'taking'.¹³

Raba said: For what purpose did the All Merciful write 'carnally' in connection with the designated bondmaid,¹⁴ a married woman,¹⁵ and a sotah?¹⁶ That in connection with the designated bondmaid [is required] as has just been explained.¹⁷ That in connection with a married woman excludes intercourse with a relaxed membrum.¹⁸ This is a satisfactory interpretation in accordance with the view of him who maintains that if one cohabited with forbidden relatives with relaxed membrum he is exonerated;¹⁹ what, however, can be said, according to him who maintains [that for such an act one is] guilty? — The exclusion is rather that of intercourse with a dead woman.²⁰ Since it might have been assumed that, as [a wife], even after her death, is described as his kin,²¹ one should be guilty for [intercourse with] her [as for that] with a married woman, hence we were taught [that one is exonerated]. What was the object of that²² of the sotah? — Such as was taught: Carnally²² excludes [the case where the husband's warning was] concerning something else. What is meant by 'something else'? R. Shesheth replied: The exclusion is the case where he warned her concerning unnatural intercourse. Said Raba to him: The text reads, As with womankind!²³ — Rather, said Raba, the exclusion is the case where the husband's warning concerned lecherous contact of her limbs. Said Abaye to him: Has the All Merciful forbidden [a wife to her husband] because of obscenity?²⁴ — Rather, said Abaye, the exclusion is the case where the husband's warning was concerning superficial contact.²⁵ This is a satisfactory explanation according to him who maintains that the first stage of contact²⁶ is the insertion of the corona;²⁷ what can be said, however, according to him who maintains that it²⁸ is the superficial contact!²⁹ — The exclusion is rather the case where he warned her concerning lecherous contact of her limbs; but³⁰ it was necessary [to state it, because] it might have been assumed that, as the All Merciful has made the prohibition³¹ dependent on the objection of the husband,³² [the woman should here be forbidden] since he objected,³³ hence we were taught [that such a case is excluded].

Samuel stated: The first stage is constituted by superficial contact.²⁵ This may be compared to a man who puts his finger to his mouth; it is impossible for him not to press down the flesh. When Rabbah b. Bar Hana came³⁴ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: Consummation in the case of a designated bondmaid is constituted by the insertion of the corona.

R. Shesheth raised an objection: 'Carnally³⁵ implies that guilt is incurred only when intercourse was accompanied by friction';³⁶ does not this refer to friction of the membrum! — No; friction of the corona.

When R. Dimi came³⁴ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona. They said to him: But, surely, Rabbah b. Bar Hana did not say so! — He replied: Then either he is the story-teller³⁷ or I.³⁸

When Rabin came³⁴ he stated in the name of R. Johanan, 'The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona'. He is certainly in disagreement with the report of Rabbah b. Bar Hana.³⁹ Must it be said, however, that he differs also from Samuel?⁴⁰ — No; [the entire process] from the superficial contact until the insertion of the corona is described as the first stage.⁴¹

When R. Samuel b. Judah came³⁴ he stated in the name of R. Johanan, 'The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona; and the final stage, by actual consummation.

(1) The expression of 'coming' is used with a case that is forbidden by a negative precept (Deut. XXIII, 3) as well as with those whose prohibition is derived from a positive precept (ibid. 9) and whose penalty is kareth. Cf. note 9 supra.

(2) Prior to halizah.

(3) Lit., 'to the street'.

(4) The marriage with a stranger before halizah had been performed.

(5) Derived from Deut. XXV, 5, Shall not be married abroad.

(6) And, as has been shewn supra, the first stage is included in the restrictions.

(7) The marriage with a stranger before halizah had been performed.

(8) From Deut. XXV, 5, it follows that the levir shall marry her (positive); hence no other (negative); and a negative precept derived from a positive one has the force of the positive.

(9) Of the first stage.

(10) To constitute levirate marriage as if actual cohabitation had taken place.

(11) Cf. supra p. 370, n. 10. The expression of 'coming' is also used in respect of the levir (v. Deut. XXV, 5).

(12) Cf. supra note 5.

(13) Used in the case of husband and wife (Deut. XXIV, 1) as well as in that of those whose penalty is kareth. Cf. supra p. 370, n. 10.

(20) Even though she died as a married woman.

(21) In Lev. XXI, 2, where the text enumerates the dead relatives for whom a priest may defile himself. As was explained, supra 22b, his kin refers to one's wife.

(22) The expression 'carnally' in Num. V, 13.

(23) Lev. XVIII, 22, in which natural and unnatural intercourse are regarded as analogous (v. Sanh. 54a). What matters it then for which she was warned!

(24) Surely not. For mere laxity, in the absence of adultery, a wife would not have been subjected to such a severe penalty. What need then was there to state the obvious?

(25) Lit., 'kissing'.

(26) Which is forbidden.

(27) Infra. As this stage only constitutes cohabitation and causes the prohibition of the woman to her husband, it is possible to exclude from such prohibition the earlier stage of superficial contact.

(28) The 'first stage' that is forbidden.

(29) How can this be excluded from the prohibition in view of the ruling that the first stage does constitute cohabitation!

(30) Despite Abaye's objection (v. supra note 3).

(31) Of a sotah to her husband.

(32) The laws of the sotah apply only where such an objection or warning has been expressed.

(33) By his warning.

(34) From Palestine to Babylon.

(36) מִירוֹק 'friction', Syr.-Aram. rt. מִרְק So Golds. against Levy's (III, p. 260) Ergiessung which he regards as an error based on a misunderstanding of Rashi.

(37) Lit., 'liar'. Rabbah h. Bar Hana was a well known teller of hair-raising stories (Cf. B.B. 73aff). and sometimes made self-contradictory statements on questions of halachah also (cf. Hul. 97a, Kid. 75b).

(38) Lit., 'I lied', i.e., they had his word against Rabbah b. Bar Hana's, and it was for them to decide the report of which of them was the more reliable.

(39) Who regards this act as consummation.

(40) Who reported that superficial contact alone constitutes the first stage.

(41) On this both Samuel and Rabin agree; the one mentioning the beginning of the process and the other the conclusion.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 56a

Beyond this, the act is no more than superficial contact and one is exonerated in regard to it'. He thus differs from Samuel.

WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST, OR ALSO THE FINAL STAGE OF CONTACT HE CONSTITUTES THEREBY A KINYAN. In what respect is kinyan constituted? — Rab replied: Kinyan is constituted in all respects;¹ and Samuel replied: Kinyan is constituted only in respect of the things specified in the section,² viz., to inherit the estate of his brother³ and to exempt her⁴ from the levirate marriage.⁵ If [she⁶ became subject to the levir] after her marriage⁷ she may, according to the view of all,⁸ eat [terumah],⁹ since she has been eating it before.¹⁰ They differ only [where she became subject to the levir] after betrothal.⁷ Rab maintains that she may eat, since the All Merciful has included cohabitation in error, [giving it the same validity] as when done presumptuously. But Samuel maintains that the All Merciful has included it¹¹ in so far only as to put him¹² in the same position as the husband,¹³ but not to confer upon him more power than upon the husband.¹⁴ And [in giving this ruling] Samuel is consistent with his own view, for R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: wherever the husband entitles her to eat, the levir also entitles her to eat; and wherever the husband does not entitle her to eat the levir also¹⁵ does not entitle her to eat.

An objection was raised: 'If the daughter of an Israelite, capable of bearing, was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah].¹⁶ If he died¹⁷ and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat;¹⁸ and in this respect the power of the levir is superior to that of the husband'. Now, according to Rab, this statement is perfectly satisfactory.¹⁹ According to Samuel, however, a difficulty arises!²⁰ Samuel can answer you: Read thus . . . who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah]; if, however, he married her and then became deaf she may eat it; if he died and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat it'.²¹ 'Then what is meant by 'in this respect'?²² — While if the husband had been deaf before,²³ she would not have been entitled to eat, if the levir had been deaf before²³ she may eat.

Others say: If [she²⁴ became subject to the levir] after her betrothal²⁵ all²⁶ agree that she may not eat [terumah], since 'she was not allowed to eat it during the lifetime of her husband. They differ only [when she became subject to the levir] after her marriage.²⁵ Rab maintains that she may eat, since she has been eating before; but Samuel maintains that she may not eat, because the All Merciful has included cohabitation in error, [giving it the same force] as cohabitation in presumption, only in respect of the things that were enumerated in the section,²⁷ but not in all other respects. But surely R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel, 'Wherever the husband entitles her to eat the levir also entitles her to eat'!²⁸ — Read: Every cohabitation whereby a husband entitles her to eat also entitles her to eat if performed by the levir, and every cohabitation whereby the husband does not entitle her to eat, does not entitle her to eat if performed by the levir.

An objection was raised: 'If the daughter of an Israelite capable of hearing was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah].²⁹ If he died³⁰ and she became subject to a deaf levir she may eat;³¹ and in this respect the power of the levir is superior to that of the husband'. Now, according to Rab,³² this³³ might well be explained as was explained above,³⁴ according to Samuel, however, a difficulty arises!³⁵ — This is indeed a difficulty.

Our Rabbis taught: If the daughter of an Israelite capable of hearing was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah].³⁶ If a son was born to her she may eat.³⁷ If the son died,³⁸ R. Nathan said, she may eat;³⁹ but the Sages said: She may not eat. What is R. Nathan's reason?⁴⁰ Rabbah replied: Because she was eating⁴¹ before. Said Abaye to him: What now? would the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest who subsequently died⁴² be entitled to eat [terumah] because she was eating it before? But⁴³ [the fact is that] as soon as [her husband] died his sanctity is withdrawn from her; so here also as soon as [the son] died his sanctity is withdrawn from her!⁴⁴ — Rather, said R. Joseph, R. Nathan holds that marriage with a deaf [priest]⁴⁵ does entitle the woman to eat terumah,⁴⁶ and that no prohibition⁴⁷ is to be made in respect of the marriage of a deaf priest⁴⁸ as a preventive measure against the betrothal of a deaf priest.⁴⁹ Said Abaye to him: If so,⁵⁰ what need was there [to state] 'If a son was born to her'? — Because of the Rabbis.⁵¹ Then⁵² R. Nathan should have expressed his disagreement with the Rabbis in the first clause!⁵³ — He allowed the Rabbis to finish their statement and then expressed his disagreement with them.⁵⁴ If so,⁵⁵ the statement should have read, 'If the son died she may not eat';⁵⁶ R. Nathan said: She may eat'?⁵⁷ — This is a difficulty.

SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES. R. Amram said: The following statement was made to us by R. Shesheth

- (1) The yebamah may even eat of terumah if the levir was a priest.
 - (2) Deut. XXV, 5ff, which deals with the obligations and privileges of the levir and the yebamah.
 - (3) Inferred from v. 6 in the section.
 - (4) If he died without issue from her but had children from another wife, or if he divorced her.
 - (5) The first stage having the same validity as actual marriage.
 - (6) The sister-in-law upon whom one of the forms of kinyan, including cohabitation in error, spoken of in our Mishnah had been executed.
 - (7) With her husband, the levir's deceased brother.
 - (8) Rab and Samuel.
 - (9) If the levir was a priest.
 - (10) While she was still with her husband.
 - (11) Cohabitation in error.
 - (12) The levir.
 - (13) He is entitled to confer upon his sister-in-law the same rights that had been conferred upon her by her husband. Hence, if she was married and entitled to eat terumah the levir also may confer upon her this privilege.
 - (14) As her husband's priesthood did not entitle her to eat terumah during the period of their betrothal, since only actual marriage can confer this privilege, the levir also cannot now confer this privilege upon her.
 - (15) If the kinyan was in one of the imperfect forms spoken of in our Mishnah.
 - (16) Even after their marriage. The reason will be explained infra.
 - (17) After the marriage.
 - (18) After the levirate marriage. The cohabitation of a deaf levir is considered to be no less valid to constitute a kinyan than the imperfect forms of kinyan mentioned in our Mishnah which constitute kinyan in the case of any levir.
 - (19) Because he regards an imperfect cohabitation which in ordinary cases constitutes no kinyan as valid in the case of the levir.
 - (20) According to him, imperfect cohabitation confers no more rights through the levir than through the husband; and here it is stated that the levir entitles her to eat terumah though her husband could not confer this privilege upon her!
 - (21) Because she was entitled to the same privilege during the lifetime of her husband,
 - (22) If she is only entitled to the privilege she enjoyed during the lifetime of her husband, in what respect is 'the power of the levir superior to that of the husband'?
 - (23) He married her.
 - (24) V. supra p. 374, n. 6.
 - (25) V. loc. cit., n. 7.
 - (26) V. loc. cit., n. 8.
 - (27) V. loc. cit., n. 2.
 - (28) How then could Samuel maintain that 'she may not eat' even though she had enjoyed that privilege while her husband was alive?
 - (29) V. supra p. 374, n. 16.
 - (30) V. loc. cit., n. 17.
 - (31) V. p. 375, n. 1.
 - (32) Though he maintains (according to the second version) that the levir does not confer any privileges that were not previously conferred by the husband.
 - (33) The statement just cited that she may eat terumah if the levir is deaf though she was not permitted to eat it while her husband was alive.
 - (34) I.e., the explanation given supra, in reply to the objection raised against Samuel, may now be given as a reply to the objection against Rab, viz., that the clause, 'If however, he married her and then became deaf she may eat it', is to be inserted before 'If he died and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat', the last clause thus referring to a married woman that was permitted to eat terumah during the lifetime of her husband.

(35) Since, in his opinion (according to the second version), the deaf levir (whose kinyan has the same validity as that effected through the imperfect forms mentioned in our Mishnah) does not confer the privilege of eating terumah even if the woman had enjoyed the privilege while her husband was alive.

(36) V. supra p. 374. n. 16.

(37) The terumah; by virtue of her son, as deduced from Lev. XXII, 11, infra 67a.

(38) But was survived by his father.

(39) By virtue of her husband.

(40) Why may she eat now by virtue of her husband while in the previous case, where she never had a son, her husband could not confer that privilege upon her?

(41) V. supra note 9.

(42) Not being survived by any son.

(43) Since the law is that she may not.

(44) How, then, could R. Nathan allow her to continue to eat terumah?

(45) Where the betrothal took place while he was still capable of hearing.

(46) Because Pentateuchally the betrothal confers the privilege upon her. Its postponement until after the marriage is merely a preventive measure Rabbinically instituted (v. Keth. 57b). which is, of course, not applicable here where marriage with the deaf man had already taken place.

(47) Against the woman's eating of terumah.

(48) V. supra note 3.

(49) There is no need to provide against the possibility of mistaking betrothal for marriage and for thus allowing a woman to eat terumah immediately after betrothal, since it is well known that the betrothal of a deaf man has no validity. The Rabbis who forbid the woman to eat terumah even after the marriage, it may be explained, provided against the possibility of mistaking such a marriage which followed a betrothal that took place while the priest was still capable of hearing (which Pentateuchally entitles the woman to the privilege) for one which followed a betrothal that took place when he was already deaf and which is Pentateuchally invalid.

(50) If according to R. Nathan it is the marriage, even though there was no son, that entitles the woman to the terumah.

(51) Who in such a case only agree with R. Nathan that the woman may eat terumah.

(52) Since he maintains that after the marriage, though there was no son, the woman is entitled to the privilege.

(53) Where the woman is prohibited to eat terumah even after the marriage.

(54) With their views in both the first and the final clause.

(55) That R. Nathan reserved his opinion until the Rabbis had finished their full statement.

(56) Which would have concluded the statement of the Rabbis.

(57) I.e., R. Nathan's view would thus have come at the very end. As, however, his opinion is inserted before 'she may not eat' which is the statement of the Rabbis, it cannot be maintained any more that he was waiting until they had concluded their full statement, and the original difficulty consequently arises again.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 56b

who enlightened us on the subject¹ from our Mishnah. 'An Israelite's wife who was outraged, though she is permitted to her husband, is disqualified from the priesthood;² and so it was taught by our Tanna:³ SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES ENUMERATED IN THE TORAH, OR WITH ANY OF THOSE WHO ARE INELIGIBLE TO MARRY HIM; now, what is the purport of SIMILARLY? Does it not mean, WHETHER IN ERROR OR IN PRESUMPTION, WHETHER UNDER COMPULSION OR OF HIS OWN FREE WILL? And yet it was stated, HE HAS THEREBY RENDERED HER INELIGIBLE'.⁴ — No; SIMILARLY might refer⁵ to the FIRST STAGE.⁶ 'To the first stage' with whom? If it be suggested, 'With one of the forbidden relatives', does this then imply [it might be retorted] that the case of the forbidden relatives is derived from that of the sister-in-law?⁷ On the contrary, the case of the sister-in-law was derived from the forbidden relatives, since the original prohibition of the first stage was written in connection with the forbidden relatives! — Rather, SIMILARLY refers⁸ to Unnatural intercourse with forbidden relatives.⁹ On the contrary; the original prohibition of the various forms of intercourse with a woman was written in connection with the forbidden relatives!¹⁰ — Rather, SIMILARLY refers⁸ to unnatural intercourse with those [cohabitation with whom is] subject to the penalty of negative precepts.¹¹

Rabbah¹² stated: If the wife of a priest had been outraged, her husband suffers the penalty of flogging on her account¹³ for [cohabiting with] a harlot.¹⁴ Only for [cohabiting with] a harlot, but not for ‘defilement’?¹⁵ — Read, ‘Also for [cohabitation with] a harlot’.¹⁶

R. Zera raised an objection: And she be not seized,¹⁷ she is forbidden; if, however, she was seized¹⁸ she is permitted.¹⁹ But there is another woman who is forbidden¹⁹ even though she was seized.¹⁸ And who is that? The wife of a priest. Now, a negative precept²⁰ that is derived from a positive one²¹ has only the force of a positive precept!²² — Rabbah replied: All²³ were included in the category of harlot.²⁴ When, therefore, Scripture specified in the case of the wife of an Israelite that only if she be not seized¹⁷ she is forbidden but if she was seized¹⁸ she is permitted, it may be inferred that the wife of a priest retains her forbidden status.²⁵

Others say: Rabbah stated, If the wife of a priest had been outraged, her husband suffers for her the penalty of flogging²⁶ on account of ‘defilement’.²⁷ Only on account of ‘defilement’ but not for [connubial relationship with] a harlot. Thus it is obvious that [when the woman acted] under compulsion she is not to be regarded as a harlot. R. Zera raised an objection: ‘And she be not seized,²⁸ she is forbidden; if, however, she was seized²⁹ she is permitted. But there is another woman who is forbidden³⁰ even though she was seized.²⁹ And who is that? The wife of a priest’. Now, a negative precept³¹ that is derived from a positive one³² has only the force of a positive precept!³³ — Rabbah³⁴ replied: All³⁵ were included in [the prohibition to live with her] after that she is defiled.³⁶ When, therefore, Scripture specified in the case of the wife of an Israelite that only when she be not seized³⁷ she is forbidden, but if she was seized³⁸ she is permitted, it may be inferred that the wife of a priest retains her forbidden status.³⁹

MISHNAH. THE BETROTHAL OF A WIDOW TO A HIGH PRIEST AND OF A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALIZAH TO A COMMON PRIEST⁴⁰ DOES NOT CONFER UPON THEM THE RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH.⁴¹ R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, DECLARE THEM ELIGIBLE.⁴² IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED AFTER MARRIAGE THEY REMAIN INELIGIBLE;⁴³ IF AFTER BETROTHAL THEY BECOME ELIGIBLE.⁴⁴

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Meir said, [this⁴⁵ may be arrived at by an inference] a minori ad majus: If permissible betrothal⁴⁶ does not confer the right of eating terumah, how much less forbidden betrothal.⁴⁷ They, however, replied: No; if you have said it⁴⁸ in respect of permissible betrothal⁴⁶ where the man may never confer the right of eating,⁴⁹ would you also say it⁴⁸ in respect of sinful betrothal⁴⁷ where the [priest], in other circumstances,⁵⁰ is entitled to confer the right of eating?⁵¹

R. Eleazar stated in the name of R. Oshaia: In the case where a priest who was wounded in the stones⁵² betrothed a daughter of an Israelite,⁵³ we have a difference of opinion between R. Meir and R. Eleazar and R. Simeon. According to R. Meir who holds that a woman awaiting a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation⁵⁴ may not eat terumah, this woman also⁵⁵ may not eat; but according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who maintain that a woman awaiting a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation⁵⁴ may eat

(1) Lit., ‘and lit up our eyes’.

(2) Supra 35a. She may not marry a priest even after the death of her husband.

(3) In our Mishnah תנא == our Tanna (Rashi). ותנא תנא == and our Tanna also taught so. Others render תנא ‘confirmation: ותנא תנא == and the Tanna is (or provides) confirmation (v. Jast.). [Or, ותנא תנא

'The Tanna teaches', v. Epstein, Schwarz-Festschrift pp. 319ff].

(4) To marry a priest. Since a married woman is subject to the same restrictions as the 'forbidden relatives', she being included in the penalty of incestuous unions in Lev. XVIII (v. verse 20), it follows that whatever renders the forbidden relatives in our Mishnah ineligible to marry a priest renders a married woman also ineligible. As 'outrage' or 'intercourse under compulsion' is included, our Mishnah must be in agreement with the ruling of R. Shesheth.

(5) Lit., 'what'.

(6) I.e., as in the previously mentioned cases so in the following, the first stage has the same force as consummation. The ineligibility of an outraged woman, therefore, does not at all come within the purview of our Mishnah.

(7) Since the law in the latter is made to apply by comparison also to the former.

(8) Lit., 'what'.

(9) The meaning being that as with the sister-in-law so with the other forbidden relatives kinyan is constituted IRRESPECTIVE OF THE NATURE OF THE INTERCOURSE, even if it was unnatural. Cf. supra p. 378, n. 6 second clause.

(10) The case of the sister-in-law is derived from them; not theirs from hers.

(11) Cf. supra p. 378, n. 6 and supra n. 2 mutatis mutandis.

(12) Cur. edd., 'Raba'.

(13) If he has intercourse with her.

(14) Who is forbidden to a priest (v. Lev. XXI, 7) whether her adultery was committed willingly or under compulsion. It is in the case of an Israelite only that a distinction is made between a woman's voluntary and compulsory adultery.

(15) If to an Israelite she is forbidden on account of her defilement when her act was voluntary (v. supra 11b), she should be forbidden to a priest on the same account even when her act was under compulsion!

(16) He suffers for both.

(17) Num. V, 13. E.V., neither she be taken in the act.

(18) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(19) To her husband.

(20) That a priest must not live with his outraged wife.

(21) An Israelite only may live with such a wife.

(22) It is not punishable by flogging. How then could Rabbah subject the husband to such a penalty?

(23) Married women who played the harlot whether willingly or under compulsion.

(24) Who is forbidden to her husband by a negative precept.

(25) Her prohibition to the priest, even if she acted under compulsion, is consequently derived from the original negative precept, and not, as had been assumed, from the positive precept relating to an Israelite.

(26) If he has intercourse with her.

(27) V. supra p. 379, n.8.

(28) Num. V, 13. E.V., neither she be taken in the act.

(29) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(30) To her husband.

(31) Cf. supra p. 379, n. 13 mutatis mutandis.

(32) An Israelite only may live with such a wife.

(33) V. supra p. 379, n. 15.

(34) So Bah. Cur. edd., 'Raba'.

(35) V. supra p. 379, n. 16.

(36) Deut. XXIV, 4.

(37) Num. V, 13, E.V., neither she be taken in the act.

(38) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(39) Cf. supra note 1.

(40) Since such betrothal is unlawful.

(41) If they were the daughters of Israelites. If they were the daughters of priests, their right to the eating of terumah which they enjoyed prior to their betrothal, ceases with the forbidden betrothal. (V. Rashi s.v. לשון אחר a.l.) According to Tosaf. (s.v. בין a.l.) the Mishnah refers to the daughters of priests only. Cf. also תוספות ישנים a.l.

(42) During the period of betrothal, so long as actual marriage has not taken place.

(43) Since, in the case of priests' daughters, marriage caused their permanent profanation, and in that of others the privilege had never been conferred upon them.

(44) Even according to the first Tanna. Priests' daughters lose the privilege only during the period of betrothal. As soon as the betrothal period ends either through death or divorce they may again eat terumah; and in the case of widowhood they may also marry a common priest. Daughters of Israelites are entitled to the same privileges except that of eating of terumah to which, of course, they had never been entitled.

(45) The ruling that the betrothals spoken of in our Mishnah do not confer upon the daughter of an Israelite the privilege of eating terumah (v. Rashi, second explanation).

(46) When an Israelite betroths the daughter of an Israelite.

(47) Of which our Mishnah speaks. [Var. lec.: 'If permissible betrothal renders her ineligible (a priest's daughter is not allowed to eat terumah after her betrothal to an Israelite), how much more forbidden betrothal'. This reading — a reading which it must be confessed appears more feasible — is adopted by Tosaf. in view of their interpretation (v. supra p. 380, n. 17) that the Mishnah refers only to daughters of priests].

(48) That betrothal does not confer the privilege of eating terumah.

(49) An Israelite is neither himself entitled to the eating of terumah nor can he confer the right upon others.

(50) If he married a woman permitted to him.

(51) Obviously not. Hence the ruling in our Mishnah that the betrothals confer the privilege.

(52) One so incapacitated is not permitted to marry even the daughter of an Israelite, v. Deut. XXIII, 2.

(53) [Var. lec.: 'a daughter of a priest'. A reading adopted by Tosaf. on their interpretation (cf. n. 6)].

(54) I.e., if she was betrothed to a man whom she is forbidden to marry.

(55) Who married the incapacitated priest.

this woman also may eat.¹

Whence [is this² proved]? Is it not possible that R. Eleazar and R. Simeon maintain [their opinion] only there because in other circumstances³ he is entitled to confer the right of eating, but not here where he is never entitled to confer the right of eating!⁴ And were you to reply that here also he⁵ is entitled to confer upon the daughter of proselytes⁶ the right of eating, surely [it may be retorted] this very question was addressed by R. Johanan to R. Oshaia⁷ who gave him no answer!⁸

It was stated:⁹ Abaye said,¹⁰ Because¹¹ he is entitled to confer upon [his wife]¹² the right to eat [terumah] so long as he does not cohabit with her.¹³ Raba said,¹⁰ Because¹¹ he may confer the right of eating¹⁴ [terumah] upon his Canaanitish bondmen and bondwomen.¹⁵

Abaye did not give the same explanation as Raba because matrimonial kinyan may be inferred from matrimonial kinyan, but matrimonial kinyan may not be inferred from the kinyan of slaves. And Raba does not give the same explanation as Abaye because there¹⁶ it is different, since she has already been eating it previously.¹⁷ And Abaye?¹⁸ — [The argument], 'since she has already been eating' cannot be upheld;¹⁹ for should you not admit this,²⁰ a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest who subsequently died should also be allowed to eat terumah since she has already been eating it!²¹

And Raba?²² — There,²³ his kinyan had completely ceased;²⁴ here, however, his kinyan did not cease.²⁵

[To turn to] the main text. R. Johanan enquired of R. Oshaia: If a priest who was wounded in the stones married the daughter of proselytes does he confer upon her the right of eating terumah? The other remained silent and made no reply at all. Later, another great man came and asked him a different question which he answered. And who was that man? Resh Lakish. Said R. Judah the Prince to R. Oshaia: Is not R. Johanan a great man?²⁶ The other replied: [No reply could be given] since he submitted a problem which has no solution.

In accordance with whose view?²⁷ If according to R. Judah,²⁸ she is not entitled to eat terumah whether he²⁹ does or does not retain his holiness. For if he retains his holiness she may not eat since the Master said³⁰, 'The daughter of a male proselyte is like the daughter of a male who is unfit for the priesthood';³¹ and if he does not retain his holiness,³² she may not eat either, since it has been said that the assembly of proselytes is called an 'assembly'!³³ If, however, according to R. Jose,³⁴ she is entitled to eat terumah whether he does or does not retain his holiness. For if he retains his holiness she may eat, since he³⁵ stated that even when a proselyte married a proselyte his daughter is eligible to marry a priest;³⁶ and if he does not retain his holiness, she may also eat since he³⁵ said that the assembly of proselytes is not called an 'assembly'!³⁷ It must rather be³⁸ in accordance with the view of the following Tanna. For we learned: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said, 'A woman who is the daughter of a proselyte must not be married to a priest unless her mother was of Israel',³⁹ And it is this that his question amounts to: Has only her eligibility⁴⁰ increased⁴¹ and consequently she is entitled to eat terumah⁴² or has perhaps her sanctity also increased⁴³ and consequently she is not permitted to eat?⁴⁴

Come and hear: When R. Aha b Hinena arrived from the South, he came and brought a Baraitha with him: Whence is it deduced that if a priest, who is wounded in the stones, married the daughter of proselytes, he confers upon her the right to eat terumah? For it was stated, But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money⁴⁵ etc.,⁴⁶ he may eat of it. Now, in accordance with whose view?⁴⁷ If it be suggested, 'according to R. Judah', surely [it may be retorted] he stated that whether he⁴⁸ does or does not retain his holiness she⁴⁹ is not permitted to eat.⁵⁰ And if⁵¹ 'in accordance with the view of R. Jose', what need [it may be asked] was there for a Scriptural text? Surely, he⁵² stated that whether he⁴⁸ does or does not retain his holiness she⁴⁹ is permitted to eat! Must it not [consequently be assumed that it⁵³ is] in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob? And so it may be inferred that only her eligibility⁵⁴ had been increased and that she is consequently permitted to eat. This proves it.

It was stated: Rab said,

- (1) Since through the kinyan of the betrothal the woman becomes the priest's acquisition and is, therefore, like himself, entitled to eat terumah so long as she does not become profaned (a halalah) through actual marriage.
 - (2) The ruling according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon just deduced.
 - (3) If he married a woman permitted to him.
 - (4) Since he is not permitted to marry any woman.
 - (5) The incapacitated priest, since he is only forbidden to enter into the assembly of the Lord (Deut. XXIII, 2), i.e., to marry a Jewess, but he is permitted to marry a proselyte.
 - (6) Who is not included in the assembly of the Lord. V. supra n. 7.
 - (7) Infra.
 - (8) As to whether such an incapacitated priest may confer upon the daughter of a proselyte the right of eating terumah. Since no answer was given, there is no proof that the right may be conferred at all. The difficulty consequently remains: How could the case of the incapacitated priest who can never confer the right upon others be inferred from the case of one who is, in certain circumstances, entitled to confer such a right?
 - (9) In reply to the difficulty raised. V. supra n. 10.
 - (10) The incapacitated priest is entitled to confer upon the woman he betrothed the right to eat terumah.
 - (11) In certain other circumstances.
 - (12) Whom he married before he had been incapacitated.
 - (13) After becoming incapacitated (v. infra 70a). Since he may confer the privilege of eating terumah in this case he may also confer it where the betrothal was unlawful, so long as the woman had not been profaned by him through marriage.
 - (14) מאכיל so MS.M. (Cur. edd מאכילה 'enables her to eat').
 - (15) As he may confer the privilege in that case he may also confer it upon the woman he betrothed.
 - (16) Where the incapacity occurred after marriage.

- (17) Prior to the man's incapacity. This, therefore, provides no proof that a man who is already incapacitated can also confer the privilege.
- (18) How does he reconcile the difference in two cases?
- (19) Lit., 'we do not say'.
- (20) But insist on upholding Raba's distinction.
- (21) Prior to her husband's death. As in this case the argument is obviously untenable so it is untenable in the case of the incapacitated priest.
- (22) How can he advance an argument that is untenable in the case cited?
- (23) Where the priest died.
- (24) As soon as the priest died, leaving no sons, their marital relationship was completely severed.
- (25) He is still her husband.
- (26) And so entitled to a reply.
- (27) Did R. Johanan ask his question.
- (28) Who, in Kid. 77a, differs from R. Jose on the question of the daughter of a proselyte.
- (29) The incapacitated Priest.
- (30) R. Judah.
- (31) ההוא halal. As he may not consequently marry a proselyte's daughter she is obviously forbidden to eat of the terumah.
- (32) And the priestly sanctity is consequently no reason for her prohibition to marry a halal.
- (33) An 'assembly of the Lord' into which an incapacitated person may not enter. (Cf. supra p. 382, nn. 7 and 8). The marriage is consequently forbidden and, therefore, confers upon the woman no right to the eating of terumah.
- (34) Did R. Johanan ask his question.
- (35) R. Jose. [So MS.M. cur. edd., 'a Master said'].
- (36) Kid. 77a. Hence she is not inferior in this respect to the daughter of an Israelite.
- (37) The marriage with her being consequently permissible, the right of eating terumah should obviously be conferred upon her.
- (38) R. Johanan raised his question.
- (39) Bik. I,5.
- (40) Where her mother was of Israel.
- (41) I.e., is she, if her mother was of Israel, thereby only enabled to marry a priests but is not regarded as a proper daughter of Israel to be included in the 'assembly of the Lord', so as to be forbidden to one incapacitated.
- (42) In any case. Even if the incapacitated priest is holy he may marry her. And, as she is not included in the 'assembly' (v. supra n. 13), she is not forbidden to marry him.
- (43) And she is thus included in the 'assembly' and hence forbidden to marry one incapacitated.
- (44) Since the marriage was a forbidden one.
- (45) Lev. XXII, 11.
- (46) The Heb. הוא in the original seems to be a mistake for הוא which is the only word omitted from the Scriptural quotation.
- (47) Was R. Aha's Baraitha necessary.
- (48) A priest suffering from the incapacity mentioned in the Baraitha.
- (49) The woman who married him.
- (50) Which is contrary to the Baraitha which permits it.
- (51) Cf. supra n. 3.
- (52) R. Jose.
- (53) R. Aha's Baraitha,
- (54) V. supra p. 384, nn 13 and 14.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 57b

'The bridal chamber¹ constitutes kinyan² with ineligible women'³ and Samuel said, 'The bridal chamber⁴ does not constitute kinyan² with ineligible women'.³ Said Samuel: Abba⁵ agrees with me in the case of a girl who is under three years of age and one day; since cohabitation with her constitutes no kinyan,⁶ the bridal chamber⁷ also constitutes no kinyan.⁶

Raba said, We also learned a similar Baraitha:⁸ A girl who is three years of age and one day may be betrothed by cohabitation; if a levir cohabited with her, he has thereby acquired her;⁹ one incurs through her the guilt of intercourse with a married woman; she¹⁰ defiles her cohabitor in respect of his imparting defilement to the lower, as well as to the upper couch;¹¹ if she was married to a priest she may eat terumah, and anyone ineligible¹² who cohabited with her causes her ineligibility.¹³ Thus only a girl of the age of three years and one day, who is rendered ineligible by cohabitation, is also rendered ineligible through the bridal chamber; but a girl younger than three years and one day, who is not rendered ineligible by cohabitation, is not rendered ineligible through the bridal chamber either.¹⁴ This proves it.

Rami b. Hama stated: [In regard to the question whether] the bridal chamber¹⁵ constitutes kinyan¹⁶ with ineligible women,¹⁷ we arrive at a difference of opinion between R. Meir and R. Eleazar and R. Simeon.

(1) Lit., 'there is huppah' (v. Glos.), even if it was unaccompanied by any other form of betrothal such as money, deed, or cohabitation (Rashi). On huppah v. Kid., Sonc. ed. p. 5, n. 7,

(2) To deprive the woman of her right to eat terumah where, as the daughter of a priest, she had previously been entitled to this privilege.

(3) Whom one is not permitted to marry; a widow, e.g., to a High Priest or a divorcee to a common priest. [On Rashi's interpretation which is followed here, both Rab and Samuel hold with R. Huna (v. Kid. 3a) that huppah by itself constitutes kinyan. They differ, however, in the case of ineligible women, Samuel being of the opinion that huppah with them constitutes no kinyan, since it does not allow them to enter into marital union. Rabbenu Tam, on the other hand, explains huppah here as having been preceded by kiddushin and with reference to the last clause of our Mishnah, the point at issue being whether with ineligible women it is considered nissu'in disqualifying the widow, or erusin; v. Tosaf s.v. כִּדּוּשִׁין].

(4) If unaccompanied by any other forms of matrimonial kinyan. V. supra n. 11.

(5) I.e., Rab, whose proper name was Abba. The former name (Rab == Master) was a title of honour conferred upon him as the Master par excellence of his time. According to Rashi, a.l., 'Abba' was a term of respect synonymous with 'prince' and 'master' by which Samuel, his younger contemporary, referred to Rab.

(6) V. supra p. 385, n. 12.

(7) Which constitutes kinyan only where cohabitation is possible, but which is not the case with a child under the age mentioned.

(8) From which the ruling on which Rab and Samuel are in agreement may be inferred.

(9) She is deemed to be his legal wife,

(10) During her period of menstruation.

(11) If he lies on a number of couches (coverlets, bed-spreads, and the like) resting one upon the other, he imparts levitical defilement to all, though he comes in direct contact with the uppermost one only.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 58a

According to R. Meir who holds that the betrothal causes ineligibility, the bridal chamber¹ also causes ineligibility, while according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who maintain that betrothal causes no ineligibility the bridal chamber also causes no ineligibility. But whence [is this proved]? Is it not possible that R. Meir advanced his view only there, in respect of betrothal, whereby kinyan is effected, but not in respect of the bridal chamber whereby no kinyan is effected!² Or else: R. Eleazar and R. Simeon may have advanced their view there only, in respect of betrothal, since it is not close to the act of intercourse; but the bridal chamber which is close to the act of intercourse, may well cause ineligibility.

But if anything can be said³ [it is, that the question⁴ depends] on the dispute between the following Tannaim: For it was taught, 'This class or that, [viz.,] eligible or ineligible women, who were married [to a priest], or who only entered [with him] into the bridal chamber without any intercourse having taken place, are entitled to sustenance from his estate and are also permitted to eat terumah'. 'Who only entered [etc.]' implies that 'were married' means that they were actually married!⁵ Must it not [consequently be concluded that the meaning is], 'as, for instance,⁶ when they entered the bridal chamber without any intercourse having taken place'? And yet it was stated that 'they are entitled to sustenance from his estate and are also permitted to eat terumah'.⁷ R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: Any woman whose cohabitation entitles her to the eating of terumah is also entitled to the eating of it through her entry into the bridal chamber, and any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah is not entitled through her entry into the bridal chamber also to the eating of it.⁸

Whence, [however, the proof]? Is it not possible that R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka is of the same opinion as R. Meir, who maintains that through betrothal alone a woman is not entitled to eat! — Instead, then, of the statement 'Any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah is not entitled through her entry into the bridal chamber also to the eating of it', the statement should have run, 'Any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah, is not entitled through her money⁹ also to the eating of terumah'. But is it not possible that as the first Tanna spoke of the bridal chamber he also spoke of the bridal chamber!

R. Amram stated, The following ruling was given to us by R. Shesheth and he threw light on the subject¹⁰ from a Mishnah: The bridal chamber constitutes kinyan with ineligible women.¹¹ And the following Tanna taught the same thing:¹² 'Amen¹³ that I¹⁴ have not gone aside¹⁵ as a betrothed, as a married woman, as one awaiting the decision of the levir or as one taken [by the levir]'.¹⁶ Now, how is one to imagine the case of the 'betrothed'? If it be suggested that she was one who was warned¹⁷ while she was betrothed, and then she secluded herself¹⁸ and is now made to drink¹⁹ while she is still only betrothed; is a betrothed [it may be asked] subject to the drinking? Surely we learned: A betrothed or one awaiting the decision of a levir neither drinks²⁰ nor receives a kethubah!²¹ Should it, however, [be suggested that she is one] who was warned while she was betrothed, and then she secluded herself,²² and is now made to drink when she is already married; do the waters [it may be asked] test her? Surely it was taught: And the man shall be clear from iniquity,²³ only when the man is 'clear from iniquity' do the waters test his wife; when, however, the man is not 'clear from iniquity'²⁴ the waters do not test his wife!²⁵ Consequently [she²⁶ must be one] who was warned while she was betrothed and then she secluded herself,²² and subsequently entered the bridal chamber but there was no cohabitation. Thus²⁷ it may be inferred that the bridal chamber alone constitutes kinyan²⁸ with ineligible women.²⁹ Said Raba: Do you think that this³⁰ is an authenticated statement?³¹ Surely when R. Aha b. Hanina³² arrived from the South, he came and brought a Baraitha with him: Besides thy husband,³³ only when the cohabitation of the husband preceded that of the adulterer, but not when the cohabitation of the adulterer preceded that of the husband! Rami b. Hama replied: This³⁴ is possible where, for instance, he³⁵ cohabited with her while she was only betrothed and still in the house of her father. Similarly in respect of the woman awaiting the decision of the levir³⁶ [it must obviously be a case] where the man cohabited with her in the house of her father-in-law!³⁷

(1) Even in the absence of betrothal.

(2) The bridal chamber alone without the additional kinyan of money, deed, or cohabitation is of no validity. V. Kid. 5a.

- (3) On the lines of Rami b. Hama's statement.
- (4) Whether the bridal chamber constitutes kinyan with ineligible women. (Cf. supra p. 385, nn. 11 and 13).
- (5) Otherwise both expressions would have meant exactly the same classes. But this meaning is impossible in view of the fact that after actual marriage it is unanimously agreed that the woman is ineligible to eat terumah!
- (6) I.e., the expression 'or', וְ is to be understood as the equivalent of 'as for instance' כְּגוֹן, and the clause following is an illustration of the preceding one.
- (7) Which proves that, even where the union was a forbidden one, the entry into the bridal chamber alone does not deprive a woman of the right of eating terumah if she was previously entitled to it.
- (8) If she was the daughter of an Israelite (v. Keth. 57a). As the bridal chamber and cohabitation are in this case placed on the same level, it follows that in the case of the daughter of a priest also, if she loses her right to the terumah by cohabitation, she also loses it by entry into the bridal chamber. Thus it has been shewn that the question referred to by Rami b. Hama is a matter of dispute between the first Tanna and R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Broka.
- (9) The token of betrothal.
- (10) Lit., 'and he lit up our eyes'.
- (11) Cf. supra p. 385, nn. 11 and 13.
- (12) וְתִנָּא תוֹנָא v. supra p. 378, n. 3.

- (14) I.e., the sotah who confirms the declaration (v. Num. V, 19).
- (15) 'Have not been faithless'. Cf. ibid. vv. 19, 20.
- (16) Where the levir suspects her of infidelity, v. Sotah 18a, Kid. 27b.
- (17) That she must not hold secret meetings with a certain man.
- (18) With the man. V. Bah. Cur. edd. omit, 'and then . . . herself'.
- (19) The 'water of bitterness' (cf. Num. V, 18 and ibid. 17).
- (20) The 'water of bitterness' (cf. Num. V, 18 and ibid. 17).
- (21) If she secluded herself with the suspected man and if, in consequence of this, she is divorced by her husband. V. Sotah 23b, Kid. 27b, Sifre, Nasso,
- (22) With the suspected man, during the period of her betrothal.
- (23) Num. V, 31.
- (24) As in this case where he married her, despite her intimacy with the suspected man during her betrothal which had caused her prohibition to him.
- (25) Sotah 28a, 47b, Shebu. 5a, Kid. 27b.
- (26) The betrothed spoken of,
- (27) Since the woman is subjected to the test of the water though no cohabitation had taken place.
- (28) In the absence of cohabitation. Had not the bridal chamber constituted the kinyan, which brought the woman within the category of marriage, she would not have been subject to the test to which a married woman only must submit. (Cf. Num. V, 19, being under thy husband).

Alternatively: Since in her case, unlike that of the betrothed, the kinyan of the bridal chamber is not applicable.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 58b

Why then, do you call her 'a woman awaiting the decision of the levir' [when such a woman] is in fact his proper wife, since Rab had stated, 'kinyan is constituted in all respects'?¹ — [The Mishnah is] in accordance with the view of Samuel who stated, 'Kinyan is constituted only in respect of the things specified in the section'.²

Is not this³ adduced only as a reason and support for the opinion of Rab?⁴ And Rab, surely, had said that 'Kinyan is constituted in all respects'!⁵ — Here we are concerned with a case where for instance he⁶ addressed to her a ma'amar,⁷ and it³ represents the view of Beth Shammai who maintain that a ma'amar constitutes a perfect kinyan.⁸ If so, she would be identical with the 'betrothed woman'!⁹ — And according to your view, has not a 'married woman' and 'one taken [by the levir]' the same status?¹⁰ But [the explanation must be that] 'a married woman' refers to one's own wife, and 'one taken [by the levir]' refers to that of another man.¹¹ So here also 'betrothed' means his own and 'a woman awaiting the decision of the levir', that of another.¹¹

R. Papa said: It¹² represents the view of the following Tanna.¹³ For it was taught: It is not permissible to warn a betrothed woman in order that she may be made to drink¹⁴ while she is betrothed. She may, however, be warned in order that she may be made to drink when she is already married.¹⁵ R. Nahman b. Isaac explained: By implication.¹⁶

R. Hanina sent [an instruction] in the name of R. Johanan: A levir who addressed a ma'amar to his yebamah, while he has a living brother, causes her disqualification from the eating of terumah¹⁷ even if he is a priest and she the daughter of a priest.¹⁸ According to whom?¹⁹ If it be suggested, according to R. Meir, it is possible [it might be objected that] R. Meir said that one that is subject to an illegitimate cohabitation²⁰ is not permitted to eat terumah [only when the cohabitation is] Pentateuchally forbidden;²¹ did he, however, say [that the same law holds when the prohibition is only] Rabbinical? [Is it], however, [suggested that it was made] according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon? [It may be objected]: If the eating of terumah is permitted to one who is subject to a cohabitation which is pentateuchally forbidden, is there any need to speak of one which is only Rabbinically forbidden! When Rabin, however, came²² he stated: Where a levir addressed a ma'amar to his yebamah, all²³ agree that she is permitted to eat terumah. If he has a profaned brother,²⁴ all²³ agree that she is not permitted to eat.²⁵ They only differ where he²⁶ gave her²⁷ a letter of divorce.²⁸ R. Johanan maintains that she may eat, and Resh Lakish maintains that she may not eat. 'R. Johanan maintains that she may eat', for even the statement of R. Meir who holds that she may not eat applies only to one subject of a Pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation; where, however, it is only Rabbinically forbidden she may eat. 'And Resh Lakish maintains that she may not eat' for even the statement of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, who hold that she may eat, applies only to one who has elsewhere the right²⁹ to confer the privilege of eating, but not in this case,³⁰ since he has no right³¹ to confer the privilege elsewhere. And should you suggest that here also he has the right³¹ to confer the privilege of eating in the case where she returns,³² [it may be retorted that] one who returns³² severs her connection with him and resumes her relationship with her father's house;³³ but this woman³⁴ remains bound to him.³⁵

IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED etc. R. Hiyya b. Joseph enquired of Samuel: If a High priest betrothed a minor, who became adolescent³⁶ during her betrothal with him,³⁷

(1) Supra 56a, and the woman is regarded as his wife even if the cohabitation was not intended to serve as a legal matrimonial kinyan.

(2) Cf. loc. cit. and notes.

(3) The Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth.

(4) Who, contrary to the opinion of Samuel, maintains that the bridal chamber does constitute kinyan with ineligible women (supra 57b).

(5) V. supra note 3.

(6) The levir.

(7) And then cohabited with her adulterously in her father-in-law's house, with no intention of effecting a legal kinyan. Alternatively: Only a ma'amar was addressed to her but no cohabitation at all took place. The cohabitation of the adulterer which, according to this interpretation, precedes that of the levir does not affect the legality of the water test since in any case the cohabitation of the first husband (the deceased brother) preceded.

(8) Supra 29b. The sister-in-law thus loses entirely her former status of 'widow of a deceased brother' and assumes that of a 'betrothed woman'. Subsequent intercourse with her unless accompanied by the entry into the bridal chamber does not, therefore, change her status, as is the case where no ma'amar had been addressed, to that of a married woman. Her description, consequently, can only be that of 'one awaiting the decision of the levir'.

(9) Whose case had been specifically mentioned. Why should the same law be mentioned twice?

(10) And both were nevertheless specified.

(11) I.e., his brother's widow whom he married.

(12) The Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth.

(13) It being a case where the warning was given during betrothal, and the seclusion with the man took place after marriage and cohabitation. The water test is applied on the basis of that warning. Alternatively: The warning was given during betrothal and it was followed by the seclusion with the man, the test being applied after marriage. The previously cited deduction, that when the husband is not clear from iniquity the test is not admissible, is not accepted by this authority.

(14) The water of bitterness.

(15) Sotah 25a. The man in such a case is clear from iniquity. No proof may consequently be adduced from the Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth that the bridal chamber constitutes kinyan. Alternatively: This Tanna does not accept the deduction in respect of the husband's clearness from iniquity. (V. supra n. 4, end).

(16) ג'ג'ג'ג' , v. Kid. 27b. The oath the woman is made to take at the drinking of the water of bitterness in respect of the days of her betrothal is not a direct oath but one added to that which she takes in connection with a suspected act after her marriage.

(17) Until marriage had been consummated.

(18) Because (v. infra) his brother might cohabit with her and thus cause her prohibition to marry either of them (v. supra 50b).

(19) Was R. Johanan's statement made.

(20) As, e.g., in this case, where either brother might marry her, while the cohabitation of one of them is Rabbinically forbidden.

(21) E.g., a widow to a High Priest.

(22) From Palestine to Babylon.

(23) R. Johanan as well as Resh Lakish.

(24) Halal (v. Glos.) whose cohabitation would disqualify her.

(25) Even though she is the daughter of a priest and even where the ma'amar had been addressed to her by a qualified priest, she is forbidden to eat terumah, owing to her being subject at least to one Pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation. Even R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who allow terumah in the case of a widow to a High priest do not allow it here since, unlike the High Priest who in cases other than that of the widow and the like is entitled to confer the right, the halal can never confer such a privilege upon anyone.

(26) A levir who was a priest.

(27) His yebamah who was the daughter of a priest.

(28) Which Rabbinically causes her prohibition to the levir, while Pentateuchally she is still awaiting cohabitation with him. She is thus awaiting a cohabitation which is Rabbinically forbidden.

(29) Through a similar act of betrothal.

(30) Where a letter of divorce was given.

(31) By means of a similar act of divorce.

(32) To the house of her father, if she was the daughter of a priest. Cf. Lev. XXII, 13.

(33) Her regaining the privilege of eating terumah is due to her relationship not with him but with her father's family.

(34) To whom the letter of divorce was given.

(35) Since a letter of divorce does not sever the levirate bond.

(36) בגרה v. infra p. 394 n. 7; perhaps of advanced age, when she is no more in possession of her full virgin powers (cf. Golds. a.l.). Such a woman is forbidden to a High priest by deduction from Lev. XXI, 13 And he shall take a wife in her virginity.

(37) Lit., 'under him'.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 59a

what [is the law]:¹ Are we guided by the marriage² or by the betrothal?³ — The other replied to him: You have learned it: IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED AFTER MARRIAGE THEY REMAIN INELIGIBLE; IF AFTER BETROTHAL THEY BECOME ELIGIBLE.⁴ The first said to him: With reference to rendering her a halalah,⁵ I have no doubt that it is the forbidden cohabitation⁶ that causes her to be a halalah. My question is only: What is implied by, And he shall take a wife in her virginity:⁷ Is the 'taking' of betrothal required,⁸ or is it the 'taking' of marriage that is required?⁹ The other replied, You have learned this also: [A priest who] betrothed a widow, and was subsequently appointed to be a High Priest, may consummate the marriage!¹⁰ — There it is different because it is written, Shall he take to wife.¹¹ Here also it is written wife!¹² — Only one¹³ but not two. And what is the reason?¹⁴ — In the case of the one,¹⁵ her body has undergone a change;¹⁶ in that of the other her body underwent no change.

MISHNAH. A HIGH PRIEST SHALL NOT MARRY A WIDOW¹⁷ WHETHER SHE BECAME A WIDOW AFTER A BETROTHAL OR AFTER A MARRIAGE. HE SHALL NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT.¹⁸ R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON PERMIT HIM TO MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT,¹⁸ BUT HE MAY NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS WOUNDED.¹⁹

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: A widow . . . shall he not take,¹⁷ whether she became a widow after a betrothal or after a marriage. Is not this obvious?²⁰ — It might have been assumed that [the meaning of] widow²¹ is to be inferred from widow²² in the case of Tamar; as there²² it was one after marriage, so here²¹ also it is one after marriage; hence we were taught [that any widow was meant]. But might it not be suggested that it is indeed so?²³ — [It is compared] to a divorced woman:²⁴ As 'divorced woman'²⁴ [includes any divorcee] whether after betrothal or after marriage,²⁵ so also 'widow'²⁴ [includes any widow] whether after betrothal or after marriage.

HE SHALL NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT. Our Rabbis taught: And he shall take a wife in her virginity²⁶ excludes one who is adolescent, whose virginity is ended; so R. Meir. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon permit the marriage of one who is adolescent. On what principle do they differ? — R. Meir is of the opinion that virgin²⁷ implies even [one who retains] some of her virginity; her virginity²⁸ implies only one who retains all her virginity;²⁹ in her virginity³⁰ implies only [when previous intercourse with her took place] in the natural manner,³¹ but not when in an unnatural manner.³² R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, however, are of the opinion that virgin would have implied a perfect virgin; her virginity implies even [one who retains] only part of her virginity;³³ in her virginity implies only one whose entire virginity is intact,³⁴ irrespective of whether [previous intercourse with her was] of a natural or unnatural character.³⁵

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: A woman who was subjected to unnatural intercourse is disqualified from marrying a priest.³⁶ Raba raised an objection: And she shall be his wife,³⁷ applies to a woman eligible to marry him. This excludes [the marriage of] a widow³⁸ to a High Priest,³⁹ of a divorced woman³⁸ and a haluzah³⁸ to a common priest. Now, how is one to understand [the outrage]?⁴⁰ If it be suggested that it was one of natural intercourse, what [it may be asked] was the object of pointing to her widowhood⁴¹ when [her prohibition] could be inferred from the fact that she had had carnal intercourse with a man?⁴² Must it not consequently [be assumed to be] a case of unnatural intercourse; and the only reason⁴³ [why the woman is forbidden⁴⁴ is] because she is a widow, and not because she had had carnal intercourse!⁴⁵

- (2) When she was already of age and consequently forbidden to him.
- (3) When she was still permitted.

- (35) Even if it was unnatural she is forbidden, unless her virginity remained completely intact. Cf. supra n. 7. As, according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, one who is adolescent is permitted it was necessary to have the Scriptural text to exclude this case. According to R. Meir, however, who excludes one who is adolescent, there is no need any more to exclude this case which is easily inferred a minori ad majus from the former.

(45) Which proves that unnatural intercourse does not cause a woman to be forbidden to marry a High Priest. How then could Rab state that a woman in such circumstances is forbidden?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 59b

— This¹ represents the view of² R. Meir,³ while Rab holds the same view as R. Eleazar.⁴ If [Rab holds the same view] as R. Eleazar, what was the object of pointing to her previous carnal intercourse⁵ when [her prohibition] could have been inferred from the fact that she was a harlot,⁶ R. Eleazar having stated that an unmarried man who cohabited with an unmarried woman with no matrimonial intention renders her thereby a harlot!⁷ — R. Joseph replied:⁸ When, for instance, the woman was subjected to intercourse with a beast, where the reason of 'previous carnal intercourse may be applied but not that of harlot.'⁹ Said Abaye to him: Whatever you prefer [your reply cannot be upheld], If she is a be'ulah¹⁰ she must also be a harlot; and if she is not a harlot¹¹ she cannot be a be'ulah either! And were you to reply: This case is similar to that of a wounded woman,¹² [it may be pointed out] that if [the disqualification should be extended to] unnatural intercourse also,¹³ you will find no woman eligible to marry a [High Priest [since there is not one] who has not been in some way wounded¹⁴ by a splinter! No, said R. Zera,¹⁵ in respect of a minor who made a declaration of refusal.¹⁶

R. Shimi b. Hiyya stated: A woman who had intercourse with a beast is eligible to marry a priest.¹⁷ Likewise it was taught: A woman who had intercourse with that which is no human being,¹⁸ though she is in consequence subject to the penalty of stoning,¹⁹ is nevertheless permitted to marry a priest.²⁰

When R. Dimi came²¹ he related: It once happened at Haitalu²² that while a young woman was sweeping the floor²³ a village dog²⁴ covered her from the rear,²⁵ and Rabbi permitted her to marry a priest. Samuel said: Even a High Priest. But was there a High Priest in the days of Rabbi?²⁶ — Rather, [Samuel meant]: Fit for a High Priest.

Raba of Parzakaia²⁷ said to R. Ashi: Whence is derived the following statement which the Rabbis made: Harlotry is not applicable to bestial intercourse? — It is written, Thou shalt not bring the hire of a harlot, or the price of a dog,²⁸ and yet we learned that the hire of a dog²⁹ and the price of a harlot³⁰ are permitted³¹ because it is said, Even both these,²⁸ two only but not four.

Our Rabbis taught: [A High Priest] shall not marry the woman he himself has outraged or seduced.³² If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid.³³ He shall not marry a woman whom another man has outraged or seduced. If he did marry her, the child, said R. Eliezer b. Jacob, is profaned:³⁴ but the Sages said: The child is legitimate.³⁵

'If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid'. Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: But he must put her aside by a letter of divorce. What, then, [is the explanation] of the statement 'If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid'? — R. Aha b. Jacob replied: It was meant to imply Glos.) but not in that of harlot, while her refusal to live with him does not give her the status of divorcee or widow but that of mema'eneth. Hence the necessity for Rab's statement that such a minor also is forbidden to marry a High Priest.

that he pays no fine¹ in the case of a seduced woman.²

R. Gebiha of Be Kathi³ came and repeated the reported ruling⁴ in the presence of R. Ashi, whereupon the other said to him: Surely both Rab and R. Johanan stated '[a High Priest] must not marry a woman who is adolescent⁵ or "wounded",⁶ but if he married her, the marriage is valid', which clearly proves [that he may continue to live with the woman because in any case] she would ultimately have become adolescent and would ultimately have been 'wounded' by living with⁷ him; here also⁸ [she should be permitted to live with him because] ultimately she would have become a be'ulah by living with⁷ him! — This is a difficulty.

'He shall not marry a woman whom another man has outraged or seduced. If he did marry her, the child, said R. Eliezer⁹ b. Jacob, is profaned; but the Sages said: The child is fit'.¹⁰ Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob; and so said R. Giddal in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob. Others say: R. Huna stated in the name of Rab. What is R. Eliezer b. Jacob's reason?¹¹ — He is of the same opinion as R.

Eleazar.¹² But is the former of the same opinion as the latter? Surely we have an established tradition that 'the teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is small in quantity, but select',¹³ while in this case R. Amram¹⁴ stated that the halachah is not in accordance with R. Eleazar!¹⁵ — This is a difficulty.

R. Ashi explained: They¹⁶ differ [on the question whether the offspring] of a union forbidden by a positive commandment¹⁷ is deemed to be a halal. R. Eliezer b. Jacob is of the opinion [that the offspring] of a union forbidden by a positive commandment is deemed to be a halal while the Rabbis are of the opinion that the offspring of a union forbidden by a positive commandment is no halal. What is R. Eliezer b. Jacob's reason? — Because it is written, 'A widow, or one divorced, or a profaned woman, or a harlot, these shall he not take,' but a virgin etc.,¹⁸ and this is followed by the Scriptural injunction, 'And he shall not profane¹⁹ his seed among his people,'²⁰ which refers to all.²¹ And the Rabbis?²² — [By the expression] these¹⁸ the context is broken up.²³ But R. Eliezer b. Jacob maintains that the expression, these,¹⁸ serves the purpose of excluding the menstruant.²⁴

Whose view is represented in the following statement wherein it was taught: [Only the offspring] of these²⁵ is to be regarded a halal but no offspring of a menstruant is to be deemed a halal.²⁶ — Whose view? That of R. Eliezer b. Jacob. But on the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, the expression these²⁶ should have been written at the end!²⁷ — This is a difficulty.²⁸

Our Rabbis taught: For a betrothed sister,²⁹ R. Meir and R. Judah said, [a common priest]³⁰ may defile himself.³¹ R. Jose and R. Simeon said: He may not defile himself for her. For [a sister who was] outraged or seduced, all agree that he may not defile himself.³¹ As to one 'wounded',³² R. Simeon says he may not defile himself for her; for R. Simeon maintains that he may defile himself for one who is fit for a High Priest,³³ but he may not defile himself for one who is not fit for a High Priest.³⁴ For one who is adolescent, all agree³⁵ that he may defile himself.³⁶

What is R. Meir's and R. Judah's reason? — They make the following exposition: And for his sister a virgin,³⁷ excludes one who had been outraged or seduced.³⁸ It might be assumed that one who was 'wounded' is also to be excluded.³⁹ Hence it was specifically stated, 'That hath had no husband,'³⁷ only she whose condition is due to a man [is excluded]³⁹ but not one⁴⁰ whose condition is not due to a man. That is near,³⁷ includes a betrothed [sister]; unto him,³⁷ includes a sister who is adolescent.

What need was there for a Scriptural text in this case?⁴¹ Surely R. Meir stated, 'virgin implies even [one who retains] some of her virginity'!⁴² — It was required, because it might have been assumed that the expression of virgin⁴³ shall be deduced from virgin elsewhere;⁴⁴ as there it refers to a na'arah⁴⁵ only, so here also it refers to a na'arah⁴⁵ only, hence we were taught [that the case here is different]. And what are the reasons of R. Jose and R. Simeon? — They make the following exposition: And for his sister a virgin,⁴³ excludes one who has been outraged, seduced or wounded;⁴⁶ that hath had no,⁴³ excludes one who is betrothed; that is near,⁴³ includes a betrothed who had been divorced; unto him,⁴³ includes one who is adolescent. 'That is near, includes a betrothed who had been divorced';

but, surely, R. Simeon said, 'He may defile himself for one who is fit for a High Priest, but may not defile himself for one who is not fit for a High Priest'!¹ — There² it is different, because the All Merciful has included her [by the expression] near.³ If so, the 'wounded' also should be included! — Near³ implies one and not two. And what [reason for this]⁴ do you see? — To the body of the one something had been done while to that of the other nothing had been done.

As to R. Jose, since his colleague⁵ had left him,⁶ it may be inferred that in respect of the 'wounded', he himself is of the same opinion as R. Meir.⁷ Whence, however, does he derive it? — From That hath had no man. But deduction,⁸ surely, had already been made⁹ from this text! — One⁸ is deduced from That hath had no and the other¹⁰ from man.¹¹

"Unto him", includes one who is adolescent'. But surely R. Simeon stated that 'virgin' implied a perfect virgin!¹² — His reason there is also derived from here, because he makes the following exposition: since [the Scriptural text], 'unto him', was required to include one who is adolescent, it is to be inferred that 'virgin' implies a perfect virgin.

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai stated: A proselyte who is under the age of three years and one day is permitted to marry a priest,¹³ for it is said, But all the women children that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves¹⁴, and Phinehas¹⁵ surely was with them. And the Rabbis?¹⁶ — [These were kept alive] as bondmen and bondwomen.¹⁷ If so,¹⁸ a proselyte whose age is three years and one day¹⁹ should also be permitted! — [The prohibition is to be explained] in accordance with R. Huna. For R. Huna pointed out a contradiction: It is written, Kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him,²⁰ but if she hath not known, save her alive; from this it may be inferred that children are to be kept alive whether they have known or have not known [a man]; and, on the other hand, it is also written, But all the women children, that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves,¹⁴ but do not spare them if they have known. Consequently²¹ it must be said that Scripture speaks of one who is fit²² for cohabitation.²³

It was also taught likewise: And every woman that hath known man,²⁰ Scripture speaks of one who is fit²³ for cohabitation. You say, 'Of one who is fit for cohabitation'; perhaps it is not so but of one who had actual intercourse? — As Scripture stated, But all women children, that have not known man by lying with him,²⁴ it must be concluded that Scripture speaks of one who is fit for cohabitation.²³

Whence did they know?²⁵ — R. Hana²⁶ b. Bizna replied in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: They were made to pass before the frontplate.²⁷ If the face of anyone turned pale²⁸ it was known that she was fit for cohabitation; if it did not turn pale²⁸ it was known that she was unfit for cohabitation.

R. Nahman said: Dropsy is a manifestation of lewdness.

Similarly, it is said, And they found among the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead four hundred young virgins, that had not known man by lying with him;²⁹ whence did they know it?³⁰ R. Kahana replied: They made them sit upon the mouth of a wine-cask. [Through anyone who had] had previous intercourse, the odour penetrated; through a virgin, its odour did not penetrate. They should have been made to pass before the frontplate!³¹ — R. Kahana son of R. Nathan replied: It is written, for acceptance,³² for acceptance but not for punishment. If so, the same should have applied at Midian also!³³ R. Ashi replied: It is written, 'unto them', implying unto them³⁴ for acceptance but not for punishment; unto idolaters,³⁵ however, even for punishment.³⁶

R. Jacob b. Idi stated in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Yohai.³⁷ Said R. Zera to R. Jacob b. Idi: Did you hear this³⁷ explicitly or did you learn it by a deduction? What [could be the] deduction? — As R. Joshua b. Levi related: There was a certain town in the Land of Israel the legitimacy of whose inhabitants was disputed, and Rabbi sent R. Romanos who conducted an enquiry and found in it the daughter of a proselyte who was under the age of three years and one day,³⁸ and Rabbi declared her eligible to live with a priest.³⁹ The other⁴⁰ replied:⁴¹ I heard it explicitly. And what [matters it] if it⁴² was learned by deduction?⁴³ — It is possible that there⁴⁴ it was different; since the marriage had already taken place he sanctioned it; for, indeed, both Rab and R. Johanan stated: A priest may not marry one who is adolescent or 'wounded', but if already married, he may continue to live with her. How now! There it is quite correct [to sanction the marriage since in any case] she would ultimately become adolescent while she⁴⁵ will be with him,⁴⁶ and she would also ultimately become a be'ulah while with him;⁴⁶ but here, would she ultimately become a harlot⁴⁷ while with him?⁴⁸ R. Safra taught [that he⁴⁰ arrived at it]⁴² by deduction, and, having raised the difficulty,⁴⁹ answered it in the same way.⁵⁰

A certain priest married a proselyte who was under the age of three years and one day. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to him: What [do you mean by] this?⁵¹ — The other replied: Because R. Jacob b. Idi stated in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi that the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Yohai.⁵² 'Go', the first said, 'and arrange for her release, or else I will pull R. Jacob b. Idi out of your ear'.⁵³

It was taught: And so did R. Simeon b. Yohai state that the graves of idolaters do not impart levitical uncleanness by an ohel,¹ for it is said, And ye My sheep the sheep of My pasture, are men;² you are called men³ but the idolaters are not called men.³

An objection was raised: And the persons were sixteen thousand!⁴ — This is due to [the mention of] cattle.⁵ Wherein are more than six-score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right and their left hand!⁶ — This is due [to the mention of] cattle.⁷ Whosoever hath killed any person, and whosoever hath touched any slain, purify yourselves!⁸ — One of the Israelites might have been slain. And the Rabbis?⁹ — [Scripture states]. There lacketh not one man of us.¹⁰ And R. Simeon b. Yohai? — There lacketh not one man of us, through indulgence in sin.

Rabina replied: Granted that Scripture excluded them¹¹ from imparting uncleanness through an ohel,¹² because of the written text, When a man dieth in the tent,¹³ did Scripture also exclude them from [imparting uncleanness by] touch and carriage?¹⁴

MISHNAH. [A PRIEST WHO] BETROTHED A WIDOW, AND WAS SUBSEQUENTLY APPOINTED HIGH PRIEST, MAY CONSUMMATE THE MARRIAGE. IT ONCE HAPPENED WITH JOSHUA B. GAMALA THAT HE BETROTHED MARTHA THE DAUGHTER OF BOETHUS, AND THE KING APPOINTED HIM HIGH PRIEST, AND HE, NEVERTHELESS, CONSUMMATED THE MARRIAGE.

IF ONE AWAITING THE DECISION OF THE LEVIR¹⁵ BECAME SUBJECT TO A COMMON PRIEST WHO WAS SUBSEQUENTLY APPOINTED HIGH PRIEST, [THE LATTER], THOUGH HE ALREADY ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, MUST NOT CONSUMMATE THE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Whence is it deduced that [a priest] who betrothed a widow and was afterwards appointed High Priest may consummate the marriage? It is specifically stated in Scripture, Shall he take to wife.¹⁶ If so, [the same law should apply to] a yebamah awaiting the decision of the levir also! — A 'wife' but not a yebamah.

IT ONCE HAPPENED TO JOSHUA etc. He APPOINTED HIM¹⁷ but he was not elected!¹⁸ Said R. Joseph: I see here a conspiracy;¹⁹ for R. Assi, in fact, related that Martha the daughter of Boethus brought to King Jannai²⁰ a tarkab²¹ of denarii before he gave an appointment to Joshua b. Gamala among the High Priests.²²

MISHNAH. A HIGH PRIEST WHOSE BROTHER DIED²³ MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.²⁴

GEMARA. He lays down a general rule implying²⁵ that there is no difference whether [the yebamah became a widow] after betrothal or after marriage! One can well understand [the case of the widow] after marriage, [since marriage with her is forbidden by] a positive²⁶ as well as by a negative commandment,²⁷ and no positive commandment²⁸ may override a negative and a positive commandment;²⁹ but [in the case of a widow] after betrothal, the positives should override the negative commandment!³⁰ — The first act of cohabitation³¹ was forbidden as a preventive measure against the second act of cohabitation.³²

MISHNAH. A COMMON PRIEST SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION,³³ UNLESS HE HAD ALREADY A WIFE³⁴ OR CHILDREN.³⁵ R. JUDAH SAID: EVEN THOUGH HE HAS HAD A WIFE AND CHILDREN HE SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, SINCE SUCH³⁶ [IS INCLUDED IN THE TERM OF] HARLOT MENTIONED IN THE TORAH.³⁷ BUT THE SAGES SAID: THE TERM HARLOT IMPLIES ONLY A FEMALE PROSELYTE,³⁸ FREED BONDMAID³⁸ AND ONE WHO HAS BEEN SUBJECTED TO MERETRICIOUS INTERCOURSE. GEMARA. Said the Exilarch³⁹ to R. Huna: What is the reason?⁴⁰ Obviously because of the duty of the propagation of the race; are, then, only priests commanded concerning the propagation of the race while Israelites are not commanded?⁴¹ The other replied:⁴² Because it was desired to state in the final clause, R. JUDAH SAID: EVEN THOUGH HE HAS HAD A WIFE

(1) אהל, lit., 'tent', i.e., on the man who stands on, or bends over such a grave, constituting his body, as it were, a tent.

(2) Ezek. XXXIV, 31.

(3) אדם (Adam), in respect of levitical uncleanness by ohel. The expression אדם is also used in the Pentateuchal text dealing with the laws of the uncleanness of objects found in a tent in which lay a corpse. V. Num, XIX, 14ff. [This is held by R. Simeon b. Yohai to denote, as distinct from the other terms for 'man' (איש, גבר, אנוש), only an Israelite who, as a worshipper of the true God, can be said to have been like Adam created in the image of God. (Cf. Gen. I, 27 and V, I, where the Heb. text has in each case Adam for 'man'). Idol worshippers having marred the Divine image forfeit all claim to this appellation. V. also B.M. Sonc. ed. p. 651, n. 6].

(4) Num. XXXI, 40. Here also the Heb. equivalent for persons is אדם though it refers to the Midianites who were idolaters.

(5) V, ibid. 37ff. In contrast to cattle, idolaters also may be described as Adam (men).

(6) Jonah IV, 11. Cur. edd. add in parentheses 'and much cattle', Here also אדם is the original word rendered persons, though it refers to the idolaters of Nineveh.

(7) The conclusion of the verse reads, and also much cattle. Cf, supra n. 4.

(8) Num. XXXI, 19, speaking of the slain Midianites; which proves that the corpses of idolaters also impart levitical uncleanness!

(9) How could they infer from this text that idolaters also impart levitical uncleanness?

(10) Num. XXXI, 49, so that the verse cannot refer to the corpses of Israelites.

(11) Idolaters.

(12) V. Glos.

(40) Why a priest may not marry a woman incapable of procreation?

(41) Why then was only the priest mentioned?

(42) Priest only had to be mentioned.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 61b

AND CHILDREN HE SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, SINCE SUCH [IS INCLUDED IN THE TERM OF] HARLOT MENTIONED IN THE TORAH. Since priests only were commanded concerning the harlot while Israelites were not so commanded, therefore PRIEST only was mentioned.

Said R. Huna: What is R. Judah's reason? — Since it is written, And they shall eat, and not have enough, they shall commit harlotry and shall not increase,¹ any cohabitation which results in no increase is nothing but meretricious intercourse.

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated, A priest shall not marry a minor. Said R. Hisda to Rabbah: Go and consider this matter,² for in the evening R. Huna will question you on the subject. When he went out he considered the point [and came to the conclusion that] R. Eliezer was of the same opinion as R. Meir and also of the same Opinion as R. Judah. 'He is of the same opinion as R. Meir' who takes exceptional cases³ into consideration;⁴ and 'also of the same opinion as R. Judah', who holds that a woman incapable of procreation is regarded as a harlot.⁵ But does he⁶ hold the same opinion as R. Meir? Surely it was taught: A minor, whether male or female, may neither perform, nor submit to halizah, nor contract levirate marriage; so R; Meir. They said to R. Meir: You spoke well [when you ruled], may neither perform, nor submit to halizah', since in the Pentateuchal section⁷ man was written,⁸ and we also draw a comparison between woman and man.⁹ What, however, is the reason why they may not contract levirate marriage? He replied: Because a minor male might be found to be a saris;¹⁰ a minor female might be found to be incapable of procreation; and thus the law of incest would be violated.¹¹ And it was also taught: A minor female may contract the levirate marriage¹² but may not perform halizah;¹³ so R. Eliezer!¹⁴

And does he hold the same opinion as R. Judah? Surely it was taught: Zonah¹⁵ implies, as her name [indicates, a faithless wife];¹⁶ so R. Eliezer. R. Akiba said: Zonah implies one who is a prostitute.¹⁷ R. Mathia b. Heresh said: Even a woman whose husband, while going¹⁸ to arrange for her drinking,¹⁹ cohabited with her on the way,²⁰ is rendered a zonah. R. Judah said: Zonah implies one who is incapable of procreation.²¹ And the Sages said: Zonah is none other than a female proselyte, a freed bondwoman, and one who has been subjected to any meretricious intercourse. R. Eleazar²² said: An unmarried man who had intercourse with an unmarried woman, with no matrimonial intent, renders her thereby a zonah!²³ No, said R. Adda b. Ahabah, the reference here²⁴ is to²⁵ a High Priest. For when does he acquire her [as his lawful wife]? Only when she grows up,²⁶ but, then, she is already a be'ulah.²⁷ Said Raba:²⁸ What thoughtlessness!²⁹ If her father had arranged her betrothal, then [the High Priest] would have acquired her from that very moment,³⁰ and if she herself had accepted the betrothal, is this³¹ then the view of R. Eliezer only³² and not that of the Rabbis!³³ No, explained Raba, it³⁴ refers indeed to a common priest, but [the prohibition to marry the minor] is a precaution against the possibility of her seduction³⁵ while living with him. If so, [the same should apply to] an Israelite also! — The seduction of a minor is regarded as an outrage, and an outraged woman is permitted in the case of an Israelite.³⁶ R. Papa replied: [It³⁴ speaks] of a High Priest, and it represents the opinion of the following Tanna. For it was taught: A virgin;³⁷ as one might assume it to mean a minor, it was explicitly stated wife. If only 'wife' [had been written], it might have been assumed to mean one who is adolescent,³⁸ hence it was explicitly stated, 'a virgin'. How, then [is the text to be understood]? One who has emerged from her minority but has not yet attained adolescence.³⁹

R. Nahman b. Isaac explained.⁴⁰ It is the opinion of the following Tanna. For it was taught: A virgin;³⁷ the only meaning of 'virgin' is damsel;⁴¹ and so it is said in Scripture, And the damsel⁴² was very fair to look upon, a virgin.⁴³ 'R. Eleazar said: An unmarried man who had intercourse with an unmarried woman, with no matrimonial intent, renders her thereby a zonah.' R. Amram said: The halachah is not in agreement with the opinion of R. Eleazar.

MISHNAH. A MAN SHALL NOT ABSTAIN FROM THE PERFORMANCE OF THE DUTY OF THE PROPAGATION OF THE RACE⁴⁴ UNLESS HE ALREADY HAS CHILDREN. [AS TO THE NUMBER]. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: TWO MALES, AND BETH HILLEL RULED: MALE AND A FEMALE, FOR IT IS STATED IN SCRIPTURE, MALE AND FEMALE CREATED HE THEM.⁴⁵

GEMARA. [This implies] if he has children, he may abstain from performing the duty of propagation but not from that of living with a wife.⁴⁶ This provides support for a statement R. Nahman made in the name of Samuel who ruled that although a man may have many children he must not remain without a wife, for it is said in the Scriptures, It is not good that the man should be alone.⁴⁷

Others read: [This⁴⁸ implies] if he has children he may abstain from performing the duty of propagation and also from that of living with a wife. May it, then, be said that this presents an objection against the statement R. Nahman made in the name of Samuel?⁴⁹ — No; if he has no children he must marry a woman capable of procreation; and if he has children he may marry a woman who is incapable of procreation. What is the practical difference?⁵⁰ — In respect of selling a Scroll of the Law for the sake of children.⁵¹ BETH SHAMMAI RULED: TWO MALES. What is Beth Shammai's reason? We make an inference from Moses, in connection with whom it is written, The sons of Moses: Gershom and Eliezer.⁵² And Beth Hillel? — We infer from the creation of the world. Let Beth Shammai also infer from the creation of the world! — The possible cannot be inferred from the impossible.¹ Let Beth Hillel, then, make the inference from Moses! — They can answer you: Moses did it with His consent.² For it was taught: Moses did three things on his own initiative and his opinion coincided with that of the Omnipresent. He separated himself from his wife,³ broke the Tables of Testimony⁴ and added one day.⁵

‘He separated himself from his wife’; what exposition did he make?⁶ — He said, ‘If to the Israelites, with whom the Shechinah spoke only for a while and for whom a definite time was fixed, the Torah nevertheless said, Come not near a woman,⁷ how much more so to me, who am liable to be spoken to at any moment and for whom no definite time has been fixed’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent; for it is said, Go say to them: Return ye to your tents; but as for thee, stand thou here by Me.⁸

‘He added one day’ on his own initiative. What exposition did he make?¹² — ‘As it is written, And sanctify them to-day and to-morrow¹³ [It implies that] to-day shall be the same as to-morrow; as to-morrow includes the previous night¹⁴ so to-day must include the previous night. As, however, to-day's previous night has already passed away,¹⁵ it must be inferred that two days exclusive of to-day must be observed’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent, for the Revelation did not take place¹⁶ before the Sabbath.¹⁷

It was taught: R. Nathan stated: Beth Shammai ruled: Two males and two females;¹⁸ and Beth Hillel ruled: A male and a female.¹⁸ Said R. Huna: What is the reason which R. Nathan assigns for the opinion of Beth Shammai? Because it is written, And again she bore his brother Abel¹⁹ [which²⁰ implies:] Abel and his sister; Cain and his sister.²¹ And it is also written, For God hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel;²² for Cain slew him.²³ And the Rabbis? She was merely expressing her gratitude.²⁴

Elsewhere it was taught: R. Nathan stated that Beth Shammai ruled: A male and a female;²⁵ and Beth Hillel ruled: Either a male or a female.²⁵

Said Raba: What is the reason which R. Nathan assigns for the view of Beth Hillel? — Because it is said, He created it not a waste, He formed it to be inhabited,²⁶ and he²⁷ has obviously helped it to be inhabited.

It was stated: If a man had children while he was an idolater and then he became a proselyte, he has fulfilled, R. Johanan said, the duty of propagation of the race; and Resh Lakish said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation of the race. ‘R. Johanan said: He has fulfilled the duty of propagation’, since he had children. ‘And Resh Lakish said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation’ because one who became a proselyte is like a child newly born.

And they²⁸ follow their views.²⁹ For it was stated: If a man had children while he was an idolater and then he became a proselyte, he has, R. Johanan said, no firstborn in respect of inheritance,³⁰ since he already had³¹ the first-fruits of his strength.³² Resh Lakish, however, said: He has a firstborn son in respect of inheritance, for a man who became a proselyte is like a child newly born.

And [both statements³³ were] necessary. For if the first only had been stated [it might have been assumed that] only in that state- ment did R. Johanan maintain his view, since formerly he³⁴ was also subject to the obligation of propagation,³⁵ but in respect of inherit- ance, since [the proselyte's former children] are not entitled to heirship, it might have been presumed that he agrees with Resh Lakish. And were only the second stated [it might have been assumed that] only in that did Resh Lakish maintain his view but that in the former he agrees with R. Johanan. [Hence both were] necessary.

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish. At that time Berodach-baladan the son of Baladan, King of Babylon etc.³⁶ — The other replied: While they are idolaters they have legally recognized ancestry, but when they become proselytes they have no longer any legally recognized ancestry.

Rab³⁷ said: All agree that a slave has no legally recognized relatives, since it is written, Abide ye here with³⁸ the ass,³⁹ people who are like the ass.⁴⁰

An objection was raised: Now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants!⁴¹ — R. Aba b. Jacob replied: Like a young bullock.⁴² If so, [the same reply could be given] there also!⁴³ — There it is different, since Scripture mentioned his⁴⁴ own name as well as his father's⁴⁵ name, while here⁴⁶ [the son's names] were not specified. If you prefer I might say: They⁴⁷ were elsewhere ascribed to their father and their father's father; as it is written, And King Asa sent them to Ben-hadad, the son of Tabrimmon, the son of Hezion, the King of Aram, that dwelt at Damascus, saying.⁴⁸

It was stated: If a man had children and they died, he has fulfilled, said R. Huna, the duty of propagation. R. Johanan said: He has not fulfilled it. 'R. Huna said: He fulfilled' because [he follows the tradition] of R. Assi. For R. Assi⁴⁹ stated: The Son of David⁵⁰ will not come before all the souls in Guf⁵¹ will have been disposed of, since it is said, For the spirit that unwrappeth itself is from Me etc.⁵² And 'R. Johanan said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation' because we require [the fulfilment of the text] He formed it to be inhabited,⁵³ which is not the case here.⁵⁴ An objection was raised:

(1) It would have been impossible for the human race to propagate had not one of each sex been created. For the preservation of the race, however, it is not necessary for every man to have children of both sexes.

(54) The children being dead.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 62b

Grandchildren are like children!¹ — This was taught only in respect of supplementing.²

An objection was raised: Grandchildren are like children. If one of them died or was found to be a saris³ the father has not fulfilled the duty of propagation.⁴ Is not this a refutation against R. Huna?⁵ — It is indeed a refutation.

'Grandchildren are like children'. Abaye intended to say: A grandson for a son and a granddaughter for a daughter, and certainly a grandson for a daughter; but not a granddaughter for a son.⁶ But Raba said to him: We only require [the fulfilment of the text] He formed it to be inhabited,⁷ which is the case here.

All, at any rate, agree⁸ that two children of one⁹ are not sufficient. But [are they] not? The Rabbis surely said to R. Shesheth,¹⁰ 'Marry a wife and beget children', and he answered them, 'My daughters' children are mine'! — There he was merely putting them off, because R. Shesheth became impotent owing to the long discourses of R. Huna.¹¹

Said Rabbah to Raba b. Mari: Whence the statement made by the Rabbis that grandchildren are like children? If it be suggested that it is deduced from the Scriptural text, The daughters are my daughters and the children are my children,¹² would then [it may be objected] the same [meaning be given to the text] And the flocks are my flocks?¹² But [the meaning there is obviously] 'which you have acquired from me', so here also [the meaning may be], 'which you have acquired from me'! The deduction is rather made from the following:¹³ And afterwards Hezron went to the daughter of Machir the father of Gilead; . . . and she bore him Segub,¹⁴ and it is also written, Out of Machir came down lawgivers,¹⁵ and furthermore it is written, Judah is my lawgiver.¹⁶

Our Mishnah¹⁷ cannot represent the opinion of R. Joshua. For it was taught: R. Joshua said, If a man married in his youth, he should marry again in his old age; if he had children in his youth, he should also have children in his old age; for it said, In the morning¹⁸ sow thy seed and in the evening¹⁹ withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not which shall prosper, whether this or that, or whether they shall both be alike good.²⁰ R. Akiba said: If a man studied Torah in his youth, he should also study it in his old age; if he had disciples in his youth, he should also have disciples in his old age. For it is said, In the morning sow thy seed etc.²⁰

It was said that R. Akiba had twelve thousand pairs of disciples, from Gabbatha²¹ to Antipatris;²² and all of them died at the same time because they did not treat each other with respect. The world remained desolate²³ until R. Akiba came to our Masters in the South and taught the Torah to them. These were R. Meir, R. Judah, R. Jose, R. Simeon and R. Eleazar b. Shammua; and it was they who revived the Torah at that time. A Tanna taught: All of them²⁴ died between Passover and Pentecost. R. Hama b. Abba or, it might be said, R. Hiyya b. Abin said: All of them died a cruel death. What was it?—R. Nahman replied: Croup.²⁵

R. Mattena stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Joshua.²⁶

R. Tanhum stated in the name of R. Hanilai: Any man who has no wife lives without joy, without blessing, and without goodness. 'Without joy'. for it is written. And thou shalt rejoice, thou and thy house.²⁷ 'Without blessing', for it is written, To cause a blessing to rest on thy house.²⁸ 'Without goodness', for it is written, It is not good that the man should be alone.²⁹

In the West³⁰ it was stated:³¹ Without Torah and without a [protecting] wall. 'Without Torah', for it is written. Is it that I have no help³² in me, and that sound wisdom³³ is driven quite from me.³⁴ 'Without a [protecting] wall', for it is written, A woman shall encompass a man.³⁵

Raba b. 'Ulla said:³¹ Without peace, for it is written, And thou shalt know that thy tent³⁶ is in peace; and thou shalt visit thy habitation and shalt miss nothing.³⁷

R. Joshua b. Levi said: Whosoever knows his wife to be a God-fearing woman and does not duly visit her is called a sinner; for it is said, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace³⁸ etc.³⁹

R. Joshua b. Levi further stated: It is a man's duty to pay a visit to his wife when he starts on a journey; for it is said, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace etc.³⁷ Is this⁴⁰ deduced from here? Surely it is deduced from the following:⁴¹ And thy desire shall be to thy husband⁴² teaches that a woman yearns for her husband when he sets out on a journey! — R. Joseph replied: This⁴³ was required only in the case where her menstruation period was near.⁴⁴ And how near? Rabbah⁴⁵ replied: Twelve hours.⁴⁶ And this⁴⁷ applies only [when the journey is] for a secular purpose, but when for a religious purpose [it does not apply, since then] people are in a state of anxiety.⁴⁸ Our Rabbis taught: Concerning a man who loves his wife as himself, who honours her more than himself, who guides his sons and daughters in the right path and arranges for them to be married near the period of their puberty, Scripture says, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace.⁴⁹ Concerning him who loves his neighbours, who befriends his relatives, marries his sister's⁵⁰ daughter,

(1) Infra 70a. It is now assumed that whenever one's own child died the grandchild may take his place in exempting his grandfather from the duty of propagation. From this it follows that only living children or grandchildren exempt a man from the duty of further propagation. How then could R. Huna maintain that dead children also exempt one from this duty?

(2) If a man had only one son he is exempt from the duty of propagation if his son had a daughter. If, however, he once had a male and a female who subsequently died he is in any case exempt.

The lawgivers were thus the offspring of the union mentioned in I Chron. II, 21, between Hezron, a descendant of Judah, and a daughter of Machir. This then proves that the sons of one's daughter are also regarded as one's own sons.

and lends a sela'¹ to a poor man in the hour of his need, Scripture says, Then shalt thou call, and the Lord will answer; thou shalt cry and He will say: 'Here I am'.²

(Mnemonic: Woman and land help this two shoots, tradesmen inferior.)³

R. Eleazar said: Any man who has no wife is no proper man; for it is said, Male and female created He them and called their name Adam.⁴

R. Eleazar further stated: Any man who owns no land is not a proper man; for it is said, The heavens are the heavens of the Lord; but the earth hath he given to the children of men.⁵

R. Eleazar further stated: What is the meaning of the Scriptural text, I will make him a help meet for him?⁶ If he was worthy she is a help to him;⁷ if he was not worthy she is against him.⁸ Others say: R. Eleazar pointed out a contradiction: It is written kenegedo⁹ but we read kenegedo!¹⁰ — If he was worthy she is meet for him;¹⁰ if he was not worthy she chastises him.⁹

R. Jose met Elijah and asked him: It is written, I will make him a help;¹¹ how does a woman help a man? The other replied: If a man brings wheat, does he chew the wheat? If flax, does he put on the flax?¹² Does she not, then, bring light to his eyes and put him on his feet!

R. Eleazar further stated: What is meant by the Scriptural text, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh?¹³ This teaches that Adam had intercourse with every beast and animal but found no satisfaction until he cohabited with Eve.

R. Eleazar further stated: What is meant by the text, And in thee shall the families of the earth be blessed?¹⁴ The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Abraham, 'I have two goodly shoots to engraft¹⁵ on you: Ruth the Moabitess and Naamah the Ammonitess'.¹⁶ All the families of the earth,¹⁴ even the other families who live on the earth are blessed only for Israel's sake. All the nations of the earth,¹⁷ even the ships that go from Gaul to Spain are blessed only for Israel's sake.

R. Eleazar further stated: There will be a time when all craftsmen will take up agriculture;¹⁸ for it is said, And all that handle the oar, the mariners, and all the pilots of the sea, shall come down from their ships; they shall stand upon the land.¹⁹

R. Eleazar further stated: No²⁰ occupation is inferior to that of agricultural labour; for it is said, And they shall come down.²¹

R. Eleazar once saw a plot of land that was ploughed across its width.²² 'Wert thou to be ploughed along thy length also',²³ he remarked, 'engaging in business would still be more profitable'. Rab once entered among growing ears of corn. Seeing that they were swaying²⁴ he called out to them, 'Swing as you will,²⁵ engaging in business brings more profit than you can do'.

Raba said: A hundred zuz²⁶ in business means meat and wine every day; a hundred zuz in land, only salt and vegetables.²⁷ Furthermore it causes him to sleep on the ground²⁸ and embroils him in strife.²⁹

R. Papa said, 'Sow³⁰ but do not buy,³¹ even if the cost is the same; there is a blessing in the former. Sell out³² to avoid disgrace;³³ but only mattresses, [not] however, a cloak, [since one] might not always again obtain [a suitable one].³⁴ Stop up³⁵ and you will need no repair;³⁶ repair³⁷ and you will not need to rebuild; for whosoever engages in building grows poor. Be quick in buying land; be deliberate in taking a wife. Come down a step in choosing your wife;³⁸ go up a step in selecting your shoshbin.³⁹

R. Eleazar b. Abina⁴⁰ said: Punishment comes into the world only on Israel's account; for it is said, I have cut off nations, their corners are desolate; I have made their streets waste,⁴¹ and this is followed by the text, 'I said: Surely thou wilt fear Me, thou wilt receive correction'.⁴²

Rab was once taking leave of R. Hiyya. The latter said to him, 'May the All Merciful deliver you from that which is worse than death'. 'But is there' [Rab wondered] 'anything that is worse than death'? When he went out he considered the matter and found [the following text]: And I find more bitter than death the woman etc.⁴³

Rab was constantly tormented by his wife. If he told her, 'Prepare me lentils', she would prepare him small peas; [and if he asked for] small peas, she prepared him lentils. When his son Hiyya grew up he gave her [his father's instruction] in the reverse order.⁴⁴ 'Your mother', Rab once remarked to him, 'has improved'!⁴⁵ 'It was I', the other replied, 'who reversed [your orders] to her'. 'This is what people say', the first said to him, 'Thine own offspring teaches thee reason';⁴⁶ you, however, must not continue to do so' for it is said, They have taught their tongue to speak lies, they weary themselves etc'.⁴⁷

R. Hiyya was constantly tormented by his wife. He, nevertheless, whenever he obtained anything suitable wrapped it up in his scarf and brought it to her. Said Rab to him, 'But, surely, she is tormenting the Master!' — 'It is sufficient for us', the other replied, 'that they rear up our children and deliver us from sin'.

Rab Judah was reading with his son R. Isaac the Scriptural text, And I find more bitter than death the woman. When the latter asked him, 'Who, for instance'? — 'For instance, your mother'. But,¹ surely, Rab Judah taught his son R. Isaac, 'A man finds happiness² only with his first wife; for it is said, Let thy fountain be blessed and have joy of the wife of thy youth';³ and when the latter asked him, 'Who for instance?' [he answered:] 'For instance, your mother'!⁴ — She was indeed irascible but could be easily appeased with a kindly word.⁵

How is one to understand the term a 'bad wife'? Abaye said: One who prepares for him⁶ a tray⁷ and has her tongue⁸ also ready for him. Raba said: One who prepares for him⁶ the tray and turns her back upon him.⁹

R. Hama b. Hanina stated: As soon as a man takes a wife his sins are buried;¹⁰ for it is said: Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good and obtaineth¹¹ favour of the Lord.¹²

In the West,¹³ they used to ask a man who married, 'findeth or find?'¹⁴ Findeth, because it is written, Whoso findeth a wife, findeth a great good;¹² Find, because it is written, And I find more bitter than death the woman.¹⁵

Raba said: [If one has] a bad wife it is a meritorious act to divorce her,¹⁶ for it is said, Cast out¹⁷ the scoffer, and contention will go out; yea, strife and shame will cease.¹⁸

Raba further stated: A bad wife, the amount of whose kethubah¹⁹ is large,²⁰ [should be given] a rival at her side; as people say, 'By her partner rather than by a thorn'.²¹

Raba further stated: A bad wife is as troublesome as a very rainy day; for it is said, A continual dropping in a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike.²²

Raba further stated: Come and see how precious is a good wife and how baneful is a bad wife. 'How precious is a good wife', for it is written: Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good.¹² Now, if Scripture speaks of the woman herself, then how precious is a good wife whom Scripture praises. If Scripture speaks of the Torah, then how precious is a good wife with whom the Torah is compared. 'How baneful is a bad wife', for it is written, And I find more bitter than death the woman.²³ Now, if Scripture speaks of herself, then how baneful is a bad wife whom Scripture censures. If Scripture speaks of Gehenna, then how baneful is a bad wife with whom Gehenna is compared.

Behold I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape.²⁴ R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: This refers to a bad wife, the amount of whose kethubah²⁵ is large.²⁶

The Lord has delivered me into their hands against whom I am not able to stand.²⁷ R. Hisda said in the name of Mar 'Ukba b. Hiyya: This refers to a bad wife the amount of whose kethubah²⁵ is large.²⁶ In the West²⁸ it was said: This refers to one whose maintenance depends on his money.²⁹

Thy sons and thy daughter's shall be given unto another people.³⁰ R. Hanan b. Raba stated in the name of Rab: This refers to one's father's wife.³¹

I will provoke them with a vile³² nation.³³ R. Hanan b. Raba stated in the name of Rab: This refers to a bad wife the amount of whose kethubah²⁵ is large.³⁴ R. Eliezer stated: This refers to the Sadducees;³⁵ for so it is said, The fool³² has said in his heart: 'There is no God' etc.³⁶ In a Baraitha it was taught: This refers to the people of Barbaria³⁷ and the people of Mauretania³⁸ who go naked in the streets; for there is nothing more objectionable and abominable to the Omnipresent than the man who goes naked in the streets. R. Johanan said: This refers to the Parsees.³⁹

When R. Johanan was informed that the Parsees⁴⁰ had come to Babylon, he reeled and fell.⁴¹ When however he was told that they accepted bribes he recovered⁴² and sat down again.⁴³

They⁴⁴ issued three decrees as a punishment for three [transgressions]:⁴⁵ They decreed against [ritually prepared] meat,⁴⁶ because the priestly gifts⁴⁷ [were neglected]. They decreed against the use of baths, because ritual bathing [was not observed]. They exhumed the dead,⁴⁸ because rejoicings were held on the days of their⁴⁹ festivals; as it is said, Then shall the hand of the Lord be against you, and against your fathers,⁵⁰ and Rabbah b. Samuel said that that⁵¹ referred to the exhumation of the dead, for the Master said, 'For the sins of the living the dead are exhumed'.

Said Raba to Rabbah b. Mari: It is written, They shall not be gathered, nor be buried, they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth,⁵² but it is also written,⁵³ And death shall be chosen rather than life!⁵⁴ — The other replied: 'Death shall be chosen' for the wicked, in order that they may not live in this world and thus sin and fall into Gehenna.⁵⁵ It is written in the book of Ben Sira: —⁵⁶

A good wife is a precious gift;⁵⁷ she will be put in the bosom of the God-fearing man.⁵⁸ A bad wife is a plague to her husband. What remedy has he? — Let him give her a letter of divorce and be healed of his plague.

A beautiful wife is a joy to her husband;⁵⁹ the number of his days shall be double.⁶⁰

Turn away thy eyes from [thy neighbour's] charming wife lest thou be caught in her net. Do not turn in to her husband to mingle with him wine and strong drink; for, through the form of a beautiful woman, many were destroyed and a mighty host are all her slain.⁶¹

Many were the wounds of the spice-peddler,⁶² which lead him on to lewdness like a spark that lights the coal.⁶³

As a cage is full of birds so are [the harlots'] houses full of deceit .⁶⁴

Do not worry about to-morrow's trouble, for thou knowest not what the day may beget. To-morrow may come and thou⁶⁵ wilt be no more and so thou hast worried about a world which is not thine.⁶⁶

Keep away many from thy house; and do not bring everyone into thy house.

Many be they that seek thy welfare; reveal thy secret only to one of a thousand.

R. Assi stated: The son of David⁶⁷ will not come before all the souls in Guf⁶⁸ are disposed of; since it is said, For the spirit that enwrappeth itself is from Me, and the souls which I have made.⁶⁹

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated, He who does not engage in propagation of the race is as though he sheds blood; for it is said, Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed,⁷⁰ and this is immediately followed by the text, And you, be ye fruitful and multiply.⁷¹ R. Jacob said: As though he has diminished the Divine Image; since it is said, For in the image of God made he man,⁷² and this is immediately followed by, And you, be ye fruitful etc.⁷¹ Ben 'Azzai said: As though he sheds blood and diminishes the Divine Image; since it is said,⁷³ And you, be ye fruitful and multiply.⁷¹

They said to Ben 'Azzai: Some preach well and act well, others act well but do not preach well; you, however, preach well but do not act well!⁷⁴ Ben 'Azzai replied: But what shall I do, seeing that my soul is in love with the Torah; the world can be carried on by others.

Another [Baraita] taught : R. Eliezer said, Anyone who does not engage in the propagation of the race is as though he sheds blood; For it is said, Whoso sheddeth mans's blood,⁷² and close upon it follows, And you, be ye fruitful etc.⁷¹ R. Eleazar b. Azariah said: As though he diminished the Divine Image. Ben 'Azzai said etc.⁷⁵ They said to Ben 'Azzai: Some preach well etc.⁷⁵

Our Rabbis taught: And when it rested, he said: 'Return O Lord unto the ten thousands and⁷⁶ thousands of Israel',⁷⁷ teaches that the Divine Presence does not rest on less than two thousand and two myriads of Israelites.¹ Should the number of Israelites happen to be two thousand and two myriads less one, and any particular person has not engaged in the propagation of the race, does he not thereby cause the Divine Presence to depart From Israel! Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eliezer: He deserves the penalty of death; for it is said, And they had no children,² but if they had children they would not have died. Others say: He causes the Divine Presence to depart from Israel; for it is said, To be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee;³ where there exists 'seed after thee' the Divine Presence dwells [among them]; but where no 'seed after thee' exists, among whom should it dwell! Among the trees⁴ or among the stones? MISHNAH. IF A MAN TOOK A WIFE AND LIVED WITH HER FOR TEN YEARS AND SHE BORE NO CHILD, HE MAY NOT ABSTAIN [ANY LONGER FROM THE DUTY OF PROPAGATION].⁵ IF HE DIVORCED HER SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY ANOTHER, AND THE SECOND HUSBAND MAY ALSO LIVE WITH HER [NO MORE THAN] TEN YEARS.⁶ IF SHE MISCARRIED [THE PERIOD OF TEN YEARS] IS RECKONED FROM THE TIME OF HER MISCARRIAGE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a man took a wife and lived with her for ten years and she bore no child, he shall divorce her and give her her kethubah,⁷ since it is possible that it was he who was unworthy to have children from her.⁸ Although there is no definite proof for this statement⁹ there is nevertheless a [Scriptural] allusion to it: After Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan.¹⁰ This¹¹ teaches you that the years of his stay outside the Land¹² were not included in the number.¹³ Hence, if the man or the woman was ill, or if both were in prison, [these years] are not included in the number.¹⁴

Said Raba to R. Nahman: Let deduction be made from Isaac, concerning whom it is written, And Isaac was forty years old when he took Rebecca etc.¹⁵ and it is also written, And Isaac was threescore years old when she bore them!¹⁶ — The other replied: Isaac was barren.¹⁷ If so,¹⁸ Abraham also was barren!¹⁹ — That text²⁰ is required For a deduction in accordance with the statement of R. Hiyya b. Abba. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: Why were the years of Ishmael counted? In order to determine thereby the years of Jacob.²¹

R. Isaac stated: Our father Isaac was barren; for it is said, And Isaac entreated the Lord opposite²² his wife.²³ It does not say 'for his wife' but opposite. This teaches that both were barren.²⁴ If so, And the Lord let Himself be entreated of him²⁵ should have read, And the Lord let Himself be entreated of them!²⁵ — Because the prayer of a righteous man the son of a righteous man is not like the prayer of a righteous man the son of a wicked man.²⁶

R. Isaac stated: Why were our ancestors barren? — Because the Holy One, blessed be He, longs to hear the prayer of the righteous.

R. Isaac further stated: Why is the prayer of the righteous compared to a pitchfork?²⁷ As a pitchfork turns the sheaves of grain from one position to another, so does the prayer of the righteous turn the dispensations of the Holy One, blessed be He, from the attribute of anger to the attribute of mercy.

R. Ammi stated: Abraham and Sarah were originally of doubtful sex;²⁸ for it is said, Look unto to the rock whence you were hewn¹ and to the hole of the pit² whence you were digged,³ and this is followed by the text, Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bore you.⁴

R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Our mother Sarah was incapable of procreation; for it is said, And Sarai was barren; she had no child,⁵ she had not even a womb.⁶

Rab Judah son of R. Samuel b. Shilath stated in the name of Rab: That⁷ was taught only in respect of the early generations who lived many years. In respect of the later generations, however, whose years of life are few, only two years and a half, corresponding to three periods of pregnancy⁸ [are allowed].⁹

Rabbah stated in the name of R. Nahman: Three years [must elapse],⁹ corresponding to three remembrances;¹⁰ For a Master said: Sarah, Rachel and Hannah¹¹ were remembered on New Year's Day.¹²

Rabbah ruled: These general principles¹³ are to be disregarded.¹⁴ For consider: Who compiled our Mishnah? Rabbi, of course; but the years of life were already reduced in the days of David. For it is written, The days of our years are threescore years and ten.¹⁵

With regard to the assumption that 'it is possible that it was he who was unworthy to have children from her',¹⁶ is it not possible that it was she who was unworthy?¹⁷ — Since she is not commanded to fulfil the duty of propagation she is not so punished.¹⁸ But surely it is not so!¹⁹ For the Rabbis once said to R. Abba b. Zabda, 'Take a wife and beget children', and he answered them, 'Had I been worthy I would have had them from my first wife'! — There he was merely evading the Rabbis; for, in fact, R. Abba b. Zabda became impotent through the long discourses of R. Huna.²⁰

R. Giddal became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna,²⁰ R. Helbo became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna,²⁰ and R. Shesheth also became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna.²⁰

R. Aha b. Jacob was once attacked by dysuria,²¹ and when he was supported on the college cedar tree a discharge issued like a green palm shoot.

R. Aha b. Jacob stated: We were a group of sixty scholars, and all became impotent through the long discourses of R. Huna,²⁰ with the exception of myself who followed the principle, Wisdom preserveth the life of him that hath it.²²

IF HE DIVORCED HER SHE IS PERMITTED etc. Only a second husband²³ but not a third,²⁴ whose view, then, is represented by our Mishnah? — It is that of Rabbi. For it was taught: If she circumcised her first child and he died,²⁵ and a second one who also died,²⁵ she must not circumcise her third child; so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, said: She circumcises the third, but must not circumcise the fourth child. But, surely, the reverse was taught,²⁶ now which of these is the latter?²⁷ — Come and hear what R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: It once happened with four sisters at Sepphoris that when the first had circumcised her child he died; when the second [circumcised her child] he also died, and when the third [circumcised her child] he also died. The fourth came before R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who told her, 'You must not circumcise [the child]'.²⁸ But is it not possible that if the third sister had come he would also have told her the same!²⁹ — If so,³⁰ what could have been the purpose of the evidence of R. Hiyya b. Abba? [No]. It is possible that he meant to teach us the following: That sisters also establish a presumption!³¹

Raba said: Now that it has been stated that sisters also establish a presumption, a man should not take a wife either from a family of epileptics, or from a family of lepers. This applies, however, only when the fact had been established by the occurrence of three cases.³²

What is the decision?³³ — When R. Isaac b. Joseph came he related: Such a case was once submitted to R. Johanan in the Synagogue of Ma'on³⁴ on the Day of Atonement which fell on a Sabbath. A woman, it happened, had circumcised her child³⁵ who died; her second [sister circumcised her child] and he also died, and her third sister appeared before him. He said to her, 'Go and circumcise him'. Said Abaye to him:³⁶ See, you have permitted³⁷ a forbidden³⁸ and a dangerous³⁹ act.

Abaye, however, relying upon this statement⁴⁰ married Homa the daughter of Isi son of R. Isaac the son of Rab Judah, although Rehaba of Pumbeditha had married her and died, and R. Isaac son of Rabbah b. Hana had subsequently married her and also died. And after he had married her, he himself died also.

Said Raba: Would any one else have exposed himself to such danger? Surely he himself had said that Abin was reliable⁴¹ but that Isaac the Red was not a person to be relied upon;⁴¹ that Abin was well acquainted with any change⁴² [in the views of R. Johanan] but Isaac the Red was not acquainted with any such changes! Furthermore, it might be said that their dispute⁴³ extended only to the case of circumcision; do they, however, differ also in the case of marriage? — Yes; for so it was taught: If a woman was married to one husband⁴⁴ who died, and to a second one who also died, she must not be married to a third; so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: She may be married to a third, but she may not be married to a fourth.⁴⁵

In the case of circumcision, one can well understand [why the operation is dangerous with some children and not with others] since the members of one family may bleed profusely⁴⁶ while those of another family may bleed little;⁴⁷ what, however, is the reason in the case of marriage?⁴⁸ — R. Mordecai answered R. Ashi: Thus said Abimi from Hagronia in the name of R. Huna, 'The source⁴⁹ is the cause'.⁵⁰ But R. Ashi stated: '[The woman's] ill luck is the cause'.⁵⁰ What practical difference is there between them?⁵¹ — The difference between them is the case where the man only betrothed her and died,⁵² or also when he fell off a palm-tree and died.⁵²

SAID R. JOSEPH SON OF RABA to Raba: I enquired of R. Joseph whether the halachah is in agreement with Rabbi, and he replied in the affirmative. [I asked] whether the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, and he again replied in the affirmative. Was he thereby merely ridiculing me?' — The other replied: No; there are several anonymous statements [in the Mishnah] and he informed⁵³ you [that in the matter of] marriage and flogging [the anonymous Mishnah]⁵⁴ agrees with Rabbi, and that in the matter of menstrual periods and the ox [whose owner has been] fore-warned⁵⁵ [the anonymous Mishnah] agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.

As to marriage, there is the statement just discussed.⁵⁶ 'Flogging'? — As we learned: A man upon whom the penalty of flogging had been repeatedly inflicted is to be placed⁵⁷ under confinement⁵⁸ and fed on barley, until his stomach bursts.⁵⁹

'The menstrual periods'? — As we learned: A woman may not

(51) R. Ashi and Abimi.

(52) Here the source cannot have been the cause and the deaths can only be attributed to ill luck. According to the former view, therefore, no presumption would thereby be constituted.

(54) The halachah is always in agreement with the anonymous Mishnah.

(55) Mu'ad (מועד) v. Glos.

regard her menstrual periods as regular¹ unless the recurrence had been regular three times. Nor is she released from the restrictions of an established regular period unless it has varied three² times.³

'And the ox [whose owner has been] forewarned'? — As we learned: An ox is not deemed a mu'ad unless [its owner] has been forewarned three times.⁴ Our Rabbis taught: A woman who had been married to one husband and had no children and to a second husband and again had no children, may marry a third man only if he has children. If she married one who has had no children she must be divorced without receiving her kethubah.

The question was raised: Where she married a third husband and bore no children, may her first two husbands reclaim [the respective amounts of her kethubah]?⁵ Can they plead, 'It has now been proved that you were the cause',⁶ or can she retort, 'It is only now that I have deteriorated'? — It stands to reason that she may plead, 'It is only now that I have deteriorated'.

The question was raised: If she married a fourth husband and gave birth to children, may she claim her kethubah from her third husband? — We advise her: 'Your silence is better than your speech'; for⁷ he⁸ could tell her, 'I would not have divorced you in such circumstances'.⁹ R. Papa demurred: Even if she keeps silence, should we remain silent? The divorce, surely,¹⁰ is annulled,¹¹ and her children are bastards! In truth,¹² the fact is,¹³ that it is assumed that she has now been restored to health.¹⁴

If the husband¹⁵ pleads, 'The fault is hers',¹⁶ and the wife pleads, 'The fault is his',¹⁷ R. Ammi ruled: In private matrimonial affairs¹⁸ the wife is believed. And what is the reason? — She is in a position to know whether emission is forceful,¹⁹ but he is not in a position to know it.

If the husband states that he intends taking another wife to test his potency.²⁰ R. Ammi ruled: 'He must in this case also divorce [his present wife] and pay her the amount of her kethubah; for I maintain that whosoever takes in addition to his present wife another one must divorce the former and pay her the amount of her kethubah.'

Raba said: A man may marry wives in addition to his first wife; provided only that he possesses the means to maintain them.

(1) To be deemed levitically clean until that period actually arrives. A woman of irregular periods is regarded as unclean for twenty-four hours prior to the monthly date on which her previous discharge occurred (v. Nid. 2a). Should a woman, the regularity of whose periods had been established omit to examine her body when menstruation is due, and subsequently find a discharge, we assume her retrospectively to have become unclean at the beginning of her period, while a woman whose periods are irregular cannot, of course, be subject to such restriction.

(2) If the change of date occurred no more than twice the restrictions remain in force (v. supra n. 8 last clause).

(3) Nid. 63b.

(5) Which each of them paid her when their respective divorces had taken place.

(6) Of the absence of any issue.

(7) Should she persist in her claim.

(8) Her third husband.

(9) That she was not really barren. By advancing such a plea the husband might retrospectively annul the divorce altogether.

(10) If the third husband's plea is tenable.

(11) Since it was given under a misapprehension.

(12) The third husband's plea is really untenable. Once he has determined to divorce her, at a time when her sterility was a matter of doubt, he cannot again retract.

(13) The reason why she cannot claim her kethubah.

(14) But was incapable of conception at the time of her divorce; and this is the reason why she has no claim for her kethubah upon the third man.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 65b

If the husband pleads¹ that his wife had miscarried within the ten years.² and she states, 'I had no miscarriage', ³ R. Ammi ruled: She is believed in this case also; for if she had really miscarried she would not herself have sought to acquire the reputation of a barren woman.

A woman who miscarried, and then miscarried a second, and a third time, is confirmed as one subject to abortions.⁴

If he⁵ said, 'She miscarried two'⁶ and she said, 'three'?⁷ — R. Isaac b. Eleazar stated: Such a case was dealt with at the college, and it was ruled that she was to be believed; for if she had not miscarried⁸ she would not herself have sought to acquire the reputation of producing only miscarriages.

MISHNAH. A MAN IS COMMANDED CONCERNING THE DUTY OF PROPAGATION BUT NOT A WOMAN. R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA, HOWEVER. SAID: CONCERNING BOTH OF THEM⁹ IT IS SAID, AND GOD BLESSED THEM; AND GOD SAID UNTO THEM: 'BE FRUITFUL, AND MULTIPLY.'¹⁰ GEMARA. Whence is this¹¹ deduced? R. Ile'a replied in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: Scripture stated, And replenish the earth, and subdue it;¹² it is the nature of a man to subdue but it is not the nature of a woman to subdue. On the contrary! And subdue it¹³ implies two!¹⁴ R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is written, And thou subdue it.¹⁵

R. Joseph said: Deduction¹⁶ is made from the following. I am God Almighty, be thou fruitful and multiply,¹⁷ and it is not stated, 'Be ye fruitful and multiply'.¹⁸

R. Ile'a further stated in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: As one is commanded to say that which will be obeyed,¹⁹ so is one commanded not to say that which will not be obeyed.²⁰ R. Abba stated: It²⁰ is a duty; for it is said in Scripture, Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee; reprove a wise man and he will love thee.²¹

R. Ile'a further stated in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: One may modify a statement in the interests of peace; for it is said in Scripture, Thy father did command etc. so shall ye say unto Joseph: Forgive, I pray thee now, etc.²² R. Nathan said: It²³ is a commandment; for it is stated in Scripture, And Samuel said: 'How can I go? If Saul hear it, he will kill me', etc.²⁴

At the School of R. Ishmael it was taught: Great is the cause of peace. Seeing that for its sake even the Holy One, blessed be He, modified a statement; for at first it is written, My lord being old,²⁵ while afterwards it is written, And I am old.²⁶

R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA, HOWEVER, SAID. It was stated: R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi [are at variance]. One stated that the halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Beroka, and the other stated that the halachah is not in agreement with R. Johanan b. Beroka. It may be proved that it was R. Johanan who stated that the halachah is not [in agreement etc.]. For R. Abbahu was once sitting [at the college] and reported in the name of R. Johanan that the halachah [was in agreement etc.], and R. Ammi and R. Assi turned away their faces.²⁷ Others say: R. Hiyya b. Abba made the report,²⁸ and R. Ammi and R. Assi turned away their faces. Said R. Papa: According to him who maintains that R. Abbahu made the statement²⁸ it is easy to understand that it was out of respect for the royal house that they²⁹ said nothing to him.³⁰ According to him, however, who maintains that R. Hiyya b. Abba made the statement,²⁸ they²⁹ should have told him that R. Johanan did not say so!

Now, what is the decision?³¹ — Come and hear what R. Aha b. Hanina stated in the name of R. Abbahu in the name of R. Assi: Such a case³² once came before R. Johanan at the Synagogue of Caesarea, and he decided that the husband must divorce her and also pay her the amount of her kethubah. Now, if it be suggested that a woman is not subject to the commandment,³³ how could she have any claim to a kethubah? — It is possible that this was a case where she submitted a special plea; as was the case with a certain woman who once came to R. Ammi and asked him to order the payment of her³⁴ kethubah. When he replied, 'Go away, the commandment³⁵ does not apply to you',³⁶ she exclaimed, 'What shall become of a woman like myself³⁷ in her old age!'³⁸ 'In such a case', the Master said, 'we certainly compel [the husband]'.³⁹

A woman once came [with a similar plea]⁴⁰ before R. Nahman. When he told her, 'The commandment³⁵ does not apply to you', she replied, 'Does not a woman like myself³⁷ require a staff in her hand and a hoe for digging her grave'!⁴¹ 'In such a case', the Master said, 'we certainly compel [the husband]',³⁹

Judah and Hezekiah were twins. The features of the one were developed at the end of nine months, and those of the other were developed at the beginning of the seventh month.⁴² Judith,⁴³ the wife of R. Hiyya, having suffered in consequence agonizing pains of childbirth, changed her clothes [on recovery] and appeared⁴⁴ before R. Hiyya. 'Is a woman', she asked, 'commanded to propagate the race'? — 'No', he replied. And relying on this decision,⁴⁵ she drank a sterilizing potion. When her action finally became known, he exclaimed, 'Would that you bore unto me only one more issue of the womb!'⁴⁶ For a Master stated: Judah and Hezekiah were twin brothers and Pazi and Tawi

(1) When, having lived with his wife for ten years without begetting any issue, he is ordered to divorce her and to pay her the amount of her kethubah. V. supra.

(2) And, consequently, he claims the right to continue to live with her until a period of ten years has passed from the date of the miscarriage (v. our Mishnah).

(3) I.e., she was always sterile.

(4) And, consequently, she must be divorced; but is entitled to her kethubah.

(5) Refusing to pay her kethubah.

(6) And, consequently, her proneness to miscarry is not established.

twin sisters.¹

But does not the commandment apply to women? Surely, R. Aha b. R. Kattina related in the name of R. Isaac: It once happened in the case of a woman who was half slave and half free, that her master was compelled to emancipate her!² R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: People were taking liberties with her.³

CHAPTER VII

MISHNAH. IF A WIDOW [WHO MARRIED] A HIGH PRIEST,⁴ OR IF A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALUZA [WHO MARRIED] A COMMON PRIEST BROUGHT IN TO HER HUSBAND MELOG⁵ SLAVES AND ZON BARZEL⁵ SLAVES. THE MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH BUT THE ZON BARZEL SLAVES MAY EAT OF IT.⁶

THE FOLLOWING ARE MELOG SLAVES: THOSE WHO, IF THEY DIE, ARE THE WIFE'S⁷ LOSS AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES, ARE HER PROFIT. THOUGH IT IS THE HUSBAND'S DUTY TO MAINTAIN THEM, THEY MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.⁶

THE FOLLOWING ARE ZON BARZEL SLAVES: IF THEY DIE, THEY ARE THE LOSS OF

THE HUSBAND AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES, ARE A PROFIT TO HIM. SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM,⁸ THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH.

IF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, AND SHE BROUGHT HIM IN SLAVES, THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH WHETHER THEY ARE MELOG SLAVES, OR ZON BARZEL SLAVES.⁶ IF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, HOWEVER, WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE AND SHE BROUGHT HIM IN SLAVES, THEY MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH WHETHER THEY ARE MELOG SLAVES OR ZON BARZEL SLAVES.⁶

GEMARA. And MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH! What is the reason? Let them rather be regarded as a possession that was acquired by one in his possession [who is permitted to eat terumah]. for it was taught: Whence is it deduced that the wife whom a priest married or the slaves which he purchased may eat terumah.? It is said, But if a priest buy any soul the purchase of his money, he may eat of it.⁹ And whence is it deduced that if a woman¹⁰ purchased slaves¹¹ or if a priest's slaves purchased¹² other slaves, these may eat terumah? It is said, But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money, he may eat of it;⁹ a possession which his possession has acquired may eat!¹³ — Whosoever may himself eat may confer the right of eating upon others but whosoever may not himself eat may not confer the right of eating upon others.¹⁴ May he not, indeed?¹⁵ There is, surely, the case of¹⁶ an uncircumcised man and that of all levitically unclean persons who may not themselves eat terumah and yet confer the right of eating it upon others!¹⁷ — In those cases¹⁸ they are merely suffering pain in their mouths.¹⁹ But there is, surely, the case of¹⁶ the bastard²⁰ Who may not eat terumah himself²¹ and yet may confer the right of eating it upon others!²² — Rabina replied. He speaks of an acquisition²³ that is permitted to eat: Any acquisition that may eat may confer the right of eating upon others, and any acquisition that may not eat may not confer the right upon others.

Raba, however, stated²⁴ that pentateuchally they²³ may in fact eat terumah; but it is the Rabbis who instituted the prohibition in order that the woman might complain, 'I am not allowed to eat; my slaves are not allowed to eat; I am only his mistress!', in consequence of which he would be likely to divorce her. R. Ashi stated:²⁴ The prohibition is a preventive measure against the possibility of her feeding them²⁵ with terumah after the death [of her husband].²⁶ Now, then,²⁷ a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest should also be forbidden to feed [her melog slaves with terumah] as a preventive measure against her feeding them after [her husband's] death!²⁸ — But, said R. Ashi, [our Mishnah refers to] a priestly widow²⁹ who³⁰ might draw the following conclusion:³¹ 'At first³² they³³ ate terumah at my paternal home;³⁴ and when I married this man³⁵ they³³ ate³⁶ of the terumah of my husband; they³³ should now,³⁷ therefore, revert to their former condition',³⁸ and she would not know that at first³⁹ she had not made of herself a profaned woman⁴⁰ while now⁴¹ she has made herself a profaned woman.⁴⁰ This explanation is quite satisfactory in the case of a priestly widow;⁴² what explanations however, is there in the case of a widow who is the daughter of an Israelite?⁴³

The Rabbis made no distinction between one widow and another.⁴⁴

It was stated: If a wife: who brought to her husband⁴⁵ appraised goods,⁴⁶ demands,⁴⁷ 'I will accept only my own goods',⁴⁸ and he replies 'I am only paying their value'⁴⁹ — in whose favour is judgment to be given? Rab Judah said:

(1) The two pairs of twins were children of R. Hiyya from Judith.

(2) So that she might be permitted to marry a free man, As a half slave she was not allowed to contract such a marriage. Now, since her master was compelled to give her the opportunity of marrying, it is obvious that the commandment of propagation applies to women also!

- (3) And marriage was her only protection; and this was the reason why her master was compelled to emancipate her.
- (4) Contracting thereby a forbidden union.
- (5) V. infra and Glos.
- (6) The reason is given in the Gemara.
- (7) Lit., 'died for her'.
- (8) He or his heirs must restore them to his wife in a healthy condition should he divorce her or die.
- (9) Lev. XXII, 11.
- (10) The daughter of an Israelite, who married a priest.
- (11) Out of her melog property the principal of which is hers.
- (12) With a sum of money that was given to them as their absolute property. on the condition that their master was to have no claim whatsoever upon it.
- (13) The expression, 'the purchase of his money is superfluous' and the text is, therefore, expounded thus: If the purchase of his money, i.e., a priest's wife or slave (who is the priest's acquisition) buy any soul, he (i.e., the one purchased) 'may eat of it'. Why then are not melog slaves, being an acquisition of the priest's wife, permitted to eat terumah?
- (14) The priest's wife in this case is not herself permitted to eat terumah, since her union with this priest is a forbidden one. V. Lev. XXI, 7,13 and supra p. 441, n. 1.
- (15) Lit., 'and not'?
- (16) Lit., 'and behold'.
- (17) Their slaves, e.g., are permitted to eat terumah. Cf. infra 70a.
- (18) Lit., 'there'.
- (19) I.e., their disability is restricted to their mouth alone. They are only temporarily forbidden to eat the terumah. At the moment their unclean period is over or circumcision is performed their rights are fully restored. In the case of the priest's wife in our Mishnah, however, the disability is permanent, since by her forbidden marriage she remains for ever a profaned woman.
- (20) I.e., mamzer, (v. Glos.) the issue of a union between a slave or idolater and a woman who was the issue of a marriage between a priest and the daughter of an Israelite.
- (21) Since he is neither priest nor even a legitimate Israelite.
- (22) His grandmother, the wife of the priest, may continue to eat terumah even after the death of her husband so long as the bastard (being a descendant of her husband through their daughter) is alive. As the widow of a priest she would have lost the privilege of eating terumah on her husband's death had there been no surviving descendants. V. infra 69b.
- (23) Not of a descendant.
- (24) In explaining the reason why MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.
- (25) The melog slaves.
- (26) Believing that, as she was allowed to feed them with terumah during the lifetime of her husband though they were her property, she may continue to do so even after his death. In the case of zon barzel slaves, however, no such error need be feared since the slaves are not hers, but his absolute property until the moment when it is surrendered to her by her husband or heir, v. infra.
- (27) If such an error as suggested is to be feared.
- (28) But our Mishnah distinctly states that her melog slaves also may eat terumah!
- (29) The daughter of a priest who, as a widow, married a High Priest, and thus became profaned through their forbidden marriage.
- (30) If her melog slaves were permitted to eat terumah while she lived with the High Priest.
- (31) After the High Priest's death.
- (32) During her first widowhood.
- (33) The melog slaves.
- (34) As a widow she then returned to her father's priestly house and was again entitled to eat terumah herself and to feed her slaves with it.
- (35) The High Priest.
- (36) Cf. supra n. 8.
- (37) When the High Priest died, though she remained a profaned widow who is, in fact, forbidden to eat terumah.
- (38) To be allowed again. as before, to eat terumah.

- (39) During her first widowhood.
- (40) Halachah (v. Glos.) through her forbidden marriage.
- (41) Having married a High Priest to whom a widow is forbidden.
- (42) V. supra p. 443, n. 7.
- (43) The error mentioned cannot occur in her case; but as our Mishnah draws no distinction between the two, the question remains: Why should not her melog slaves be permitted to eat terumah?
- (44) Lit., 'in her widowhood'. Were the feeding permitted in the case of the one, the other might erroneously be presumed to come under the same law.
- (45) As zon barzel property (v. Glos.).
- (46) Shum (v. Glos.). V. Ket. Sonc. ed. p 401. n. 11. In consideration of which he guarantees her a specified sum in her kethubah, which is recoverable by her at his death, or earlier if she is divorced.
- (47) When she claims her kethubah. v. supra n. 9.
- (48) I.e., the actual objects she had brought to her husband.
- (49) In accordance with the appraisement in the kethubah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 66b

Judgment is to be given in her favour;¹ and R. Ammi said: Judgment is to be given in his favour. 'Rab Judah said: Judgment is to be given in her favour because [they represent] assets of her paternal property [which] belong to her. R. Ammi said: Judgment is to be given in his favour' for, as the Master said, [THE FOLLOWING ARE ZON BARZEL SLAVES:] IF THEY DIE, THEY ARE THE LOSS OF THE HUSBAND AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES- ARE A PROFIT TO HIM; [AND] SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH [they are therefore obviously regarded as his own].² R. Safra said: Was it stated, 'and they belong to him? The statements surely only reads, SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM! In fact, then, they may not belong to him at all. But [is it a fact that] those for whom he³ is responsible invariably eat terumah? Surely we learned: An Israelite who hired a cow from a priest may feed her on vetches of terumah. A priest, however, who hired a cow from an Israelite, though it is his duty to supply her with food,⁴ must not feed her on vetches of terumah!⁵ — How could you understand it thus! Granted that he is liable for theft or loss, is he also liable for accidents, emaciation or reduction in value!⁶ [The case⁷ in our Mishnah], surely, can only be compared to that in the final clause:⁸ An Israelite who hired a cow from a priest, guaranteeing him its appraised value,⁹ may not feed it on vetches of terumah. A priest, however, who hired a cow from an Israelite, guaranteeing him its appraised value,⁹ may feed it on vetches of terumah.¹⁰

Rabbah and R. Joseph were sitting at their studies at the conclusion of R. Nahman's school session, and in the course of their sitting they made the following statement: [A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Judah; and [another Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi. ['A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Ammi': Zon barzel slaves procure their freedom when the man,¹¹ but not when the woman [struck out] a tooth or an eye.¹² ['A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Judah': If a wife brought in to her husband appraised goods,¹³ the husband may not sell them even if it is his desire to do so.¹⁴ Furthermore, even if he brought in to her appraised goods of his own,¹⁵ he may not sell them even if he desired to do so. If either¹⁶ of them sold [any of the appraised goods] for their maintenance. Such an incident was once dealt with by R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, who ruled that the husband¹⁷ may seize them from the buyers.¹⁸

Raba¹⁹ stated in the name of R. Nahman: The law is in agreement with Rab Judah. Said Raba to R. Nahman: But surely [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi! Although [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi, Rab Judah's view is more logical, since any asset of a woman's paternal property [should rightly belong to her].

A woman once brought²⁰ in to her husband a robe of fine wool [which was appraised and included] in her kethubah. When the man died it was taken by the orphans and spread over the corpse. Raba ruled that the corpse had acquired it.²¹

Said Nanai son of R. Joseph son of Raba to R. Kahana: But, surely, Raba²² stated in the name of R. Nahman that the law is in agreement with Rab Judah!²³ The other replied: Does not Rab Judah admit that the robe had still to be collected [by the wife]?²⁴ Since it had still to be collected it remained in the husband's possession.²⁵ [In this ruling] Raba acted in accordance with his view [elsewhere expressed]. For Raba stated:²⁶ Consecration,²⁶ leavened food²⁶, and

(1) Her own objects must be returned to her.

(2) Cf. Bomberg ed. where an amplified version of this text is given including the clause enclosed here in square brackets.

(3) A priest.

(4) And though he is also responsible for the loss, or theft of the animal.

(5) 'A.Z. 15a; which shews that even an animal for which a priest is responsible (v. supra n. 2) is not permitted to eat terumah. How, then, could it be said, SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT?

(6) Certainly not. Such a restricted responsibility, therefore, is incomplete and does not confer the right to terumah.

(7) Of zon barzel.

(8) Of the Baraitha cited.

(9) Lit., 'if an Israelite appraised a cow from'. I.e., he undertook to make good to the owner any loss in the value of the animal between the date of hire and the date of the return.

(10) The animal being regarded as the priest's own property, in respect of its feeding on terumah, owing to his responsibility for the return of its full value. Thus it follows that, though an animal would be returned in body, should its value on the day of its return be equal to that of its appraised value, it is nevertheless, owing to the priest's complete responsibility, deemed to be the priest's property so long as it remains in his possession; so also in the case of zon barzel slaves: though they would ultimately be returned to the woman in body, they are regarded, in respect of terumah, as the property of the priest, who accepted full responsibility for them, so long as they remain with him.

(11) The husband, who is regarded, in agreement with R. Ammi, as the owner of the slaves.

(12) Cf. Ex. XXI, 26.

(13) Which the husband includes in her kethubah, and undertakes to return to her at their appraised value should he divorce her or die.

(14) It is his duty to keep them intact so that the objects themselves, not merely their value, may be returned to the woman in due course.

(15) Included them in the amount of her kethubah.

(16) Lit., 'both'. V. Rashi a.l.

(17) I.e., even he.

(18) If the woman died; the sale being deemed invalid. That the woman, when her husband dies or divorces her, may seize such property, in the event of a sale by him, is obvious.

(19) Wanting in MSS. which read 'R. Nahman stated'.

(20) In her dowry, as zon barzel.

(21) The shroud, wraps. or any article of dress that has covered the body of a corpse is deemed to be the dead man's property, and no living person may derive any benefit from it. V. Sanh. 47b.

(22) Cf. supra n. 7.

(23) That zon barzel property, such as the robe was, belongs to the wife'!

(24) Of course he does. The robe does not come into the actual possession of the woman until her claim is proved and the robe surrendered to her by the husband or his heirs.

(25) The orphans were, therefore, entitled to use it as part of the dead man's shroud. The woman's claim upon it is undoubtedly valid, but has not any greater force than that of the holder of a mortgage. V. infra note 3.

manumission cancel a mortgage.¹

Rab Judah stated: If a wife brought to her husband² two articles worth a thousand zuz, and their value increased to two thousand, she receives one³ in settlement of her kethubah;⁴ and for the other⁵ she pays its price and receives it, since it represents assets of her paternal property.⁶

What are we taught by this⁷ statement! That assets of her paternal property belong to her? This, surely, has already been stated by Rab Judah!⁸ — It might have been assumed that that statement⁸ applied only where she came to claim [paternal property] as part of her kethubah, but not where she desired to take it in return for payment of its value, hence we were taught [that she may also pay its price and receive it].

MISHNAH. IF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST WHO DIED AND LEFT HER PREGNANT, HER SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH⁹ IN VIRTUE OF THE SHARE OF THE EMBRYO,¹⁰ SINCE AN EMBRYO MAY DEPRIVE¹¹ [ITS MOTHER]¹² OF THE PRIVILEGE [OF EATING TERUMAH]¹³ BUT HAS NO POWER TO BESTOW IT UPON HER;¹⁴ SO R. JOSE. THEY¹⁵ SAID TO HIM: SINCE YOU HAVE TESTIFIED TO US IN RESPECT OF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST,¹⁶ THE SLAVES OF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, WHO A MARRIED TO A PRIEST WHO DIED AND LEFT HER WITH CHILD, SHOULD ALSO BE FORBIDDEN TO EAT TERUMAH ON ACCOUNT OF THE SHARE OF THE EMBRYO!¹⁷

GEMARA. A question was raised: Is R. Jose's reason¹⁸ because he is of the opinion that an embryo in the womb of a lay woman¹⁹ is regarded as a nonpriest,²⁰ or is his reason because only the born may bestow the right of eating but the unborn may not? — In what respect could this difference matter?²¹ — In respect of an embryo in the womb of a priest's daughter.²² Now, what is the reason? Rabbah replied: R. Jose's reason is this. He is of the opinion that an embryo in the womb of a lay woman¹⁹ is regarded as a non-priest.²⁰ R. Joseph replied: The born may bestow the privilege of eating while the unborn may not.

An objection was raised: They said to R. Jose: Since you have testified to us in respect of the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest, what is the law in respect of the daughter of a priest who was married to a priest? 'The first',²³ he replied, 'I heard;²⁴ but the other²⁵ I have not heard'.²⁶ Now, if you agree [that R. Jose's reason is because] an embryo in the womb of a lay woman²⁷ is regarded as a non-priest,²⁸ it was correct for him to say, 'The first I heard, but the other I did not'. If you maintain, however, [that R. Jose's reason is because] the born may bestow the right of eating and the unborn may not, what [could he have meant by] 'The first I have heard but the other I have not heard', when the principle is the same! — This is indeed a difficulty.

Said Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: This²⁹ is the opinion of R. Jose; but the Sages said: If he³⁰ has children,³¹ they³² may eat [terumah] by virtue of his children;³³ if he has no children, they³² may eat by virtue of his³⁴ brothers, and if he has no brothers they³² may eat by virtue of the entire family.³⁵ 'This',³⁶ would imply that he³⁷ himself does not share the view;³⁸ but, surely, Samuel said to R. Hana of Bagdad, 'Go bring me a group of ten men that I may tell you in their presence³⁹ that if title is conferred upon an embryo [through the agency of a third party], it does acquire ownership'!⁴⁰ The fact is that 'this' here denotes that he⁴¹ also holds the same opinion. What, then, does he⁴¹ teach us?⁴² That the Rabbis disagree with R. Jose! But do they, in fact, disagree? Surely R. Zakkai stated:⁴³ This evidence⁴⁴ was submitted by R. Jose in the name of Shemaiah and Abtalion and they⁴⁵ agreed with him! — R. Ashi replied: Does it read, 'and they accepted'? It was only said, 'and they agreed', [which may only mean] that his view is logical.⁴⁶

left his widow with child,⁵² neither these nor the others⁴⁹ may eat it.⁵³ If he left children and also left his widow with child, the melog slaves may eat as she may eat;⁵⁴ but the zon barzel slaves may not eat, on account of the share of the embryo which may deprive [its mother]⁵⁵ of the privilege [of eating terumah] but has no power to bestow it;⁵⁶ so R. Jose. R. Ishmael son of R. Jose stated in the name of his father: A daughter may bestow the right of eating; a son may not.⁵⁷ R. Simeon b. Yohai said: [If the children⁵⁸ are] males, all [the slaves] may eat.⁵⁹ [If however they are] females, [the slaves] are not permitted to eat, since it is possible that the embryo might be a male;⁶⁰ and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all.⁶¹ What need was there to point⁶² to the possibility that the embryo might be a male when this⁶³ might be equally deduced [from the fact] that [even when the embryo is] a female it deprives them of the privilege!⁶⁴ — He meant to say: There is one reason and also an additional one. ‘There is the one reason’ that a female embryo also deprives [the slaves] of the privilege; and, furthermore,⁶⁵ ‘it is possible that the embryo might be a male and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all’.

‘[If the children are] males, [the slaves] may eat’. But, surely, there is an embryo in existence!⁶⁶ — He is of the opinion

(1) The prohibition against the use of a dead man's shroud has the same force as that of consecrated objects and invalidates, therefore, the legal force of the wife's mortgage. V. supra note 1.

(2) In her dowry as zon barzel.

(12) If she is the daughter of a priest who was married to an Israelite who died.

(13) Even though there are no other children from that union to deprive her of the right of returning to the priestly house of her father and to enjoy the privilege again.

(14) If she is an Israelite's daughter married to a priest who died leaving her with no children but the embryo. As it cannot bestow such right upon its mother so it cannot bestow it upon its slaves.

(29) The ruling in our Mishnah.

(30) The deceased priest.

- (31) Besides the embryo.
- (32) The zon barzel slaves.
- (33) The embryo is entirely disregarded.
- (34) The deceased priest's.
- (35) Among the entire family of the priest there must be at least one who is entitled to be his heir; and so long as the embryo is unborn, that born heir, as the owner of the slaves, is fully entitled to confer upon them the right of eating terumah.
- (36) The expression, 'This is the opinion of R. Jose'.
- (37) Samuel.
- (38) That an embryo acquires ownership.
- (39) Thus giving the matter due publicity.
- (40) B.B. 142b, Keth. 7b, Zeb. 95a.
- (41) Samuel.
- (42) By pointing out that the statement is that of R. Jose.
- (43) V. Bah. Cur. edd., 'R. Zakkai raised an objection'.
- (44) Recorded in our Mishnah.
- (45) The Rabbis.
- (46) They, however, did not accept it.
- (47) A deceased priest.
- (48) And his widow was not pregnant.
- (49) The melog and the zon barzel slaves.
- (50) The melog slaves are entitled to the privilege by virtue of the rights of the widow who is entitled to it by virtue of her surviving children; and the son barzel slaves are entitled to the privilege by virtue of the priest's living children who are now their owners.
- (51) The deceased priest.
- (52) And he is not survived by any other children.
- (53) Since the embryo cannot bestow the privilege (cf. supra n. 4) either upon his mother or upon the slaves.
- (54) The melog's slaves being the property of the widow and the embryo having no share in them. As by virtue of her living sons the widow is herself entitled to eat terumah she may also feed her slaves on it, Cf. supra n' 4.
- (55) V, supra p. 448, n. 1.
- (56) v. supra p. 448, n. 3.
- (57) This is explained infra.
- (58) Who survived the deceased priest.
- (59) On their account because the chances that the embryo will be a viable male and thus have a share in the slaves are so uneven that they may be disregarded. For, in the first instance, it is likely that the embryo will be a female and thus have no share at all in the slaves. And secondly, were it to be a male, it might yet be a miscarriage, which again would have no share in the slaves (v. infra).
- (60) Who, when born, will become the owner of the slaves.
- (61) The slaves, therefore, would be the property of the embryo which cannot bestow upon them the right of eating terumah.
- (62) As a reason why the slaves are forbidden to eat terumah in the latter case.
- (63) The prohibition upon the slaves.
- (64) Since the female embryo, when born, would be entitled to a share among the other daughters and now, therefore, as an embryo, deprives the slaves of the privilege.
- (65) Which is the other reason.
- (66) And it, owing to its share in them, should deprive the slaves of the privilege.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 67b

that no provision need be made against the less usual cases.¹ Or if you prefer I might say that he² is of the opinion that provision in fact must be made against the less usual cases also, [but here] a special arrangement might be made³ in accordance with a ruling of R. Nahman in the name of Samuel. For R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: Where orphans⁴ wish to divide the property of their [deceased] father, Beth din appoint a guardian for [every one of] them, and [each guardian] chooses for his ward a suitable portion. As soon, however, as they reach their majority they are entitled to enter a protest.⁵ In his own name, however, R. Nahman stated: Even when they reach majority they are not entitled to protest, for otherwise what validity is there in the authority of a Beth din!⁶

Must it be assumed that R. Nahman's ruling is a matter of dispute between Tannaim!⁷ — No; all accept R. Nahman's [arrangement],⁸ but the dispute here⁹ centres on the question whether¹⁰ provision was to be made against the less usual cases.¹¹

‘R. Ishmael], son of R. Jose, stated in the name of his father: A daughter may bestow the right of eating; a son may not.¹² Wherein lies the difference [between the son and the daughter]? If a son may not bestow the right of eating on account of the share of the embryo, a daughter also should not be entitled to bestow the right of eating on account of the share of the embryo! — Abaye replied: Here¹³ we are dealing with a small estate¹⁴ and in a case where there is a son¹⁵ as well as a daughter, [so that the slaves may eat the terumah] whatever be the assumption [as to the sex of the embryo]. If the embryo is a son then he is not better than the one who is already born.¹⁶ And if it is a daughter, then why does a daughter eat at all?¹⁷ Surely by virtue of an ordinance of the Rabbis.¹⁸ But so long as she has not seen the light¹⁹ no provision for her has been made by the Rabbis.²⁰ If you take it²¹ to refer²² to a small estate, [how will you] explain the final clause,²³ ‘since it is possible that the embryo might be a male, and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all’? On the contrary; a small estate belongs to the daughters! — The final clause refers to a large estate. But does a small estate belong to the daughters? Surely, R. Assi stated in the name of R. Johanan: Where male orphans forestalled [the ruling of Beth din] and sold a small estate, their sale is valid!²⁴ — But the fact is that by the mention of daughter ‘the mother’ is to be understood.²⁵ If so, this is exactly the same statement as that of R. Jose! — The entire statement was made by R. Ishmael son of R. Jose.

MISHNAH. AN EMBRYO,²⁶ A LEVIR,²⁷ BETROTHAL,²⁸ A DEAF-MUTE,²⁹ AND A BOY WHO IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD,³⁰ DEPRIVE [A WOMAN]³¹ OF THE RIGHT [OF EATING TERUMAH], BUT CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER,³² [EVEN WHEN] IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER THE BOY IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD OR NOT,³³ OR WHETHER HE³⁴ HAS PRODUCED TWO HAIRS³⁵ OR NOT.

IF A HOUSE COLLAPSED UPON A MAN AND UPON HIS BROTHER'S DAUGHTER,³⁶ AND IT IS NOT KNOWN WHICH OF THEM DIED FIRST, HER RIVAL MUST PERFORM HALIZAH³⁷ BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.³⁸

GEMARA. AN EMBRYO, for if [its mother] is the daughter of a priest [who was married] to an Israelite [the embryo] deprives her of the privilege,³⁹ [for it is written]. As in her youth,⁴⁰ which excludes one who is with child.⁴¹ And if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to a priest, the embryo does not bestow the privilege³⁹ upon her, because the living child does bestow the privileged but not the unborn.⁴²

A LEVIR, for if [his yebamah] is the daughter of a priest who was married to an Israelite, [the levir] deprives her of the privileged [for it is written], And is returned unto her father's house,⁴⁰ which excludes one who is awaiting the decision of the levir;⁴³ and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to a priest [the levir] does not bestow the privilege upon her, because the All Merciful said, The purchase of his money.⁴⁴ while she is the purchase of his brother. BETROTHAL, for if [the woman] is the daughter of a priest [who was betrothed] to an Israelite, [betrothal] deprives her of the privilege,

- (1) Lit., 'a minority'. I.e., against the possibility that the embryo might be born a viable male. Against the possibility of male births there is the equal possibility of female births, and by adding the minority of miscarrying women to the half of female births, the male births are found to form only a minority.
- (2) R. Simeon.
- (3) The embryo is allotted as his share a portion of the estate exclusive of the slaves, who consequently form a portion of the shares of the living brothers, who, as their owners, bestow upon the slaves the right of eating terumah. Where, however, there are only daughters, such an arrangement cannot be made, since in such a case the embryo, in case he is born a viable male, is the sole heir and owner.
- (4) Who are minors.
- (5) Against the original division, and to demand a new one. The validity of acceptance of the shares by the guardians extends only to the produce or yield of the estate up to the date of the protest.
- (6) V. Kid. Sonc. ed., p. 210, notes.
- (7) That R. Simeon, who permits the slaves to eat, in the case of sons, by adopting the arrangement mentioned, is of the same opinion as R. Nahman; while R. Jose, who forbids terumah to the slaves, maintaining as he evidently does that the arrangement is of no avail and that the division must be postponed until the heirs reach majority, is in disagreement with R. Nahman.
- (8) Wherever such had been made,
- (9) Between R. Jose and R. Simeon, supra 6a.
- (10) Where R. Nahman's arrangement had not been made,
- (11) R. Simeon permits the slaves to eat terumah, because he holds that no provision has to be made against the less usual cases (v. supra p. 451, n. 3) while R. Jose forbids them to eat it, because he maintains that provision must be made even against the less usual case.
- (12) This is now assumed to mean that where there is a daughter but no son, she bestows the right of eating terumah upon the slaves, but where there is a son, the slaves are not permitted to eat the terumah.
- (13) R. Ishmael's statement.
- (14) Which, by an ordinance of the Rabbis, must be handed over to the daughters for their maintenance while the sons receive nothing. v. B.B., 139b.
- (15) To whom the estate belongs in accordance with the Pentateuchal law.
- (16) Lit., 'exists', 'stands'. Since the Rabbis deprived the living son of his share and gave it to the daughters. they have, even more so, deprived the embryo of its share.
- (17) From her father's estate, though he is also survived by sons'
- (18) Pentateuchally she has no claim at all in the presence of a son.
- (19) Lit., 'came out into the air of the world'.
- (20) The embryo, consequently, cannot possibly have a share in the slaves, who may, therefore, eat terumah by virtue of the rights of the living children. Had there been a daughter only and no son, the slaves would not have been permitted to eat terumah on account of the embryo, which, were it a female, would have had in the slaves an equal share with their sister.
- (21) R. Ishmael's statement.
- (22) Lit., 'in what did you place it'.
- (23) Which presumably deals with a similar case.
- (24) Keth. 103a, Sotah 21b, B.B. 140a. Which proves that the estate, even when small, belongs to the sons also. How then could the slaves be permitted to eat terumah?
- (25) I.e., the mother of the embryo may feed her melog slaves with terumah as she herself is permitted to eat it by virtue of her living sons. A son, however, may not feed the zon barzel slaves with terumah owing to the share of the embryo.
- (26) Whose mother was (a) the daughter of a priest married to an Israelite, or (b) the daughter of an Israelite married to a priest, and whose father died before he (the embryo) was born.
- (27) The widow of whose deceased brother was (a) the daughter of a priest (he and his brother being Israelites), or (b) the daughter of an Israelite (he and his brother being priests).
- (28) Of (a) the daughter of a priest to an Israelite, or (b) the daughter of an Israelite to a priest.
- (29) Who is (a) an Israelite married to the daughter of a priest, or (b) a priest married to the daughter of an Israelite.
- (30) This is explained in the Gemara, infra.
- (31) If she is (a) the daughter of a priest (cf. last four notes).

- (32) If she is (b) the daughter of an Israelite (cf. supra notes 6-9).
- (33) This has no reference to what follows and is explained in the Gemara.
- (34) Who betrothed the woman.
- (35) Which are the marks of puberty, when he becomes legally entitled to contract a marriage.
- (36) To whom he had been married and who, like himself, died childless.
- (37) With the daughter's father, the brother of the deceased. Though the dead woman was his forbidden relative, her rival becomes subject to the halizah because it is possible that the woman had been killed before the man, and when the man died her former rival was no longer related to her. V. infra note 6.
- (38) Because it is also possible that the man was killed first and that the rival consequently remained forbidden to the levir as the rival of his daughter.
- (39) Of eating terumah.
- (40) Lev. XXII, 13.
- (41) Only when she returned unto her father's house as in her youth (v. ibid.), i.e., if, like a virgin, she has no child at all, not even an embryo, may she eat of her father's bread (ibid.) i.e., terumah.
- (42) This is deduced from Such as are born in his house etc. (Lev. XXII, 11) by taking the Kal יאכל in the sense of Hif. יאכל V Torath Kohanim, a.l., (v. Rashi).
- (43) Being dependent on the levir's will she cannot without his release, return to her father's house.
- (44) Lev. XXII, 11 emphasis on 'his.'

since he acquires her by the betrothal;¹ and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was betrothed] to a priest, the betrothal cannot bestow the privilege upon her, owing to the ruling of 'Ulla.²

A DEAF-MUTE, for if [the woman] is the daughter of a priest [who was married] to [him³ who is] an Israelite, he deprives her of the privilege, since he⁴ acquired her by virtue of a Rabbinical enactment;⁵ and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to [him³ who is] a priest, he cannot bestow the privilege upon her, because the All Merciful said, The purchase of his money,⁶ while he³ is not eligible to execute any kinyan.

AND A BOY WHO IS NINE YEARS etc. This was assumed⁷ to refer to the case of a yebamah who was awaiting the decision of a levir who was nine years and one day old.⁸ Now, in what respect?⁹ If in respect of depriving her¹⁰ of the privilege,¹¹ a younger child would also equally deprive her of the privilege! And if in respect of bestowing the privilege,¹² a grownup levir also cannot bestow this privilege!¹³ — Abaye replied: We are dealing here with a levir of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabited with his yebamah¹⁴ who, according to Pentateuchal law, becomes his kinyan. Since it might have been assumed that, as Pentateuchally she becomes his kinyan, and his cohabitation also is legal, he should be entitled to bestow the privilege upon her, hence we were taught that the cohabitation of a boy who is nine years and one day old has been given the same validity only as that of a ma'amar by an adult.¹⁵ Said Raba to him: If so,¹⁶ [why] is it stated in the final clause, [EVEN WHEN] IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER THE BOY IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD, OR NOT? If a boy who is certainly of the age of nine cannot bestow the privilege, is there any need to speak of a boy whose age is in doubt! — No, said Raba, [the Mishnah] deals with a boy of the age of nine years and one day belonging to one of the classes of disqualified persons who, by their cohabitation, deprive a woman¹⁷ of the privilege of eating terumah;¹⁸ as it was taught: An Ammonite,¹⁹ a Moabite,¹⁹ an Egyptian,²⁰ or an Idumean²⁰ proselyte, a Cuthean²¹, a nathin,²¹ a halal²¹ or a bastard, of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabits with the daughter of a priests of a Levite or of an Israelite, disqualifies her.²² But since it is stated in the final clause,²³ 'If they are not fit to enter the assembly of Israel they render [a woman] unfit', it may be inferred that the first clause does not deal with such disqualified persons! — The first clause speaks of those who are disqualified to enter the assembly, while the latter clause speaks of those who are disqualified to marry the daughter of a priest.²⁴

[To turn to] the main text:²⁵ An Ammonite,²⁶ a Moabite,²⁶ an Egyptian or an Idumean²⁷ proselyte, a Cuthean,²⁸ a nathin,²⁸ a halal²⁸ or a bastard, of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabits with the daughter of a priest, of a Levite or of an Israelite disqualifies her.²⁹ R. Jose said: Anyone whose children are disqualified causes disqualification;³⁰ he whose children are not disqualified does not cause disqualification.³⁰ R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Whenever you may marry his daughter you may marry his widow,³⁰ and whenever you may not marry his daughter you may not marry his widow.³¹

Whence are these rulings³² deduced? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: Scripture stated, And if a priest's daughter be married unto to a strange man,³³ as soon as she has had connubial relations with a disqualified person³⁴ the latter disqualified her. But the text cited is surely required [for another] purpose, viz., that the All Merciful ordained that the daughter of a priest who was married to a layman³⁵ may not eat terumah! — That³⁶ may be deduced from the text, And is returned unto her father's house, as in her youth, she may eat of her father's bread.³⁷ Since the All Merciful ordained, And is returned unto her father's house . . . she may eat,³⁷ it follows that prior to that³⁸ she was not permitted to eat. But if [deduction were to be made] from that text,³⁷ [it may be objected] one might have assumed that as a negative precept³⁹ which is derived from a positive one⁴⁰ it has only the force of a positive precept,⁴¹ hence did the All Merciful write the other text⁴² to [indicate that it is] a negative precept! — [That it is] a negative precept may be deduced from, There shall no strange man⁴³ eat⁴⁴ of the holy things.⁴⁵

(1) And being, therefore, deemed to be his legal wife she is forbidden to eat terumah. V. Lev. XXII, 12.

(2) Though Pentateuchally a woman who is betrothed to a priest is entitled to the privilege of eating terumah, she has been forbidden to eat it during the period of betrothal, when she is still in her father's house, as a preventive measure against the possibility of her treating to it a brother or a sister of hers. V. Keth. 57b.

(3) The deaf-mute.

(4) Though mentally defective and, therefore, Pentateuchally ineligible to execute any kinyan.

(5) V. infra 112b.

(6) Lev. XXII, 11, emphasis on purchase (kinyan).

(7) By him who raised the following objection.

(8) And with whom no connubial intercourse had taken place.

(9) Is the age mentioned of any consequence.

(10) If she is the daughter of a priest, and the levir is an Israelite.

(11) Of the eating of terumah; the purpose of the ruling being to indicate that the levirate bond comes into force simultaneously with the levir's capability of cohabitation.

(12) When he is a priest and she is the daughter of an Israelite; the purpose being to indicate that, though he is capable of cohabitation, his levirate bond is not powerful enough to bestow upon his yebamah the privilege of eating terumah.

(13) As was explicitly stated earlier in our Mishnah.

(14) An act which in the case of a levir who is of age is valid.

(15) Which does not constitute complete kinyan (cf. supra 50a). The boy of the age of nine years and one day CANNOT consequently BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE any more than the others enumerated in our Mishnah. The ruling as to 'depriving a woman of the privilege' applies only to the cases of the EMBRYO, THE LEVIR, BETROTHAL AND THE DEAF-MUTE but not to that of the boy of the age mentioned.

(16) That the boy of the age of nine years and one day was included only because of the ruling that he CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE, and that the ruling of 'depriving a woman of the privilege' does not apply to him, cf. supra n. 2.

(17) If she is the daughter of a priest.

(18) The boy of the age of nine years and one day accordingly deprives a woman of the privilege; and it is because of this ruling that the case of the boy was included in our Mishnah. The second ruling that certain persons CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE is not, of course, necessary in his case and applies only to the others enumerated, vi., THE EMBRYO, THE LEVIR, BETROTHAL AND A DEAF-MUTE.

- (24) As e.g., a halal who is permitted to enter the assembly (i.e., to marry the daughter of an Israelite), but is forbidden to marry the daughter of a priest. (Cf. supra 37a). Though the expression 'not fit to enter the assembly of Israel' was used in the final clause also, it only implies marriage with the daughter of a priest, since otherwise this part of the Mishnah would have been a mere repetition of the first and, consequently, superfluous.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 68b

But that text is required for its own purpose!¹ The expression, 'There shall no strange man', is written twice.² But still is not this³ required for the exposition of R. Jose b. Hanina? For R. Jose b. Hanina stated: There shall no strange man³ implies, 'I have imposed upon you a prohibition concerning non-priests only but not concerning onan'⁴ — R. Jose b. Hanina's exposition may be deduced from the Scriptural use of the longer expression 'And there shall no strange man' instead of 'strange man'.⁵

But still is not this,⁶ required for the following which was taught:⁷ When she⁸ returns,⁹ she returns only to [the privilege of eating] terumah, but does not return to [the privilege of eating] the breast and shoulder.¹⁰ And¹¹ R. Hisda stated in the name of Rabina b. R. Shila, 'What Scriptural text proves this? It is written, but if a priest's daughter be married unto a strange man, she shall not eat of the terumah of the holy things,¹² she must not eat of that which is set apart¹³ from the holy things'¹⁴ — If so,¹⁵ Scripture should have written. She shall not eat of the holy things'. why [then the longer expression], of the terumah of the holy things? Two deductions¹⁶ may, consequently be made.

We have now deduced¹⁷ [the law relating to] a priest's daughter;¹⁸ whence, however, is this deduced in respect of the daughter of a Levite or an Israelite? — As R. Abba stated in the name of Rab [that deduction is made from the Scriptural use of] ‘But a daughter’ [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used].¹⁹ so here also [deduction is made from the use of] ‘and a daughter’ [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used].²⁰ In accordance with whose view?²¹ Is it Only in accordance with that of R. Akiba who bases expositions on [superfluous] Wawin!²² — It²³ may be said to have been made even according to the view of the Rabbis, because the entire Scriptural expression, And a daughter²⁴ is superfluous.²⁵ [Thus the disqualification] in respect of terumah has been proved;²⁶ whence, [however, is it deduced that the disqualification extends also] to the prohibition of marrying a priest?²⁷ — Has not the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite been included²⁸ in respect of priestly marriage only? For, as regards terumah, neither of them is ever eligible to eat it.²⁹

Are they never eligible?³⁰ Such eligibility surely occurs when [a mother]³¹ eats terumah³² by virtue of the rights of her son!³³ — [The case of a mother, who eats terumah] by virtue of the rights of her son, may be deduced by inference a minori ad majus: If the daughter of a priest who eats the terumah by virtue of her own sanctity becomes disqualified³⁴ how much more so the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite who eats it only by virtue of the rights of her son.³⁵ [On the contrary], this [very point]³⁶ provides the reason.³⁷ A priest's daughter whose body is sacred is rightly disqualified,³⁴ this woman, however, whose own body is not sacred might not become disqualified!³⁸ — The fact is rather, that the prohibition³⁹ to marry a priest may be deduced a minori ad majus from a divorced woman: If a divorced woman who is permitted to eat terumah is nevertheless forbidden to marry a priest, how much more reason is there that such a woman⁴⁰ who is forbidden to eat terumah should be disqualified from marrying a priest.³⁵

May a prohibition, however, be deduced by logical argument!⁴¹

This⁴² is a mere elucidation [of the law].⁴³

Might it not be suggested [that the statement,] ‘she had connubial relations with a disqualified person’⁴⁴ [refers to persons cohabitation with whom is] subject to the penalty of kareth!⁴⁵ — The All Merciful said, If. . . be married,⁴⁶ only those with whom marriage is valid,⁴⁷ with those who are subject to the penalty of kareth marriage is not valid.⁴⁸ If so,⁴⁹ no idolater or slave should cause disqualification!⁵⁰ — These cause disqualification in accordance with a ruling of R. Ishmael. For R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Ishmael: Whence is it deduced that if an idolater or a slave cohabits with the daughter of an Israelite, of a priest or of a Levite, he disqualifies her?⁵¹ — It was stated in, But if a priest's daughter be a widow or divorced etc.,⁵²

(1) For the law concerning a non-priest. What proof then is there that a priest's daughter who married such a man is also subject to the same law?

(2) Once in Lev. XXII, 10, which refers to any non-priest; and a second time, ibid. 13. which speaks of the daughter of a priest who returns to her father's house, and concludes with the expression, There shall no strange etc. referring to the priest's daughter who is married to such a man.

(3) The second text, Lev. XXII, 13.

(4) Infra 70b, 71a. אֲנִיּוֹת the mourning of an onan, v. Glos.

(5) The superfluous and serves the purpose of R. Jose's deduction, and the remainder of the clause, therefore, indicates the negative precept.

(6) The text of Lev. XXII, 12.

(7) Infra 87a.

(8) The daughter of a priest who was divorced or became a widow and had no child.

(9) To her father's house.

(10) Which are also among the priestly gifts. Cf. Ex. XXIX, 27. Lev. VII, 34. X, 14.

(11) In explanation of the Baraitha.

(12) Lev. XXII, 12. תרומת הקדשים

(13) מורם of the same rt. as צרות. V. supra n. 3.

(14) From the sacrifices, i.e., the breast and the shoulder. V. supra n. 1.

(15) That only one of the deductions mentioned is to be made from this text.

(16) That (a) a disqualified person disqualifies a priest's daughter with whom he cohabited (supra 68a), and (b) that when a priest's daughter returns as a widow or a divorcee to her father's house she is not permitted to eat of the breast and the shoulder of the peace-offerings.

(17) Lit., 'we found'.

(18) V. supra n. 7 (a).

(19) Infra 6a, 87a.

(20) The superfluous 'and' indicates a comparison between the daughter of the priest and the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite.

(21) Is the deduction made (v. n. 11).

(22) Plur. of waw 'and'. And not in accordance with the Rabbis who are in the majority? V. Sanh. 51b.

(23) The deduction from 'and a daughter'.

(24) Not only the jaw.

(25) Since the context, But if a priest . . . and such as are born in his house (Lev. XXII, 11) speaks of the relatives of a priest, it would have been obvious to whom v. 12 referred even if a priest's daughter were omitted, reading only. If she be married etc.

(26) Since Scripture mentions it. Lit., 'we found'.

(27) If a disqualified person cohabited with her. V. supra 68a.

(28) In the prohibition.

(29) Lit., 'for if for terumah, are they subjects of eating terumah?' As they are never allowed to eat terumah there is obviously no need to forbid it to them.

(30) To eat terumah. Lit., 'why not'.

(31) The daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite.

(32) After the death of her husband who was a priest.

(33) Who survived his father. A Scriptural text might consequently have been required to forbid a woman in such circumstances from eating terumah if she cohabited with a disqualified person!

(34) Lit., 'he (i.e., the disqualified man who cohabited with her) disqualifies her'.

(35) Hence no Scriptural text was needed to exclude her.

(36) The sacredness of the body of the priest's daughter.

(37) Why a priest's daughter only should be disqualified.

(38) Cf. supra notes 7 and 8 second clause.

(39) On the part of the daughter of a priest who cohabited with one of the disqualified persons mentioned.

(40) Cf. supra n. 13.

(41) A prohibition, which involves the penalty of flogging. must be derived from an explicit Scriptural text. V. Mak. 17b.

(42) The inference a fortiori mentioned.

(43) The actual prohibition, how ever, is based on the fact that she is forbidden to eat terumah; as she is forbidden to eat it owing to the loss of her sanctity, so is she forbidden to marry a priest.

(44) Who, as has been inferred, supra 68a, from a Scriptural text, causes her disqualification.

(45) A brother, for instance, betrothal with whom is invalid. What proof, however, is there that persons, such as a Cuthean, a nathin or a bastard, cohabitation with whom is subject to flogging only and betrothal with whom is valid, also disqualify a priest's daughter from marrying a priest?

(46) Lev. XXII, 12.

(47) Cause disqualification.

(48) Hence there was no need for a Scriptural text to exclude them. The text consequently refers to those who are subject to the penalty of flogging.

(49) That Scripture refers only to those with whom marriage is valid.

(50) But, as stated infra 69b, a slave does cause disqualification.

(51) From (a) marrying a priest; and (b) eating terumah in the case of the daughter of a priest, or in the case of the daughter of a Levite or an Israelite who was married to a priest who left her with children by virtue of whom she was entitled to the privilege of eating terumah.

(52) Lev. XXII, 13 which concludes, and is returned unto her father's house . . . she may eat of her father's bread, i.e., terumah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 69a

only in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood or divorce is applicable;¹ an idolater and a slave, however, are excluded, since in relation to them no widowhood or divorce is applicable.²

Thus we have found [the law concerning] the daughter of a priest;³ whence, however, [is the law concerning] the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite to be inferred? — As R. Abba stated in the name of Rab [that deduction is made from the Scriptural use of] ‘And a daughter’, [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used],⁴ so here also [deduction is made from the use of] ‘And a daughter’, [where only] ‘daughter’ could have been used.⁵ In accordance with whose view?⁶ Is it only in accordance with that of R. Akiba, who bases expositions on [superfluous] Wawin!⁷ — It⁸ may be said to have been made even according to the view of the Rabbis, because the entire [Scriptural expression] And a daughter⁹ is a superfluous text.¹⁰ But might it be suggested that in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood and divorce is possible,¹¹ [the woman]¹² may eat terumah if she¹³ has no children,¹⁴ and may not eat if she has children, but in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood and divorce are not possible¹⁵ she may eat terumah even if she¹³ has children?¹⁶ — If so,¹⁷ what need was there to include the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite!¹⁸

According to R. Akiba, however, who stated that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalty of a negative commandment has no validity and that the meaning of¹⁹ If . . . be married²⁰ to a strange man²¹ is ‘if she cohabits’,²² what need was there²³ [for] ‘widow or divorced’?²⁴ — The widow was stated²⁵ in order to restrict her privilege;²⁶ and the divorced woman, in order to relax her restrictions.²⁷ And [both²⁸ were] required. For had only the widow been mentioned it might have been assumed that only a widow may eat terumah if she has no children because she is eligible to marry a priests but, a divorced woman who is ineligible to marry a priest may not eat it even if she has no children. And had the divorced woman only been mentioned it might have been suggested that only a divorced woman may not eat terumah if she has children because she is ineligible to marry a priest, but a widow who is eligible to marry a priest may eat it even if she has children. [Hence both were] necessary.

Might it not be suggested [that the statement], ‘She had connubial relations with a disqualified person’²⁹ refers also to one who remarried his divorced wife!³⁰ — The All Merciful said, To a strange man, only one who was formerly a stranger to her.³¹ Her former husband³² is excluded since he was not formerly a stranger to her.

If so, a halal,³³ who is not a stranger³⁴ to her,³⁵ should not cause her disqualification! Scripture stated, He shall not profane his seed among his people;³⁶ ‘his seed’³⁷ is compared to himself, as he disqualifies³⁸ so does his seed disqualify.³⁹

Might it be suggested [that the disqualification⁴⁰ is effected] from the moment of betrothal?⁴¹ — [His case⁴² must be] similar to that of a High Priest with a widow. As a High Priest, in the case of a widow, [causes her disqualification] by cohabitation only,⁴³ so does this [person⁴⁴ cause disqualification] by cohabitation only.

Might it be suggested [that disqualification⁴⁰ is effected] only where there was betrothal as well as cohabitation? — His case⁴² must be similar to that of a High Priest with a widow. As the High Priest, [when he marries] a widow, [causes her disqualification] by cohabitation alone⁴⁵ so does this [person⁴⁶ cause disqualification] by cohabitation alone.

‘R. Jose however said: ‘Anyone whose children are disqualified causes disqualification, but he whose children are not disqualified does not cause disqualification’. What is the practical difference between the first Tanna and R. Jose? — R. Johanan replied: The difference between them is the case of an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation and an Idumean proselyte of the second generation.⁴⁷ And both of them⁴⁸ deduced their respective views from none other than [the disqualification] of a widow by a High Priest. The first Tanna reasons: As a High Priest whose cohabitation with a widow is forbidden causes her disqualification, so does this person⁴⁹ also cause disqualification. R. Jose, however, reasons thus: Like a High Priest. As a High Priest whose seed is disqualified causes disqualification, so does any other person cause disqualification only when his seed is disqualified; an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation is thus excluded, since his children are not disqualified, for it is written, The children of the third generation that are born unto them may enter into the assembly of the Lord.⁵⁰

‘R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Whenever you may marry his daughter, you may marry his widow etc.’ What is the practical difference between R. Jose and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel? ‘Ullah replied: The difference between them is the case of an Ammonite and a Moabite proselyte.⁵¹ And both of them⁵² derived their respective views from none other than [the disqualification] of a widow by a High Priest. R. Jose reasons thus: As with a High Priest who married a widow, his seed is disqualified and he himself causes disqualification, so does any other person cause disqualification only when his seed is disqualified. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, reasons thus: As with a High Priest who married a widow, all his seed⁵³ is disqualified and he himself causes disqualification, so does only such a person cause disqualification, all whose seed is disqualified; an Ammonite and a Moabite are, therefore, excluded since not all their seed are disqualified.⁵⁴ For a Master said: An Ammonite,⁵⁵ but not an Ammonitess; a Moabite,⁵⁵ but not a Moabitess.⁵⁶ MISHNAH. THE VIOLATOR, THE SEDUCER AND THE IMBECILE⁵⁷ CAN NEITHER DEPRIVE A WOMAN⁵⁸ OF THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH NOR CAN THEY BESTOW THE RIGHT UPON HER.⁵⁹ IF THEY ARE, HOWEVER, UNFIT TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY OF ISRAEL⁶⁰ THEY DO DEPRIVE A WOMAN⁵⁸ OF HER RIGHT TO THE EATING OF TERUMAH.⁶¹ HOW? IF⁶² AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST⁶³ SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH.

(1) Viz., a legitimate Israelite. Only in such a case does the widow or divorced woman regain her right of eating terumah.

(2) Their betrothal and marriage having no validity.

(12) A priest's daughter after she had been divorced by her husband or become a widow.

(13) Cf. Rashi, Cur. edd., ‘to him’.

(14) From that husband. V. supra n. 8.

(15) An idolater, for instance, or a slave.

(16) The cohabitation with such a person having no legal effect whatsoever.

(17) That from the Scriptural text mentioned a relaxation of the law is to be deduced, its purpose being the indication that a priest's daughter is not disqualified even where she has issue from an idolater or a slave.

(18) If a priest's daughter is not disqualified, how much less the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite. The purpose of the Scriptural text, therefore, must be taken to be the disqualification of the daughter of a priest. The inclusion of the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite was, therefore, necessary to indicate that even if either of those was enjoying the privilege of eating terumah, by virtue of the rights of the children she had from a priest, she loses that privilege if she cohabited with an idolater or a slave even though the act resulted in no issue.

(19) Lit., 'and what'.

(22) Since no legal marriage with any of the disqualified persons is at all possible.

(23) When cohabitation with an idolater or a slave had taken place.

(24) To exclude, as stated supra an idolater and slave, in relation to whom no widowhood or divorce is possible since they are surely included among the other disqualified persons betrothal or marriage with whom is invalid!

(25) Not for the purpose of the deduction made by R. Ishmael.

(26) To indicate that a priest's daughter who was the widow of an Israelite may not eat terumah if she has children, even after the death of her husband. Had no Scriptural text indicated this law it might have been assumed that she may eat terumah even if she had children from the Israelite.

(27) To allow her (cf. supra n. 4) to eat terumah where she has no issue from the Israelite. Had not Scripture indicated this law it might have been assumed that as the divorcee was forbidden to marry a priest so she was forbidden to eat terumah even if her union with the Israelite produced no issue.

(28) Widow and divorcee.

(29) Who, as deduced from a Scriptural text, supra 68a, causes the disqualification of the woman with whom he cohabited.

(30) After she had been married to another man. Such a marriage being forbidden (v. Deut. XXIV, 4), the first husband should be regarded as a 'strange man' (Lev. XXII, 12) and consequently included among the persons who cause a woman's disqualification. Why, then, was it stated (supra 44b) that a woman so remarried to her first husband is permitted to marry a priest and, all the more, to eat terumah! (V. Rashi a.l. Cf., however, Tosaf s.v. הויה supra 44b).

IF SHE BECOMES PREGNANT SHE MAY NO LONGER EAT TERUMAH.¹ IF THE EMBRYO WAS CUT IN HER WOMB SHE MAY EAT.² IF³ A PRIEST HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. [EVEN IF] SHE BECOMES PREGNANT SHE MAY NOT EAT.⁴ IF, HOWEVER, SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A CHILD SHE MAY EAT.⁵ THE POWER OF THE SON IS THUS GREATER THAN THAT OF THE FATHER.⁶

A SLAVE, BY HIS COHABITATION, DEPRIVES A WOMAN⁷ OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH⁸ BUT NOT AS HER OFFSPRING.⁹ HOW? — IF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST OR THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, AND SHE BORE A SON BY HIM, AND THE SON WENT AND VIOLATED A BONDWOMAN WHO BORE A SON BY HIM, SUCH A SON IS A SLAVE;¹⁰ AND IF HIS FATHER'S MOTHER WAS AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH;¹¹ BUT IF SHE WAS A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER AND MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH.¹²

A BASTARD DEPRIVES A WOMAN¹³ OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH AND ALSO BESTOWS THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER.¹⁴ HOW? IF AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST OR A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, AND SHE BORE A DAUGHTER BY HIM, AND THE DAUGHTER WENT AND MARRIED A SLAVE OR AN IDOLATER AND BORE A SON BY HIM, SUCH A SON IS A BASTARD; AND IF HIS MOTHER'S MOTHER WAS AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH; BUT IF SHE WAS A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.

A HIGH PRIEST SOMETIMES DEPRIVES A WOMAN¹³ OF HER RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH. HOW? IF A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE AND SHE BORE A DAUGHTER BY HIM, AND THE DAUGHTER WENT AND MARRIED A PRIEST AND BORE A SON BY HIM, SUCH A SON IS FIT TO BE A HIGH PRIEST, TO STAND AND MINISTER AT THE ALTAR. HE ALSO BESTOWS UPON HIS MOTHER¹⁵, THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH, BUT DEPRIVES¹⁶ HIS MOTHER'S MOTHER¹⁷ OF THIS PRIVILEGE. THE LATTER¹⁸ CAN RIGHTLY SAY, '[MAY THERE] NOT [BE ANOTHER] LIKE MY GRANDSON THE HIGH PRIEST WHO DEPRIVES ME OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH.

GEMARA. [Here]¹⁹ we learn what the Rabbis taught: If an imbecile or a minor married and died, their wives are exempt from halizah and from levirate marriage.²⁰

IF AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH. IF SHE BECOMES PREGNANT SHE MAY NO LONGER EAT. Since she may not eat when she is definitely with child, precaution should be taken against the possibility that she might be with child!²¹ Did we not learn, 'They²² must be kept apart²³ for three months, since it is possible that they are pregnant'?²⁴ Rabbah son of R. Huna replied: In respect of genealogy²⁵ precautions were taken;²⁶ in respect of terumah no such precautions were considered necessary. But was no such precaution considered necessary in respect of terumah? Surely, it was taught: [If a priest said]²⁷ 'Here is your letter of divorce [which shall become effective] one hour before my death', she is forbidden to eat terumah at once!²⁸ — In fact,²⁹ said Rabbah son of R. Huna, precautions were taken in respect of legitimate marriage,³⁰ but in respect of illegitimate intercourse³¹ no such precaution was considered necessary.³² But was such precaution, taken in respect of legitimate marriage? Surely, it was taught: If a priest's daughter was married to an Israelite who died,³³ she may perform her ritual immersion³⁴ and eat terumah the same evening!³⁵ — R. Hisda replied: She performs the immersion but may eat terumah only until the fortieth day. For if she is not found pregnant³⁶ she never was pregnant;³⁷ and if she is found pregnant,³⁸ the semen, until the fortieth day, is only a mere fluid.³⁹ Said Abaye to him: If so,⁴⁰ read the final clause: If the embryo in her womb can be distinguished she is considered to have committed an offence⁴¹ retrospectively!⁴² — The meaning is that⁴³ she is considered to have committed an offence⁴¹ retrospectively⁴⁴ to the fortieth day.⁴⁵

It was stated: Where a man cohabited with his betrothed in the house of his [future] father-in-law, Rab said: The child is a bastard; and Samuel said: The child is a shethuki.⁴⁶ Raba said: Rab's view is reasonable in the case where the betrothed woman was suspected of illicit relations with strangers.⁴⁷ Where, however, she is not suspected of illicit relations with strangers the child is ascribed to him.⁴⁸ Said Raba: Whence do I infer this? From the statement, IF, HOWEVER, SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A CHILD SHE MAY EAT. For how is this to be understood? If it be suggested to refer to a woman who is suspected of illicit relations with strangers, why should she be allowed to eat terumah when she bore a child!⁴⁹ Consequently it must refer to a woman⁵⁰ who was suspected of illicit relations with him only but not with strangers. Now, if there⁵¹ where she is forbidden to the one as well as to the other,⁵² the child is regarded as his⁵³ how much more so⁵⁴ here⁵⁵ where she is forbidden to all other men and permitted to him. Said Abaye to him: It may still be maintained that Rab is of the opinion that wherever she is suspected of illicit relations with him,⁵⁶ the child is deemed to be a bastard even where she is not suspected of such relations with others. What is the reason? Because it is assumed that as she exposed herself to the man who betrothed her so she exposed herself to others also; but our Mishnah⁵⁷ deals with the case where both of them⁵⁸ were imprisoned in the same gaol.⁵⁹

Others say: Where he⁵⁶ cohabited with her, no one disputes that the child is regarded as his; but the statement made was in the following form. Where a betrothed woman became pregnant, Rab ruled: Such a child is a bastard; and Samuel ruled: The child is a shethuki.⁶⁰ Raba said: Rab's view is reasonable where the woman was not suspected of illicit relations with him,⁵⁶ but was suspected of such relations with others,⁶¹

- (10) The child of a bondwoman, though of an Israelite father, is deemed a slave, as deduced from Ex. XXI, 4.
- (11) If her husband and her son (the father of the slave) are dead. Though the son of a son (like a son) confers upon his grandmother the right of eating terumah (v. infra 70a), the offspring of a union between an Israelite and a bondwoman is not regarded as the legitimate son of his father but as the child of his mother.
- (12) The slave not being regarded as legitimate offspring (cf. supra n. 2) to deprive her of the privilege.
- (13) If she is a priest's daughter entitled to eat terumah.
- (14) If she was the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest now dead.
- (15) Even after the death of his father.
- (16) As the living offspring of an Israelite.
- (17) Though his own mother is dead. Were it not for his existence, his grandmother would have regained her original right of eating terumah on the death of her daughter. V. infra 87a.
- (18) Lit., 'this'.
- (19) In the statement that an imbecile's betrothal neither confers upon a woman, nor deprives her of the right of eating terumah (v. our Mishnah), thus affirming that an imbecile's kinyan has no validity.
- (20) Tosef. Yeb. XI, infra 96b, 2b; because there is no validity whatsoever in the kinyan of his marriage.
- (21) And should, in consequence, be forbidden to eat terumah immediately after intercourse had taken place. Why then was it stated, IF AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE. . . SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH?
- (22) Women who have been exchanged for one another. (V. the Mishnah, supra 33b).
- (23) I.e., they are forbidden to cohabit with their husbands.
- (24) Supra 33b. Similar precaution, then, should have been taken here also!
- (25) The Mishnah cited is concerned with safeguarding the status of a legitimate child by taking the necessary precautions to distinguish him from the illegitimate.
- (26) In the interests of the purity of family life special precautions were necessary.
- (27) To his wife, the daughter of an Israelite.
- (28) Suk. 23b, Git. 28a, Ned. 3b; since the priest might die at any moment while the woman was indulging in the consumption of terumah. This proves that in respect of terumah also precautions were taken.
- (29) Withdrawing from his first reply.
- (30) Of which the Mishnah (supra 33a) cited speaks.
- (31) The subject of the section of our Mishnah under consideration.
- (32) V. supra 35a.
- (33) On the same day, after one act of cohabitation.
- (34) Prescribed in Lev. XV, 18.
- (35) No precaution being taken against the possibility that the woman may have conceived and thereby remained forbidden to eat terumah.
- (36) On the fortieth day.
- (37) And is allowed to eat terumah after that day also.
- (38) On the fortieth day.
- (39) And cannot be regarded as a child.
- (40) That prior to the fortieth day the woman is not regarded as pregnant.
- (41) Lit., 'injured'.
- (42) She pays compensation for any terumah she may have consumed by returning to the priest the principal plus a fifth. V. Lev. XXII, 14.
- (43) Lit., 'what'.
- (44) If she ate terumah at any time after the fortieth day.
- (45) But not earlier. She pays no compensation for any terumah she may have consumed prior to the fortieth day.
- (46) Only a doubtful bastard. V. Glos. and Kid. 6.
- (47) Lit., 'when she is spoken of in a low voice from (by) the world'.

- (48) The man who betrothed her.
- (49) There is no proof that the priest was the child's father.
- (50) Lit., 'but no'.
- (51) In our Mishnah.
- (52) To the violator and seducer as well as to any other man, for it is forbidden to have intercourse with a woman without betrothal.
- (53) The violator's or seducer's.
- (54) Should the child be regarded as the son of the man who betrothed her.
- (55) The case where the man cohabited with his betrothed.
- (56) The man who betrothed her.
- (57) Which regards the child as the son of the violator or seducer.
- (58) The man and the woman.
- (59) Where no intercourse with any other man was possible.
- (60) Only a doubtful bastard. V. Glos. and Kid. 6.
- (61) These being in the majority, the child is deemed to be the son of one of the strangers.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 70a

, but where she is suspected of illicit relations with him, the child is regarded as his, although she is also suspected of such relations with others. Said Raba: Whence do I derive this? From the Statement, IF, HOWEVER, SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A CHILD, SHE MAY EAT. For how is this to be understood? If it be suggested to refer to a woman who is suspected of illicit relations with him but not with strangers, was it at all necessary to state that she may eat terumah?¹ Consequently it must refer to a woman² who was suspected of illicit relations with strangers also. Now, if there,³ where she is forbidden to the one as well as to the other,⁴ the child is regarded as his,⁵ how much more so⁶ here⁷ where she is forbidden to any other man and is permitted to him.⁸ Said Abaye to him: It may still be maintained that Rab is of the opinion that wherever she is suspected of illicit relations with strangers the child is deemed to be a bastard even if she is also suspected of such relations with him; and our Mishnah deals with one who had not been suspected at all.⁹

A SLAVE, BY HIS COHABITATION, DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH etc. What is the reason?¹⁰ — Scripture stated, The wife and her¹¹ children shall be etc.¹²

A BASTARD DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH AND ALSO BESTOWS THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER. Our Rabbis taught: And have no child.¹³ So far I only know¹⁴ of her own child; whence her child's child? It was consequently stated, And have no child,¹³ implying 'any child whatsoever'.¹⁵ So far I only know of a legitimate child; whence the illegitimate child? It was stated, And have no [en lah]¹⁶ child,¹³ which implies, 'hold an enquiry'¹⁷ concerning her.'¹⁸ But from this text,¹³ surely, the deduction concerning a child's child was made! — No Scriptural text is really required for the inclusion of one's child's child, since children's children are like children;¹⁹ if a text is at all required it is for the inclusion of an illegitimate child.

Said Resh Lakish to R. Johanan: In accordance with whose view?²⁰ Is it only in accordance with that of R. Akiba who maintains that the offspring of a union between such whose intercourse involves them in the penalty of a negative precept is regarded as a bastard!²¹ — It may even be said to represent the view of the Rabbis, since in respect of an idolater and a slave they agree.²² For when R. Dimi came²³ he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abdimi in the name of our Master:²⁴ If an idolater or a slave cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite, the child born from such a union is deemed a bastard.

A HIGH PRIEST SOMETIMES DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF HER RIGHT. Our Rabbis taught:

[The grandmother might justly say], 'I would [willingly] be an atonement²⁵ for my grandson, the little cruse²⁶ who bestows upon me the privilege of eating terumah,²⁷ but would not be an atonement for my grandson, the big jar²⁸ who deprives me of the privilege of eating terumah.²⁷

CHAPTER VIII

MISHNAH. AN UNCIRCUMCISED [PRIEST]²⁹ AND ALL LEVITICALLY UNCLEAN PERSONS MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. THEIR WIVES AND SLAVES, HOWEVER, MAY EAT TERUMAH.³⁰ [A PRIEST WHO IS] WOUNDED IN HIS STONES³¹ AND ONE WHOSE MEMBRUM IS CUT OFF,³² AS WELL AS THEIR SLAVES, MAY EAT TERUMAH, BUT THEIR WIVES MAY NOT.³³ IF, HOWEVER, NO COHABITATION TOOK PLACE AFTER THE MAN WAS WOUNDED OR HAD HIS MEMBRUM CUT OFF, THE WIVES³⁴ ARE PERMITTED TO EAT.³⁵

WHO IS TERMED A PEZU' A DAKKAH?³¹ A MAN WHO IS WOUNDED EITHER IN BOTH HIS STONES, OR EVEN ONLY IN ONE OF THEM. AND A KERUTH SHOFEKAH ? A MAN WHOSE MEMBRUM IS CUT OFF. IF, HOWEVER, [ANY PART] OF THE CORONA REMAINED, EVEN SO MUCH AS A HAIR'S BREADTH, THE MAN IS REGARDED AS FIT.

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Eliezer³⁶ stated, Whence is it deduced that an uncircumcised [priest] may not eat terumah? A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned in connection with the paschal lamb,³⁷ and A sojourner and a hired servant were also mentioned in respect of terumah,³⁸ as the paschal lamb, in connection with which 'A sojourner and a hired servant' were mentioned, is forbidden to the uncircumcised,³⁹ so is terumah, in respect of which 'A sojourner and a hired servant' were mentioned, forbidden to the uncircumcised. R. Akiba stated: This deduction is unnecessary. Since it was stated, What man soever,⁴⁰ the uncircumcised also is included.⁴¹

The Master said, 'R. Eliezer stated, "A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned in connection with the paschal lamb, and "A sojourner and a hired servant" were also mentioned in respect of terumah,'⁴² as the paschal lamb, in connection with which "A sojourner and a hired servant" were mentioned, is forbidden to the uncircumcised, so is terumah, in respect of which "A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned, forbidden to the uncircumcised'. Is it⁴³ free for deduction?⁴⁴ For if it is not free, the objection might be raised⁴⁵ that the paschal lamb may be different⁴⁶ since in connection with it one may also incur penalties⁴⁷ for pigul,⁴⁸ nothar⁴⁸ and uncleanness!⁴⁹ — It is certainly free for the deduction. Which expression⁵⁰ is free? Is it that of terumah? Surely it is required for its own purpose. For it was taught: A sojourner⁵¹ means one who is acquired for life⁵² and a hired servant⁵¹ means one who is acquired for a number of years.⁵³ But let 'sojourner' only be mentioned and a 'hired servant' be omitted and one would infer: If one who is acquired for life⁵⁴ is not permitted to eat terumah how much less one who is acquired only for a number of years! If so,⁵⁵ it might have been assumed that 'a sojourner' means one who is acquired for a number of years [and that only he may not eat terumah],⁵⁶ but that one who is acquired for life may eat,⁵⁷ hence the insertion of the expression, 'a hired servant', which explains the meaning of sojourner,⁵⁸ [viz.,] that it signifies one who, though acquired for life, may not eat!⁵⁹ — But [in fact] the one⁶⁰ mentioned in respect of the paschal lamb is free for deduction. For what could be the meaning of 'A sojourner and a hired servant' which the All Merciful wrote in connection with the paschal lamb?⁶¹ If it be suggested that it means the actual sojourner and hired servant,⁶² [could it have been imagined] that [an Israelite]⁶³ is exempt from the Paschal lamb because he is a sojourner or a hired servant? Surely, we have it as an established law in regard to terumah that such a person is not permitted to eat it,⁶⁴

(1) Certainly not; since the child is obviously the son of the priest.

(2) Lit., 'but no'.

- (3) In our Mishnah.
- (4) To the violator and seducer as well as to any other man.
- (5) The violator's or seducer's.
- (6) Should the child be regarded as the son of the man who betrothed her.
- (7) The case of the betrothed.
- (8) The man who betrothed her.
- (9) Either in respect of the violator or seducer on the one hand or in respect of any others. All that our Mishnah teaches is that if cohabitation with the former took place, even if only once, the child is regarded as his.
- (10) Why is he not regarded as the offspring of the priest? V. our Mishnah and supra p. 466, n. 16.
- (11) Emphasis on her.
- (12) Shall be her master's (Ex. XXI, 4), i.e., they are regarded (a) as slaves, and (b) as the offspring of the bondwoman. Hence they cannot be regarded as the offspring of the priest.
- (13) וּזְרַע אֵין לָהּ Lev. XXII, 13.
- (14) Had לָהּ been omitted.
- (15) Lit., 'from all (any) place'.
- (16) אֵין לָהּ.
- (17) עֵיִן ayayn 'examine', 'investigate'. The Aleph of אֵין is interchangeable with the 'Ayin of עֵיִן.
- (18) An enquiry is to be made whether she has any kind of son, i.e., even if only a bastard. Thus a bastard also is deemed to be her child. Cf. supra 22b.
- (19) Supra 62b.
- (20) Was it stated in our Mishnah that the offspring of a union between the daughter of an Israelite and an idolater or a slave (a union which is forbidden by a negative precept only, no kareth being involved, cf. supra 45a) is regarded as a bastard.
- (21) Does our Mishnah, then, represent the view of an individual, which is contrary to the expressed view of the majority.
- (22) With R. Akiba.
- (23) From Palestine.
- (24) Rabbi, Judah the Prince, the Master par excellence of his time. Cf. supra 45a.
- (25) הָרִינִי כְּפֶרֶת an expression of respect or affection. Cf. Kid. 31b.
- (26) Metaph. for bastard. כּוֹזֵה cf. כּוֹס.
- (27) As stated in our Mishnah.
- (28) The High Priest. Cf. the colloquial expres. 'big pot'.
- (29) Though the uncircumcision was not due to any fault of his. If, e.g., he was forbidden circumcision because his brothers died as a result of such an operation. Cf. supra 64b.
- (30) By virtue of the rights of their husband and master. Uncircumcision and uncleanness are only temporary disqualifications which prevent the priest from eating terumah, while they continue. His sanctity and privileges, however, remain in force.
- (31) פְּצוּעַ דָּכָה
- (32) כְּרוֹת שִׁפְכָה
- (33) Because the cohabitation with these maimed priests causes the profanation of the women.
- (34) Who were married to them before they were maimed.
- (35) Terumah.
- (36) Cur. edd. 'Eleazar'. Cf. Tosaf. Sotah 240 s.v. וּרְבִי, and Men. 17b s.v. בְּזֵאִי.
- (37) Ex. XII, 45.
- (38) Lev. XXII, 10.
- (39) Ex. XII, 48.
- (40) Lev. XXII, 4.
- (41) In the prohibition; the text, according to Rabbinical interpretation, referring to the prohibition of eating terumah.
- (42) V. supra p. 473 notes.
- (43) The expression. 'A sojourner and a hired servant'.
- (44) I.e., is not the expression required in connection with the subject spoken of in the context.
- (45) Against deducing terumah from the Paschal lamb.

- (46) From terumah, i.e., subject to greater restrictions.
- (47) Kareth if the transgression was wilful, and a sin-offering if unwitting.
- (48) V. Glos.
- (49) How then could terumah which is not surrounded by such restrictions be deduced from it?
- (50) Of the two expressions, 'A sojourner and a hired servant'.
- (51) Lev. XXII, 20.
- (52) Lit., 'an everlasting possession', i.e., a Hebrew servant who, on refusing to go out free, has had his ear bored. (Cf. Ex. XXI, 5f).
- (53) The ordinary Hebrew servant who remains the property of his master for six years only, after which he goes out free for nothing (v. Ex. XXI, 2).
- (54) Who is in fact his master's absolute property.
- (55) If only the sojourner had been mentioned.
- (56) Since he is not his master's absolute possession.
- (57) Since he is the absolute property of his master.
- (58) Since a hired servant implies one who is acquired for a period, the other expression cannot refer to the same class of servant, but to one acquired for life. תושב E.V. a sojourner (rt. ישב 'to abide') implies longer service than that of the שכיר E.V., hired servant.
- (59) How, then, since the expression is required for the laws of terumah, could it be suggested that the expression, 'a sojourner and a hired servant', mentioned in connection with terumah, is free for deduction?
- (60) The expression 'A sojourner and a hired servant'.
- (61) Ex. XII, 45, a sojourner . . . shall not eat thereof.
- (62) I.e., a Hebrew servant who (a) serves his master for life or (b) for a period of years. Cf. supra p. 474, nn. 14 and 15.
- (63) Who is subject to the fulfilment of the commandments.
- (64) Though his master is a priest.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 70b

which proves¹ that his master does not acquire his person² so that here also³ his master does not acquire his person!⁴ [The expression]⁵ must consequently [have been written] for the purpose of the deduction.⁶

But is it⁷ not free in one direction only,⁸ while R. Eliezer⁹ was heard to state [that an analogy between expressions of which only] one¹⁰ is free¹¹ may be drawn, but may also be refuted!¹² — Since [the expressions]¹³ are not required [for their own context]¹⁴ one of them is allotted to the law¹⁵ in respect of which the inference is made¹⁶ and the other is allotted to the law from which the inference is made,¹⁷ so that a word analogy is obtained which is free in both directions.

Might¹⁸ [not the deduction be made:]¹⁹ As the paschal lamb is forbidden to an onan²⁰ so is terumah forbidden to an onan²¹ — R. Jose son of R. Hanina replied: Scripture stated, 'There shall no common man,²² I commanded you concerning its prohibition to the common man²³ but not concerning that of the onan. But might it be suggested: But not the uncircumcised!²⁴ Surely 'A sojourner and a hired servant'²⁵ was written.²⁶ And what reason do you see?²⁷ — It is logical to infer that the case of the uncircumcised is to be included, since²⁸ it involves the absence of an act²⁹ and that act is one affecting the man's own body; [the uncircumcised] is punishable by kareth;³⁰ the law²⁹ was in force before the Revelation;³¹ and the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars [one from eating of the paschal lamb].³² On the contrary; the case of the onan should have been included,³³ since mourning is an ever-present possibility,³⁴ is common to men as well as to women, and no man has the power to cure himself of it!³⁵ — Those³⁶ are more in number.

Raba said: Even if those³⁶ were not more in number, you could not suggest that uncircumcision, which is actually mentioned in respect of the Paschal lamb, should be excluded³⁷ while the mourning of an onan, which in the case of the paschal lamb itself was deduced from that of the tithe,³⁸ should be deduced from it.

Might³⁹ [it not be said:]⁴⁰ As the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debar one from the eating of the paschal lamb, so should the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debar one from the eating of terumah! — Scripture stated, When thou hast circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof,⁴¹ the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debar one from the eating thereof, of the Paschal lamb only; the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves does not, however, debar one from the eating of terumah. If so,⁴² [why not] say, But no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof⁴³ [also implies:] He may not eat 'thereof' only but may eat terumah!⁴⁴ — Surely it was written A sojourner and a hired servant.⁴⁵ And what reason do you see?⁴⁶ — It is only logical to include a man's own circumcision, since the act is performed on his own person and its neglect is punishable by kareth. On the contrary; the circumcision of one's male children and slaves should have been excluded because it may occur at any time! — The former restrictions are more in number. And if you prefer I might say that even if those were not more in number your suggestion could not be entertained; for is there anything which is not debarred by his own state of uncircumcision but is debarred by that of the other!

Now that it has been said that the expression. 'Thereof,' was introduced for expository purposes. what⁴⁷ was the purpose of the text, There shall no alien eat of it?⁴⁸ — Only with regard to it⁴⁹

- (1) Since a Canaanite slave, whose body is acquired by the master, may eat of his terumah.
 - (2) The Hebrew servant sells only his labour, while he himself remains a free man.
 - (3) In respect of the Paschal lamb.
 - (4) As he is thus a free man, it is obviously his duty to observe the commandment of the Paschal lamb. What need then was there for the specification of A sojourner and hired servant?
 - (5) A sojourner and a hired servant. Ex. XII, 45.
 - (6) [The verse would then be referring to a non-jew, 'a sojourner' denoting a resident alien and 'a hired servant' an idolater. This, however, would be included in uncircumcised' (Ex. Xli, 48) and 'alien' (verse 43). Consequently the verse must have been written for deduction (Tosaf.)].
 - (7) The expression. A sojourner and a hired servant.
 - (8) That of the Paschal lamb.
 - (9) Cur. edd. 'Eleazar'.
 - (10) Lit., 'from one side'.
 - (11) For interpretation or deduction.
 - (12) Infra 104a. The analogy in the present instance might be refuted by the objection raised supra 70a.
 - (13) (a) sojourner and (b) hired servant.
 - (14) Both being superfluous and free for deduction.
 - (15) That of terumah.
 - (16) That terumah may not be eaten by the uncircumcised.
 - (17) Paschal lamb.
 - (18) Lit., 'if (you say)'.
 - (19) Since a word analogy has been established.
 - (20) V. Glos.
 - (21) If the two are compared as regards the uncircumcised they should also be compared in respect of the onan!
 - (22) Lev. XXII, 10.
 - (23) The non-priest.
 - (24) I.e., the uncircumcised might have been excluded by the text cited, not the onan.
 - (25) Ex. XII, 45.
 - (26) Which includes the uncircumcised in the prohibition.
 - (27) For excluding onan and including the uncircumcised.
 - (28) Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis the following mnemonic as an aid to the recollection of the characteristics which distinguish the uncircumcised from the onan: Acts cut (kareth) in the Word (Revelation) of the servant.

- (29) Circumcision.
- (30) If he wilfully neglects the fulfilment of the precept.
- (31) On Sinai. Lit., 'and it is before (divine) speech'. The commandment concerning circumcision was given to Abraham. V. Gen. XVII, 9ff.
- (32) A man is forbidden to participate in the eating of the Paschal lamb if any of his sons or slaves who are liable to circumcision remain uncircumcised. Cf. Ex. XII, 44, 48.
- (33) In the prohibition to eat terumah.
- (34) Lit., 'it is at all hours'; one may have more than one bereavement in his lifetime, but can be circumcised once only.
- (35) The cause of an onan's mourning is not controlled by human action. To make oneself fit by circumcision is within man's own power.
- (36) The restrictions of circumcision.
- (37) Lit., 'leave out' from the prohibition.
- (38) v. infra 73a.
- (39) Lit., 'if (you say)'.
- (40) Since a word analogy has been established.
- (41) Ex. XII, 44, emphasis on thereof.
- (42) Since the expression 'thereof' is made the basis of an exposition.
- (43) Ibid. 48.
- (44) Which, of course, would be contrary to the deduction supra.
- (45) From which deduction was made that an uncircumcised person may not eat terumah.
- (46) For including in the prohibition one's own circumcision and excluding that of one's sons and slaves.
- (47) Bah emends the following version by some transpositions and additions.
- (48) Ex. XII, 43. emphasis on the last word, בּוֹ of it (E.V. thereof).
- (49) בּוֹ (cf. supra n. 2). the Paschal lamb.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 71a

does apostasy disqualify,¹ but in respect of tithe, apostasy does not disqualify.

What was the purpose of, But no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof?² — 'Thereof'³ only may he not eat, but he may eat of the unleavened bread and bitter herbs.⁴ And it was necessary for Scripture to specify⁵ both 'Uncircumcised' and 'There shall no alien.' For had the All Merciful mentioned the 'uncircumcised' only it might have been assumed [that the prohibition applies only to him], because he is repulsive. but not to an alien who is not repulsive. And had the All Merciful written only 'There shall no alien' it might have been assumed [that only he is subject to the prohibition]. because his heart is not directed towards heaven, but not the uncircumcised whose heart is directed towards heaven. [Hence both were] required.

What⁶ was the purpose of repeating the expression. 'Of it',⁷ twice? — As expounded by Rabbah in the name of R. Isaac.⁸

The Master said, 'R. Akiba stated: This deduction is unnecessary. Since it was stated, What man soever,⁹ the uncircumcised also was included'.¹⁰ Might it be suggested that it¹¹ includes the onan?¹² R. Jose b. Hanina replied: Scripture stated, There shall no common man,¹³ I commanded you concerning its prohibition to a common man¹⁴ but not concerning that of an onan.¹² Might it be suggested: But not the uncircumcised?¹⁵ — Surely, what man soever' was written.¹⁶ And what reason do you see?¹⁷ — It is logical that the case of the uncircumcised should be included, since¹⁸ it involves the absence of an act¹⁹ and that act is one affecting the man's own body; [the uncircumcised] is punishable by kareth;²⁰ the law²¹ was in force before the Revelation;²² and the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debar[s] [one from eating the paschal lamb].²³ On the contrary; the case of the onan should have been included,²⁴ since mourning is an ever-present possibility,²⁵ is common to men as well as women, and no man has the power to cure himself of It!²⁶

— Those²⁷ are more in number. Raba said: Even if those²⁷ were not more in number, you could not make your suggestion.²⁸ For Scripture stated, What man soever.²⁹ Now what disability is it that is applicable to a man and not to a woman? You must, of course, say that it is uncircumcision.

What expository use does R. Akiba³⁰ make of the expression A sojourner and a hired servant?¹³ R. Shemaia replied: To include³¹ a circumcised Arab and a circumcised Gibeonite.³² Are these, however, regarded as circumcised at all? Surely we learned: [If a man said]. ‘Konam³³, if I benefit from the uncircumcised’, he may benefit from uncircumcised Israelites³⁴ but is forbidden to benefit from circumcised idolaters.³⁵ [If he said]. ‘Konam’, if I benefit from the circumcised’, he is permitted to benefit from circumcised idolaters but is forbidden to benefit from uncircumcised Israelites!³⁶ — But In truth [the text referred to] includes³⁷ a proselyte who had been circumcised but did not perform the prescribed ritual immersion,³⁸ and a child who was born circumcised,³⁹ he⁴⁰ holding that it is necessary to provide for a few drops of the blood of the covenant⁴¹ to flow;⁴² while R. Eliezer⁴³ follows his own view, he having stated that ‘A proselyte who has been circumcised, though he has not performed his ritual immersion, is regarded as a proper proselyte’.⁴⁴ and he is also of the opinion that it is not necessary to provide for any drops of the blood of the covenant⁴¹ to flow where a child was born circumcised.³⁹

What expository use, however, does R. Eliezer make of the expression. What man soever?⁴⁵ — The Torah, [he maintains], speaks in the language of [ordinary] men.⁴⁶

R. Hama b. Ukba inquired: May an uncircumcised child⁴⁷ be anointed with the oil of terumah?⁴⁸ Does non-circumcision in the pre-circumcision period⁴⁹ constitute a bar⁵⁰ or not? — R. Zera replied: Come and hear: I only know [of the command]⁵¹ concerning the circumcision of the male children [which he has] at the time of the preparation⁵² [of the paschal lamb].⁵³ and concerning the slaves [which he has] at the time of the eating thereof;⁵⁴ whence, however, is it deduced that the restriction mentioned in respect of this category is to be applied to the other, and that of the other to this one?⁵⁵ Then⁵⁶ was specifically stated in both categories⁵⁷ so that an analogy between the two might be drawn.⁵⁸ Now, it is quite possible to imagine a man's slaves as being with him at the time of the eating of the paschal lamb but not at the time of its preparation,⁵⁹ when, for instance, he bought them in the meantime.⁶⁰ How is it possible, however, that a person's male children should be in existence during the eating and not during the preparation? Obviously only when birth occurred in the interval between the preparation and the eating.⁶¹ Thus it may be inferred that uncircumcision in the pre-circumcision period⁶² constitutes a legal status of uncircumcision.⁶³ Said Rabbah:⁶⁴ Do you understand this? The All Merciful said, Let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep⁶⁵ it; but such a child is not fit to be circumcised!⁶⁶ But what are we dealing with here? With a child⁶⁷ who recovered from a fever.⁶⁸ Then⁶⁹ let him be granted [a period of convalescence of] full seven days.⁷⁰ for⁷¹ Samuel said that a child who recovered from a fever must be allowed a period of convalescence of full seven days!⁷² — Where he was already granted the seven days' period.⁷³ He should, then,⁷⁴ have been circumcised in the morning!⁷⁵ — We require

(73) And it expired on the Passover Eve.

(74) V. supra n. 9.

(75) I.e., before the time of the preparation of the Paschal lamb; and, since that was not done, the child was in a legal state of uncircumcision not only during the time of eating, but also during the time of the preparation. The difficulty then arises again: What need was there for a Scriptural text to include the prohibition of eating the Paschal lamb while such a child remained uncircumcised, when the preparation that must precede the eating is already forbidden!

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 71b

a full period of seven days.¹

But, surely, Luda'ah learned, 'The day of a child's recovery is like the day of his birth'.² Does not this mean that as in respect of the day of his birth no full period is required³ so is no full period required in respect of the day of his recovery? — No; the day of his recovery is superior to the day of his birth. For, whereas in respect of the day of his birth no full period is required,³ in respect of the day of his recovery a full period is required.¹ R. Papa replied:⁴ Where, for instance, the child had a pain in his eye and recovered⁵ in the meantime.⁶ Raba replied:⁷ Where, for instance, his father and mother were confined in prison.⁸ R. Kahana son of R. Nehemiah replied:⁷ Where, for instance, the child was a *tumtum*⁹ who in the meantime¹⁰ was operated upon and was found to be a male. R. Sherabia replied:⁷ 'Where, for instance, the child put forth his head out of the forechamber [of the uterus]'.¹¹ But can such a child survive? Surely it was taught: As soon as the child emerges into the air of the world the closed organ¹² is opened and the opened¹³ is closed,¹⁴ for otherwise he could not survive even for one hour!¹⁵ — Here we deal with a case where the heat of the fever sustained him. Whose fever? If 'his own fever' be suggested, he should, if such was the case, be allowed a full period of seven days!¹⁶ — It means, where the fever of his mother sustained him. And if you prefer I might say that the statement¹⁷ applies only when the child does not cry. When, however, it cries it undoubtedly survives.

R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Bana'ah: An uncircumcised [Israelite] is eligible to receive sprinkling;¹⁸ for so we find that our ancestors¹⁹ received sprinkling²⁰ while they were still uncircumcised, since it is said, And the people came up out of the Jordan on the tenth day of the first month,²¹ but on the tenth they were not circumcised owing to the fatigue of the journey; when, then, [could the sprinkling] have been performed?²² Obviously²³ while they were still uncircumcised.²⁴ But is it not possible that they prepared no Paschal lamb at all? — This suggestion cannot be entertained at all, since it is written, And they kept the Passover.²⁵ Mar Zutra demurred: It is possible that it²⁶ was a paschal lamb that was prepared in uncleanness!²⁷ — R. Ashi retorted: It was explicitly taught: They were circumcised, they performed their ritual ablutions, and they prepared their paschal lambs in a state of cleanness.

Rabbah b. Isaac stated in the name of Rab: The commandment of uncovering the corona at circumcision²⁸ was not given to Abraham; for it is said, At that time the Lord said unto Joshua: 'Make thee knives of flint etc.' [¹⁹ But is it not possible [that this applied to] those who were not previously circumcised; for it is written, For all the people that came out were circumcised,²⁹ but all the people that were born etc.?²⁹ — If so,³⁰ why the expression. 'Again!' Consequently³¹ it must apply to the uncovering of the corona.³² Why, then,³³ the expression, 'A second time?'³⁴ — To compare the termination of the circumcision with its commencement; as the commencement of the circumcision is essential³⁵ so is the termination of circumcision³⁶ essential;³⁷ for we learned, 'These are the shreds which render circumcision invalid: Flesh which covers the greater part of the corona; and [a priest whose circumcision was so defective] is not permitted to eat terumah'; and Rabina, or it might be said, R. Jeremiah b. Abba, stated in the name of Rab: Flesh which covers the greater part of the height of the corona.³⁸

Why were they not circumcised in the wilderness? — If you wish I might say: Because of the fatigue of the journey;

(1) Lit., 'from time to time. If the child, for instance, recovered in the afternoon, circumcision may not be performed before the same hour on the afternoon of the eighth day. If this day happens to be the Passover Eve, the child is not fit for circumcision at the time of the preparation though he may be fit at the time of eating.

(2) Shab. 137a.

(3) Circumcision may be performed at any hour on the eighth day of a child's birth without any regard to the hour at which he was born.

(4) It is possible for a child to be unfit for circumcision at the time of the preparation of the Paschal lamb and yet be fit at the time of eating.

(5) On the Passover Eve.

(6) Between the preparation and the eating. At the preparation the child was still unfit for circumcision; at the eating, however, he was fit, since no period of seven days' convalescence is allowed after recovery from such a minor ailment.

(7) V. supra note 1.

(8) At the time the Paschal lamb was prepared for them by an agent. At the time of eating, however, they were free. While in prison they were unable to perform, and consequently were exempt from the duty of circumcising their child. When they were set free they came under the obligation.

(9) V. Glos.

(10) Between the preparation and the eating of the Paschal lamb.

(11) Seven days prior to the Passover Eve; while birth was completed on the Passover Eve between the time of the preparation and the time of the eating. As the protrusion of the head constitutes birth in respect of circumcision (v. Nid. 29a) the operation must be performed as soon as birth is completed.

(12) The mouth.

(13) The navel.

(14) In the embryonic state the mouth is closed and the navel, by means of which it draws sustenance, open.

(15) Nid. 30b. Since it has no means whereby to draw sustenance.

(16) Like any other child recovering from a serious illness.

(17) That the child cannot survive.

- (18) Of the water of purification (cf. Num. XIX. 2f) if he was levitically unclean. He is, thereby, enabled to eat holy food, immediately after the circumcision, no other sprinkling being required.
- (19) Who were born in the wilderness and were not circumcised until they entered Canaan (cf. Josh. V. 4ff).
- (20) To enable them to eat of the Paschal lamb. They were all levitically unclean owing to contact with the dead in the wilderness. Such persons remain unclean for seven days and, before they are allowed to eat of the Paschal lamb, must, on the third and the seventh day, be sprinkled upon with the water of purification.
- (21) Josh. IV. 19.
- (22) It could not have been performed on the eleventh, since that would not allow a period of four days (v. supra n. 3) between the first and the second sprinkling if they were to participate in the meal of the Paschal lamb which is prescribed for the fourteenth.
- (23) Lit., 'not'?
- (24) I.e., either on the tenth, when they were still uncircumcised, or earlier. In either case it follows that the sprinkling which was performed while they were still uncircumcised enabled them to eat of the Paschal lamb.
- (25) Josh. V, 10.
- (26) The Paschal lamb spoken of in the text cited.
- (27) As is permitted when the majority of the congregation is in a state of uncleanness; v. Yoma 6b.
- (28) פריעת מילה uncovering the corona of the membrum by splitting the membrane that covers it and drawing it towards its base. (12) And circumcise again (Josh. V. 2). Since a second circumcision was necessary (emphasis on 'again') it is assumed that the previous circumcisions performed in accordance with the law given to Abraham, without uncovering the corona, were made invalid in the days of Joshua.
- (29) In the wilderness . . . had not been circumcised, Josh. V, 5.
- (30) If the instruction to circumcise applied to the non-circumcised only.
- (31) Lit., 'but not'?
- (32) I.e., a second circumcision for those who were already, but not properly, circumcised.
- (33) Since the expression, 'Again', is used for the purpose of an exposition.
- (34) Josh. V, 2. As 'Again', so should 'A second time' also be expounded.
- (35) Lit., 'prevents'; unless circumcision was performed the Paschal lamb may not be eaten.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 72a

and if you prefer I might say: Because the North wind¹ did not blow upon them. For it was taught: In all the forty years during which Israel was in the wilderness the North wind did not blow upon them. What was the reason? — If you wish I might say: Because they were under divine displeasure.² And if you prefer I might say: In order that the clouds of glory³ might not be scattered.

R. Papa said: Hence, no circumcision may be performed on a cloudy day or on a day when the South wind⁴ blows; nor may one be bled⁵ on such a day. At the present time, however, since many people are in the habit of disregarding these precautions,⁶ The Lord preserveth the simple.⁷

Our Rabbis taught: In all the forty years during which Israel was in the wilderness⁸ there was not a day on which the North wind⁹ did not blow at the midnight hour; for it is said, And it came to pass at midnight, that the Lord smote all the firstborn etc.¹⁰ How is the deduction arrived at? — By this we were taught that an acceptable time¹¹ is an essential.¹²

R. Huna said: A mashuk¹³ is Pentateuchally permitted to eat terumah but has been forbidden to do so by Rabbinical ordinance, because he appears to be like one uncircumcised.

An objection was raised: The mashuk requires to be [re-] circumcised!¹⁴ — Only by Rabbinical ordinance.

But he who raised the objection on what ground did he raise it, when it was definitely stated 'requires'!¹⁵ — He misunderstood the final clause: R. Judah said, He¹⁶ should not be circumcised because such an operation is dangerous in his case.¹⁷ They said to him: 'Surely many were circumcised in the days of Ben Koziba¹⁸ and yet gave birth to sons and daughters, [such circumcision being lawful] as, in fact, it is said in Scripture, Must needs be circumcised,¹⁹ even a hundred times. And, furthermore, it is said, He hath broken My covenant,²⁰ which includes the mashuk'.²¹ What need was there for the additional text? — In case you might argue that Must needs be circumcised²² includes only the shreds which render a circumcision invalid²³ [so he added]. Come and hear, He hath broken My covenant²⁰ which includes the mashuk.²⁴ He²⁵ consequently thought that, as the Talmud²⁶ made use of a Scriptural text, the law²⁷ must be pentateuchal; but the fact is that it is only²⁸ Rabbinical, and the Scriptural text is a mere prop.

An objection was raised: A tumtum²⁹ may not eat terumah,³⁰ but his women³¹ and slaves may eat of it. A mashuk³² and one born circumcised³³ may eat of it. The hermaphrodite³⁴ may eat terumah but not holy food³⁵ while the tumtum may eat neither terumah nor holy food.³⁶ At all events, it was taught here that the mashuk and one born circumcised may eat terumah; is not this a refutation against R. Huna!³⁷ — It is indeed a refutation.³⁸

The Master said, 'A tumtum may not eat terumah, but his women³⁹ and slaves may eat of it'. By what legal act could a tumtum acquire his wives?⁴⁰ If it be suggested, by betrothing them; for it was taught. 'If a tumtum betrothed a woman, his betrothal is valid and if he was betrothed by a man his betrothal is also valid',⁴¹ it might be retorted that the validity was intended only as a restrictive measure;⁴² was it, however, intended also as a relaxation of a law?⁴³ He⁴⁴ is possibly a woman, and no woman, surely, may betroth a woman! — Abaye replied: Where his testes can be distinguished externally. Raba replied: 'What is the meaning of "his women"? — His mother'. But [is not the case of his mother] self-evident? It might have been presumed that only one capable of procreation bestows the privilege of eating terumah, but one who is incapable does not bestow it, hence we were taught [that even a tumtum may bestow the privilege].

Come and hear: A tumtum may eat neither terumah nor holy food.⁴⁵ According to Abaye, this⁴⁶ is quite correct, since the first clause speaks of the certainly non-circumcised person⁴⁷ while the final clause speaks of the doubtful one; according to Raba, however, what need was there for the mention of the tumtum in the final clause? — The meaning of⁴⁸ tumtum⁴⁹ is 'the uncircumcised'.⁵⁰ If, however, one whose status as a non-circumcised person is in doubt is not permitted to eat terumah,⁵¹ would any one who is definitely an uncircumcised person be permitted to eat it?⁵² — The final clause is an interpretation of the first.⁵³ Why may not 'a tumtum eat terumah'? Because he might have the status of an uncircumcised person,⁵⁴ and a man who is uncircumcised 'may eat neither terumah nor holy food'.

May it be assumed that this⁵⁵ is a question in dispute among Tannaim: A mashuk,⁵⁶ and⁵⁷ a proselyte whose conversion took place while he was already circumcised,⁵⁸ and a child, the proper time of whose circumcision had passed,⁵⁹ and all other circumcised persons, this means to include one who has two foreskins, may be circumcised in the daytime only. R. Eleazar b. Simeon, however, said: At the proper time⁶⁰ children may be circumcised in the daytime only; and if not at the proper time they may be circumcised both by day and by night,¹ Do they not differ on the following principle: While one Master² is of the opinion that the circumcision of a mashuk is a pentateuchal law, the other Master³ is of the opinion that the circumcision of the mashuk is only a Rabbinical ordinance?⁴ — And can you understand this?⁵ Is there any authority who maintains that the duty to circumcise a child whose proper time of circumcision had passed⁶ is only Rabbinical!⁷ But the fact is that both⁸ agree that the circumcision of a mashuk is a Rabbinical ordinance,⁹ and that the duty to circumcise a child whose proper time of circumcision had passed, is Pentateuchal. Here,¹⁰ however, their difference depends on the following principle: One Master¹¹ holds that [the conjunctive in the expression]. And in the day¹² is to be expounded;¹³ and the other Master³ is of the opinion that [the conjunctive in] And in the day¹² is not to be expounded.¹⁴ [The exposition here is of the same nature] as the following:¹⁵ When R. Johanan was once sitting [at his studies] and expounding that 'nothar¹⁶ at its proper time¹⁷ may be burned in the daytime only,¹⁸ and if not at its proper time,¹⁹ it may be burned either in the day or in the night'. R. Eleazar raised an objection: I only know that a child whose circumcision takes place on the eighth day must be circumcised in the daytime only; whence, however, is it deduced that the case of a child whose circumcision takes place on the ninth, tenth, eleventh or twelfth²⁰ is also included? Because it was expressly stated, 'And in the day';²¹ and even he²² who bases no expositions on a Waw does base his exposition on the basis of a Waw and a He!²³ The other remained silent. After he went out, R. Johanan said to Resh Lakish: I observed that the son of Pedath²⁴ was sitting and making expositions like Moses in the name of the Almighty. 'Was this his'? Resh Lakish replied. 'It is really a Baraita'. 'Where', the first asked. 'was it taught'? — 'In Torath Kohanim'.²⁵ He went out and learned it²⁶ in three days; and was engaged in making deductions and drawing conclusions from it for a period of three months.

R. Eleazar stated: The sprinkling²⁷ performed²⁸ by an uncircumcised person is valid, for his status is similar to that of a tebul yom²⁹ who, though forbidden to eat terumah, is permitted to prepare³⁰ the red heifer.³¹

The case of the tebul yom,²⁹ however, might be different, since he is also permitted to eat tithe!³² — Are we speaking of eating?³³ We speak only of touching: If a tebul yom who is forbidden to touch terumah is permitted [to occupy himself] with the red heifer,³⁰ how much more so the uncircumcised who is permitted to touch terumah!

The same [law] was also taught [elsewhere]: The sprinkling³⁴ performed³⁵ by an uncircumcised man is valid; and such an incident once happened, and the Sages declared his sprinkling to be valid.

An objection was raised: If a tumtum³⁶ performed sanctification,³⁷ his sanctification is invalid, because he [has the status of the person whose uncircumcision is a matter of] doubt, and such a person is forbidden to perform sanctification.³⁷ If an hermaphrodite,³⁸ however, performed sanctification,³⁷ his sanctification is valid. R. Judah said: Even if an hermaphrodite performed sanctification his act has no validity, because [his sex might] possibly be that of a woman, and a woman is ineligible to perform sanctification.³⁹ At all events it was taught here that the uncircumcised or the person whose uncircumcision is a matter of doubt is forbidden to perform sanctification!³⁹ R. Joseph replied: This Tanna is one of the school of R. Akiba who include the uncircumcised in the same prohibition as that of the unclean; as it was taught: R. Akiba said, 'What man soever⁴⁰ includes also the uncircumcised'.⁴¹

Raba related: I was once sitting before R. Joseph when I raised the following difficulty: Then⁴² the Tanna⁴³ should not have omitted to state.⁴⁴ 'The uncircumcised and the unclean', and one would at once suggest that the author was R. Akiba!⁴⁵ — But does he not?⁴⁶ Surely it was taught: The uncircumcised and the unclean are exempt from appearing at the Festivals!⁴⁷ — There [the case is different], because he is a repulsive person.⁴⁸

They⁴⁹ follow their own respective views. For it was taught: All⁵⁰ are permitted to perform sanctification,⁵¹ with the exception of the deaf, the imbecile and the minor. R. Judah permits in the case of the minor but regards a woman and an hermaphrodite as unfit.⁵² What is the Rabbi's reason? — Because it is written, And for the unclean they shall take of the ashes of the burning of the purification from sin,⁵³ those who are ineligible⁵⁴ for the gathering⁵⁵ are also ineligible for the sanctification,⁵⁶ but those who are eligible⁵⁷ for the gathering⁵⁵ are also eligible for the sanctification.⁵⁸ And R. Judah?⁵⁹ — He can answer you: If so,⁶⁰ Scripture should have used⁶¹ the expression 'He shall take',⁶² why then, And they shall take?⁶³ To indicate that even those who are ineligible there⁶⁴ are eligible here. If so, a woman also should be eligible!⁶⁵ Shall he put⁶⁶ but not 'Shall she put'. And the Rabbis? — Had it been written, 'He shall take'⁶⁷ and 'Shall he put'.⁶⁷ it might have been assumed that only one individual must take⁶⁸ and only one must put,⁶⁹ hence did the All Merciful write, And they shall take.⁷⁰ And had the All Merciful written, 'And they shall take' and also 'Shall they put'.⁷⁰ it might have been assumed that two must take⁶⁸ and two must put,⁶⁹ hence did the All Merciful write, And they shall take⁶⁷ and Shall he put.⁶⁷ [to indicate that the rites are duly performed] even if two take⁶⁸ and one put.⁶⁹

(1) Tosef. Shab. XVI.

(2) The first Tanna who restricts the time of the circumcision to the day only.

(3) R. Eleazar b. Simeon.

(4) Hence he permits its performance during the night also. Would then R. Huna's ruling agree with the view of one Tanna only!

(5) That the point at issue should be the one suggested.

(6) V. supra note 4.

(7) Certainly not. Being obviously a Pentateuchal law, the point at issue in the Baraita cited cannot be the one suggested.

(8) Lit., 'but, that all the world', i.e., the first Tanna and R. Eleazar b. Simeon.

(12) The Waw (and) in וּבַיּוֹם Lev. XII, 3.

(13) Since the statement, In the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised (ibid.) would have sufficiently indicated that circumcision must be performed in the daytime, the addition of the conjunction waw is regarded as an indication that even a circumcision that takes place after its proper time must be performed in the daytime only. And the case of the mashuk was, by Rabbinical ordinance, given the same force as that of the child.

(14) Nothing may be inferred from the use of the conjunctive Waw, not even the case of the child whose proper time of

- circumcision had passed, much less that of the circumcision of the mashuk, which is altogether a Rabbinical enactment. The circumcision of either may consequently be performed in the night also.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 73a

And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean,¹ [since] clean [was mentioned]² the implication must be that he is [somewhat unclean].³ Thus it was taught that a tebul yom⁴ is permitted to prepare the red heifer.

R. Shesheth was asked: Is an uncircumcised person permitted to eat tithe?⁵ Is tithe deduced from the paschal lamb in the case of circumcision⁶ as the paschal lamb is deduced from tithe in the case of the mourning of an onan,⁷ or may only the major [sanctity] be deduced from the minor but not the minor from the major [sanctity]? He replied. You have learned this: In respect of terumah and the first ripe fruits⁸ one may incur the penalties of death⁹ and a fifth;¹⁰ these furthermore are forbidden to non-priests, they are the [undisputed] property of the priest,¹¹ they are neutralized¹² in one hundred and one,¹³ and they require washing of the hands,¹⁴ and sunset,¹⁵ All these restrictions apply to terumah and bikkurim only but not to tithe.¹⁶ Now, if that were so,¹⁷ it should have been stated here, 'The uncircumcised is forbidden to eat of them, which prohibition is not applicable to tithe'!¹⁸ — He might have taught some¹⁹ and omitted others.²⁰

What else did he omit that he should have omitted this?²¹ — He omitted the following. In the final clause while it was stated: 'Some restrictions apply to tithe and the first ripe fruits, but not to terumah, since tithe and the first ripe fruits must be brought to the appointed place,²² they require confession²³ and are forbidden to an onan, and R. Simeon permits [the bikkurim to an onan]; they are,²⁴ furthermore, subject to removal;²⁵ but R. Simeon exempts them',²⁶ [the laws that] they may not be burned²⁷ even when levitically unclean,²⁸

(2) Which was unnecessary. it being self-evident that the rite of purification should be performed by a clean person.

(3) The object of the text being to indicate that though he is not clean in all respects he may nevertheless perform the rite of sprinkling.

(4) V. Glos. The tebul yom is in one respect regarded as clean, since he has already performed his ritual ablution (v. Lev. XIV. 9), while in another respect (the eating of holy food), he is still regarded as unclean until sunset.

and that the man¹ who eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged,² and that these laws do not apply to terumah, were not stated.³ This proves clearly that only some were taught and others were omitted.⁴

The Master said,⁵ 'And are forbidden to an onan, and R. Simeon permits [the bikkurim to an onan]'.⁶ Whence do they derive their views? — From the Scriptural text, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thine oil or the firstlings of thy herd⁵ etc. nor the offering of thy hand,² and a Master said that 'the offering of thy hand' refers to bikkurim;⁷ and bikkurim were compared to tithe: As tithe is forbidden to the onan so are bikkurim also forbidden to the onan. And R. Simeon?⁸ — The All Merciful called them terumah: As terumah is permitted to the onan⁹ so are bikkurim permitted to the onan.

'They are, furthermore, subject to removal; but R. Simeon permits them'. One Master¹⁰ compares [bikkurim to tithe]¹¹ and the other Master does not.

'They may not be burned when levitically unclean, and the man who eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged'. Whence is this derived? — From what was taught: R. Simeon said, Neither have I burned¹² thereof, being unclean,¹³ whether I was unclean and it was clean or I was clean and it was unclean. I do not know, however, where one was forbidden to eat it'.¹⁴ (But, surely, in relation to it, the uncleanness of the body was specifically stated: The soul that touches any such shall be unclean until the even, and shall not eat of the holy things,¹⁵ unless he bathe his flesh in waters — This is the question: Whence the prohibition [to eat it] where the thing itself is unclean?¹⁶ It was expressly stated,¹⁷ Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn¹⁸ but further on¹⁹ it was stated. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates; the unclean and the clean may eat it alike as the gazelle, and as the hart,²⁰ and at the school of R. Ishmael it was taught that the unclean and the clean may eat together even on the same table, and the same plate, and no precautions need be taken. Thus the All Merciful stated, 'That, concerning which I told you there, Thou shalt eat it within thy gates,²⁰ you may not eat here'.²¹

'That these laws do not apply to terumah'. Whence do we derive this? — R. Abbahu replied in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture stated, Neither have I burnt thereof, being unclean,²² you may not burn 'thereof', but you may burn the oil of terumah if it has become unclean.²³ Might it not be suggested: You may not burn any 'thereof'. but you may burn holy²⁴ oil that became unclean? — This, surely, may be inferred a minori ad majus: If in respect of the tithe, the sanctity of which is of a minor character, the Torah stated, Neither have I burnt thereof, being unclean,²² how much more so in respect of holy food the Sanctity of which is of a major character. If so, terumah also might be inferred a minori ad majus! — Surely 'thereof' was written. And what reason do you see?²⁵ It is logical that holy food should not be excluded, since²⁶ [the following restrictions also apply to it:] piggul,²⁷ nothar,²⁷ sacrifice, me'ilah,²⁷ kareth,²⁷ and it is also forbidden to an onan.²⁷ On the contrary; terumah should not be excluded since [to it apply the restrictions of]²⁸ death.²⁹ a fifth,³⁰ it cannot be redeemed³¹ and it is forbidden to non-priests!³² — Those³³ are more in number. And if you prefer I might say: Kareth³⁴ is regarded as being of greater importance.

'The man that eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged, and that these laws do not apply to terumah'. He is apparently³⁵ exempt only from flogging, but a prohibition³⁶ remains. Whence is this derived? — Scripture stated. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates.³⁷ only 'it'³⁸ but not any other;³⁹ and a negative precept that is derived from a positive one [has only the force of] a positive.⁴⁰

R. Ashi said.⁴¹ From the first clause also⁴² you may infer that the Tanna taught some⁴³ and omitted others,⁴⁴ since he did not state

'And they¹ apply in all² the years of the septennial cycle³ and cannot be redeemed', and that 'this does not apply to the [second] tithe'. This proves it.

Come and hear: 'If shreds⁴ which render the circumcision invalid remain, he may not eat terumah, nor the paschal lamb, nor holy food, nor tithe'. Does not tithe refer to the tithe of the corn? — No; the tithe of cattle.⁵ But is not the tithe of cattle the same as holy food?⁶ — Even on your view are we not told here of the paschal lamb and yet 'holy food' also is mentioned! — One can well understand why it was necessary to mention both the paschal lamb and holy food; for if the paschal lamb only had been stated it might have been assumed that it only is forbidden, because uncircumcision was written in Scripture in connection with the paschal lamb, but not holy food. And if holy food only had been stated it might have been assumed that what was meant by holy food was the paschal lamb.⁷ What need, however, was there for the mention here of the tithe of cattle!⁸ — [No, say,] rather, tithe refers to the first tithe; and this [teaching] is that of R. Meir who holds that the first tithe is forbidden to non-priests.⁹

Come and hear: Since R. Hiyya b. Rab of Difti has learned, 'An uncircumcised is forbidden to eat of both tithes', is not one the tithe of the corn and the other the tithe of the cattle! — Here also the first tithe was meant and the ruling is that of R. Meir.

Come and hear: 'An onan is forbidden to eat of tithe but is permitted to eat terumah, and [to engage] in the [preparation of] the red heifer;¹⁰ a tebul yom¹¹ is forbidden to eat terumah, but is permitted [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer, and to eat tithe; and he who was still short of atonement¹² is forbidden [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer, but is permitted to eat terumah and tithe'. Now, if it were so,¹³ it should have been stated, 'The uncircumcised is forbidden to eat terumah but is permitted [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer¹⁴ and to eat tithe'!¹⁵ — This represents the view of a Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who includes the uncircumcised, like the unclean, in the prohibition.¹⁶ As it was taught: Any man soever¹⁷ includes the uncircumcised.

Who is the Tanna who differs from R. Akiba?¹⁸ — It is the Tanna who [is in disagreement with] R. Joseph the Babylonian. For it was taught: The burning¹⁹ by an onan or by one who is still short of atonement is valid; but R. Joseph the Babylonian said: That of the onan is valid but that of him who is short of atonement is not valid.²⁰

R. Isaac also is of the opinion that the uncircumcised is forbidden to eat [second] tithe. For R. Isaac stated: Whence is it deduced that the uncircumcised is forbidden to eat [second] tithe? 'Thereof' was stated in respect of [the] tithe,²¹ and 'thereof' was also stated in respect of the paschal lamb;²¹ as the paschal lamb, in respect of which 'thereof' was used, is forbidden to the uncircumcised, so is [the] tithe, in respect of which 'thereof' was used, forbidden to the uncircumcised. Is it²² free for deduction? For if it is not free, it could be objected: The Paschal lamb is rightly subject to the restriction²³ since one may incur in respect of it the penalties for piggul,²⁴ nothar²⁵ and levitical uncleanness!²⁵ — It is indeed free for the deduction. Which²⁶ is free? Raba replied in the name of R. Isaac: 'Thereof' is written three times in connection with the paschal lamb.²⁷ One is required for the paschal lamb itself;²⁸ one for the analogy;²⁹ and as to the third, according to him who maintains that Scripture intended³⁰ a positive precept to follow a negative³¹ one,³² 'thereof' was written [a second time],³³ because nothar was written [a second time];³³ and according to him who maintains [that the repetition of until the morning³⁴ was intended] to allow a second morning for its burning,³⁵ 'thereof' was written [a second time],³⁶ because until the morning³⁴ had to be written [a second time]. Also, in connection with tithe, 'thereof' was written three times. One is required for its own purpose;³⁷ one is required for the deduction which R. Abbahu made in the name of R. Johanan;³⁸ and the third is required for the exposition made by Resh Lakish. For Resh Lakish stated in the name of R. Simya: Whence is it deduced that second tithe which has become levitically unclean may be used for anointing? It is said, Nor have I given thereof for the dead,³⁹ only for a dead man have I not given, but I have given for a living man in the same manner as for the dead. Now, what is it that may be equally applied to the living and to the dead? You must say that it is anointing.⁴⁰ Mar Zutra demurred: It³⁹ might be suggested to refer to the purchase for the dead of a coffin and shrouds!⁴¹ — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: 'Thereof' means of the tithe itself.⁴² R. Ashi replied: Nor have I given³⁹ must be analogous to I have not eaten,³⁹ as there⁴³ it refers to the tithe itself so here also⁴⁴ it must refer to the tithe itself. But still it⁴⁵ is free, however, in one direction only!⁴⁶ [The analogy is] quite satisfactory according to him who maintains that deduction may be made [even in such a case]. and may not be refuted.⁴⁷ According to him, however, who is of the opinion that deduction may be made but also refuted, what can be said?⁴⁸ — R. Abbahu's deduction⁴⁹ may be inferred from the text cited in the statement which R. Nahman made in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha. For R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: What was meant by the Scriptural text, And I, behold, I have given thee⁵⁰ the charge of My heave-offerings?⁵¹ Scripture speaks of two kinds of terumah. One, clean terumah, and the other, unclean terumah; and concerning these the All Merciful said, 'It shall be thine,⁵⁰ even for burning under your dish.'⁵²

AND ALL LEVITICALLY UNCLEAN PERSONS etc. Whence is this deduced? — R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Ishmael: Scripture stated, What man soever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or hath an issue etc.⁵³ Now, what is it that is equally

(1) Terumah and bikkurim.

(2) Lit., 'other', i.e., even in the third and sixth. V. next note.

- (3) And not only, like the second tithe, in the first, second, fourth and fifth years of the cycle.
- (4) Of the corona.
- (5) Which solves the question put to R. Shesheth.
- (6) Which is already mentioned.
- (7) Both were therefore necessary.
- (8) Which is included in 'holy food'. V. supra n. 2. Hence 'tithe' must mean second tithe, which solves the question put to R. Shesheth.
- (9) And owing to its sanctity it was also forbidden to the uncircumcised.
- (10) Since it is not offered on the altar, its sanctity is of a lesser degree.
- (11) V. Glos.
- (12) An unclean person the requirements of whose purification have, with the exception of the sacrifice prescribed for the unclean, been satisfied.
- (13) That the uncircumcised is permitted to eat second tithe.
- (14) As stated supra 72b.
- (15) Since this, however, was omitted it must be assumed that the omission was due to the fact that tithe is permitted to the uncircumcised!
- (16) To engage even in the preparation of the red heifer (supra 72b).
- (17) Lev. XXII, 4; lit., 'man man'.
- (18) And maintains (v. supra 72b) that the uncircumcised may deal with the red heifer.
- (19) Of the red heifer. V. Num. XIX, 5.
- (20) As the first Tanna differs from R. Joseph in respect of the man who was short of atonement, he presumably differs also in respect of the uncircumcised.
- (21) V. infra for further explanation.
- (22) The expression 'thereof' used in the analogy.
- (23) Its prohibition to the uncircumcised.
- (24) V. Glos.
- (25) Hence no analogy between it and tithe would be justified.
- (26) Of the expressions, 'thereof'.
- (27) Ex. XII, 9,10.
- (28) [In 'Ye shall not eat thereof raw' (verse 9) 'thereof' is required as otherwise it might have been assumed to refer to the unleavened bread and bitter herbs mentioned in the preceding verse (Tosaf)].
- (29) With second tithe.
- (30) By the text, Ye shall burn (that which remains) with fire (Ex. Xli, 10).
- (31) Ye shall let nothing thereof remain (ibid.).
- (32) In order to exempt the transgressor from the penalty of flogging. v. Mak. 4b.
- (33) In Ex. XII, 20., cf. previous note.
- (34) Ibid. Earlier in the text it was already stated, And ye shall let nothing thereof remain until the morning.
- (35) The morning after the first day of the Passover. V. Pes. 83b.
- (36) In Ex. XII. 10.
- (37) [The first 'thereof' to exclude the first tithe from the restriction in regard to onan (v. Glos) תום ישנים].
- (38) Permitting the burning of unclean oil of terumah for lighting purposes. V. supra 73b.
- (39) Deut. XXVI, 24.
- (40) It cannot refer to eating which is, of course, inapplicable to the dead.
- (41) And not to anointing. The deduction, consequently, would be that though unclean tithe may not be exchanged for money wherewith to buy the requirements of the dead, it being unfit as food, it may be exchanged for the purpose of buying anything for the living.
- (42) Not with the money for which it was exchanged.

applicable to all the seed¹ of Aaron? You must say that it is terumah.² But might it not be assumed to refer to the breast and the shoulder?³ — [These are] not [permitted] to [a woman] who returns.⁴ But terumah also is not permitted to a halalah!⁵ — A halalah is not regarded as of the seed of Aaron.⁶ And whence is it inferred that until he be clean⁷ means 'until sunset',⁸ perhaps it means, 'until the atonement is brought'? — This cannot be entertained. For a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael [taught] that Scripture⁷ speaks of a zab⁹ who noticed only two issues, and of a leper while under observation,¹⁰ both being cases similar to that of one who is unclean by the dead;⁷ as he who is unclean by the dead⁷ is not liable to bring an atonement so are these¹¹ such as are not liable to bring an atonement.¹² Let it be said, then, that this¹³ applies only to those who are not liable to bring an atonement, but that for those who are liable to an atonement,¹⁴ purification is incomplete until the atonement has been brought! Furthermore, in respect of what we learned, 'If he performed the prescribed ablution and came up from his bathing he may eat of the [second] tithe; after sunset he may eat terumah; and after he has brought his atonement he may also eat of the holy food',¹⁵ whence, it may also be asked, are these laws derived? — Raba replied in the name of R. Hisda: Three Scriptural texts are recorded: It is written, And shall not eat of the holy things, unless he bathe his flesh in water,¹⁶ implying if he bathed, however, he is clean. It is also written, And when the sun is down, he shall be clean, and afterwards he may eat of the holy things.¹⁷ And finally, it is written, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean.¹⁸ How, [then, are these contradictory conditions¹⁹ to be reconciled]?²⁰ The first refers to [second] tithe; the second to terumah, and the third to holy food. Might not these be reversed?²¹ It is reasonable that terumah should be subject to the greater restriction, since²² it is also subject to the restrictions of the death penalty,²³ the fifth,²⁴ it cannot be redeemed,²⁵ and is also forbidden to the non-priest.²⁶ On the contrary; [second] tithe might be regarded as subject to the greater restriction, since it²⁷ has to be brought to the appointed place,²⁸ requires confession,²⁹ is forbidden to an onan, must not be burned³⁰ [even] when unclean, the penalty of flogging is incurred for eating it when it is unclean,³¹ and it is also subject to the law of removal!³² — The penalty of death, nevertheless, is of the greatest severity. Raba said: Apart from the fact that the death penalty is of the greatest severity it could not be said so;³³ for Scripture stated, soul.³⁴ Now, what is it that is equally [permitted] to every soul? You must admit that it is tithe.³⁵ Still, this³⁶ might apply only to one who is not liable to bring an atonement;³⁷ but where a man is liable to an atonement it might be said that [purification is not complete] until he has brought the atonement! — Abaye replied: Two Scriptural texts are recorded in the case of a woman in childbirth.³⁸ It is written, Until the days of her purification be fulfilled,³⁹ as soon as her days are fulfilled she is clean; and it is also written, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean,⁴⁰ how, [then, are the two to be reconciled]?⁴¹ The former applies to terumah, the latter to holy food.⁴²

But might not these be reversed?⁴³ — It stands to reason that holy food should be subject to the greater restriction,⁴⁴ since it is also subject to the restrictions of⁴⁵ piggul⁴⁶ nothar,⁴⁶ sacrifice, me'ilah,⁴⁶ kareth,⁴⁶ and is also forbidden to an onan.⁴⁶ On the contrary, terumah should be subject to the greater restriction,⁴⁷ since it is also subject to the restrictions⁴⁸ of⁴⁵ the death penalty,⁴⁹ the fifth,⁵⁰ it cannot be redeemed,⁵¹ and is also forbidden to the non-priest!⁵² — Those⁵³ are more in number.

Raba said: Apart from the fact that those⁵³ are more in number this⁵⁴ could not be maintained. For Scripture stated, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean,⁵⁵ which implies that [until that moment] she was unclean. Now, were it to be assumed that this text⁵⁶ speaks of holy food,⁵⁷ the text, And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten⁵⁸ should apply to it!⁵⁹ It must, therefore, be concluded that the text⁶⁰ speaks of terumah.

R. Shisha son of R. Idi demurred: How could it be said that the law of terumah was prescribed in this text?⁶⁰ Surely it was taught: [From the text]. Speak unto the children of Israel.⁶¹ one would only learn [that these laws⁶² are applicable to] the children of Israel; whence, however, is one to infer that they also apply to a proselyte or an emancipated slave? Scripture consequently stated,⁶³ Woman.⁶⁴ Now, if it were to be assumed that the text speaks of terumah, are a proselyte and an emancipated slave, [it may be asked,] permitted to eat terumah!⁶⁵ Said Raba: But does it⁶⁶ not?⁶⁷

Surely it is written,¹ She shall touch no hallowed thing² [which] includes terumah!³ The fact, however, is that Scripture enumerated a number of distinct subjects.⁴ Now what need was there for three distinct texts⁵ in respect of terumah! — They are all required. For were terumah to be deduced from Until he be clean,⁶ it would not be known whereby,⁷ hence did the All Merciful write, And when the sun is down, he shall be clean.⁸ And if the All Merciful had written only And when the sun is down,⁸ it might have been assumed [to apply to such a person] as is not liable to bring a sacrifice, but in the case of one who is liable it might have been presumed that cleanness is not effected before he has brought his atonement, hence the All Merciful wrote, Until. . . be fulfilled.⁹ And had the All Merciful written only, Until . . . be fulfilled,¹⁰ it might have been presumed that cleanness may be effected even without ablution, hence did the All Merciful write, Until he be clean.⁶

According. however, to that Tanna who disagrees with the Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael, maintaining that the text⁶ speaks of a zab who had three attacks of gonorrhoea and of a confirmed leper,¹¹ and that the deduction from Until he be clean⁶ is 'until he brings his atonement,'¹² what need was there for two texts¹³ in respect of holy food? — [They are both] required. For had the All Merciful written about the woman after childbirth only,¹⁴ the law¹⁵ might have been said to apply to her only because her uncleanness is of long duration,¹⁶ but not to a zab. And had the All Merciful written the law¹⁷ in connection with a zab only,¹⁸ it might have been assumed to apply to him only since his uncleanness does not automatically cease,¹⁹ but not to a woman after childbirth.²⁰ [Hence both texts were] necessary.

What was the need²¹ for the text, It must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even?²² — R. Zera replied: In respect of touch,²³ as it was taught: And it shall be unclean²⁴ might have been taken to refer to all cases,²⁵ hence it was stated, Then shall it be clean.²⁶ And if only Then shall it be clean²⁶ had been stated it might have been assumed to refer to all cases,²⁷ hence it was stated, And it shall be unclean.²⁸ How then [are the two to be reconciled]? The one²⁹ refers to [second] tithe and the other³⁰ to terumah. But might not the deduction be reversed? — It stands to reason that as the eating of terumah is more restricted than the eating of tithe, so shall the touching of terumah be more restricted than the touching of tithe.

If you prefer I might say that the prohibition against the touching of terumah³¹ is deduced from the following. It was taught:³² She shall touch no hallowed thing,³³ is a warning against its consumption.³⁴ Perhaps it is not so, but against touching it? It was stated, She shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary;³³ the hallowed thing is thus compared to the sanctuary; as [an offence against] the sanctuary involves loss of life,³⁵ so [must the offence against] the hallowed thing be such as involves loss of life, while in respect of touch no loss of life is involved; and the reason [why eating] was expressed by a term denoting touch is to indicate that touching and eating are equally [forbidden].³⁶

[A PRIEST WHO IS] WOUNDED IN HIS STONES etc. Who is it that taught: A woman subject to a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation³⁷ may eat terumah?³⁸ — R. Eleazar replied: This question is the subject of a dispute, and the ruling here is that of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon.³⁹ R. Johanan said: [The ruling here] may even be that of R. Meir,³⁹ the circumstances here being different, since the woman has already been eating.⁴⁰ And R. Eleazar? — The argument, 'since she has already been eating' cannot be entertained; for should you not admit this,⁴¹ a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest and whose husband subsequently died, should also be permitted to eat terumah since she has already been eating it.⁴² And R. Johanan? — There,⁴³ his kinyan had completely lapsed;⁴⁴ here, however, his kinyan did not lapse.⁴⁵

WHAT IS TERMED A PEZU'A? Our Rabbis taught: What is termed a pezu'a dakkah? A man both of whose stones were wounded or even only one of them; even though they were only punctured, crushed, or simply defective. Said R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka: I heard from the mouth of the Sages at the Vineyard⁴⁶ at Jabneh that one having only one stone is a natural born eunuch⁴⁷ and is, therefore, a fit person. How could it be said that such a person is a natural born eunuch!⁴⁸ — Say rather, he is like a natural born eunuch and is, therefore, fit.⁴⁹

Is [a man whose stones are] punctured incapable of procreation? Surely, a man once climbed up a palm tree and a thorn pierced his stones, [his semen] issued like a thread of pus, and, [despite the accident], he begat children! — In that case, as a matter of fact, Samuel sent word to Rab, telling him, 'Institute enquiries respecting the parentage of his children'.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: A man whose stones have been injured by a supernatural agency¹ is regarded as a fit person.² Said Raba: This is the reason why the Scriptural text reads, Who is wounded³ and not 'the wounded'.⁴

In a Baraita it was taught: It was said in Scripture. He who is wounded . . . shall not enter³ and it was also said, A bastard shall not enter,⁵ as the latter is the result of human action, so is the former the result of human action.⁶

Raba stated: Wounded³ applies to all,⁷ crushed³ applies to all,⁷ and cut off⁸ applies to all.⁹ 'Wounded applies to all': Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords of the stones were injured. 'Crushed applies to all': Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords were crushed. 'Cut off applies to all': Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords were cut off.

A certain Rabbi asked Raba: Whence is it inferred that the expression pezu'a dakkah⁸ refers to an injury in the privy parts; might it not be said to refer to the head? The other replied: As no number of generations is mentioned,¹⁰ it may be inferred that the reference is to the privy parts.¹¹ But is it not possible that the reason why no number of generations is given in this case is because only he himself¹² is forbidden,¹³ while his son and the son of his son are permitted! — [This must be] similar to the case of him whose membrum is cut off; as the latter involves the privy parts, so must the former involve those parts.

And whence is it inferred that the injury of the keruth shafekah¹⁴ himself involves his privy parts? Might it not be one involving his lips!¹⁵ — Shafekah¹⁶ is written, implying, 'at the spot where it discharges',¹⁷ But might it not refer to one's nose? — It is not written, '[Cut] at the organ that discharges', but 'a cut organ that discharges'; thus implying that organ which in consequence of a cut discharges, and in the absence of a cut does not discharge but flows out. This excludes the nose which in either case¹⁸ emits a discharge.¹⁹

In a Baraita it was taught: It was said in Scripture. He who is wounded in his stones shall not enter,⁸ and it was also said. A bastard shall not enter,²⁰ as the latter refers to the privy parts, so does the former refer to the privy parts.

In a case where a puncture beginning below the corona terminated²¹ at the other end of it above the corona, R. Hiyya b. Abba desired to declare the sufferer as fit.²² Said R. Assi to him: Thus ruled R. Joshua b. Levi, '[A perforation of] any size in the corona constitutes a bar [against fitness]'.

IF, HOWEVER, ANY PART OF THE CORONA REMAINED etc. Rabina, while sitting [at his studies], raised the following question: Must the HAIR'S BREADTH of which they spoke extend over the entire circumference thereof or only over its greater part? — ‘The HAIR'S BREADTH’, said Rabbah²³ Tosfa'ah to Rabina, must extend over the greater part of it and towards its upper section'.²⁴

R. Huna ruled: If it²⁵ is cut away like a reed pen it constitutes no disqualification; if like a gutter²⁶ it causes disqualification. For in the latter case the air penetrates;²⁷ in the former it does not. R. Hisda, however, ruled: [If the cut was] in the shape of a gutter no disqualification is constituted; if it had the shape of a reed pen disqualification is constituted. For in the first case friction may be produced; in the latter it cannot.

Raba said: It is reasonable to adopt the view of R. Huna that in the latter case the air penetrates while in the former it does not. For in regard to friction it is only like a bung in a cask.²⁸

Said Rabina to Meremar: Thus said Mar Zutra in the name of R. Papa, ‘The law is that no disqualification is constituted whether the corona was cut away like a reed pen or like a gutter. He raised, however, the question. [whether such a cut must be] below the corona or may even be above it?²⁴ — It is obvious that it may even be above it; for were it to be below the corona, the man would be regarded as fit even if the entire membrum there had been cut off. Rabina, however,²⁹ only desired to test Meremar.

Such an incident³⁰ once occurred at Matha Mehasia, and R. Ashi arranged for the corona to be cut into the shape of a reed pen, and then declared the man to be fit. It once happened at Pumbeditha that a man had his semen duct blocked, and the discharge of the semen made its way through the urinal duct. R. Bibi b. Abaye intended to declare the man fit. R. Papi, however, said to him, ‘Because you are yourselves frail beings you speak frail words;¹ through its proper duct it fertilizes but when not passing through its proper duct it does not fertilize.'

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: If it had a small perforation which was closed up, the man is deemed to be unfit if the wound re-opens when semen is emitted, but if it does not re-open the man is regarded as fit.

In respect of this ruling Raba raised the question: Where? If the perforation is below the corona,² [the man should remain fit] even if it were cut off! — It means, in the corona itself. So it was also stated elsewhere: R. Mari b. Mar said in the name of Mar Ukba in the name of Samuel: If a hole that has been made in the corona itself is closed, the man is disqualified if it re-opens when semen is emitted; but if it does not [re-open the man is deemed to be] fit.

Raba the son of Rabbah sent to R. Joseph: Will our Master instruct us how to proceed.³ The other replied: Warm barley bread is procured, and placed upon the man's anus. Thereby the flow of semen sets in, and the effect can be observed. Said Abaye: Is everybody like our father Jacob concerning whom it is written, My might, and the first-fruits of my strength,⁴ because he never before experienced the emission of semen!⁵ — No, said Abaye, coloured garments⁶ are dangled before him.⁷ Said Raba: Is everybody then like Barzillai the Gileadite!⁸ — In fact it is obvious that the original answer is to be maintained.

Our Rabbis taught: If i⁹ was punctured [the man is regarded as] unfit, because the flow is sluggish.¹⁰ If it was closed up [he is deemed to be] fit, because he is then capable of production. And this is a case where the unfit may return to his former state of fitness. What does the expression 'this' exclude? — It excludes the case where a membrane was formed on the lungs in consequence of a wound; since such cannot be regarded as a proper membrane.¹¹

R. Idi b. Abin sent the following question to Abaye: How are we to proceed?¹² — A grain of barley is to be procured wherewith the spot¹³ is lacerated.¹⁴ Tallow is rubbed in, and a big ant, procured for the purpose, is allowed to bite in, and its head is severed.¹⁵ It must be a grain of barley; an iron instrument would cause inflammation. This procedure, furthermore, applies only to a small perforation; a large one would peel off.

Rabbah son of R. Huna stated: A man who urinates at two points is an unfit person.¹⁶

Said Raba: The law is in agreement neither with the view of the son nor with that of the father. As to the son, there is the statement just mentioned. As to the father? — Since R. Huna said: Women who practise lewdness with one another are disqualified from marrying a priest.¹⁷ And even according to R. Eleazar, who stated that an unmarried man who cohabited with an unmarried woman with no matrimonial intention renders her thereby a harlot, this disqualification ensues only in the case of a man;¹⁸ but when it is that of a woman¹⁹ the action is regarded as mere obscenity.

THEY ARE ONLY FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY,²⁰ AS IT IS SAID IN SCRIPTURE, HE THAT IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES OR HATH HIS PRIVY MEMBRUM CUT OFF SHALL NOT ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY OF THE LORD.²¹

GEMARA. R. Shesheth was asked: May a priest who is wounded in his stones marry a proselyte or an emancipated slave;²² does he²³ remain in his state of holiness and is consequently forbidden²⁴ or does he not remain in his state of holiness and is consequently permitted?²⁴ — R. Shesheth replied: You have learned this [law in the following]. ‘An Israelite who is wounded in his stones is permitted to marry a nethinah’.²⁵ Now, were it to be assumed that he²⁶ retains his holiness, the text, Neither shalt thou make marriages with them²⁷ should be applicable here.²⁸ Said Raba: Is the law there²⁹ due at all to sanctity or non-sanctity? [It is merely due to] the possibility that he³⁰ might beget a child who³¹ would proceed to worship idols. This, then, is applicable only when they³² are still idol worshippers. When, however, they are converted, they are undoubtedly permitted,³³ and it was only the Rabbis who placed them³⁴ under a prohibition as a preventive measure.³⁵ But such a preventive measure was instituted by the Rabbis in respect of those only who are capable of procreation, not in respect of those who are incapable of procreation.³⁶

Now, then,³⁷ a bastard also, since he is capable of procreation,³⁸ should also be forbidden,³⁹ while in fact, we have learned, ‘Bastards and nethinim may intermarry with one another’!⁴⁰ — In fact [this is the explanation:] the Rabbis instituted a preventive measure only in the case of the fit but not in that of the unfit.⁴¹

Subsequently Raba stated: What I said⁴² is of no consequence. For while they are still idolaters their marriages are invalid; only when they are converted are their marriages valid.⁴³

R. Joseph raised an objection: And Solomon became allied to Pharaoh King of Egypt by marriage, and took Pharaoh's daughter!⁴⁴ — He caused her to be converted. But, surely, no proselytes were accepted either in the days of David or in the days of Solomon!⁴⁵ — Was there any reason for it⁴⁶ but [that the motive of the proselytes might be the benefits] of the royal table?

(1) מוֹלִיתָא = מוֹלָאִי ‘frail things’, applied to the speaker's clan as well as to his rulings. דָּאֲתוּ, ‘because you’. מוֹלָאִי may also mean ‘short lived people’ and דָּאֲתוּ according to Bah, should read דָּאֲתִיתוּ מוֹלָאִי משום דָּאֲתִיתוּ מוֹלָאִי ‘because you are descendants of short lived people’. R. Bibi was a descendant of the house of Eli who were condemned to die young (v. I Sam. II, 32f). The expression may also, like a similar root in Arabic, bear the meaning of ‘foolishness’. (Cf. B.B. Sonc. ed. p. 582, n. 6).

(2) Away from the body.

(3) With the test, when it is desired to ascertain whether the semen will re-open a closed up perforation.

(5) Other people are not so saintly. Why then should the elaborate test described be necessary in ordinary cases?

(6) Peculiar to women.

(7) Exciting his passions and thus causing a discharge.

(8) Known for his indulgence in carnal gratification (v. Shab. 152a).

(9) The duct of the semen.

(12) In healing a perforated membrum.

(13) Round the perforation.

(14) The shreds thus formed ultimately join and aid in closing up the perforation.

(15) Thus remaining in the cavity and assisting in the closing up and healing.

- (27) Deut. VII, 3.
- (28) How, then, is an Israelite permitted to marry a nethinah! Since, however, the law does permit him to marry such a woman it is obvious that a disabled man loses his sanctity. As the disabled Israelite loses his sanctity so does the disabled priest lose his.

- (35) V. infra 78b.
- (36) This is the reason why a disabled Israelite is permitted to marry a nethinah. No inference, therefore, may be drawn from this in respect of a disabled priest.
- (37) Since in respect of those who are capable of procreation the Rabbis did institute a preventive measure.

- (43) Deut. VII, 3, must consequently refer to proselytes, the prohibition being due to the Israelite's sanctity. As the nethinah was not forbidden to the disabled Israelite it follows that a disabled man, be he priest or Israelite, loses his sanctity; as at first suggested supra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 76b

Such a woman¹ obviously was in no need of it.² But let the inference³ be drawn from the fact that she¹ was an Egyptian of the first generation!⁴ And were you to reply that those⁵ had already departed, and these⁶ are others;⁷ surely, it may be pointed out, it was taught: R. Judah stated, 'Menjamin, an Egyptian proselyte, was one of my colleagues among the disciples of R. Akiba, and he told me: I am an Egyptian of the first generation and married an Egyptian woman of the first generation; I shall arrange for my son to marry an Egyptian of the second generation in order that my grandson may be enabled to enter into the congregation of Israel!'⁸ R. Papa replied: Are we to take our directions from Solomon! Solomon did not marry at all,⁹ for it is written, Of the nations concerning which the Lord said unto the Children of Israel: 'Ye shall not go among them, neither shall they come among you; for surely they will turn away your heart after their gods'; Solomon did cleave unto them in love.¹⁰ The expression. And he become allied. . . in marriage,¹¹ however, presents a difficulty!¹² — On account of his excessive love for her. Scripture regards him as if he had become allied by marriage to her. Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Surely we learned A MAN WHO IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES, AND ONE WHOSE MEMBRUM VIRILE IS CUT OFF, ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY A PROSELYTE OR AN EMANCIPATED SLAVE, [from which it follows] that they are forbidden to marry a nethinah!¹³ — The other replied: According to your view,¹⁴ read the final clause, THEY ARE ONLY FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY, [from which it follows] that they are permitted to marry a nethinah! But [the fact is that] no inference may be drawn from this Mishnah.

MISHNAH. AN AMMONITE AND A MOABITE ARE FORBIDDEN¹⁵ AND THEIR PROHIBITION IS FOR EVER¹⁶, THEIR WOMEN, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED AT ONCE.¹⁷ AN EGYPTIAN AND AN EDOMITE ARE FORBIDDEN¹⁸ ONLY UNTIL THE THIRD GENERATION.¹⁹ WHETHER THEY ARE MALES OR FEMALES. R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, PERMITS THEIR WOMEN FORTHWITH.¹⁷ SAID R. SIMEON: THIS LAW²⁰ MIGHT BE INFERRED A MINORI AD MAJUS: IF WHERE THE MALES ARE FORBIDDEN FOR ALL TIME²¹ THE FEMALES ARE PERMITTED FORTHWITH,²² HOW MUCH MORE SHOULD THE FEMALES BE PERMITTED FORTHWITH WHERE THE MALES ARE FORBIDDEN UNTIL THE THIRD GENERATION ONLY.²³ THEY REPLIED: IF THIS²⁰ IS AN HALACHAH,²⁴ WE SHALL ACCEPT IT; BUT IF IT IS ONLY AN INFERENCE,²⁵ AN OBJECTION CAN BE POINTED OUT. HE REPLIED: NOT SO.²⁶ [BUT IN FACT] IT IS AN HALACHAH THAT I AM REPORTING.

GEMARA. Whence are these laws inferred? — R. Johanan replied: Scripture stated, And when Saul saw David go forth against the Philistine, he said into Abner, the captain of the host: ‘Abner, whose son is this youth?’ And Abner said: ‘As thy soul liveth, O King, I cannot tell’.²⁷ But did he²⁸ not know him? Surely it is written, And he loved him greatly; and he became his armour bearer!²⁹ — He rather made the inquiry concerning his father. But did he not know his father? Surely it is written, And the man was an old man in the days of Saul, stricken in years among them;³⁰ and Rab or, it might be said, R. Abba, stated that this referred to the father of David, Jesse. who came in with an army³¹ and went out with an army!³¹ — It is this that Saul meant: Whether he descended from Perez,³² or from Zerah.³³ If he descended from Perez he would be king, for a king breaks³⁴ for himself a way and no one can hinder him. If, however, he is descended from Zerah he would only be an important man.³⁵ What is the reason why he gave instructions that enquiry be made concerning him? — Because it is written, And Saul clad David with his apparel.³⁶ being of the same size as his,³⁷ and about Saul it is written, From his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people.³⁸ Doeg the Edomite then said to him,³⁹ ‘Instead of enquiring whether he is fit to be king or not, enquire rather whether he is permitted to enter the assembly or not!’ ‘What is the reason’?⁴⁰ ‘Because he is descended from Ruth the Moabitess’. Said Abner to him,⁴¹ ‘We learned: An Ammonite,⁴² but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite,⁴² but not a Moabitess!⁴³ But in that case⁴⁴ a bastard⁴⁵ would’ imply: But not a female bastard?’ — ‘It is written mamzer [Which implies] anyone objectionable’.⁴⁶ ‘Does then⁴⁷ Egyptian⁴⁸ exclude the Egyptian woman’? — ‘Here⁴⁹ it is different, since the reason for the Scriptural text is explicitly stated: Because they met you not with bread and with water;⁵⁰ it is customary for a man to meet [wayfarers]; It is not, however, customary for a woman to meet [them]’.⁵¹

‘The men should have met the men and the women the women!’

He⁵² remained silent, Thereupon. the King said.⁵³ ‘Inquire thou whose son the stripling is’.⁵⁴ Elsewhere he calls him youth,⁵⁵ and here⁵⁴ he calls him, stripling!⁵⁶ — It is this that he implied, ‘You have overlooked⁵⁷ an halachah,’ go and enquire at the college!’ On enquiry, he was told: An Ammonite,⁵⁸ but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite,⁵⁸ but not a Moabitess.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 77a

As, however, Doeg submitted to them all those objections¹ and they eventually remained silent, he desired to make a public announcement against him.² Presently [an incident occurred]: Now Amasa was the son of a man, whose name was Ithna the Israelite, that went in to Abigail³ the daughter of Nahash,⁴ but elsewhere it is written, Jether the Ishmaelite!⁵ This teaches, Raba explained, that he girded on his sword like an Ishmaelite and exclaimed, 'Whosoever will not obey the following halachah will be stabbed with the sword; I have this tradition from the Beth din of Samuel the Ramathite: An Ammonite but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite, but not a Moabitess'!⁶ Could he, however, be trusted?⁷ Surely R. Abba stated in the name of Rab: Whenever a learned man gives directions⁸ on a point of law, and such a point comes up [for a practical decision], he is obeyed if his statement was made⁹ before the event;¹⁰ but if it was not so made he is not obeyed! Here the case was different, since Samuel and his Beth din were still living.¹¹

The difficulty,¹² however, still remains! — The following¹³ interpretation was given: All glorious is the king's daughter within.¹⁴ In the West¹⁵ it was explained. others quote it in the name of R. Isaac: Scripture said, And they said unto him: 'Where is Sarah thy wife?' etc.¹⁶

The question¹⁷ is a matter in dispute between Tannaim: An Ammonite,¹⁸ but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite,¹⁸ but not a Moabitess. So R. Judah. R. Simeon, however, said: Because they met you not with bread and with water;¹⁹ it is customary for a man to meet etc.²⁰

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by, Thou hast loosed my bonds!²¹ David said to the Holy One, blessed be He, 'O Master of the world! Two bonds were fastened on me,²² and you loosed them: Ruth the Moabitess²³ and Naamah the Ammonitess.²⁴

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by the Scriptural text, Many things hast Thou done, O Lord my God, even Thy wondrous works, and Thy thoughts toward us?²⁵ It is not written, 'toward me', but toward us. This teaches that Rehoboam²⁶ sat on the lap of David when the latter said to him. 'Those two Scriptural verses²⁷ were said concerning me and you.'²⁸

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by the Scriptural text, Then said I: 'Lo, I am come with the roll of a book which is prescribed for me'?²⁹ David said,³⁰ 'I thought I have come³¹ only now; but I did not know that in the Roll of the Book³² it was already³³ written about me'. For there it is written, That are found,³⁴ and here it is written. I have found³⁵ David My servant; with My holy oil have I anointed him.³⁶

'Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan: The daughter of an Ammonite proselyte³⁷ is eligible to marry a priest. Said Raba b. 'Ulla to 'Ulla: In accordance with [whose view is your statement made]? If in accordance with that of R. Judah, he surely had stated that the daughter of a male proselyte is like the daughter of a male halal!³⁸ And if in accordance with the view of R. Jose, your statement is self-evident, for surely he had stated: Even where a male proselyte had married a female proselyte his daughter is eligible to marry a priest!³⁹ And were you to reply that this⁴⁰ applies to such as are fit to enter the assembly⁴¹ but not to this man who⁴² is not fit to enter the assembly⁴³ whence [it may be asked] is this distinction [inferred]? — It is inferred from the case of a High Priest who married a widow.⁴⁴ [But it may be objected] the marriage between a High Priest and a widow is different, since his cohabitation constitutes a transgression!⁴⁵ — [Then the case of the] halal proves it?⁴⁶ [But it may be objected that] a halal is different since his formation was in sin!⁴⁷ — [Then the case of the] High Priest⁴⁸ proves it; and thus the argument will go round,⁴⁹ though the aspect of the one is unlike that of the other and the aspect of the other is unlike that of the first, their common characteristic is that either of them is unlike the majority of the assembly⁵⁰ and his daughter⁵¹ is ineligible,⁵² so here also since he⁵³ is unlike the majority of the assembly,⁵⁴ his daughter should be ineligible.⁵² [But it may again be objected] their common characteristic⁵⁵ is different, since it also involves an aspect of sin!⁵⁶ Did you possibly⁵⁷ speak of an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite,⁵⁸ [informing us that], though his cohabitation is an act of transgression, his daughter is nevertheless eligible? — The other replied: Yes; for when Rabin came⁵⁹ he reported in the name of R. Johanan on the daughter of an Ammonite proselyte⁶⁰ and the daughter of an Egyptian of the second generation⁶⁰ that R. Johanan declared her eligible⁶¹ while Resh Lakish maintained that she was ineligible.⁶¹

‘Resh Lakish maintained that she was ineligible’, for he infers this case from that of a High Priest who married a widow. ‘R. Johanan declared her eligible’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 77b

as R. Zakkai recited¹ in the presence of R. Johanan, '[The expression,] But a virgin of his own people shall he take to wife,² includes a woman who is fundamentally a proselyte³ who is eligible to marry a priest', and the other said to him, 'I learn: ["Since. instead of] 'His people'. Of his people [was written]. a virgin who descended from two peoples⁴ is also included", and you mention only a fundamental proselyte and no other!'] Now. what is meant by 'two peoples'? If it be suggested that it refers to the case of an Ammonite who married an Ammonitess. and that these are described as of 'two peoples' because the males are forbidden and the females are permitted, such a case [it may be objected] is the same as that of a fundamental proselyte! Consequently it must refer to an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite.⁵

Others say: He said to him,⁶ 'I learn: ["Since, instead of] 'His people'. Of his people² [was written], a virgin who is descended from two peoples⁷ and from a people consisting of two groups of people⁸ is included", and you mention only a fundamental proselyte and no other!'⁹

According to this latter version, however,¹⁰ whence is it inferred that the daughter of an Egyptian of the second generation¹¹ is eligible to marry a priest? And should you suggest that this might be inferred from the case of an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite, [it may be objected that] the case of the Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite is different since the Ammonite females are eligible.¹² — An Egyptian of the second generation who married an Egyptian woman of the second generation might prove it.¹³ But [it may be objected that the case] of an Egyptian of the second generation who married an Egyptian woman of the second generation is different since his cohabitation constitutes no transgression? — An Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite might prove it,¹⁴ and thus the argument would go round etc.¹⁵

Said R. Joseph: This¹⁶ then it is that I heard Rab Judah expounding on 'His people. Of his people' and I did not [at the time] understand what he meant.¹⁷

When R. Samuel b. Judah came, he stated: Thus he¹⁸ recited in his¹⁹ presence: An Ammonite woman is eligible;²⁰ her son that is born from an Ammonite is ineligible; and her daughter that is born from an Ammonite is eligible. This, however, applies only to an Ammonite and an Ammonitess who were converted; but her daughter that was born from an Ammonite is ineligible. [On hearing this] the other said to him, 'Go recite this outside. For your statement that "an Ammonite woman is eligible" [is quite acceptable, since] Ammonite²¹ excludes the Ammonitess. That "her son that is born from an Ammonite is ineligible" [is also correct] since he is in fact an Ammonite. In what respect, however, is "her daughter that was born from an Ammonite eligible"? If in respect of entering the assembly, is there, now that her mother is eligible, any need to mention her! The eligibility must consequently be in respect of marrying a priest. [But then what of the statement], "this, however, applies only to an Ammonite and an Ammonitess who were converted; but her daughter that was born from an Ammonite is ineligible"? What is meant by "her daughter that was born of an Ammonite"? If it be suggested that it refers to an Ammonite who married an Ammonitess,²² then this is the same case as that of a fundamental proselyte!²³ Consequently it must refer to an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite'.²⁴ [Concerning this] he told him. 'Go recite this outside'.²⁵

AN EGYPTIAN AND AN EDOMITE ARE FORBIDDEN ONLY etc. What is the OBJECTION?²⁶ — Raba b. Bar Hana replied in the name of R. Johanan: Because it may be said that the case of forbidden relatives proves it,²⁷ since in respect of them the prohibition extends to the third generation only²⁸ [and is nevertheless applicable to] both males and females.²⁹ [But can it not be argued that the case] of forbidden relatives is different.³⁰ since in their case the penalty of kareth is involved?³¹ — [The case of the] bastard³² proves it. [But can it not be suggested that the case] of the bastard is different³³ since he is forever ineligible to enter the congregation?³⁴ — [The case of] forbidden relatives³⁵ proves it. Thus the argument could go round.³⁶ The aspects of one are unlike those of the other and the aspects of the other are unlike those of the first. Their common characteristic, however, is that both males and females are equally forbidden; so might one also include the Egyptian man and the Egyptian woman so that in their case also both males and females should be equally forbidden.³⁷ This common characteristic, however, [it may be retorted,] is different.³³ since in one respect it also involves kareth.³⁸ And the Rabbis?³⁹ They infer it⁴⁰ from the halal⁴¹ who is the offspring of a union between those who through it, are guilty of transgressing a positive commandment;⁴² and in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.⁴³ Then what is meant by, NOT SO?⁴⁴ — It is this that he said to them: As far as I am concerned, I do not accept the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob;⁴⁵ but according to you, since your view is that of R. Eliezer b. Jacob,⁴⁶ [my reply is that] IT IS AN HALACHAH THAT I AM REPORTING.⁴⁷

It was taught: R. Simeon said to them,⁴⁸ 'I am reporting an halachah and, moreover, a Scriptural text supports my view, [it having been written] sons⁴⁹ but not daughters'.

Our Rabbis taught: Sons,⁴⁹ but not daughters; so R. Simeon. R. Judah, however, said: Behold it is said in Scripture. The sons of the third generation that are born unto them;⁵⁰ Scripture has made them dependent on birth.⁵¹

R. Johanan said: Had not R. Judah declared, 'Scripture made them dependent on birth',⁵² he would not have found his hands and feet at the house of study.⁵³ For as a Master said that a congregation of proselytes is also called an assembly.⁵⁴

(1) I.e., from this statement it is deduced what was R. Johanan's view.

(2) Lev. XXI, 14.

(3) Or 'a proselyte of her own status' (Jast.). who was a proselyte from her birth, i.e., when her father and mother were converted after their marriage and before her birth. Where an Ammonite proselyte marries the daughter of an Israelite, the offspring of such a union is not fundamentally a proselyte and is ineligible to marry a priest since the union was a forbidden one.

(4) This is explained presently

(5) Thus it is proved (v. supra n. 4) that, in the opinion of R. Johanan, such a case is eligible.

(6) R. Johanan to R. Zakkai.

(7) From the daughter of an Israelite who married an Ammonite proselyte.

(8) I.e., whose father is the Ammonite proselyte, a descendant of a people whose males are forbidden and whose females are permitted.

(9) According to this version, unlike the former where it was arrived at by inference. R. Johanan's view is explicitly stated.

(10) Since the case of the Ammonite only was mentioned. (Cf. supra n. 2).

(11) Who married the daughter of an Israelite and thus contracted a forbidden union.

(12) While the Egyptian females, like the man, are forbidden for three generations.

(13) His daughter is permitted since she belongs to the third generation, although she also belongs to the Egyptian people whose males and females are equally forbidden. As this latter restriction is no bar in this case it should form no bar in the case of an Egyptian of the second generation who married the daughter of an Israelite.

(14) His daughter is eligible though his marriage constitutes a transgression.

(15) Continued as supra 77a.

(16) The ruling permitting the daughter of an Ammonite proselyte who married the daughter of an Israelite.

(17) R. Joseph, as a result of a serious illness, lost his memory and only dimly recollected some of the rulings and expositions of his teachers.

(18) R. Zakkai. V. supra.

(19) R. Johanan's.

(20) This is explained presently.

(21) Deut. XXIII, 4.

(22) Who were converted prior to the birth of their daughter.

(23) Who, as stated in the first clause, is eligible!

(24) The daughter being ineligible because of the forbidden marriage of her parents.

(25) In such a case also the daughter is eligible as deduced supra from the expression, Of his people (Lev. XXI. 14) instead of 'his people'.

(26) That can be advanced, according to the Rabbis, against R. Simeon's argument in our Mishnah.

(27) That R. Simeon's argument is untenable.

(28) Both in the ascending and the descending line.

(29) Similarly in the case of the Egyptian and the Edomite.

(30) I.e., it is more restricted than that of marriage with an Egyptian etc.

(31) Since they are subject to the one restriction (kareth) they are also subject to the other (equal prohibition of males and females). The case of the Egyptian and the Edomite, however, which does not involve kareth might not include the females either!

(32) Cohabitation with whom is not subject to the penalty of kareth, and both males and females are nevertheless equally subject to the prohibition.

(33) I.e., it is more restricted than that of marriage with an Egyptian etc.

(34) As he is subject to this restriction he is also subject to the other (cf. supra n. 1).

(35) Who are only forbidden to intermarry with each other, but are severally permitted to all the other members of the congregation.

(36) Should objection be raised against the case of the forbidden relatives, that of the bastard could be adduced as proof; and should objection be raised against that of the bastard, that of the forbidden relatives might be adduced as proof.

(37) This then, is the objection which the Rabbis could raise against R. Simeon's a minori argument.

(38) Even in the case of the bastard, kareth is involved as the penalty of his parents for the action which was the origin of his birth. In the case of the Egyptian and Edomite, however, there is no aspect whatsoever involving this penalty. The latter, therefore, cannot be deduced from the others.

(39) How could they still maintain their objection against R. Simeon's argument.

(40) The prohibition of the females.

(41) And not, as has previously been assumed, from the bastard.

(42) When, e.g., a High Priest married a seduced woman (cf. supra 60a) who is forbidden to him by virtue of the positive precept of Lev. XXI. 13.

(43) Who, contrary to the view of the Sages, regards such a child as halal (supra 59b and 60a). Thus it has been proved that even where no kareth is involved, both males and females (the halalah like the halal) are included in the prohibition. Similarly in the case of the Egyptians and the Edomites.

(44) The objection of the Rabbis is strong enough!

(45) Cf. supra p. 523. n. 13. ab. init., R. Simeon being of the opinion that the offspring of a union between those who are thereby guilty of transgressing a positive precept only is not regarded as a halal.

(46) And consequently you might derive the prohibition of the females from the law of the halal.

(47) And an objection is of no validity in the face of a definite tradition.

(48) The Rabbis of our Mishnah.

(49) בני Deut. XXIII, 9.

(50) Ibid. emphasis on are born.

(51) Irrespective of sex. Had the law applied to males only the clause 'that are born etc,' should have been omitted.

(52) I.e., that the females also are forbidden.

(53) His position would have been untenable.

(54) The assembly of the Lord (cf. Deut. XXIII, 2, 3, 4, 9. and Kid. 73a.).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 78a

how¹ could an Egyptian of the second generation ever attain purity!² But is not this possible when he transgressed and did marry one?³ — Scripture⁴ would not have written of a case of 'when'.⁵ Behold the case of the bastard which is one of 'when'⁶ and yet Scripture did write it!⁷ — It wrote of a 'when' [leading] to a prohibition;⁸ it would not have written of a 'when' [if it led] to permissibility.⁹ Behold the case of the man who remarried his divorced wife,¹⁰ which involves a 'when' [leading] to a permitted act¹¹ and yet did Scripture write of it! — In that case it was written mainly for the purpose of the original prohibition.¹²

Our Rabbis taught: If the expression of sons¹³ was used, why was also that of generations¹³ used; and if that of generations was used, why also that of sons?¹⁴ If the expression of 'sons' had been used and not that of 'generations'¹⁵ it might have been assumed that only the first and second son is forbidden but that the third¹⁶ is permitted, the expression of 'generations'¹⁷ was, therefore, used. And had the expression of 'generations' only been used and not that of sons,¹⁸ it might have been assumed that the precept was given only to those who stood at Mount Sinai,¹⁹ the expression of sons' was therefore used.²⁰ Unto them,²¹ Count from them.²² Unto them.²³ Be guided by the status of the ineligible among them.²⁴

It was necessary [for Scripture] to write unto them,²⁵ and it was also necessary for it to write, That are born.²⁵ For had the All Merciful written only. 'That are born', it might have been presumed that the counting must begin from their children,²⁶ hence did the All Merciful write 'Unto them'.²⁷ And had the All Merciful written only 'Unto them',²⁸ it might have been presumed that, where a pregnant Egyptian woman became a proselyte, she and her child are regarded as one generation. hence did the All Merciful write. 'That are born'.²⁹

It was, furthermore. necessary to write unto them²⁸ in this case,³⁰ and Unto him³¹ in respect of the bastard. For had the All Merciful used the expression here only,³⁰ [the restriction³² might have been assumed to apply to this case only], because the child descended from a tainted origin.³³ but not to a bastard, since he is descended from an untainted origin.³⁴ And had the All Merciful written the expression in respect of the bastard, [the restriction³² might have been presumed to apply to him only]. because he is for all time unfit to enter into the assembly, but not in this case.³⁵ [Both texts were, therefore,] required.

Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan: If an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian woman of the first generation, her son is [regarded as belonging to the] third generation. From this it is obvious that he³⁶ is of the opinion that the child is ascribed to him.³⁷

R. Joseph raised an objection: R. Tarfon said, 'Bastards may attain to purity. How? If a bastard married a female slave, their child is a slave. When, however, he³⁸ is emancipated he becomes a free man'.³⁹ This⁴⁰ clearly proves that the child is ascribed to her! — There it is different, because Scripture said, The wife and her children shall be her master's.⁴¹

Raba raised an objection: R. Judah related, 'Menjamin, an Egyptian proselyte. was one of my colleagues among the disciples of R. Akiba, and he once told me: I am an Egyptian of the first generation and married an Egyptian wife of the first generation; and I shall arrange for my son to marry an Egyptian wife of the second generation in order that my grandson shall be eligible to enter the congregation'.⁴² Now, if it could be assumed that the child is ascribed to his father, [he could have married a wife] even of the first generation!⁴³ — The fact is that⁴⁴ R. Johanan said to the Tanna:⁴⁵ Read, '[a woman of the] first generation'.

When R. Dimi came⁴⁶ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: If an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian wife of the first generation. her son is [regarded as belonging to the] second generation. From this it is obvious that a child is ascribed to his mother.

Said Abaye to him: What then of the following statement of R. Johanan. 'If a man set aside a pregnant beast as a sin-offering and it then gave birth, his atonement may be made, if he desires, with the beast itself, and, if he prefers, his atonement may be made with her young'.⁴⁷ This law would be intelligible if you admit that an embryo is not regarded as a part⁴⁸ of its mother, since this case would be similar to that of one who set aside as a security two sin-offerings,⁴⁹ in respect of which R. Oshaia had stated that a man who set aside two sin-offerings as a security⁴⁹ is to be atoned for with either of them, while the other goes to the pasture.⁵⁰ If you maintain, however, that an embryo is a part⁵¹ of its mother, the former is like the young of a sin-offering,⁵² and the young of a sin-offering is sent to die!⁵³ The other remained silent. 'Is it not possible', the first said to him, 'that there⁵⁴ it is different.⁵⁵ since it is written That are born,⁵⁶ Scripture made it dependent on birth'?⁵⁷ — 'Clever man',⁵⁸ the other replied, 'I saw your chief⁵⁹ between the pillars⁶⁰ when R. Johanan gave the following traditional ruling: The reason⁶¹ here is because it was written, That are born,⁵⁶ elsewhere, however, the child is ascribed to the father'.⁶²

What, however, of the following statement of Raba. 'If a pregnant gentile woman was converted, there is no need for her son to perform ritual immersion'.⁶³ Why⁶⁴ is there no need for him to perform immersion? Should you reply that it⁶⁵ is due to a ruling of R. Isaac; for R. Isaac stated: Pentateuchally [a covering of] the greater part,⁶⁶ if one objects to it,⁶⁷ constitutes legally an interposition,⁶⁸ and if one does not object to,⁶⁹ no legal interposition is constituted;⁷⁰

- (1) If Egyptian women were not included in the prohibition to enter the assembly.
- (2) Entry into the assembly. Egyptian women proselytes being regarded, like Israelites, as an assembly (v. supra n. 12), no Egyptian male proselyte of the first or second generations would ever be permitted to marry them. How then, since he can marry neither a woman of Israel nor a proselyte of his own people, would he ever produce a third generation (v. Deut. XXIII, 9) that would be fit to enter the assembly?
- (3) A woman in Israel or an Egyptian woman proselyte.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 78b

surely [it may be retorted] R. Kahana stated: This applies only in respect of its greater part, but when the whole of it is effected a legal interposition is constituted!¹ — The case of the embryo is different since its position² is that of its natural growth.³

When Rabina⁴ came, he stated in the name of R. Johanan: Among the other nations follow the male.⁵ If they are converted⁶ follow the more tainted of the two.⁷

'Among the other nations follow the male, as it was taught: Whence is it deduced that if one of the other nations⁸ cohabited with a Canaanitish⁹ woman and begat a son, that son may be purchased as a slave?¹⁰ It is said, Moreover of the children of the strangers¹¹ that do sojourn among you, of them may ye buy.¹² As it might have been assumed that even if one of the Canaanites⁹ had cohabited with one of the women of the other [gentile] nations⁸ and begat a son, you may buy that son as a slave, it was explicitly stated, That they have begotten in your land;¹² only from those who were begotten¹³ in your land, but not from those who dwell in your land.¹⁴

‘If they are converted, follow the more tainted of the two’. In what case? If it be suggested that it refers to an Egyptian¹⁵ who married an Ammonitess,¹⁶ how could the expression ‘the more tainted of the two’, be applicable when Scripture explicitly said, An Ammonite,¹⁷ but not an Ammonitess?¹⁸ — Rather, the reference is to an Ammonite¹⁹ who married an Egyptian wife.²⁰ If [the child of such a marriage] is a male, he is ascribed to the Ammonite;²¹ if it is a female, she is ascribed to the Egyptian.²²

MISHNAH. BASTARDS AND NETHINIM²³ ARE INELIGIBLE,²⁴ AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME, WHETHER THEY BE MALES OR FEMALES.

GEMARA. Resh Lakish said: A woman bastard is eligible²⁵ after ten generations. This is derived from an analogy between tenth,²⁶ and tenth²⁷ mentioned in respect of the Ammonite and the Moabite; as in the latter case the females are permitted²⁷ so are they permitted in the former case.²⁸ Should you suggest that as in the latter case eligibility begins forthwith so it does in the former case, [it may be replied] that the analogy can only be effective in respect of the generations after the tenth.²⁹ But, surely, we learned, BASTARDS AND NETHINIM ARE INELIGIBLE, AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME, WHETHER THEY BE MALES OR FEMALES!³⁰ — This is no difficulty: One statement³¹ is in agreement with him who holds³² that a deduction is carried through in all respects,³³ while the other³⁴ is in agreement with him who maintains³² that a deduction is restricted by its original basis.³⁵

R. Eliezer was asked: What [is the legal position³⁶ of] a female bastard after ten generations? ‘Were anyone to present to me’, he replied, ‘a third generation. I would declare it pure!’ He is obviously of the opinion [that the stock of] a bastard does not survive.³⁷ So also did R. Huna state: A bastard's stock does not survive. Did we not learn, however, BASTARDS ARE INELIGIBLE, AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME? — R. Zera replied: It was explained to me by Rab Judah that those who are known³⁸ survive,³⁹ those who are not known³⁸ do not survive; and those who are partly known and partly unknown survive for three generations but no longer.

A certain man once lived in the neighbourhood of R. Ammi. and the latter made a public announcement that he was a bastard. As the other was bewailing the action,⁴⁰ [the Master] said to him: I have given you life.⁴¹

R. Hana b. Adda stated: David issued the decree of prohibition⁴² against the nethinim,⁴³ for it is said, And the king called the Gibeonites,⁴⁴ and said unto them-now the Gibeonites were not of the children of Israel etc.⁴⁵

Why did he issue the decree against them? — Because it is written. And there was a famine in the days of David three years. year after year.⁴⁶ In the first year he said to them, ‘It is possible that there are idolaters among you, for it is written, And serve other gods, and worship them . . . and he will shut up the heaven, so that there shall be no rain etc.’⁴⁷ They instituted enquiries but could not discover any idolaters. In the second year he said to them, ‘There may be transgressors among you, for it is written, Therefore the showers have been withheld and there hath been no latter rain; yet thou hadst a harlot's forehead etc.’⁴⁸ Enquiries were made but none was found. In the third year he said to them, ‘There might be among you men who announce specified sums for charity in public but do not give them, as it is written, As vapours and wind without rain, so is he that boasteth himself of a false gift’.⁴⁹ Enquiries were made and none was found. ‘The matter’, he concluded, ‘depends entirely upon me; Immediately, he sought the face of the Lord.’⁴⁶ What does this mean? — Resh Lakish explained: He enquired of the Urim and Tummim.⁵⁰ How is this inferred? R. Eleazar replied: It is arrived at by an analogy between two occurrences of the expression of ‘countenance of’; for here it is written, And David sought the countenance of the Lord,⁴⁶ and elsewhere it is written, Who shall enquire for him by the judgment of the Urim before the countenance of the Lord.⁵¹ And the Lord said: 'It is for Saul and his bloody house, because he put to death the Gibeonites'.⁵² 'For Saul', because he was not mourned for in a proper manner; 'and his bloody house, because he put to death the Gibeonites'. Where, however, do we find that Saul 'put to death the Gibeonites'?! The truth is that, as he killed the inhabitants of Nob, the city of the priests who were supplying them⁵³ with water and food, Scripture regards it as if he himself had killed them.

Justice is demanded for Saul because he was not properly mourned for, and justice is demanded because he put to death the Gibeonites?⁵⁴ — Yes; for Resh Lakish stated: What is meant by the Scriptural text, Seek ye the Lord, all ye humble of the earth, that have executed His ordinance?⁵⁵ Where there is his ordinance,⁵⁶ there are also his executions.⁵⁷

David said: As to Saul, there have already elapsed

 - (3) The mother's body is inseparable from it and cannot, therefore, be regarded as an interposition.
 - (4) [Read R. Abin, v. Kid 67a].
 - (5) The child is ascribed to its father; though the mother may belong to a different gentile nation. V. infra.

 - (29) Since in the case of the bastard the prohibition of the first ten generations was explicitly stated and includes, as the term mamzer connotes (v. supra 76b), both men and women, whereas the prohibition after ten generations in the case of bastards is not stated explicitly but derived on the basis of analogy from an Ammonite, in respect of whom 'for ever' is explicitly stated. V. p. 532, n. 14.

(30) How, then, could Resh Lakish maintain that the bastard is permitted after the tenth generation?

(33) Lit., 'judge from it and from it', i.e., all that applies to the case from which deduction is made is also applicable to the case deduced. As the case of the bastard is deduced from that of the Ammonite in one respect, it must also agree with it in all other respects, including eligibility of the females after the tenth generation, as Resh Lakish ruled. It is only in respect of the first ten generations which are explicitly forbidden in Scripture that deduction could not be made (cf. supra p. 532, n. 15).

(34) The ruling in our Mishnah.

(35) Lit., 'judge from it and set it in its (original) place', i.e., the rules of the case deduced limit the scope of the deduction. Though the case of the bastard is deduced from that of the Ammonite in respect of forbidding the former, like the latter, for all time, the exclusion of the females, though applicable to the latter, does not apply to the former, and female bastards (cf. supra p. 532, n. 15) remain, therefore, forbidden for all time.

the twelve months of the [first] year¹ and it would be unusual to arrange for his mourning now. As to the nethinim,² however, let them be summoned and we shall pacify them. Immediately³ the king called the Gibeonites, and said unto them . . . 'What shall I do for you? and wherewith should I make atonement, that ye may bless the inheritance of the Lord'? And the Gibeonites said to him: 'It is no matter of silver or gold between us and Saul, or his house,' neither is it for us [to put] any man etc. . . . Let seven men of his sons be delivered unto us and we will hang them up unto the Lord etc.'⁴ . He tried to pacify them but they would not be pacified. Thereupon he said to them: This nation⁵ is distinguished by three characteristics: They are merciful, bashful and benevolent. 'Merciful', for is written, And shew thee mercy, and have compassion upon thee, and multiply thee.⁶ 'Bashful', for it is written, That His fear may be before you.⁷ 'Benevolent', for it is written, That he may command his children and his household etc.⁸ Only he who cultivates these three characteristics is fit to join this nation.⁹

But the king took the two sons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bore into Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth; and the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom she bore to Adriel the son of Barzillai the Meholathite.¹⁰ Why just these? — R. Huna replied: They¹¹ were made to pass before the Holy Ark. He whom the Ark retained [was condemned] to death and he whom the Ark did not retain was saved alive.

R. Hana b. Kattina raised an objection: But the king spared Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan the son of Saul!¹² — He did not allow him to pass.¹³ Was there favouritism then! — In fact he did let him pass and it retained him, but he invoked on his behalf divine mercy and it released him. But here, too, favouritism is involved!¹⁴ — The fact, however, is that he invoked divine mercy that the Ark should not retain him. But, surely, it is written, The fathers shall not be pit to death for the children etc.¹⁵ — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: It is better that a letter be rooted out of the Torah than that the Divine name shall be publicly profaned.¹⁶

And Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, from the beginning of harvest until water was poured upon them from heaven; and she suffered neither the birds of the air to rest on then by day, nor the beast of the field by night.¹⁷ But, surely, it is written, His body shall not remain all night upon the tree!¹⁸ — R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: It is proper that a letter be rooted out of the Torah so that thereby the heavenly name shall be publicly hallowed. For passers-by were enquiring, ‘What kind of men are these?’ — ‘These are royal princes’ — ‘And what have they done?’ — ‘They laid their hands upon unattached¹⁹ strangers’ — Then they exclaimed: ‘There is no nation in existence which one ought to join as much as this one. If [the punishment of] royal princes was so great. how much more that of common people; and if such [was the justice done for] unattached proselytes, how much more so for Israelites

A hundred and fifty thousand men immediately joined Israel; as it is said, And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bore burdens, and fourscore thousand that were hewers in the mountain.²⁰ Might not these have been Israelites? — This cannot be assumed, for it is written, But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondservants.²¹ But that²² might have represented mere public service!²³ — [The deduction,] however, [is made] from the following: And Solomon numbered all the strangers that were in the Land of Israel, etc. And they were found a hundred and fifty thousand etc. And he set threescore and ten thousand of them to bear burdens, and fourscore thousand to be hewers in the mountains.²⁴

Was it David, however, who issued the decree of prohibition against the nethinim? Moses, surely, issued that decree, for it is written, from the hewer of thy wood to the drawer of thy water!²⁵ — Moses issued a decree against that generation only²⁶ while David issued a decree against all generations.

But Joshua, in fact, issued the decree against them, for it is written, And Joshua made them that day hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation, and for the altar of the Lord!²⁷ — Joshua made his decree for the period during which the Sanctuary was in existence²⁸ while David made his decree for the time during which the Sanctuary was not in existence.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 79b

In the days of Rabbi there was a desire to permit the nethinim.¹ Said Rabbi to them, 'We could very well surrender our portion; who could surrender the portion of the altar?'² He³ is thus in disagreement with R. Hiyya b. Abba. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: The portion of the congregation is forbidden for ever,⁴ and the portion of the altar is forbidden only when the Sanctuary is in existence, but when the Sanctuary is not in existence it is permitted.

MISHNAH. R. JOSHUA STATED: I HAVE HEARD⁵ THAT A SARIS⁶ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH⁶ AND THAT HALIZAH IS ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, AND ALSO THAT A SARIS⁶ DOES NOT SUBMIT TO HALIZAH AND THAT NO HALIZAH IS TO BE ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, AND I AM UNABLE TO EXPLAIN THIS.⁷ R. AKIBA SAID, I WILL EXPLAIN IT: A MAN-MADE SARIS⁸ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH AND HALIZAH IS ALSO ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, BECAUSE THERE WAS A TIME WHEN HE WAS IN A STATE OF FITNESS. A SARIS BY NATURE⁹ NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR IS HALIZAH ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, SINCE THERE NEVER WAS A TIME WHEN HE WAS FIT. R. ELIEZER SAID: NOT SO, BUT A SARIS BY NATURE⁹ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH AND HALIZAH IS ALSO ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, BECAUSE HE MAY BE CURED. A MAN-MADE SARIS¹⁰ NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR IS HALIZAH ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, SINCE HE CANNOT BE CURED. R. JOSHUA B. BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING BEN MEGOSATH, WHO WAS A MAN-MADE SARIS LIVING IN JERUSALEM. THAT HIS WIFE WAS ALLOWED TO BE MARRIED BY THE LEVIR, THUS CONFIRMING THE OPINION OF R. AKIBA.

THE SARIS NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR CONTRACTS THE LEVIRATE

MARRIAGE, AND SO ALSO A WOMAN WHO IS INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION MUST NEITHER PERFORM HALIZAH NOR BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF A SARIS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM HIS SISTER-IN-LAW, HE DOES NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.¹⁰ IF, HOWEVER, HE COHABITED WITH HER HE CAUSES HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.¹¹ SINCE HIS ACT IS SHEER PROSTITUTION.¹² SIMILARLY, WHERE BROTHERS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, THEY DO NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.¹¹ IF, HOWEVER, THEY COHABITED WITH HER, THEY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.¹¹ SINCE COHABITATION WITH HER IS AN ACT OF PROSTITUTION.¹³

GEMARA. Observe! R. Akiba was heard to state that ‘Those who are subject to the penalty of negative precepts¹⁴ are on a par with those who are subject to the penalties of kareth’;¹⁵ but those who are subject to the penalty of kareth are not eligible for halizah or levirate marriage!¹⁶ — R. Ammi replied: ‘What we are dealing with here is with a case, for instance, where his brother¹⁷ had married a proselyte; and R. Akiba is of the same opinion as R. Jose, who stated that an assembly of proselytes is not regarded as an assembly.’¹⁸ If so,¹⁹ he should also be permitted to contract levirate marriage!²⁰ — The law is so indeed; only because R. Joshua used the expression ‘SUBMITS TO HALIZAH’²¹ he [R. Akiba] also used the expression ‘SUBMITS TO HALIZAH’. This²² may also be proved by inference; for it was stated, R. JOSHUA B. BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING BEN MEGOSATH, WHO WAS A MAN-MADE SARIS LIVING IN JERUSALEM, THAT HIS WIFE WAS ALLOWED TO BE MARRIED BY THE LEVIR,²³ THUS CONFIRMING THE OPINION OF R. AKIBA. This proves it.²²

Rabbah raised an objection: He who is wounded in the stones or has his privy member cut off, a man-made saris, and an old man, may either participate in halizah or contract levirate marriage. How?²⁴ If these died²⁵ and were survived by wives and brothers, and those brothers addressed a ma'amar to the wives, or gave them letters of divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are legally valid;²⁶ if they cohabited with them, the widows become their lawful wives.²⁷ If the brothers died and they²⁸ addressed a ma'amar to their²⁹ wives, or gave them divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are valid;³⁰ and if they cohabited with them the widows become their lawful wives, but they³¹ may not retain them, because it is said in Scripture. He that is wounded in the stones or hath his privy member cut off shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord.³² This clearly proves that we are dealing³³ with members of the assembly!³⁴ — The fact is, said Rabbah, that this³⁵ is a case where the widow became subject to him³⁶ first and he was subsequently maimed.³⁷ Said Abaye to him: Let the prohibition against the maimed man override the positive precept of the levirate marriage! Did we not learn [of a similar case]: R. Gamaliel said, If she³⁸ made a declaration of refusal³⁹ well and good;⁴⁰ and if not, let [the elder sister] wait until the minor grows up and she will then be exempt as his wife's sister.⁴¹ Thus it follows that the prohibition against a wife's sister has the force of overriding [that of the levirate marriage]; here also, then, let the prohibition against the maimed man have the force of overriding it! — But, said R. Joseph. this Tanna⁴² represents the view of the Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who maintains that [the issue] of a union which is subject to the penalty of negative precepts owing to consanguinity⁴³ is regarded as a bastard, but [the issue] of a union that is merely subject to the penalty of negative precepts is not a bastard.⁴⁴

The text, ‘To raise up unto his brother a name’⁴⁵ should be applicable to this case⁴⁶ also, but he,⁴⁷ surely, is incapable of raising it!⁴⁸ — Raba replied: If so,⁴⁹ there exists no woman who is eligible for the levirate marriage whose husband was not a saris by nature⁵⁰ for a short time, at least, prior to his death.⁵¹

Against R. Eliezer,⁵² however, Raba's reply⁵³ presents a [valid] objection! — There⁵⁴ it is only a general state of debility⁵⁵ that had set in.⁵⁶

What are we to understand by A SARIS BY NATURE? — R. Isaac b. Joseph replied in the name of R. Johanan: Any man

- (1) To enter into the congregation.
 - (2) Both the congregation and the altar have shares in them (cf. Josh. ibid.).
 - (3) Rabbi, who forbade the portion of the altar in his time though the Sanctuary was no more in existence.
 - (4) Until a properly constituted authority should allow it.
 - (5) A tradition from his teachers.
 - (6) V. Glos.
 - (7) In what case of saris halizah is, and what case it is not applicable.
 - (8) סָרִיס אָדָם lit., a 'eunuch of man', one whose emasculation was the result of human action. (Cf. infra n. 12).
 - (9) סָרִיס חֶמֶה lit., a 'eunuch of the sun', one who was a eunuch from the time he first saw the sun, i.e., a congenital eunuch.
 - (10) V. p. 538, n. 10.
 - (11) To marry a priest.
 - (12) The woman being forbidden to him as 'his brother's wife'.
 - (13) Cf. supra n. 3.
 - (14) A man-made saris is one of these, since cohabitation with him is forbidden by a negative precept in Deut. XXIII, 2.
 - (15) V. supra 49a.
 - (16) How then could R. Akiba maintain in our Mishnah that A MAN-MADE SARIS SUBMITS TO HALIZAH.
 - (17) The deceased brother of the saris.
 - (18) A proselyte, not being included in the term assembly (v. Deut. XXIII. 2) she is permitted to the saris. Hence he submits to her halizah.
 - (19) V. supra n. 1.
 - (20) Why then was only halizah mentioned?
 - (21) According to R. Joshua, who regards an assembly of proselytes as a congregation, marriage is in fact forbidden. Only halizah is permitted because in his opinion it is applicable in the case of those a union between whom is subject to the penalty of a negative precept.
 - (22) That according to R. Akiba even the levirate marriage is permitted.
 - (23) Levirate marriage. V. supra n. 5.
 - (24) I.e., in what connection is this law applicable?
 - (25) Without issue.
 - (26) Lit., 'what they did they have done'; after their ma'amar, a divorce is required; after their divorce, no marriage may take place; and their halizah is valid.
 - (27) Lit., 'they acquired'.
 - (28) The maimed mentioned or the old man.
 - (29) Brothers'.
 - (30) V. supra note 9.
 - (31) Those that are maimed. The old man is excluded. V. infra.
 - (32) Deut. XXIII, 2. V. Tosef. XI.
 - (33) In regarding the halizah and marriage with an impotent person as valid.
 - (34) How then could it be suggested that R. Akiba speaks of women proselytes who are not included in the term 'assembly'?
 - (35) R. Akiba's statement in our Mishnah.
 - (36) As his deceased brother's wife.
 - (37) Since the obligation arose while the man was still in a state of potency, halizah with him is both necessary and valid.
 - (38) A minor who was given away in marriage by her mother or brothers after the death of her father and whose elder sister has now become subject to the levirate marriage of her husband.
 - (39) Mi'un (v. Glos.). No divorce is needed in the case of such a minor's marriage.
 - (40) Lit., 'she refused'. Her marriage becomes null and void retrospectively, and, as she has thus never been the legal wife of the levir, her sister (who is now no more the levir's wife's sister) may well contract with him the levirate marriage.

(41) Supra 18a, infra 109a.

(42) Who, in fact, deals with a case where the impotency had set in prior to the obligation and yet permits the halizah.

(43) Of the contracting parties.

(44) This Tanna, like the Tanna of our Mishnah, thus draws a distinction between two classes of trespass that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts: (a) cases due to consanguinity and (b) other cases. While the former are subject to the restrictions of those who are liable to kareth, the latter are not. Maimed persons belong to the latter class and are consequently subject to the levirate law. Cf. supra 49a.

(45) Deut. XXV, 7.

(46) The maimed levir.

(47) Owing to his impotency at the time of the halizah.

(48) Though at some earlier period he might have been; why then should he be subject to halizah?

(49) If his former potency is not to be taken into consideration.

(50) Approaching death deprives a person of his generating powers, and he may then be regarded virtually as a saris.

(51) The widow of such a saris should consequently be exempt from halizah (v. our Mishnah). How, then, would a widow ever be subject to halizah? It must, therefore, be admitted that a person's former capacity for propagation is taken into consideration even though that capacity was subsequently lost.

(52) Who maintains that a manmade saris does not submit to halizah, though prior to his incapacitation he was capable of propagation.

(53) Which proves the contrary of R. Eliezer's statement (cf. supra n. 6).

(54) Where the power of propagation is lost on approaching death.

(55) Which precedes death.

(56) And this cannot at all be compared with the case of an actual saris whose incapacity is due to a definite defect in his generative organs.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 80a

who has not experienced a moment [of life] in a state of fitness.¹ How could this² be ascertained? — Abaye replied: [By observing whether] when he urinates no arch is formed. What are the causes?³ — That the child's mother baked at noon⁴ and drank strong⁵ beer.

R. Joseph said: It must have been such a saris⁶ of whom I heard Ammi saying. 'He who is afflicted from birth',⁷ and I did not know [at the time] to whom he was referring. But should we not take into consideration the possibility that he might have recovered in the meantime!⁸ — Since he suffered from affliction in his early as well as in his later life, no [possible interval of recovery] need be taken into consideration

R. Mari raised an objection: R. Hanina b. Antigonus stated, 'It⁹ is to be examined¹⁰ three times in eighty days'¹¹ — Precautions are to be taken in respect of one limb;¹² in respect of the entire body¹³ no such precautions need be taken.¹⁴

R. ELIEZER SAID: NOT SO etc. A contradiction may be pointed out: If at the age of twenty he¹⁵ did not produce two hairs,¹⁶ they¹⁷ must bring evidence that he is twenty years of age and he, being confirmed as a saris,¹⁸ neither submits to halizah nor performs the levirate marriage. If the woman¹⁹ at the age of twenty did not produce two hairs,²⁰ they²¹ must bring evidence that she is twenty years of age and she, being confirmed as a woman who is incapable of procreation neither performs halizah nor is taken in levirate marriage; so Beth Hillel. But Beth Shammai maintain that with the one as well as with the other [this takes place at] the age of eighteen. R. Eliezer said. In the case of the male, the law is in accordance with Beth Hillel and in the case Of the female, the law is in accordance with Beth Shammai because a woman matures earlier than a man!²² Rami b. Dikuli replied in the name Of Samuel: R. Eliezer changed his view.²³

The question was raised: From which statement did he withdraw? — Come and hear what was taught: R. Eliezer said. A congenital saris²⁴ submits to halizah, and halizah is arranged for his wife, because cases of such a nature are cured in Alexandria in Egypt.²⁵

R. Eleazar said: As a matter of fact he²⁶ did not change his view at all, but that statement²⁷ was taught in respect [of the age of] punishment.²⁸

It was stated: If a person²⁹ between the age of twelve years and one day³⁰ and that of eighteen years³¹ ate forbidden fat,³² and after the marks of a saris had appeared, he grew two hairs.³³ Rab ruled that the person is deemed to be a saris retrospectively.³⁴ But Samuel ruled [that the person is regarded as] having been a minor at that time.³⁵

R. Joseph demurred against Rab.³⁶ According to R. Meir,³⁷ a woman who is incapable of procreation³⁸ should be entitled to a fine!³⁹ — Abaye replied: She passes from her minority [directly] into adolescence.⁴⁰ The other said to him: May all such fine sayings be reported in my name. For so it was taught: A saris is not tried as a stubborn and rebellious son,⁴¹ because no stubborn and rebellious son is tried unless he bears the mark of the pubic hair.⁴² Nor is a woman who is incapable of procreation tried as a betrothed damsel⁴³ because from her minority she passes [directly] into adolescence.⁴⁴

R. Abbahu stated: On [the basis of] the marks of a saris, of a woman incapable of procreation, and of an eight-[month] child⁴⁵ no decision is made⁴⁶ until they attain the age of twenty.⁴⁷ Is, however, an eight-[month] child viable? Surely it was taught: An eight-month child is like a stone,⁴⁸ and it is forbidden to move him;⁴⁹ only his mother may bend over him and nurse him

(9) The firstborn of a beast afflicted with a serious blemish which renders it unfit for the altar.

(10) To ascertain whether the blemish is a permanent one. If it was only a passing affliction it does not affect the legal fitness of the animal.

(11) At the beginning, middle and end of the period. Only where the blemish remained for the full eighty days is it regarded as permanent. If no examination was made in the middle of the period mentioned, the blemish cannot be deemed to be a permanent since it is possible that it had disappeared for some time and reappeared again V. Bek. 38b. Why, then, is the middle period disregarded in the case of the saris?

(12) The eye, for instance, which was the limb affected in the case cited.

(13) The impotency of the saris is an affliction affecting his body as a whole.

(14) It is unlikely that such a defect should appear, disappear and reappear again.

- (22) Nid. 47b. Now, the case spoken of here is that of a congenital saris and yet R. Eliezer stated that he is subject neither to halizah nor to the levirate marriage, which is in direct contradiction to his statement in our Mishnah!
- (23) The two statements were made at an earlier and later period respectively.
- (24) V. supra p. 538. n. 11.
- (25) As this Baraitha agrees with our Mishnah and, in addition, contains also a reason for its statement, based on actual experience. it is reasonable to assume that R. Eliezer withdrew from his other view contained in the Baraitha of Niddah.
- (26) R. Eliezer.
- (27) Supra, that the age of a male is twenty, in agreement with Beth Hillel, and that that of a female is eighteen, in agreement with Beth Shammai.
- (28) At the ages stated males and females respectively, emerging from their state of minority and entering that of majority, become subject to all legal obligations and penalties. The statement has no reference at all to halizah or the levirate marriage.
- (29) The reference is to a female though the masc. gender 'saris' is used. The age of twelve years and one day is applicable to females only.
- (30) Below this age a girl is regarded as a minor.
- (31) This will be according to R. Eliezer, supra.
- (32) Or committed any other transgression. The eating of forbidden fat, חֵלֵב is invariably taken as the example of a punishable offence. Cf. Golds. a.l.
- (33) The marks of puberty.
- (34) From the age of twelve years and one day. Despite the absence of the hairs until after the age of eighteen. and their subsequent appearance. the girl is regarded as having passed into her majority at the earlier age of twelve years and one day. and consequently subject from that time to all legal penalties, the delay in the emergence of her marks of puberty being attributed to her mere impotence.
- (35) Between the ages of twelve and eighteen. Samuel holds that majority sets in at the latter age only when the girl's impotency is definitely established.
- (36) Who regards a girl, who was only subsequently found to be a saris, as having been a saris and consequently also of age from the moment she was twelve years and one day old.

- (38) The seducer of whom is also exempt from the fine mentioned (supra note 2) on the ground that, as she did not produce the required hairs, she was regarded at the time as a minor. V. Keth. 35b.
- (39) Because, since it was later established that she was sterile, she should be regarded (cf. supra note 1) as having been sterile, and so also of age, retrospectively.
- (40) The former age is twelve years and one day; the latter is twelve and a half plus one day. In the intervening age a girl is described as נַעֲרָה damsel or maiden; and it is during this period (נַעֲרוּת) that she is entitled to the fine mentioned. The sterile woman does in fact become of age retrospectively, as Rab laid down, but she assumes the status of the adolescent woman who is not entitled to the fine.

- (46) As to whether in the case of the former they are impotent and of age, and in the case of the latter whether he is viable.
- (47) Between the age of twelve and this age the former are regarded as minors until they have produced two pubic hairs, if these appear before they were twenty; and if these were not produced at twenty their majority begins from the age of twelve. In the case of the child he cannot be regarded as viable before he has completed the twentieth year of his life.
- (48) Obviously because he is not viable.
- (49) On the Sabbath when only such objects may be moved as were intended to be used on that day. The moving of a stone is forbidden.

in order to avert danger!¹ — Here² we are dealing with one whose marks³ have not⁴ been developed.⁵ For it was taught: Who is an eight-month child? He whose months [of conception] have not been completed. Rabbi said: The marks, his hair and nails which were not developed, would indicate it.⁶ The reason then is because they were not developed, but had they been developed it would have been assumed that the child was a seven-month one⁷ only his [birth] was somewhat delayed.⁸

With reference, however, to the practical decision which Raba Tosfa'ah gave in the case of a woman whose husband had gone to a country beyond the sea and remained there for a full year of twelve months, where he declared the child legitimate,⁹ in accordance with whose [view did he act]? [Was it] in accordance with that of Rabbi who maintains that [birth] may be delayed!¹⁰ — Since R. Simeon b. Gamaliel also maintains that [birth may] be delayed, he acted in agreement with a majority. For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Any human¹¹ child that lingers for thirty days can not be regarded as a miscarriage.¹²

Our Rabbis taught: Who is a congenital saris?¹³ Any person who is twenty years of age and has not produced two pubic hairs.¹⁴ And even if he produced them afterwards he is deemed to be a saris in all respects. And these are his characteristics: He has no beard, his hair is lank, and his skin is smooth. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said in the name of R. Judah b. Jair:¹⁵ Any person whose urine produces no froth; some say: He who urinates without forming an arch; some say: He whose semen is watery; and some say: He whose urine does not ferment. Others say: He whose body does not steam after bathing in the winter season. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said:¹⁵ He whose voice is abnormal so that one cannot distinguish whether it is that of a man or of a woman.

What woman is deemed to be incapable of procreation? — Any woman who is twenty years of age and has not produced two pubic hairs.¹⁴ And even if she produces them afterwards she is deemed to be a woman incapable of procreation in all respects. And these are her characteristics: She has no breasts and suffers pain during copulation. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said:¹⁵ One who has no mons veneris like other women. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: One whose voice is deep so that one cannot distinguish whether it is that of a man or of a woman.

It was stated: As to the characteristics of a saris, R. Huna stated, [Impotency cannot be established] unless they are all present. R. Johanan, however, stated: Even if only one of them is present.¹⁶ Where two hairs were produced¹⁷ all agree that impotency cannot be established unless all characteristics¹⁸ are displayed. They only differ in the case where these were not produced. With reference, however, to what Rabbah b. Abbuha said to the Rabbis, 'Examine R. Nahman. and if his body steams I will allow him to marry my daughter'; in accordance with whose view [was he acting]? [Was it] according to R. Huna!¹⁹ — No; R. Nahman had some stray hairs.²⁰

THE SARIS NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR CONTRACTS THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AND SO ALSO A WOMAN WHO IS INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION etc. The saris was mentioned in the same way as the woman who is incapable of procreation; as the woman's incapacity is due to an act of²¹ heaven so must that of the saris be an act²¹ of heaven; and this anonymous [Mishnah] is in agreement with R. Akiba who stated [that halizah applies] only to a man-made [saris but] not [to one afflicted] by the hand of heaven.²²

IF A SARIS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM HIS SISTER-IN-LAW, HE DOES NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED etc. The reason then [why when HE COHABITED WITH HER HE CAUSES HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED] is because he²³ cohabited with her; another man, however, does not;²⁴

(1) To the mother and the child. The latter might otherwise die of starvation before his time, and the former might contract serious illness through the accumulation of superfluous milk in her breasts. V. Tosef. Shab. XVI. Now, since the child, because he is not viable, is regarded as a stone (v. p. 545. n. 13), how could he ever attain the age of twenty?

[The reference will be accordingly to an emergence of hairs after the age of twenty, for had they appeared earlier, he would no longer be regarded as a saris even in the face of all other characteristics of a saris, v. supra p. 543. Tosaf., however, retains the reading of our text and consequently draws a distinction between hairs of the beard and on any other part of the body. The former in themselves, unlike the latter, are not sufficient to establish potency. V. Tosaf. s.v. דְּהָבִיא].

is this, then, an objection to the view of R. Hamnuna who stated that a widow awaiting the decision of her levir who committed adultery¹ is disqualified [from marrying her] brother-in-law!² — No; the same law³ is applicable to [the case of cohabitation with] another man also; Only because the first clause was taught in respect of himself,⁴ the latter clause also was taught in respect of himself.

SIMILARLY, WHERE BROTHERS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION etc. The reason then [why when THEY COHABITED WITH HER THEY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED] is because they cohabited with her, but had they not cohabited with her they would not;⁵ in accordance with whose view [is this statement made]? — Not in accordance with that of R. Judah; for should it [be suggested that it is in agreement with] R. Judah, he, surely, [it might be objected,] stated that a woman incapable of procreation is regarded as a harlot.⁶

MISHNAH. IF A PRIEST WHO WAS A SARIS BY NATURE⁷ MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HE CONFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH. R. JOSE AND R. SIMEON STATED: IF A PRIEST WHO WAS AN HERMAPHRODITE MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HE CONFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH.

R. JUDAH STATED: IF A TUMTUM,⁸ WAS OPERATED UPON⁹ AND HE WAS FOUND TO BE A MALE, HE MUST NOT PARTICIPATE IN HALIZAH,¹⁰ BECAUSE HE HAS THE SAME STATUS AS A SARIS. THE HERMAPHRODITE MAY MARRY [A WIFE] BUT MAY NOT BE MARRIED [BY A MAN].¹¹ R. ELIEZER¹² STATED: [FOR COPULATION] WITH AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.¹³

GEMARA. [Is not this]¹⁴ obvious!¹⁵ — It might have been assumed that only one who is capable of propagation is entitled to bestow the right of eating¹⁶ and that he who is not capable of propagating is not entitled to bestow the right of eating; hence we were taught [that even the saris may bestow the right].

R. JOSE AND R. SIMEON STATED . . . HERMAPHRODITE. Resh Lakish said: He CONFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH but does not confer upon her the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder.¹⁷ R. Johanan, however, said: He also confers upon her the right to eat of the breast and shoulder.¹⁷

According to Resh Lakish,¹⁸ why is the breast and the shoulder different?¹⁹ [Obviously] because [it was] Pentateuchally [ordained].²⁰ [Was not] terumah, [however]. also Pentateuchally [ordained]? — We are dealing here with terumah at the present time,²¹ which [is only a] Rabbinical [ordinance].²² What is the law, however, when the Sanctuary is in existence?²³ [Obviously that terumah may] not [be eaten]!²⁴ Why, then, did he state, ‘But does not confer the right of eating the breast and the shoulder’?²⁵ He should rather have drawn the distinction in respect of the terumah itself, thus: This²⁶ applies only to Rabbinical terumah,²⁷ but not to terumah that has been Pentateuchally ordained!²⁸ — It is this, in fact, that he meant: When he²⁹ confers upon her³⁰ the right of eating, he enables her to eat terumah at the present time²⁷ only when it is a Rabbinical ordinance;³¹ he is not entitled, however, to confer upon her the right of eating terumah at the time when the law of the breast and the shoulder is in force,³² even if the terumah is only Rabbinical,³³ for she might in consequence also come to eat of Pentateuchal terumah.³⁴

‘R. Johanan, however, said: He also confers upon her the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder’. Said R. Johanan to Resh Lakish: Do you³⁵ maintain that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical ordinance? — ‘Yes’, the other replied, ‘for I read:³⁶ A cake of figs³⁷ among cakes of figs is neutralised’.³⁸ ‘But I’, said the first, ‘read, “A piece³⁹ among pieces⁴⁰ is neutralized”;⁴¹ you obviously believe that the reading⁴² is, “Whatsoever⁴³ one is wont to count”,⁴⁴ the reading in fact is, “That which one is wont to count”’.⁴⁵

What [Mishnah⁴⁶ is] it? — That wherein we learned: If a man had bundles of fenugrec of kil'ayim⁴⁷ of the vineyard⁴⁸ they must be burned.⁴⁹ If these were mixed up with others,⁵⁰

(1) With any man.

(2) As any harlot. Consequently she would also be forbidden to marry a priest. But according to the implication of our Mishnah she is not disqualified from marrying a priest!

(3) Of our Mishnah, that cohabitation with the widow causes her disqualification.

(4) The levir.

(5) Cause her to be disqualified.

- (37) A number of figs pressed together.
- (38) If such a cake of terumah was mixed up with a hundred non-consecrated cakes of the same size, or if a cake of terumah that was levitically unclean was mixed up with a hundred such cakes of clean terumah, the entire quantity is permitted. in the latter case, to clean priests and, in the former case, to Israelites also. This proves that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical ordinance, since such neutralization, had the ordinance been Pentateuchal, would not, owing to its comparative importance (its high commercial value, v. infra), have been permitted. Though the terumah of figs, like that of all other fruit of trees, is at all times a Rabbinical ordinance only, its neutralization would not have been permitted at the present time had there been any Pentateuchal terumah in existence at the same time. The neutralization of the former would have been forbidden as a preventive measure against the possible assumption that the 'latter also might be neutralized.
- (39) Of an unclean sin-offering which is Pentateuchally forbidden. V. the Baraitha infra 81b.
- (40) Of clean meat.
- (41) And is permitted to be eaten. As a piece of meat which is Pentateuchally forbidden (v. supra n. 5) may be neutralized, even though its importance, owing to its commercial value, may be as high as that of a cake of figs, so may any food be neutralized even though its prohibition is Pentateuchal.
- (42) Cf. the Mishnah cited infra.
- (43) Any objects which any person whatsoever sells by counting the units. V. infra n. 11.
- (44) Cannot be neutralized.
- (45) 'Whatsoever' is more comprehensive than 'that'. According to the former reading, neutralization is not permitted in the case of any objects which are regarded as of sufficiently high commercial value to be sold not in bulk but in units. According to the latter reading, neutralization is permitted in all cases except those where the units are of such a high value that they are not sold save by counting single units. Now, since cakes of figs are not invariably sold in units they may of course be neutralized even though they consist of Pentateuchal terumah (cf. supra n. 7). Resh Lakish, therefore, remains with no proof whatsoever that terumah at the present time is a mere Rabbinical ordinance. [This interpretation which follows Rashi does not account for the phrase 'one is wont etc', mentioned also with the latter reading. Me'iri explains the former as including whatever is being sold as a rule by counting among the poor, whereas the latter requires the sale by counting to be the general practice among the rich as well as the poor. On either reading it is the general practice rather than the invariable rule which is the determining factor].

they must all be burned;¹ so R. Meir. The Sages, however, stated: They are neutralized in [a mixture of] two hundred and one.² R. Meir, [in his ruling,] is of the opinion that whatever³ might be counted causes forfeiture,⁴ while the Sages are of the opinion that only six things cause forfeiture.⁵ R. Akiba said: Seven. They are the following: Crack-nuts,⁶ the pomegranates of Badan,⁷ sealed jugs [of wine], young shoots of beet,⁸ cabbage roots and the Grecian gourd. R. Akiba adds also home made⁹ bread.¹⁰ Those which are subject to the law of 'orlah¹¹ [impart the prohibition of] 'orlah¹² [and those which are subject] to the law of kil'ayim of the vineyard¹³ [impart¹² that of the] kil'ayim of the vineyard.¹⁴ R. Johanan holds the view that the reading¹⁵ was, 'That which one is wont to count'¹⁶ while Resh Lakish holds the view that the reading was 'Whatsoever one is wont to count'.¹⁷

What [is the Baraita about the] piece?¹⁸ — It was taught: A piece of a levitically unclean sin-offering that was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean sin-offerings and, similarly, a piece of levitically unclean shewbread¹⁹ that was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean shewbread is neutralized.²⁰ R. Judah said: It is not neutralized.²¹ If, however, a piece of a levitically clean sin offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat, and similarly if a piece of levitically clean shewbread was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean unconsecrated bread, all agree that neutralization cannot take place.²² Now in the first clause, at any rate, it was stated that it 'is neutralized'!²³ — R. Hiyya son of R. Huna replied: In [the case where it was] crushed.²⁴ If so,²⁴ what is R. Judah's reason?²⁵

(1) The forbidden kil'ayim cannot be neutralized. The reason is given infra.

(2) I.e., if the permitted food is two hundred times the quantity of the forbidden kil'ayim.

(3) V. supra p. 551. n. 9.

(4) Lit., consecrates'. (Cf. R.V. and J.T., Deut. XXII, 9, be forfeited). All the mixture is forbidden on account of the importance (cf. supra p. 551, n. 11) of the forbidden object it contained, which can never be neutralized.

(5) Cf. supra n. 9.

(6) אגוזי פרך (cf. Jast. and Golds.). Rashi regards Perek as a place name. Parka (Perek) is situated in Samaria in the vicinity of Shechem.

(12) Upon the entire mixture.

(13) The beet, cabbage and gourd.

(14) 'Orlah III, 6, Bezah 3b. Zeb. 72a.

(15) In the Mishnah cited.

(16) Cf. supra p. 551, n. 11. Only such objects cannot be neutralized. Cakes of figs and pieces of meat, however, since some people do not always sell them singly but in bulk, are of less commercial importance and may, therefore, be neutralized.

(17) Cf. supra p. 551, nn. 7 and 8. As cakes of figs are sometimes sold by being counted singly, they are regarded as commercially important objects which, were they Pentateuchally forbidden, could never be neutralized. As it was stated, however, that a cake of figs of terumah may be neutralized, it follows, according to Resh Lakish, that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical, and not a Pentateuchal ordinance.

(18) Mentioned by R. Johanan. Cf. supra p. 551. n. 5.

(19) Cf. Ex. XXV, 30.

(20) The entire mixture is regarded as clean sin-offering meat and clean shewbread respectively.

(21) The reason is discussed infra.

(22) Neutralization would have removed a Pentateuchal prohibition (that of eating consecrated food by a non-priest) from the piece of the sin-offering or from that of the shewbread. As, however, the entire mixture, which consists of pieces that are sometimes sold by number, may be eaten even without recourse to neutralization by a priest to whom it could be sold, though this might have to be done at a reduced cost, the law of neutralization, which is applied even in such circumstances whenever the prohibition is Rabbinical, as in the case of the cake of figs (supra), is not applied here where it is Pentateuchal.

(23) Though these objects are sometimes sold in units. This obviously proves that the reading was, as R. Johanan stated, 'That which one is wont to count'. How, then, could Resh Lakish maintain that the reading was 'Whatsoever one is wont to count'?

(24) When it is no longer sold in units but in bulk.

(25) Why does he in such a case object to neutralization?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 82a

— R. Judah follows his own view; for he stated:¹ The law of neutralization takes no effect in homogeneous objects.² [Had the piece] not been crushed, however, what [would have been the law]? Assumingly that it could not be neutralized! Why, then, was it taught. 'If, however, a piece of a levitically clean sin-offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat . . . neutralization cannot take place'?³ Let the distinction be drawn in [the case of consecrated meat] itself, thus: This⁴ applies only where it⁵ was crushed; but when it was not crushed it may not be neutralized! — He preferred [to speak of] a mixture of clean with clean.⁶

According to Resh Lakish,⁷ wherein lies the difference between the first clause and the final clause?⁸ — R. Shisha the son of R. Idi replied: The first clause deals with uncleanness that was due to liquids,⁹ which is only Rabbinical,¹⁰ while the final clause [deals with a prohibition]¹¹ which is Pentateuchal.¹² What, however, [would be the law in the case of] uncleanness through a reptile?¹³ Assumingly that no neutralization is permitted! Why, then, did he state in the final clause, 'If, however, a piece of levitically clean sin-offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat . . . neutralization cannot take place'?¹⁴ Let the distinction rather be drawn in [respect of consecrated meat] itself, thus: This¹⁵ applies only to uncleanness due to liquids, but when it is due to a reptile it may not be neutralized! — He preferred [to speak] of a mixture of clean with clean.¹⁶

Rabbah replied:¹⁷ The first clause [deals with] a prohibition under a negative precept¹⁸ while the final clause [deals with] one that involves the penalty of kareth.¹⁹ But surely was it not Rabbah who stated that in all Pentateuchal prohibitions there is no difference²⁰ between a prohibition that is due to a negative precept and one that involves kareth!²¹ — This is a difficulty.

R. Ashi replied:¹⁷ [The law²² in the] final clause is due to the fact that [the consecrated food] is an object which may be made²³ permissible,²⁴ and any object which [in certain circumstances] becomes permitted²⁴ cannot be neutralized even in a thousand.²⁵ This statement of R. Ashi, however, is mere fiction.²⁶ For to whom [would the mixture become permitted]!²⁷ To²⁸ the priest it is permitted [all the time];²⁹ to the Israelite²⁸ it is for ever forbidden!³⁰ The statement of R. Ashi must consequently be regarded as mere fiction. But is R. Johanan of the opinion that terumah at the present time³¹ is Pentateuchal?³² Surely it was taught: If in front of two baskets, one of which contained unconsecrated fruit and the other that of terumah, were two se'ah measures, one containing unconsecrated fruit and the other that of terumah, and the latter fell into the former, behold these are permitted,³³ for it is assumed that the terumah fell into the terumah and the unconsecrated fruit fell into the unconsecrated fruit.³⁴ And [in reference to this ruling] Resh Lakish stated: 'Only if the unconsecrated fruit³⁵ was more than that of the terumah',³⁶ while R. Johanan stated, 'Even if the unconsecrated fruit were no more than the terumah'.³⁷ Now, according to Resh Lakish³⁸ the ruling³⁹ may well be justified since he may hold the opinion that with Rabbinically [forbidden food] also it is necessary⁴⁰ to have a larger quantity [of the permitted food]. According to R. Johanan.⁴¹ however, a difficulty arises!⁴² 'This'⁴³ [R. Johanan may reply] 'is the view of⁴⁴ the Rabbis,⁴⁵

(1) Zeb. 79a, Men. 22b.

(2) Lit., 'a kind in its kind does not cease to exist'.

(3) Thus drawing a distinction between a mixture of consecrated and unconsecrated meat.

(7) Who explained the Baraita under discussion to refer to a crushed piece.

(8) In either case the piece is Pentateuchally forbidden. As neutralization takes place in the case of the first clause owing to the insignificant value of the piece, neutralization should also take place, for the same reason, in the case of the final clause! According to R. Johanan, the reason for the difference between the two clauses has been explained supra p. 553, n. 6.

(9) If the crushed mixture was contained, for instance, in a vessel that had been in contact with unclean liquids.

(10) Pentateuchally no unclean liquid can impart uncleanness to a vessel.

(11) The consumption of consecrated food by a non-priest.

(12) Food Pentateuchally forbidden, if mixed with other food of the same kind, cannot be neutralized, according to this opinion, even if it is sold in bulk.

(14) V. supra note 2.

(15) That neutralization takes place.

(18) That of eating consecrated meat which is unclean. V. Lev. VII, 19.

(19) Were the crushed mixture which contained a piece of consecrated meat to be regarded as neutralized and treated like unconsecrated meat, it might be eaten by an unclean person who would thus incur the penalty of kareth for eating consecrated meat during his uncleanness. Cf. Lev. VII, 20.

- (35) In the basket.
- (36) In the se'ah measure. Only in such a case is the assumption mentioned made, because the terumah representing the smaller quantity might be regarded as neutralized even if it had fallen into the basket of the unconsecrated fruit.
- (37) No excess of unconsecrated fruit is necessary since the assumption mentioned is alone sufficient to establish the permissibility of the unconsecrated fruit.

- (44) Lit., 'this according to whom?'
- (45) Who hold that terumah at the present time is only Rabbinical.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 82b

while I maintain the view of R. Jose'.¹ For it was taught in Seder 'Olam:² Which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it,³ they had a first,⁴ and a second⁵ possession,⁶ but they had no third one;⁷ and R. Johanan stated, 'Who is the author of Seder 'Olam? R. Jose'.⁸

But is R. Johanan of the opinion that in respect of a Rabbinically forbidden object no excess is required?⁹ Surely we learned: A ritual bath containing exactly forty se'ah [of water]¹⁰ to which one se'ah¹¹ was added and from which one se'ah¹² was taken off, is deemed to be ritually fit.¹³ And R. Judah b. Shila stated in the name of R. Assi in the name of R. Johanan. 'As much as its greater part'.¹⁴ Does not this mean that the greater part must remain?¹⁵ — No; that the greater part must not be removed.¹⁶ And if you prefer I might say: Here¹⁷ it is different,¹⁸ since it may be said, 'For it is assumed'.¹⁹

We learned, THE HERMAPHRODITE MAY MARRY [A WIFE]!²⁰ — Read, 'If he married',²¹ But, surely, it was stated MAY MARRY!²² — And even in accordance with your view what is the meaning of BUT MAY NOT BE MARRIED [BY A MAN]?²³ Consequently it must be granted that as MAY . . . BE MARRIED²³ implies an act that had already been performed, so also MAY MARRY implies an act that had already been performed. It may still be urged: No;²⁴ MAY MARRY implies that the act is permissible; but MAY NOT BE MARRIED²³ implies, not even if the act had already been performed.²⁵ But surely since it was taught in the final clause, R. ELIEZER STATED: [FOR COPULATION WITH] AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE, it is to be inferred that the first Tanna was doubtful on the point!²⁶ — The law²⁷ was clear to the one Master as well as to the other Master; the only difference between them was the question of stoning for copulation through either of his two organs. One Master²⁸ was of the opinion that the penalty of stoning is incurred by copulation through either of the two organs,²⁹ while the other Master³⁰ was of the opinion [that it is incurred through the male organ only] AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.

Rab said:

(1) Who stated in our Mishnah that the hermaphrodite may confer upon his wife the right of eating terumah. It was in reference to this that R. Johanan had stated that the hermaphrodite may also confer upon his wife the right of eating the breast and the shoulder, which are Pentateuchally ordained, since terumah also according to R. Jose is even at the present time a Pentateuchal ordinance.

- (2) Lit., 'Order of the World', a chronological work compiled in the first half of the second century by R. Jose b. Halafta.
- (3) Deut. XXX. 5, וְרִשְׁתָּהּ, the rt. of רִשׁ is repeated.
- (4) After the conquest in the days of Joshua
- (5) In the days of Ezra.
- (6) The sanctity of Eretz Israel having ceased with the destruction of the first Temple and the Babylonian exile, a second 'possession was necessary to restore to the land its sanctity.
- (7) Which was not necessary, the second sanctification having remained for all time. As the land thus remained sacred the Pentateuchal obligation of terumah also remained in force.
- (8) V. Nid. 46b.
- (9) To effect neutralization. It is now assumed that the reason why R. Johanan maintains that 'even if the unconsecrated fruit were no more than the terumah' it is permitted is because, in the case of a Rabbinical prohibition, neutralization is effected by the mere accident of the mixing of consecrated with unconsecrated fruit even though the latter did not form the larger part and not because he relies on the above mentioned assumption.
- (10) The minimum quantity of water that constitutes a ritual bath.
- (11) Of unsuitable liquid.
- (12) Of the entire quantity of forty-one se'ah.
- (13) Mik. VII, 2. The se'ah of unsuitable liquid is regarded as having been neutralized in the forty se'ah of water, so that when one se'ah of the mixture was subsequently removed, the minimum of forty se'ah of suitable liquid still remained in the bath.
- (14) Zeb. 22a. This is explained presently.
- (15) I.e., se'ah after se'ah of unsuitable liquid may be added and an equal quantity of the mixture may be successively removed only until a minimum of twenty-one se'ah of suitable water remains in the bath. Should there remain less, so that the suitable liquid no longer represents the greater part of the mixture, the bath would become ritually unfit. This (the unsuitability of certain liquids in a ritual bath being only a Rabbinical provision) proves that according to R. Johanan an excess is required even in the case of Rabbinical ordinances!
- (16) If only half of the suitable water remained the unsuitable liquid is neutralized, no excess being required.
- (17) The case in the Baraitha of Terumoth.
- (18) From the case of the ritual bath or other Rabbinical ordinances where an excess may in fact be required.
- (19) 'That the terumah fell into the terumah and the unconsecrated fruit etc.' (v. supra), so that no forbidden food had ever entered the basket of the unconsecrated fruit. Such an assumption is obviously inapplicable in the case of the bath.
- (20) נִשֵּׂא. This shews that he is regarded as a proper male. As such he should confer upon his wife the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder. How then could Resh Lakish maintain supra that he does not?
- (21) נִשֵּׂא i.e., if marriage had already taken place it is valid in so far as to require a letter of divorce for its dissolution since it is possible that he is a male. Originally, however, no such marriage is permitted owing to the equal possibility that he is not a male but a female.
- (22) Implying that marriage may be contracted in the first instance. CF. supra n.1.
- (23) נִשֵּׂא. Perfect. Surely this cannot refer to marriage in the first instance but to a marriage already performed?
- (24) The two expressions are not identical.
- (25) The difficulty against the view of Resh Lakish consequently remains, while the opinion of R. Johanan receives confirmation.
- (26) Whether the hermaphrodite is to be regarded as a male. This, then, presents an objection against the view of R. Johanan.
- (27) That the hermaphrodite is regarded as a male.
- (28) The first Tanna.
- (29) Even if it was effected through his female organ.
- (30) R. Eliezer.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 83a

Our Mishnah¹ cannot be maintained in the presence of the following Baraitha. For it was taught: R. Jose stated, 'The hermaphrodite is a creature sui generis, and the Sages did not determine whether he is a male or a female'.² On the contrary; the Baraitha² cannot be maintained in the face of our

Mishnah!³ — As R. Jose left his colleague⁴ it may be inferred that he changed his opinion.⁵

Samuel, however, said: The Baraitha² cannot be maintained in the face of our Mishnah.³ On the contrary; our Mishnah³ cannot be maintained in the face of the Baraitha,² since Samuel was heard to take note of an individual opinion!⁶ — This⁷ applies only to a case where the Mishnah is not thereby uprooted; when the Mishnah, however, is thereby uprooted it need not be taken into consideration.

At the school of Rab it was stated in the name of Rab that the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose in respect of the hermaphrodite and grafting; and Samuel stated: In respect of protracted labour and forfeiture.

As to the 'hermaphrodite', there is the ruling just mentioned.⁸ 'Grafting'? — As we have learned: There must be no planting, no sinking⁹ and no grafting on the eve of the Sabbatical Year¹⁰ within thirty days before the new year; and if one planted or sank or grafted, the tree must be uprooted.¹¹ R. Judah said: Any grafting¹² which takes no root within three days will never take root. R. Jose and R. Simeon stated: [Within] two weeks.¹³ And, [in reference to this.] R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha that according to him who stated, 'thirty days', thirty and thirty are required; according to him who stated 'three days', three and thirty are required;¹⁴ and according to him who stated 'two weeks', two weeks and thirty days are required.¹⁴

'And Samuel stated: In respect of protracted labour and forfeiture'. 'Protracted labour'? — As we learned: How long does the period of protracted labour¹⁵ continue? R. Meir said: Forty or fifty days.¹⁶ R. Judah said: Her [ninth] month is sufficient.¹⁷ R. Jose and R. Simeon said: Protracted labour cannot extend beyond two weeks.¹⁸ 'Forfeiture'? As we have learned: If one causes his vine to overhang¹⁹ above the crops of his neighbour, behold he causes thereby their forfeiture,²⁰ and he is liable to make compensation; so R. Meir. R. Jose and R. Simeon said:

(1) Which attributes to R. Jose the opinion that the hermaphrodite bestows upon his wife the right of eating terumah.

(2) Tosef. Bik. II. Since his sex is a matter of doubt he cannot obviously bestow the right(v. p. 558, n. 12) upon his wife.

(3) V. p. 558. n. 12.

(4) In his statement in the Baraitha where he alone appears as the author. In the Mishnah both R. Jose and R. Simeon appear as the authors.

(5) Which he first expressed in our Mishnah.

(6) If that opinion is more rigid. (Cf. supra 41a Meg. 18b). Here too R. Jose's opinion in the Baraitha is more restrictive than his opinion in our Mishnah and should therefore be taken into consideration!

(7) That an individual opinion is to be taken into consideration.

(8) In our Mishnah (cf. Rashi a.l.).

(9) The sinking of a branch under the ground while one end of it remains attached to the tree and the other end is made to protrude from the ground so that in due course it may develop into an independent tree.

(10) Cf. Lev. XXV, 4ff.

(11) A tree does not take root according to this view, before thirty days from the day of its planting have elapsed, and by that time the Sabbatical Year has already begun where all such agricultural activities are forbidden.

(12) And similarly any planting or sinking.

(13) Sheb. II, 6.

(14) Since the last thirty days of the eve of the Sabbatical Year are regarded as part of the next Sabbatical Year (v. M.K. 3b). the plant, in order that it may be permitted, must have taken root prior to these last thirty days.

(15) During this period a woman is not subject to the restrictions of a zabah (v. Glos.), if the flow occurred during the eleven days that intervene between her menstrual periods, even if the discharge continued for three consecutive days. Such a continuous discharge at any other time, when it cannot be attributed to labour, subjects a woman to the uncleanness of a zabah. As in this case, however, the discharge may be regarded as that attendant on labour, the woman must observe only the days prescribed for one after childbirth (cf. Lev. XII, 2ff) and not those prescribed for a zabah (cf. ibid. XV, 25ff). V. Nid. 36b.

(16) Prior to the birth of the child.

(17) Should the flow begin prior to the ninth month and continue for three consecutive days she is regarded as a zabah.

(18) Nid. 36b.

(19) Lit., 'to cover'. 'to make a shadow'.

(20) Cf. Deut. XXII, 9.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 83b

No man can impose a prohibition upon that which is not his.¹

The question was raised: What would Samuel² have said with regard to the hermaphrodite?³ — Come and hear what Samuel said to R. Anan: The Baraita cannot be maintained in the face of our Mishnah.⁴

What would Samuel have said in respect of grafting?⁵ — Come and hear what Samuel said to R. Anan: Teach in accordance with the view of him who stated 'three and thirty'.

What is the opinion of Rab⁵ in respect of protracted labour?⁶ — This is undecided.⁷

What is Rab's Opinion in respect of forfeiture?⁶ R. Joseph replied. Come and hear what R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: The halachah is not in agreement with R. Jose.

Said Abaye to him:⁸ What reason do you see for relying upon this statement?⁹ Rely rather on that which R. Adda made in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose! — Who is it [that is referred to by the phrase] 'At the school of Rab it was stated'?¹⁰ R. Huna [of course];¹¹ and R. Huna it was who stated that the halachah is not in agreement [with R. Jose].¹²

R. JUDAH STATED: A TUMTUM etc. R. Ammi remarked: What would R. Judah¹³ have done with a case like that of the tumtum of Bairi,¹⁴ who, after having been placed upon the operating table¹⁵ and operated upon, begat seven children!¹⁶ And R. Judah?¹⁷ — He could tell you:¹⁸ An enquiry should be made as to the origin of his children.

It was taught: R. Jose son of R. Judah stated that a tumtum must not participate in halizah, since it is possible that on being operated upon he may be found to be a congenital saris.¹⁹ Is everyone then,²⁰ who is operated upon a male! — It is this that he meant: It is possible that on being operated upon he may be found to be a female; and were he found to be a male, it is even then possible that he might be found to be a congenital saris. What is the practical difference between them?²¹ — Raba replied: The practical difference between them is the question of disqualification²² where other brothers are in existence,²³ and that of halizah where no other brothers exist.²⁴

R. Samuel son of R. Judah said in the name of R. Abba, the brother of R. Judah b. Zabdi, in the name of Rab Judah in the name of Rab: In respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred through either of his organs.

An objection was raised: R. Eliezer stated, 'In respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred as in the case of a male. This, however, applies only to his male organ; but in respect of his female organ no penalty is incurred'.²⁵ — He²⁶ holds the same opinion as the following Tanna. For it was taught: R. Simai stated that in respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred through either of his organs. What is R. Simai's reason? — Raba replied: Bar Hamduri has explained it to me as follows: And thou shalt not lie with a male, as well as with womankind;²⁷ what male is it that is capable of two manners of lying?²⁸ Obviously²⁹ the hermaphrodite. And the Rabbis? — Though he is capable of two manners of lying it is nevertheless written in Scripture.

With a male.³⁰ Whence, however, do the Rabbis³¹ derive the law concerning an ordinary male? — From And.³² Whence³³ the prohibition in respect of unnatural intercourse with a woman? — From Woman.³⁴

R. Shezbi stated in the name of R. Hisda: It is not in all respects that R. Eliezer maintains that the hermaphrodite is a proper male. Since, were you to say so, [such an animal]³⁵ would be fit for consecration.³⁶ And whence is it derived that it³⁷ may not be consecrated? — From what the Rabbis taught: [A bird] that was covered,³⁸ set aside [for idolatrous purposes], or worshipped, that was the hire of a harlot³⁹ or the price of a dog,³⁹ a tumtum or hermaphrodite, causes the defilement of one's clothes⁴⁰ by [contact with one's] oesophagus.⁴¹ R. Eliezer said: [A bird that was] a tumtum or hermaphrodite does not impart the defilement of clothes through contact with one's oesophagus; for R. Eliezer maintained that wherever male and female were mentioned,⁴² the tumtum and hermaphrodite are to be excluded; but [in the case of the sacrifice of a] bird, since in respect of it no mention was made of male or female, the tumtum and hermaphrodite are not to be excluded.⁴³

R. Nahman b. Isaac said: We also learned [a similar Baraitha]: R. Eliezer stated:

(1) Kil. VII, 4; B.K. 100a.

(2) Who only mentioned protracted labour and forfeiture.

(3) Does he agree that here also the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose?

(4) V. supra 83a and cf. supra p. 558. n. 2 and p. 559, n. 1.

(12) In respect of forfeiture, supra.

(13) Who regards the tumtum as a saris even if after an operation he is found to be a male.

(14) A mountain village north of Safed in Palestine, once a famous town.

(15) Lit., 'his (sc. the operator's) chair'.

(16) Which proves, contrary to the opinion of R. Judah, that such a tumtum is no saris.

(17) How could he maintain his opinion in view of this incident?

(18) אמר לך so MS.M.]

(19) Tosef. Yeb. XI. Bek. 42b. A congenital saris (v. Glos.) is, of course, exempt from halizah.

(20) Since R. Jose mentions only the possibility of being a saris and not that of being a female.

(21) Between R. Jose and his father R. Judah. Whether such a tumtum is a doubtful or a certain saris he is, in either case, exempt from halizah.

(22) From the levirate marriage.

(23) Besides the tumtum. According to R. Judah, who regards him as definitely a saris, the widow, if the tumtum submitted to her halizah, is not thereby disqualified from subsequently marrying any of the other brothers, since the halizah of a saris is null and void. According to R. Jose, however, the widow is disqualified, since the tumtum might possibly be a male and his halizah might be valid.

(24) According to R. Judah no halizah takes place; while according to R. Jose halizah must be performed owing to the possibility of his being a male.

As for the reasons stated, the bird is unfit for the altar, pinching (which is not the ritual mode of slaughter for unconsecrated birds) renders the bird nebelah (v. Glos.) which imparts uncleanness to one's clothes. V. infra n. 10.
- (41) I.e., through eating it. It is in this manner, and not by touch, that the nebelah of a clean bird (cf. Deut. XIV, 11) imparts uncleanness to a person.
- (42) In the Torah.
- (43) Bek. 42a, Zeb. 85b. Since in the case of sacrifices of beasts, male and female were mentioned, it is obvious that, according to R. Eliezer, no tumtum or hermaphrodite is suitable.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 84a

A hybrid, terefah,¹ one that was extracted through the abdominal wall,² the tumtum and the hermaphrodite can neither become sacred nor can they impart sanctity to others; is and Samuel explained: They neither become sacred by means of exchange,³ nor do they impart sanctity [to any other beast]⁴ by causing it to become an exchange.⁵ This proves [what has been said].

R. ELIEZER STATED . . . THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE. It was taught: Rabbi related, 'When I went to learn Torah at [the school of] R. Eleazar b. Shammu'a, his disciples combined against me like the cocks of Beth Bukya⁶ and did not let me learn more than this single thing in our Mishnah: R. ELIEZER STATED: [FOR COPULATION WITH] AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.

CHAPTER IX

MISHNAH. SOME WOMEN ARE PERMITTED⁷ TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN⁷ TO THEIR LEVIRS,⁸ OTHERS ARE PERMITTED⁷ TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN⁷ TO THEIR HUSBANDS, OTHERS ARE PERMITTED TO BOTH THE FORMER AND THE LATTER, WHILE OTHERS ARE FORBIDDEN TO THE FORMER AS WELL AS TO THE LATTER. IN THE FOLLOWING CASES THE WOMEN⁹ ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR LEVIRS: IF A COMMON PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST; IF A HALAL¹⁰ WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS¹¹ HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS;¹² IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, 'OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE PERMITTED⁷ TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN⁷ TO THEIR LEVIRS.

THE FOLLOWING⁹ ARE PERMITTED⁷ TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN⁷ TO THEIR HUSBANDS: IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO BETROTHED A WIDOW¹³ HAD A BROTHER A COMMON PRIEST; IF ONE OF LEGITIMATE STATUS¹² WHO MARRIED A HALALAH¹⁰ HAD A BROTHER A HALAL;¹⁰ IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR HUSBANDS.

THE FOLLOWING¹⁴ ARE FORBIDDEN¹⁵ TO BOTH THE FORMER AND THE LATTER;¹⁶ IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST, OR IF A COMMON PRIEST OF LEGITIMATE STATUS¹⁷ WHO MARRIED A HALALAH¹⁸ HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS,¹⁷ OR IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE FORBIDDEN¹⁵ BOTH TO THE FORMER AND THE LATTER.¹⁶ ALL OTHER WOMEN ARE PERMITTED¹⁵ TO BOTH THEIR HUSBANDS AND THEIR LEVIRS.

[IN RESPECT OF] RELATIVES OF THE SECOND GRADE, [WHO ARE FORBIDDEN] BY THE ORDINANCES OF THE SCRIBES,¹⁹ A WOMAN WHO IS WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE HUSBAND BUT NOT WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE LEVIR,²⁰ IS FORBIDDEN TO THE HUSBAND AND PERMITTED TO THE LEVIR; [A WOMAN WHO IS WITHIN] THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE LEVIR BUT NOT WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE HUSBAND IS FORBIDDEN TO THE LEVIR AND PERMITTED TO THE HUSBAND; [WHILE ONE WHO IS WITHIN] THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE ONE AND TO THE OTHER IS FORBIDDEN TO THE ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER. SHE CANNOT CLAIM EITHER KETHUBAH,¹⁸ OR USUFRUCT,²¹ OR ALIMONY, OR HER WORN CLOTHES.²² [SHOULD A] CHILD [BE BORN HE] IS ELIGIBLE [FOR THE PRIESTHOOD]; BUT THE HUSBAND MUST BE COMPELLED TO DIVORCE HER. A WIDOW, HOWEVER, WHO WAS MARRIED TO A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCEE OR HALUZAH WHO WAS MARRIED TO A COMMON PRIEST, A BASTARD OR A NETHINAH²³ WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, OR THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A NATHIN²³ OR A BASTARD IS ENTITLED TO HER KETHUBAH.

GEMARA. What was the point in teaching MARRIED?²⁴ He could have taught: ‘Betrothed’!²⁵ And were you to reply that the reason [for the prohibition²⁶ is only] because he MARRIED, since [in that case]²⁷ a positive²⁸ as well as a negative²⁹ precept is involved,³⁰ but where betrothal only took place the positive precept²⁶ does override the negative;³¹ but [it could be retorted] the whole of our section deals with a positive,³² versus a negative precept.³³ and the positive nevertheless does not override the negative! — As it was desired to state in the final clause, A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW, [who is forbidden]³⁴ only where [the High Priest] MARRIED her, since in that case he caused her to be a halalah, but [not where he only] betrothed [her in which case] she is permitted [to his brother],³⁵ he taught in the first clause also: MARRIED.

But why should the expression³⁶ be determined by³⁷ the final clause? Let it be determined by³⁸ the middle clause: IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO BETROTHED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A COMMON PRIEST!³⁹ — The determining factor,⁴⁰ rather, is the case immediately following in the same context.⁴¹ As it was desired to teach, IF A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS, where the reason [for her prohibition⁴² is] because [the halal] MARRIED her and thus caused her to become a halalah, but where he had only betrothed her she would have been permitted to him; MARRIED was, therefore, taught [here also].⁴³

What point, however, was there in teaching, A widow? He should have taught: ‘A virgin’!⁴⁴

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 84b

And should you reply that this Tanna holds the opinion that the original marriage¹ causes the subjection;² behold, [it may be pointed out, the case of] the HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS³ where it is not said that 'the original marriage causes the subjection'!⁴ — This⁵ is certainly due to the final clause. As it was desired to teach in the final clause, IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST OR A COMMON PRIEST, where [the prohibition⁶ applies to] a WIDOW only⁷ but [not to] a virgin who is eligible to marry him,⁸ therefore, WIDOW was taught [here also].⁹

R. Papa demurred: If the law is in agreement with the following ruling¹⁰ which R. Dimi, when he came,¹¹ reported in the name of R. Johanan, viz., that if an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian woman of the first generation her son is regarded as belonging to the second generation,¹² [our Mishnah] should also have taught: If an Egyptian of the second generation married two Egyptian women, one of the first, and the other of the second generation, and he had sons from the first and from the second, [the wives of these sons], if they¹³ married in the proper manner,¹⁴ are permitted to their husbands but forbidden to their levirs,¹⁵ and if they married in the reverse order¹⁶ [the wives] are permitted to their levirs¹⁷ and forbidden to their husbands;¹⁸ proselyte women¹⁹ are permitted to the one as well as to the other,²⁰ and women who are incapable of procreation are forbidden to the one as well as the other!²¹ — He taught some cases and omitted others. What else did he omit that he should have omitted this also? — He omitted [the case of the man] wounded in the stones.²² If this is all that can be pointed out,²³ the case of the man wounded in the stones cannot be regarded as an instance of an omission, since those that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts were [already] mentioned!²⁴ — Were not several specific cases mentioned²⁵ of those that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts? Surely it was stated, IF A COMMON PRIEST MARRIED A WIDOW and then again IF A HALAL MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS!²⁶ That case²⁷ was required [for the specific purpose] of informing us [that the law is] in agreement with [the ruling] Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab. For Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth.²⁸

But, surely, he taught regarding A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS and then again regarding AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE AND HE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD!²⁹ — This also is not a repetition of what was already taught, since thereby he taught us [first] regarding a negative precept which is not applicable to all³⁰ and then he taught us regarding a negative precept which is applicable to all. But did he not teach³¹ IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE!³² Consequently³³ it must be concluded that he taught some cases while others he omitted. This proves it.

[Reverting to] the main text, 'Rab Judah reported in the name Of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth'. Might it be suggested that the following provides support for his view? [It was stated], A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS; does not [this refer to] a priestess (who was fitting unto him),³⁴ and is not the meaning of³⁵ LEGITIMATE STATUS eligible for priesthood!³⁶ — No; [it might refer to] the daughter of an Israelite, and LEGITIMATE STATUS means³⁵ eligible for the assembly.³⁷ If so, HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS would also [mean] 'eligible for the assembly', from which it would follow that he himself is ineligible for the assembly!³⁸ Consequently it must refer to a priest; and since he is a priest she also must be a priestess.³⁹ What an argument! Each phrase may bear its own peculiar interpretation.⁴⁰

Rabin b. Nahman raised an objection: They shall not take . . . they shall not take⁴¹ teaches⁴² that the prohibition was addressed to the woman through the man!⁴³ — Raba replied, [This is the meaning]: Where the prohibition is applicable to him it is also applicable to her, but where it is not applicable to him it is also inapplicable to her.⁴⁴ Is this,⁴⁵ however, deduced from this text? Surely it was deduced from a text which Rab Judah expounded in the name of Rab! For Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab and so it was taught at the school of R. Ishmael: When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit;⁴⁶ Scripture compared the woman to the man in respect of all the punishments in the Torah!⁴⁷ — If deduction had been made from that [text]⁴⁸ it might have been assumed [to apply only to] a prohibition that is equally applicable to all, but not to a prohibition that is not equally applicable to all.⁴⁸

(1) Of the deceased brother.

(2) Of the woman to the levirate marriage, i.e. , the widow's status at the time of her husband's death is determined by the status in which she found herself when he married her, not by that in which his death placed her, consequently if at the time of the marriage she was a virgin she would not have been regarded as a widow and would, therefore, have been permitted to marry a priest.

(3) Who becomes, thereby. disqualified from marrying his brother.

(4) Had this been the case, his brother should have been permitted to marry her, owing to the fact that at the time of her marriage with the deceased (when she presumably became subject to the levirate marriage) she was no halalah.

(5) The mention of WIDOW rather than 'virgin'.

(6) To her husband who was a High Priest. and to the levir who was a common priest.

(7) Who becomes a halalah through such a forbidden marriage.

(8) The High Priest, (her first husband) and, after his death, also his brother if he was a common priest.

(9) In the first case, that of the common priest who married a widow.

(10) Lit., 'if there is that'.

(11) From Palestine to Babylon.

(12) Supra 78a.

(13) The sons.

(14) I.e., if the son of the Egyptian of the second generation, who thus belongs to the third and is permitted to enter the assembly (v. Deut. XXIII, 9), married the daughter of an Israelite; while the other who belongs to the second generation married an Egyptian of the second generation.

(15) Should one of the brothers die without issue. The son of the third generation is forbidden to marry the Egyptian of the second generation, while the son of the second generation is forbidden to marry the daughter of an Israelite.

(16) I.e., if the son of the second generation married the daughter of an Israelite, while the son of the third generation married an Egyptian of the second generation.

(17) Cf. supra n. 5 mutandis mutandis.

(18) Cf. supra. 6 mutatis mutandis.

(19) Who are not included in the term 'assembly of the Lord' (v. Deut. XXIII, 9).

(20) Both the Israelite and (for the reason indicated in n. 10) the Egyptian of the second generation may marry a proselyte.

(21) The son of the second generation may not marry her because she is the daughter of an Israelite, while after his death she is forbidden to his brother because a woman who is incapable of procreation is not subject to the levirate marriage and is consequently forbidden to him as his brother's wife.

(22) In respect of such a maimed person, prohibition and permission similar to those in our Mishnah could be stated: If he is maimed and his brother is fit the woman is forbidden to him (v. Deut. XXIII, 2) and permitted to his brother; if he is fit and his brother maimed she is permitted to him and forbidden to his brother; if both are maimed etc. proselyte women are permitted to both.

(23) Lit., 'if because of'.

(24) And among these, this case also is included. What proof, then, is there that any cases other than that of R. Dimi were omitted?

(25) Lit., 'did he not teach and then taught again'.

(26) Which proves that the Mishnah did not avoid giving more than one example of the same type of prohibition.

(27) Of a halal who married a woman of legitimate status.

(28) Kid. 731, 76a, infra 85a. The purpose of our Mishnah in giving the law of the halal was not to teach the prohibition of the woman to the levir (which, of course, as pointed out supra, was unnecessary) but her permission to marry a husband though he is a halal and she is of legitimate status or of pure priestly stock. The prohibition to marry one of impure stock is incumbent upon the man and not upon the woman.

(29) Which shews that the Mishnah did not avoid giving more than one example of the same type of prohibition.

(30) The case of the halal is applicable to priests only, not to Israelites.

(31) Lit., 'surely he taught'.

(32) Also a case of a negative precept! (cf. n. 7). Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis 'and a bastard who married a bastard and he has a brother an Israelite', which Rashal omits.

(33) Lit., 'but not'?

(34) Though he may marry the daughter of an Israelite he should preferably marry the daughter of a priest. Cf. Pes. 49a. [The bracketed words are rightly omitted in MS.M].

(35) Lit., 'and what'.

(36) To marry a priest. Which is in agreement with the opinion of Rab.

(37) I.e. 'to marry an Israelite.

(38) Surely not!

(39) I.e., since the term 'legitimate status in the case of the man has reference to a priest, so the reference in the case of the woman must be to a priestess which shews that a priestess may marry one of tainted birth.

(40) Lit., 'that as it is and that as it is'.

(41) Lev. XXI, 7.

(42) Since the expression was repeated.

(43) This is now assumed to mean that as the untainted priest may not marry a halalah so may not the untainted priestess marry a halal. An objection against the opinion of Rab.

(44) The halalah whom an untainted priest is forbidden to marry is herself forbidden to marry such a priest. The untainted priestess however, whom a halal is not forbidden to marry, may also marry the halal.

(45) The equality of men and women in respect of prohibitions

(46) Num. v, 6.

(47) Whether flogging or kareth.

(48) That of the priesthood does not apply to Israelites. Hence it was necessary to have the text of Lev. XXI, 7.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 85a

Behold, however, [the prohibition against] defilement¹ which is a prohibition that is not equally applicable to all² and [yet the sole] reason [why it is inapplicable to woman is] because the All Merciful wrote The sons of Aaron³ and not the daughters of Aaron; had, however, no such text been available⁴ it would have been assumed that women also come under the same obligation. What is the reason? Obviously⁵ because of the deduction Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab!⁶ — No; this might have been deduced from They shall not take.⁷

Others Say:⁸ [The prohibition in regard] to marrying had to be specified.⁹ Since it might have been assumed that it¹⁰ should be inferred from [that relating to] defilement,¹¹ therefore he taught us¹² [that women are subject to the same prohibition as men].

R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua once happened to be at Hinzebu,¹³ the town of R. Idi b. Abin, when the following question was asked of them: Were women of legitimate [priestly] status forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth or not? R. Papa replied, 'You have learned it [in the following]. Ten different genealogical classes went up from Babylon:¹⁴ Priests, Levites, Israelites, halalim,¹⁵ proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,¹⁶ shethuki¹⁷ and asufi.¹⁷ Priests, Levites and Israelites may intermarry with one another. Levites, Israelites, halalim, proselytes and emancipated slaves may intermarry with one another. Proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,¹⁶ shethuki¹⁷ and asufi¹⁷ are permitted to intermarry with one another.'¹⁸ That daughters of priests, however, [may be married to a] halal was not mentioned.¹⁹ Said R. Huna son of R. Joshua to him: Only cases where the women may marry the men, and the men may marry the women were enumerated;²⁰ the case of the Priest, however,²¹ was not mentioned, because a halalah, should he even desire to marry one, is forbidden to him.²² When they came before R. Idi b. Abin he said to them, 'O, school-children! Thus said Rab Judah in the name of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of illegitimate Status'.²³

[IN RESPECT OF] RELATIVES OF THE SECOND GRADE [WHO ARE FORBIDDEN] BY THE ORDINANCES OF THE SCRIBES etc. The men of Bairi²⁴ enquired of R. Shesheth: Is a woman who is of the second grade of kinship to her husband but not to her levir entitled to claim her kethubah from the levir or not? [Do we say that] since a Master said that her kethubah²⁵ is a charge on the estate of her first husband²⁶ she has no [claim upon the levir];²⁷ or, possibly, since the Rabbis have ordained that wherever she is unable to obtain it from her first husband²⁸ [she may collect it] from the second, she²⁹ is entitled to claim it³⁰ [from the levir]? R. Shesheth replied, 'You have learned this: Her kethubah²⁵ is a charge upon the estate of her first husband, but if she was a relative of the second grade of kinship to her husband she receives nothing even from the levir.

Does [the expression,³¹ however,] imply that some [widows] do receive their³⁰ kethubah from the levir!³² — There is a lacuna, and thus it is the correct reading.³³ Her kethubah²⁵ is a charge upon the estate of her first husband; and if she obtains nothing from the first, the Rabbis have ordained [that she is to receive it] from the second; but if she was a relative of the second grade of kinship to her husband she receives nothing even from the levir.

R. Eleazar enquired of R. Johanan: Is a widow [who was married] to a High Priest, or a divorcee or a haluzah [who was married] to a common priest entitled to maintenance or not? How is this question to be understood? If [it is a case] where she still lives with him,³⁴ would she, when it is his duty to divorce her,³⁵ be entitled to receive maintenance!³⁶ — This question was necessary in the case³⁷ where he went to a country beyond the sea and she borrowed money wherewith to maintain herself;³⁸ it being desired to ascertain³⁹ whether, [owing to the fact that] maintenance³⁹ among the conditions of the kethubah, she is entitled to maintenance just as she is entitled to the kethubah, or is she entitled to the kethubah only because she receives it and goes, but not to maintenance which might induce her to remain with him? — The other replied: She is not entitled to maintenance.⁴⁰ But, surely, it was taught: She is entitled to maintenance.⁴¹ — That was taught In respect of [alimony] after [her husband's] death.⁴²

Another reading:⁴³ He said to him, 'It was taught: She is entitled to maintenance'.⁴¹ 'Surely', [the other asked], 'it is his duty to divorce her!'⁴⁴ 'But then', [the first retorted], 'it was taught: She is entitled to maintenance'!⁴¹ — 'That', [the other replied], 'was taught in respect of [alimony] after his death'.⁴²

Our Rabbis taught: A widow [who was married] to a High Priest, or a divorcee or haluzah [who was married] to a common priest is entitled to her kethubah, usufruct,⁴⁵ alimony and worn clothes,⁴⁶ but she becomes thereby unfit, and her child is unfit, and [the husband] is compelled to divorce her. Relatives of the second grade of kinship [who are forbidden] by the ordinances of scribes are entitled neither to kethubah, nor to usufruct,⁴⁵ nor to alimony⁴⁶ nor to worn clothes;⁴⁶ the woman remains fit and her child is fit; but [the husband] is compelled to divorce her. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, 'Why was it ordained that a widow married to a High Priest is entitled to her kethubah? Because he becomes unfit⁴⁷ and she becomes unfit and wherever he becomes unfit and she becomes unfit⁴⁸

(2) Having been given to priests only. v. Lev. XXI, 1ff.

(3) Ibid. 2.

(4) Lit., 'but (if) not so'.

(5) Lit., 'not?'

(6) Which shews that even a prohibition which is not applicable to all would be assumed to be applicable to women by deduction from Rab's text!

(7) Lev. XXI, 7, from which it has been deduced (supra 84b, end) that women are subject to the same prohibitions as men even where the prohibitions are not applicable to all. Hence the necessity for the text of Lev. XXI, 1, which excludes women. From Num. v, 6, however, it may still be maintained, deduction could be made only in respect of a prohibition that is applicable to all.

(8) Although the equality of men and women in respect of prohibitions could be deduced from the text cited by Rab Judah in the name of Rab.

(9) Lit., 'taking was necessary for him', with reference to the verse, 'They shall not take'.

(10) The prohibition of the marriage of the halalah to a halal.

(11) Which, as has just been shewn, applies only to men and not to women.

(12) In the case of marriage by the text of Lev. XXI, 7.

(32) Which is contrary to the ruling supra that the kethubah remains a charge upon the estate of the first husband.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 85b

[the Rabbis] have penalized him [by ordering him to pay her] kethubah.¹ And why was it ordained that relatives of the second grade of kinship, [who are forbidden] by the ordinances of the Rabbis, are not to receive their kethubah? Because the man remains fit and the woman remains fit, and wherever he as well as she remains fit [the Rabbis] have penalized her [by depriving her of her] kethubah.² Rabbi said, 'The former³ are prohibitions⁴ of the Torah, and prohibitions of the Torah require no reinforcement;⁵ while the latter⁶ are prohibitions of the scribes, and the prohibitions of the scribes require reinforcement.⁷ Another reason⁸ is: In the former case the man induces the woman⁹ [into the marriage];¹⁰ in the latter case she induces him.¹¹ Who stated the 'other reason'? One opinion asserts¹² that it was R. Simeon b. Eleazar who stated it; and he gave an answer¹³ [to the question] 'what is the reason'. 'What is the reason', [he said in effect,] 'why it was ordained that when the man is unfit and the woman is unfit the man is penalized by having to pay the kethubah? Because he induces the woman into the marriage.¹⁴ And what is the reason why when he remains fit and she remains fit she is penalized by losing her kethubah? Because she induces him, [into the marriage]'.¹⁵ Another opinion asserts¹² that it was Rabbi¹⁶ who stated it, because the case of the haluzah presented to him the following difficulty: A haluzah, surely, is only Rabbinically [forbidden to be married to a common priest]¹⁷ and yet she receives her kethubah.¹⁸ Thereupon he stated: Since the man disqualifies her by Rabbinical law¹⁹ it is he, [who in the former case], induces²⁰ her [into marriage]²¹ but in the latter case it is she that induces him [into marriage].²²

What practical difference is there between [the reason given by] Rabbi and [that given by] R. Simeon b. Eleazar? — R. Hisda replied: The practical difference between them is the case of a bastard or a nethinah [who was married] to an Israelite. According to him who gave the reason²³ that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case²⁴ also is Pentateuchal;²⁵ but according to him who gave as the reason,²³ that the man induces the woman²⁶ then here, it is she that induces him [into the marriage].²⁷ According to R. Eliezer, however, who²⁸ stated, 'Behold he²⁹ is both a slave and a bastard',³⁰ the woman, surely, would not induce the man at all!³¹ — Rather, said R. Joseph, the practical difference between them³² is the case of the man who remarried his divorced wife after she had been married.³³ According to him who gave the reason³⁴ that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case³⁵ also is Pentateuchal;³⁶ but according to him who gave as the reason³⁴ that the man induces the woman³⁷ then here, surely, she induces him.³⁸

But according to R. Akiba who stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of a negative precept is deemed to be a bastard,³⁹ she,⁴⁰ surely, would not induce the man at all!⁴¹

Rather, said R. Papai the practical difference between them⁴² is the case of a be'ulah⁴³ [who was married] to a High Priest.⁴⁴ According to him who gave as the reason³⁴ that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case also is Pentateuchal;⁴⁵ but according to him who gave as the reason³⁴ that the man induces the woman,³⁷ then here, surely, it is she that induces him.⁴⁶

According to R. Eliezer b. Jacob, however, who stated that the offspring of a union that is forbidden under a positive precept is deemed a halal,⁴⁷ she,⁴⁸ surely, would not at all induce him!⁴⁹

Rather, said R. Ashi, the practical difference between them⁴² is the case of the man who cohabits again with his doubtful sotah.⁵⁰ According to him who stated that the reason³⁴ is that [the prohibition is] Pentateuchal, then this case also is Pentateucha⁴⁶ but according to him who stated that the reason³⁴ is that the man induces the woman³⁷ here it is she that induces him.⁴⁶

And according to R. Mathia b. Heresh who stated that even a woman whose husband, while going to arrange for her drinking [of the water of bitterness]⁵¹ cohabited with her on the way, is rendered a harlot, she,⁵² surely, would not at all induce him [to such a marriage]!⁵³ Rather, said Mar b. R. Ashi, the practical difference between them⁵⁴ is the case of a confirmed sotah⁵⁵.

MISHNAH. THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A PRIEST, WAS PREGNANT FROM A PRIEST, OR WAS AWAITING THE DECISION OF A LEVIR WHO WAS A PRIEST; AND, SIMILARLY, THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST [WHO STOOD IN SUCH RELATIONSHIP] TO AN ISRAELITE, MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.⁵⁶ THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A LEVITE, WAS PREGNANT FROM A LEVITE, OR WAS AWAITING THE DECISION OF A LEVIR WHO WAS A LEVITE; AND, SIMILARLY, THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE [WHO STOOD IN SUCH RELATIONSHIP] TO AN ISRAELITE MAY NOT EAT TITHE.⁵⁷ THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A PRIEST, WAS PREGNANT FROM A PRIEST, OR WAS AWAITING THE DECISION OF A LEVIR WHO WAS A PRIEST; AND, SIMILARLY, THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST [WHO STOOD IN SUCH RELATIONSHIP TO A LEVITE, MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE.

GEMARA. And granted that she⁵⁸ is [no more than] an ordinary woman,⁵⁹ is not any ordinary woman permitted to eat tithe?⁶⁰ R. Nahman replied in the name of Samuel: This ruling represents the view of R. Meir⁶¹ who stated: The first tithe is forbidden to common people.⁶² For it was taught:

- (1) The woman is already penalized by a marriage which taints both herself and her husband and which is naturally followed by an unhappy family life. In such circumstances the woman would either not consent to marriage or would be anxious to have such a union severed at the earliest possible moment. The penalty was, therefore, imposed upon the husband.
- (2) In order that she might, in consequence, be deterred from contracting such a marriage or, if contracted, be anxious to have it severed.
- (3) Lit., 'those', the marriage of a widow to a High Priest and that of a divorcee or haluzah to a common priest.
- (4) Lit., 'words'.
- (5) Hence there was no need to deprive the woman of her kethubah. Cf. supra n. 1.
- (6) Marriages with relatives of the second grade of kinship.
- (7) Cf. supra n. 1.
- (8) Why in the former case the man is to pay the kethubah while in the latter the woman loses her kethubah.
- (9) Lit., '(in) this he leads her'. מרגילה denom. of רגל 'foot' (cf. Jast.). Colds. (a.l.) renders 'befleckt er sie'.
- (10) The woman is reluctant to contract a marriage which taints her and her children.
- (11) As the marriage subjects neither the woman nor her children to any disability, it is assumed that she, as a woman, is more anxious than the man to marry.
- (12) Lit., 'there is (one) who said'.
- (13) Lit., 'he said'.
- (14) V. supra notes 8 and 9.
- (15) V. supra note 10.
- (16) Who had previously explained that the reason why the woman was deprived of her kethubah was because prohibitions of the scribes require reinforcement.
- (17) Cf. Kid. 78a.
- (18) If Rabbinical prohibitions require reinforcement the haluzah should not have been entitled to her kethubah. (Cf. supra p. 576, n. 2).

- (19) [(a) According to Rashi: from eating terumah; (b) MS. M. reads: 'he disqualifies her seed by rabbinic law'. Cf. also Me'iri].
- (20) V. supra p. 576, n. 8.
- (21) The woman is reluctant to contract such a union.
- (22) V. supra p. 576, n. 10.
- (23) Why in the former case, supra, the woman is entitled to her kethubah.
- (24) Of the bastard or the nethinah.
- (25) And the woman is, therefore, entitled to her kethubah.
- (26) Into the marriage.
- (27) She, being in any case forbidden to marry an Israelite, has nothing to lose by her marriage which, under certain conditions, may even be advantageous to her, since according to R. Tarfon (cf. Kid. 69a, supra 78a), it may enable her descendants to become proper Israelites. The woman, therefore, loses her kethubah.
- (28) Disagreeing with the view of R. Tarfon. (Cf. supra n. 11).
- (29) The son of a union between a bastard and a slave.
- (30) And can never become a legitimate Israelite. Cf. Kid. 69a.
- (31) Why then should she lose her kethubah?
- (32) Rabbi and R. Simeon b Eleazar.
- (33) After she had been married to another man. V. Rashi and cf. Bah a.l. Cur. edd. read, 'a divorced woman after she had been married'.
- (34) V. supra p. 57, n. 7.
- (35) The remarriage of one's divorcee.
- (36) It is pentateuchally forbidden to marry such a woman. (V. Deut. XXIV, 4). Cf. supra p. 57, n. 9.
- (37) Into the marriage.
- (38) Since the prohibition was addressed to the man; and neither the woman nor her children are subject to any disability in consequence of such a marriage.
- (39) V. supra 49a.
- (40) The divorced woman who has been married to another man and whose remarriage with her first husband is forbidden by a negative precept.
- (41) She would not be anxious to contract a union the issue from which would be bastards.
- (42) Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Eleazar.
- (43) A woman who has lost her virginity. v. Glos.
- (44) Such a union is forbidden under the positive precept. A virgin . . . shall he take (Lev. XXI, 14), and not by a negative one. A negative precept derived from a positive has only the force of a positive. The offspring therefore, would be no bastard even according to R. Akiba.
- (45) Cf. supra n. 11 and supra p. 57, n. 9.
- (46) V. supra note 5.
- (47) V. supra 600.
- (48) A be'ulah.
- (49) Since such a marriage would render her child a halal.
- (50) V. Glos. Such a woman is pentateuchally forbidden to her husband though the offspring of the union is not regarded as a bastard. V. supra 49b.
- (51) V. Num. V, 18f.
- (52) The doubtful sotah.
- (53) Which would render her a harlot and her children bastards.
- (54) Rabbi and R. Eleazar b. Simeon.
- (55) Who is Pentateuchally forbidden to her husband though their offspring is not deemed to be a bastard. As she herself is in any case forbidden to marry a priest she has nothing to lose by cohabiting with her husband, and she would consequently persuade him to live with her again. Hence the ordinance that in such a case she loses the rights to her kethubah.
- (56) As explained supra 67b.
- (57) Which is the due of the Levites. V. Num. XVIII, 24.
- (58) The daughter of the Israelite or the Levite who was betrothed etc. to a Levite and an Israelite respectively.

(59) זָרָה (masc. זָר), lit., 'a stranger', not of priestly, or levitical stock.

(60) Of course she is. Why, then, does our Mishnah forbid it?

(61) Lit., 'this, who is it? It is R. Meir'.

(62) Supra 74a. Cf. supra note 1 and p. 579, n. 7.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 86a

Terumah to the priest and the first tithe to the Levite;¹ so R. Meir. R. Eleazar b. Azariah permits it to the priest,² 'Permits it'!³ Does this then imply that some authority forbids it?⁴ Read, therefore, 'He may give it to the priest also'. What is R. Meir's reason? R. Aha son of Rabbah replied on the authority of a traditional statement:⁵ For the tithe of the children of Israel, which they set apart as terumah unto the Lord,⁶ as terumah is forbidden to common people so is the first tithe forbidden to common people. May it be assumed that⁷ as in the case of terumah the penalties of death and of a fifth⁸ are incurred, so are the penalties of death and of a fifth incurred in the case of tithe? — Scripture stated, And die therein if they profane it⁹ . . . then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it;¹⁰ 'therein',¹¹ but not in the tithe; 'Into it'¹² but not unto tithe. And the Rabbis?¹³ — As terumah is a cause of tebel¹⁴ so is the first tithe a cause of tebel;¹⁵ and this is in agreement with what was taught: R. Jose said, It might have been presumed that guilt is incurred only for tebel from which nothing whatsoever¹⁶ had been set apart; whence is it deduced [that guilt is also incurred when] terumah gedolah¹⁷ had been set apart but not the first tithe,¹⁸ first tithe but not the second tithe¹⁹ or even if the poor man's tithe²⁰ [only had not been set apart]? Scripture stated, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates²¹ and further on it was stated, That they may eat within thy gates, and be satisfied;²² as 'Thy gates' which was stated below²² refers to the poor man's tithe,²³ so 'Thy gates' which was stated here²¹ refers to the poor man's tithe, and [concerning it] the All Merciful has said, Thou mayest not.²⁴ And if the deduction had been made from that text²⁵ only²⁶ it might have been assumed [to imply the penalty] of a negative precept²⁷ but not [the penalty of] death; hence we were taught [the earlier text²⁸ also].²⁹

Another reading: That the first tithe is a cause of tebel³⁰ may surely be deduced from the text cited by R. Jose!³¹ — If [deduction had been made] from that text²⁵ only³² it might have been assumed [to imply the penalty] of a negative precept²⁷ but not the penalty of death; hence we were taught [the earlier text²⁸ also].²⁹

How did you explain it?³³ In accordance with the view of R. Meir! Explain, then, the final clause: THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A PRIEST and THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST . . . TO A LEVITE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE; what [bearing has the question of] non-priestly stock in this case?³⁴ — R. Shesheth replied: The meaning of³⁵ the expression,³⁶ SHE MAY NOT EAT is that she may not give permission to one to set apart³⁷ the tithe.³⁸ Does this³⁹ then imply that a married woman may give such permission? — Yes; and so it was taught: And ye may eat it in every place, ye and your household⁴⁰ teaches that a married daughter of an Israelite⁴¹ may give permission for terumah⁴² to be set apart.⁴³ You say: Permission for terumah⁴³ to be set apart; perhaps it is not so, but to eat it?⁴⁴ It can be replied: If she⁴⁵ may eat terumah which is subject to greater restrictions, how much more may she⁴⁶ eat tithe which is subject to lesser restrictions.⁴⁷ The text⁴⁸ must consequently⁴⁹ have taught that a married daughter of an Israelite may give permission for terumah⁴² to be set apart.⁴³

Mar the son of Rabana⁵⁰ stated: This⁵¹ teaches that she is not given a share in the tithe in the threshing- floors.⁵² This is a satisfactory explanation according to him who holds that this⁵³ is due to considerations of privacy governing the sexes;⁵⁴ according to him, however, who holds that this⁵³ is due to [possible abuse by] a divorced woman,⁵⁵ may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a Levite⁵⁶ eat tithe?⁵⁷ — And according to your argument, may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a priest eat terumah!⁵⁸ But [the fact is that the ordinance⁵⁹ is] a preventive measure against [abuse by] a divorced woman who was the daughter of an Israelite.⁶⁰ If so,⁶¹ what was the point in mentioning BETROTHED? [The same rule should be applied] even to one who was married! — As in the first clause BETROTHED was taught,⁶² BETROTHED was also taught in the final clause.⁶³

Our Rabbis taught: Terumah gedolah⁶⁴ belongs to the priest, and the first tithe belongs to the Levite; so R. Akiba. R. Eleazar b. Azariah said:

- (1) As the terumah must be given to the priest and may be eaten by priests only and not by common people so must the first tithe also be given to Levites and be eaten by Levites only and not by common people (v. Rashi).
- (2) Keth. 26a.
- (3) The eating of tithe by a priest.
- (4) Which is absurd. A priest, surely, is not included among the 'common' people to whom tithe should be forbidden!
- (5) Attributed to R. Meir himself.
- (6) Num. XVIII, 24; terumah (E.V. gift) and tithe having been mentioned in juxtaposition.
- (7) Lit., 'if'.
- (8) Cf. Lev. XXII. 14.
- (9) Ibid. 9.
- (10) Ibid. 14.
- (11) Shall the penalty of death be incurred.
- (12) Shall a fifth be added.
- (13) How do they explain the comparison between the terumah and tithe to which Scripture points?
- (14) טָבֵל v. Glos. The penalty for eating tebel is death.
- (15) V. supra n. 18, though for the eating of the tithe itself no death penalty is incurred.
- (16) Neither the priestly, nor the levitical dues.
- (17) V. Glos.
- (18) Which is not so sacred as terumah, being permitted to Levites.
- (19) Which even common people are permitted to eat. Cf. Deut. XIV, 22-27.
- (20) Which is not even sacred, it being regarded as mere alms.
- (21) Deut. XII, 17, speaking of tithe.
- (22) Ibid. XXVI, 12, speaking of the tithe of the poor man.
- (23) The text speaking of the third year, (ibid.). The third and the sixth year of the Septennial cycle are the years in which the poor man's, instead of the second tithe is given to all who are in need of it.
- (24) Eat, (ibid. XII, 17), before it is set apart from the produce.
- (25) Deut. XII, 17, speaking of tithe.
- (26) Lit., 'and if from there'.
- (27) For the eating of the tithe, since the prohibition only was stated, but no death penalty was mentioned.
- (28) Num. XVIII, 24.
- (29) From which a comparison is made between the tithe and terumah. Cf. supra p. 580. n. 10.
- (30) V. Glos.
- (31) In the Baraita just discussed. What need, then, was there for the comparison deduced from Num. XVIII, 24?
- (32) Lit., 'if from that'.
- (33) The reference to tithe in the case of THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A LEVITE, and THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE... TO AN ISRAELITE.
- (34) Lit., 'what strangeness is there here'; neither the daughter of a priest nor the daughters of a Levite are 'strangers' or 'common' women to whom tithe is forbidden.
- (35) Lit., 'what'.
- (36) Lit., 'that was taught'.
- (37) From the produce of her betrothed, or of the levir whose decision she is awaiting.
- (38) And the terumah of this tithe (cf. Num. XVIII, 26) so that she might be enabled to eat of the tithe. The reason for the prohibition is not because the tithe is forbidden to her, but because she is not entitled to appoint an agent for the setting apart of terumah without the owner's knowledge.

- (39) Since BETROTHED was mentioned.
- (40) Num. XVIII, 31. The husband (ye) was compared to his wife (household; בית term for 'wife').
- (41) I.e., one married to a Levite.
- (42) From her husband's produce.
- (43) Cf. supra note 5.
- (44) The tithe.
- (45) The wife of a priest, because she is entitled to the same rights as her husband.
- (46) The wife of a Levite who also, like the wife of the priest, is entitled to her husband's rights.
- (47) As this law is so obvious there was no need to have a Scriptural text from which to deduce it.
- (48) V. supra n. 7.
- (49) Lit., 'but'. Since it is available for a comparison between husband and wife.
- (50) Or 'Rabina' (v. Rashi).
- (51) The final clause in our Mishnah, THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE TO A PRIEST and THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST TO A LEVITE.
- (52) If she comes unaccompanied by her husband. The first clause will, however, refer to eating and is in accordance with R. Meir's view.
- (53) The prohibition to give a share in the terumah or tithe to a woman when she comes alone to the threshing-floor.
- (54) יחוד v. Glos. s.v. yihud and cf. infra 100a.
- (55) Who might continue to collect tithe at the threshing-floors even after her divorce from her husband when she returns to her former status of an ordinary woman and forbidden to share in the priestly dues and, according to R. Meir, also in the levitical tithe.
- (56) Another reading, 'May not the daughter of a priest eat terumah? — And according to your argument may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a Levite eat tithe?' Cur. edd. enclose the reading of our text in parenthesis.
- (57) Of course she may. Why, then, should she be refused a share in the tithe even in the absence of her husband!
- (58) She undoubtedly may. Why then is the wife of a priest refused a share in terumah in the absence of her husband (cf. infra 100a) irrespective of whether she is the daughter of a priest or of an Israelite?
- (59) V. p. 582, n. 20.
- (60) Such a preventive measure is, of course, applicable to the daughter of a Levite in respect of tithe in the same way as to the daughter of a priest in respect of terumah.
- (61) That the prohibition is merely a preventive measure.
- (62) In the first clauses the expression BETROTHED was essential, since the object of the Mishnah was to state that betrothal alone does not confer upon the daughter of an Israelite the right of eating terumah and tithe, and upon the daughter of a Levite the right to terumah, if the former was betrothed to a priest or a Levite and the latter to a priest; and that even betrothal, and not only marriage, deprives the daughter of a priest and the daughter of a Levite of the right of eating terumah and tithe respectively if the man was in the former case an Israelite or a Levite and in the latter case an Israelite.
- (63) Where the reference is to the woman's eligibility to call for a share in the tithe; though in this case the woman, whether betrothed or married, is subject to the same restriction.
- (64) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 86b

To the priest.¹ 'To the priest', but not to the Levite!² — Read: To the priest also.

What is R. Akiba's reason? — Because it is written, Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites, and say unto them;³ Scripture thus refers specifically to the Levites. And the other?⁴ — His view follows that of R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi stated: In twenty-four passages were the priests described as Levites, and the following is one of them: But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok.⁵ And R. Akiba? You cannot say so⁶ here; for it is written, And ye may eat it in every place,⁷ [it is to be given to him only] who 'may eat it in every place'; a priest, however, is excluded since he may not eat it in a graveyard.⁸ And the other? — [The meaning⁹ is] wherever he wishes: Neither is it required [to eat it within the] wall¹⁰ nor is a man subject to flogging for eating it while his body is levitically unclean.

There was a certain garden from which R. Eleazar b. Azariah¹¹ used to receive the first tithe. R. Akiba went and transferred its gate so that it faced a graveyard.¹² 'Akiba with his bag',¹³ the other remarked, 'and I have to live'!

It was stated: Why were the Levites penalized [by being deprived of the] tithe?¹⁴ — R. Jonathan and Sabia [are in dispute on the matter]. One holds: Because they did not go up¹⁵ in the days of Ezra;¹⁶ and the other holds: In order that the priests might depend upon it¹⁷ during the days of their uncleanness.¹⁸

According to him who holds [that the Levites were deprived of the tithe] because 'they did not go up', one can well understand why they were penalized. According to him, however, who gave as the reason, 'In order that the priests may depend upon it during the days of their uncleanness', were the Levites penalized for the sake of the priests! Rather, all agree¹⁹ that the penalization was due to their not going up in the days of Ezra; they differ, however, on the following point: One is of the opinion that their forfeit belonged to the poor, while the other is of the opinion that priests, during the days of their uncleanness, are also regarded as poor.

Why, then,²⁰ did R. Akiba²¹ transfer the gate so that it faced a graveyard?²² — It was this that he²³ said to him:²⁴ If you come [to claim it] as a forfeit, you are entitled to it; but if you come [to demand it] as your share, you have no [claim upon it].

Whence is it deduced that they²⁵ did not go up in the days of Ezra? — It is written, And I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava; and there we encamped three days,' and I viewed the people and the priests, and found there none of the sons of Levi.²⁶

R. Hisda stated: At first, officers were appointed from the Levites only, for it is said, And the officers of the Levites before you;²⁷ but now, officers are appointed from the Israelites only, for it is said, 'And officers over you shall come from the majority'.²⁸ MISHNAH. THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST MAY EAT TERUMAH. IF HE DIED AND SHE HAS A SON BY HIM SHE MAY CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH. IF SHE WAS [SUBSEQUENTLY]²⁹ MARRIED TO A LEVITE, SHE MAY EAT OF THE TITHE.³⁰ IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM, SHE MAY CONTINUE TO EAT OF THE TITHE. IF SHE WAS [SUBSEQUENTLY] MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE. IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAS A SON BY HIM, SHE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE. IF HER SON BY THE ISRAELITE DIED, SHE MAY AGAIN EAT OF THE TITHE. IF HER SON BY THE LEVITE DIED SHE MAY AGAIN EAT TERUMAH. IF HER SON BY THE PRIEST DIED, SHE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE.

(1) Belongs the first tithe. B.B. 81b, Keth. 261, Hul. 13 lb.

(2) Scripture, surely, assigned the tithe to the Levite!

(3) Num. XVIII, 26, referring to tithe.

(4) R. Eleazar b. Azariah. How could he include the priests?

(5) Ezek. XLIV, 15.

(6) That by Levites the priests also were meant.

(7) Num. XVIII, 31.

(8) Which he may not enter owing to the prohibition of defiling himself for the dead. Cf. Lev. XXI, 1ff.

(9) Of In every place (Num. XVIII, 31).

(10) Of Jerusalem, outside of which the eating of certain consecrated foodstuffs was forbidden.

(11) Who was a priest, cf. Ber. 27b.

- (12) So that R. Eleazar b. Azariah (v. supra n. 9) was prevented from entering it (cf. supra n. 6).
- (13) Reference to the shepherd's wallet. R. Akiba was a herdsman in his early life (cf. Keth. 62b). [Me'iri: Though R. Akiba may have to return to his shepherd's wallet, I can manage to live without his tithe].
- (14) A provision was made at some time (v. infra) that tithe shall not be given to the Levites in accordance with the Pentateuchal law but to the priests (cf. Sot. 47b, Hul. 131b).
- (15) To Judaea.
- (16) Who led some forty thousand exiles from Babylon to Jerusalem. [On the Levites' deprivation of their right to tithe v. Tchernowitz. H. Jewish Studies in Memory of George Alexander Kohut (Hebrew section) p. 47].
- (17) The tithe.
- (18) When terumah is forbidden to them.
- (19) Lit., 'all the world', R. Jonathan and Sabia.
- (20) According to the opinion which maintains that the tithe was allotted to the priests in the days of Ezra.
- (21) Who lived after Ezra.
- (22) R. Eleazar b. Azariah as a priest was surely then entitled to it. Cur. edd. contain in parenthesis, 'According to him who said that the forfeit belonged to the poor, it can well be understood why R. Akiba transferred the entrance so that it faced a graveyard; according to him, however, who stated that it belonged to the priests, why did he transfer the entrance so that it faced a graveyard'. The reading adopted is given in the margin of cur. edd.
- (23) R. Akiba.
- (24) R. Eleazar b. Azariah.
- (25) The Levites.
- (26) Ezra VIII, 15. [This is apparently contradicted by the many verses in Ezra and Nehemiah which mention the Levites side by side with the priests, and as Tosaf. already points out (s.v. 'מבני') is against the Mishnah in Kid. 69a which includes the Levites among the ten family stocks that came up from Babylon, unless it is to be assumed that the penalty was inflicted on the Levites because they were not among the first to join Ezra].
- (27) II Chron. XIX, 11.
- (28) Such a text cannot be traced in our Bible and may represent a verse from a lost apocryphal text. Some commentators regard it as a quotation from memory, based on Deut. I, 13, 15; but the respective dates of Ezra and Deut. would create chronological difficulties. (v. Golds.).
- (29) After having had a child from the priest.
- (30) But not of terumah. Her priestly status is lost.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 87a

THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.¹ IF HE DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. IF SHE WAS [SUBSEQUENTLY] MARRIED TO A LEVITE SHE MAY EAT TITHE. IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM SHE MAY EAT TITHE. IF SHE WAS [SUBSEQUENTLY] MARRIED TO A PRIEST SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH. IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH. IF HER SON BY THE PRIEST DIED SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. IF HER SON BY THE LEVITE DIED SHE MAY NOT EAT TITHE. IF HER SON BY THE ISRAELITE DIED SHE RETURNS TO THE HOUSE OF HER FATHER; AND IT IS CONCERNING SUCH A WOMAN THAT IT WAS SAID, AND IS RETURNED UNTO HER FATHER'S HOUSE, AS IN HER YOUTH, SHE MAY EAT OF HER FATHER'S BREAD.²

GEMARA. IF HER SON BY THE LEVITE DIED SHE MAY AGAIN EAT TERUMAH, because she is again entitled to eat it by virtue of her son;³ whence is this⁴ derived? — R. Abba replied in the name of Rab: [From the use of the expression,] But a daughter⁵ [instead of] 'a daughter'.⁶ In accordance with whose view?⁷ Is it in accordance with that of R. Akiba who bases expositions on Wawin!⁸ — It may be said [to be in agreement] even [with the view of the] Rabbis, since the entire expression But a daughter⁵ is superfluous.⁹

Our Rabbis taught: When she¹⁰ returns,¹¹ she returns only to [the privilege of eating] terumah, but does not return to [the privilege of eating] the breast and the shoulder.¹² Said R. Hisda in the name of Rabina b. Shila, 'What Scriptural text proves this?'¹³ — She shall not eat of the terumah of the holy things,¹⁴ she must not eat of that which is set apart¹⁵ from the holy things'.¹⁶ R. Nahman replied¹⁷ in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Of [her father's] bread,⁵ but not all [her father's] bread;¹⁸ this excludes the breast and the shoulder.¹² Rami b. Hama demurred: Might it not be suggested that this¹⁹ excludes the invalidation of vows!²⁰ Raba replied: A Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael has long ago settled this difficulty. For a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: What need was there for Scripture to state, But the vow of a widow, or of her that is divorced . . . shall stand against her?²¹ Is she not free from the authority of her father and also from that of her husband!²² The fact is that where the father had entrusted [his daughter] to the representatives of the husband, or where the representatives of the father had entrusted her to the representatives of the husband, and on the way²³ she became a widow or was divorced, [it would not have been known] whether she was to be described as of²⁴ the house of her father²⁵ or as of the house of her husband;²⁶ hence the need for the text²⁷ to tell you that as soon as she had left her father's authority, even if only for a short while, he may no more invalidate her vows.²⁸

R. Safra replied:²⁹ She may eat of her father's bread,³⁰ only bread but no flesh.³¹ R. Papa replied:²⁹ She may eat of her father's bread,³⁰ only the bread which is the property of her father;³² excluding however, the breast and the shoulder which [priests] obtain from the table of the Most High.³³

Raba, however, replied:²⁹ And the breast of the waving and the thigh of heaving shall ye eat . . . thou, and thy daughters with thee,³⁴ only when they are with thee.³⁵

R. Adda b. Ahabah stated that a Tanna taught: When she³⁶ returns to her father's house, she returns [only to the privilege of eating] terumah, but does not return to [the privilege of eating] the breast and the shoulders. [If she³⁷ returns, however,] by virtue of her son,³⁸ she returns also to [the privilege of eating] the breast and the shoulder.³⁹ R. Mordecai went and recited this traditional statement in the presence of R. Ashi, when the latter said to him, 'Whence [has this case]⁴⁰ been included?⁴¹ From "But a daughter".⁴² Should she, then, be more important than the other!'⁴³ — There,⁴³ the excluding texts were written;⁴⁴ but here⁴⁰ no excluding texts were written.

THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE etc. Our Rabbis taught: And is returned unto her father's house,⁴² excludes one who is awaiting the decision of the levir;⁴⁵ as in her youth,⁴² excludes a pregnant woman.⁴⁶ But could not this [law,⁴⁷ however, be arrived at by] logical argument: If where a child by a first husband is not regarded as the child by the second husband, in respect of exempting the woman from the levirate marriage,⁴⁸ the embryo is nevertheless regarded as a born child,⁴⁹ how much more should the embryo be regarded as a born child where a child by the first husband is regarded as the child of the second, in respect of depriving a woman of her right to terumah!⁵⁰ No; this is no argument.⁵¹ If an embryo was regarded as a born child in respect of the levirate marriage, where the dead were given the same status as the living,⁵² should an embryo be regarded as a born child in respect of terumah, where the dead were not given the same status as the living?⁵³ Consequently Scripture expressly stated, As in her youth,⁵⁴ to exclude a pregnant woman.

And it was necessary for Scripture to write, As⁵⁵ in her youth, to exclude the pregnant woman; and also⁵⁶ And have no child,⁵⁴ to⁵⁷ exclude one who has a born child. For had the All Merciful written only And have no child,⁵⁴ it might have been assumed [that only a woman who has a born child is forbidden to eat terumah, because] at first⁵⁸ there was one body and now there are two bodies,⁵⁹ but that a pregnant woman, who formed at first⁵⁸ one body and is now also one body only, may eat, [hence the second text⁶⁰ was] required. And had the All Merciful written of the pregnant woman only it might have been assumed [that only she is forbidden to eat terumah] because at first⁵⁸ her body

- (1) She loses through her marriage the right she enjoyed as the daughter of a priest while she was still unmarried.
- (2) Lev. XXII, 13.
- (3) By the priest.
- (4) That her son by the priest enables her again to eat terumah even though she was deprived of that right during the period she lived with the Levite and the Israelite.
- (5) Lev. XXII, 13.
- (6) From the superfluous Waw in ובת.
- (7) Is this deduction made.
- (8) And not in accordance with the view of the Rabbis (cf. Sanh. 51b) who are in the majority and differ from R. Akiba. V. supra 68b.
- (9) The previous verse (Lev. XXII, 12) also speaking of the priest's daughter it would have been quite sufficient for v. 13 to begin with the personal pronoun, 'But if she be'.
- (10) The priest's daughter who was a widow or divorced and have no child. (V. Lev. XXII, 13).
- (11) Unto her father's house (v. ibid.).
- (12) Which are also among the priestly gifts. Cf. Ex. XXIX, 27, Lev. VII, 34 X, 14.
- (13) That the breast and shoulder remain forbidden to her even after she returns to her father's house.
- (14) Lev. XXII, 12, where instead of בתרומת הקדשים only בקדשים could have been written.
- (15) במורם from the same rt as תרומת (v. supra n. 12).
- (16) The sacrifices; reference v to the breast and shoulder. (V. supra n. 10). These are forbidden to her even after she returns to her father's house. (V. supra 68b).

- (18) לחם here taken in its wider signification of 'food' (cf. Dan. V, 1). The Mem of מלחם (of but not all food) indicates limitation.
- (19) The limitation implied by the Mem. V. supra n. 16.
- (20) By her father; even when his daughter returns to his house and resumes her right to eat terumah. Before marriage, a daughter's vows may be invalidated by her father. Cf. Num. XXX, 4ff.

- (22) And since none of them could in consequence annul her vows, it is obvious that such vows stand against her. What need, then, was there for the text of Num. XXX, 10?
- (23) To her husband's home.
- (24) Lit., 'how I read about her'.
- (25) Since she has not reached the house of her husband and has consequently not yet passed entirely out of her father's authority. Hence her father would still have the power of invalidating her vows.
- (26) And her vows, like those of any other widow, could not be invalidated by her father.
- (27) Lit., 'but'.
- (28) V. Keth. 49a.
- (29) To the enquiry of R. Hisda.
- (30) Lev. XXII, 13.
- (31) The breast and the shoulder.
- (32) Terumah which is regarded as the property of the priests.

- (38) If she was married, for instance, to an Israelite and after his death resumed her right to eat terumah by virtue of a son whom she previously had by a priest.
- (39) Since the exclusion of the right to the breast and the shoulder was mentioned in the former case only.
- (40) That of the woman who derives her right to terumah from her son.

- (41) Among those entitled to eat terumah.
- (42) V. Lev. XXII, 13.
- (43) The daughter who derives her right to terumah from her father.
- (44) V. supra n. 3.
- (45) Who is not eligible to eat terumah, because she is not completely returned to her father's house, being still bound to the levir.
- (46) Who, being with child, does not return as in her youth.
- (47) That a pregnant woman, like one who has a born child, does not regain her right to eat terumah.
- (48) A woman whose husband died without issue is not exempt from the levirate marriage, though she may have a son by a former husband.
- (49) A pregnant woman is not subject to the levirate marriage.
- (50) A priest's daughter whose Israelite husband died without issue is forbidden to eat terumah, just as if she had had a son by him, if she had a son by any former Israelite husband of hers. Now, since the law could be arrived at by inference a minori ad majus, the Scriptural text stating the same law is, surely, superfluous!
- (51) Lit., 'what (reasoning) for me'!
- (52) A child whose death occurred after the death of his father exempts his mother from the levirate marriage as if he were still alive.
- (53) Only a live child deprives his mother, the daughter of a priest who married an Israelite, from her right to eat terumah after the death of her husband. As soon as the child dies his mother regains her lost right.
- (54) Lev. XXII, 13.
- (55) Cf. Bah. Cur. edd. omit 'As . . . exclude'.
- (56) Lit., 'and it was necessary to write'.
- (57) So Bah. Cur. edd. omit, 'To exclude . . . child'.
- (58) Before her marriage.
- (59) Mother and born child.
- (60) As in her youth.

was empty and now it is full, but not [a woman whose child was already born],¹ whose body was at first empty and is now also empty, [hence was the first text² also] required.³

(Mnemonic.⁴ He said to him: Let us not make⁵ and make⁶ in death; let us make and not make in the child of the levir and terumah.)⁷

Said Rab Judah of Diskarta⁸ to Raba: The dead should not be given⁹ the same status as the living, in respect of the levirate marriage, by inference a minori ad majus: If where a child by the first husband is regarded as the child of the second husband, in respect of disqualifying the woman from the eating of terumah,¹⁰ the dead were not given the same status as the living,¹¹ how much less should the dead be given the same status as the living¹² where the child of the first husband is not regarded as the son of the second, in respect of exempting the woman from the levirate marriage!¹³ It was expressly stated, Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace.¹⁴

Then let the dead be given¹⁵ the same status as the living in respect of terumah by inference a minori ad majus: If where a child by the first husband is not regarded as the child of the second In respect of exempting the woman from the levirate marriage,¹³ the dead were given the same status as the living,¹⁶ how much more so should the dead be given the same status as the living¹⁷ where a child of the first husband is regarded as the son of the second, in respect of disqualifying the woman from terumah!¹⁸ It was expressly stated, And [she] have no child¹⁹ and she, surely, has none.²⁰

Let the child of the first husband be regarded as the child of the second husband in respect of the levirate marriage by inference a minori ad majus: If where the dead were not given the same status as the living, in respect of terumah²¹ the child of the first husband is regarded as the son of the second,²² how much more should the child of the first husband be regarded as the child of the second²³ where the dead were given the status of the living in respect of the levirate marriage!²¹ — It was expressly stated, And [he] have no child,²⁴ and this man, surely, has none.

Then let the child of the first husband not be regarded as the child of the second husband, in respect of terumah, by inference a minori ad majus: If where the dead were given the same status as the living, in respect of exempting her from the levirate marriage, the child of the first husband was not regarded as the child of the second,²² how much less should the child of the first husband be regarded as the child of the second, where the dead were not regarded as the living in respect of eating terumah!²¹ — It was specifically stated, And [she] have none,²⁵ but she surely has [one].

CHAPTER X

MISHNAH. A WOMAN WHOSE HUSBAND HAD GONE TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA AND ON BEING TOLD,²⁶ ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD’, MARRIED, MUST, IF HER HUSBAND SUBSEQUENTLY RETURNED, LEAVE THE ONE AS WELL AS THE OTHER, AND SHE ALSO REQUIRES²⁷ A LETTER OF DIVORCE FROM THE ONE AS WELL AS FROM THE OTHER. SHE HAS NO [CLAIM TO HER] KETHUBAH, USUFRUCT, MAINTENANCE²⁸ OR WORN CLOTHES²⁹ EITHER AGAINST THE FIRST HUSBAND OR AGAINST THE SECOND. IF SHE HAS TAKEN ANYTHING FROM THE ONE OR FROM THE OTHER, SHE MUST RETURN IT. THE CHILD BEGOTTEN BY THE ONE HUSBAND OR BY THE OTHER IS A BASTARD;³⁰ NEITHER OF THEM³¹ MAY DEFILE HIMSELF FOR HER;³² NEITHER OF THEM HAS A CLAIM TO WHATEVER SHE MAY FIND³³ OR MAKE WITH HER HANDS;³⁴ AND NEITHER HAS THE RIGHT OF INVALIDATING HER VOWS.³⁵ IF SHE WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, SHE BECOMES DISQUALIFIED FROM MARRYING A PRIEST; IF THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE, FROM THE EATING OF TITHE; AND IF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, FROM THE EATING OF TERUMAH. NEITHER THE HEIRS OF THE ONE HUSBAND NOR THE HEIRS OF THE OTHER ARE ENTITLED TO INHERIT HER KETHUBAH, AND IF [THE HUSBANDS] DIE, THE BROTHER OF THE ONE AND THE BROTHER OF THE OTHER MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH, BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. R. JOSE SAID: HER KETHUBAH REMAINS A CHARGE UPON THE ESTATE OF HER FIRST HUSBAND. R. ELEAZAR SAID: THE FIRST HUSBAND IS ENTITLED TO WHATEVER SHE MAY FIND, OR MAKE WITH HER HANDS, AND ALSO HAS THE RIGHT OF INVALIDATING HER VOWS. R. SIMEON SAID: HER COHABITATION OR HALIZAH WITH THE BROTHER OF THE FIRST HUSBAND EXEMPTS HER RIVAL,³⁶ AND A CHILD BEGOTTEN BY HIM³⁷ IS NOT A BASTARD. IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AN AUTHORIZATION³⁸ SHE MAY RETURN TO HIM.³⁷ IF³⁹ SHE MARRIED WITH THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE BETH DIN,⁴⁰ SHE MUST LEAVE,⁴¹ BUT IS EXEMPT FROM AN OFFERING.⁴² IF SHE MARRIED, HOWEVER, WITHOUT THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE BETH DIN, SHE MUST LEAVE⁴¹ AND IS ALSO LIABLE TO AN OFFERING. THE AUTHORITY OF THE BETH DIN IS THUS MORE EFFECTIVE IN THAT IT EXEMPTS HER FROM THE OFFERING. IF THE BETH DIN RULED⁴³ THAT SHE MAY BE MARRIED AGAIN AND SHE WENT AND DISGRACED HERSELF⁴⁴ SHE⁴⁵ MUST BRING AN OFFERING, BECAUSE THE BETH DIN PERMITTED HER ONLY TO MARRY.⁴⁶

GEMARA. Since in the final clause it was stated, IF SHE MARRIES WITHOUT PERMISSION SHE MAY RETURN TO HIM, [which means obviously], without the authorization of the Beth din but [in reliance on the evidence] of witnesses, the first clause, it is to be inferred, [speaks of a woman who married] with the permission of the Beth din and on the evidence of a single witness.⁴⁷ Thus it clearly follows that one witness is trusted. Furthermore, we learned: The practice was adopted of allowing a marriage on the evidence of one witness reporting⁴⁸ another single witness, and of a woman reporting another woman, and of a woman reporting a bondman or a bondwoman;⁴⁹ from which it is obvious that one witness is trusted. Furthermore we learned: [The man to whom] one witness said, ‘You have eaten⁵⁰ suet’,⁵¹ and who replied, ‘I have not eaten’, is exempt.⁵² Now the reason [for his exemption is] because he said, ‘I have not eaten’; had he, however, remained silent [the witness] would have been trusted.⁵³ From this it is clearly evident that one witness is trusted in accordance with Pentateuchal law;⁵⁴ whence is this⁵⁵ deduced? From what was taught: If his sin... be known to him,⁵⁶ but not when others have made it known to him. As it might have been assumed that even where he does not contradict the evidence he is exempt, it was expressly stated, If. . . be known to him,⁵⁷ in any manner.⁵⁸ Now, how is this statement to be understood? If it be suggested [that it refers to a case] where two witnesses appeared, and he does not contradict them, what need then was there for a Scriptural text!⁵⁹ Must it not then refer to the case of⁶⁰ one witness, and yet [we see that] when the accused does not contradict him he is trusted.⁶¹ From this, then, it maybe inferred that one witness is to be trusted.⁵⁴ But whence is it inferred that [the reason⁶² is] because he is trusted? Is it not possible that it is due to the fact that the other had remained silent, silence being regarded as an admission! You can have proof that this is so,⁶³ since in the final clause it was stated: [A man to whom] two witnesses said, ‘You have eaten⁶⁴ suet,’⁶⁵ and who replied. ‘I have not eaten’, is exempt; but R. Meir declares him guilty. Said R. Meir: This⁶⁶ may be inferred a minori ad majus. If two witnesses may bring upon a man the severe penalty of death, should they not be able to bring upon him the minor penalty of a sacrifice! The others replied: What if he desired to say, ‘I have acted presumptuously’!⁶⁷ Now, in the first clause,⁶⁸

(1) Lit., ‘have no child’ (Lev. XXII, 13) i.e., a woman who has a born child and whose case was deduced from this text.

(2) And have no child.

(3) To indicate that a born child also deprives his mother of her right to terumah.

(4) An aid to the memorisation of the following four arguments.

(5) The verb ‘to make’, עשה is rendered in the following discussions by various equivalents in accordance with the requirements of English idiom.

(6) Cur. edd. ‘her deeds’, מעשיה, is ap patently a substitute for this reading, ונעשה, which agrees with MS.M.

(7) Cur. edd. repeat, ‘levirate marriage and terumah’. MS.M. gives it only once.

(8) [Deskarah, N.E. of Bagdad. Obermeyer. p. 146].

(9) Lit., ‘let us not make’. Cf. mnemonic supra.

(10) V. supra p. 589, n. 14.

(11) V. supra p. 590, n. 2.

(12) And consequently not exempt his mother from the levirate marriage.

(13) V. supra p. 589. n. 12.

(14) Prov. III, 17. Were a woman, whose child died after its father, to be subjected to the obligations of the levirate marriage, the peace and the pleasantness of family life might be disturbed where the woman, for instance, happened to have married after the death of her husband and the child died subsequently.

(15) Cf. supra note 3.

(16) Cf. supra p. 590, n. 1.

(17) And consequently disqualify his mother from the right of eating of terumah.

(18) Cf. supra p. 589. n. 14.

(19) Lev. XXII, 13.

(20) Hence the permission to eat terumah.

(21) Cf. supra p. 590, n. 2.

(22) Cf. supra p. 589, n. 12.

(23) And consequently exempt his mother from the levirate marriage.

(24) Deut. XXV, 5.

(25) Lev. XXII, 13.

(26) Lit., ‘and they came and said to her’. This, as will be explained infra, refers to evidence given by a single witness.

(27) If she desires to marry again.

(28) Even for the period during which she lived with him.

- (29) Neither compensation for those that were entirely destroyed nor the clothes themselves should the tatters still be in existence.
- (30) Pentateuchally if begotten by the second husband; Rabbinically if by the first who resumed living with her.
- (31) If a priest.
- (32) If she died. Cf. Lev. XXI, 1ff.
- (33) A woman's find belongs to her lawful husband. Cf. B.M. 12a.
- (34) To which a lawful husband is entitled in return for her maintenance.
- (35) V. Num. XXX. 7ff.
- (36) From the levirate marriage and halizah.
- (37) Her first husband, after his return.
- (38) Of the Beth din; i.e., if she married on the strength of the evidence of two witnesses who testified to her husband's death, in which case no authorization by a court is required.
- (39) When only one witness testified to the death of her husband.
- (40) And her first husband subsequently returned.
- (41) Her second husband.
- (42) Since she has acted on a ruling of the Beth din. Cf. Hor. 2a.
- (43) Lit., 'they taught her' or 'directed her'.
- (44) By immoral conduct. V. infra 922 for fuller explanation.
- (45) If her first husband subsequently returns.
- (46) I.e., to contract a lawful marriage, not a forbidden one.
- (47) Cf. supra p. 593, n. 1.
- (48) Lit., 'from the mouth'.
- (49) Infra 122a, Shab. 145a, Bek. 46b.
- (50) Unwittingly.
- (51) חֵלֵב forbidden fat.
- (52) From bringing a sin-offering (cf. Lev. IV, 27ff), Kid. 65b, Ker. 11b.
- (53) And a beast would have been offered as a sin-offering though its sanctity was entirely dependent on one man's word.
- (54) Had such evidence been Pentateuchally inadmissible, the sin-offering would consist of a Pentateuchally unconsecrated beast which must not be offered on the altar and is also forbidden to be eaten by the priests.
- (55) The admissibility of one man's evidence.
- (56) Lev. IV, 28; only then must he bring a sin-offering.
- (57) Ibid.
- (58) Cf. Ker. 11b.
- (59) Two witnesses are, surely, always relied upon.
- (60) Lit., 'but not'.
- (61) And an offering is brought upon the altar on the basis of his word. Cf. supra n. 7.
- (62) For the obligation of an offering.
- (63) Lit., 'you may know' that the reason is because silence is regarded as an admission.
- (64) Unwittingly.
- (65) חֵלֵב forbidden fat.
- (66) That the evidence of the two witnesses is accepted despite the denial of the accused.
- (67) For a presumptuous sin no sin-offering is brought. In such a case the evidence of the witnesses would be of no value. They can only testify to one's action but not to one's motive or state of mind. Since the accused could annul the evidence by such a plea he is also believed when he simply contradicts the evidence.
- (68) Where the accusation comes from one witness.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 88a

on what grounds do the Rabbis declare the man liable?¹ If it be suggested: Because he² is believed; surely [here it may be objected], even in the case of two witnesses, who in all other cases are trusted though the accused contradicts them, the Rabbis have exempted him!³ The reason⁴ must consequently be⁵ because the accused remained silent, and silence is regarded as admission!⁶

[The fact], however, [is that this⁷ is arrived at] by⁸ a logical inference, this case being analogous to that of a piece of fat⁹ concerning which there is doubt as to whether it was of the forbidden,¹⁰ or of the permitted kind; if a single witness came and declared, 'I am certain that it was permitted fat', he is trusted.¹¹ Are [the two cases] similar? There¹² the prohibition¹³ was not established; here¹⁴ the prohibition of a married woman is established,¹⁵ and no question of sexual relationship [may be decided on the evidence of] less than two witnesses! This¹⁶ is rather analogous¹⁷ to the case of a piece that was definitely forbidden fat;¹⁸ if a single witness came and declared, 'I am certain that it was permitted fat,' he is not believed.¹⁹ But are these cases, similar? In that case,²⁰ should even a hundred witnesses come they would not be believed; in this case,¹⁶ however, since should two witnesses come they would be trusted, one witness also should be trusted! This¹⁶ is rather analogous to the cases of tebel,²¹ and consecrated and *konam*²¹ objects.²²

Whose *tebel*²¹ is here to be understood? If his own,²³ [he would naturally be trusted] since it is in his power to make it fit for use;²⁴ if, however, it is that of another person, [the question may still be urged], what view is here adopted: If it is maintained that a man who sets apart priestly dues for his neighbours' produce out of his own does not require the owner's consent [it is quite obvious why the witness is here trusted] since it is in his power to make it fit for use;²⁴ and if it is maintained that the owner's consent is required and that the witness declares, 'I know that he has made it fit for use', whence is this very law²⁵ derived? As regards consecrated objects also, if it was a consecration of the value of an object [it is obvious why one witness is trusted] since it is in his power to redeem it;²⁶ but if an object has been consecrated,²⁷ [the objection may still be raised]: If it were his own²³ [he would naturally be trusted] since it is within his right to ask for the disallowance of his vow;²⁸ if, however, it belonged to another man, and the witness declared, 'I know that its owner has asked for the disallowance of his vow', whence is this very law²⁹ derived? With reference to *konam*³⁰ objects also, if it is maintained that the law of trespass³¹ is applicable to konam objects and that the sanctity of their value³² descends upon them [it is obvious why one witness is trusted] since it is within his power to redeem them;³³ and if it is maintained that the law of trespass³¹ is not applicable to konam objects³⁴ and that it is only a mere prohibition with which he is saddled³⁵ [the question may be urged]: If any such object was his own [it is natural that he should be trusted] since it is within his power to ask for the disallowance of his vow;³⁶ if, however, it belonged to another man, and the witness declared, 'I know that its owner has asked for the disallowance of his vow, whence is this very law³⁷ derived?

R. Zera replied:³⁸ Owing to the rigidity of the disabilities³⁹ that were later⁴⁰ imposed upon her the law was relaxed in her favour at the beginning.⁴¹ Let there be, however, neither rigid disabilities nor a relaxation of the law! — In order [to avoid] perpetual desertion⁴² the Rabbis have relaxed the law in her favour.⁴³

MUST . . . LEAVE THE ONE AS WELL AS THE OTHER etc. Rab stated: This was taught only in respect [of a woman] who married on the evidence of a single witness, but if she married on the strength of the evidence of two witnesses, she need not leave.⁴⁴ In the West⁴⁵ they laughed at him. 'Her husband' [they remarked] comes, and there he stands, and you say: She need not leave!' — This⁴⁶ [it may be replied] was required only in the case when the man⁴⁷ was not known.⁴⁸ If he⁴⁹ is unknown, why is she to leave [her second husband] even where she only married on the evidence of a single witness? This is required only in the case where two witnesses came and stated, 'We were with him⁴⁹ from the moment he left until now, but you it is who are unable to recognize him';⁵⁰ as it is written, And Joseph knew his brethren but they knew him not,⁵¹ on which R. Hisda remarked: This teaches that he went forth without any marks⁵² of a beard and now he appeared with a full⁵² beard. But, after all, there are two⁵³ against two

- (1) To an offering, if he did not contradict the evidence.
- (2) The one witness.
- (3) Because his word is more than the evidence of two witnesses. How much more then should he be trusted when the evidence is only that of one witness!
- (4) For the obligation of a sin-offering in the first clause.
- (5) Lit., 'but not'.
- (6) The original question then arises again: Whence is it proved that the evidence of one witness is admissible?
- (7) Cf. supra n. 12.

- (18) Which someone has eaten.
- (19) The question, therefore, remains whence is it inferred that the evidence of one witness is admissible.
- (20) Where the forbidden nature of the fat is established.
- (21) V. Glos.
- (22) Where the evidence of a single witness is accepted though the prohibitions were established. From such a case that of the woman in our Mishnah may reasonably be inferred.
- (23) That of the witness.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 88b

and he who cohabits with her¹ is liable to bring an asham talui!² R. Shesheth replied:³ When she was married, for instance, to one of her witnesses.⁴ But she herself is liable to an asham talui!⁵ — Where³ she states, 'I am certain',⁶ If so, what need was there to state [such an obvious ruling], when even R. Menahem son of R. Jose⁷ maintained his view only where the witnesses⁸ came first and the woman married afterwards, but not⁹ where she married first and the witnesses came afterwards! For it was taught: If two witnesses state that he¹⁰ was dead and two state that he was not dead, or if two state that the woman was divorced and two state that she was not divorced, the woman must not marry again, but if she married she need not leave;¹¹ R. Menahem, son of R. Jose, however, ruled that she must leave.¹⁰ Said R. Menahem son of R. Jose, 'When do I rule that she must leave? Only when witnesses came first and she married afterwards, but where she married first and the witnesses came afterwards, she need not leave!' ¹² — Rab also spoke of the case where witnesses came first and the woman married afterwards, [his object being] to exclude the ruling of R. Menahem son of R. Jose.

Another reading: The reason ther¹³ is because she married first and the witnesses came afterwards,¹⁴ but where witnesses came first and the woman married afterwards, she must leave. In accordance with whose [view is this ruling]? — In accordance with that of R. Menahem son of R. Jose.

Raba raised an objection: Whence is it deduced that if [a priest] refused¹⁵ he is to be compelled?¹⁶ It was expressly stated, And thou shalt sanctify him,¹⁷ even against his will. Now, how is this¹⁸ to be understood?¹⁹ If it be suggested [that it is a case] where she was not married to one of her witnesses²⁰ and she does not plead 'I am certain',²¹ is there any need to state that he is to be compelled?²² Consequently it must refer to a case²³ where she was married to one of her witnesses²⁴ and she pleads, 'I am certain'; I and yet it was stated that he was to be compelled;²⁵ from which it clearly follows that she is to be taken away from him!²⁶ — A priestly prohibition is different.²⁷ If you prefer I might say,²⁸ 'What is the meaning of "he is to be compelled"? He is to be compelled by means of witnesses'.²⁹ And if you prefer I might say:²⁸ [It is a case] where witnesses came first and she married afterwards, and this represents the view of R. Menahem son of R. Jose.³⁰ R. Ashi replied. What is meant by the expression, 'She need not leave' which Rab used? She is not to depart from her first state of permissibility.³¹ But surely Rab has said this once! For we learned, IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AN AUTHORIZATION SHE MAY RETURN TO HIM, and Rab Huna stated in the name of Rab: This is the established law!³² — One was stated as an inference from, the other.³³

Samuel said: This³⁴ was taught only in the case where she does not contradict him,³⁵ but where she contradicts him she need not leave.

What [are the circumstances] spoken of? If it be suggested that there are two witnesses³⁶, of what avail is her denial?³⁷ [It must then deal with the case] of one witness, and the reason³⁸ is because she contradicts him;³⁹ had she, however, remained silent, she would have been obliged to leave. But, surely, 'Ulla stated that 'wherever the Torah allows credence to one witness⁴⁰ he is regarded as two witnesses, and the evidence of one man⁴¹ against that of two men has no validity!'⁴² — Here it is a case of evidence by ineligible witnesses,⁴³ and [Samuel's statement is] in accordance with the view of R. Nehemiah. For it was taught: R. Nehemiah stated, 'Wherever the Torah allows credence to one witness⁴⁰ the majority of opinions is to be followed,⁴⁴ and [the evidence of] two women against that of one man is given the same validity as that of two men against one man'.⁴⁵

And if you prefer I might reply: Wherever one eligible witness came first,⁴⁶ even a hundred women⁴⁷ are regarded as one witness;⁴⁸ here, however, we are dealing with a case where a woman witness came in the first instance;⁴⁹ and the statement of R. Nehemiah is to be explained thus: R. Nehemiah stated, 'Wherever the Torah allows credence to one witness, the majority of opinions is to be followed, and [the evidence of] two women against that of one woman is given the same validity as that of two men against one man, but that of two women against that of one man is regarded only as that of a half and a half'.⁵⁰

SHE ALSO REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE FROM ONE AS WELL AS FROM THE OTHER. It is quite intelligible that she should require a divorce from the first husband; but why also from the second [when their union was a] mere act of adultery?⁵¹ — R. Huna replied: This⁵² is a preventive measure against the possibility of assuming that the first had divorced her and the second had [lawfully] married her, and that consequently⁵³ a married woman⁵⁴ may leave her husband without a letter of divorce. If so⁵⁵, in the latter clause also, where it was stated, 'If she was told "your husband is dead", and she was betrothed, and afterwards her husband came, she is permitted to return to him',⁵⁶ might it not be assumed there also that the first husband had divorced her and the other had [lawfully] betrothed her and that consequently a betrothed woman may be released without a letter of divorce! — As a matter of fact she does require a letter of divorce.⁵⁷ If so,⁵⁸ [it might there also be assumed that] the first had again married his divorced wife after she had been betrothed!⁵⁹ — [This statement is in] accordance with R. Jose b. Kiper who stated [that remarrying one's divorced wife] after a marriage⁶⁰ is forbidden but after a betrothal⁶⁰ is permitted.⁶¹ Since, however, it was stated in the final clause, 'Although

(1) And thus commits a doubtful sin, it being uncertain which pair of witnesses is to be trusted.

(2) V. Glos. Such an offering is brought for the commission of a doubtful sin. How, then, could Rab maintain that she may continue to live with her second husband?

(3) Rab's ruling is applicable.

(4) Who well knows that her first husband is dead.

(5) Since as far as she is concerned her first husband's death is still a matter of doubt.

(6) That the man who claims to be her first husband is a stranger. An asham talui is brought only in cases where a person is himself in doubt as to the propriety of an act he has committed; v. Keth. Sonc. ed., p. 122 notes.

(7) Who in a similar case maintained (v. infra) that the woman must leave her second husband.

(8) Who testified that the first husband was alive.

(9) Lit., 'he did not say'.

(10) The woman's first husband.

(11) Her second husband

(12) V. Keth. 22b. What need, then, was there for Rab's ruling?

(13) Why Rab allowed the woman to remain with her second husband though two witnesses stated that her first husband was still alive.

(14) As in the case in our Mishnah in connection with which Rab's statement was made.

(15) To observe the rules of levitical uncleanness and matrimony prescribed in Lev. XXI, 1ff.

(16) דפן rt. דפן 'to strike on the side' (cf. דופן 'side', 'wall').

(17) Ibid. 8.

(18) Case of coercion.

(19) Since a Scriptural text was required for the purpose, it could not apply to established or even doubtful prohibitions which a priest must undoubtedly obey and the observance of which is obviously to be enforced.

(20) Who was a priest.

(21) Cf. supra p. 599, n. 16.

(22) V. supra p. 600, n. 13.

(23) Lit., 'but not?'

(24) Who was a priest.

(25) To separate from her if witnesses subsequently came and declared that the first husband was still alive at the time this second marriage with the priest took place.

(26) How then could Rab rule that in the case of contradictory evidence between two pairs of witnesses the second union is not to be severed if it took place prior to the appearance of the second pair.

(27) A priest is subject to greater restrictions which do not apply to others.

(28) In reply to Raba's objection.

(29) Before marriage with the priest is allowed, the court makes every effort to ascertain whether witnesses are available who could contradict the evidence of the first witnesses and thus prevent the marriage. If, however, no such witnesses are available and the marriage has taken place, the union need not be severed though such witnesses subsequently appeared.

(30) With which Rab is in agreement.

(31) She may return to her first husband, because in her second marriage she is a victim of circumstances, It having been contracted on misleading evidence.

(32) Infra 91a; why should the same ruling be stated twice?

(33) Rab, however, gave his ruling only once.

(34) That the woman must . . . LEAVE THE ONE AS WELL AS THE OTHER. (V. our Mishnah).

(35) The man who claims to be her husband.

(36) Who testify to the veracity of the statement of the man who claims to be the first husband.

(37) Lit., 'when she contradicts him, what is?; her word would obviously not be accepted against the word of two witnesses.

(38) Why the woman may continue to live with her second husband.

(39) The evidence that her first husband was alive.

(40) In certain cases of marriage and divorce, testifying, for instance, that a husband was dead.

(41) Who now states that the first husband was not dead.

(42) The previous evidence of the one witness being consequently valid, why should the woman have to leave even when she does not contradict the latter evidence?

(43) Relatives, women or slaves, for instance, two of whom testify that the first husband is alive.

(44) Since one witness is trusted, the accepted law of valid evidence is superseded in such cases and the evidence of any ineligible witnesses (cf. supra n. 8) is equally admissible.

(45) Infra 117b, Sot. 31b. When, therefore, the wife does not contradict the evidence, these otherwise ineligible witnesses are trusted. Where, however, she contradicts them, her evidence is added to that of the one witness who had originally testified that her husband was dead, and the evidence of the second pair of witnesses, being thus contradicted by two, is disregarded. Cf. Maimonides cited by Wilna Gaon, glosses.

(46) And testified that the first husband was dead.

(47) I.e., ineligible witnesses who, after the woman had married, testified that her first husband was alive.

(48) And their evidence, being opposed to that of the first witness, is disregarded, as is the case with all evidence of a single witness, which is opposed to that of a previous witness. The woman need not, therefore, leave her second husband even if she does not contradict the second set of witnesses.

(49) V. supra p. 602, n. 11, and two women subsequently testified that the first husband was alive. If the wife keeps silent, there remains a majority of two against one; if she contradicts the two the majority disappears.

(50) The two together representing one; so that the evidence of the first eligible witness remains unaffected by it, provided the woman remarried, even where she remained silent.

- (51) The first husband having been alive when it was contracted.
- (52) The requirement of a divorce from the second husband.
- (53) Lit., 'and it is found'.
- (54) The marriage with the second being assumed to have been valid.
- (55) That provision was made against erroneous assumptions.
- (56) Infra 92a.
- (57) From the second, to whom she was betrothed.
- (58) That a letter of divorce is required.
- (59) Cf. supra note 6 mutatis mutandis.
- (60) With a second husband.
- (61) Cf. supra 11b.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 89a

the latter¹ gave her a letter of divorce he has not thereby disqualified her from marrying a priest',² it may be inferred that she requires no divorce;³ for should she require a divorce, why does he not disqualify her from marrying a priest!⁴ — Rather,⁵ in the final clause it will be assumed⁶ that the betrothal was an erroneous one.⁷ In the first clause also [let it be said that] it would be assumed that the marriage was an erroneous one!⁸ The Rabbis have penalized her.⁹ Then let them penalize her in the final clause also! — In the first clause where she committed a forbidden act¹⁰ they penalized her; in the final clause where she did not commit a forbidden act, the Rabbis did not penalize her.

SHE HAS NO [CLAIM TO HER] KETHUBAH, [because] what is the reason why the Rabbis have provided a kethubah for a woman? In order that it may not be easy for the husband¹¹ to divorce her!¹² But in this case let it be easy for him, to divorce her.¹³

SHE HAS NO [CLAIM TO] . . . USUFRUCT, MAINTENANCE OR EVEN WORN CLOTHES, [because] the conditions¹⁴ entered in the kethubah¹⁵ are subject to the same laws as the kethubah¹⁶ itself. IF SHE HAD TAKEN ANYTHING FROM THE ONE OR FROM THE OTHER,[SHE MUST RETURN IT]. Is this not obvious! — As it might have been assumed that since she has already seized it, it is not to be taken from her, hence we were taught [that SHE MUST RETURN IT]. THE CHILD . . . IS A BASTARD. Elsewhere we learned: Terumah¹⁷ from levitically unclean produce may not be set apart for that which is levitically clean¹⁸. If, however, such terumah has been set apart it is valid if the act was done in error, but if it was done wilfully it is null and void¹⁹. Now what is meant by 'it is null and void'? — R. Hisda replied: The act is absolutely null and void, even that griva²⁰ [which has been designated as terumah] returns to its former state of tebel.²¹ R. Nathan son of R. Oshaia replied: It is null and void in respect of making the remainder²² fit for use, but [that which has been set apart] becomes terumah.²³ R. Hisda does not give the same explanation as R. Nathan son of R. Oshaia, for, should it be said [that the portion set apart] is lawful terumah, it might sometimes happen that one would wilfully neglect to set apart the terumah [from the remainder].²⁴

But why should this be different from, [the following case concerning] which we learned: If a man has set apart as terumah a cucumber which was found to be bitter, or a melon which turned out to be decayed²⁵ [the fruit becomes] terumah; but [from the remainder] terumah must again be set apart!²⁶ Do you raise an objection from a case where one has acted unwittingly²⁷ against a case where one has acted wilfully?²⁷ Where one has acted unwittingly,²⁸ no forbidden act has been committed; when, however, one has acted wilfully,²⁹ a forbidden act has been committed.

A contradiction, however, was pointed out between two acts committed unwittingly: Here³⁰ it is stated, 'It is lawful terumah if the act was done unwittingly',³¹ while there it was stated, 'Terumah,' but [from the remainder] terumah must again be set apart'! — There,³² it is an erroneous act amounting almost³³ to a wilful one, since he should have tasted it .³⁴

A contradiction was also pointed out between two cases of wilful action: Here³⁵ it is stated, 'but if it was done wilfully, it is null and void', while elsewhere we learned: If a man has set apart as terumah [the produce] of an unperforated plant-pot³⁶ for [the produce of] a perforated pot,³⁷ [the former becomes] terumah but [from the latter] terumah must again be separated!³⁸ — In [the case of produce grown in] two different vessels³⁹ a man would obey;⁴⁰ in [that of] one vessel⁴¹ he would not obey.⁴²

Now according to R. Nathan, son of R. Oshaia, who explained that 'the act is null and void in respect of making the remainder fit for use but [that that which has been set apart] becomes terumah.'⁴³ [

(1) Who betrothed her.

(4) A divorced woman, even if the divorce was given to her in accordance with a Rabbinical and not a Pentateuchal ordinance. is forbidden to be married to a priest. Cf. infra 94a.

(5) The fact is that no divorce is required, as had been first assumed.

(6) Seeing that she is released without any letter of divorce.

(7) Release from which requires no divorce. Hence there is no need to provide against the assumption that 'the first husband had divorced her and the other had lawfully betrothed her etc.', suggested supra.

(8) Cf. supra n. 8. Why then was a letter of divorce required?

(9) For contracting a marriage without first making the necessary enquiries.

(10) Unlawful marriage.

(11) Lit., 'in his eyes'.

(16) I.e., the specified sum due to the woman on the husband's death or on her divorce.

(17) V. Glos.

(23) And the priest may use it for the purposes for which it is fit such as, for instance, fuel.

(24) V. supra note 6, believing that the portion he had set apart. and which had assumed the name of terumah, had exempted it.

(25) Lit., 'having an offensive smell'.

(26) Ter. III, 1, Kid. 46b; which proves that the possibility of neglecting this second separation of terumah does not render null and void the whole act.

(27) The case of the cucumber or the melon where the man believed it to be in good condition. (12) The second case in the first Mishnah cited.

(28) The case of the cucumber or the melon where the man believed it to be in good condition.

(31) Implying that no further terumah for the remainder need be set apart.

(32) In the second Mishnah quoted.

(33) Lit., 'near'.

(34) The fruit, before setting it apart as terumah.

(35) V. supra note 3.

(36) Which is not subject to terumah, since it has not grown directly from the ground.

(37) Which is subject to terumah. A plant in a perforated pot is deemed to be growing from the ground since it derives its nourishment through the holes of the pot from the ground itself.

(38) Dem. V, 10; Kid. 46a, Men. 70a. Why is the terumah in this case valid, while in the other it becomes tebel again?

(39) As in the last cited Mishnah where the produce designated as terumah grew in one kind of pot while the other produce grew in another kind of pot.

(40) To give terumah again, though the portion he has set apart is also allowed to remain terumah.

(41) Where the clean and the unclean grew in the same kind of pot or soil.

(42) To give terumah again, were the portion he has set aside allowed to retain the name of terumah. He would argue that, in view of the validity of his act, no further terumah need be given to the priest, whom he would consequently present with unclean terumah. Hence it was ordained that his act is void and that the quantity he has set aside is not to be regarded as terumah.

(43) And the priest may use it for the purposes for which it is fit, such, for instance, as burning.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 89b

, why is this case different from [the following] where we learned [that if a man has set apart as terumah the produce] of a perforated plant-pot¹ for that of an unperforated one,² the terumah is valid, but³ may not be eaten⁴ before terumah and tithe from other produce⁵ has been set aside for it!⁶ — Here⁷ it is different, since Pentateuchally the terumah is valid, in accordance with the view of R. Elai; for R. Elai stated: Whence is it inferred that if one separates terumah from an inferior quality for a superior quality, his terumah is valid? It is written, And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, seeing that ye have set apart from it the best thereof.⁸ [Now, this implies that if you do not set apart from the best but of the worst you shall bear sin]; if, [however, the inferior quality] does not become consecrated, why [should there be any] bearing of sin?⁹ Hence it may be inferred¹⁰ that if one sets apart terumah from an inferior quality for a superior quality, his terumah is valid.¹¹

Said Rabbah to R. Hisda: According to you who maintain that ‘the act is absolutely null and void’ so that ‘even that griva [which has been designated as terumah] returns to its former state of tebel’, the reason being¹² that this is a preventive measure against the possibility ‘that one might wilfully neglect to set apart [the terumah from the remainder]’; is there anywhere [I may ask] a law that terumah which is Pentateuchally valid should, owing to the possibility that one might wilfully neglect his duty, be turned into¹³ unconsecrated produce?¹⁴ Could, then, a Beth din lay down a condition that would cause a law of the Torah to be uprooted! — The other replied: And do you not yourself agree with such a ruling? Have we not learned, THE CHILD BY THE ONE HUSBAND OR THE OTHER IS A BASTARD. Now, it is reasonable [that the child] by the second [should be deemed] a bastard,¹⁵ but why [should the child] by the first [be a bastard]? She is, surely, his wife¹⁶ and [the child is consequently] a proper Israelite whom [by regarding him as a bastard] we permit to marry a bastard!¹⁷ The first retorted: Thus said Samuel, ‘He is forbidden to marry a bastard’. And so said Rabin, when he came,¹⁸ in the name of R. Johanan. ‘He is forbidden to marry a bastard’. Why, then,¹⁹ is he called a bastard? — In respect of forbidding him to marry the daughter of an Israelite.²⁰

R. Hisda sent to Rabbah through R. Aha son of R. Huna [the following enquiry]: Cannot the Beth din lay down a condition which would cause the abrogation of a law of the Torah? Surely it was taught: ‘At what period of her age²¹ is a husband entitled to be the heir of his wife [if she dies while still] a minor?’²² Beth Shammai stated: When she attains to womanhood;²³ and Beth Hillel said: When she enters into the bridal chamber.²⁴ R. Eliezer said: When connubial intercourse has taken place. Then he is entitled to be her heir, he may defile himself for her,²⁵ and she may eat terumah by virtue of his rights’. (Beth Shammai said, ‘When she attains to womanhood’,²⁶ even though she has not entered the bridal chamber!²⁷ — Read, ‘When she attains to womanhood and enters the bridal chamber', and it is this that Beth Shammai said to Beth Hillel: In respect of your statement, 'When she enters the bridal chamber', it is only when she has attained womanhood that the bridal chamber is effective, but otherwise the bridal chamber alone is of no avail. 'R. Eliezer said: When connubial intercourse has taken place'. But, surely, R. Eliezer said that the act of a minor has no legal force!²⁸ — Read, 'After she has grown up and connubial intercourse has taken place'. At all events it was here stated, 'He²⁹ is entitled to be her heir'; but, surely, by Pentateuchal law it is her father³⁰ who should here be her legal heir, and yet it is the husband who is heir in accordance with a Rabbinical ordinance!³¹ — Hefker³² by Beth din is legal hefker.³³ for R. Isaac stated: Whence is it deduced that hefker by Beth din is legal hefker? It is said, Whosoever came not within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be forfeited, and himself separated from the congregation of the captivity.³⁴ R. Eleazar stated [that the deduction³⁵ is made] from here: These are the inheritances, which Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers' houses of the tribes of the children of Israel, distributed for inheritance.³⁶ Now, what relation is there between Heads and Fathers? But [this has the purpose] of telling you that as fathers may distribute as an inheritance to their children whatever they wish, so may the heads distribute as an inheritance to the people whatever they wish.

'He may defile himself for her'. But, surely, by Pentateuchal law it is her father who may here defile himself for her, and yet it is the husband who by a Rabbinical law was allowed to defile himself for her!³⁷ — [This was allowed] because she is a meth mizwah.³⁸ Is she, however, a meth mizwah?³⁸ Surely, it was taught. 'Who may he regarded as a meth mizwah? He who has no [relatives] to bury him'. [If, however, he has relatives upon whom] he [could] call and they³⁹ would answer him, he is not regarded as a meth mizwah!⁴⁰ — Here also, since they are not her heirs, they would not answer even if she were to call upon them.

'And she may eat terumah by virtue of his rights'!¹ — Only Rabbinical terumah.²

Come and hear: If a man ate³ levitically unclean terumah, he must pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce.⁴ If he paid unconsecrated produce that was levitically unclean, his compensation, said Symmachus in the name of R. Meir, is valid⁵ if it was paid in error,⁶ and invalid if paid wilfully.⁷ The Sages, however, said: Whether in one case or in the other⁸ his compensation is valid, but he must again pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce.⁹ And when, in considering this ruling, the objection was raised, 'Why should not his compensation be valid if he paid it wilfully? A blessing should come upon him! For he has eaten such of the priest's produce¹⁰ as is not fit for him in the days of his uncleanness¹¹ and paid him compensation in something¹² that is fit for him in the days of his uncleanness',¹³ Raba, others say, Kadi, replied: [Some words are] missing from the text, the correct reading being the following: 'If a man ate levitically unclean terumah he may pay compensation in any produce;¹⁴ if he ate levitically clean terumah, he must pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce; if, however, he made compensation in unconsecrated produce that was levitically unclean, his compensation, said Symmachus in the name of R. Meir, is valid if it was made in error,¹⁵ and his compensation is invalid if it was made wilfully. But the Sages said: His compensation is valid whether he has acted in error or wilfully, but he must again pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce'. Now here, surely, the compensation is Pentateuchally valid,¹⁶ for were a priest to betroth a wife¹⁷ with it her betrothal would be valid, and yet the Rabbis¹⁸ ruled that 'his compensation is invalid',¹⁹ and thus²⁰ a married woman²¹ is permitted to [marry any one in] the world!²² — This was meant by the expression,²³ 'his compensation is invalid' which R. Meir used: That he must pay compensation again in clean unconsecrated produce.²⁴ If so, then Symmachus²⁵ holds the same view as the Rabbis! — R. Aha son of R. Ika replied: The difference between them is on the question whether one who has acted unwittingly is to be penalized as a preventive measure against one acting wilfully.²⁶

Come and hear: If [sacrificial] blood became levitically unclean and was then sprinkled [upon the altar], it is accepted²⁷ if [the sprinkling was performed] unwittingly, but it is not accepted [if it was performed] wilfully.²⁸ Now, according to Pentateuchal law, it is here undoubtedly accepted, for it was taught. 'In respect of what [errors] does the High Priest's front-plate²⁹ procure acceptance?'³⁰ In respect of the sacrificial blood, flesh or fat that became unclean whether [this was brought about] by one acting in error or wilfully, under compulsion or willingly, and whether [this occurred with the sacrifice] of an individual or with [that of the] congregation',³¹ and yet the Rabbis ruled that 'it is not accepted'³² so that an unconsecrated beast is brought³³ into the Temple court!³⁴ — R. Jose b. Hanina replied: The expression, 'it is not accepted' was used³⁵ in respect of permitting the flesh to be eaten;³⁶ the owner, however, obtains atonement through it.³⁷

After all, however, the law of eating the flesh [of the sacrifice] would be uprooted, whereas it is written in the Scriptures. And they shall eat those things wherewith atonement was made³⁸ which teaches that the priests eat [the sacrificial meat] and the owner obtains thereby atonement! — The other replied: With an abstention from the performance of an act³⁹ it is different.⁴⁰

(1) Though Pentateuchally she is forbidden to eat terumah! V. supra p. 609. n. 5.

(2) That which is given from fruits of the trees, which is Pentateuchally permitted to non-priests. since the law of terumah is Pentateuchally applicable to corn only.

(3) Unwittingly.

(4) The reason is explained in Pes. 32a.

(5) Assumes the name of terumah.

(6) I.e., if he was unaware that the produce he gave as compensation was levitically unclean.

(7) Since he knew it to be unclean and yet paid it as compensation he is penalized.

(8) Whether the compensation was made in error or wilfully.

(19) If it was made wilfully.

(20) By ruling that the compensation is invalid and, in consequence, is not the property of the priest.

(21) Pentateuchally she should assume this status.

(22) As the compensation is Rabbinically invalid (v. supra n. 11) the betrothal also would be Rabbinically invalid. V. supra p. 609, n. 5.

(23) Lit., 'what'.

(24) The first payment, however, is also valid.

(25) Who reported R. Meir.

(26) According to the Rabbis, an unwitting sin is made punishable in order to prevent thereby a wilful one; hence their ruling that whether the payment of the compensation mentioned was made unwittingly or wilfully a second payment of compensation must be made. According to R. Meir, however, the inadvertent sinner is not to suffer for the sake of the wilful one; hence his ruling that a second payment of compensation is due only in the case of a wilful action.

(27) I.e., the owner obtains atonement and the flesh of the sacrifice may be eaten. הורצה of the same rt. רצה as that of ונרצה and it shall be accepted in Lev. I, 4, q.v.

(32) In case of wilful action.

(33) Lit., 'brought again', i.e., the second sacrifice which the Rabbis ordained to be brought in addition to the first whose blood became unclean, remains Pentateuchally an unconsecrated beast, since, according to Pentateuchal law, no second sacrifice is required.

(39) ש"ב ואל תעשה lit., 'sit and do not act', as is the case with the prohibition against eating the sacrificial meat mentioned.

(40) From the case of turning consecrated terumah into unconsecrated produce. The former (v. supra n. 1) involving no action may well be within the jurisdiction of the Rabbis, but not the latter which involves an act uprooting a Pentateuchal law.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 90b

He,¹ [on hearing the last reply] said to him:² It was my intention to raise objections against your view³ from [the Rabbinical laws which relate to] the uncircumcised,⁴ sprinkling,⁵ the knife [of circumcision],⁶ the linen cloak with zizith,⁷ the lambs of Pentecost,⁸ the shofar⁹ and the lulab;¹⁰ now, however, that you taught us that abstention from the performance of an act¹¹ is not regarded as an abrogation [of the law, I have nothing to say since] all these are also cases of abstention.¹²

Come and hear: Unto him ye shall hearken,¹³ even if he tells you. 'Transgress any of all the commandments of the Torah' as in the case, for instance, of Elijah on Mount Carmel,¹⁴ obey him in every respect in accordance with the needs of the hour!¹⁵ — There it is different,¹⁶ for it is written, 'Unto him shall ye hearken'. Then let [Rabbinic law] be deduced from it! — The safeguarding¹⁷ of a cause is different.¹⁸

Come and hear: If he¹⁹ annulled [his letter of divorce]²⁰ it is annulled: so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, said: He may neither annul it nor add a single condition to it,²¹ since, otherwise,²² of what avail is the authority²³ of the Beth din.²⁴ Now, though here, the letter of divorce may be annulled²⁵ in accordance with Pentateuchal law, we allow a married woman,²⁶ owing to the power²⁷ of Beth din,²⁴ to marry anyone in the world!²⁸ — Anyone who betroths [a woman] does so in implicit compliance with the ordinances²⁹ of the Rabbis,³⁰ and the Rabbis have [in this case]³¹ cancelled the [original] betrothal.³²

Said Rabina to R. Ashi: This³³ is a quite satisfactory explanation where betrothal was effected by means of money;³⁴ what, however, can be said [in a case where betrothal was effected] by cohabitation! — The Rabbis³⁵ have assigned³⁶ to such a cohabitation the character of mere prostitution.³⁷

Come and hear: R. Eleazar b. Jacob stated, 'I heard that even without any Pentateuchal [authority for their rulings]. Beth din may administer flogging and [death] penalties; not, however, for the purpose of transgressing the words of the Torah but in order to make a fence for the Torah. And it once happened that a man rode on horseback on the Sabbath in the days of the Greeks,³⁸ and he was brought before Beth din and was stoned; not because he deserved this penalty, but because the exigencies of the hour demanded it. And another incident occurred with a man who had intercourse with³⁹ his wife under a fig tree, and he was brought before Beth din and flogged; not because he deserved such a penalty, but because the exigencies of the hour demanded it!⁴⁰ To safeguard a cause is different.⁴¹

NEITHER OF THEM MAY DEFILE HIMSELF FOR HER. Whence is this derived? — From what is written in Scripture. Except for his kin that is near unto him,⁴² and a Master stated that 'his kin' means his wife;⁴³ while it was also written, The husband shall not defile himself, among his people, to profane himself;⁴⁴ [implying that] there is a husband, then, who may, and there is a husband who may not defile himself; how, then [are these contradictory laws to be reconciled]? He may defile himself for his lawful wife but he may not defile himself for his unlawful wife.⁴⁵

NEITHER OF THEM HAS A CLAIM UPON ANYTHING SHE MAY FIND etc. [because] what is the reason why the Rabbis ruled that a wife's finds belong to her husband? In order that he may bear no hatred against her; but, here, let him bear against her ever so much hatred!⁴⁶

OR MAKE WITH HER HANDS, [because] for what reason did the Rabbis rule that the work of her hands belonged to her husband? Because she receives from him her maintenance;⁴⁷ but here, since she receives no maintenance, her handiwork does not belong to him.

OR TO THE RIGHT OF INVALIDATING HER VOWS, [since] what is the reason why the All Merciful said that a husband may annul [his wife's vows]? In order that she may not become repulsive; here, however, let her become ever so repulsive!⁴⁸

IF SHE WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, SHE BECOMES DISQUALIFIED FROM MARRYING A PRIEST etc.

(2) Rabbah who maintained (supra 89b) that the Rabbis have no power to abrogate a pentateuchal law.

(3) V. supra note 4.

(4) Proselyte, whose circumcision is performed on the Passover Eve and who, by Rabbinic law, is forbidden to participate in the Paschal lamb, though Pentateuchally it is his duty to celebrate the Passover as an Israelite. Cf. Pes. 92a.

(5) On an unclean person, on the Sabbath day, is Rabbinically forbidden (cf. Pes. 66a) though Pentateuchally permitted. Should the Sabbath on which such sprinkling is due happen to be a Passover Eve, the person affected would, owing to the Rabbinical prohibition, remain unclean on that day and would, in consequence, be deprived of participation in the Paschal lamb, which is a Pentateuchal precept.

(6) The carrying of which on the Sabbath is Rabbinically forbidden even along roofs, an act which is Pentateuchally permitted (cf. Shab. 130b). By observing this Rabbinical law it is sometimes necessary to postpone circumcision which is a Pentateuchal commandment.

(7) V. Glos. Pentateuchally it is permitted to insert woollen fringes (v. Num. XV, 38) in a linen garment, despite the prohibition in Deut. XXII, 11 against wearing wool and linen together. Owing, however, to a Rabbinic prohibition, fringes of wool in a linen garment are forbidden, and this prohibition sometimes results in the abrogation of the Pentateuchal commandment of zizith. Cf. Men. 40a.

(8) V. Num. XXVIII, 26ff. If Pentecost fell on a Sabbath day, and these lambs were not offered for the purpose for which they were designated, the sacrificial blood may not, in accordance with a Rabbinical prohibition, be sprinkled upon the altar, though such sprinkling is Pentateuchally permitted. Thus, the Pentateuchal law of the sprinkling of the sacrificial blood, and other laws which are dependent on its performance, are suspended by a Rabbinical ordinance. Cf. Bezah 20b.

(9) The ram's horn used on the New Year festival (cf. Lev. XXIII, 24). If New Year's Day falls on a Sabbath, the Pentateuchal law of Shofar is abrogated by the Rabbis for fear it might be carried from one Sabbatical domain into another. Cf. R.H. 32a.

(10) The branches of palm-trees (Lev. XXIII, 40) which are taken during the Feast of Tabernacles. This Pentateuchal law is abrogated on the Sabbath day, for the same reason as in the case of the Shofar. (Cf. p. 613, n. 1 t).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 91a

Is not this obvious!¹ — [The statement] IF THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE [she becomes disqualified] FROM THE EATING OF TITHE was required.² Does, however, the daughter of a Levite become disqualified by prostitution from the eating of tithe? Surely, it was taught: If the daughter of a Levite was taken into captivity³ or was subjected to an act of prostitution,⁴ she may nevertheless be given tithe and she may eat it!⁵ — R. Shesheth replied: This⁶ is a punitive measure.⁷

IF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, [she becomes disqualified] FROM THE EATING OF TERUMAH, even Rabbinical terumah.

NEITHER THE HEIRS OF THE ONE HUSBAND NOR THE HEIRS OF THE OTHER ARE ENTITLED TO INHERIT HER KETHUBAH etc. How does the question of kethubah arise here?⁸ R. Papa replied: The kethubah of the male children.⁹ [Is not this also] obvious!¹⁰ — It might have been assumed that the Rabbis had penalized only her, since she had committed the forbidden act, but not her children, hence we were informed [that they also lose the kethubah].

THE BROTHER OF THE ONE AND THE BROTHER OF THE OTHER MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH, BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. The brother of the first husband submits to halizah in accordance with the Pentateuchal law,¹¹ and may not contract the levirate marriage in accordance with Rabbinic law;¹² the brother of the second, however, submits to halizah in accordance with Rabbinical law,¹³ and may not contract the levirate marriage either in accordance with Pentateuchal, or in accordance with Rabbinical law.¹⁴

R. JOSE SAID: HER KETHUBAH [REMAINS A CHARGE] UPON THE ESTATE OF HER FIRST HUSBAND etc. Said R. Huna: The latter agree with the former,¹⁵ but the former do not agree with the latter: R. Simeon agrees with R. Eleazar;¹⁶ since he¹⁷ does not penalize [the woman¹⁸ in the case of] cohabitation which constitutes the main prohibition. how much less [would he do so in respect of] what she finds and what she makes with her hands, which are only monetary matters. R. Eleazar, however, does not agree with R. Simeon; [since it is only in respect of] what the woman finds and what she makes with her hands, which are monetary matters, that he does not penalize her, but in respect of cohabitation which is a religious prohibition he does penalize her. And both of them agree with R. Jose; [since they] do not penalize [the woman in respect of] those matters which are applicable while she continues to live with her husband,¹⁹ how much less [would they do so in respect of] the kethubah the purpose of which is²⁰ [for the woman] to take it and depart.²¹ R. Jose, on the other hand, does not agree with them; [since it is only in respect of] the kethubah [the purpose of which is for the woman] to take it and depart,²¹ that he does not penalize her, but in respect of those matters which are applicable while she continues to live with her husband,¹⁹ he does penalize her.

R. Johanan stated: The former agree with the latter, but the latter do not agree with the former: R. Jose agrees with R. Eleazar; since he does not penalize [the woman in respect of] the kethubah which has to be taken from the husband and given to the wife,²² how much less [would he do so in respect of] what she finds and what she makes with her hands which have to be taken from her and given to him.²³ R. Eleazar, however, does not agree with him; [since it is only in respect of] what she finds and what she makes with her hands which have to be taken from the woman and given to the husband,²³ that he does not penalize her, but in respect of the kethubah which has to be taken from him and given to her,²² he does penalize her. And both of them agree with R. Simeon; since they do not penalize her in respect of matters which [are applicable] while [her first husband] is alive, how much less [would they do so in respect of] cohabitation which takes place after his death. R. Simeon, however, does not agree with them; [since it is only in respect of] cohabitation which [takes place] after [her husband's] death, that he does not penalize her, but [in respect of] those matters which [are applicable] while [he is] alive, he does penalize her.

IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AN AUTHORIZATION etc. Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: This is the accepted law.²⁴ R. Nahman said to him: Why should you indulge in circumlocution!²⁵ If you hold the same view as R. Simeon, say. 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon' for, indeed, your traditional statement runs on the same lines as that of R. Simeon! And should you reply. 'If I were to say "the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon", it might be assumed to apply even to his first statement',²⁶ then say. 'The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon in his latter statement'!²⁷ — This is a difficulty.

R. Shesheth said: It occurs to me²⁸ that Rab made this reported statement while he was sleepy and about to doze off.²⁹ [His statement] 'This is the accepted law' implies that³⁰ [the Rabbis] differ,³¹ but what could she do? She was but the victim of circumstances!³² Furthermore, it was taught: 'None of the women in incestuous marriages forbidden in the Torah, requires a letter of divorce from the man who married her,³³ except a married woman who married again in accordance with a decision of a Beth din'. Only [where she married again] 'in accordance with a decision of a Beth din'³⁴ does she require a letter of divorce, but where [the marriage took place] in accordance with the evidence of two witnesses she requires no letter of divorce.³⁵ Now, whose view is here represented?³⁶ If it be suggested [that it is the view of] R. Simeon, does she [it may be retorted] require a letter of divorce [even where her marriage took place] in accordance with a decision of the Beth din? Surely it was taught: R. Simeon stated, 'If the Beth din acted³⁷ on their own judgment³⁴ [the marriage is regarded] as a wilful [act of adultery between] a man and a [married] woman;³⁸ [if, however, they acted],³⁰ in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses, [the marriage is regarded] as [intercourse between] a man and a woman that was due to error'.³⁹ In both cases, however,⁴⁰ no letter of divorce is thus⁴¹ required.⁴² Consequently it must represent the view of the Rabbis!⁴³ The fact is [that it⁴⁴ represents the view of] R. Simeon, and you may interpret it as follows. R. Simeon stated: If the Beth din acted⁴⁵ on their own judgment, [the marriage is regarded] as intentional [intercourse⁴⁶ between] a man and an [unmarried] woman and [the latter]⁴⁷ consequently requires a letter of divorce; [If, however, they acted],⁴⁵ in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses [the marriage is regarded] as wanton [intercourse between] a man and an [unmarried] woman⁴⁸ and [the latter consequently] requires no letter of divorce.

R. Ashi replied: The statement⁴⁹ was mainly concerned with the question of the prohibition,⁵⁰ and is to be understood as follows:⁵¹ If the Beth din acted⁵² on their own judgment, [the marriage is regarded] as a wilful [act of adultery between] a man and a [married] woman, and [the latter is consequently] forbidden to her [first] husband; [if, however, they acted]⁴⁹ in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses, [the marriage is regarded] as [intercourse between] a man and a woman that was due to error, and [the latter is consequently] not forbidden to her [first] husband.

(1) Having the status of a harlot she is obviously forbidden to marry a priest. Cf. Lev. XXI, 7.

(2) As this ruling had to be mentioned the other also was included.

(3) Where she is exposed to the dangers of gentiles' outrage.

(5) Bek. 47a.

(6) The disqualification of the Levite's daughter in our Mishnah.

(7) For not instituting the necessary enquiries before she married her second husband.

(8) Where the woman herself, as stated earlier in our Mishnah, is not entitled to it.

(9) Of the woman. By the insertion of the prescribed clause (v. Keth. 52b), her sons are entitled to receive her kethubah from their father's estate when he dies, even if their mother died first and their father married again and had sons with his second wife. They receive her kethubah in addition to their shares in their father's estate to which the sons of both the first and the second wife are equally entitled. In the case spoken of in our Mishnah, however, the sons of the first wife lose their claim to her kethubah.

(10) If their mother herself is not entitled to it, how much less her sons whose claim is entirely derived from hers.

(11) Since according to Pentateuchal law he is the brother of the proper husband.

(12) As a punitive measure against the woman who did not make sufficient enquiries before contracting her second marriage.

- (13) Pentateuchally the widow is not subject to him at all, since her marriage with his brother was invalid. Cf. supra p. 617, n. 11.

- (35) Since she was but an unfortunate victim of circumstances.
- (36) Lit., 'who is it'.
- (37) Permitted the remarriage of a woman whose husband's death has been reported.

- (39) And the return of the woman to her first husband is consequently permitted.
- (40) Whether the marriage was on the decision of Beth din or on the evidence of two witnesses.
- (41) Since the comparison was made with acts of presumption and error while divorce was not mentioned at all.
- (42) The first Baraitha cited, which required a divorce in a case where the woman married in accordance with a decision of the Beth din, cannot therefore represent the view of R. Simeon.
- (43) Which proves that they also admit that no divorce is necessary where the marriage was contracted in reliance on two witnesses. Who is it, then, that differs from R. Simeon that it should have been necessary for Rab to declare the halachah to be in agreement with his view?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 91b

Rabina replied: The statement was mainly dealing with the question of sacrifice,¹ and is to be understood as follows.² If the Beth din acted on their own judgment, [the marriage is regarded] as a wilful [act of adultery between] a man and a [married] woman, and [the latter] does not bring a sacrifice;³ if, however, they acted] in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses, [the marriage is regarded] as [intercourse between] a man and a woman that was due to error and [the latter] has to bring a sacrifice.⁴

If you prefer, however, I might say that the first [Baraita]⁵ represents [the view of] the Rabbis, and you may explain it as follows: 'Except a married woman'⁶ and one 'who married again in accordance with a decision of a Beth din'.⁷

'Ulla raised an objection: Do we accept the plea⁸ 'what could she have done'?⁹ Surely we learned: [If a letter of divorce] was dated¹⁰ according to¹¹ an era that was inappropriate,¹² according to¹¹ the Median era, or according to¹¹ the Greek era, according to [the era of] the building of the Temple, or the destruction of the Temple, or if he¹³ was in the East and wrote, 'In the West', [or he was] in the West and wrote, 'In the East', she¹⁴ must leave her first and her second husband,¹⁵ and all the disabilities¹⁶ [enumerated,¹⁷ are applicable] to her.¹⁸ But why?¹⁹ Let it be argued. 'What could she have done'?²⁰ — She should have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.²¹

R. Shimi b. Ashi said, Come and hear: If a levir married his sister-in-law²² and her rival went and married [another man]²³ and then the former²⁴ was found to be incapable of procreation,²⁵ [the latter]²⁶ must leave the one and the other²⁷ and all the disabilities¹⁶ [mentioned²⁸ apply] to her.²⁹ But why?³⁰ Let it be argued. 'What could she have done'?³¹ — She should have waited.

Said Abaye: Come and hear: If the rivals [of] any of the forbidden relatives concerning whom it has been said³² that they exempt their rivals went and married, and any such forbidden relatives³³ were found to be incapable of procreation,³⁴ [every rival] must leave the one and the other,³⁵ and all the disabilities³⁶ [mentioned³⁷ apply] to her.³⁸ But why?³⁹ Let it be argued. 'What could she have done'? — She should have waited.

Said Raba. Come and hear: If a scribe wrote a letter of divorce for the husband and a quittance⁴⁰ for the wife, and then made a mistake and handed the letter of divorce to the wife and the quittance to the husband, and they⁴¹ gave them to one another,⁴² and after a time⁴³ the letter of divorce was discovered⁴⁴ in the possession of the husband and the quittance in the possession of the wife, [the latter]⁴⁵ must leave the one as well as the other,⁴⁶ and all the disabilities³⁶ [mentioned⁴⁷ apply] to her.³⁸ But why?⁴⁸ Let It be argued. 'What could she have done'? — She could have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.⁴⁹

Said R. Ashi, Come and hear: If he⁵⁰ changed⁵¹ his name or her name, the name of his town or the name of her town, she must depart from the one and from the other,⁵² and all the disabilities³⁶ [mentioned³⁷ apply] to her.³⁸ But why?⁴⁸ Let it be argued. 'What could she have done'? — She should have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.⁵³

Said Rabina, Come and hear: If a man married a woman⁵⁴ on [the strength of] a bald⁵⁵ letter of divorce she must depart from the one and from the other,⁵⁶ etc.! — She should have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.⁵⁷

R. Papa desired to decide a case on [the principle of] 'What could she have done',⁵⁸ Said R. Huna Son of R. Joshua to R. Papa: But surely all those⁵⁹ Baraitoth were taught?⁶⁰ The other answered him: Were they not explained?⁶¹ 'Shall we then',⁶² the former retorted, 'rely on explanations'?⁶³

R. Ashi said: No regard need be paid⁶⁴ to a rumour.⁶⁵ What kind of rumour [is here meant]? If it be suggested [that it means] a rumour after marriage.⁶⁶ Surely [it may be objected] R. Ashi has said this once; for R. Ashi stated:

- (1) Cf. supra n. 6, mutatis mutandis.
 - (2) So Bah. Cf. supra n. 7. Cur. edd. omit, 'and is . . . follows'.
 - (3) Since her wilful act was performed in reliance on the ruling of Beth din. V. Hor. 2b.
 - (4) As for any other similar sin committed in error.
 - (5) V. supra note 15.
 - (6) Who married again in accordance with the evidence of two witnesses.
 - (7) On the evidence of one witness. According to this interpretation, a marriage on the evidence of two witnesses is not excluded (as was originally suggested supra 91a) and it also requires a letter of divorce.
 - (8) Lit 'do we say'.
 - (9) R. Shesheth's objection, supra 91a.

 - (38) Git. 80a.
 - (39) Should the woman be penalized.
 - (40) Which the wife gives to the husband on the receipt of her kethubah.
 - (41) Without examining the documents.
 - (42) Lit., 'this to this and this to this'; both of them believing that the husband gave to his wife the letter of divorce, and that the wife gave to her husband the quittance.
 - (43) When the woman had married another man.
 - (44) Lit., 'goes out'.
 - (45) Since her divorce was invalid, the document having been given to her not by her husband as the law requires but by the scribe.
 - (46) Her second and her first husband.

- (47) V. supra note 7.
- (48) Should she be subject to the disabilities.
- (49) When she would immediately have discovered the scribe's error.
- (50) The husband.
- (51) In the letter of divorce which he gave to his wife.
- (52) Lit., 'from this and from this': from her first, and from her second husband.
- (53) And the change of name would have been discovered at once.
- (54) Lit., 'he married her'.
- (55) פקד i.e., a 'folded document' (cf. B.B. 160a) on one of whose folds a signature is wanting. A valid deed of such a character must bear the signature of a witness on each fold and must be signed by no less than three witnesses. V. Git., Sonc. ed., p. 391.
- (56) V. supra p. 623, n. 22.
- (57) And the defect would have been discovered forthwith.
- (58) It was his intention to allow a woman, whose second marriage was contracted on the evidence of two witnesses who had testified that her first husband was dead, to go back to him when he returned.
- (59) Above mentioned.
- (60) And in none was the principle of 'what could she have done' acted upon.
- (61) Special reasons were given why the principle mentioned was not acted upon. In all other cases, however, it should be taken into consideration.
- (62) Lit., 'shall we rise'.
- (63) Despite the explanations, the original objections may still be urged. Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis 'and he desisted'. i.e., R. Papa abandoned his contemplated decision.
- (64) If a woman was authorized by the Beth din to contract a second marriage.
- (65) That her first husband was still alive.
- (66) Of the woman with her second husband.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 92a

No regard need be paid to a rumour that originated after marriage!¹ — It might have been assumed that since she was to appear before the Beth din to obtain the authorization² [for her marriage].³ the rumour is regarded as one [that arose] before marriage⁴ and she should in consequence be forbidden,⁵ we were, therefore, taught [that even in such circumstances a rumour is disregarded].

IF SHE MARRIED WITH THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE BETH DIN SHE MUST LEAVE etc. Ze'iri said: Our Mishnah cannot be authentic⁶ owing to a Baraitha that was recited at the academy. For it was recited at the academy: If the Beth din ruled⁷ that the sun had set,⁸ and later it appeared, [such a decision] is no ruling⁹ but a mere error.¹⁰

R. Nahman. however, stated: [Such an authorization]¹¹ is [to be regarded as] a ruling.¹² Said R. Nahman: You can have proof¹³ that it [is to be regarded as] a ruling. For throughout the Torah a single witness is never believed while in this case he is believed. But why? Obviously¹⁴ because [such an authorization is regarded as] a ruling.¹⁵ Raba said: You can have proof¹³ that it¹¹ is [to be regarded as a mere] error.¹⁶ For were Beth din to issue a ruling in a case of some forbidden fat or blood that it is permitted, and then find a [strong] reason for forbidding it, [their subsequent ruling], should they retract and rule again that it is permitted,¹⁷ would be completely disregarded;¹⁸ whereas here,¹⁹ it should one witness present himself,²⁰ the woman would be permitted to marry again,²¹ and should two witnesses [afterwards] appear²² the woman would be forbidden to marry again,²³ but should another witness subsequently appear²⁴ the woman would again be permitted to marry. But why?²⁵ Obviously²⁶ because it¹⁹ [is regarded as a mere] error.²⁷

R. Eliezer also is of the opinion that it¹⁹ is [to be regarded as a mere] error. For it was taught: R. Eliezer said: Let the law pierce through the mountain²⁸ and let her²⁹ bring a fat sin-offering.³⁰ Now, if it be granted that it¹⁹ is [to be treated as] an error one can well see the reason why she is to bring an offering.³¹ If, however, it be contended that it¹⁹ is [to be regarded as] a ruling, why should she bring an offering!³² But is it not possible that R. Eliezer holds the opinion that an individual who committed a sin in reliance on a ruling of the Beth din is liable?³³ — If so, what [could have been meant by] 'Let the law pierce through the mountain'!³⁴

IF THE BETH DIN DECIDED THAT SHE MAY MARRY AGAIN etc. What is meant by DISGRACED HERSELF? — R. Eliezer³⁵ replied: She played the harlot. R. Johanan replied: [If being] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest, [or if] a divorcee or a haluzah [she was married] to a common priest. He who stated, 'She played the harlot',³⁶ would, even more so, [subject the woman to a sin-offering. if as] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest.³⁷ He, however, who stated, '[If being] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest' does not³⁸ [subject her to a sin-offering if] she played the harlot. What is the reason? — Because she might plead, 'It is you who granted me the status of an unmarried woman'.³⁹

It was taught in agreement with the opinion of R. Johanan: If Beth din directed that she may be married again. and she went and disgraced herself, so that, for instance, [being] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest, [or being] a divorcee or a haluzah [she was married] to a common priest. she is liable to bring an offering for every single act of cohabitation;⁴⁰ so R. Eleazar. But the Sages said: One offering for all. The Sages, however, agree with R. Eleazar that, If she was married to five men, she is liable to bring an offering for every one, since [here it is a case of] separate bodies.

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN WHOSE HUSBAND AND SON WENT TO COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA WAS TOLD,⁴¹ 'YOUR HUSBAND DIED AND YOUR SON DIED AFTERWARDS',⁴² AND SHE MARRIED AGAIN,⁴³ AND LATER SHE WAS TOLD, 'IT WAS OTHERWISE'.⁴⁴ SHE MUST DEPART;⁴⁵ AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER⁴⁶ IS A BASTARD.⁴⁷ IF

SHE WAS TOLD. 'YOUR SON DIED AND YOUR HUSBAND DIED AFTERWARDS',⁴⁸ AND SHE CONTRACTED THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AND AFTERWARDS SHE WAS TOLD, 'IT WAS OTHERWISE'⁴⁹ SHE MUST DEPART;⁵⁰ AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER⁴⁶ IS A BASTARD.⁴⁷

IF SHE WAS TOLD, 'YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD, AND SHE MARRIED, AND AFTERWARDS SHE WAS TOLD, 'HE WAS ALIVE'⁵¹ BUT IS NOW DEAD', SHE MUST DEPART,⁵² AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND]⁵³ IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT⁵⁴ IS NO BASTARD. IF SHE WAS TOLD, 'YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD AND SHE WAS BETROTHED, AND AFTERWARDS HER HUSBAND APPEARED, SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM. ALTHOUGH THE OTHER⁵⁵ GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE HE HAS NOT THEREBY DISQUALIFIED HER FROM MARRYING A PRIEST. THIS R. ELEAZAR B. MATHIA DERIVED BY MEANS OF THE FOLLOWING EXPOSITION: NEITHER [SHALL THEY⁵⁶ TAKE] A WOMAN PUT AWAY FROM HER HUSBAND,⁵⁷ EXCLUDES ONE PUT AWAY⁵⁸ FROM A MAN WHO IS NOT HER HUSBAND.⁵⁹

GEMARA. What is meant by BEFORE⁶⁰ and what is meant by AFTER?⁶¹ If it be suggested that BEFORE means before the [second] report and that AFTER means after that report, it should have been stated: The child is a bastard!⁶² Because it was desired to state in the final clause, IF SHE WAS TOLD, 'YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD', AND SHE MARRIED, AND AFTERWARDS SHE WAS TOLD, 'HE WAS ALIVE BUT IS NOW DEAD . . . ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE⁶³ [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND] IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT⁶⁴ IS NO BASTARD, the expressions BORN BEFORE OR AFTER IS A BASTARD were used in the first clause also.

Our Rabbis taught: This⁶⁵ is the view of R. Akiba who stated: Betrothal with those who are subject [on intercourse] to the penalties of a negative commandment is invalid.⁶⁶ The Sages, however, said that [the child] of a sister-in-law⁶⁷ is no bastard.⁶⁸ Let it be said: The child of a union between those who are subject [on intercourse] to the penalties of a negative precept is no bastard!⁶⁹ — This Tanna⁷⁰ is the following Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who stated that [only a child] of a union that is subject to the penalties of a negative precept owing to consanguinity is a bastard, but one born from a union that is subject to the penalties of a mere negative precept⁷¹ is no bastard.

Rab Judah stated

- (1) If, for instance, after a priest had married, a rumour arose that before her marriage with him his wife was a divorcee or a harlot. Git. 81a, 88b, 89a.
 - (2) Lit., 'and we permitted'.
 - (3) Before it had taken place.
 - (4) Her appearance before the court implying that, already at that time, the possibility that her husband was still alive was being considered.
 - (5) To her second husband, as if the rumour had been current before her marriage.
 - (6) Lit., 'our Mishnah is not'.
 - (7) On a cloudy day which happened to be the Sabbath day.
 - (8) And permitted the people to commence their week-day labours which are forbidden on the Sabbath.
 - (9) Which exempts the individual who acted upon it from a sin-offering and affects the nature of the sin-offering which the congregation who acted upon it has to bring.
 - (10) Since the erroneous ruling of the Beth din was not due to an oversight on their part of a point of law but to a false assumption of a matter of fact. They assumed that the sun had set, while in fact, it had not. Similarly here, They assumed that the woman's husband was dead when as a matter of fact he was alive. Our Mishnah, therefore, which exempts the woman from a sin-offering cannot be authentic.

- (11) The permission to the woman to marry again, spoken of in our Mishnah.
- (12) Subject to the same laws as all erroneous rulings issued by a Beth din. Cf. supra 11. 6. and Hor. 2aff.
- (13) Lit., 'thou shalt know'.
- (14) Lit., 'not?'
- (15) The woman did not act on the evidence of the witness which, as is now apparent, was due to an error, but on the ruling of the Beth din who accepted the evidence of this witness. Whatever their reason may have been it was their ruling that was the cause of the woman's marriage.
- (16) [They assumed that every woman makes careful investigations before she marries (v. supra 25a) and it has been found that this was not the case].
- (17) [Rashi: For a reason not as strong as that which prompted them to prohibit It. Me'iri: For the very same reason which made them permit it at the very first].
- (18) Lit., 'we do not look to them'. Once it has been found that their first ruling was erroneous it cannot again be adopted.
- (19) v. supra p. 625, n.8.
- (20) Testifying that the woman's husband was dead.
- (21) Lit., 'we permit'.
- (22) Declaring that the husband was still alive.
- (23) Lit., 'we forbid'.
- (24) Stating that the husband has died since.
- (25) If the first authorization is to be regarded as a ruling it should not again be adopted (cf. supra n. 2), once it has been proved (by the testimony of the two witnesses) that it was erroneous.
- (26) Lit., 'not'?
- (27) It is assumed that though the first witness misled the court the last is speaking the truth.
- (28) I.e., one should delve deeper into the subject (cf. Rashi a.l.) 'Justice under all circumstances' (Jast.).
- (29) The woman who married by permission of the court on the evidence of one witness.
- (30) Cf. Sanh. 6b. Though, if viewed superficially, it would appear that the woman, since she had acted on the decision of a court, is not liable to a sin-offering (cf. Hor. 2a). careful consideration of the case would reveal that she is liable, since the decision was based on the error of the witness and not on a legal oversight of the court. Cf. supra p. 625, n. 7.
- (31) Cf. supra note 14, second section.
- (32) Cf. loc. cit. first section.
- (33) To a sin-offering.
- (34) Cf. supra note 12 (first interpretation) and supra note 14.
- (35) Marg. note, 'Eleazar'.
- (36) That even in such a case a sin-offering must be brought.
- (37) Since it is obvious that the court's permission did not extend to a marriage which is in any case forbidden to the woman, even if her husband is dead.
- (38) Lit., 'but not'.
- (39) And since she acted on a ruling of a court, she is not liable to a sin-offering.
- (40) This is further explained in Ker. 15a.
- (41) Lit., 'and they came and said to her'.
- (42) As the son was alive when his father died the widow is not subject to the levirate marriage or halizah.
- (43) A stranger.
- (44) Lit., 'the matter was reversed', the son died first, so that when his father died afterwards the widow was subject to halizah or levirate marriage.
- (45) From her second husband, since he married her before she had performed the required halizah.
- (46) The second report. Lit 'and the first and last child'.
- (47) Being the issue of a union forbidden by a negative precept. V. Gemara infra.
- (48) V. p. 627. n. 10.
- (49) V. supra p. 627, n. 8.
- (50) From the levir, to whom, (her husband having had issue from her at the time he died) she is forbidden as 'his brother's wife'.
- (51) At the time she married her second husband.

- (52) From her second husband who married her while, as a married woman, she was forbidden to him.
- (53) Lit., 'and the first child'.
- (54) Lit., 'and the last'.
- (55) Lit., 'the last, the man who betrothed her.'
- (56) Priests.
- (57) Lev. XXI, 7-
- (58) Lit., 'and not'.
- (59) The divorce being unnecessary it has no effect on the status of the woman.
- (60) In the first clauses of our Mishnah.
- (61) Lit., 'what is first and what is last'.
- (62) Since the child's legitimacy is not determined by the date of the report but by the facts.
- (63) Lit., 'the first'.
- (64) Lit., 'and the last'.
- (65) The statement in the first clause of our Mishnah that the child is a bastard.
- (66) V. supra 10b. And no divorce is consequently required.
- (67) Who married a stranger before she had performed halizah with the levir.
- (68) Tosef. XI. Since such marriage is forbidden by a negative precept only, and is not subject to kareth.
- (69) This more general statement would have also included the particular case of the sister-in-law mentioned.
- (70) Referred to in the Baraitha cited as 'the Sages'.
- (71) The marriage, for instance, of the sister-in-law to a stranger. The general statement (v. supra note 7) was consequently inadmissible.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 92b

in the name of Rab: Whence is it deduced that betrothal with a sister-in-law¹ is of no validity?² — From the Scriptural text,³ The wife of the dead shall not be married⁴ outside unto one who is not of his kin,⁵ there shall be no validity in the betrothal⁶ of her by a stranger.⁷ Samuel, however, stated: Owing to our [intellectual] poverty⁸ it is necessary [that she be given] a letter of divorce; Samuel having been in doubt as to whether the expression,⁹ The wife of the dead shall not be,¹⁰ served the purpose of¹¹ a negative precept¹² or rather indicated¹¹ that betrothal with such a woman is invalid.

R. Mari b. Rachel said to R. Ashi: Thus said Amemar, 'The law is in agreement with Samuel'. Said R. Ashi: Now that Amemar has said that the law is in agreement with Samuel, her levir,¹³ if he was a priest,¹⁴ submits to her halizah and she is permitted to her second husband.¹⁵ He¹⁶ surely benefits¹⁷ thereby.¹⁸ and thus the sinner¹⁹ is at an advantage!²⁰ — Rather [this is the reading]: If her levir²¹ was an Israelite, the other²² gives her a letter of divorce and she is permitted to the levir.²³

R. Giddal stated in the name of R. Hiyya b. Joseph in the name of Rab: While betrothal with a sister-in-law²⁴ is invalid, marriage with her is valid.²⁵ If betrothal, however, is invalid, marriage also should be invalid! — Read: Both betrothal and marriage with her are invalid. And if you prefer I might say. What is meant by 'marriage with her is valid'? — It constitutes an act of²⁶ harlotry²⁷ in accordance with the ruling of R. Hamnuna. For R. Hamnuna stated: A woman who, while awaiting the decision of the levir, played the harlot, is forbidden to marry the levir. And if you prefer I might say: [The reading is]. in fact, as has been originally stated, that betrothal with her is invalid but marriage with her is valid,²⁸ since her case might be mistaken for that of a woman whose husband went to a country beyond the sea.²⁹

R. Jannai said: A vote was taken at the college and it was decided that betrothal with a sister-in-law³⁰ has no validity. Said R. Johanan to him: O Master, is not this [law contained in] a³¹ Mishnah? For we have learnt: If a man said to a woman, 'Be thou³² betrothed unto me after I shall have become a proselyte'. 'after thou shalt have been a proselyte'. 'after I shall have been emancipated'. 'after thou shalt have been emancipated'. 'after thy husband shall have died' , 'after thy sister shall have died' or 'after thy brother-in-law shall have submitted to thy halizah', the betrothal is invalid!³³ — The other replied: Had I not lifted up the sherd, would you have found the pearl beneath it?³⁴

Resh Lakish said to him:³⁵ Had not a great man praised you. I would have told you that the Mishnah [you cited represents the view] of R. Akiba who maintains that betrothal with those who are subject to the penalties of a negative precept is invalid.³⁶

If [this Mishnah, however, represents the view of] R. Akiba, betrothal [with the sister-in-law]³⁷ should be valid where [the stranger] said to her, 'after thy brother-in-law shall have submitted to thy halizah', since R. Akiba has been heard to state that one may transfer possession of that which is not yet in existence;³⁸ for we learned:

(1) V. supra note 5.

(2) And no divorce is consequently required.

(3) Lit., 'because it is said'.

(4) Lit., 'she shall not be', הא תהיה.

(5) Deut. XXV,5.

(6) Lit., 'being'. הויה, i.e., 'betrothal'.

(7) Lit., 'a stranger shall have no being in her'. הויה (supra n. 15) is of the same rt. היה, as that of תהיה (supra. 13).

(8) Inability to understand the meaning of the Scriptural text mentioned.

(9) Lit., 'that'.

(10) Deut. xxv. .5.

(11) Lit., 'that it came'.

(12) And, as is the case with other unions that are forbidden by negative precepts, the betrothal is valid.

(13) The brother-in-law of the widow, spoken of in the first case of our Mishnah, who married a stranger and from whom, according to Samuel, she requires a divorce.

(14) To whom the sister-in-law would thus be forbidden even after she had been divorced by the stranger. A priest is forbidden to marry a divorced woman. V. Lev. XXI, 7.

(15) Lit., 'to him', the stranger whom she married.

(16) The second husband. v. supra n. 7.

(17) He is permitted to continue to live with his wife.

(18) By the halizah of the levir.

(19) Who contracted a union before instituting the necessary enquiries as to the circumstances of his wife's first husband's death.

(20) Lit., 'gains'.

(21) Cf. supra note 5.

(22) The second husband. Cf. supra note 7.

(23) Lit., 'to him'.

(24) Who, before she performed halizah with the levir had married a stranger.

(25) This validity, it is at present assumed, subjects the woman to the necessity of a letter of divorce.

(26) Lit., 'In'.

(27) By such a marriage she becomes forbidden to marry the levir as if she had played the harlot; but no letter of divorce is required.

(28) In the sense that she requires a letter of divorce. Cf. p. 630, n. 17. and the following note.

(29) And she married in accordance with the decision of a court on the evidence of one witness who testified that her first husband was dead. As the woman in this case requires a letter of divorce, it was ordained, as a preventive measure, that in the case spoken of in our Mishnah also a letter of divorce shall be required. the validity spoken of extending, however, to this requirement and no further. In the case of betrothal no preventive measure was enacted since in this case also no letter of divorce is required.

(30) V. p. 630, n. 16.

(31) Lit., 'our'.

(32) Lit., 'behold thou art'. Cf. P.B. p. 298.

(33) Kid. 62a, Keth. 58b. B.M. 16b. Betrothal cannot take effect at once owing to his stipulation and it cannot take place in the future because that which is not yet in existence may not be acquired. From this it follows that before the levir has submitted to halizah betrothal by a stranger is invalid, which is in effect the law reported by R. Jannai.

(34) I.e., had not R. Jannai stated his ruling it might never have occurred to R. Johanan that the reason for the invalidity of the betrothal in the case of the sister-in-law was the law that betrothal with a sister-in-law by a stranger is never valid before the levir has submitted to halizah. He might have assumed the invalidity in this particular case also to be due to the fact that the man distinctly desired it to take place in the future, and no one can acquire that which is not yet in existence.

(35) R. Johanan.

(36) Marriage of a sister-in-law by a stranger before she has performed halizah with the levir is forbidden by such a negative precept. This Mishnah, therefore, provides no proof, like the statement of R. Jannai, that the Rabbis also admit invalidity in such a case.

(37) Lit 'with', or 'in her'.

(38) Consequently, the betrothal here, though it was dependent on a future event which had not yet taken place, should also be valid.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 93a

[If a woman said to her husband]. 'Konam,¹ I do aught for your mouth',² he³ need not annul [her vow].⁴ R. Akiba, however, said: He³ must annul it, since she might do more [work] than is due⁵ to him!⁶ Surely in connection with this it was stated: R. Huna son of R. Joshua said, [This law⁷ applies only] where she said, 'My hands⁸ shall be consecrated to Him who made them', since her hands are in existence.⁹

This¹⁰ differs [from the opinion] of R. Nahman b. Isaac. For R. Nahman b. Isaac stated: R. Huna [holds the same opinion] as Rab,¹¹ Rab as R. Jannai, R. Jannai as R. Hiyya. R. Hiyya as Rabbi,¹² Rabbi as R. Meir, R. Meir as R. Eliezer b. Jacob. and R. Eliezer b. Jacob as R. Akiba, who stated that a man may transfer possession of a thing that is not yet in existence.

What statement is it [that records the opinion of] R. Huna? It was stated: He who sold the fruit of a date-tree¹³ to another may, said R. Huna, withdraw from the sale before they come into existence; but after they have come into existence he may no longer withdraw.¹⁴ R. Nahman, however, stated: He may withdraw even after they have come into existence.¹⁵ Said R. Nahman: I admit, that if he¹⁶ had already plucked and ate them, [compensation] is not to be extracted from him.¹⁷

As to Rab?¹⁸ — [In that] which R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: If a man said to another, 'let this field which I am about to buy be yours as from now the moment I buy it', [the latter] acquires it.¹⁹

'R. Jannai [is of the same opinion] as R. Hiyya'; for R. Jannai had a tenant²⁰ who used to bring him a basket of fruit every Sabbath Eve. Once as it was growing dark, and [the tenant] did not come, [R. Jannai] took²¹ tithe²² from the fruit which [he had] at home for [the redemption of] those.²³ When he subsequently came before R. Hiyya [the latter] said to him, 'You have acted well; for it was taught: That thou mayest learn to fear the Lord thy God always²⁴ refers to Sabbaths and festivals'.²⁵ Now, in 'respect of what law?²⁶ If in respect of giving tithe²⁷ so that one may be allowed to eat,²⁸ was it necessary [it may be asked] for a Scriptural text to permit moving,²⁹ [the prohibition of which is only] Rabbinical!³⁰

(1) This is one of the expressions of a vow. V. Glos.

(2) I.e., that her husband be forbidden to eat anything made by her or purchased from the proceeds of her work.

- (3) The husband who is empowered to annul his wife's vow. Cf. Num. XXX, 7ff.
- (4) A wife's work belongs to her husband and she has, therefore, no right to dispose of it by vow or otherwise. Her vow is consequently null and void and requires on invalidation.
- (5) A husband is entitled only to a certain amount of his wife's work (v. Keth. 64b). Any work in excess of that maximum is at the disposal of the wife who, in the opinion of R. Akiba, is entitled to forbid it to her husband by a vow, though that work has not yet been done.
- (6) Keth. 59a, 66a, Ned. 85a, Kid. 63a. V. supra note 3.
- (7) That a wife may by her vow cause her future work to be forbidden.
- (8) And through them the work they will produce.
- (9) At the time she made her vow.
- (10) The view presented by R. Huna, according to which R. Akiba maintains that a thing that is not yet in existence may not be legally transferred.
- (11) From whom he received it as a tradition from his master, R. Jannai. who in turn, received it from his master, R. Hiyya, and so on to R. Akiba.
- (12) R. Judah I, the Patriarch or Prince, compiler of the Mishnah.
- (13) During the winter, before they blossomed.
- (14) Because, according to R. Huna, the kinyan that was arranged before they come into existence takes effect as soon as they come into existence.
- (15) In his opinion no kinyan is effective unless the object sold is actually in existence at the time of the sale.
- (16) The buyer.
- (17) B.M. 66b.
- (18) Where was his view expressed?
- (19) B.M. 16b; which proves that, in the opinion of Rab, one may transfer possession of a field which one does not yet possess. obviously because he holds that one may transfer possession of that which is not yet in existence.
- (20) אֲרִיִּם cf Gr., a tenant of a field who in return for his labour receives a share of the field's produce.
- (21) Before the Sabbath commenced.
- (22) An act which In Rabbinic law it is forbidden to perform on the Sabbath.
- (23) The fruit which he expected from the tenant, though at the time the tithe was taken they were still the property of the tenant (v. Tosaf. s.v. מִיֵּיתִי a.l.) and not that of R. Jannai.
- (24) Deut. XIV, 23, speaking of the levitical and priestly gifts.
- (25) On which enjoyment should not be marred by failure to set apart the prescribed gifts.
- (26) Was the Scriptural warning necessary.
- (27) On Sabbath or festivals.
- (28) Of his produce from which tithe was not taken before the holy day set in.
- (29) טַחְטוּחַ moving the fruit before being tithed. The prohibition to set aside on holy days any of the priestly or levitical gifts is due to the Rabbinical ordinance which is in the same category as the moving from its place, on such days, of articles that are unfit for use. (Cf. Beza 36b).
- (30) Scripture, surely. could not be referring to a prohibition which was not ordained before the Rabbinical period.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 93b

Consequently¹ [it must refer to] an instance like this one.² Said the first to him, 'But in my dream³ they read to me a Scriptural text on the "bruised reed";⁴ did they not mean to tell me: Behold, thou trustest upon the staff of this bruised reed'?⁵ 'No'. [the other replied], 'It is this that they meant: A bruised reed shall he not break, and the dimly burning wick shall he not quench'.⁶

Rabbi?⁷ — Where it was taught: Thou shalt not deliver unto his master a bondman,⁸ Rabbi explained that Scripture speaks here of a man who bought a slave on the condition that he would set him free.⁹ How is this¹⁰ to be understood?¹¹ R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: In the case where [the buyer] gave him¹² a written declaration, 'Your person shall become yours as from now as soon as I have bought you'.¹³

R. Meir?¹⁴ — Where it was taught:¹⁵ If a man said to a woman, ‘Be thou betrothed to me after I shall have become a proselyte’. ‘after thou shalt have become a proselyte’. ‘after I shall have been emancipated’. ‘after thou shalt have been emancipated’. ‘after thy husband shall have died’, ‘after thy sister shall have died’, or ‘after thy brother-in-law shall have submitted to thy halizah’, the betrothal is invalid; but R. Meir said that her betrothal is valid.¹⁶

R. Eliezer b. Jacob?¹⁴ — Where it was taught: More than this did R. Eliezer b. Jacob say: Even if a man said, ‘The plucked fruit of this bed shall be terumah for the attached fruit of that¹⁷ other bed’, or ‘The attached fruit of this¹⁷ bed [shall be terumah] for the plucked fruit of that other bed,¹⁷ when it shall have grown¹⁶ to a third [of its maturity] and been plucked’. his words are valid if the fruit has grown to¹⁸ a third [of its maturity] and has been plucked.¹⁹

R. Akiba?²⁰ — Where we learned: [If a woman said to her husband]. ‘Konam,²¹ if I do aught for your mouth’,²² he²³ need not annul [her vow].²⁴ R. Akiba, however, said: He²³ must annul It, since she might do more [work] than is due²⁵ to him.²⁶

An enquiry was addressed to R. Shesheth: What is [the law in respect of] one witness²⁷ in the case of a sister-in-law?²⁸ Is the reason why one witness [is sometimes believed elsewhere]²⁹ because no one would tell a lie which is likely to be exposed. and consequently here also [the witness] would tell no lie;³⁰ or is the reason why one witness [is believed elsewhere]³¹ because the woman herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries, and consequently here, since she may sometimes be in love with [her brother-in-law]. she might marry him without proper enquiry?³² — R. Shesheth answered them: You have learned it, IF SHE WAS TOLD, ‘YOUR SON DIED AND YOUR HUSBAND DIED AFTERWARDS’, AND SHE CONTRACTED THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AND LATER SHE WAS TOLD, ‘IT WAS OTHERWISE, SHE MUST DEPART; AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER IS A BASTARD.’³³ Now, how is this to be understood? If it be suggested [that there were] two witnesses against two,³⁴ what reason do you see [it may be asked] for relying on the latter? Rely rather on the former! Furthermore. [how could the child be described as] BASTARD [when he is only] an uncertain bastard! And should you reply that he³⁵ was not exact in his expression. surely [it may be pointed out] since in the final clause he³⁵ stated, ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND] IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT IS NO BASTARD,³³ it may well be inferred that he was exact In his expressions, Consequently³⁶ it must be concluded [that the first report was that of] one witness, and that the reason [why he is not believed is] because two witnesses came and contradicted his evidence, but had this not been the case³⁷ he would have been believed.³⁸

Another reading: This question³⁹ does not arise, since even the woman herself is believed.⁴⁰ For we learned: A woman who stated, ‘My husband is dead’ may be married again.⁴¹ and she may similarly contract levirate marriage [if she stated] ‘My husband is dead’.⁴² The question arises only in respect of permitting a sister-in-law to marry a stranger.⁴³ Is the reason why one witness [is elsewhere sometimes believed]⁴⁴ because no one would tell a lie which is likely to be exposed, and consequently, here also [the witness] would tell no lie;⁴⁵ or is the reason why one witness [is elsewhere believed]⁴⁴ because [the woman] herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries, and consequently here she might marry without proper enquiry. since she might fiercely hate her brother-inlaw?¹ — R. Shesheth answered them: You have learned it, IF A WOMAN.. WAS TOLD, YOUR HUSBAND DIED AND YOUR SON DIED AFTERWARDS', AND SHE MARRIED AGAIN, AND LATER SHE WAS TOLD, 'IT WAS OTHERWISE', SHE MUST DEPART; AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER IS A BASTARD.² Now, how is this to be understood? If it be suggested [that there were] two witnesses against two,³ what reason do you see [it may be asked] for relying on the latter? Rely rather on the former! Furthermore, [how could the child be described as a] BASTARD, [when he is only] an uncertain bastard! And should you reply that he⁴ was not exact in his expression. Surely [it may be pointed out] since in the final clause he⁴ stated, ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND] IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT IS NO BASTARD,² it may be inferred that he was exact in his expressions! Consequently⁵ [it must be concluded that the first report was that of] one witness, and that the reason [why he is not believed is] because two witnesses came and contradicted his evidence, but had this not been the case⁶ he would have been believed! [No]. In fact [it may be retorted, there may have been] two witnesses against two, and [this is the explanation]: As R. Aha b. Manyumi stated, 'Where the witnesses have proved an alibi',⁷ so here also [It is a case where the second pair of] witnesses have proved an alibi.⁸

Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi, — others Say. R. Aha said to R. Ashi: Come and hear: A woman is not believed if she says. 'My brother-in-law is dead, and so I may marry again', or, 'My sister is dead, and so I may enter⁹ her house'.¹⁰ Only she is not believed but one witness is believed!¹¹ According to your argument, however, [it may be retorted] read the final clause: A man is not believed when he says. 'My brother is dead, and so I may contract the levirate marriage with his wife', or, 'My own wife is dead, and so I may marry her sister' —¹⁰ Is it only he who is not believed, but one witness is believed? In the case of a woman¹² one can well understand that in order to prevent her perpetual desertion the Rabbis have relaxed the law in her favour.¹³ What, however, can be said in the case of a man! [This statement]¹⁴ then [it must be explained] was required in accordance with the view of R. Akiba.¹⁵ It might have been assumed that, since R. Akiba stated that the offspring of a union between those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments is a bastard, she¹⁶ may be presumed to be desirous of avoiding injury¹⁷ and to institute, therefore, careful enquiries.¹⁸ hence we were taught¹⁹ [that she is not to be believed].²⁰ Raba said:²¹ That one witness is believed in the case of a sister-in-law²² [may be inferred] a minori ad majus: If you have permitted [a woman to marry again]²³ in face of a prohibition involving kareth²⁴ how much more so in face of a mere prohibitory law.²⁵ Said one of the Rabbis to Raba: Her own case proves [the contrary]: In face of a prohibition involving kareth²⁴ you have permitted her [to marry again]²⁶ while in face of a mere prohibitory law²⁵ you have not permitted her!²⁷ The fact, however, is this:²⁸ Why is she not believed?²⁷ Because, as she may sometimes hate the levir, she might marry a stranger without first instituting careful enquiries;²⁹ so also in the case of one witness, since she may sometimes hate the levir, she might marry [a stranger] without first instituting the necessary enquiries.²⁹

THIS DID R. ELEAZAR B. MATHIA DERIVE BY MEANS OF THE FOLLOWING EXPOSITION etc. Said Rab Judah in the name of Rab:³⁰ R. Eleazar could have produced³¹ a pearl and produced but a potsherd. What is meant by 'pearl'? — That which was taught: Neither [shall they take] a woman put away from her husband.³² even if she was divorced from her husband alone³³ she³⁴ is disqualified from marrying a priest.³⁵ And it is this [that was meant by] the 'scent of the divorce'³⁶ which disqualifies a woman from marrying a priest. TO HIM;¹ AND HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE RELATIVES OF THE SECOND WOMAN;² AND THE SECOND WOMAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES. IF THE FIRST DIED HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE SECOND.

IF HE WAS TOLD, HOWEVER, THAT HIS WIFE WAS DEAD, AND HE MARRIED HER SISTER, AND THEN HE WAS TOLD THAT SHE WAS THEN³ ALIVE BUT HAD SINCE DIED, ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE⁴ [HIS FIRST WIFE'S DEATH] IS A BASTARD, BUT ANYONE BORN AFTER THAT⁵ IS NO BASTARD.

R. JOSE STATED:⁶ WHOSOEVER DISQUALIFIES FOR OTHERS DISQUALIFIES FOR HIMSELF AND WHOSOEVER DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR OTHERS DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR HIMSELF.

GEMARA. Even though his wife and his brother-in-law⁷ went to a country beyond the sea,⁸ so that such marriage⁹ had the effect of causing the prohibition of the wife of his brother-in-law to his brother-in-law, it is nevertheless the wife of his brother-in-law that is forbidden,¹⁰ while his own wife is permitted.¹¹ and we do not say that, since the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden to his brother-in-law, his Own wife also should be forbidden to him.¹²

Are we to assume that our Mishnah does not represent the view of R. Akiba? For if [it be in agreement with] R. Akiba [his wife]¹³ would be the sister of his divorcee!¹⁴ For it was taught: None of the women In incestuous marriages forbidden in the Torah require a letter of divorce,¹⁵ except a married woman¹⁶ who remarried in accordance with the decision of the Beth din.¹⁷ R. Akiba, however, adds¹⁸ also a brother's wife¹⁹ and a wife's sister.²⁰ Now, since R. Akiba ruled that she²¹ requires a letter of divorce, [his first wife] becomes ipso facto forbidden to him because she is the sister of his divorcee!²²

Was not, however, the following statement made in connection with this²³ ruling: R. Giddal said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Joseph in the name of Rab, 'How is one to understand this "brother's wife"?²⁴ Where a man's brother, for instance, betrothed a woman and went to a country beyond the sea, and he,²⁵ on hearing that his brother was dead, married his wife;²⁶ since people might say²⁷ that the first²⁸ had attached a certain condition to the betrothal²⁹ and that the latter²⁵ had lawfully married her.³⁰ And how is one to understand a "wife's sister"?²⁴ Where a man, for instance, betrothed a woman and she went to a country beyond the sea, and he, on hearing that she died, married her sister;²⁶ since people might say³¹ that he had attached a certain condition to the betrothal³² of the first³³ and that he, therefore, legally married the other'.³⁴ In respect of marriage,³⁵ however, can it be said that one had attached a condition to marriage!³⁶

Said R. Ashi to R. Kahana: If [our Mishnah represents the view of] R. Akiba, one's mother-in-law³⁷ should also be mentioned,³⁸ since R. Akiba was heard to state: [The marriage of] a man's mother-in-law after the death [of his wife] is not punishable by burning!³⁹ For it was taught: They shall be burnt with fire. both he and they,⁴⁰ he and one of them;⁴¹ so R. Ishmael. R. Akiba said: He and both of them.⁴² This presents no difficulty according to Abaye who explained that the difference between them⁴³ lies in the interpretation of the text,⁴⁰ R. Ishmael maintaining that the text mentioned only one⁴⁴ while R. Akiba maintains that the text spoke of two.⁴⁵ According to Raba, however, who explained that the difference between them⁴³ is [the case of marriage of] a man's mother-in-law after the death [of his wife].⁴⁶ his mother-in-law should also have been mentioned!⁴⁷ — The other replied: Granted that Scripture has excluded her⁴⁸ from the penalty of burning. has Scripture. however, excluded her from the prohibition?⁴⁹

Let her,⁵⁰ however, be forbidden [to her husband] through his cohabitation with her sister, her case being similar to that of a woman whose husband went to a country beyond the sea!⁵¹ — [The two cases are] not alike: His wife who, [if she had acted] presumptuously,⁵² is forbidden to him by Pentateuchal law, has been forbidden to him, when [she acted] unwittingly, by a preventive measure of the Rabbis;

with his wife's sister, however, presumptuous [marriage with whom does] not [cause his first wife to be] forbidden [to him] by Pentateuchal law, no preventive measure has been instituted by the Rabbis in her case where [he acted] unwittingly.¹ Whence, however, is it deduced that she² is not forbidden?³ — [From that] which was taught: With her;⁴ only cohabitation⁵ with her causes her to be prohibited;³ cohabitation⁶ with her sister, however, does not cause her to be prohibited. [This, Scriptural text was required] since [otherwise] It might have been argued [as follows]: If where a man cohabited with [a woman forbidden by] a lighter prohibition.⁷ [the person]⁸ who caused the prohibition [itself]⁹ is forbidden [to her],¹⁰ how much more should [the person]¹¹ who caused the prohibition become forbidden in the case of cohabiting with [one¹² forbidden by] a heavier prohibition.¹³

R. Judah stated: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are agreed¹⁴ that a man who cohabited with his mother-in-law renders his wife unfit [to live with him]; they only differ where a man cohabited with his wife's sister, in which case Beth Shammai maintain that thereby he causes [his wife] to be unfit for him, while Beth Hillel maintain that he does not thereby cause her to be unfit for him.

R. Jose stated: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are agreed¹⁴ that a man who cohabits with his wife's sister does not thereby render his wife unfit for him; they differ only where a man cohabited with his mother-in-law, in which case Beth Shammai maintain that thereby he causes [his wife] to be unfit for him, while Beth Hillel maintain that he does not thereby cause her to be unfit for him. [Both agree]¹⁵ for the following reason:¹⁶ Originally all the women of the world were permitted to him,¹⁷ and all the men of the world were permitted to her;¹⁸ but when he betrothed her he imposed a prohibition upon her and she imposed a prohibition upon him; the prohibition, however, which he imposed upon her is greater than the prohibition which she imposes upon him, since he caused all the men of the world to be forbidden to her, while she caused her relatives only to be forbidden to him. This,¹⁹ then, may be arrived at by an inference: If she, to whom he²⁰ caused²¹ all the men in the world to be prohibited, is, if she cohabited unwittingly with one who was forbidden to her,²² not forbidden to the man²³ who was permitted to her,²⁴ how much more reason is there why he²³ to whom she²⁵ caused²⁶ the prohibition of her relatives only, should, if he cohabited unwittingly with one who was forbidden to him,²⁷ not be forbidden²⁸ to her²⁵ who was permitted to him. This argument is applicable to one who acted unwittingly. Whence is it deduced [that the same law²⁹ is applicable] to one who acted wilfully? It was expressly stated With her,³⁰ cohabitation³¹ with her only causes her to be prohibited;³² cohabitation³³ with her sister, however, does not cause her to be prohibited.³²

Said R. Ammi in the name of Resh Lakish: What is R. Judah's reason?³⁴ — Because it is written, They shall be burnt with fire. both he and they;³⁵ is the whole household to be burned!³⁶ If this, then, is not a case for burning³⁶ regard the text as indicating a prohibition.³⁷

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The law is not in agreement with R. Judah.³⁷

A man once committed incest with his mother-in-law, and Rab Judah summoned him and ordered him to receive a flogging. 'Had Samuel not stated', he said to him, 'that the law was not in agreement with R. Judah. I would have forbidden [your wife] to you for all time'.

What was meant by a 'lighter prohibition'?³⁸ — R. Hisda replied: Remarrying one's divorced wife after her marriage to another man —³⁹ When that man⁴⁰ cohabited with her, he caused her to be prohibited to the other,⁴¹ and when the other⁴¹ cohabited with her⁴² he caused her to be prohibited to the former.⁴³ [But, it may be argued,] remarrying one's divorced wife after her marriage to another man is different⁴⁴ since her body⁴⁵ was defiled and she is⁴⁶ prohibited for all time!⁴⁷ — Rather, said Resh Lakish, [it means] a yebamah.⁴⁸

A yebamah with whom?⁴⁹ If it be suggested: With a stranger,⁵⁰ [the ruling] being in accordance with R. Hamnuna who ruled⁵¹ that a woman awaiting the decision of the levir who played the harlot is forbidden to the levir,⁵² [it may be objected that] a yebamah is different,⁴⁴ since her body was defiled and she is prohibited to the majority of men.⁵³ If, however, [it be suggested that it refers⁵⁴ to] a yebamah in relation to [her deceased husband's] brothers: Where one [brother, for instance] addressed to her a ma'amar he caused her to be prohibited to the other,⁵⁵ and when the other cohabited with her he caused her to be prohibited to the former.⁵⁶ [But in this case] what point is there, [it may be retorted, in stating]⁵⁷ that the second cohabited with her,⁵⁸ [when the same law is applicable] also even where he⁵⁹ only addressed to her a ma'amar!⁶⁰ — This is no difficulty; [a ma'amar could not be postulated], in accordance with R. Gamaliel who ruled: There is no validity in a ma'amar that was addressed after a previous ma'amar.⁶¹ But [still the objection is that the same law is applicable] even if he⁵⁹ gave her a letter of divorce and even if he submitted to her halizah! — Rather, said R. Johanan, [it means] a sotah.⁶²

A sotah, with whom?⁶³ If it be suggested: With her husband who, if he cohabited with her,⁶⁴ caused her to be prohibited to her seducer,⁶⁵ what point is there, [it may be objected, in stating] that he cohabited with her? Even if he⁶⁶ only gave her a letter of divorce and even if he only said, 'I am not allowing her to drink',⁶⁷ [the same law is applicable]!⁶⁸ [If it be suggested] however: The sotah with the seducer;⁶⁹ is this⁷⁰ [it may be objected] a 'lighter prohibition'? It is surely a grave prohibition, since she is a married woman!

- (42) After her second husband had divorced her.
- (43) V. supra p. 645, n. 18, the prohibition being due to the prohibitory law in Deut. XXIV, 4. Thus the second husband 'who caused the prohibition of his wife is thereby himself forbidden to her'.
- (44) From a marriage with one's wife's sister.
- (45) That of the divorced woman.
- (46) Cur. edd., insert, 'and she is prohibited to the majority' which (cf. Rashi a.l.) is to be deleted.
- (47) To both husbands. A wife's sister, however, is forbidden only during the lifetime of one's wife but permitted after her death, while furthermore the marriage of a wife's sister does not cause the defilement of the wife's body. The latter case cannot, therefore, be compared to the former. What, then, was meant by the 'lighter prohibition'?
- (48) Marriage with her by a stranger is regarded as a 'lighter prohibition'.
- (49) I.e., with whom did she cohabit that her act should have the result that he 'who caused the prohibition is thereby himself forbidden to her'?

- (52) Thus the levir 'who caused the prohibition' of his sister-in-law to others is 'himself forbidden to her' by the cohabitation of the stranger.
- (53) I.e., to everybody except the levir or levirs. A wife's sister, however, is forbidden to him (her sister's husband) alone, and his wife's body is not defiled by his marriage with her sister. The two cases, therefore, cannot be compared.

- (69) By his cohabitation the woman becomes prohibited to her husband who was the cause of her prohibition to others.
- (70) Cohabitation with a married woman.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 95b

— Rather, said Raba, it means a married woman. Similarly when Rabin came¹ he stated in the name of R. Johanan: A married woman. But why should this² be described as 'a lighter prohibition'? — Because [her husband] who causes her to be prohibited [to other men] does not cause her to be so prohibited during the whole of his lifetime.³

It⁴ was taught likewise: Abba Hanan stated in the name of R. Eleazar: [It means] a married man. [And the argument runs thus:] If where a man cohabits with [a woman forbidden by] a lighter prohibition,⁵ in which case he⁶ who caused the prohibition of her does not cause her to be prohibited during the whole of his lifetime,⁷ [it is nevertheless ruled] that the very person who causes the prohibition becomes prohibited,⁸ then, in a case of cohabiting with [one forbidden] by a graver prohibition,⁹ where the person, who causes the prohibition of her,¹⁰ prohibits her during the whole of her lifetime,¹¹ how much more should we rule that the very person who causes the prohibition should become prohibited;¹² hence it was expressly stated, With her,¹³ only cohabitation¹⁴ with her¹⁵ causes her to be prohibited¹⁶ but cohabitation¹⁷ with her sister does not cause her¹⁸ to be prohibited.¹⁶

R. JOSE STATED: WHOSOEVER DISQUALIFIES etc. What does R. Jose mean?¹⁹ If it be suggested that while the first Tanna implied that 'Where a man's wife and his brother-in-law²⁰ went to a country beyond the sea,²¹ the wife of his brother- in-law is forbidden,²² though his own wife is permitted',²³ R. Jose said to him, 'As his own wife is permitted²³ so is the wife of his brother-in-law also permitted';²² if so, [it may be objected, why the expression] WHOSOEVER DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR OTHERS DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR HIMSELF²⁴ where it should have been. 'Whosoever does not disqualify²⁵ for himself, does not disqualify for others'!²⁶

If, however, [it be suggested that R. Jose implied]. 'As the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden,²⁷ so is his wife also forbidden',²⁸ [the expression,] WHOSOEVER DISQUALIFIES would be satisfactorily explained; what, however, would be the purport of WHOSOEVER DOES NOT DISQUALIFY?²⁴ — R. Ammi replied: [He²⁹ refers] to an earlier clause:³⁰ 'If she married with the authorization of the Beth din, she must leave, but is exempt from an offering. If she married, however, without the authorization of the Beth din, she must leave and is also liable to an offering, the authorization of the Beth din is thus more effective in that it exempts her from the offering.³¹ Concerning this, the first Tanna stated [that his wife may return to him]³² 'irrespective of whether [the marriage³³ took place] on the evidence of two witnesses,³⁴ where the wife of his brother-in-law is permitted,³⁵ or whether [it took place] in accordance with a decision of the Beth din,³⁶ where the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden',³⁵ and [to this] R. Jose replied. '[If the marriage took place] in accordance with a decision of the Beth din,³⁶ where he DISQUALIFIES FOR OTHERS³⁷ he DISQUALIFIES FOR HIMSELF;³⁸ [if, however, it took place] on the basis of the evidence of two witnesses,³⁴ where he DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR OTHERS³⁹ he DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR HIMSELF.⁴⁰

R. Isaac Nappaha replied: [R. Jose may], in fact, refer to the latter clause,⁴¹ one⁴² [of his rulings applying] where [the persons who] had gone [were] the man's wife⁴³ and his brother-in-law. and the other [applying] where his betrothed and brother-in-law had gone. The first Tanna having ruled that 'irrespective of whether it was his wife and his brother-in-law or whether it was his betrothed and his brother-in-law, the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden⁴⁴ while his wife is permitted,'⁴⁵ R. Jose said to him, 'In the case of his wife and brother-in-law where no one would assume that he had attached some condition to his marriage⁴⁶ and where consequently he does not cause [his sister-in-law] to be prohibited to the other,⁴⁷ he does not cause [his first wife] to be prohibited to him either; in the case of his betrothed and his brother-in-law, however, where someone might assume that he had attached some condition to his betrothal⁴⁸ and where, in consequence, he causes [his sister-in-law] to be prohibited to the other,⁴⁹ he causes [his first wife] also to be prohibited to him.

Rab Judah Stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose.

R. Joseph demurred: Could Samuel have said this?⁵⁰ Surely it was stated: A yebamah,⁵¹ Rab said, has the status of a married woman; and Samuel said: She has not the status of a married woman. And R. Huna said: Where, for instance, a man's brother betrothed a woman⁵² and then went to a country beyond the sea, and he,⁵³ on hearing that his brother was dead, married his wife. [It is in such a case] that Rab ruled that 'she has the status of a married woman' and is consequently forbidden to the brother-in-law;⁵⁴ and Samuel ruled that 'she has not the status of a married woman' and is, therefore, permitted to him!⁵⁵ Said Abaye to him:⁵⁶ Whence [do you infer] that when Samuel stated that 'the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose', he was referring to R. Isaac Nappaha's interpretation? Is it not possible that he was referring to that of R. Ammi!⁵⁷ And even if he refers to that of R. Isaac Nappaha, whence the proof that [he referred to the ruling] 'DISQUALIFIED'?⁵⁸

(1) From Palestine to Babylon.

(2) Illicit intercourse with a married woman.

(3) As soon as he divorces her she is free again. A prohibition of this nature, which may terminate at any time, is regarded as 'lighter' than the prohibition of a man's wife's sister, which remains in force throughout the whole of the lifetime of his wife.

(4) The lighter prohibition referred to.

(5) A married woman. The prohibition is considered light for the reason that follows.

(6) The husband.

(7) The prohibition of a married woman terminates with divorce by her husband.

(8) The woman becomes forbidden to her own husband through illicit intercourse.

(9) His wife's sister.

(10) I.e., the wife who causes her sister to be prohibited to her husband.

(11) The prohibition [if a man's wife's sister remains in force throughout the whole of the lifetime of his wife.

(12) To her own husband.

(13) Num. V, 13.

(14) Of a stranger

(15) His wife.

(16) To her husband.

(17) Of her husband.

(18) The wife.

(19) His statement seems to have no apparent connection with the preceding clause.

- (20) His wife's sister's husband.
- (21) And they both returned after he had married his wife's sister on the strength of the evidence of one witness who testified that they were both dead.
- (22) To her husband, his brother-in-law.
- (23) To him.
- (24) Cases about which R. Jose, according to this suggestion, did not speak.
- (25) His own wife.
- (26) His wife's sister to her husband. These last mentioned cases being those of which R. Jose presumably spoke.
- (27) To her husband, his brother-in-law.
- (28) To him.
- (29) R. Jose.
- (30) In a previous Mishnah.
- (31) V. supra 87b.
- (32) V. our Mishnah, first clause.
- (33) Of the husband (whose wife had gone away) with his wife's sister (whose husband also had gone away).
- (34) Who testified that both his wife and brother-in-law were dead.
- (35) To her husband, if he returned.
- (36) On the evidence of one witness. V. supra n. 11.
- (37) He causes his wife's sister to be forbidden to return to her husband owing to his illicit marriage with her.
- (38) His first wife is forbidden to him also.
- (39) His wife's sister being in this case permitted to her husband.
- (40) And his first wife may return to him.
- (41) I.e., our Mishnah which speaks of a marriage permitted on the evidence of one witness.
- (42) Lit., 'that'. Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis 'that, where he married the wife of his brother-in-law; and that, where he married the betrothed of his brother-in-law.'
- (43) This is the reading of Rashi (a.l. s.v. ג"ה). Cur. edd., transpose 'wife' and 'betrothed'.
- (44) To her husband, if he returned.
- (45) To him.
- (46) With his first wife; since no condition is admissible in a marriage contract. (V., however, supra p. 642, n. 5).
- (47) Her husband, his brother-in-law. His own first marriage being known to be valid it should be obvious to all that his subsequent marriage with his sister-in-law was invalid. Were it even assumed that his brother-in-law had divorced her, the invalidity of his marriage with his sister-in-law would not thereby be affected since even after her divorce she still remains forbidden to him as his wife's sister. This being the case no one will suspect his brother-in-law when his wife returns to him of having remarried his divorcee. Hence R. Jose's ruling that she is not forbidden to her husband.
- (48) Which, on non-fulfilment, had rendered the betrothal invalid and thus enabled him lawfully to contract his subsequent marriage; his presumed sister-in-law being to him (owing to the invalidity of her sister's betrothal) no more than a mere stranger.
- (49) Her former husband. Were she permitted to return to him it might be assumed that he had divorced her prior to her marriage with her brother-in-law and that the latter had now divorced her; and so it would be concluded that (contrary to Deut. XXIV, 4) a man married again the woman he had once divorced though she had in the meantime been married to another man.
- (50) Lit., 'thus', that the halachah is in agreement with the full statement of R. Jose, including the part relating to the marriage with the sister of one's betrothed, it being necessary in case of betrothal to provide against the erroneous assumption that the betrothal was invalid and that consequently a man's divorcee had been married again by him. Cf. p. 650, nn. 8 and 9.
- (51) This is explained anon.
- (52) Had he married her there would have been no question that she may return to him. Cf. supra p. 650, n. 7.
- (53) The brother at home.
- (54) I.e., to the man who first betrothed her and then left her and now returned, and who, owing to his brother's marriage with her, has become her brother-in-law. Were she to be permitted to return to him it might be assumed that his original betrothal was invalid owing to some disqualifying condition, that his brother's marriage was, therefore, valid, and that he now married his brother's wife.

(55) Because, in the opinion of Samuel, no provision need be made against the erroneous assumption that the betrothal was invalid (cf. supra n. 5). How, then, could it be said that Samuel adopted the complete statement of R. Jose.

(56) R. Joseph.

(57) So that the question of the assumption of a disqualifying condition in a betrothal would not at all arise.

(58) The case of one's betrothed and brother-in-law.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 96a

Is it not possible [that he referred] to the ruling 'DOES NOT DISQUALIFY'!¹ Or else [it might be argued], whence is it proved that R. Huna's explanation² is tenable? Is it not possible that R. Huna's explanation is altogether untenable and that they³ differ on the ruling of R. Hamnuna who stated that 'A woman awaiting the decision of the levir, who played the harlot, is forbidden to her levir';⁴ Rab maintaining that she 'has the status of a married woman' and is consequently prohibited⁵ by reason of her immoral act,⁶ while Samuel maintains that 'she has not the status of a married woman' and does not therefore, become prohibited⁵ by reason of her immoral act? Or else [it might be replied] that they³ differ on the question whether betrothal of a sister-in-law⁷ is valid, Rab maintaining that she 'has the status of a married woman' and betrothal⁷ with her is, in consequence, invalid, while Samuel maintains that 'she has not the status of a married woman' and betrothal⁷ with her is, therefore, valid. But on this question⁸ they³ had already disputed once!⁹ — The one was stated as an inference from the other.¹⁰

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WAS TOLD 'YOUR WIFE IS DEAD AND HE MARRIED HER PATERNAL SISTER; [AND WHEN HE WAS TOLD] 'SHE¹¹ ALSO IS DEAD', HE MARRIED HER MATERNAL SISTER;¹² SHE¹³ TOO IS DEAD, AND HE MARRIED HER PATERNAL SISTER;¹⁴ 'SHE¹⁵ ALSO IS DEAD, AND HE MARRIED HER MATERNAL SISTER;¹⁶ AND LATER IT WAS FOUND THAT THEY WERE ALL ALIVE, HE IS PERMITTED TO LIVE WITH THE FIRST,¹⁷ THIRD¹⁸ AND FIFTH,¹⁹ WHO ALSO EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS;²⁰ BUT HE IS FORBIDDEN TO LIVE WITH THE SECOND OR THE FOURTH,²¹ AND COHABITATION²² WITH ONE OF THESE DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL. IF, HOWEVER, HE²³ COHABITED WITH THE SECOND AFTER THE DEATH OF THE FIRST,²⁴ HE IS PERMITTED TO LIVE WITH THE SECOND²⁵ AND FOURTH,²⁶ WHO ALSO EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS;²⁷ BUT HE²³ IS FORBIDDEN TO LIVE²⁸ WITH THE THIRD AND WITH THE FIFTH, AND COHABITATION²² WITH ONE OF THESE DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL.

A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY RENDERS²⁹ [HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] UNFIT [FOR MARRIAGE] WITH HIS BROTHERS, AND HIS BROTHERS RENDER HER UNFIT FOR HIM, BUT WHILE HE RENDERS HER UNFIT FROM THE OUTSET ONLY, THE BROTHERS RENDER HER UNFIT BOTH FROM THE OUTSET AND AT THE END. IN WHAT MANNER?²⁹ A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY WHO COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW RENDERS HER UNFIT [FOR MARRIAGE] WITH HIS BROTHERS; THE BROTHERS, HOWEVER, RENDER HER UNFIT FOR HIM WHETHER THEY COHABITED WITH HER, ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH.

GEMARA. Did not all those [marriages³⁰ take place] after the death of the first wife!³¹ — R. Shesheth replied: [By this³² was meant]. AFTER THE ASCERTAINED³³ DEATH OF THE FIRST WIFE.

A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS etc. Does a boy of the age of nine years and one day cause unfitness³⁴ [only where his act took place] at the outset,³⁵ but if at the end³⁶ he causes no unfitness? Surely R. Zebid son of R. Oshaia learnt: If [a brother]³⁷ addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law, his brother of the age of nine years and one day, cohabiting with her afterwards, causes her to be unfit [for marriage with him]!³⁸ — It may be replied: Cohabitation causes unfitness³² even [if it took place] at the end,³⁶ while a ma'amar causes unfitness [only if it was addressed] at the outset,³⁵ but if at the end,³⁶ it causes no unfitness. But does cohabitation³⁹ cause unfitness even [if it took place] at the end? Surely it was taught: BUT WHILE HE RENDERS HER UNFIT FROM THE OUTSET ONLY, THEY [RENDER HER UNFIT] BOTH FROM THE OUTSET AND AT THE END. IN WHAT MANNER? A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY WHO COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW etc!⁴⁰ — Something, indeed, is here missing, and this is the proper reading: 'A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY RENDERS [HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] UNFIT [FOR MARRIAGE WITH HIS BROTHERS, if his action took place] AT THE OUTSET, but they RENDER HER UNFIT FOR HIM BOTH AT THE OUTSET AND AT THE END. This is applicable only in the case of a ma'amar, but cohabitation⁴¹ causes unfitness even [if it took place] at the end. IN WHAT MANNER? A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY WHO COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW⁴² RENDERS HER UNFIT FOR MARRIAGE WITH HIS BROTHERS.

His his ma'amar, however, any validity⁴³ at all?⁴⁴ Surely it was taught: A boy of the age of nine years and one day renders [his sister-in-law] unfit for his brothers⁴⁵ by one kind of act only, while the brothers render her unfit for him by four kinds of acts. He renders her unfit for the brothers by cohabitation,⁴⁶ while the brothers render her unfit for him by cohabitation, by a ma'amar, by a letter of divorce and by halizah!⁴⁷ — Cohabitation, which causes unfitness both from the outset and at the end, presented to him a definite law,⁴⁸ [the law of the] ma'amar, however, which causes unfitness front the outset only but not at the end, could not be regarded by him as definite.⁴⁹

So it was also stated: Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: He⁵⁰ has [the power to give] a letter of divorce.⁵¹ And so said R. Tahlifa b. Abimi: He⁵⁰ has [the power to address] a ma'amar.⁵¹

It was taught likewise: He⁵⁰ has [the right to give] a letter of divorce⁵¹ and he has [the right to address] a ma'amar;⁵¹ so R. Meir.

Could R. Meir, however, hold the view [that such a boy] has [the power to give] a letter of divorce?⁵¹ Surely it was taught: Cohabitation with a boy of the age of nine years [and one day] was given the same validity as that of a ma'amar by an adult; and R. Meir said: The halizah of a boy of the age of nine years was given the same validity as that of a letter of divorce by an adult.⁵² Now, if that were so,⁵³ it should have been stated, 'As that of his own letter of divorce'! — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: He⁵⁴ has [the right],⁵⁵ but [his divorce is of a] lesser validity.⁵⁶ For according to R. Gamaliel who ruled that there is no [validity in a] letter of divorce after another letter of divorce, his ruling is applicable only [in the case of a divorce] by an adult after that of an adult, or one by a minor after that of a minor, but [a divorce] by an adult after that of a minor is effective,⁵⁷ while according to the Rabbis who ruled that a letter of divorce given after another letter of divorce is valid, the ruling applies only to [a divorce] by adult after that of an adult, or one by a minor after that of a minor, but [a divorce by] a minor after [that of] an adult is not effective.⁵⁷

(1) The case of one's wife and brother-in-law-; Samuel indicating that in this case, and in this case alone, the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose that the sister-in-law is permitted to her first husband contrary to the view of the first Tanna who forbids her.

(2) Supra 95b.

(3) Rab and Samuel.

(4) Cit. 80b, Sot 18b, supra 95a.

(5) To the levir.

(6) As a married woman is prohibited to her husband if she has committed such an act.

(7) To a stranger before she had performed halizah.

(8) The validity of betrothal of a sister- in-law. V. supra n. 7.

- (9) Supra 92b. Why should they dispute the same point twice.
- (10) By disciples. Rab and Samuel, however disputed the point only once.
- (11) His second wife.
- (12) Who was thus a perfect stranger to the first wife.
- (13) His third wife.
- (14) A perfect stranger to the second.
- (15) The fourth.
- (16) A stranger to the third.
- (17) Since his marriage with her was valid.
- (18) Who was a complete stranger to him when he married her (V. supra p. 652. n. 12). His previous marriage with her maternal sister (his second wife) had no validity because the latter was a sister of his first wife and was forbidden to him as 'his wife's sister'.
- (19) Marriage with whom was valid since the marriage with her sister (the fourth) was invalid. Cf. supra n. 2, mutatis mutandis.
- (20) If the man died without issue and one of his surviving brothers contracted the levirate marriage with or submitted to halizah from one of these widows.
- (21) The validity of his marriage with the first and third causes the second and the fourth to be prohibited to him as his wives' respective sisters. Cf. supra note 2.
- (22) By one of the levirs. Cf. supra note 4.
- (23) The husband.
- (24) I.e., it was proved that the first report of her death was true (Rashi).
- (25) The death of the first wife has removed from the second the prohibition of wife's sister (since a wife's sister is prohibited only during the lifetime of the wife) marriage with whom becomes valid.
- (26) The marriage with the second having become valid (v. supra n. 9), that with the third (being now the man's wife's sister) becomes invalid and, consequently, the marriage with the fourth who is now a perfect stranger becomes valid.
- (27) V. supra note 4.
- (28) Cf. previous notes, mutatis mutandis.
- (29) This will be explained in the Gemara infra.
- (30) That were enumerated in the first clause of our Mishnah.
- (31) Why then was 'AFTER THE DEATH OF THE FIRST' mentioned only in the second clause in the case where HE COHABITED WITH THE SECOND?
- (32) V. supra n. 2.
- (33) In the other cases death was only reported.
- (34) Of his sister-in-law for his brothers.
- (35) Before any of the adult brothers had addressed a ma'amar to the widow.
- (36) After an elder brother had addressed to her a ma'amar.
- (37) Of a deceased husband who died without issue.
- (38) Which shows that a boy of this age may cause unfitness even 'at the end'.
- (39) On the part of the boy of the age of nine years and one day.
- (40) Emphasis on COHABITED. Since the illustration is limited to an act of cohabitation only the general statement that the boy RENDERS HER UNFIT FROM THE OUTSET ONLY, on which the illustration apparently hangs must also be limited to cohabitation.
- (41) On the part of the boy of the age of nine years and one day.
- (42) Even at the end, i.e., after his brothers had addressed to her a ma'amar.
- (43) Lit., 'has he a ma'amar'?
- (44) Cur. edd. insert 'for the brothers', which, with MS.M. and Pesaro ed. 1509, should be omitted. V. infra n. 5.
- (45) The last three words are wanting in cur. edd., but are rightly included in the Pesaro ed. V. supra n. 4.
- (46) And by no other act.
- (47) How then could it be said that the boy's ma'amar has any validity at all.
- (48) פסיקא rt. פסק 'to cut', 'to decide', i.e., the law relating to cohabitation is definite and absolute. The act is always valid. Hence he mentioned it.
- (49) And being undesirous of entering into details of the law he preferred to omit it.

- (50) A boy of the age of nine years and one day.
 (51) His act is effective and causes his sister-in-law to be unfit for marriage to his brothers.
 (52) Cf. Nid. 45a, supra 68a.
 (53) That according to R. Meir the letter of divorce of a boy of the age of nine years and one day is valid.
 (54) A boy the age of nine years and one day.
 (55) To give a letter of divorce. V. supra p. 655. n. 11.
 (56) Lit., 'and small'. Hence no comparison could be made between his halizah which is as valid as that of a divorce by an adult, and his own divorce which is not so valid.
 (57) Since the divorce of the minor is of lesser validity.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 96b

MISHNAH. IF A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW¹ AND THEN HIS BROTHER WHO WAS OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HER, [THE LATTER] RENDERS HER UNFIT² FOR [THE FORMER].³ R. SIMEON SAID: HE DOES NOT RENDER HER UNFIT.⁴

IF A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW⁵ AND AFTERWARDS HE COHABITED WITH HER RIVAL, HE HAS RENDERED [THEREBY THE FIRST AS WELL AS THE SECOND] UNFIT FOR MARRIAGE WITH HIMSELF.⁶ R. SIMEON SAID: HE DOES NOT RENDER [THEM] UNFIT.⁷

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Simeon said to the Sages, 'If the first cohabitation⁸ was a valid act,⁹ the second cohabitation¹⁰ cannot have any validity;¹¹ if, the first cohabitation, however, has no validity,¹² the second cohabitation also should have no validity'.¹³

Our Mishnah¹⁴ cannot represent the view of Ben 'Azzai; for it was taught: Ben 'Azzai stated, 'A ma'amar is valid after another ma'amar where it concerns two levirs¹⁵ and one sister-in-law,¹⁶ but no ma'amar is valid after a ma'amar where it concerns two sisters-in-law and one levir.'¹⁷

MISHNAH. IF A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW¹⁸ AND THEN DIED, SHE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.¹⁹ IF HE HAD MARRIED [ANY OTHER] WOMAN AND SUBSEQUENTLY DIED, SHE IS EXEMPT [FROM BOTH].²⁰

IF A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW, AND AFTER HE HAD COME OF AGE HE MARRIED ANOTHER WOMAN AND SUBSEQUENTLY DIED, IF HE HAD NOT [CARNALLY] KNOWN THE FIRST WOMAN AFTER HE HAD BECOME OF AGE, THE FIRST ONE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE,²¹ WHILE THE SECOND²² MAY EITHER PERFORM HALIZAH OR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. R. SIMEON SAID: [THE SURVIVING LEVIR] MAY CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH WHICHEVER OF THEM HE MAY DESIRE²³ AND SUBMITS TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER.²⁴ [THE SAME LAW APPLIES] WHETHER HE IS OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY, OR WHETHER HE IS OF THE AGE OF TWENTY YEARS BUT HAD NOT PRODUCED TWO PUBIC HAIRS.²⁵ GEMARA. Raba stated: With reference to the statement of the Rabbis that in the case of the levirate bond originating from two levirs [the sister-in-law] must perform halizah only but may not contract levirate marriage, it must not be assumed that this is applicable only where there is a rival, because [in that case] a preventive measure was necessary on account of the rival;²⁶ for here²⁷ there is no rival and yet [the sister-in-law] must perform halizah only but may not contract the levirate marriage.²⁸

IF HE HAD MARRIED [ANY OTHER] WOMAN AND SUBSEQUENTLY DIED etc. Here²⁷ we learned what the Rabbis taught: If an imbecile or a minor married and then died, their wives are exempt from halizah and from the levirate marriage.²⁹

A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS etc. AND AFTER HE HAD COME OF AGE etc. Let the cohabitation of the boy of nine²⁷ be given the same validity as that of a ma'amar by an adult,³⁰ and so let the rival [here]²⁷ be debarred from the levirate marriage!³¹ — Now said Rab: The cohabitation of a boy of nine was not given the same validity as that of a ma'amar by an adult. Samuel, however, said: It was certainly given the same validity:³² and so said R. Johanan: It certainly was given the same validity. Then³³ let the same validity be given here also!³⁴ — This [question is a matter of dispute between] Tannaim. That Tanna [whose ruling is contained in the chapter] of the 'Four Brothers'³⁵ enacted a preventive measure on account of the rival;³⁶ and though he stated the law in respect of an adult the same law is applicable to a minor, the reason why he mentioned the adult being only because he was engaged on the question of³⁷ the adult. The Tanna here³⁸ however, is of the opinion that they³⁹ were given the same validity,⁴⁰ and he enacted no preventive measure on account of the rival; and though he spoke of the minor the same law applies to an adult, the reason why he spoke of the minor being only because he was dealing with the minor.³⁷

R. Eleazar came and reported this statement at the schoolhouse but did not report it in the name of R. Johanan. When R. Johanan heard this he was annoyed.⁴¹ Thereupon R. Ammi and R. Assi came in and said to him: Did it not happen at the Synagogue of Tiberias that R. Eleazar and R. Jose disputed [so hotly] concerning a door bolt which had a knob⁴² at one end⁴³ that they tore a Scroll of the Law in their excitement. 'They tore?'⁴⁴ Could this be imagined! Say rather 'That a Scroll of the Law was torn⁴⁵ in their excitement'. R. Jose b. Kisma who was then present exclaimed, 'I shall be surprised if this Synagogue⁴⁶ is not turned into a house of idolatry', and so it happened. [On hearing this] he was annoyed all the more. 'Comradeship too' he exclaimed.⁴⁷

Thereupon R. Jacob b. Idi came in and said to him: 'As the Lord commanded Moses his servant, so did Moses command Joshua, and so did Joshua; he left nothing undone of all that the Lord commanded Moses;⁴⁸ did Joshua, then, concerning every word which he said, tell them, "Thus did Moses tell me"? But, the fact is that Joshua was sitting and delivering his discourse without mentioning names, and all knew that it was the Torah of Moses. So did your disciple R. Eleazar sit and deliver his discourse without mentioning names and all knew that it was yours'. 'Why', he⁴⁹ chided them,⁵⁰ are you not capable of conciliating like the son of Idi our friend?'

Why was R. Johanan so annoyed? — [For the following reason]. For Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: What is the meaning of the Scriptural text, I will dwell in Thy tent for ever?⁵¹ Is it possible for a man to dwell in two worlds! But [in fact it is this that] David said to the Holy One, blessed be He, 'Lord of the Universe, May it be Thy will

(1) The widow of his brother who died without issue.

(2) For the levirate marriage.

(3) Because, as in the case of a ma'amar after a ma'amar, the act of either levir is valid and, as no two levirs may marry the same sister-in-law, the latter must divorce her; and a sister-in-law divorced by one of the levirs may never again be married by any of them.

(4) His reason is given in the Gemara, infra.

(5) The widow of his brother who died without issue.

(6) Since levirate marriage may be contracted with one sister-in-law only. The first cohabitation constituting an imperfect kinyan, the second is effective to the extent of necessitating a divorce, and with a sister-in-law that was divorced by a levir, none of the levirs may subsequently contract levirate marriage. Cf. supra p. 656, n. 9.

(7) His reason is given in the Gemara, infra.

- (8) Of the first young levir.
- (9) Constituting a kinyan of the sister-in-law.
- (10) That of the second young levir.
- (11) Since there is no validity in an act of cohabitation that follows an act of cohabitation (v. supra 50a), the second act is regarded as irregular intercourse with a stranger; and since it was committed unwittingly, the woman remains permitted to the first levir.
- (12) Owing to the levir's tender age.
- (13) V. supra n. 8 and cf. supra 51b.
- (14) Which regards the cohabitation of a young levir as having the same validity as a ma'amar (cf. supra p. 656, n. 9), and yet rules that an act of cohabitation after another act of cohabitation is legally effective whether in the case of two levirs and one sister-in-law (first case) or two sisters-in-law and one levir (second case).
- (15) The one as well as the other having addressed to the widow one ma'amar only.
- (16) Because each levir (v. supra 51a) has equally the power to address such a ma'amar.
- (17) The second ma'amar having no validity owing to the first ma'amar which had completely effected the kinyan of the first sister-in-law; and no levir is permitted to contract levirate marriage with more than one of the widows of his deceased childless brother.
- (18) The widow of his brother who died childless.
- (19) The act of the minor, while it is valid enough to subject his sister-in-law to the levirate bond of his surviving brothers, does not sever the first levirate bond which is due to her union with the first deceased brother. Being now subject to the levirate bond originating from two levirs, she is deprived (cf. supra 31b) of her right to the levirate marriage, and must perform halizah only.
- (20) Levirate marriage and halizah. The betrothal of a minor having no validity, the woman is not regarded as his wife in respect of the levirate. It is only in the case of a sister-in-law (v. supra n. 2) that his cohabitation is valid enough to subject the woman to the levirate bond.
- (21) Because, as the minor did not cohabit with her since he became of age, she remained subject to the levirate bond originating from two levirs (cf. supra note 2).
- (22) Being the deceased's lawful wife.
- (23) R. Simeon does not admit the ineligibility for levirate marriage of a sister-in-law who is subject to the levirate bond originating from two levirs, V. supra 31b.
- (24) Since they cannot be regarded as rivals, the marriage of the one does not exempt the other, Both, however, may not be taken in levirate marriage, as a preventive measure against erroneous comparisons with two sisters-in-law who were lawfully married.
- (25) The marks of maturity. So long as these have not appeared he retains the legal status of a minor.
- (26) V. supra 31b and cf. supra p. 658, n. 7 end.
- (27) In our Mishnah.
- (28) Cf. supra p. 658, n. 2.
- (29) Supra 69b, infra 112b. A minor and an imbecile have the same legal status, and our Mishnah, speaking of the minor confirms this ruling.
- (30) Which (as stated supra 31b) debars the rival of the widow to whom the [ma'amar had been addressed, from the levirate marriage, though the rival's marriage with the deceased was in every respect a lawful union.
- (31) Why then was it stated that THE SECOND MAY EITHER PERFORM HALIZAH OR CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE?
- (32) Lit., 'they made and they made'.
- (33) According to Samuel and R. Johanan.
- (34) Lit., 'and let them make'. Cf. supra n. 6.
- (35) The chapter which contains the Mishnah referred to is named after the first two words with which it begins. V. supra 260.
- (36) Cf. supra 31b.
- (37) Lit., 'stood'.
- (38) In our Mishnah.
- (39) The cohabitation of a minor and the ma'amar of an adult.
- (40) Lit., 'they made'.

(41) Perhaps because R. Eleazar did not act in accordance with Aboth VI, 6, 'Whosoever reports a thing in the name of him who said it brings deliverance into the world'. V., however, the Gemara's explanation infra.

(42) Or, 'a fastening contrivance' (Jast.).

(43) R. Eleazar forbids its use on the Sabbath because it cannot be regarded as a 'vessel' and is consequently forbidden to be moved from its place; while R. Jose maintains that the knob at its end, whereby the bolt may occasionally be used as a pestle for crushing foodstuffs, imports to it the character of a vessel and it may, therefore, be used and moved on the Sabbath. that a traditional statement may be reported in my name in this world'; for R. Johanan¹ stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: The lips of a [deceased] scholar, in whose name a traditional statement is reported in this world, move gently in the grave. Said R. Isaac b. Ze'ira, or it might be said, Simeon the Nazirite: What is the Scriptural proof of this? And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine that glideth down smoothly for my beloved, moving gently the lips of those who are asleep,² like a heated mass of grapes. As a heated mass of grapes, as soon as a man places his finger upon it, exudes³ immediately so with the scholars as soon as a traditional statement is made in their name in this world, their lips move gently⁴ in the grave.

WHETHER HE IS OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS etc. A contradiction was pointed out: If at the age of twenty he⁵ did not produce two [pubic] hairs,⁶ they⁷ must bring evidence that he is twenty years of age, and he [is then confirmed as a] saris;⁸ he may neither submit to halizah nor may he perform the levirate marriage. If a woman⁹ at the age of twenty did not produce two [pubic] hairs, they¹⁰ must bring evidence that she is twenty years of age, and she [is then confirmed as a] woman who is incapable of procreation; she may neither perform halizah nor contract levirate marriage!¹¹ — Surely in connection with this Mishnah it was stated: R. Samuel b. Isaac said in the name of Rab that this¹² applies only to the case where [other] symptoms¹³ of a saris also appeared on him.¹⁴

Said Raba: This¹⁵ may also be arrived at by deduction. For it was taught, 'And he [is confirmed as a] saris',¹⁶ from which this¹⁵ may well be deduced.

And where no symptoms of a saris developed, how long [is one regarded as a minor]?¹⁷ — It was taught at the school of R. Hiyya: Until he has passed middle age.¹⁸

Whenever people came [with such a case]¹⁹ before Raba,²⁰ he used to tell them, if [the youth was] emaciated, 'Let him first be fattened'; and if he was stout, he used to tell them, 'Let him first be made to lose weight'; for these symptoms disappear²¹ sometimes as a result of emaciation and sometimes they disappear²¹ as a result of stoutness.

CHAPTER XI

MISHNAH. A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY [THE NEAR RELATIVE] OF A WOMAN [WHOM HE HAS] OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED.²² HE, HOWEVER, WHO OUTRAGED OR

SEDUCED [A RELATIVE] OF HIS MARRIED WIFE, IS GUILTY.²³ A MAN MAY MARRY THE WOMAN WHOM HIS FATHER HAS OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED OR THE WOMAN WHOM HIS SON HAS OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED. R. JUDAH FORBIDS [MARRIAGE] WITH THE WOMAN WHOM ONE'S FATHER HAS OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED.

GEMARA. Here²⁴ we learn what the Rabbis taught: 'A man who has outraged a woman²⁵ is permitted to marry her daughter; if, however, he married the woman, he is forbidden to marry her daughter'. A contradiction, however, may be pointed out: A man who is suspected of intercourse with a woman is forbidden to marry her mother, her daughter and her sister!²⁶ — This [prohibition²⁷ is only] Rabbinical.²⁸

Would it be stated, however, where a Rabbinical prohibition exists, that A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY even from the outset! — Our Mishnah refers only to [a marriage] after [the suspected woman's] death.²⁹

Whence is this ruling deduced? — From what the Rabbis taught: In the case of all those [illicit relationships]³⁰ Scripture used the expression of 'lying',³¹ but here³² it made use of the expression of 'taking',³³ in order to tell you [that only when intercourse with a woman was in] the manner of 'taking',³⁴ did the Torah forbid [marriage with her relatives].³⁵

Said R. Papa to Abaye: If that is so,³⁶ then in respect of one's sister, concerning whom it is written, And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter;³⁷ is [intercourse] here also forbidden only [if it is in] the manner of 'taking',³⁴ but permitted [if it is in] the manner of 'lying'!³⁸ — The other replied: The word 'taking' is used in the Torah without being defined, [so that a text] to which 'taking' is applicable,³⁹ [signifies] 'taking'⁴⁰ while one to which only 'lying' is applicable,⁴¹ [signifies] 'lying'.⁴²

Raba stated: [That a man who] outraged a woman is permitted to marry her daughter, [is deduced] from here: It is written, The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, thou shalt not uncover;⁴³ from which it follows⁴⁴ that the daughter of her⁴⁵ son and the daughter of her⁴⁵ daughter may be uncovered; but it is also written in Scripture, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter; thou shalt not take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter!⁴⁶ How then [are these to be reconciled]? The former⁴⁷ refers to cases of outrage and the latter to those of marriage. Might not [the application]⁴⁸ be reversed? — In respect of forbidden relatives the expression kin⁴⁹ is written, and kinship exists only by means of marriage; but no kinship exists by means of outrage.

R. JUDAH FORBIDS MARRIAGE WITH THE WOMAN WHOM ONE'S FATHER HAD OUTRAGED etc. R. Giddal stated in the name of Rab: What is R. Judah's reason? Because it is written, A man shall not take his father's wife, and shall not uncover his father's skirt;⁵⁰ the skirt which his father saw⁵¹ he shall not uncover. Whence, however, is it inferred that Scripture speaks of an outraged woman? — From the preceding section of the text where it is written, Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsels father fifty shekels of silver.⁵² And the Rabbis?⁵³ — If one text had occurred in close proximity to the other your exposition would have been justified;⁵⁴ now, however, that it does not occur in close proximity, the text is required for [an exposition] like that of R. Anan. For R. Anan stated in the name of Samuel that the Scriptural text⁵⁰ speaks of a woman awaiting the levirate decision of his father; and the meaning of⁵⁵ his father's skirt⁵⁰ is: He⁵⁶ shall not uncover the skirt which is designated for his father.⁵⁷

[This prohibition,⁵⁸ however], might be deduced from the fact that she is his aunt!⁵⁹ — [The text⁵⁰ was necessary] to make him⁶⁰ guilty of the transgression of two negative commandments.⁶¹ [The prohibition,⁶² however] might be inferred from the fact [that the widow as a] sister-in-law⁶³ [is forbidden] to marry any stranger!⁶⁴ — [The text⁵⁰ was necessary] to make him guilty of the transgression of three negative commandments.⁶⁵ And if you prefer I might say:⁶⁶ After [his father's] death.⁶⁷

(1) Or Jehozadak (cf. Sanh. 90b).

(2) Cant. VII. 10. דֹּבֵב moving gently.

(3) דֹּבֵב.

(4) V. supra n. 5. The rt. דֹּבֵב signifies both 'to exude' and 'to whisper'.

(5) A levir whose brother died without issue and whose duty it is to marry the widow of the deceased or to submit to her halizah.

(6) The legal signs of maturity.

(7) The relatives of the widow, who are desirous of procuring her exemption from the levirate marriage and the halizah.

(8) One incapable of procreation. V. Glos. He is no longer regarded as a minor for whose maturity the widow must wait.

(9) A widow whose husband died childless. Cf. supra p. 661, n. 8.

(10) The levir's relatives, cf. supra p. 661, n. 10 mutatis mutandis.

(11) Supra 80a, Ned. 57b, Cf. B.B. 155b. From this (cf. p. 661, n. 11) it follows that at the age of twenty a person is considered to have attained legal majority, though his body has not developed any signs of maturity, contrary to our Mishnah which gives such a person the status of a minor.

(12) The law that he is regarded as a saris,

(13) Described supra 80b.

(14) If, however, these additional symptoms of a saris did not appear, he is as stated in our Mishnah regarded as a minor so long as he has not produced two pubic hairs.

(15) That a boy is not regarded as a saris unless apart from the absence of pubic hairs, he has developed also other symptoms of a saris.

(16) Implying that he had already other symptoms of a saris.

(17) If two pubic hairs did not appear.

(18) Lit., 'most of his years', i.e., until he is thirty-six years of age. Man's span of life is taken to be seventy years (cf. Ps. XC, 10).

(19) Of one who reached the age of twenty without having produced two hairs.

(21) דַּנְתָּרִי (rt. נָתַר, Pi'el, 'to fall off'). MS.M. reads, דַּאֲתוּ (rt. אָתָּא 'come', 'appear') a reading adopted by Tosaf. in B.B. 155b, s.v. הָכִי.

(22) Only relatives of a married wife are subject to the law of incest.

(23) And must suffer the prescribed penalties.

(24) In our Mishnah.

(25) By immoral intercourse, whether without, or with her consent.

(27) In the Tosefta cited.

(28) In order that illicit intercourse with the suspected woman may not be facilitated through a marriage with one of her near relatives.

(29) If the woman outraged or seduced is dead the marriage with any one of her relatives would obviously provide no further facilities for illicit intercourse with her (cf. supra n. 7). Hence no preventive measure was instituted.

(30) Such as, e.g., a father's wife, a daughter-in-law and an aunt (v. Lev. XX, 11ff).

(31) E.g., lieth (Lev. XX, 11), lie (ibid. 12).

(32) In respect of a woman and her mother, and similar relatives that are forbidden through one's wife.

(33) E.g., take (Lev. XVIII, 17, 18, ibid. XX, 14, 17).

(34) I.e., when the man contracted with her a lawful marriage; cf. Deut. XXIV, 1: 'When a man taketh a wife'.

(35) The relatives of a woman with whom he had illicit intercourse are, therefore permitted.

(36) Lit., 'but now'.

(37) Lev. XX, 17 emphasis on take. Cf. supra n. 6.

(38) This would be absurd.

(39) As in the case of a woman and her mother or two sisters, where marriage with the first is lawful.

- (55) Lit., 'and what'.
- (56) A son.
- (57) Such a woman, unless she has performed halizah with his father, is permitted to marry no one but his father.
- (58) To marry the widow who was subject to his father's levirate marriage. Cf. supra n. 9.
- (59) Having been the wife of his father's brother. V. Lev. XX, 20. What need then was there for the additional text of Deut. XXIII, 1?
- (60) The son. v. supra note 10.
- (61) Prescribed in (1) Lev. XX, 20 and (2) Deut. XXIII, 1.
- (62) V. supra note 10.
- (63) Cf. supra note 9.
- (64) Lit., 'to the market', i.e., any man other than the levir. Cf. supra n. 11 second clause.
- (65) The two referred to supra p. 665, n. 13 as well as the one last mentioned.
- (66) In reply to the last objection.
- (67) When marriage with the widow is not subject to the last mentioned prohibition (that of a sister-in-law to a stranger) and only two prohibitions (v. supra p. 665, n. 13) remain.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 97b

'My¹ paternal, but not my maternal brother; and he is the husband of my mother and I am the daughter of his wife'!² — Rami b. Hama said: Such [a relationship is] not [legally possible] according to the ruling of R. Judah in our Mishnah.³

'He⁴ whom I carry on my shoulder is my brother and my son and I am his sister'? — This is possible when an idolater cohabited with his daughter'.⁵

'Greetings⁴ to you my son; I am the daughter of your sister'? — This is possible where an idolater cohabited with his daughter's daughter.⁶

'Ye⁴ water-drawers,⁷ we shall ask you⁸ a riddle that defies solution: He whom I carry is my son and I am the daughter of his brother'? — This is possible where an idolater cohabited with the daughter of his son.⁹

'Woe,⁴ woe, for my brother who is my father; he is my husband and the son of my husband; he is the husband of my mother and I am the daughter of his wife; and he provides no food for his orphan brothers, the children of his daughter'? — This is possible when an idolater cohabited with his mother and begot from her a daughter; then he cohabited with that daughter; and then the grandfather¹⁰ cohabited with her¹¹ and begot from her sons.¹²

‘I¹³ and you are brother and sister,¹⁴ I and your father are brother and sister, and I and your mother are sisters’? — This is possible where an idolater cohabited with his mother and from her begot two daughters, and then he cohabited with one of these and begot from her a son. When the son's mother's sister¹⁵ carries¹⁶ him¹⁷ she addresses him thus.¹⁸

‘I¹³ and you are the children of sisters,¹⁴ I and your father are the children of brothers, and I and your mother are the children of brothers’? — This indeed is possible also in the case of a lawful marriage; where, for instance, Reuben had two daughters, and Simeon¹⁹ came and married one of them, and then came the son of Levi¹⁹ and married the other.

The son of Simeon can thus²⁰ address the son of the son of Levi.²¹

MISHNAH. THE SONS OF A FEMALE PROSELYTE WHO BECOME PROSELYTES TOGETHER WITH HER NEITHER²² PARTICIPATE IN HALIZAH NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, EVEN IF THE ONE WAS NOT CONCEIVED IN HOLINESS.²³ BUT WAS BORN IN HOLINESS,²⁴ AND THE OTHER WAS BOTH CONCEIVED AND BORN IN HOLINESS. SO ALSO [IS THE LAW] WHERE THE SONS OF A BONDWOMAN WERE EMANCIPATED TOGETHER WITH HER.

GEMARA. When the sons of the bondwoman Yudan were emancipated. R. Aha b. Jacob permitted them to marry one another's wives.²⁵ Said Raba to him: But R. Shesheth forbade [such marriages]. The other replied: He forbade, but I allow.

[In respect of proselyte brothers] from the same father and not from the same mother, there is no difference of opinion²⁶ that this²⁷ is permitted;²⁸ [in respect of brothers] from the same mother and not from the same father, there is no difference of opinion²⁶ that this²⁷ is forbidden.²⁹ They differ only [in respect of proselytes whose brotherhood is] both paternal and maternal. He³⁰ who permits it²⁷ [does so because children are] ascribed to their father, since they are spoken of as ‘the children of such and such a man’.³¹ R. Shesheth, however, [holds that they] are also spoken of as ‘the children of such and such a woman’.²⁹

Another reading: R. Aha b. Jacob disputed [the illegality of marriage]²⁷ even in respect of maternal brothers. And what is his reason? — Because a man who has become a proselyte is like a child newly born.³²

We learned, THE SONS OF A FEMALE PROSELYTE WHO BECAME PROSELYTES TOGETHER WITH HER NEITHER PARTICIPATE IN HALIZAH NOR CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, is not the reason³³ because they are forbidden [to marry a brother's wife]³⁴ — No; it is because [the widow] is not subject to the law of halizah and levirate marriage.³⁵ She is permitted, however, to strangers.³⁶ and the brothers also are permitted[to marry her]. But, surely, it was stated EVEN! Now were you to admit that [the brothers] are forbidden.³⁷ one could well justify the expression of EVEN: EVEN IF THE ONE WAS NOT CONCEIVED IN HOLINESS BUT WAS BORN IN HOLINESS. AND THE OTHER WAS BOTH CONCEIVED AND BORN IN HOLINESS, [so that the two might well be regarded] as [the sons of] two mothers,³⁸ they are nevertheless forbidden; if you maintain, however, that they are permitted,³⁹ what [can be the purport of] EVEN!⁴⁰ — Even though the birth of both was in holiness, and people might mistake⁴¹ them for Israelites,⁴² [the widow] is nevertheless permitted [to marry a stranger].⁴³

Others read: Logical reasoning also supports the view that they are permitted,³⁹ since the expression EVEN was used. For, if you grant that they are permitted³⁹ it is quite correct to say EVEN: Even though the birth of both was in holiness and people might mistake⁴¹ them for Israelites.⁴² they are nevertheless permitted;⁴³ if, however, you maintain that they are forbidden⁴⁴ what [can be the purport of] EVEN!⁴⁵ — EVEN IF THE ONE WAS NOT CONCEIVED IN HOLINESS BUT WAS BORN IN HOLINESS, AND THE OTHER WAS BOTH CONCEIVED AND BORN IN HOLINESS [so that they might well be regarded] as [the sons of] two mothers,⁴⁶ they are nevertheless forbidden.

Come and hear: Twin brothers who were proselytes, and similarly if they were emancipated slaves,⁴⁷ may neither participate in halizah nor contract levirate marriage, nor are they guilty [of a punishable offence] for [marrying] a brother's wife.⁴⁸ If however, they were not conceived in holiness but were born in holiness, they neither participate in halizah nor contract levirate marriage⁴⁹ but are guilty [of a punishable offence]⁵⁰ for [marrying] a brother's wife.⁵¹ If they were both conceived and born in holiness, they are regarded as Israelites in all respects. At all events, it was stated that they are not 'guilty [of a punishable offence] for [marrying] a brother's wife'; [from which it follows that] no punishable offence is incurred

(1) This and the following unlikely propositions are merely riddles on the possible complications of consanguinity.

(2) Such a riddle may be put by a daughter who was born as a result of outrage by his father where the son of the man by another wife has subsequently married her mother.

(3) Since, according to R. Judah, marriage is forbidden with a woman one's father had outraged.

(4) V. supra n. 4.

(5) And a son was born from the union. The mother of the child might put such a riddle.

(6) The son born from such a union, since he is the paternal brother of his mother's mother, might be addressed by his mother in the terms of this riddle.

(7) Lit., 'drawers who draw the bucket'. Men engaged in the irrigation of fields (cf. Rashi and last.); scholars drawing from the fountains of wisdom (cf. Aruk. and Tosaf. s.v. לִּשְׁתֵּי).

(8) So Aruk. Cur. edd., 'let it fall among you'.

(9) The son born from this union is the paternal brother of his mother's father.

(10) The idolater's father.

(11) The daughter.

(12) The daughter may describe the idolater as her maternal brother, her natural father and her actual husband. Owing to her cohabitation with his father (the grandfather) he is the son of her husband, while through his cohabitation with her mother he is her mother's husband and she is, of course, the daughter of his wife. The children resulting from the union between her and the grandfather are his (the idolater's) paternal brothers and, of course, the children of his daughter.

(17) The son.

(18) She and the son are brother and sister, being the offspring of the same father. She and his father are brother and sister from the same mother, while she and his mother are sisters both paternally and maternally.

(19) His brother, Reuben, Simeon and Levi, the sons of Jacob and Leah (v. Gen. XXIX, 32ff) are chosen as an illustration of brotherly relationship.

(20) So Bah a.l. wanting in cur. edd.

(21) He and Levi's grandson are the children of two sisters (Reuben's daughters); he and Levi's son (the grandson's father) are children of two brothers (Simeon and Levi), while he and the grandson's mother are children of the two brothers Reuben and Simeon.

(22) Should one of the brothers die without issue.

(23) I.e., before his mother became a proselyte.

(24) After his mother became a proselyte.

(25) A proselyte having the status of a newly born child, all his previous family relationships are dissolved. The prohibition against marriage with a brother's wife does not, therefore, apply.

- (26) Between R. Aba and R. Shesheth.
- (27) Marriage of a brother's wife in the case of proselytes.
- (28) It is well known that their father was no Israelite, and that it is for this reason that the marriage was permitted. No one would assume that they were the sons of the same father, since idolaters' wives were known to be faithless, and, consequently, no one would erroneously infer that proper Israelites may also marry their brother's wives.
- (29) Their mother being known, they might be assumed to be lawful brothers and, should marriage of a brother's wife be permitted in their case, an erroneous conclusion (v. supra note 6) might be formed.

but that a [Rabbinical] prohibition is 'nevertheless involved!¹ — The law, in fact, is that even a [Rabbinical] prohibition is not involved; only, because it was desired to state in the final clause, 'but are guilty [of a punishable offence]', it was stated in the first clause also, 'they are not guilty [of a punishable offence]'.

Raba stated: With reference to the Rabbinical statement that [legally] an Egyptian has no father,² it must not be imagined that this is due to [the Egyptians'] excessive indulgence in carnal gratification, owing to which it is not known [who the father was], but that if this were known³ it is to be taken into consideration;⁴ but [the fact is] that even if this is known it is not taken into consideration. For, surely, in respect of twin brothers, who originated in one drop that divided itself into two, it was nevertheless stated in the final clause,⁵ that they 'neither participate in halizah nor perform levirate marriage'.⁶ Thus it may be inferred that the All Merciful declared their children to be legally fatherless,⁷ for [so indeed it is also] written, Whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.⁸

Come and hear what R. Jose related: It once happened with the proselyte Niphates⁹ that he married the wife of his [deceased]¹⁰ maternal brother,¹¹ and when the case was submitted to the Sages their verdict was that the law of matrimony does not apply to a proselyte. But then, should a proselyte betroth a woman, would also the betrothal be invalid? — Say then rather: The prohibition of a brother's wife does not apply to a proselyte. Now does not [this refer to the case] where his brother¹¹ had married her while he was a proselyte!¹² — No; where he married her while he was still an idolater.¹³ But if [betrothal took place] while he was still an idolater, what [need is there] to state it?¹⁴ — It might have been assumed that [in the case of a brother's betrothal] while he is still an idolater a preventive measure should be enacted lest [erroneous conclusions be drawn in the case] where he is a proselyte, hence we were taught [that no such measure was enacted].

Come and hear what Ben Yasyan¹⁵ related: When I went to the coastal towns¹⁶ I came across a certain proselyte who had married the wife of his maternal brother. 'Who, my son', I said to him, 'permitted you [this marriage]?' 'Behold', he replied. 'the woman and her seven children';¹⁷ on this bench sat R. Akiba when he made two statements: "A proselyte may marry the wife of his maternal brother", and he also stated, "And the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time, saying,¹⁸ only a second time did the Shechinah speak to him; a third time the Shechinah did not speak to him."¹⁹ At any rate, it was stated here that 'a proselyte may marry the wife of his maternal brother'. Does not [this refer to a case] where his brother married her while he was a proselyte! — No; where he married her while he was still an idolater.²⁰ What [need then was there] to state [such an obvious law]? — It might have been assumed that [in the case of a brother's betrothal] while he is still an idolater a preventive measure should be enacted lest [erroneous conclusions be drawn in the case] where he is a proselyte. hence we were taught [that no such measure was enacted].

Is he,²¹ however, believed? Surely R. Abba stated in the name of R. Huna in the name of Rab: Wherever a scholar gives directions²² on a point of law and such a point comes up for a practical decision, he is obeyed if he made the statement²³ before the event;²⁴ but if it was not so made, he is not obeyed!²⁵ — If you wish I might say: The incident occurred after he made his statement. If you prefer, I might say: Because he stated, 'Behold the woman and her seven children'.²⁶ And if you prefer I might say: Here it is different²⁷ because with it he related another incident.²⁸

The Master said, 'And the word of the Lord came to Jonah a second time, saying,²⁹ only a second time did the Shechinah speak unto him, a third time the Shechinah did not speak to him'. But surely it is written in Scripture, He restored the border of Israel from the entrance of Hamath unto the sea of the Arabah, according to the word of the Lord, which He spoke by the hand of His servant Jonah the son of Amittai, the prophet!³⁰ — Rabina replied: He³¹ referred to the affairs of Nineveh.

R. Nahman b. Isaac replied, It is this that was meant:³² According to the word of the Lord . . . which He spoke by the hand of his servant, the prophet,³³ as his intention towards Nineveh was turned from evil to good, so was his intention towards Israel, in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash, turned from evil to good.

Come and hear: A proselyte who was born in holiness³⁴ but was not conceived in holiness³⁵ has [legally] maternal consanguinity but no paternal consanguinity. For instance:³⁶ If he married his maternal sister,³⁷ he must divorce her;³⁸ if his paternal one, he may retain her.³⁹ His father's maternal sister he must divorce;⁴⁰

(1) Lit., 'guilt there is not but a prohibition there is'. The Rabbis had instituted a preventive measure against the possibility of taking such a marriage as a precedent for allowing similar marriages to proper Israelites. Objection then against R. Aha!

(2) Not only where he became a proselyte himself in which case he is regarded as newly born (v. supra), but even where he was only conceived before his mother became a proselyte and was born subsequently.

(39) No preventive measure in this case is necessary, since, a proselyte having legally no father, any daughter that may be begotten by his father, even after his conversion, would not be legally his sister.

(40) A preventive measure against marriage with his own maternal sister. Cf. supra n. 13.

his paternal one he may retain. His mother's maternal sister he must divorce. As to her paternal sister, R. Meir said: He must divorce her,¹ and the Sages said: He may retain her;² R. Meir maintaining that any woman forbidden on account of maternal consanguinity must be divorced, but if on account of paternal consanguinity he may retain her. He is also permitted [to marry] his brother's wife,³ and the wife of his father's brother. All other forbidden relatives are also permitted to him, including his father's wife. If [a proselyte]⁴ married a woman and her daughter⁵ she may⁶ retain⁷ one, but must release the other.⁸ In the first instance he may not marry⁷ her.⁹ If his wife died, he is permitted to marry his mother-in-law. Another opinion is that he is forbidden to marry his mother-in-law.¹⁰ At all events, it was here stated that he is 'permitted [to marry] his brother's wife'; does not [this apply to a woman] whom his brother had married while he was a proselyte! — No; where he married her while he was still an idolater. What [need was there] to state it?¹¹ — It might have been assumed that [in the case of a brother's marriage] while he was still an idolater a preventive measure¹² should be enacted to preclude [the same thing being done] where he is already a proselyte, hence were we taught [that in such a case a brother's wife was permitted].

The Master stated, 'If [a proselyte] married a woman and her daughter, he may retain one but must release the other; in the first instance he may not marry her'. Now, if he must even release her, is there any need [to speak of a prohibition to marry her] from the outset?¹³ — It refers to a previous clause,¹⁴ and the meaning is this: That [woman], concerning whom the Rabbis ruled that he¹⁵ may retain her,¹⁶ may nevertheless not be married by him from the outset.

'If his wife died he is permitted to marry his mother-in-law. Another opinion is that he is forbidden to marry his mother-in-law'. One is in agreement with R. Ishmael and the other is in agreement with R. Akiba. He who forbade the marriage agrees with R. Ishmael who stated: A man's mother-in-law after [his wife's] death retains the former prohibitions;¹⁷ and in respect of a proselyte a preventive measure was enacted.¹⁸ He, however, who permits the marriage follows R. Akiba who stated that the prohibition [to marry] one's mother-in-law is weakened after [one's wife's] death;¹⁹ and, consequently, no preventive measure has been enacted by the Rabbis in respect of a proselyte.

MISHNAH. IF THE [MALE] CHILDREN OF FIVE WOMEN WERE MIXED UP²⁰ AND, WHEN THESE INTERCHANGED CHILDREN GREW UP, THEY TOOK WIVES AND THEN DIED, FOUR²¹ SUBMIT TO HALIZAH FROM ONE [OF THE WIDOWS]²² AND ONE²³ CONTRACTS WITH HER THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.²⁴ [THEN] HE²⁵ AND THREE [BROTHERS]²¹ SUBMIT TO HALIZAH FROM ONE [OTHER OF THE WIDOWS]. AND ONE²⁶ CONTRACTS WITH HER²⁷ THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.²⁸ THUS²⁹ EVERY ONE [OF THE WIDOWS] PERFORMS HALIZAH FOUR TIMES AND CONTRACTS THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE ONCE.

GEMARA. Only the halizah [must take place³⁰ first] and the levirate marriage afterwards; the levirate marriage, however, must not take place first, since, thereby, one³¹ might infringe the prohibition against a sister-in-law's marriage with a stranger.³²

What [was the object of the statement], HE AND THREE [BROTHERS] SUBMIT TO HALIZAH FROM ONE [OTHER OF THE WIDOWS]?³³ — That it be not suggested that one brother only should contract levirate marriage with all of them. Rather let every brother contract levirate marriage with only one [of the widows], when it is possible his own [sister-in-law] might happen to fall to his lot.

Our Rabbis taught:³⁴ 'If some of them³⁵ were brothers³⁶ and some were no brothers,³⁶ the brothers submit to halizah while those who are no brothers contract the levirate marriage.' What does this exactly mean? — R. Safra replied. It is this that is meant: If some of them³⁵ were paternal brothers³⁶ and some were [also] maternal brothers,³⁷ the maternal brothers submit to halizah³⁸ and the paternal brothers may [also] contract levirate marriage.³⁹ 'If some of them⁴⁰ were priests and some were non-priests, the priests submit to halizah⁴¹ and those who are non-priests may [also] contract levirate marriage. If some of them⁴² were priests and some maternal brothers, the former as well as the latter submit to halizah but may not contract levirate marriage.'⁴³

(1) The reason is given presently.

- (2) No preventive measure being necessary in such a case which is quite unlike that of a maternal sister.
- (3) Cur. edd. insert 'from his mother' which is to be deleted with Bah a.l. The proselyte is, in fact, permitted to marry the wife of his paternal brother as well as the wife of his maternal brother if the latter was born before the conversion. A preventive measure (cf. supra p. 673, n. 13) was not instituted in the case of a relationship which is not due to consanguinity but is dependent on betrothal.
- (4) Before his conversion. One born 'in holiness' is forbidden to marry a mother and her daughter.
- (5) Who were also converted.
- (6) After his conversion.
- (7) Lit., 'bring in', sc. to his home.
- (8) This is a preventive measure against marriage with an Israelitish mother and daughter.
- (9) This sentence is explained infra.
- (10) V. Sanh., Sonc. ed., p. 394. notes.
- (11) The law being so obvious.
- (12) Forbidding his wife to his brother.
- (13) Why, then, was the superfluous clause, 'In the first instance he may not marry her', inserted.
- (14) Lit., 'there he stands'.
- (15) The proselyte.
- (16) E.g., his paternal sister.
- (17) V. supra 94b, Sanh. 76b.
- (18) To prevent such a marriage in the case of an Israelite.
- (19) It is no longer punishable by the severe penalty of burning. v. supra 94b.
- (20) And each woman had also another son who was not involved in the confusion.
- (21) Of the five brothers who were not mixed up with these. V. supra note 6.
- (22) Since everyone of them might be her brother-in-law.
- (23) Of the five brothers (v. supra n. 7) i.e., the fifth who had not submitted to halizah.
- (24) As four brothers have, by their halizah, severed their levirate bond with the widow mentioned, the fifth may marry her either as her brother-in-law (in case it was his brother who was her husband) or as a stranger (if her husband was a brother of one of the four who had now set her free).
- (25) The brother who contracted the levirate marriage.
- (26) Of the brothers (v. supra n. 7) who had submitted to halizah from the first widow.
- (27) The second widow.
- (28) For reasons similar to those explained supra n. 10.
- (29) Lit., 'it is found'. The same procedure being followed in respect of all the five widows.
- (30) In our Mishnah, in respect of every widow.
- (31) Should a brother happen to marry the widow who was not the wife of his deceased brother.
- (32) Lit., 'for he met a sister-in-law for the market'.
- (33) The same brother who contracted the first levirate marriage is, surely, entitled to contract similar marriages with all the widows, as soon as the other four brothers had submitted to their halizah.
- (34) So Bah. Cur. edd. omit.
- (35) Of the brothers who were not involved in the confusion.
- (36) Of those who were mixed up and are now dead.
- (37) I.e., paternal brother to one and maternal brother to another.
- (38) Thereby setting free the widows of their paternal brothers. They may not contract levirate marriage even after the widows had performed halizah with all the other brothers, since, should one of them happen to marry the widow of his maternal brother, he would thereby incur the penalty of kareth.
- (39) With any of the widow's, after each of the other brothers had submitted to her halizah.
- (40) of the brothers who were not involved in the confusion.
- (41) The levirate marriage is forbidden to them because any one of them might happen to marry the widow who was not a sister-in-law to him but to one of the other brothers. and who, by the halizah with her brother-in-law, has become a haluzah whom a priest is forbidden to marry.
- (42) Of the brothers who were not involved in the confusion.
- (43) Tosef. Yeb. XII. Cf. supra p. 676. n. 9 (re maternal brothers) and supra n. 1 (re priests).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 99a

Our Rabbis taught: A man must sometimes submit to halizah from his mother¹ owing to an uncertainty; from his sister, owing to an uncertainty; and from his daughter, owing to an uncertainty'. For instance?² If his mother and another woman had two male children, and then gave birth to two male children³ in a hiding place;⁴ and a son⁵ of the one mother⁶ married the mother⁷ of the other son while the son⁸ of the other mother⁶ married the mother of the first, and both⁹ died without issue, the one¹⁰ must submit to halizah from both women¹¹ and the other¹⁰ must submit to halizah from both women.¹¹ Thus it follows that each submits to halizah from his mother owing to an uncertainty. 'From his sister, owing to an uncertainty'; for instance?² When his mother and another woman gave birth to two female children¹² In a hiding place,¹³ and their brothers¹⁴ who were not from the same mother¹⁵ married them¹⁶ and died without issue, he¹⁷ must submit to halizah from both widows.¹⁸ Thus it follows that a man submits to halizah from his sister owing to an uncertainty. 'From his daughter, owing to an uncertainty'; for instance?¹⁹ When his wife and another woman gave birth to two female children²⁰ in a hiding place,²¹ and their²² [husbands'] brothers²³ married them¹⁶ and died without issue, the one [father]²⁴ submits to halizah from his daughter²⁵ owing to the uncertainty and the other [father]²⁴ submits to halizah from his daughter²⁵ owing to the uncertainty.²⁶

It was taught: R. Meir said, A husband and wife may sometimes produce five different castes.²⁷ How? If an Israelite bought a bondman and a bondwoman in the market, and these had two sons²⁸ one of whom became a proselyte, the result is that one is a proselyte and the other is an idolater.²⁹ If [subsequently] he made them³⁰ perform the prescribed immersion for the purpose of slavery and then they cohabited with one another [and bore a son], behold here we have a proselyte, an idolater and a slave.³¹ If he subsequently emancipated the bondwoman³² and the slave cohabited with her [and had another son], behold here³³ we have a proselyte, an idolater, a slave and a bastard.³⁴ If he then emancipated both of them³⁰ and made them marry one another, behold here³⁵ we have a proselyte, an idolater, a slave, a bastard and an Israelite.³⁶ What does this teach us? — That when an idolater or a slave cohabits with an Israelitish woman their child is a bastard.³⁷

Our Rabbis taught: Sometimes a man sells his father to enable his mother to collect her kethubah. How? If an Israelite bought in the market a bondman and a bondwoman who had a son,³⁸ and having emancipated the bondwoman he married her and bequeathed, in writing, all his estate to her son, the result is that this son³⁹ sells his father⁴⁰ in order to enable his mother⁴¹ to collect her kethubah.⁴² What does this teach us? — That all this [Baraitha⁴³ represents the views of] R. Meir. and that a slave [is regarded as] movable property, such property being mortgaged for a kethubah!⁴⁴

And if you prefer I might say. It is this that we were taught: A slave [is on the same footing as] real estate.⁴⁵

MISHNAH. IF THE CHILD OF A WOMAN WAS INTERCHANGED WITH THE CHILD OF HER DAUGHTER-IN-LAW. AND WHEN THE INTERCHANGED CHILDREN GREW UP THEY TOOK WIVES AND THEN DIED,⁴⁶ THE [OTHER] SONS OF THE DAUGHTER-IN-LAW⁴⁷ SUBMIT TO HALIZAH⁴⁸ BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁴⁹ FOR [IN THE CASE OF EACH WIDOW AND BROTHER] IT IS UNCERTAIN WHETHER SHE IS THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER⁵⁰ OF THE WIFE OF HIS FATHER'S BROTHER.⁵¹ THE [OTHER] SONS OF THE GRANDMOTHER⁵² EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH⁵³ OR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE,⁵⁴ SINCE [IN THE CASE OF EACH WIDOW AND BROTHER] THE ONLY DOUBT IS WHETHER SHE IS THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER⁵⁵ OR THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER'S SON.⁵⁵ IF THE UNTAINTED SONS⁵⁶ DIED,⁵⁷ THEN THE INTERCHANGED SONS SUBMIT [IN RESPECT OF THE WIDOWS] OF

THE SONS OF THE GRANDMOTHER TO HALIZAH BUT MUST NOT CONTRACT⁵⁴ THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. SINCE [IN THE CASE OF EACH WIDOW AND BROTHER] IT IS UNCERTAIN WHETHER SHE IS THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER⁵⁵ OR THE WIFE OF HIS FATHER'S BROTHER;⁵⁸ [WHILE IN RESPECT OF THE WIDOWS] OF THE SONS OF THE DAUGHTER-IN- LAW ONE⁵⁹ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH⁶⁰ AND THE OTHER⁵⁹ [MAY ALSO] CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁶¹

- (59) Of the two interchanged sons.
- (60) From either of the widows. He may not, however, contract levirate marriage since in respect of each widow it might be assumed that she was not his, but the other's brother's wife, and that she is consequently forbidden to him or to anyone else before the other had submitted to her halizah.
- (61) For if the widow was his brother's wife he is obviously entitled to marry her, and if she was his brother's son's wife he may also marry her since her deceased husband's brother had already submitted to her halizah and had thereby set her free to marry even a stranger.
- (62) A priest's slave also being allowed to eat terumah.
- (63) This is explained infra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 99b

THEY MAY NOT DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR THE DEAD¹ NOR MAY THEY MARRY ANY WOMEN WHETHER THESE ARE ELIGIBLE [FOR MARRIAGE WITH A PRIEST]² OR INELIGIBLE.³ IF WHEN THEY⁴ GREW UP, THE INTERCHANGED CHILDREN EMANCIPATED ONE ANOTHER THEY MAY MARRY WOMEN WHO ARE ELIGIBLE FOR MARRIAGE WITH A PRIEST⁵ AND THEY MAY NOT DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR THE DEAD.⁶ IF, HOWEVER, THEY DEFILED THEMSELVES, THE PENALTY OF FORTY STRIPES⁷ IS NOT INFLICTED UPON THEM.⁸ THEY MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH,⁹ BUT IF THEY DID EAT THEY NEED NOT PAY COMPENSATION EITHER FOR THE PRINCIPAL OR [THE ADDITIONAL] FIFTH.¹⁰ THEY ARE NOT TO RECEIVE A SHARE¹¹ AT THE THRESHING-FLOOR, BUT THEY MAY SELL [THEIR OWN] TERUMAH¹² AND THE PROCEEDS ARE THEIRS.¹³ THEY RECEIVE NO SHARE IN THE CONSECRATED THINGS OF THE TEMPLE,¹⁴ AND NO CONSECRATED THINGS¹⁵ ARE GIVEN TO THEM. BUT THEY ARE NOT DEPRIVED OF THEIR OWN.¹³ THEY ARE EXEMPT FROM [GIVING TO ANY PRIEST] THE SHOULDER, THE CHEEKS AND THE MAW,¹⁶ WHILE THE FIRSTLING OF EITHER OF THEM MUST REMAIN IN THE PASTURE¹³ UNTIL IT CONTRACTS A BLEMISH.¹⁷ THE RESTRICTIONS RELATING TO PRIESTS AND THE RESTRICTIONS RELATING TO ISRAELITES ARE BOTH IMPOSED UPON THEM.¹⁸

GEMARA. IF THE UNTAINTED SONS DIED etc.; are, then, the others,¹⁹ because they were mixed up, tainted! — R. Papa replied: Read, 'If those [whose parentage was] certain died'.

[IN RESPECT, HOWEVER, OF THE WIDOWS] OF THE SONS OF THE DAUGHTER-IN-LAW ONE SUBMITS TO HALIZAH etc. Only halizah [must take place first] and the levirate marriage afterwards. The levirate marriage, however, must not take place first; since thereby one might infringe the prohibition against a sister-in-law's marriage with a stranger.²⁰

[IF THE CHILD OF] A PRIEST'S WIFE WAS INTERCHANGED etc. Obviously only ONE SHARE!²¹ — Read 'ONE SHARE together'.²² Here we learn [a thing] which is in agreement with him who ruled that no share of terumah is given to a slave unless his master is with him.²³ For it was taught: No share in terumah is given to a slave unless his master is with him; so R. Judah. R. Jose, however, ruled: The slave²⁴ may claim, 'If I am a priest, give me for my own sake; and if I am a priest's slave, give me for the sake of my master'. In the place of R. Judah, [men of doubtful status] were raised to the status of priesthood²⁵ [on the evidence that they received a share] of terumah.²⁶ In the place of R. Jose, however, no one was raised to the status of priesthood [on the evidence of having received a share] of terumah.²⁷

It was taught: R. Eleazar b. Zadok said, 'During the whole of my lifetime I have given evidence but once, and through my statement they raised a slave to the priesthood'. 'They raised'? Is [such an error] conceivable! If through the beasts of the righteous the Holy One, blessed be He, does not cause an offence to be committed, how much less through the righteous themselves! — Rather, read. 'They desired to raise a slave to the priesthood, through my statement'. He witnessed [the occurrence]²⁸ in the place of R. Jose. but went and tendered his evidence in the place of R. Judah.²⁹

Our Rabbis taught: Ten [classes of people] must not be given a share of terumah at the threshing-floors. They are the following: The deaf,³⁰ the imbecile, the minor, the tumtum,³¹ the hermaphrodite the slave, the woman,³² the uncircumcised,³³ the levitically unclean, and he who married a woman who is unsuitable for him.³⁴ In the case of all these, however, [terumah] may be sent to their houses, with the exception³⁵ of the one who is levitically unclean and one who married a woman who is unsuitable for him.³⁶ Now, one can well understand [the prohibition³⁷ in respect of] the deaf, the imbecile and the minor, since they lack intelligence;³⁸ [in respect of] the tumtum and the hermaphrodite also,³⁹

(1) Since either of them might be assumed to be the priest (cf. Lev. XXI, 1).

(2) Since such women are forbidden to the slave.

(3) A bondswoman, for instance, who is forbidden to the priest.

(4) The son of the priest and the slave who were interchanged.

(5) Any freed man may marry such a woman.

(6) V. p. 680, n. 13.

(7) 'Forty' is a round number for the penalty of flogging which in fact consisted of thirty-nine stripes only.

(8) Because each of them can plead that he is not the priest.

(9) On account of the slave who, being now a freed man, is, like any Israelite, forbidden to eat terumah.

(10) Which an Israelite must pay (cf. Lev. XXII, 14). Each one of them can plead that he is the priest.

(11) In terumah. Cf supra n. 5'

(12) Of their own produce.

(13) No priest can claim it from either of them since each can reply that it is he who is the priest.

(14) Not even a share in the skins of the sacrifices.

(15) Firstlings, for instance, or herem (v. Glos.). Cf. Num. XVIII, 14f.

(16) Priestly gifts prescribed in Deut. XVIII, 3.

(17) When it is unfit for the altar, and may be eaten by its owner. The reason why an Israelite owner may not eat of the flesh of his firstling, even after it has contracted a blemish, is not because of its sanctity but because its consumption by a non-priest is regarded as robbing the priests. No such consideration arises in a case where the owner can claim that he himself is a priest. (Cf. supra note 9).

(18) MS.M. and cur. edd. infra 100a. The reading here is 'upon him'.

(19) Lit., 'those'.

(20) Lit., 'because he met a sister-in-law for the market'.

(21) Since no more than one of them can lay claim to the priesthood. Why then was the obvious stated?

(22) Only when the two come together do they receive one share. One without the other receives nothing. The reason is given infra.

(23) As one of the two is obviously a slave neither of them can claim a share unless the other is with him.

(24) In circumstances like those spoken of in our Mishnah, where it is uncertain whether he is a slave or a priest.

(25) Lit., 'genealogical (priestly) records', enabling them to marry women of unblemished and priestly descent. V. Keth., Sonc. ed., p. 233, n. 4.

(26) Hence no terumah must be given to a slave in the absence of his master.

(27) Tosef. Yeb. Xli, Keth. 28b.

(28) That a slave received a share of terumah.

(29) Cf. Keth., Sonc., ed., p. 156. notes.

(30) Deaf-mute.

(31) V. Glos.

(32) A priest's wife.

(33) A priest whose brothers died as a result of their circumcision, and who, owing to the fatal effect of such an operation on members of his family, is himself exempt from circumcision.

(34) I.e., one whom a priest is forbidden to marry.

(35) The uncircumcised priest is not excluded since his wives and slaves, though not he himself, are permitted to eat terumah.

(36) Tosef. Ter. X end.

(37) To give him a share of terumah at the threshing-floor.

(38) It would be a mark of disrespect were the sacred terumah to be entrusted to the care of persons who are mentally defective, or undeveloped, or in any other way below the normal standard of intellectual or physical fitness.

(39) One can understand the reason for the prohibition.

since either of them is a peculiar creature; the slave, too, because owing to the *terumah*¹ he might be raised to the priesthood;² the uncircumcised and the unclean also, owing to their repulsiveness; and the priest who married a woman unsuitable for him, as a penalty. But why should not a woman [be given a share of terumah]? — On this question R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua differ. One explains: Owing [to possible abuse by] a divorced woman;³ and the other explains: Owing to [the necessity of avoiding] privacy between the sexes.⁴ What is the practical difference between them? — The practical difference between them is the case of a threshing-floor that is near a town but is unfrequented by people,⁵ or one that is distant [from a town] but frequented by people.⁶

'In the case of all these, however, [terumah] may be sent to their houses, with the exception of the one who is levitically unclean and one who married a woman who is unsuitable for him'. [May terumah], then, be sent to the uncircumcised?⁷ What is the reason! [Is it] because he is a victim of circumstances? The man who is levitically unclean is also a victim of circumstances!⁸ — The force of circumstances in the former case is great;⁹ in the latter, the force is not so great.¹⁰

Our Rabbis taught: Neither to a slave nor to a woman may a share in terumah be given at the threshing-floors. In places, however, where a share is given. It is to be given to the woman first, and she is immediately dismissed. What can this mean?¹¹ — It is this that was meant: The¹² poor man's tithe which is distributed at home¹³ is to be given to the woman first.¹⁴ What is the reason? — That the degradation [of the woman may be avoided].¹⁵

Raba said: Formerly, when a man and a woman¹⁶ came before me for a legal decision, I used to dispose of the man's lawsuit first, because I thought a man is subject to the fulfilment of all the commandments;¹⁷ since, however, I heard this,¹⁸ I dispose of a woman's lawsuit first. Why? In order [to save her from] degradation.¹⁹

IF WHEN THEY GREW UP, THE INTERCHANGED CHILDREN etc. [It states] THEY EMANCIPATED. [Implying] only²⁰ if they wished, but if they did not wish they need not [emancipate one another]! But why? Neither of them could marry either a bondwoman²¹ or a free woman!²² Raba replied: Read: Pressure is brought to bear upon them so that they emancipate one another.

THE RESTRICTIONS . . . ARE IMPOSED UPON THEM. In what respect?²³ — R. Papa replied: In respect of their meal-offering. A handful²⁴ must be taken from it,²⁵ as of a meal-offering of an Israelite, but it may not be eaten,²⁶ as is the case with a meal-offering of the priests.²⁷ But how [is one to proceed]? The handful is offered up separately and the remnants are also offered up separately. But [surely] there is to be applied here the Scriptural deduction that any offering a portion of which had been put on the fire of the altar²⁸ is subject to the prohibition you shall not burn!²⁹ — R. Judah son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi replied: They are burned as wood,³⁰ in accordance with a ruling of R. Eleazar. For it was taught: R. Eleazar said, For it sweet savour³¹ you may not offer them;³² you may offer them, however, as mere³⁰ wood.³³ This is satisfactory according to R. Eleazar, what, however, can be said according to the Rabbis?³⁴ — One proceeds in accordance with a ruling of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon. For it was taught: R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: The handful is offered up separately and the remnants are scattered over the enclosure of the sacrificial ashes.³⁵ And even the Rabbis differ from R. Eleazar only in respect of a priestly sinner's meal-offering which is suitable for offering up;³⁶ but here,³⁷ even the Rabbis agree.³⁸

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN DID NOT WAIT THREE MONTHS AFTER [SEPARATION³⁹ FROM] HER HUSBAND, AND MARRIED AGAIN AND GAVE BIRTH [TO A SON], AND IT IS UNKNOWN WHETHER IT IS A NINE-MONTHS CHILD BY THE FIRST HUSBAND OR A SEVEN-MONTHS CHILD BY THE SECOND, IF SHE HAD OTHER SONS BY THE FIRST HUSBAND AND OTHER SONS BY THE SECOND, THESE MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH⁴⁰ BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT WITH HER LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁴¹ AND HE, IN RESPECT OF THEIR WIDOWS,⁴² LIKEWISE, SUBMITS TO HALIZAH⁴³ BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁴⁴

(1) Which he receives.

(2) As was explained supra.

(3) Who might, after her divorce when she is no more permitted to eat terumah. continue to collect it.

(4) Yihud, v. Glos. Cf. supra 86a.

(5) No preventive measure against (a) abuse by a divorced woman is here necessary, since the proximity of the threshing-floor to the town enables its owner to keep in touch with social events in the town. The precautions, however, against (b) privacy, owing to the loneliness of the floor, cannot be neglected.

(6) Cf. supra note 1 mutatis mutandis; (b) has to, but (a) need not be disregarded.

(7) Since he is not included in the exceptions. Cf. supra p. 683, n. 8.

(8) If the latter was not excluded why then was the former?

(9) The uncircumcised cannot help the infirmity of the constitution of the members of his family. It is not through any fault of his that he must remain uncircumcised (v. supra p. 683, n. 6).

(10) By the exercise of due care uncleanness might be avoided.

(11) In the first sentence it was stated that a woman receives no share; and in the following it is tacitly assumed that in certain places she does receive a share!

(12) C;f. Bah. Cur. edd. read, 'Where the poor man's tithe is distributed'.

- (13) In town.
- (14) Though privacy between the sexes need not be apprehended there.
- (15) It is degrading for a woman to have to wait her turn in a crowd of men.
- (16) With different law suits.
- (17) While a woman is exempt from certain commandments. Hence it is the man that should receive precedence.
- (18) The reason why a woman should be given her share of the poor man's tithe first.
- (19) Cf. supra p. 684. n. 11.
- (20) Lit., 'yes'.
- (21) Owing to the priest.
- (22) Since one of them is a slave. How, then, could they ever fulfil the religious duty of propagation which is incumbent upon all?
- (23) Lit., for what law'.

- (25) Since he might be the Israelite.
- (26) As he might also be the priest.

- (28) As was the case here where the handful was offered up.
- (29) Lev. II. Once the prescribed portion of an offering had been duly offered up on the altar the remnants of that offering may no longer be burned in the altar. Cf. Zeb 77a. How then could the remnants of the meal-offering be offered up when a portion of the offering (the handful) is also offered up.
- (30) Not as an offering.
- (31) Lev II, 12.
- (32) V. supra note 13.
- (33) Yoma 47b, Sot. 23a, Zeb. 76b, Men. 106b.

- (35) בֵּית הַדֶּשֶׁן Sot. 23a, Men. 74a. A place near the altar, where a certain portion of the ashes of the altar was deposited.
- (36) In its entirety, as is the case with a priest's voluntary meal-offering.
- (37) Where there is the possibility that it is not the offering of a priest at all.
- (38) That the remnants are to be scattered in the enclosure of the ashes. V. Sot., Sonc ed., p. 116, notes.
- (39) By her husband's death or by divorce.
- (40) From the widow of the son whose father is unknown, if he died childless.
- (41) Since it is possible that they are only the maternal brothers of the deceased, whose widow is forbidden to them under the penalty of kareth.
- (42) Lit., 'to them'.
- (43) From their widows, if they died without issue.
- (44) Cf. supra n. 8 mutatis mutandis.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 100b

IF HE¹ HAD BROTHERS BY THE FIRST² AND ALSO BROTHERS BY THE SECOND,² BUT NOT BY THE SAME MOTHER, HE¹ MAY EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE,³ BUT AS FOR THEM, ONE⁴ SUBMITS TO HALIZAH⁵ AND THE OTHER MAY [THEN] CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁶

IF ONE OF [THE TWO HUSBANDS] WAS AN ISRAELITE AND THE OTHER A PRIEST, HE⁷ MAY ONLY MARRY A WOMAN WHO IS ELIGIBLE TO MARRY A PRIEST.⁸ HE⁷ MAY NOT DEFILE HIMSELF FOR THE DEAD,⁸ BUT IF HE DID DEFILE HIMSELF HE DOES NOT SUFFER THE PENALTY OF FORTY STRIPES.⁹ HE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH,⁹ BUT IF HE DID EAT HE NEED NOT PAY COMPENSATION EITHER FOR THE PRINCIPAL OR [FOR THE ADDITIONAL] FIFTH.¹⁰ HE DOES NOT RECEIVE A SHARE¹¹ AT THE THRESHING-FLOOR, BUT HE MAY SELL [HIS OWN] TERUMAH¹² AND THE PROCEEDS

ARE HIS.¹³ HE RECEIVES NO SHARE IN THE CONSECRATED THINGS OF THE TEMPLE,¹⁴ NO CONSECRATED THINGS ARE GIVEN TO HIM,¹⁵ BUT HE IS NOT DEPRIVED OF HIS OWN.¹³ HE IS EXEMPT FROM [GIVING TO ANY PRIEST] THE SHOULDER, THE CHEEKS AND THE MAW,¹⁶ WHILE HIS FIRSTLING MUST REMAIN IN THE PASTURE¹⁷ UNTIL IT CONTRACTS A BLEMISH.¹⁸ THE RESTRICTIONS RELATING TO PRIESTS AND THE RESTRICTIONS RELATING TO ISRAELITES ARE IMPOSED UPON HIM.

IF THE TWO [HUSBANDS] WERE PRIESTS, HE⁷ MUST MOURN AS ONAN¹⁹ FOR THEM²⁰ AND THEY MUST MOURN AS ONENIM²¹ FOR HIM,²² BUT HE MAY NOT DEFILE HIMSELF FOR THEM,²³ NOR MAY THEY DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR HIM.²³ HE MAY NOT INHERIT FROM THEM,²⁴ BUT THEY MAY INHERIT FROM HIM.²⁵ HE IS EXONERATED²⁶ IF HE STRIKES OR CURSES²⁷ THE ONE OR THE OTHER. HE GOES UP [TO SERVE] IN THE MISHMAR²⁸ OF THE ONE AS WELL AS OF THE OTHER,²⁹ BUT HE DOES NOT RECEIVE A SHARE [IN THE OFFERINGS].³⁰ IF, HOWEVER BOTH SERVED IN THE SAME MISHMAR,²⁸ HE RECEIVES A SINGLE PORTION.³¹

GEMARA. Only the halizah [must take place first]³² and the levirate marriage afterwards; the levirate marriage, however, must not take place first, since, thereby, one³³ might infringe the prohibition against the marriage of a sister-in-law with a stranger.³⁴

Samuel said: If ten priests stood together and one of them separated [from the company] and cohabited [with a feme sole]. the child [that may result from the union]³⁵ is a shethuki.²⁸ In what [respect is he] a shethuki? If it be suggested that he is silenced³⁶ [when he claims a share] of his father's estate, [is not this, it may be retorted] self-evident? Do we know who is his father! — Rather,³⁷ he is silenced [if he claims any] of the rights of priesthood.³⁸ What is the reason? — Scripture stated, And it shall be unto him, and to his seed after him,³⁹ it is, therefore, required that 'his seed' shall be traced to 'him',⁴⁰ but this is not the case here.⁴¹

R. Papa demurred: If that is so in the case of Abraham where it is written, To be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee,⁴² what does the All Merciful exhort him thereby!⁴³ — It is this that he said to him: Marry not an idolatress or a bondwoman so that your seed shall not be ascribed to her.⁴⁴

An objection was raised: The first⁴⁵ is fit to be a High Priest.⁴⁶ But, surely, it is required that a priest's child shall be traced to his father,⁴⁷ which is not the case here!⁴⁸ — [The requirement that] a priest's child shall be traced to his father⁴⁹ is a Rabbinical provision. while the Scriptural text is a mere prop;⁵⁰ and it is only in respect of prostitution that the Rabbis have made their preventive measure; in respect of marriage, however, no such measure was enacted by them. But did the Rabbis introduce such a preventive measure in the case of prostitution? Surely we learned: IF A WOMAN DID NOT WAIT THREE MONTHS AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND, AND MARRIED AGAIN AND GAVE BIRTH [TO A SON]; now, what is meant by AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND? If it be suggested: AFTER the death OF HER HUSBAND, read the final clause: HE MUST MOURN AS ONAN FOR THEM AND THEY MUST MOURN AS ONENIM FOR HIM; one can well understand [the circumstances in which] HE MOURNS AS ONAN FOR THEM, such mourning being possible [even in the case] of marriage with the second [husband, on the occasion of the] collecting of the bones of the first.⁵¹ But how is it possible that they MOURN AS ONENIM FOR HIM, when the first husband is dead!⁵² If, however, [it be suggested that our Mishnah speaks] of a divorced woman, and that the meaning of AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND is AFTER the divorce OF HER HUSBAND, then read the final clause: HE MAY NOT DEFILE HIMSELF FOR THEM, NOR MAY THEY DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR HIM; now, one can understand that THEY MAY NOT DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR HIM as a restrictive measure, [since in respect of every one of them it may be assumed that] he is possibly not his son; but why MAY HE NOT DEFILE HIMSELF FOR THEM?

Granted that he must not defile himself for the second;⁵³ for the first, however, he should be allowed to defile himself in any case! For if he is his son, then he may justly defile himself for him; and if he is the son of the second⁵⁴ he may legitimately defile himself for him since he is a halal!⁵⁵ Consequently [our Mishnah must refer to a case] of prostitution,⁵⁶ and the meaning of AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND must be, AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] THE MAN WHO IRREGULARLY COHABITED WITH HER;⁵⁷ and yet it was stated in the final clause, HE MAY GO UP [TO SERVE] IN THE MISHMAR OF THE ONE AS WELL AS OF THE OTHER. This, then, presents an objection against the ruling of Samuel!⁵⁸ — R. Shemaia replied: [Our Mishnah refers] to a minor who made a declaration of refusal.⁵⁹ But is a minor⁶⁰ capable of propagation? Surely R. Bebai recited before R. Nahman: Three categories of women may use an absorbent in their marital intercourse:⁶¹ A minor, an expectant mother, and a nursing wife. The minor,⁶² because she⁶³ might become pregnant and, as a result, she might die. An expectant mother,⁶² because she⁶³ might cause her foetus to degenerate into a sandal.⁶⁴ A nursing wife,⁶² because she⁶³ might have to wean her child [prematurely]⁶⁵ and this would result in his death. And what is the age of such a minor?⁶⁶ From the age of eleven years and one day until the age of twelve years and one day. One who is under,⁶⁷ or over this age⁶⁸ must carry on her marital intercourse in the usual manner. This is the opinion of R. Meir. The Sages, however, said: The one as well as the other carries on her marital intercourse in the usual manner. and mercy will be vouchsafed from heaven,⁶⁹ for it is said in the Scriptures, The Lord preserveth the simple!⁷⁰ — [The case of our Mishnah] is possible with a mistaken betrothal,⁷¹ and on the basis of a ruling of Rab Judah in the name of Samuel. For Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel in the name of R. Ishmael: And she be not seized⁷² [only then⁷³ is she] forbidden;⁷⁴ if, however, she was seized⁷⁵ she is permitted;⁷⁴ there is, however, another kind of woman who is permitted⁷⁴ even if she was not seized.⁷⁶ And who is she? — A woman whose betrothal was a mistaken one,⁷⁷ who may, even if her son sits riding on her shoulder, make a declaration of refusal [against her husband] and go away.⁷⁸

IF THE TWO [HUSBANDS] WERE PRIESTS etc. Our Rabbis taught: If he¹ struck one² and then struck the other, or if he cursed one² and then cursed the other, or cursed them both simultaneously or struck them both simultaneously, he is guilty.³ R. Judah, however, said: If⁴ simultaneously, he is guilty;⁵ if⁴ successively he is exonerated.⁶ But, surely, it was taught: R. Judah stated that he⁷ is exonerated [even if his offences were] simultaneous! — Two Tannaim differ as to what was the opinion of R. Judah.

What is the reason of him who exonerated?⁸ R. Hanina replied: 'Blessing'⁹ is spoken of in Scripture [in respect of parents] on earth¹⁰ and blessing⁹ is spoken of [in respect of God] above.¹¹ As there is no association above so must there be no association below;¹² and striking has been compared to cursing.¹³

HE MAY GO UP [TO SERVE] IN THE MISHMAR etc. Since, however, HE DOES NOT RECEIVE A SHARE why should he go up? — [You ask] 'Why should he go up'; surely, he might say: I wish to perform a commandment!¹⁴ — But [this is the difficulty]: It does not say. '[If] he went up'¹⁵ but HE GOES up, implying even against his will!¹⁶ — R. Aha b. Hanina in the name of Abaye in the name of R. Assi in the name of R. Johanan replied: In order [to avert any possible] reflection on his family.¹⁷

IF, HOWEVER, BOTH SERVED IN THE SAME MISHMAR etc. In what respect do two mishmaroth¹⁸ differ [from one] that [in the former case] he should not [receive a share]? [Is it] because when he comes to the one mishmar he is driven away and when he comes to the other mishmar he is again driven away?¹⁹ Then, even in the case of one mishmar also, when he comes to one beth ab²⁰ he is driven away and²¹ when he comes to the other beth ab he is also driven away! —

R. Papa replied: It is this that was meant: IF, HOWEVER, BOTH SERVED IN THE SAME MISHMAR and in the same beth ab, HE RECEIVES A SINGLE PORTION.

CHAPTER XII

MISHNAH. THE COMMANDMENT OF HALIZAH MUST BE PERFORMED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE JUDGES, EVEN THOUGH ALL THE THREE ARE LAYMEN.²² IF THE WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SHOE,²³ HER HALIZAH IS VALID,²⁴ [BUT IF] WITH A SOCK²⁵ IT IS INVALID; IF WITH A SANDAL²⁶ TO WHICH A HEEL IS ATTACHED IT IS VALID, BUT [IF WITH ONE] THAT HAS NO HEEL IT IS INVALID. [IF THE SHOE WAS WORN]²⁷ BELOW THE KNEE²⁸ THE HALIZAH IS VALID, BUT IF ABOVE THE KNEE²⁸ IT IS INVALID. IF THE WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SANDAL²⁶ THAT DID NOT BELONG TO HIM,²⁹ OR WITH A WOODEN SANDAL, OR WITH THE ONE OF THE LEFT FOOT [WHICH HE²⁹ WAS WEARING] ON HIS RIGHT FOOT, THE HALIZAH IS VALID.

IF SHE PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SANDAL TOO LARGE [FOR HIM],²⁹ IN WHICH, HOWEVER, HE IS ABLE TO WALK, OR WITH ONE TOO SMALL WHICH, HOWEVER, COVERS THE GREATER PART OF HIS FOOT, HER HALIZAH IS VALID.

GEMARA. Since even THREE LAYMEN [are sufficient],³⁰ what need is there for JUDGES? — It is this that we were taught: That three men are required, who are capable of dictating [the prescribed texts]³¹ like judges.³² Thus we have learned here what the Rabbis taught: The commandment of halizah is performed in the presence of three men who are able to dictate [the prescribed texts]³¹ like judges.³² R. Judah said: In the presence of five.³³

What is the first Tanna's reason? — Because it was taught: Elders³⁴ [implies] two; but as no court may be evenly balanced,³⁵ one man more is added to them; behold here three. And R. Judah?³⁶ — The elders of³⁷ [implies] two; and elders³⁸ [implies another] two; but since no court may be evenly balanced,³⁵ one man more is added to them; behold here five.

As to the first Tanna, what deduction does he make [from the expression] the elders of?³⁷ — He requires it for the purpose of including³⁹ even three laymen. Whence, then, does R. Judah deduce the eligibility of laymen?³⁹ — He deduces it from Before the eyes of;⁴⁰ a Master having said: 'Before the eyes of', excludes blind men. Now, since the expression 'Before the eyes of' is required to exclude blind men it follows that even laymen [are eligible]. For should it be suggested [that only members of] the Sanhedrin⁴¹ are required. what need was there to exclude blind men, [an exclusion which could have been] deduced from that which R. Joseph learnt! For R. Joseph learnt: As the Beth din⁴² must be clean⁴³ in respect of righteousness so must they be clear from all physical defects,⁴⁴

(1) The son concerning whom it is unknown, as in our Mishnah, which of his mother's two husbands was his father.

(2) Lit., 'this', one of his mother's two husbands.

(3) Since one of the two is certainly his father. As to the necessary caution v. infra nn. 12 and 13.

(4) He struck or cursed.

(5) The specific caution that must precede any forbidden act that is punishable by a court is here effected when the witnesses cautioned the offender by one statement against the striking or the cursing of the two, e.g., 'do not strike them'.

(6) Though he may have been duly cautioned in each particular case, no penalty can be imposed upon him by any court, since each caution was of a doubtful character, it being unknown in each case whether the particular man he was about to strike or curse was his father or not. A caution of a doubtful character is, in the opinion of R. Judah, of no validity. while in the opinion of the first Tanna it is valid.

(7) V. supra note 8.

- (8) If the offender struck or cursed simultaneously. One of the victims must surely have been his father!
- (9) Euph. for 'cursing'.
- (10) Lit., 'below'. V. Ex. XXI. 17.
- (11) V. Lev. XXIV, 15.
- (12) Only when the curse referred to a single individual is the offender subject to punishment.
- (13) Since both acts, in the case of parents. appear in Ex. XXI, in close proximity. vv. 15 (striking) and 17 (cursing). Such proximity, according to the opinion here expressed, serves the purpose of an analogy. According to another opinion, the analogy is disturbed by the intervening v. 16. Cf. Sanh. 85a.
- (14) To take part in the Temple service, even though he derives no material benefit from it.
- (15) The past tense, implying contingency.
- (16) Why should he be compelled?
- (17) Should he abstain from the Temple service, rumour might attribute his abstention to some serious disqualification which would bring discredit upon all his family. Its members, therefore, may compel him to join in the service.
- (18) Plur. of mishmar.
- (19) Each mishmar asserting that he does not belong to them.
- (20) V. Glos. A mishmar consisted of six families each of which was described as beth ab, performing service on a different day in the week.

- (22) Not professional judges.
- (23) Made of soft leather and covering the upper part of the foot (cf. Rashi and Jast.) opp. to sandal (v. infra n. 3).
- (24) Though the shoe required for halizah purposes should properly be a sandal made of hard leather and consisting of a sole with straps attached for fastening it to the foot.
- (25) אנפיהיא Cf. infilia, shoes or socks made of felt.
- (26) סנדה.
- (27) Cf. Rashi. According to others the law refers not to the shoe itself but to the sandal straps.
- (28) Where, for instance, the levir (according to Rashi) had his foot amputated. According to the other interpretation 'below', and 'above' the knee refers to the position of the straps on the leg.
- (29) The levir.
- (30) To constitute a tribunal for halizah.
- (31) Deut. XXV, 7-9.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 101b

for it is said in Scripture, Thou art all fair, my love; and there is no spot in thee.¹

As to the former,² however, what deduction does he make from the expression. 'Before the eyes of' ? — That expression serves the purpose of a deduction like that of Raba, Raba having stated: The judges must see the spittle issuing from the mouth of the sister-in-law, because it is written in Scripture, Before the eyes of the elders . . . and spit.³ But does not the other⁴ also require the text⁵ for a deduction like that of Raba! — This is so indeed. Whence, then,⁶ does he deduce [the eligibility of] laymen?⁷ — He deduces it from in Israel⁸ [implying] any Israelite whatsoever. As to the former,⁹ however, what deduction does he make from 'In Israel'?¹⁰ — He requires it for a deduction like that which R. Samuel b. Judah taught: 'In Israel' [implies that halizah must be performed] at a Beth din of Israelites but not at a Beth din of proselytes.¹¹ And the other?⁴ — 'In Israel' is written a second time.¹² And the former?⁹ — He requires it¹³ for another deduction in accordance with what was taught: R. Judah stated, 'We were once sitting before R. Tarfon when a sister-in-law came to perform halizah, and he said to us, "Exclaim all of you: The man that had his shoe drawn off"'.¹⁴ And the other? — This is deduced from And [his name] shall be called.¹⁴ If this is so,¹⁵ And they shall call¹⁶ [implies] two;¹⁷ And they shall speak¹⁶ [also implies] two,¹⁷ [so that] here also [one might deduce]: According to R. Judah,¹⁸ behold there are here nine; and according to the Rabbis,¹⁹ behold there are here seven! — That text¹⁶ is required for a deduction in accordance with what was taught: And they²⁰ shall call him¹⁶ but not their representative; And they shall speak unto him¹⁶ teaches that they give him suitable advice. If he,²¹ for instance, was young and she²² old, or if he was old and she was young, he is told, 'What would you with²³ a young woman?' Or 'What would you²³ with an old woman? Go to one who [is of the same age] as yourself, and introduce no quarrels into your home'.²⁴

Raba stated in the name of R. Nahman: The halachah is that halizah is to be performed in the presence of three men, since the Tanna²⁵ has taught us so²⁶ anonymously.²⁷ Said Raba to R. Nahman: If so [the same ruling should apply to] mi'un²⁸ also, for we learned:²⁹ Mi'un and halizah [must be witnessed] by three men!³⁰ And should you reply [that the halachah] is so indeed, surely [It may be retorted] it was taught: Mi'un,³¹ Beth Shammai ruled, [must be declared before] a Beth din of experts;³² and Beth Hillel ruled: [It may be performed] either before a Beth din or not before a Beth din. Both, however, agree that a quorum of three is required. R. Jose son of R. Judah and R. Eleazar son of R. Jose³³ ruled: [The mi'un is] valid [even if it was declared] before two.³⁴ And R. Joseph b. Manyumi reported in the name of R. Nahman³⁴ that the halachah is in agreement with this pair!³⁵ — There,³⁶ only one anonymous [teaching] is available while here³⁷ two anonymous [teachings]³⁸ are available.

There³⁶ also two anonymous [teachings] are available! For we learned: If, however, a woman made a declaration of refusal³⁹ or performed halizah in his presence, he⁴⁰ may marry her,⁴¹ since he [was but one of the] Beth din!⁴² — But, [the fact is that while] there,⁴³ only two anonymous [teachings] are available; here,⁴⁴ three anonymous [teachings] are available.⁴⁵

Consider! The one⁴³ is an anonymous [teaching], and the other⁴⁴ is an anonymous [teaching]; what difference does it make to me whether the anonymous [teachings] are one, two or three? — Rather, said R. Nahman b. Isaac, [the reason⁴⁶ is] because the anonymity⁴⁷ occurs in a passage recording a dispute.⁴⁸ For we learned: 'The laying on of hands by the elders,⁴⁹ and the breaking of the heifer's neck⁵⁰ is performed by three elders; so R. Jose,⁵¹ while R. Judah stated: By five elders. Halizah and declarations of mi'un, [however, are witnessed] by three men',⁵² and since R. Judah does not express disagreement,⁵³ it may be inferred that R. Judah changed his opinion.⁵⁴ This proves it.

Raba stated: The judges must appoint a place,⁵⁵ for it is written, Then his brother's wife shall go up to the gate⁵⁶ unto the elders.⁵⁷

R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua arranged a halizah⁴⁸ in the presence of five. In accordance with whose view?⁵⁸ Was it in accordance with that of R. Judah? He, surely, had changed his opinion!⁵⁹ [Their object⁶⁰ was] to give the matter due publicity.⁶¹

R. Ashi once happened to be at R. Kahana's, when the latter said to him, 'The Master has come up to us [at an opportune moment] to complete a quorum of five'.⁶²

R. Kahana stated: I was once standing in the presence of Rab Judah, when he said to me, 'Come, get on to this bundle of reeds⁶³ that you may be included in a quorum of five'.⁶² On being asked, 'What need is there for five?' he replied, 'In order that the matter be given due publicity'.⁶¹

R. Samuel b. Judah once stood before Rab Judah when the latter said to him, 'Come, get on to this bundle of reeds⁶³ to be included in a quorum of five,⁶² in order that the matter be thereby given due publicity'.⁶¹ 'We learned', the first remarked, 'In Israel [implies that halizah must be performed] at a Beth din of Israelites but not at a Beth din of proselytes⁶⁴ while I am, in fact, a proselyte'. 'On the word⁶⁵ [of a man] like R. Samuel b. Judah', Rab Judah said, 'I would withdraw money [from its possessor]'.⁶⁶ [You say] 'Withdraw'! Could this be imagined? Surely the All Merciful said, At the mouth of two witnesses!⁶⁷ — Rather [it is this that he meant]. 'I would on his word⁶⁵ impair the validity of a note of indebtedness'.⁶⁸

Raba stated:

- (36) Concerning mi'un.
- (37) On halizah.
- (38) One here (our Mishnah) and the other in Sanh. 2a.
- (39) Mi'un, v. Glos.
- (40) A Sage who, if he had previously pronounced the woman forbidden to her husband owing to a vow she had made, would not have been allowed to marry her in order to avoid any suspicion that his motive in forbidding her to her husband was his intention to marry her himself.
- (41) In these circumstances.
- (42) Bek. 31a, supra 25b. Mi'un and halizah, unlike disallowance and confirmation of vows, must be witnessed by a court, or quorum of three, and three persons would not be suspected of ulterior motives even though one of them subsequently married the woman concerned. This Mishnah, then, adds a second anonymous statement to the one previously mentioned, both requiring a quorum of three for mi'un.
- (43) Concerning mi'un.
- (44) On halizah.
- (45) The Mishnah cited last, which adds one anonymous teaching to the single one of mi'un, also adds one to the two anonymous teachings concerning halizah.
- (46) Why the halachah is in agreement with the anonymous teaching in respect of halizah and not with that in respect of mi'un.
- (47) In respect of halizah.

- (52) Sanh. loc. cit.
- (53) With the ruling that a quorum of three only is required for halizah, though in a previous discussion (supra 102a) he maintained that a quorum of five was required.
- (54) And agreed with the anonymous teaching. Hence R. Nahman's ruling that as regards the quorum for halizah the halachah agrees with the anonymous teaching. In respect of mi'un, however, the anonymous teaching has not been mentioned in connection with a dispute in which R. Jose and R. Eleazar participated. Hence it must be assumed that they adhered to their first opinions contrary to the anonymous teaching, which consequently does not represent the halachah.
- (55) For the performance of the rite of halizah.

Rashi). The question of R. Judah's first opinion did not at all enter into consideration.
- (62) At a halizah ceremonial.
- (63) The spot appointed for the performance of the halizah (cf. Raba's ruling supra).
- (64) V. supra p. 696.
- (65) Lit., 'mouth'.
- (66) Though in such lawsuits the evidence of two witnesses is required.

- (68) Should he declare that the note was already redeemed the debtor would not be ordered to pay the debt, though the creditor also could not be compelled to destroy the note (cf. Rashi, Keth. 85a). According to some of the Tosafists the debt may not be collected unless the creditor takes the prescribed oath, as is the case wherever one witness declares a debt recorded on a note of indebtedness to have been paid, v. Keth. 8a. R. Samuel's superiority over the ordinary witness is limited to the following only: While the latter, if a relative, is not believed, to enforce an oath on the creditor, R. Samuel would always be believed (v. Tosaf. s.v. מרענא).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 102a

A proselyte may, according to Pentateuchal law, sit in judgment¹ on a fellow proselyte, for it is said in the Scriptures, Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God shall choose; one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee;² only when set over thee² is he required to be one from among thy brethren;² when, however, he is to judge his fellow proselyte he may himself be a proselyte.³ If his⁴ mother was an Israelitish woman he may sit in judgment even on an Israelite.⁵ In respect of halizah, however, [no man is eligible as judge] unless both his father and his mother were Israelites for it is said, And his name shall be called in Israel.⁶

Rabbah stated in the name of R. Kahana in the name of Rab: If Elijah should come and declare that halizah may be performed with a foot-covering shoe,⁷ he would be obeyed; [were he, however, to declare that] halizah may not be performed with a sandal,⁸ he would not be obeyed, for the people have long ago adopted the practice [of performing it] with a sandal.

R. Joseph, however, reported in the name of R. Kahana in the name of Rab: If Elijah should come and declare that halizah may not be performed with a foot-covering shoe,⁷ he would be obeyed; [were he, however, to declare that] halizah may not be performed with a sandal,⁸ he would not be obeyed, for the people have long ago adopted the practice [of performing it] with a sandal.

What is the practical difference between them?⁹ — The practical difference between them is [the propriety of using] a foot-covering shoe ab initio.¹⁰

According to him, however, who stated [that it was proper to use¹¹ it] even ab initio, surely, [it may be objected] we learned: IF A WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A FOOT-COVERING SHOE, HER HALIZAH IS VALID [which¹² implies validity only] after the action had been performed but not ab initio. — The same law¹³ is applicable even [where the shoe was used] ab initio. As, however, it was desired to state in the final clause: BUT IF WITH A SOCK IT IS INVALID, [a law] which applies even after the action had been performed, a similar expression¹⁴ was also used in the first clause.

[On the question of] using a foot-covering shoe¹⁵ ab initio Tannaim differ. For it was taught: R. Jose¹⁶ related, 'I once went to Nesibis where I met an old man whom I asked, "Are you perchance acquainted with R. Judah b. Bathyra?" and he replied, "Yes; and he in fact always sits at my table". "Have you ever seen him arranging a halizah ceremony for a sister-in-law?" [I asked]. "I saw him arranging halizah ceremonies many a time", he replied. "With a foot-covering shoe [I asked] or with a sandal?" — "May halizah be performed", he asked me "with a foot-covering shoe?" I¹⁷ replied: Were that [not] so, what could have caused¹⁸ R. Meir to state that halizah if performed with a foot-covering shoe is valid, while R. Jacob reported in his¹⁹ name that it was quite proper to perform [even] halizah ab initio with a foot-covering shoe!'

With reference to him who ruled that it was not proper ab initio [to perform halizah with a foot-covering shoe] what could be the reason? If it be suggested: Because [the loosening of] the upper²⁰ [may be described as] from off²¹ and [the loosening of the] thong²² as 'from off of the from off', [a performance which is not in accordance with] the Torah which said, from off²¹ but not 'from off of the from off'; [it could well be retorted that] if such were the reason [the halizah should be invalid] even when actually performed. — This²³ is a preventive measure against the possible use of a flabby²⁴ shoe or even half a shoe.²⁵

Said Rab: Had I not seen my uncle²⁶ arranging a halizah with a sandal that had laces I would have allowed a halizah only with an Arabian sandal which can be more firmly fastened. And in respect of our [kind of sandal] though it has a knot,²⁷ a strap also should be tied to it,²⁸ so that the halizah may be properly performed.²⁹

(Mnemonic: You permitted a sister-in-law a sandal.)³⁰ Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: The permissibility of a sister-in-law to marry a stranger takes effect as soon as the greater part of the heel³¹ is released.³²

An objection was raised: If the straps of a foot-covering shoe or of a sandal were untied³³ or if [the levir] slipped [it off from] the greater part of his foot,³⁴ the halizah is invalid.³⁵ The reason then³⁶ is because it was he that slipped it off; had she, however, slipped it off, her halizah would have been valid; [and, furthermore this applies to] the greater part of the foot only³⁷ but not to the greater part of the heel!³⁸ — The ‘greater part of the foot’ has the same meaning as ‘the greater part of the heel’; [and the reason] why he calls it ‘the greater part of the foot’ [is] because all the weight of the foot rests on it.

This³⁹ provides support for R. Jannai. For R. Jannai stated: Whether [the levir] untied [the straps] and she slipped off [the sandal] or whether she untied the straps and he slipped off the sandal, her halizah remains invalid, unless she unties the straps and she slips off the sandal.

R. Jannai enquired: What is the law if she tore it?⁴⁰ What if she burnt it?⁴⁰ Is the exposure of the foot necessary,⁴¹ and this has here been effected,⁴² or is ‘taking off’ necessary, which has not taken place here?⁴³ — This remains undecided.⁴⁴

R. Nehemiah enquired of Rabbah: What is the law in the case of two shoes one above the other? — How is this enquiry to be understood? If it be suggested: That she⁴⁵ drew off the upper one and the lower one remained, surely, the All Merciful said: From off⁴⁶ but not ‘from off of the from off’! — Such enquiry is necessary only where she tore the upper one and removed the lower one while the upper one remained [on the levir's foot], the question being whether⁴⁷ the requirement is the ‘taking off’ which has been done⁴², or whether the exposure of the foot is necessary which was not effected here?⁴⁸

(9) Rabbah and R. Joseph. According to either of their reports the practice of using a sandal is not to be altered.

(10) According to Rabbah it is improper to use a foot-covering shoe. Its use would be permitted only if Elijah came and declared it to be permissible. According to R. Joseph, however, its use is and remains permitted unless Elijah should come and declare it to be inadmissible.

(11) A foot-covering shoe.

(12) Since the Perfect in a conditional clause was used.

(13) That the halizah is valid.

(14) Lit., ‘which has been done’.

(15) For halizah.

(16) Or 'Simeon'. V. Tosef. Yeb. XII.

(17) Cut. edd. insert in parenthesis: 'And the Torah said his shoe נעלה but not his foot-covering shoe מנעל [This is deleted by Rashi since the term מנעל is post-Biblical, occurring nowhere in the Bible in the sense of shoe. v. Rashi].

(18) Lit., 'he saw'.

(19) R. Meir's.

(20) Of the shoe.

(21) Cf. Deut. XXV, 9. And loose his shoe from off his foot.

(22) Which binds the upper to the foot and rests above it.

(23) The impropriety of using a foot-covering shoe ab initio.

(24) Cf. Jast.; or 'burst' (cf. Rashi).

(25) Such are not permitted at all for halizah purposes. Were any foot-covering shoe permitted for use in halizah one might erroneously use such a shoe even when it was burst or when it was flabby or even when half of it was torn away. Hence its entire prohibition. No such measure was necessary in the case of the sandal which, when burst or broken in halves cannot be worn at all.

(26) R. Hiyya.

(27) Which prevents the sandal from falling off the foot.

(28) Round the sandal and the foot, prior to the halizah.

(29) By untying the strap first and then releasing the foot from the shoe, the woman carries out completely the prescribed requirements of the halizah. The rt. חליץ may signify both (a) loosing or untying sc. of the shoe strap, and (b) releasing sc. of the foot from the shoe.

(30) A prominent verb and two prominent nouns in the following three rulings reported by Rab Judah in the name of Rab.

(31) Of the levir.

(32) From the sandal.

(33) By the levir or by themselves, but not by the woman.

(34) And the woman completed the removal.

(35) Tosef. Yeb. XII.

(36) Why the halizah is invalid.

(37) Lit., 'yes'.

(38) How then could Rab state that permissibility to marry a stranger comes into effect as soon as the greater part of the heel had been released.

(39) The Baraitha cited.

(40) The sandal while on the levir's foot.

(41) For a valid halizah.

(42) Lit., 'there is'.

(43) Lit., 'and there is not'. Since she did not take off the sandal.

(44) Teku, v. Glos.

(45) The sister-in-law.

(46) V. supra p. 702, n. 2.

(47) Lit., 'what'.

(48) Where the upper sandal still remains on the levir's foot.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 102b

Does this, however, ever happen? — Yes; for the Rabbis once saw Rab Judah going out into the street in five pairs of felt socks.

Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: A sister-in-law who was brought up together with the brothers¹ is permitted to marry any one of the brothers and there is no need to consider the possibility that she² might have taken off the sandal [from the foot] of one of them.³ The reason, then⁴ is because we did not actually observe it,⁵ had we, however, observed it⁵ the possibility [that her halizah was valid] would have had to be taken into consideration.⁶ But, surely, it was taught:

Whether he⁷ had the intention⁸ [of performing the commandment of halizah] and she had no such intention, or whether she had such intention and he did not, halizah is invalid, it being necessary⁹ that both shall at the same time have such intention!¹⁰ It is this that was meant : Although we observed it⁵ there is no need to consider the possibility that they might have intended [to give their action the character of a valid halizah].

Others read: The reason⁴ is because we did not see it,⁵ had we, however, seen it, the possibility [of a valid halizah] would have had to be considered,⁶ the statement that¹¹ intention¹² is necessary¹³ applying only to the permissibility [of the woman] to strangers,¹⁴ but to the brothers she does become forbidden.¹⁵

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: No halizah may be performed with a sandal that was sewn with flax,¹⁶ for it is said in Scripture, And I shod thee with tahash.¹⁷ Might it be suggested that [the skill of] a tahash¹⁸ is admissible¹⁹ but not any other material? — The mention of ‘shoe’ twice²⁰ indicates the inclusion [of all kinds of leather]. If the repeated mention of ‘shoe’ indicates the inclusion [of all kinds of leather] all other materials should also be included! — If that were so,²¹ for what purpose was the term tahash used?

R. Eleazar enquired of Rab: [What is the law where] the sandal was made of leather and its straps of [animal] hair? — The other replied: Could we not apply to it, And I shod thee with tahash!²² If so, a shoe all made of hair²³ should also be admissible! — Such is called a slipper.²⁴

Said R. Kahana to Samuel: Whence is it derived that the verb in²⁵ we-halezah²⁶ his shoe from off his foot²⁷ signifies taking off? — Because it is written, That they shall take out²⁸ the stones in which the plague is.²⁹ But I might suggest that the meaning³⁰ is that of arming;³¹ for it is written in Scripture, Arm³² ye men from among you for the war!³³ — There also,³³ [the underlying meaning is] the slipping out from the house to go to war. But, surely, it is also written in Scripture, He girds³⁴ the afflicted in his affliction!³⁵ — [The meaning is that] as a reward for his affliction He will deliver³⁶ him from the judgment of Gehenna. What, however, is the explanation of the Scriptural text,³⁷ The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and He girds them?³⁸ — [The meaning is that] as a reward for those who fear him He will deliver them from the judgment of Gehenna.

What explanation is there, however, for the Scriptural text,³⁹ And He will make strong⁴⁰ thy bones,⁴¹ of which R. Eleazar said that this was the best of the blessings,⁴² and Raba explained that the meaning⁴³ was the strengthening of the bones!⁴⁴ — Yes, it may bear the one meaning and it may also bear the other; but were the meaning here⁴⁵ intended to be that of ‘tying on’,⁴⁶ the All Merciful should have written: ‘We-halezah his shoe upon his foot’.⁴⁷ But [it might be still objected], had the All Merciful written, ‘upon his foot’ it might have been suggested: Only upon his foot, but not upon his leg;⁴⁸ hence the All Merciful wrote From off⁴⁹ his foot, [to indicate] that [halizah may be performed] even on the [levir's] leg! — If so, the All Merciful should have written: ‘Upon [what is] above his foot’. Why [then did He use the expression] From off his foot? Consequently it must be inferred that the meaning⁵⁰ is ‘to take off’.

A certain Min⁵¹ once said to R. Gamaliel:⁵² You are a people with whom its God has performed halizah,⁵³ for it is said in Scripture, with their flocks and with their herds they shall go to seek the Lord, but they shall not find him; He hath drawn off⁵⁴ [the shoe] from them.⁵⁵ The other replied: Fool, is it written: ‘He hath drawn off [the shoe] for them’? It is written, ‘He hath drawn off [the shoe] from them’; now in the case of a sister-in-law from whom the brother drew off [the shoe] could there be any validity in the act?⁵⁶

BUT IF WITH A SOCK IT IS INVALID etc. This then teaches that a sock is not regarded as a shoe; and so it was also taught: The man who removes [the monies] from the Temple treasury⁵⁷ must not enter with a bordered tunic or with a sock,⁵⁸ and there is no need to state [that he must not enter] with a shoe or with a sandal, since no one⁵⁹ may enter the Temple court with a shoe or a sandal,⁶⁰ but elsewhere the contrary was taught: One must not walk⁶¹ with a shoe, a sandal or a sock either from one house to another or even from one bed to another bed!⁶² — Abaye replied: [This refers to a sock] which is furnished with pads, [the prohibition] being due to the pleasure [its wearing affords].⁶³ Said Raba to him: Is [all footwear] forbidden on the Day of Atonement because of the pleasure it affords, even though it cannot be regarded as a shoe? Surely, Rabbah son of R. Huna used to wrap a scarf round his foot and so went out!⁶¹ — But [in fact], said Raba,⁶⁴ there is no difficulty: The one Baraitha⁶⁵ refers to a leather sock; the other⁶⁶ to a felt sock. This explanation is indeed reasonable. For were you not to say so, a contradiction [would arise between one statement dealing with] the Day of Atonement and [another statement which also deals with] the Day of Atonement. For it was taught: No man may walk about in slippers in his house,⁶¹ but he may walk about in his house in socks.⁶⁷ Consequently⁶⁸ it must be inferred that one statement refers to a leather sock and the other to a felt sock. This proves It.

It was taught in agreement with Raba.⁶⁹ [If a sister-in-law] performed halizah with a torn shoe which covered the greater part of the [levir's] foot, with a broken sandal which contained the greater part of his foot, with a sandal of cork⁷⁰ or of bast, with an artificial foot,⁷¹ with a felt sock, with a support of the feet,⁷² or with a leather sock, and also where she performed halizah with an adult

The tahash, the skin of which was used for one of the coverings of the roof of the Tabernacle made by Moses in the wilderness, formed a class of its own, and the Sages could not determine whether it belonged to the class of wild or of domestic animals (cf. Shab. 28b). The mention in the context of shoeing of tahash, the use of the skin of which only was recorded in the Scriptures, is taken to imply that the shoe spoken of in the Scriptures was invariably made of a material similar to that of the skin of tahash, viz., leather. Hence the inadmissibility in halizah of any shoe that was not wholly made of leather.

whether he was standing, sitting or reclining, and also if her halizah was performed with a blind man, her halizah is valid. [If her halizah] however, [was performed] with a torn shoe that did not cover the greater part of the [levir's] foot, with a broken sandal which does not hold the greater part of his foot, with a support of the hands,¹ or with a cloth sock, and also where her halizah was performed with a minor, her halizah is invalid.²

Whose [view is represented in the first statement mentioning] the artificial foot?³ — [Obviously that of] R. Meir, for we learned: A cripple may go out [on the Sabbath]⁴ with his artificial foot;⁵ so R. Meir, and R. Jose forbids it;⁶ [but the latter statement]: 'With a cloth-sock'⁷ can only represent the view of the Rabbis!⁸ — Abaye replied: Since the latter statement [represents the opinion of] the Rabbis, the first also [must represent the opinion of] the Rabbis, the first [dealing with an artificial foot that was] covered with leather.⁹

Said Raba to him:¹⁰ What, however, [is the law if it¹¹ was] not covered with leather? Is it then unfit!¹² If so, instead of teaching in the latter statement, 'With a cloth sock',¹³ a distinction should have been drawn in [respect of the artificial foot] itself: This¹⁴ applies only where it was covered with leather, but if it was not covered with leather it is unfit!¹² Rather, said Raba, since the first statement represents the view of R. Meir, the latter also represents the view of R. Meir, the one¹¹ affording protection¹⁵ while the other¹⁶ affords no protection.¹⁷

Amemar stated: When a levir submits to halizah he must press down his foot [to the ground]. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: Was it not taught [that the halizah was valid] 'whether he¹⁸ was standing, sitting or reclining'? — Read: And in all these cases, only if he pressed his foot [to the ground].

Amemar further stated: A man who walks on the upper side of his foot¹⁹ must not submit to halizah. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: But, surely, it was taught: 'Supports of the feet',²⁰ does not [this signify] that such [a cripple]²¹ may submit to halizah with a support! No; [the meaning is] that he may give it to another person²² who is allowed to submit to halizah [with it].

Said R. Ashi: According to Amemar's ruling neither Bar Oba nor Bar Kipof²³ could submit to halizah.

[IF THE SHOE WAS WORN] BELOW THE KNEE etc. A contradiction was pointed out: Regalim,²⁴ excludes²⁵ stump-legged cripples!²⁶ — Here²⁷ it is different since it was written in Scripture, From off his foot.²⁸ If so, [halizah should be permissible] above the knee also! — From off but not 'from off the from off'.²⁹

Said R. Papa: From this³⁰ it may be inferred that the istewira³¹ reaches down to the ground;³² for were it to be imagined that it is disconnected,³³ it [would be situated] above [the foot], while the leg [would be] above that which is above [the foot].³⁴ R. Ashi, however, said: It may even be said that it is disconnected, but any part adjacent to the foot is legally regarded as the foot itself.³⁵

ABOVE THE KNEE. R. Kahana raised an objection: And against her afterbirth that cometh out from between her feet!³⁶ — Abaye replied: When a woman kneels down to give birth she presses her heels against her thighs and thus gives birth. Come and hear: He had neither dressed his feet nor trimmed his beard!³⁷ — This is a euphemistic expression. Come and hear: And Saul went in to cover his feet!³⁸ — This is a euphemistic expression. Come and hear: Surely he is covering his feet in the cabinet of the cool chamber!³⁹ — This is a euphemistic expression. Between her feet etc.!⁴⁰ — This is a euphemistic expression.

R. Johanan Said: That profligate⁴¹ had seven sexual connections on that day;⁴² for it is said, Between her feet he sunk, he fell, he lay; at her feet he sunk, he fell; where he sunk there he fell down dead.⁴³ But, surely she⁴⁴ derived gratification from the transgression! R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: All the favours of the wicked⁴⁵

(7) That halizah with it is invalid.

(8) Who differ from R. Meir in regarding neither the artificial foot nor the cloth sock as a shoe. According to R. Meir a cloth sock, like an artificial foot, is regarded as a shoe. Does then the Baraita represent the contradictory views of R. Meir and the Rabbis!

(9) Hence its admissibility as a shoe for halizah.

(10) Abaye.

(13) That halizah with it is invalid.

(14) The admissibility of the artificial foot for halizah.

(15) For the leg. Hence it is regarded as a shoe that is admissible for halizah.

(16) A cloth sock.

(17) Hence its unfitness for halizah. It is not the material of which it is made but its unsuitability as a covering of the foot that causes its unfitness.

(18) The levir.

(19) Owing to a deformity in his foot (cf. Rashi). לִיהָתָא the 'fibula', 'splint-bone's 'his feet being turned outward so as to form an obtuse angle' (Jast.).

(32) There is legally no division between the foot and this bone.

(33) From the foot.

(34) And halizah on that part would be invalid.

(35) Hence any part between it and the knee may be legally regarded as directly above the foot.

are evil for the righteous;¹ For it is said, Take heed to thyself that thou speak not to Jacob either good or evil.² Now, as regards evil, one can perfectly well understand [the meaning]³ but why not good? From here then it may be inferred that the favour of the wicked is evil for the righteous.

There,⁴ one can well see the reason,⁵ since he⁶ might possibly mention to him the name of his idol;⁷ what evil, however, could be involved here?⁸ — That of infusing her with sensual lust. For R. Johanan stated: When the serpent copulated with Eve,⁹ he infused her¹⁰ with lust. The lust of the Israelites who stood at Mount Sinai,¹¹ came to an end, the lust of the idolaters who did not stand at Mount Sinai did not come to an end.

IF THE WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SANDAL THAT DID NOT BELONG TO HIM etc. Our Rabbis taught: [From the expression] His shoe¹² I would only know that his own¹³ shoe [is suitable];¹⁴ whence, however, is it deduced that anybody's shoe is suitable?¹⁵ Hence was the term 'shoe' repeated,¹⁶ thus indicating the suitability of anyone's shoe.¹⁷ If so, why was the expression, 'His shoe', at all used? — 'His shoe implies one which he can wear, excluding a large one in which he cannot walk, excluding a small one which does not cover the greater part of his foot, and excluding also a sandal which consists of a sole but has no heel.

Abaye once stood in the presence of R. Joseph when a sister-in-law came to perform halizah. 'Give him',¹⁸ he¹⁹ said to him,²⁰ your sandal', and [Abaye] gave him' his left sandal. 'It might be suggested', he¹⁹ said to him,²⁰ 'that the Rabbis spoke²¹ only of a fait accompli; did they, however, speak also of what is permissible ab initio?' The other²⁰ replied: If so, in respect of a sandal that is not the levir's own, it might also be suggested that the Rabbis spoke²² only of a fait accompli; did they, however, speak also of what is permissible ab initio! 'I', the first¹⁹ answered him, 'meant to tell you this: Give it to him and transfer possession to him'.²³

A WOODEN SANDAL. Who is the Tanna [whose view is expressed in this ruling]?²⁴ — Samuel replied: The view is that of R. Meir. For we learned: A cripple may go out [on the Sabbath]²⁵ with his wooden stump; so R. Meir,²⁶ while R. Jose forbids it.²⁷ Samuel's father explained:²⁸ With one that is covered with leather, [the ruling representing] the general opinion.²⁹

R. Papi stated in the name of Raba: No halizah may be performed with a sandal that is under observation;³⁰ a halizah, however, that has been performed [with it] is valid. No halizah may be performed with a sandal, the leprous condition of which has been confirmed;³¹ and even a halizah that had already been performed [with it] is invalid.³² R. Papa, however, stated in the name of Raba: No halizah may be performed either with a sandal under observation³⁰ or with one the leprous condition of which had been confirmed;³¹ a halizah, however, that had been performed [with either] is valid.

An objection was raised: A house locked up³³ imparts uncleanness from within,³⁴ [and a house] confirmed in its leprous condition [imparts uncleanness]³⁴ both within and without. The one as well as the other imparts uncleanness to anyone entering.³⁵ Now, if it is to be assumed [that an object doomed to destruction is regarded] as already crushed to dust,³⁶ surely [it may be objected] the requirement [there]³⁷ is that He goeth into the house;³⁸ but [such a house] is not in existence!³⁹ — There³⁷ it is different, because Scripture said, And he shall break down the house,⁴⁰ even at the time of breaking down it is still called 'house'.

Come and hear: A [leprous] strip of cloth⁴¹ measuring three [finger-breadths] by three,⁴² even if [in volume] it does not amount to the size of an olive,⁴³ causes, as soon as the greater part of it has entered a clean house, the defilement of that house.⁴⁴ Does not [this refer to a strip of cloth the uncleanness of which] had been confirmed!⁴⁵ No; [it refers to] one under observation.⁴⁶ But if so, read the final clause: If in volume⁴⁷ it constituted the size of many olives⁴⁸, as soon as a portion of it of the size of an olive⁴⁹ enters a clean house, it causes the uncleanness of that house.⁵⁰ Now, if you grant [that the reference is to a strip] of confirmed leprosy one can well understand why it was compared⁵¹ to a corpse;⁵² if, however, you maintain [that the reference is to a strip] under observation⁵³ why [it may be objected] was it compared to a corpse! — There⁵⁴ it is different,⁵⁵ for Scripture said, And he shall burn the garment,⁵⁶ even at the time of burning it is still called 'garment.'⁵⁷ Then let [halizah] be deduced from it!⁵⁸ — A prohibition cannot be deduced from [the laws of] uncleanness.⁵⁹

Raba stated: The law is that [a sister-in-law] may not perform halizah either with a sandal under observation,⁶⁰ or with a sandal of confirmed leprosy, or with a sandal belonging to an idol;⁶¹ if, however, she has performed halizah [with either of these], her halizah is valid.⁶² [With a sandal] that was offered to an idol⁶³

(14) For his own halizah.

(15) For the halizah of any other person.

(16) Lit., 'it was stated shoe (bis)'.

(17) Lit., 'from any place'.

(18) The levir.

(19) R. Joseph.

(20) Abaye.

(21) In ruling that halizah with a left-foot sandal is valid. V. our Mishnah.

(22) Cf. supra n. 4, mutatis mutandis.

(23) As a gift, so that the shoe might become the levir's property.

(24) Permitting halizah with a wooden sandal.

(25) When carrying from one domain into another is forbidden.

(26) Who regards the cripple's wooden stump as a proper shoe.

- (27) Shab. 25b. As in respect of the Sabbath R. Meir regards the stump as a shoe, so also in respect of halizah does he regard it as a shoe.
- (28) Our Mishnah. Cf. supra n. 7.
- (29) All agree that a wooden stump that is furnished with a leather covering is admissible for halizah.
- (30) מוסגר, lit., 'locked up', a sandal that, in accordance with Lev. XIII, 50, is shut up for a certain period so that it may be ascertained whether the plague-spot that appeared on it is of the clean or unclean type. Cf. ibid. 47ff.
- (31) מוחלט, rt. חלט, 'to tie up' (Jast.).
- (32) Such a sandal, being doomed to destruction by burning (Lev. XIII, 55), is legally regarded as non-existent.
- (33) For the purpose of observation. Cf. p. 712, n. 13 and Lev. XIV, 34ff.
- (34) By contact.
- (35) Neg. XIII, 4 though no contact took place.
- (36) And, consequently, as legally non-existent. Cf. supra note 15.
- (37) In the case of a leprous house.
- (38) Lev. XIV, 46, emphasis on house. Only then is the person unclean.
- (39) Since it is condemned to be broken down. V. supra n. 4. How, then, could uncleanness be imparted by that which does not exist?
- (40) Lev. XIV, 45.
- (41) Cf. ibid. XIII, 47.
- (42) These are the minimum measurements required for a piece of cloth to be termed garment.
- (43) Which in the case of a corpse is the minimum that may impart uncleanness.
- (44) Tosef. Neg. VII. A leprous garment, like a leper, imparts uncleanness to all objects in a house as soon as it is brought into that house, though none of the objects have come in actual contact with it.
- (45) In consequence of which it is doomed to destruction by burning. Now, if what is doomed to destruction is legally regarded as non-existent, how could such a strip impart uncleanness?
- (46) Cf. supra p. 712, n. 13.
- (47) That of a strip of cloth of the size mentioned.
- (48) If the material, for instance, was very thick.
- (49) Though its measurements were less than the greater part of three finger-breadths by three.
- (50) Neg. XIII, 4.
- (51) In the fixing of its minimum, in respect of imparting uncleanness, to be that of the size of an olive.
- (52) Which also imparts uncleanness if a small part of it of the size of an olive only remained. Confirmed leprosy may well be compared to a corpse. Cf. Num. XII, 22: Let her not . . . be as one dead. The reference is to Miriam who was at the time leprous (v. ibid. 10) and Aaron requested Moses that she may not be confirmed in her leprosy and thus become like a corpse.
- (53) V. supra p. 712, n. 13 mutatis mutandis.
- (54) The law of uncleanness in respect of the strip of leprous cloth.
- (55) From the law of halizah where an object doomed to destruction is regarded as non-existent.
- (56) Lev. XIII, 52, emphasis on burn and garment.
- (57) Hence it may impart uncleanness even where it is doomed to destruction.
- (58) And a sandal of confirmed leprosy should also be admissible for halizah.
- (59) Which form a peculiar class of their own.
- (60) Cf. supra p. 712, n. 13.
- (61) Which is put on the idol when it is moved from place to place (Rashi).
- (62) Because the sandal under observation is not doomed to destruction; the sandal of confirmed leprosy is regarded as a garment despite its doom, (as deduced supra from Lev. XIII, 52); while the sandal of the idol, being only an accessory to it, is not doomed to burning. Though no benefit may be derived therefrom it is admissible for halizah, because the fulfilment of a precept is not regarded as a 'benefit'.
- (63) As part of its worship, and which must consequently be destroyed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 104a

or [with one] that belonged to a condemned city¹ or [with one] that was made² in honour of a [dead] elder,³ no halizah may be performed; and even a halizah that has been performed with it is invalid.

Said Rabina to R. Ashi: In what respect is [the sandal] that was made in honour of a [dead] elder different [from an ordinary sandal]? Is it because it was not made for walking? That of the Beth din also⁴ was not made for walking! — The other replied: Should the attendant of the Beth din use it for walking, would the Beth din object!⁵

MISHNAH. IF [A SISTER-IN-LAW] PERFORMED THE HALIZAH AT NIGHT, HER HALIZAH IS VALID. R. ELEAZAR, HOWEVER, REGARDS IT AS INVALID. [IF SHE PERFORMED IT] WITH [THE LEVIR'S] LEFT SHOE, HER HALIZAH IS INVALID, BUT R. ELEAZAR DECLARES IT TO BE VALID.

GEMARA. May it be suggested that they⁶ differ on the following principle: The one Master⁷ holds the opinion that lawsuits are to be compared to plagues,⁸ while the other Master⁹ holds the opinion that lawsuits cannot be compared to plagues?¹⁰ — No; all agree that lawsuits cannot be compared to plagues; for should they be compared, even the close of a legal process could not have been allowed at night.¹¹ Here, however, they¹² differ on the following principle: One Master⁹ holds that halizah is like the commencement of legal proceedings¹³ and the other Master¹⁴ holds that halizah is like the close of the proceedings.¹⁵

Rabbah¹⁶ b. Hiyya of Ktesifon¹⁷ carried out a halizah with a felt sock, with no other men present, at night. Said Samuel: How great is his authority¹⁸ in acting on the view of one individual!¹⁹ What [however, could be his] objection?²⁰ If [against the use of the] felt sock, an anonymous Baraitha²¹ [permits it]!²² If [against his acting at] night, our anonymous Mishnah²³ [permits this]!²⁴ — His objection, however, is [that Rabbah acted] alone. How [he objected] could he act alone when it was only one individual who expressed approval of such a procedure!²⁵ For we learned: If [a sister-in-law] performed halizah in the presence of two or three men, and one of them. was discovered to be a relative or in any other way unfit [to act as judge], her halizah is invalid; but R. Simeon and R. Johanan ha-Sandalar declare it valid. Furthermore, it once happened that a man submitted to halizah with none present but himself and herself in a prison, and when the case came before R. Akiba he declared the halizah valid.²⁶

And²⁷ if you prefer I might say: All these [rulings] also are the views of²⁸ an individual. For it was taught: R. Ishmael son of R. Jose stated, 'I saw R. Ishmael b. Elisha carry out a halizah with a felt sock, with no other men present, and [this occurred] at night'.

WITH [THE LEVIR'S] LEFT SHOE HER HALIZAH etc. What is the Rabbis' reason? 'Ulla replied: [The meaning of] 'foot' [here]²⁹ is deduced from that of foot³⁰ in the context of the leper. As there³¹ it is the right³² so here³³ also it must be the right. Does not R. Eleazar, then, deduce [the meaning of] foot [here]³³ from that of foot³⁴ in the context of the leper? Surely, it was taught: R. Eleazar stated, Whence is it deduced that the boring [of the ear of a Hebrew slave]³⁵ must be performed on his right ear? — For the term ear was used here³⁶ and the term 'ear' was also used elsewhere;³⁷ as there³⁷ it is the right ear³⁸ so here also it is the right ear!³⁹ — R. Isaac b. Joseph replied in the name of R. Johanan: The statement is to be reversed.⁴⁰

Raba said: There is, in fact, no need to reverse [the statement,³⁶ the reply to the objection⁴¹ being that] the terms 'ear'⁴² [are both] free [for the deduction];⁴³ the terms of 'foot,'⁴⁴ however, are not free for deduction.⁴⁵ But even if [one of the texts] is not free for deduction, what objection can be raised [against the deduction]?⁴⁶ — It may be objected: The case of the leper is different,⁴⁷ since he is also required [to bring] cedar-wood and hyssop and scarlet.⁴⁸ MISHNAH. [IF A SISTER-IN-LAW] DREW OFF [THE LEVIR'S SHOE] AND SPAT,⁴⁹ BUT DID NOT RECITE [THE FORMULAE],⁵⁰ HER HALIZAH IS VALID.⁵¹ IF SHE RECITED [THE FORMULAE] AND

SPAT, BUT DID NOT DRAW OFF THE SHOE, HER HALIZAH IS INVALID.⁵² IF SHE DREW OFF THE SHOE AND RECITED [THE FORMULAE] BUT DID NOT SPIT, HER HALIZAH, R. ELIEZER⁵³ STATED, IS INVALID; AND R. AKIBA STATED: HER HALIZAH IS VALID.

 - (41) As to why R. Eleazar draws an analogy between the terms of ear and not between those of foot.
 - (42) Lit., 'ear, ear'.
 - (43) Both in the case of leper (Lev. XIV, 14 and 17) and in that of the slave (Ex. XXI, 6 and Deut. XV, 17) one of the terms is superfluous and, therefore, free for the deduction that the boring must be performed on the right ear.

(44) Lit., 'foot, foot'.

(45) Though in the context of the leper the term foot occurs twice (Lev. XIV. 14 and 17), in that of halizah it appears only once (Deut. XXV, 9). As in the latter text it is required for the context itself no deduction can be made from such an analogy unless it is one that is free from all possible objection.

(46) Cf. supra n. 14 final clause. Since no refutation can be advanced, the deduction, though based on texts of which one only is free for the purpose, should hold!

(47) From that of halizah.

(48) On the day of his cleansing. (Cf. Lev. XIV, 4). The laws of the leper, being in this respect more rigid than those of halizah, may also be more rigid in respect of the requirement of the right shoe. Hence R. Eleazar's opinion that no deduction is to be made from the analogous words, and that halizah with the left shoe is, therefore, valid.

(49) Cf. Deut. XXV, 9.

(50) Prior to the halizah she declares (a) 'My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel; he will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me' (ibid. 7). Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 104b

SAID R. ELIEZER TO HIM: [SCRIPTURE STATED], SO SHALL BE DONE,¹ ANYTHING WHICH IS A DEED² IS A SINE QUA NON.³ R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAID TO HIM, FROM THIS VERY TEXT⁴ PROOF [MAY BE ADDUCED FOR MY VIEW]: SO SHALL BE DONE UNTO THE MAN,⁵ ONLY THAT WHICH IS TO BE DONE UNTO THE MAN.⁶

IF A DEAF⁷ LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, OR IF A DEAF⁷ SISTER-IN-LAW PERFORMED HALIZAH, OR IF A HALIZAH WAS PERFORMED ON A MINOR, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID.

[A SISTER-IN-LAW] WHO PERFORMED HALIZAH WHILE SHE WAS A MINOR MUST AGAIN PERFORM HALIZAH WHEN SHE BECOMES OF AGE; AND IF SHE DOES NOT AGAIN PERFORM IT, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID.

IF [A SISTER-IN-LAW] PERFORMED HALIZAH IN THE PRESENCE OF TWO OR THREE MEN AND ONE OF THEM WAS DISCOVERED TO BE A RELATIVE OR ONE IN ANY OTHER WAY UNFIT [TO ACT AS JUDGE], HER HALIZAH IS INVALID; BUT R. SIMEON AND R. JOHANAN HA-SANDELAR DECLARE IT VALID. FURTHERMORE,⁸ IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH PRIVATELY BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF IN A PRISON, AND WHEN THE CASE CAME BEFORE R. AKIBA HE DECLARED THE HALIZAH VALID.

GEMARA. Raba said: Now that you have stated⁹ that the recital [of the formulae]¹⁰ is not a sine qua non, the halizah of a dumb man and a dumb woman is valid.

We learned: IF A DEAF LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, OR IF A DEAF SISTER-IN-LAW PERFORMED HALIZAH, OR IF A HALIZAH WAS PERFORMED ON A MINOR, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID. Now, what is the reason?¹¹ is it not because these are unable to recite [the formulae]?¹² — No; because they are not in complete possession of their mental faculties.¹³ If so, [the same applies] also to a dumb man and to a dumb woman!¹⁴ — Raba replied: A dumb man and a dumb woman are in full possession of their mental faculties, and it is only their mouth that troubles¹⁵ them. But, surely, at the school of R. Jannai it was explained [that the reason why a deaf-mute is unfit for halizah is] because [the Scriptural instruction], He shall say¹⁶ or She shall say¹⁷ is

inapplicable to such a case!¹⁸ — [Say] rather, if Raba's statement was ever made it was made in connection with the final clause: IF A DEAF LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, OR IF A DEAF SISTER-IN-LAW PERFORMED HALIZAH, OR IF A HALIZAH WAS PERFORMED ON A MINOR, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID. [It is in connection with this that] Raba said: Now that you have stated that the recital of [the formulae]¹⁹ is a sine qua non, the halizah of a dumb man or a dumb woman is invalid. And our Mishnah²⁰ [is based on the same principle] as [that propounded by] R. Zera; for R. Zera stated: Wherever proper mingling²¹ is possible actual mingling is not essential,²² but where proper mingling is not possible²³ the actual mingling is a sine qua non.²⁴

[The following ruling] was sent to Samuel's father: A sister-inlaw who spat²⁵ must perform the halizah.²⁶ This implies that she is rendered unfit for the brothers;²⁷ but whose view is this?²⁸ If it be suggested [that it is that of] R. Akiba, it may be objected:²⁹ If R. Akiba said that it³⁰ was not indispensable³¹ even where the actual commandment [of halizah is being performed, in which case] it could be argued that it could be given the same force as [the burning] of the altar portions of the sacrifices. which is not an essential [rite] when [the portions] are not available,³² and yet is a sine qua non when they are available,³³ [would he regard it³⁰ as a reason for the woman] to become thereby unfit for the brothers! [Should it be suggested], however, [that the view³⁴ is that] of R. Eliezer,³⁵ surely [it may be retorted] are two acts which jointly effect permissibility,³⁶ and any two acts that jointly effect permissibility are ineffective one without the other!³⁷ — Rather, the view³⁸ is in agreement with that of Rabbi. For it was taught: The Pentecostal lambs³⁹ cause the consecration of the bread⁴⁰ only by their slaughter.⁴¹ In what manner?⁴² If they were slaughtered for the purpose of the festival sacrifices⁴³ and their blood also was sprinkled with such intention,⁴³ the bread becomes consecrated. If they were not slaughtered for the purpose of the festival sacrifices,⁴⁴ though their blood was sprinkled for the proper purpose,⁴³ the bread does not become consecrated. If they were slaughtered for the purpose of the festival sacrifices⁴³ and their blood was sprinkled for another purpose,⁴⁵ [the bread] is partly consecrated and partly unconsecrated;⁴⁶ so Rabbi. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, however, stated: [The bread] is never consecrated unless the slaughtering [of the lambs] and the sprinkling of their blood were both intended for the proper purpose of the festival.⁴⁷

Did R. Akiba, however, hold that the act of spitting does not render the woman unfit?⁴⁸ Surely it was taught: If she drew off [the levir's shoe] but did not

(5) Deut. ibid., emphasis on man.

(6) As, e.g., drawing off the shoe which is an act on the body of the levir. Spitting, therefore, is excluded.

(7) The 'deaf' spoken of in the Talmud literature is always to be understood as a deaf-mute. Cf. Ter. I, 2.

(8) I.e., not only in a case where there were at least two judges but even where no one beside the levir and the sister-in-law 'was present.

(12) Cf. supra p. 718, n. 12. How then could it be said that recital of the formulae is not an indispensable condition?

(13) The minor because of his immature age, and the deaf and dumb because of his physical defects which adversely affect his mental powers.

(14) Why then is their halizah valid?

(15) Lit., 'pains

(16) Cf. Deut. XXV, 8.

(17) Cf. ibid. 7 and 9.

(18) How then can halizah of a dumb person be regarded as valid!

- (23) Where, e.g., the proportions of the mixture were less than a log for sixty 'esronim or where more than sixty 'esronim were placed in one pan.
- (24) Men. 18b, 103b. With halizah also, though in the case of persons who are able to recite the prescribed formulae, the omission does not invalidate the halizah, in the case of dumb persons for whom it is physically impossible ever to recite the formulae, the omission of it does render the halizah invalid.
- (25) In the presence of the Beth din.

- (31) Which shews what little significance R. Akiba attaches to this part of the ceremony.
- (32) If, for instance, they were lost or became unfit for the altar owing to uncleanness. Cf. Pes. 59b.
- (33) So in the case of halizah, R. Akiba might have been expected to regard the spitting, which is an act that can be performed, as an essential.
- (34) V. supra note 9.
- (35) Cur. ed., 'Eleazar' (cf. supra p 718, n. 5); who stated in our Mishnah that the act of spitting was indispensable. (17) Drawing off the shoe and spitting.

- (40) The two loaves that were also brought to the Temple on Pentecost. V. Lev. XXIII, 17.
- (41) The waving of the loaves and the lambs together, which precedes the slaughter of the latter, does not effect the proper consecration of the bread.
- (42) Is consecration effected even after slaughtering of the lambs.
- (43) Lit., 'for their name'.
- (44) Lit., not for their name'; i.e., if they were intended to be merely sacrifices, not specifically those prescribed for the Pentecost festival.
- (45) Cf. supra n. 9.
- (46) I.e., it is subject to some, but not to all, of the restrictions of properly consecrated bread.
- (47) Cf. supra note 8. Pes. 13b, Men. 47a. Thus it has been shewn that according to Rabbi, where two acts such as proper slaughtering and proper sprinkling are required, consecration is partially effected even though the former act alone was properly performed. Similarly, in respect of halizah, one of the prescribed acts is sufficient to render the woman unfit for the levirate marriage.
- (48) For the levirate marriage.

spit nor recite,¹ her halizah is valid. If she spat but did not draw off the shoe nor recite,² her halizah is invalid³ if she recited² but did not spit nor draw off the shoe, there is here no reason whatsoever for apprehension.⁴ Now, whose [view is here represented]? If it be suggested [it is that of] R. Eliezer, [how could it be stated that] 'if she drew off [the levir's shoe] but did not spit nor recite, her halizah is valid' when, surely, R. Eliezer said: SO SHALL BE DONE, ANYTHING WHICH IS A DEED IS A SINE QUA NON? It is consequently obvious [that it is the view of] R. Akiba; and yet it was stated that 'if she spat but did not draw off the shoe nor recite, her halizah is invalid'. To whom, [however, does the invalidity cause her to be forbidden]?⁵ If it be suggested, 'To strangers';⁶ is not this [it may be retorted] self-evident? Is it a halizah [like this that would enable the sister-in-law] to become free to marry a stranger!⁷ It must therefore, be admitted⁸ [that the validity refers to her state of prohibition] to the brothers.⁹ Thus you have our contention proved.

According to R. Akiba, wherein lies the legal difference between the act of spitting and that of reciting?¹⁰ — Recital¹¹ that must take place both at the commencement¹² [of the halizah ceremony] and at its conclusion¹³ cannot be mistaken;¹⁴ spitting, however, which does not take place at the beginning but only at the end, might be mistaken [for a proper halizah],¹⁵ and thus¹⁶ a proper halizah also would be permitted to marry the brothers.¹⁷

Others say that the following ruling was sent to him:¹⁸ A sister-in-law who spat¹⁹ may afterwards perform halizah and need not spit a second time.²⁰ So, in fact, it once happened that a sister-in-law²¹ who came before R. Ammi, while R. Abba b. Memel was sitting in his presence, spat prior to her drawing off the shoe. 'Arrange the halizah for her', said R. Ammi to him,²² 'and dismiss her case'.²³ 'But surely'. said R. Abba to him, 'spitting is a requirement!' — 'She has spat indeed!' 'But let her spit [again]; what could be the objection?' — 'The issue might [morally and religiously] be disastrous; for should you rule that she is to spit again, people might assume that her first spitting was ineffective²⁴ and thus²⁵ a proper haluzah also would be permitted to marry the brothers!'²⁶ 'But is it not necessary. [that the various parts of the halizah] should follow in the prescribed order?' — 'The order of the performances is not essential'. He²² thought [at the time] that the other²⁷ was merely shaking him off. When, however, he went out he carefully considered the point and discovered that it was taught: Whether drawing off the shoe preceded the spitting or whether spitting preceded the drawing off, the action performed is valid.²⁸

Levi once went out [to visit] the country towns,²⁹ when he was asked: 'May a woman whose hand was amputated perform halizah?³⁰ What is the legal position where a sister-in-law spat blood? [It is stated in Scripture]: Howbeit I will declare unto thee that which is inscribed in the Writing of Truth;³¹ does this³² then imply that there exists a [divine] Writing that is not of truth?' He was unable to answer.³³ When he came and asked these questions at the academy. they answered him: Is it written, 'And she shall draw off with her hand'?³⁴ Is it written, 'And spit spittle'?³⁴ [As to the question] 'Howbeit I will declare unto thee that which is inscribed in the Writing of Truth,³¹ does this then imply that there exists a [divine] Writing that is not of truth'? There is really no difficulty. For the former³⁵ refers to a [divine] decree that was accompanied by an oath while the latter³⁶ refers to one that was not accompanied by an oath. [This is] in accordance with a statement of R. Samuel b. Ammi. For R. Samuel b. Ammi stated in the name of R. Jonathan: Whence is it deduced that a decree which is accompanied by an oath is never annulled?³⁷ — From the Scriptural text, Therefore I have sworn unto the House of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be expiated with sacrifice nor offering for ever.³⁸ Rabbah said: It will not be expiated 'with sacrifice nor offering', but it will be expiated with the words of the Torah.

Abaye said: It will not be expiated 'with sacrifice nor offering' but it will be expiated with the practice of lovingkindness.

Rabbah and Abaye were both descendants of the house of Eli. Rabbah who engaged in the study of the Torah lived forty years. Abaye, however, who engaged in the study of the Torah and the practice of lovingkindness, lived sixty years.

Our Rabbis taught: There was a certain family in Jerusalem whose members used to die when they were about the age of eighteen. When they came and acquainted R. Johanan b. Zakkai [with the fact,] he said to them: 'perchance you are descendants of the family of Eli concerning whom it is written in Scripture. And all the increase of thy house shall die young men;³⁹ go and engage in the study of the Torah, and you will live'. They went and engaged in the study of the Torah and lived [longer lives]. They were consequently called 'The family of Johanan', after him.

R. Samuel b. Unia stated in the name of Rab: Whence is it deduced that a [divine] dispensation against a congregation is not sealed? — [You say] 'Is not sealed'! Surely it is written, For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before Me!⁴⁰ — But [this is the question]: Whence is it deduced that even if it has been sealed it is torn up? — From the Scriptural text, What . . . as the Lord our God is whensoever we call upon him.⁴¹ But, surely, it is written, Seek ye the Lord while He may be found!⁴² — This is no contradiction. The latter applies to an individual, the former to a congregation. And⁴³ when may an individual [find him]? R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: In⁴⁴ the ten days between the New Year and the Day of Atonement.⁴⁵

[The following ruling] was sent to Samuel's father: A sister-in-law who spat blood shall perform halizah,⁴⁶ because it is impossible that blood should not contain some diluted particles of spittle.

An objection was raised: It might have been assumed that blood that issues from his⁴⁷ mouth or membrum virile is unclean,⁴⁸ hence it was explicitly stated, His issue is unclean,⁴⁹ but the blood which issues from his mouth or from his membrum virile is not unclean, but clean!⁵⁰ — This is no contradiction: The former⁵¹ is a case⁵² where she sucks in;⁵³ the latter,⁵⁴ where [the blood] flows gently.

IF A DEAF LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH etc.

(1) The prescribed formulae. V. supra p. 718. n. 2.

(2) V. p. 721, n. 14.

(3) But the woman is rendered unfit for the levirate marriage. V. infra.

(4) I.e., even levirate marriage is permitted.

(5) The expression פסולה, here rendered 'invalid', bears in the original a double meaning: (a) the halizah itself is invalid and (b) the woman becomes invalid, i.e., unfit to contract a marriage. V. infra note 8.

(6) Lit., 'to the world', i.e., as the halizah is invalid the woman still remains forbidden to all men except the levirs.

(7) Obviously not. Mere spitting could not possibly be regarded as a proper halizah.

(8) Lit., 'but not'.

(9) The second meaning of פסולה (v. supra note 4. (b) being that the woman is forbidden to contract the levirate marriage with any of the brothers. Cf. Git. 24b.

(10) Since both acts are not indispensable, why does the former act according to R. Akiba cause the sister-in-law to be forbidden to the brothers (as has just been proved), while the latter does not (R. Akiba having stated supra that there was 'no reason whatsoever for apprehension')?

(11) Of the prescribed formulae.

(12) V. supra p. 718, n. 2 (a).

(13) V. loc. cit. n. 2 (b).

(14) For a proper halizah. Where the sister-in-law is allowed to marry a levir it is obvious to all who know of the recital that it was only the first formula that was recited and that no halizah had followed it.

(15) Anyone witnessing the spitting would form the opinion that the other parts of the halizah ceremonial had preceded it.

(16) Were she subsequently permitted to marry a levir.

(17) Hence R. Akiba's prohibition. Cf. supra p. 722. n. 9.

(18) To Samuel's father. Cf. supra 104b.

(19) Before Beth din, though her act did not form a part of the formal halizah ceremony.

(20) At the proper time when the formal ceremony is carried out.

(21) Cf. Bah. a.l. wanting in cur. edd.

(22) R. Abba.

- (23) I.e., there is no need for her to spit again.
- (24) And the woman would consequently be allowed to marry a levir even after she had spat:
- (25) By allowing her to contract levirate marriage.

- (28) Cf. infra 106b, Sanh. 49b.
- (29) In the course of a lecture tour. According to the Palestinian Talmud and the Midrash Rabbah, Levi was sent by R. Judah the Prince to take up an appointment as teacher and judge in a provincial town. In his excitement and pride he grew so bewildered that he was unable to answer the following three questions.
- (30) With her teeth.
- (31) Dan. X, 21, taken to refer to divine dispensation.
- (32) The adjectival phrase 'of truth'.
- (33) Lit., 'it was not in his hand'.
- (34) Certainly not.
- (35) 'Writing of truth', i.e., 'permanent', 'unalterable'.
- (36) The 'writing that is not of truth', i.e., which may be altered or recalled.
- (37) Lit 'torn up'.

- (39) I Sam. II, 33.
- (40) Jer. II, 22, emphasis on 'marked' 'sealed'. The Hebrew equivalent of the former is נכתם which is similar in sound to that of the letters *נחתם.
- (41) Deut. IV, 7.
- (42) Isa. LV, 6, emphasis on while he may be found, implying that there are times when he may not be found!
- (43) Cf. Bah.
- (44) Lit., 'these are'.
- (45) Known as the 'ten days of penitence', עשרת ימי תשובה ע.
- (46) As in the case of ordinary spitting. she may not subsequently contract levirate marriage.
- (47) A man who hath an issue, cf. Lev. XV, 2.
- (48) As his spittle or issue respectively is unclean.
- (49) Ibid., emphasis on issue.
- (50) Nid. 56a. Apparently because the blood contains no particle of spittle (cf. supra n. 10), which is contradictory to the previous statement that all blood contains some particles of spittle.
- (51) The ruling sent to Samuel's father.
- (52) Lit., 'here'.
- (53) When it is inevitable that some spittle should be mingled with the blood.
- (54) Lit., 'here'.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 105b

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab:¹ This² is the view of R. Meir;³ but the Sages maintain that the halizah of a minor has no effect at all.⁴

[A SISTER-IN-LAW] WHO PERFORMED HALIZAH WHILE SHE WAS A MINOR etc. Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: This⁵ is the view of R. Meir who stated, 'In the Pentateuchal section [of halizah] the expression man⁶ is used,⁷ and the woman is to be compared to the man'.⁸ The Sages, however, maintain that in the Pentateuchal section 'man' was written;⁷ [and as to] a woman, whether she is of age or a minor [her halizah is valid].

Who [is the Tanna here described as the] Sages? — It is R. Jose. For R. Hiyya and R. Simeon b. Rabbi once sat together, when one of them began as follows:⁹ A man who offers up his prayers must direct his eyes towards [the Temple]¹⁰ below,¹¹ for it is said, And Mine eyes and Mine heart shall be there perpetually.¹² And the other said: The eyes of him who offers up prayers shall be directed¹³ towards [the heavens] above, for it is said Let us lift up our heart with our hand.¹⁴ In the meanwhile they were joined by R. Ishmael son of R. Jose. 'On what subject are you engaged?' he asked them. 'On the subject of prayer', they replied. 'My father', he said to them, 'ruled thus: A man who offers up his prayers must direct his eyes to the [Sanctuary] below and his heart towards [the heavens] above so that these two Scriptural texts may be complied with.' While this was going on, Rabbi entered the academy.¹⁵ They, being nimble, got into their places quickly. R. Ishmael son of R. Jose, however, owing to his corpulence¹⁶ could only move to his place with slow steps. 'Who is this man, cried Abdan¹⁷ out to him, 'who strides over the heads¹⁸ of the holy people!' The other replied. 'I am Ishmael son of R. Jose who have come to learn Torah from Rabbi'.¹⁹ 'Are you, forsooth, fit', the first said to him, 'to learn Torah from Rabbi?' — 'Was Moses fit', the other retorted, 'to learn Torah from the lips of the Omnipotent!' 'Are you Moses indeed!' the first exclaimed. — 'Is then your Master a god!' the other retorted. R. Jose remarked: Rabbi got what he merited when the one²⁰ said to the other²¹ 'Your Master' and not 'my Master'.²² While this was proceeding a sister-in-law came before Rabbi.²³ 'Go out', said Rabbi to Abdan, 'and have her examined'.²⁴ After the latter went out, R. Ishmael said to him:²⁵ Thus said my father, 'In the Pentateuchal section man²⁶ is written;²⁷ [but as to] a woman, whether she is of age or a minor [her halizah is valid]'. 'Come back', he¹⁵, cried after him,²¹ 'you need not [arrange for any examination]; the grand old man²⁸ has already given his decision [on the subject]'.

Abdan now came back picking his steps,²⁹ when R. Ishmael son of R. Jose exclaimed, 'He of whom the holy people is in need may well stride over the heads of the holy people; but how dare he of whom the holy people has no need stride over the heads of the holy people!' 'Remain in your place', said Rabbi to Abdan.

It was taught: At that instant Abdan became leprous, his two sons were drowned and his two daughters-in-law made declarations of refusal.³⁰ 'Blessed be the All Merciful', said R. Nahman b. Isaac, 'who has put Abdan to shame in this world'.³¹

'We may learn from the words of this eminent scholar',³² said R. Ammi, 'that [a sister-in-law who is] a minor may perform halizah while she is still in her childhood'.³³ Raba said: [She must wait with halizah] until she has reached the age of [valid] vows.³⁴ The law however, is [that she must not perform halizah] until she has produced two [pubic] hairs.

IF [A SISTER-IN-LAW] PERFORMED HALIZAH IN THE PRESENCE OF TWO etc. R. Joseph b. Manyumi stated in the name of R. Nahman: The halachah is not in agreement with this pair.³⁵ But, surely. R. Nahman had once stated this; for R. Joseph b. Manyumi stated in the name of R. Nahman: The halachah is that³⁶ halizah [must be performed] in the presence of three [judges].³⁷ — [Both are] required: For if the first only had been stated, it might have been assumed [that three judges are required] ab initio only. but that ex post facto even two [judges are enough] hence we were taught that 'the halachah is not in agreement with this pair'.³⁸ And if we had been taught that 'the halachah is not in agreement with this pair' but in accordance with the ruling of the first Tanna, it might have been assumed [that this applies only] ex post facto,³⁹ but that ab initio five [judges] are required,⁴⁰ [hence the former statement was also] required.⁴¹

IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH⁴² etc. PRIVATELY BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF! How, then, can we know it? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: When witnesses observed it from without.

The question was raised:⁴³ Did it happen that the HALIZAH was performed privately BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF outside, AND THE CASE WAS BROUGHT BEFORE R. AKIBA IN PRISON,⁴⁴ or perhaps it happened that the HALIZAH was performed BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF in prison? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: The incident occurred in prison and the case also came up for decision in prison.⁴⁵ [

(1) Others, 'Samuel'. Cf. Tosaf. supra 96a, s.v. רבי.

(2) That the halizah of a minor is invalid and that it consequently prohibits the woman from contracting levirate marriage with any of the older brothers.

(3) Who stated (supra 96a) that the halizah of a minor has the same force as that of a divorce by a levir who is of age.

(4) His act is legally null and void. She is not thereby forbidden even to himself.

(5) That a sister-in-law who was a minor may not perform halizah.

(6) V. Deut. XXV, 7.

(7) Which excludes the male minor.

(8) Since both man and sister-in-law (woman) were mentioned in the same verse (ibid.). As the male minor is excluded so is the female minor excluded.

(9) Lit., 'and said'.

(10) In Jerusalem. Cf. Ber. 28b, 30a.

(11) I.e., on this earth, opp. to 'heaven' above.

(12) I Kings IX, 3. Hence it must always form the centre of attraction for all engaged in prayer.

(13) Cf. Bah. Wanting in cur. edd.

(14) Lam. III, 41, emphasis on lift up.

(15) When everyone present was expected to take his usual seat.

(16) Cf. B.M. 84a.

(17) One of Rabbi's disciples. 'Abdan' is a contraction of 'Abba Judan' by which name he is known in the Palestinian Talmud. (Cf. Tosaf. s.v. אבא a.l.).

(18) During the discourses of the Master the disciples were seated on the ground in Eastern fashion; and R. Ishmael, in making his way towards his seat in the front rows, was compelled to stride over the heads of the assembly.

(19) Lit., 'my master', a designation applied to R. Judah the prince who was in his time the Master par excellence.

(20) R. Ishmael.

(21) Abdan.

(22) A slight upon Rabbi's recognized high position but one he well deserved for allowing Abdan publicly to annoy R. Ishmael.

(23) Desiring him to arrange for her a halizah ceremony.

(24) To ascertain whether she has developed the marks of puberty and is consequently eligible to perform halizah.

(25) Rabbi.

(26) Which excludes the male minor.

(27) Deut. XXV, 7.

(28) R. Jose. Thus it is proved that it is R. Jose's view that was presented supra as that of 'the Sages'.

(29) Cf. supra note 4.

(30) V. Glos. s.v. Mi'un. The Talmudic text may imply that the two daughters-in-law, as minors, refused to contract levirate marriage with the brothers of their dead husband, so that the names of the deceased were 'blotted out of Israel' (cf. Golds.). Accordingly the rendering of the text should be 'two (of) his (several) sons were drowned'. The text, however, might also be rendered: 'His two sons were drowned (after) his two daughters-in-law had made declarations of refusal (against them)'.

(31) As an atonement for his ill-treatment of R. Ishmael; thus enabling him to enter the hereafter free from all sin.

(32) R. Jose ברבי רבי lit., 'of the school of my master', or 'of Rabbi', was a title of scholastic distinction given to many eminent scholars who were Rabbi's disciples or contemporaries, and similarly also to predecessors as well as to immediate successors among the early Amoraim. V. Nazir, Sonc., ed., p. 64, n. 1.

(33) פגומות (cf. פגמ פוט, 'to babble') 'talkers', children of six or seven years of age, who may legally purchase or sell movable property. A child at this age, being regarded as sufficiently developed to understand certain commercial transactions, is also regarded as sufficiently developed to perform a halizah.

(34) One year prior to puberty, or the age of eleven years and one day, when her vows and consecrations are valid if on examination she is found to understand their significance and purpose. (Cf. Nid. 45b).

(35) R. Simeon and R. Johanan ha-Sandalar, the halachah being in agreement with the first Tanna who maintains that three judges are required for a halizah.

(36) V. Bah. Cur. edd. omit.

(37) Cf. supra 101b.

(38) Even ex post facto, which is the case spoken of in our Mishnah, halizah is invalid if no three eligible judges were present.

(39) Of which our Mishnah speaks (cf. supra n. 3).

(40) In agreement with R. Judah (cf. supra 101a).

(41) To indicate that even in the dispute between the first Tanna and R. Judah the halachah is in agreement with the former.

(42) Cf. our Mishnah. Cur. edd. read here 'they performed halizah'.

(43) The ambiguity in our Mishnah is due to a reading which omits the Waw in וַאֲבִי so that it is possible to join 'in prison' either to the previous, or to the following clause (cf. Tosaf. s.v. וַאֲבִי).

(44) During the revolt of Bar Kokeba (132-135 C.E.) R. Akiba was for a time held by the Romans as a prisoner and was subsequently martyred.

(45) [Tosaf.: Rab Judah had it on tradition that it was so, even as it is related in T.J.: R. Johanan ha-Sandalar passed outside the prison wherein R. Akiba was incarcerated, calling out, 'Who requires needles?', 'Who requires forks?' . . . 'How is it where the halizah was performed between himself and herself?' R. Akiba thereupon looked out through the window and replied: 'Hast thou of needles (kushin)? Hast thou kasher?', thus intimating that it is legal. V. Tosef. quoted in יְשׁוּעָה for a slightly different version].

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 106a

Our Rabbis taught: A halizah under a false assumption¹ is valid.² What is meant by 'a halizah under a false assumption'? Resh Lakish explained: Where a levir is told, 'Submit to halizah and you will thereby wed her'. Said R. Johanan to him:³ I am in the habit of repeating a Baraita, 'Whether he⁴ had the intention⁵ [of performing the commandment of halizah] and she had no such intention, or whether she had such intention and he had not, her halizah is invalid, it being necessary⁶ that both shall at the same time have such intention',⁷ and you say that her halizah is valid!⁸ But [in fact this is the meaning]:⁹ When a levir is told, 'Submit to her halizah on the condition that she gives you two hundred zuz'.¹⁰

So it was also taught [elsewhere]: A halizah under a false assumption is valid; and what is meant by a halizah under a false assumption? One in which the levir is told 'Submit to her halizah on condition that she gives you two hundred zuz'. Such an incident, in fact, occurred with a woman who fell to the lot of an unworthy levir who was told, 'Submit to her halizah on condition that she gives you two hundred zuz'. When this case came before R. Hiyya he ruled that the halizah was valid.

A woman¹¹ once came before R. Hiyya b. Abba.¹² 'Stand up,¹³ my daughter', the Rabbi said to her. 'Her sitting is her standing',¹⁴ replied her mother.¹⁵ 'Do you know this man?'¹⁶ the Rabbi asked. 'Yes', she answered him, 'it is her money that he saw and he would like to it'.¹⁷ 'Do you not like him then?' he asked the woman.¹⁸ 'No', she replied. 'Submit to her halizah', [the Rabbi] said to [the levir], 'and you will thereby wed her'. After the latter had submitted to halizah at her hands he said to him, 'Now she is ineligible to marry you; submit again to a proper halizah that she may be permitted to marry a stranger'.

A daughter of R. Papa's father-in-law fell to the lot of a levir who was unworthy of her.¹⁹ When [the levir] came before Abaye the latter said to him, 'Submit to her halizah and you will thereby wed her'. Said R. Papa to him, 'Does not the Master accept the [relevant] ruling of R. Johanan?'²⁰ — 'What then could I tell him?' [the other asked]. 'Tell him', the first replied, "'submit to her halizah on condition that she gives you two hundred zuz.'" After [the levir] had submitted to halizah at her hand [Abaye] said to her,¹⁸ 'Go and give him [the stipulated sum]'.²¹ 'She', R. Papa replied, 'was merely fooling him';²² was it not, in fact taught: If a man escaping from prison beheld a ferry boat and said [to the ferryman], 'Take a denar and lead me across',²³ [the latter] can only claim his ordinary fare.²⁴ From this then it is evident that the one can say to the other, 'I was merely fooling you'; so here also²⁵ [the woman may say], 'I was merely fooling you'. 'Where is your father?'²⁶ [Abaye] asked him. — 'In town', the other replied. 'Where is your mother?'²⁶ — 'In town', the other again replied. He set his eyes upon them and they died.

Our Rabbis taught:²⁷ A halizah under a false assumption is valid; a letter of divorce [given] under a false assumption is invalid.²⁸ A halizah under coercion is invalid; a letter of divorce [given] under compulsion is valid. How is this²⁹ to be understood? If it is a case where the man [ultimately]³⁰ says, 'I am willing', the halizah also [should be valid]; and if he does not say, 'I am willing', a letter of divorce also should not [be valid]! — It is this that was meant: A halizah under a false assumption is always valid, and a letter of divorce [given] on a false assumption is always invalid; but a halizah under coercion and a letter of divorce [given] under coercion are sometimes valid and sometimes invalid, the former when the man [ultimately]³⁰ declared, 'I am willing', and the latter, when he did not declare, 'I am willing'. For it was taught: He shall offer it³¹ teaches that the man is coerced.³² It might [be assumed that the sacrifice may be offered up] against his will, it was, therefore, expressly stated, In accordance with his will.³³ How then [are the two texts to be reconciled]? He is subjected to pressure until he says, 'I am willing'. And so you find in the case of letters of divorce for women: The man³⁴ is subjected to pressure until he says, 'I am willing'.³⁵

Raba reported in the name of R. Sehora in the name of R. Huna: Halizah may be arranged even though [the parties]³⁶ are unknown³⁷ A declaration of refusal³⁸ may be arranged even though the parties³⁹ are unknown.³⁷ For this reason⁴⁰ no certificate of halizah may be written⁴¹ unless the parties are known,⁴² and no certificate of mi'un⁴³ may be written⁴¹ unless the parties are known,⁴² for fear of an erring Beth din.⁴⁴

Raba in his own name, however, stated: halizah must not be arranged unless the parties⁴⁵ are known,⁴⁶ nor may a declaration of refusal⁴³ be heard unless the parties⁴⁷ are known.⁴⁶ For this reason⁴⁸ it is permissible⁴⁹ to write a certificate of halizah⁵⁰ even though the parties are not known,⁵¹ and it is also permissible⁴⁹ to write a certificate of mi'un⁵² even though the parties are not known,⁵¹ and we are not afraid of an erring Beth din.⁵³

MISHNAH. [THIS IS THE PROCEDURE IN THE PERFORMANCE OF] THE COMMANDMENT OF HALIZAH: HE¹ AND HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE COME UNTO THE BETH DIN, AND [THE LATTER] OFFER HIM SUCH ADVICE AS IS SUITABLE TO HIS CONDITION,² FOR IT IS SAID IN THE SCRIPTURES, THEN THE ELDERS OF HIS CITY SHALL CALL HIM AND SPEAK UNTO HIM.³ SHE THEN ANNOUNCES: MY HUSBAND'S BROTHER REFUSETH TO RAISE UP UNTO HIS BROTHER A NAME IN ISRAEL; HE WILL NOT PERFORM THE DUTY OF A HUSBAND'S BROTHER UNTO ME.⁴ THEN HE MAKES THE DECLARATION: I LIKE NOT TO TAKE HER.⁵ [THESE FORMULAE] WERE ALWAYS SPOKEN IN THE HOLY TONGUE.⁶ THEN SHALL HIS BROTHER'S WIFE DRAW NIGH UNTO HIM IN THE PRESENCE OF THE THE ELDERS AND DRAW⁷ HIS SHOE FROM OFF HIS FOOT, AND SPIT BEFORE⁸ HIS FACE,⁹ SUCH SPITTLE AS THE JUDGES CAN SEE, AND SHE RAISES HER VOICE AND SAYS:¹⁰ SO SHALL IT BE DONE UNTO THE MAN THAT DOTHT NOT BUILD UP HIS BROTHER'S HOUSE,¹¹ THUS FAR¹² USED THEY TO RECITE.¹³ WHEN, HOWEVER, R. HYRKANUS, UNDER THE TEREBINTH AT KEFAR ETAM,¹⁴ ONCE DICTATED THE READING AND COMPLETED THE ENTIRE SECTION,¹⁵ THE PRACTICE WAS ESTABLISHED TO COMPLETE THE ENTIRE SECTION.

[THAT] HIS NAME SHALL BE CALLED IN ISRAEL, 'THE HOUSE OF HIM THAT HAD HIS SHOE DRAWN¹⁶ OFF',¹⁷ IS A COMMANDMENT [TO BE PERFORMED] BY THE JUDGES AND NOT BY THE DISCIPLES.¹⁸ R. JUDAH, HOWEVER, RULED: IT IS A DUTY INCUMBENT UPON ALL PRESENT TO CRY '[THE MAN]¹⁹ THAT HAD HIS SHOE DRAWN¹⁶ OFF'.¹⁷

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated: [This is the procedure in the performance of] the commandment of halizah: She recites;²⁰ he recites;²¹ she draws off his shoe, spits and recites.²² What does he teach us [by this statement]? This is our very Mishnah! — It is this that he teaches us: The prescribed procedure is such, but if the order was reversed, it does not matter. So it was also taught: Whether the drawing off of the shoe preceded the spitting or whether the spitting preceded the drawing off, the act is valid.²³

Abaye ruled: The man who dictates the halizah formulae²⁴ shall not read for the woman [the word] not²⁵ separately and [the clause] he will perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me²⁶ separately, since this²⁷ would convey the meaning, 'He desires to perform the duty of a husband's brother to me'; but [should read without a pause]. He will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me. Nor shall he read for the levir [the word] not²⁸ separately and [the clause] I like²⁸ separately; for this²⁷ would convey the meaning. 'I like to take her'; but [he should read without a pause], I like not to take her.²⁹ Raba, however, stated: This³⁰ is only the conclusion³¹ of a sentence, and in a concluding clause [a pause] is of no consequence.³²

R. Ashi found R. Kahana making a painful effort to read out for a woman,³³ He will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me,³⁴ [without a pause]. 'Does not the Master,' he asked him, 'accept the ruling of Raba?'³⁵ — 'Raba', the other replied, 'admits in [the case of the formula] He will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me³⁴ [that no pause is permitted].³⁶

Abaye stated: The person who writes a certificate of halizah shall word it as follows: 'We read out for her³⁷ from My husband's brother refuseth³⁸ to³⁹ will perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me;⁴⁰ and we read out for him⁴¹ from not⁴² to³⁹ to take her;⁴³ and we read out for her from So⁴⁴ to⁴⁵ him that had his shoe drawn off.⁴⁶

Mar Zutra ruled [the paper]⁴⁷ and copied the full text.⁴⁸ Mar b. Idi⁴⁹ demurred: But, surely, [a section only of the Pentateuch] is not permitted to be written!⁵⁰ The law, however, is in agreement with the ruling of Mar Zutra.⁵¹

Abaye stated: If, when she spat, the wind carried the spittle away,⁵² her act is invalid.⁵³ What is the reason? — It is necessary that she shall spit before⁵⁴ his face.⁴⁴ If, therefore, he was tall and she was short, and the wind carried the spittle away,⁵⁵ her act is deemed to have been⁵⁶ before his face.⁵⁷ If, however, she was tall and he was short, it is necessary that [the spittle] shall drop to the level of his face before⁵⁸ it disappears.

Raba stated: If she ate garlic and then spat⁵⁹ or if she ate a clod of earth and then spat,⁵⁹ her act is invalid.⁵³ What is the reason? — Because it is necessary that she shall spit⁴⁴ of her own free will, which is not the case here.⁶⁰

Raba further stated: The judges must see the spittle issuing from the mouth of the sister-in-law, because it is written in Scripture Before the eyes of the elders . . . and spit.⁶¹

[THAT] HIS NAME SHALL BE CALLED IN ISRAEL, 'THE HOUSE OF HIM THAT HAD HIS SHOE DRAWN OFF' IS A COMMANDMENT [TO BE PERFORMED] BY THE JUDGES AND NOT BY THE DISCIPLES. It was taught: R. Judah stated: We were once sitting before R. Tarfon when a sister-in-law came to perform halizah, and he said to us, 'Exclaim all of you: Haluz ha-na'al,⁶² haluz ha-na'al, haluz ha-na'al!' [

CHAPTER XIII

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: ONLY THOSE¹ WHO ARE BETROTHED² MAY EXERCISE THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL;³ BUT BETH HILLEL RULED: BOTH THOSE WHO ARE BETROTHED AND THOSE WHO ARE MARRIED. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: [A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL³ MAY BE MADE] AGAINST A HUSBAND BUT NOT AGAINST A LEVIR;⁴ BUT BETH HILLEL RULED: EITHER AGAINST A HUSBAND OR AGAINST A LEVIR. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: [THE DECLARATION]⁵ MUST BE MADE IN HIS PRESENCE, BUT BETH HILLEL RULED: EITHER IN HIS PRESENCE OR NOT IN HIS PRESENCE. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: [THE DECLARATION⁵ MUST BE MADE] BEFORE BETH DIN, BUT BETH HILLEL RULED: EITHER BEFORE BETH DIN OR NOT BEFORE BETH DIN.

BETH HILLEL SAID TO BETH SHAMMAI: [A GIRL] MAY EXERCISE THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL WHILE SHE IS A MINOR EVEN FOUR OR FIVE TIMES.⁶ BETH SHAMMAI, HOWEVER, ANSWERED THEM: THE DAUGHTERS OF ISRAEL ARE NOT OWNERLESS PROPERTY,⁷ BUT, [IF ONE] MAKES A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, SHE MUST WAIT TILL SHE IS OF AGE, AND DECLARE HER REFUSAL⁸ AND MARRY AGAIN.

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: What is Beth Shammai's reason?⁹ Because no stipulation is attachable to a marriage;¹⁰ and were a married minor to be allowed to exercise the right of refusal, it would come to be assumed¹¹ that a stipulation is attachable to a marriage.¹² What reason, however, could be advanced¹³ where she only entered the bridal chamber¹⁴ and no cohabitation had taken place?¹⁵ Because no condition is attachable to an entry into the bridal chamber.¹⁶ What reason, however, could be advanced¹³ where the father¹⁷ entrusted her to the representatives of the husband?¹⁸ — The Rabbis made no distinction.¹⁹ And Beth Hillel?²⁰ — It is well known that the marriage of a minor is only Rabbinically valid.²¹

Both Rabbah and R. Joseph declared: The reason of Beth Shammai²² is that no man wishes to treat his cohabitation as mere fornication.²³ What, however, can be the reason²² where she only entered the bridal chamber and no cohabitation took place?²⁴ No man would like his bridal chamber to be [an introduction to] a forbidden act.²⁵ What reason,²² then, could be advanced where the father²⁶ had entrusted her to the representatives of the husband?²⁷ — The Rabbis made no distinction.²⁸ And Beth Hillel?²⁹ — Since [a minor's marriage] involves³⁰ betrothal and kethubah no one would suggest that her husband's cohabitation was an act of fornication.

R. Papa explained: Beth Shammai's reason³¹ is because of the usufruct,³² and Beth Hillel's reason also is because of the usufruct.³² 'Beth Shammai's reason is because of the usufruct', for should you say that a married minor may exercise the right of refusal, [her husband]³³ might [indiscriminately] pluck [the fruit] and consume it, [knowing as he does] that she might leave him at any moment.³⁴ Beth Hillel, however, [say]: On the contrary; since it is laid down that she may exercise the right of refusal, [her husband] would make every effort to improve her property, fearing that if [he should] not [do this], her relatives might give her their advice [against him] and thus take her away from him.

Raba stated: The real reason³¹ of Beth Shammai is because no man would take the trouble to prepare a meal³⁵ and then spoil it.³⁶ And Beth Hillel?³⁷ — Both are pleased [to be married to each other]³⁸ in order that they may be known as married people.³⁹

BETH SHAMMAI RULED . . . AGAINST A HUSBAND etc. R. Oshaia stated: She may⁴⁰ make a declaration of refusal in respect of his ma'amar⁴¹ but she has no right to make a declaration of refusal in respect of his levirate bond.⁴²

Said R. Hisda: What is R. Oshaia's reason? — She has the power to annul a ma'amar which is effected with her consent; she has no power, however, to sever the levirate bond since it is binding on her against her will.⁴³ But, surely, [levirate marriage by] cohabitation may be effected against her will⁴⁴

(1) Young girls who are minors and whose fathers are dead. v. infra n. 2.

(2) With the permission of their mother or brothers into whose charge they pass after the death of their fathers.

(3) Mi'un (v. Glos.) and no divorce is required.

(4) The levirate bond with whom can he severed by halizah only. Bah deletes 'but not . . . levir'.

(5) Cf. supra n. 3.

(6) And may marry again after each refusal.

(7) To be taken up by man after man without receiving proper divorce from the one before being betrothed or married to the other

(8) This is explained in the Gemara infra.

(9) For ruling that ONLY BETROTHED WOMEN MAY EXERCISE THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL and that consequently a married minor may not exercise the right.

(10) And the validity of the marriage is not in any way impaired even if the condition that was attached to it was not fulfilled. The law assumes that the man tacitly renounces, on cohabitation, the condition.

(11) The invalidity of her marriage being assumed to be due, not to her minority, but to some unfulfilled stipulation that was attached to her marriage.

(12) Even in the case of one who is of age. Hence Beth Shammai's ruling in our Mishnah. Cf. supra note 1.

(13) For the prohibition of mi'un. V. Glos.

(14) Huppah, v. Glos.

(15) In such a case, since consummation of marriage has not taken place, there is, surely, no need to provide against the erroneous assumption of the validity of a stipulation in consummated marriage!

(16) If a minor at such a stage in her marriage were allowed mi'un it might be assumed that the reason why her union was severed without a divorce was not because of her minority but owing to an unfulfilled condition that was attached to her entry into the bridal chamber, and so it would be concluded erroneously that even in the case of one who is of age a condition attached is valid.

(17) I.e., his successors in authority over the minor, after his death, viz., his wife and sons. (Cf. supra p. 738, n. 2). Where a father is alive the law of mi'un (with the exception of the case mentioned supra p. 2, n. 6) does not apply, since he has the right to give her away in perfect and proper marriage while she is a minor.

(18) An act which, though regarded as marriage, is a stage preceding that of entry into the bridal chamber, where a condition is valid, even in the case of a bride who is of age.

(19) Between a marriage fully consummated and one in its earlier stage. Since both are cases of marriage, permissibility of mi'un in the latter might lead to an erroneous conclusion concerning the former.

(20) Why do they not provide against the possibility of erroneous conclusions.

(21) No one would draw comparisons between a marriage the validity of which is only Rabbinical and one which is Pentateuchally binding.

(22) V. Supra p. 739, n. 1.

(23) Which would be the case were a married minor to be allowed to leave her husband by mi'un only without a proper divorce. Mi'un was, therefore, forbidden in order to encourage the marriage of orphan minors who, if they remain unmarried, are subject to the dangers of immorality and prostitution. Cf. infra 112b.

(24) In which case the reason given is inapplicable.

(25) Retrospective prostitution.

(26) V. Supra p. 739, n. 9.

(27) Though such an act on the part of the minor's mother or brothers constitutes marriage in accordance with Rabbinic law, as does such an act on the part of the father even in the case of one who is of age (cf. Keth. 48b), nevertheless the question of fornication does not in such a case arise. Why, then, do Beth Shammai forbid mi'un even at this stage of marriage?

- (28) Cf. supra p. 739, n. 11.
- (29) How, in view of the reason advanced, could they allow mi'un even in marriage!
- (30) Lit., 'there is'.
- (31) V. supra p. 739, n. 1.
- (32) Of the minor's melog (v. Glos.) property.
- (33) Who after marriage is entitled to the usufruct of his wife's melog property.
- (34) Lit., 'for in the end she stands to go out'.
- (35) The wedding feast.
- (36) Had mi'un been allowed after a marriage no one would, for this reason, ever marry a minor; and this might lead to immoral consequences. Cf. supra p. 740, n. 2.
- (37) v. p. 740, n. 8.
- (38) Despite the objections pointed out by Beth Shammai.
- (39) The possible loss does not, therefore, prevent a man from marrying a minor.
- (40) According to Beth Hillel who allow the right of refusal even against a levir.
- (41) If the levir made a ma'amar, she can annul it by mi'un, and no divorce is required.
- (42) Only halizah can sever the levirate bond. In ordinary cases where the levir addressed to the yebamah a ma'amar, she requires for her freedom both a divorce to annul the effect of the ma'amar, and halizah to sever the levirate bond.
- (43) Because it is due to her marriage with the deceased brother, which, since she did not exercise her right of refusal against him, remained valid.
- (44) Cf. supra 53b, 54a.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 107b

and yet she may annul it! — [This,] however, [is really the reason]: She may annul [a kinyan by] cohabitation or by a ma'amar, because it is the levir who effects it; she cannot, however, annul the levirate bond which the All Merciful has imposed upon her.

'Ulla said: She may exercise her right of refusal even in respect of his levirate bond. What is the reason?¹ [By her refusal] she annuls the marriage of her first husband.²

Raba raised an objection against 'Ulla: The rival of anyone, entitled to make a declaration of refusal,³ who did not exercise her right, must perform the ceremony of halizah⁴ [if her husband died childless] but may not contract levirate marriage.⁵ But why? Let her exercise her right of refusal now and thereby annul the marriage of her first husband, and then let her rival⁶ contract the levirate marriage!⁷ — The rival of a forbidden relative is different.⁸ For Rami b. Ezekiel learnt: If a minor made a declaration of refusal against her husband she is permitted to marry his father,⁹ but if against the levir¹⁰ she is forbidden to marry his father. It is thus evident¹¹ that at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage she is looked upon as his¹² daughter-in-law;¹³ similarly here also¹⁴ [marriage of the rival is forbidden because] at the time of her subjection to the levirate marriage she is looked upon as his daughter's rival.¹⁵ Rab stated: If she¹⁶ made a declaration of refusal against one¹⁷ [of the levirs] she is forbidden [to marry] the others¹⁷ also; her case being analogous to that of the recipient of a letter of divorce.¹⁸ As¹⁹ the recipient of a letter of divorce is forbidden to all [the brothers] as soon as she is forbidden to one²⁰ so is there no difference here also.²¹

Samuel, however, stated: If she¹⁶ exercised her right of refusal against one²⁰ [of the levirs] she is permitted [to marry] the others;¹⁷ her case being unlike that of the recipient of a letter of divorce.¹⁸ For with the recipient of a letter of divorce¹⁸ it is he²⁰ who took the initiative against her;²² but here it is she who took the initiative against him, declaring, 'I do not like you and I do not want you; it is you whom I dislike but I do like your fellow'.

R. Assi ruled: If she¹⁶ made a declaration of refusal against one [levir] she is permitted [to marry] even him. May it be assumed that he is of the same opinion as R. Oshaia who maintains that a minor has no right to make a declaration of refusal in respect of his levirate bond?²³ — In respect of one levir she may well be entitled to annul [the levirate bond]; here, however, we are dealing with two levirs [the reason²⁴ being] that no declaration of refusal is valid against half a levirate bond.²⁵

When Rabin came²⁶ he reported in the name of R. Johanan: If she¹⁶ exercised her right of refusal against one¹⁷ [of the levirs] she is permitted to marry the other brothers. [They], however did not agree with him. Who [are they who] did not agree with him?

Abaye said: Rab;²⁷ Raba said: R. Oshaia;²⁸ and others said: [Even] R. Assi.²⁹

BETH SHAMMAI RULED . . . IN HIS PRESENCE etc. It was taught: Beth Hillel said to Beth Shammai, 'Did not the wife of Pishon the camel driver make her declaration of refusal in his absence?' 'Pishon the camel driver', answered Beth Shammai to Beth Hillel, 'used a reversible measure;³⁰ they, therefore, used against him also a reversible measure'.³¹ Since, however, he was eating the usufruct³² it is obvious that [the minor] was married to him;³³ but [if this was the case] did not Beth Shammai rule [it may be asked] that a married minor may not exercise the right of refusal!³⁴ They bound him with two bonds.³⁵

BETH SHAMMAI RULED: . . . BEFORE BETH DIN etc. Elsewhere we learned: Halizah and declarations of mi'un [must be witnessed by] three men.³⁶ Who is the Tanna?³⁷ — Rabbah replied: This [ruling is that of] Beth Shammai.³⁸ Abaye said: You may even say [that it is the ruling of] Beth Hillel. All that³⁹ Beth Hillel really stated was that no experts⁴⁰ are required; three men, however, are indeed required. As it was, in fact, taught: Beth Shammai ruled [that mi'un must be declared] before Beth din,⁴¹ and Beth Hillel ruled: Either before a Beth din or not before a Beth din. Both, however, agree that a quorum of three is required.⁴² R. Jose son of R.⁴³ Judah and R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon⁴⁴ ruled: [Mi'un is] valid [even if It was declared] before two.⁴⁵ R. Joseph b. Manyumi reported in the name of R. Nahman that the halachah is in agreement with this pair.⁴⁶

BETH SHAMMAI, HOWEVER, ANSWERED . . . AND SHE DECLARES HER REFUSAL etc. But, surely, she has already made a declaration of refusal!⁴⁷ — Samuel replied: [The meaning is] TILL SHE IS OF AGE and states, 'I am willing to abide by the first declaration of refusal'.⁴⁸ 'Ulla replied: Two [different statements] are here made: Either she declares her refusal 'and is betrothed after she is of age,⁴⁹ or she declares her refusal, and is married forthwith.⁵⁰

According to 'Ulla one can well understand why the expression, TILL SHE IS OF AGE OR DECLARES HER REFUSAL⁵¹ AND MARRIES AGAIN, was used. According to Samuel, however, it should have been stated 'TILL SHE IS OF AGE and states'.⁵² — This is a difficulty. MISHNAH. WHICH MINOR MUST MAKE THE DECLARATION OF REFUSAL?⁵³ ANY WHOSE MOTHER OR BROTHERS HAVE GIVEN HER IN MARRIAGE WITH HER CONSENT. IF, HOWEVER, THEY GAVE HER IN MARRIAGE WITHOUT HER CONSENT SHE NEED NOT MAKE ANY DECLARATION OF REFUSAL.⁵⁴

R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS RULED: ANY CHILD WHO IS UNABLE TO TAKE CARE OF HER TOKEN OF BETROTHAL⁵⁵ NEED NOT MAKE ANY DECLARATION OF REFUSAL.⁵⁴

R. ELIEZER⁵⁶ RULED: THE ACT OF A MINOR HAS NO VALIDITY AT ALL, BUT [SHE⁵⁷ IS TO BE REGARDED] AS ONE SEDUCED. IF, THEREFORE, SHE IS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE [AND WAS MARRIED] TO A PRIEST SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH,⁵⁸ AND IF SHE IS THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST [AND WAS MARRIED] TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH.⁵⁹

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB RULED: IN THE CASE OF ANY HINDRANCE [IN

REMARRYING]⁶⁰ THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND, [THE MINOR] IS DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN⁶¹ HIS WIFE; BUT IN THE CASE OF ANY HINDRANCE [IN REMARRYING] THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND SHE IS NOT DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN⁶² HIS WIFE.

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated, and others say that it was taught In a Baraitha: Originally, a certificate of mi'un was drafted [as follows]: 'I do not like him and I do not want him and I do not desire to be married to him'. When, however, it was observed that the formula was too long and it was feared that

- (1) How could she annul a bond which the 'All Merciful has imposed upon her'?
 - (2) The deceased; so that the levirate bond ceases to exist retrospectively as if it had never been in existence.
 - (3) I.e., a girl who married while she was a minor and whose father did not receive the token of her betrothal. This may occur even during the lifetime of her father if she marries a second time after she had been divorced by her first husband to whom she had been given in marriage by her father. After a divorce the father's right to give his 'minor' daughter in marriage ceases.
 - (4) With the levir, though he is the father or any other forbidden relative of the minor. It is only the rival of a woman whose marriage is Pentateuchally valid who is exempt from both levirate marriage and halizah with the forbidden relative of that woman. The marriage of a minor, who could exercise her right of refusal at any moment, is only Rabbinically valid.
 - (5) Supra 2b. Since after all the minor did not exercise her right of refusal her marriage is valid enough to forbid her rival's levirate marriage, as is the case with a Pentateuchally valid marriage.
 - (6) Who, by the declaration of refusal of the minor, ceases to be her rival.
 - (7) With the minor's forbidden relative.
 - (8) From a minor who becomes subject to halizah. While the minor may, by annulling her marriage retrospectively by the exercise of the right of mi'un, procure exemption from the halizah, her rival cannot, through the minor's exercise of this right, obtain the freedom to marry the minor's forbidden relative.
 - (9) Who, owing to her retrospective annulling by mi'un of her marriage with his son, is to him now a mere stranger.
 - (10) To whom she has become bound by the levirate obligation when her husband, against whom she did not exercise her right of mi'un, died childless.
 - (11) Since she is forbidden to marry the levir's father.
 - (12) The levir's father's.
 - (13) A status which she retains despite the mi'un.
 - (14) Though her mi'un which annulled her marriage retrospectively exempted her from halizah.
 - (15) Her subsequent estrangement, effected by the minor's mi'un, cannot remove her known status of forbidden relative's rival. Cf. supra note 10.
 - (16) A minor.
 - (17) Lit., 'this'.
 - (18) From one of the levirs.
 - (19) Lit., 'not?'
 - (20) The levir who gave her the letter of divorce.
 - (21) The mi'un which causes her to be forbidden to marry one of the brothers causes her, as in the case of divorce, to be equally forbidden to all the other brothers.
 - (22) And he is presumed to have acted on behalf of all his brothers.
 - (23) And if she did exercise It she still remains permitted to the levir, v. supra p. 741, n. 8.
 - (24) For the invalidity of the mi'un.
 - (25) She is equally bound to the two levirs, and her refusal was declared against one of them only.
 - (26) From Palestine to Babylon.
 - (27) Who stated supra that if a minor made a declaration of refusal against one of the brothers she is forbidden to all.
 - (28) R. Johanan permitted her to marry the brothers only where there were several of them (the reason being the same as that of R. Assi that a part of a levirate bond cannot be severed); where, however, there was only one brother R. Johanan forbids him to marry the minor who made a declaration of refusal against him. This ruling is contrary to that of R.

Oshaia who in all cases regards mi'un against a levirate bond as invalid.

(29) Much more so R. Oshaia (v. supra n. 13). Even R. Assi who, unlike R. Oshaia agrees with R. Johanan in permitting the marriage of a minor, after her mi'un, only where the number of levirs is more than one, differs, nevertheless, from him in allowing the minor to marry the very levir against whom her declaration of refusal was made.

(30) כפֹּשֶׁה (rt. כפֹּשׁ 'to bend'cf. מִדֵּה כפֹּשֶׁה, a measure of capacity having a deep receptacle at one end and a shallow one at the other, to defraud thereby sellers and buyers; 'a false measure'. This is a metaphor expressing Pishon's double dealing with his wife in pretending merely to eat the fruit of her melog property, to which he was in fact entitled, while in reality he was encroaching upon the property itself which belonged to her.

(31) He was paid 'measure for measure', 'tit for tat'. In other cases, however, mi'un must be declared before Beth din only.

(32) Of the minor's melog property.

(33) Not merely betrothed. Before marriage, even if betrothal had taken place, a husband is not entitled to the usufruct of his wife's melog property.

(34) How then could she here at all make such a declaration !

(35) Metaph. He was subjected to two penalties. קִטְרָא sing. קִטְרִי (Heb. קֶשֶׁר) 'knot', 'bond'.

(36) Supra 101b, Sanh. 2a.

(37) Whose ruling this statement represents.

(38) Who require the presence of a Beth din (v. our Mishnah) which consists of three men.

(39) Lit., 'until here'.

(40) Mumhin, plur. of mumhe, v. Glos.

(41) 'Of experts'. This is the reading supra 101b.

(42) Which confirms Abaye's opinion.

(43) Cur. edd., בֶּר ('son'), is apparently a misprint for בֶּר ('son of R.'), which is the reading supra, loc. cit.

(44) Cf. loc. cit. where the reading is 'Jose'.

(45) Sanh. 2a, supra loc. cit.

(46) Who require a quorum of two only, v. supra loc. cit.

(47) When she was a minor. Why then does our Mishnah speak of a second declaration of refusal after she has become of age?

(48) By the second refusal (cf. supra n. 8) only the confirmation of the first was intended. Without such confirmation it might be possible to assume that she had changed her opinion and withdrawn her first declaration.

(49) When she may no more exercise the right of mi'un even after a betrothal only.

(50) While still a minor. Since, according to Beth Shammai, mi'un after a marriage is invalid she would not be able, once she was married, to exercise that right again. The word וְתִבְאֵן translated AND DECLARES etc. should be rendered OR DECLARES etc.

(51) 'OR . . . REFUSAL is wanting in cur. edd., but is to be added (cf. our Mishnah).

(52) That she abides by her declaration.

(53) If she desires to leave her husband.

(54) She may leave her husband without any legal formality, and may marry any other man.

(55) The money or object whereby the kinyan of betrothal is effected. Cf. Kid. 2af.

(56) Cf. Bah, Bomb. ed. and separate edd. of the Mishnah; Cur. edd., 'Eleazar'.

(57) If she was given away in marriage.

(58) Her marriage being invalid, she remains in her father's control, and, like any other daughter of an Israelite who never married a priest, is forbidden to eat terumah.

(59) As the daughter of a priest who never married an Israelite. Cf. supra n. 6.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 108a

people might mistake it for a letter of divorce,¹ the following formula was instituted: 'On the Nth day, So-and-so the daughter of So-and-so made a declaration of refusal in our presence'.

Our Rabbis taught: What is regarded as mi'un? — If she² said, 'I do not want So-and-so my husband', or 'I do not want the betrothal which my mother or my brothers have arranged for me'.³ R. Judah said even more than this:⁴ Even if while sitting in the bridal litter,⁵ and being carried⁶ from her father's house to the home of her husband, she said, 'I do not want So-and-so my husband', her statement⁷ is regarded as⁸ a declaration of refusal. R. Judah said more than this:⁹ Even if, while the wedding guests were reclining [on their dining couches] in her husband's house and she was standing and waiting¹⁰ upon them, she said to them, 'I do not want my husband So-and-so', her statement¹¹ is regarded as¹² a declaration of refusal. R. Jose b. Judah said more than this: Even if, while her husband sent her to a shopkeeper to bring him something for himself,¹³ she said, 'I do not want So-and-so my husband', you can have no mi'un more valid than this one.¹⁴

R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS RULED: ANY CHILD etc. Rab Judah reported in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Hanina b. Antigonus.

A Tanna taught: If a minor who did not make a declaration of refusal married herself again, her marriage, it was stated in the name of R. Judah b. Bathyra, is to be regarded as her declaration of refusal.

It was asked: What is the law where she¹⁵ was only betrothed?¹⁶ — Come and hear: If a minor who did not make a declaration of refusal betrothed herself [to another man], her betrothal, it was stated in the name of R. Judah b. Bathyra, is regarded as her declaration of refusal.

The question was raised: Do the Rabbis differ from R. Judah b. Bathyra or not? If you can find some ground for holding that they differ, [it may be asked whether only] in respect of betrothal,¹⁷ or even in respect of marriage? And should you find some reason for holding that they differ even in respect of marriage [the question arises whether] the halachah is in agreement with him¹⁸ or not? And if you can find some ground for holding that the halachah is in agreement with him [it may be asked whether only] in respect of marriage or also in respect of betrothal? — Come and hear: Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel that the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah b. Bathyra;¹⁹ [since it had to be stated that] the halachah [is so] it may be inferred that they differ.²⁰

The question, however, still remains [whether the minor spoken of]²¹ is one who was married in the first instance²² or perhaps she is one who was only betrothed?²³ — Come and hear: Abdan's²⁴ daughters-in-law²⁵ rebelled [against their husbands].²⁶ When Rabbi sent a pair of Rabbis to interrogate them,²⁷ some women said to them, 'See your husbands are coming'. 'May they', they replied, 'be your husbands!'²⁸ and 'Rabbi decided: 'No more significant mi'un than this is required'. Was not this a case of marriage?²⁹ — No, one of betrothal only. The halachah, however, is in agreement with R. Judah b. Bathyra, even where marriage with the first husband has taken place.

R. ELIEZER³⁰ RULED etc. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: I have surveyed [the rulings] of the Sages from all aspects and found no man who was so consistent in his treatment of the minor as R. Eliezer.³⁰ For R. Eliezer³⁰ regarded her as one taking a walk with [her husband] in his courtyard who, when she rises from his bosom, performs her ritual immersion³¹ and is permitted to eat terumah in the evening.³²

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated: There is no validity whatsoever in the act of a minor, and her husband is entitled neither to anything she may find,³³ nor to the work of her hands,³³ nor may he annul her vows,³⁴ he is not her heir³³ and he may not defile himself for her.³⁵ This is the general rule: She is in no respect regarded as his wife, except that it is necessary for her to make a declaration of refusal.³⁶ R. Joshua stated: Her husband has the right to anything she finds³⁷ and to the work of her hands,³⁷ to annul her vows,³⁴ to be her heir,³⁷ and to defile himself for her;³⁸ the general principle being that she is regarded as his wife in every respect, except that she may leave him³⁶ by a declaration of refusal.³⁹ Said Rabbi: The views of R. Eliezer are more acceptable than those of R. Joshua; for R. Eliezer is consistent throughout in his treatment of the minor while R. Joshua makes distinctions. What [unreasonable] distinctions does he make? — If she is regarded as his wife, she should also require a letter of divorce.⁴⁰ But according to R. Eliezer also [it may be argued] if she is not regarded as his wife, she should require no mi'un either! — Should she then depart without any formality whatever?⁴¹

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB RULED: etc. What is to be understood by a HINDRANCE THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND and a HINDRANCE THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: If when she was asked to marry⁴² she replied, '[I must refuse the offer] owing to So-and-so my husband'; such a HINDRANCE is one THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND.⁴³ [If, however, she refused the offer] 'because', [she said] 'the men [who proposed] are not suitable for me'; such a HINDRANCE is one THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND.

Both Abaye b. Abin and R. Hanina b. Abin gave the following explanation: If he gave her a letter of divorce, the HINDRANCE IS one THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND⁴⁴ and, therefore, he is forbidden to marry her relatives and she is forbidden to marry his relatives, and he also disqualifies her from marrying a priest.⁴⁵ If, however, she exercised her right of refusal against him, the HINDRANCE is one THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND and, therefore, he is permitted to marry her relatives and she is permitted to marry his relatives, and he does not disqualify her from marrying a priest.⁴⁶

But surely, this⁴⁷ was specifically stated below: If a minor made a declaration of refusal against a man, he is permitted to marry her relatives and she is permitted to marry his relatives, and he does not disqualify her from marrying a priest; but if he gave her a letter of divorce he is forbidden to marry her relatives and she is forbidden to marry his relatives, and he also disqualifies her from marrying a priest!⁴⁸ — The latter⁴⁹ is merely an explanation [of the former].⁵⁰

MISHNAH. IF A MINOR MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL AGAINST A MAN, HE IS PERMITTED [TO MARRY] HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS PERMITTED TO [MARRY] HIS RELATIVES, AND HE DOES NOT DISQUALIFY HER FROM [MARRYING] A PRIEST;⁵¹ BUT IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, HE IS FORBIDDEN TO [MARRY] HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO [MARRY] HIS RELATIVES, AND HE ALSO DISQUALIFIES HER FROM [MARRYING] A PRIEST.⁵² IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND REMARRIED HER AND, AFTER SHE HAD EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HIM, SHE WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN AND BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM.⁵³ IF, HOWEVER, SHE EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HIM⁵⁴ AND HE REMARRIED HER, AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN SHE WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN AND BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO HIM.⁵⁵

- (27) To ascertain whether their refusal was in earnest.
- (28) I.e., you are welcome to them.
- (29) Lit 'what not (but) that she was married', i.e., each of them was married to her husband, and, since a mere casual remark was nevertheless accepted by Rabbi as mi'un, it may be inferred that an actual marriage with, or a betrothal to another man may even more so be regarded as mi'un.
- (30) Cf. supra p. 746, n. 4.
- (31) Necessitated by their connubial intercourse.
- (32) If her father is a priest, though her husband is an Israelite. R. Eliezer does not regard the minor as a wife either in respect of the requirement of mi'un or in respect of any other restrictions or privileges such as those relating to terumah.

- (39) And no letter of divorce is required.
- (40) Mi'un should not have been allowed.
- (41) Certainly not. Hence the requirement of mi'un.
- (42) While she was still living with her first husband.
- (43) Since the minor has shewn by her declaration that it was her desire to continue to live with him.
- (44) Since she did not exercise her right of refusal it is obvious that as far as she was concerned the union would never have been broken.

(53) It is only a divorced woman that must not be remarried by her first husband after she had been married to another (v. Deut. XXIV, 2-4) but not a minor who left her husband by mi'un which even cancels her status of divorcee in which she may find herself after a previous separation from her husband.

(54) Her first husband.

(55) Since her second separation from her first husband was by means of a letter of divorce, she retains the status of a divorcee. Cf. supra n. 6.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 108b

THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: IF DIVORCE FOLLOWED MI'UN¹ SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO HIM,² AND IF MI'UN FOLLOWED DIVORCE¹ SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM.³

IF A MINOR EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST A MAN, AND THEN SHE WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER, AND AFTERWARDS TO ANOTHER MAN AGAINST WHOM SHE MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, AND THEN TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER,⁴ SHE⁵ IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO THE MAN FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, BUT IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY HER EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT OF MI'UN.

GEMARA. It is thus⁶ evident that mi'un has the power to cancel⁷ divorce; but this, surely, is contradicted by the following: IF A MINOR EXERCISED THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST A MAN AND THEN WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER, AND AFTERWARDS TO ANOTHER MAN AGAINST WHOM SHE MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, AND THEN TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER,⁸ SHE⁵ IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO THE MAN FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, BUT IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY HER EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT OF MI'UN, from which it is evident that mi'un against his fellow has no power to cancel⁷ his own divorce!⁹ — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: There is a break¹⁰ [in our Mishnah], the one who taught the former¹¹ did not teach the latter.¹¹ Raba¹² said: But what contradiction is this? It is possible that mi'un¹³ cancels his own divorce, but that the mi'un against his fellow¹⁴ does not cancel his own letter of divorce! But in what way is the mi'un against his fellow different from one against himself] that it should not cancel his own¹⁵ divorce? [Obviously for the reason that] as she is familiar with his¹⁵ hints and gesticulations he¹⁵ might allure her and marry her again.¹⁶ [But if this is the case] mi'un against himself also should not cancel his divorce, [for the same reason] that as she is familiar with his hints and gesticulations he might allure her and marry her again! Surely, he¹⁵ had already tried to allure¹⁷ her but she did not succumb.¹⁸

If a contradiction, however, [exists it is that between one ruling] concerning his fellow against [another ruling] concerning his fellow: IF, HOWEVER, SHE EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HIM AND HE REMARRIED HER, AND HAVING SUBSEQUENTLY GIVEN HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE SHE MARRIED ANOTHER MAN AND BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO HIM. The reason [then why she is forbidden to return to him is] because she BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, but had she exercised her right of refusal¹⁹ she would have been permitted to return to him,²⁰ from which it is evident that the mi'un against his fellow has the power to cancel²¹ his own divorce; but this view is contradictory to the following: IF A MINOR EXERCISED THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HER HUSBAND AND THEN WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN WHO

DIVORCED HER, AND AFTERWARDS TO AN OTHER MAN AGAINST WHOM SHE MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, SHE²² IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO THE MAN FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, BUT IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY HER EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT OF MI'UN. From this, then, it is evident that the mi'un against his fellow has no power to cancel²³ his own divorce! R. Eleazar replied: There is a break²⁴ [in our Mishnah]; the one who taught the former²⁵ did not teach the latter.²⁵ 'Ulla replied: [The latter statement refers to a case where], for instance, she was thrice divorced, so that she appears like a grown up.²⁶

Who taught [the two respective statements of our Mishnah]?²⁷ Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: To this may be applied the Scriptural text,²⁸ We have drunk our water for money; our wood cometh to us for price.²⁹ In the time of proscription³⁰ the following halachah was inquired for: If a minor left her first husband with a letter of divorce and her second husband through mi'un, may she return to her first husband? They hired a man for four hundred zuz,³¹ and [through him] they addressed the enquiry to R. Akiba in prison,³² and he stated that she was forbidden.³³ R. Judah b. Bathyra [also was asked] at Nesibis and he too forbade her.³³ Said R. Ishmael son of R. Jose: There was no need for us to [ascertain] such [an halachah],³⁴ For if in a prohibition involving the penalty of kareth³⁵ he has been permitted³⁶ how much more so³⁷ in one [involving only the penalty of] a negative commandment.³⁸ But the enquiry was in this manner: If [a minor] was the wife of his mother's brother, and consequently forbidden to him as a relative of the second degree,³⁹ and his paternal brother [subsequently] married her⁴⁰ and died,⁴¹ may she now exercise her right of mi'un,⁴² and thus annul her first marriage⁴³ and so be permitted to contract the levirate marriage?⁴⁴ Is⁴⁵ mi'un valid after [a husband's] death where a religious performance⁴⁶ is involved, or not? Two men were hired for four hundred zuz⁴⁷ and when they came and asked R. Akiba in prison he ruled [that such levirate marriage was] forbidden; and when R. Judah b. Bathyra [was asked] at Nesibis he also decided that it was forbidden.

R. Isaac b. Ashian stated: Rab, however, admits that she⁴⁸ is permitted to marry the brother⁴⁹ of the man whom she is forbidden [to remarry].⁵⁰ Is not this obvious? For it is only he with whose hints and gesticulations she is familiar but not his brother!⁵¹ — It might have been assumed that [marriage with] the one⁵² should be forbidden as a preventive measure against the other⁵² hence we were taught [that his brother may marry her]. Another reading: R. Isaac b. Ashian stated: As she⁵³ is forbidden to him⁵⁴ so is she forbidden to his brothers. But, surely, she is not familiar with their hints and gesticulations!⁵⁵ — His brothers were forbidden [marriage with her] as a preventive measure against [marriage] with him.

(1) Irrespective of the number of times the man married and divorced her and the number of times she exercised the right of mi'un.

(2) Because her last separation was by means of a letter of divorce. Cf. supra. n. 8.

(3) Cf. supra n. 6.

(4) Others insert here, 'to another against whom she exercised her right of refusal' (cf. separate edd. of the Mishnah, Alfasi and Bah).

(5) Cur. edd., 'this is the general rule' is here omitted in accordance with the reading of the separate edd. of the Mishnah and Alfasi.

(6) Since it was ruled that IF MI'UN FOLLOWED DIVORCE SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN to her husband, despite the divorce that preceded it. Cf. supra p. 751, 15, 6.

(7) Lit., 'comes . . . and cancels'.

(9) That preceded the mi'un.

(10) תברא (rt. תבר 'to break'). Others 'contradiction' (cf. Rashi, Levy and Jast).

(11) Lit., 'this'.

(12) Others, 'Rabbah'. Cf. Bah.

- (13) The case spoken of in the first statement of our Mishnah.
- (14) Spoken of in the second statement.
- (15) The first husband.
- (16) Lit., 'entangle and bring her', i.e., he might take advantage of their earlier familiarity and insidiously ingratiate himself with her, creating dislike between her and her second husband so that she might be led to exercise her right of mi'un against the latter and return to him.
- (17) Cf. supra n. 3.
- (18) Lit., 'she was not entangled', 'confused'. The fact that she exercised the right of refusal against him after he had married her a second time and presumably made every effort to retain her, may be regarded as proof that she would not be induced to marry him a third time. When the mi'un, however, concerns a second husband. It is quite likely that, as her separation from her first husband was not due to her mi'un but to his divorcing her, she might readily consent to return to him and thus allow him to induce her to exercise her right of mi'un against her second husband.
- (19) Against her second husband.
- (20) Her first husband.
- (21) Lit., 'comes . . . and cancels'.

- (23) Lit., 'comes...and cancels'.
- (24) V. supra p. 752, n. 7.
- (25) Lit., 'this'.
- (26) It is in such a case only that she may not be remarried to any of the men, even though her separation from her last husband was by mi'un. If, however, she was divorced once or twice only, the mi'un against her last husband confirms her in the state of her minority, and she may be married again by either of the men who had previously divorced her.
- (27) Concerning which it was said supra that they represent the views of different authors.

- (31) V. Glos.
- (32) The payment of the exorbitant sum of four hundred zuz for obtaining the required ruling recalled to Rab's mind the text of Lamentations quoted.
- (33) To return to her first husband.
- (34) Since, as is shewn presently, it is obvious that the minor is permitted to marry her first husband again after she has been separated from her second husband by mi'un.
- (35) Marriage with a married woman.
- (36) In the case of a minor who has exercised the right of mi'un.
- (37) Should one be permitted to marry her.
- (38) That of again marrying one's divorced wife. Thus it has been shewn that the author of the first statement in our Mishnah was Rab and that the author of the second statement was R. Ishmael son of R. Jose. Rab, though he belonged to the first generation of Amoraim, was also among the last of the Tannaim. Hence he was sometimes described as Tanna.
- (39) Forbidden by Rabbinic law. Cf. supra 21a.
- (40) After the death of her first husband.
- (41) Without issue, so that she became subject to levirate marriage with his paternal brother.
- (42) Against her first husband, through marriage with whom she became forbidden to the levir, the man in question.
- (43) And remove thereby her forbidden relationship with the levir.
- (44) With the levir between whom and herself no forbidden relationship any longer exists owing to her mi'un. Cf. supra notes 7 and 8.
- (45) Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis 'her rival'.
- (46) That of the levirate marriage (Deut. XXV, 5).
- (47) V. Glos.
- (48) A divorced minor who may not be married again by the husband who divorced her though she was separated from her second husband by mi'un.
- (49) She is not regarded as his brother's divorcee.

(50) Though her mi'un does not alter her status of divorcee in respect of her former husband himself (for the reason stated supra) it does remove it as far as marriage with his brother is concerned. She is, as a result of her mi'un, no longer regarded as his brother's divorcee.

(51) And since it is only this familiarity that is the cause of the prohibition, it is obvious that where it does not apply there should be no prohibition.

(52) Lit., 'this'.

(53) V. p. 755, n. 13.

(54) The husband who divorced her.

(55) Cf. supra p. 755, n. 16. Why then should she be forbidden to marry them?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 109a

MISHNAH. IF A MAN DIVORCED HIS WIFE AND REMARRIED HER, SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE LEVIR;¹ R. ELEAZAR². HOWEVER, FORBIDS.³ SIMILARLY, IF A MAN DIVORCED AN ORPHAN⁴ AND REMARRIED HER,⁵ SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE LEVIR;⁶ R. ELEAZAR, HOWEVER, FORBIDS.

IF A MINOR WAS GIVEN IN MARRIAGE BY HER FATHER AND WAS DIVORCED,⁷ [SO THAT SHE IS REGARDED] AS AN 'ORPHAN' IN HER FATHER'S LIFETIME,⁸ AND THEN HER HUSBAND REMARRIED HER,⁹ ALL AGREE THAT SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY THE LEVIR.¹⁰

GEMARA. 'Efa stated: What is R. Eleazar's reason?¹¹ Because there was a period when she was forbidden to him.¹² Said the Rabbis to 'Efa: If so, halizah also should not be required!¹³ And should you reply that the law is so indeed; surely [it may be pointed out] it was taught: In the name of R. Eleazar it was stated that she does perform halizah! — In truth, said 'Efa, the reason of R. Eleazar is unknown to me.

Abaye said, This is the reason of R. Eleazar.¹⁴ He was in doubt whether it was death¹⁴ that subjects [the widow to the levirate marriage] or whether it was the marriage that preceded it¹⁵ that subjects her to it. If it is death that subjects her to it, she should be subject to the¹⁶ levirate marriage; and if it is the marriage preceding it¹⁵ that subjects her to it, then there was a period when she was forbidden to him.¹⁷

Raba said: It was in fact obvious to R. Eleazar that it is death¹⁴ that subjects [the widow to the levirate marriage], but while all well know of the divorce, not all are aware of the remarriage.¹⁸ On the contrary! Remarriage gets noised abroad since the woman dwells with him! — Do we not, however, deal here [even with such a case as] where he remarried her in the evening and died in the morning?¹⁹

R. Ashi said, This is the reason of R. Eleazar:²⁰ He forbade [the levirate marriage of] these²¹ as a preventive measure against the remarriage of an 'orphan' [minor] in her father's lifetime.²² This²³ may also be logically supported; for in the final clause it was stated, IF A MINOR WAS GIVEN IN MARRIAGE BY HER FATHER AND SHE WAS DIVORCED [SO THAT SHE IS REGARDED] AS AN 'ORPHAN' IN HER FATHER'S LIFETIME, AND THEN REMARRIED HER HUSBAND, ALL AGREE THAT SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY THE LEVIR. Now what [need was there] to state [this when it is so] obvious!²⁴ Consequently it must be²⁵ this that was taught: R. Eleazar's reason²⁰ is because he forbade [the levirate marriages of] those as a preventive measure against [the levirate marriage of] this one. Thus our case has been proved.

It was taught in agreement with R. Ashi: The Sages agree with R. Eleazar in respect of a minor whom her father had given in marriage and who was divorced [so that she is regarded] as an ‘orphan’ in her father's lifetime, and who then remarried [her husband], that she is forbidden to [contract the levirate marriage with] the levir, because her divorce was a perfectly legal divorce, whereas her remarriage was not a perfectly legal remarriage. This,²⁶ however, applies only where he²⁷ divorced her while she was a minor²⁸ and remarried her while she was still a minor;²⁹ but if he²⁷ divorced her while she was a minor and remarried her when she was of age, and also if he remarried her while she was still a minor and she became of age while she was with him, and then he died,³⁰ she may either perform halizah or contract the levirate marriage.³¹ In the name of R. Eleazar, however, it was stated: She must perform halizah but may not contract the levirate marriage.³²

Raba enquired of R. Nahman: What is [the law³³ in respect of] her³⁴ rival?³⁵ — The other replied: [The prohibition against] herself is a preventive measure;³⁶ shall we then go so far³⁷ as to enact a preventive measure³⁸ against a preventive measure?³⁹ But, surely, it was taught: It was stated in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘She and her rival perform halizah’; Now can it possibly be imagined that she and her rival [are to perform halizah]? Consequently it must mean,⁴⁰ ‘either she or her rival performs halizah’!⁴¹ — Are you not [in any case obliged to] offer an explanation?⁴² Explain, then,⁴² as follows: She performs halizah while her rival may either perform halizah or contract the levirate marriage.

MISHNAH. WHERE TWO BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS WHO WERE MINORS⁴³ AND ORPHANS,⁴⁴ AND THE HUSBAND OF ONE OF THEM DIED,⁴⁵ [THE WIDOW]⁴⁶ IS FREE⁴⁷ AS BEING [THE LEVIR'S] WIFE'S SISTER. SIMILARLY IN THE CASE OF TWO DEAF⁴⁸ [SISTERS ONE OF WHOM WAS] OF AGE AND [THE OTHER] A MINOR, IF THE HUSBAND OF THE MINOR DIED, THE MINOR IS FREE⁴⁷ AS BEING [THE LEVIR'S] WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE HUSBAND OF THE ELDER SISTER DIED, THE MINOR IS TO BE INSTRUCTED, R. ELIEZER⁴⁹ STATED, TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN AGAINST HIM.⁵⁰ R. GAMALIEL SAID: IF SHE⁵¹ EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF MI'UN WELL AND GOOD;⁵² BUT IF [SHE DID] NOT, LET HER WAIT⁵³ UNTIL SHE IS OF AGE⁵⁴ WHEN THE OTHER BECOMES FREE⁴⁷ AS BEING [THE LEVIR'S] WIFE'S SISTER. R. JOSHUA SAID: WOE TO HIM⁵⁵ BECAUSE OF HIS WIFE AND WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS BROTHER'S WIFE! HE MUST ALLOW HIS WIFE TO GO⁵⁶ BY [GIVING HER] A LETTER OF DIVORCE,⁵⁷ AND HIS BROTHER'S WIFE⁵⁸ BY [SUBMITTING TO HER] HALIZAH.

GEMARA. But is this is permitted? Surely. Bar Kappara taught: A man should always cling to three things and keep away from three things. ‘A man should cling to the following three things’: Halizah, the making of peace and the annulment of vows; ‘and keep away from three things’: — From mi'un, from [receiving] deposits and from acting as surety!⁵⁹ Mi'un [involving the fulfilment] of a commandment⁶⁰ is different.⁶¹

[Reverting to our] previous text, ‘Bar Kappara taught: A man should always cling to three things . . . Halizah’, in accordance with [a statement of] Abba Saul. For it was taught: Abba Saul said, ‘If [a levir] married his sister-in-law on account of her beauty, or in order to gratify his sexual desires ‘or with any other ulterior motive, it is as if he has infringed [the law of] incest; and I am even inclined to think that the child [from such a union] is a bastard’.⁶²

‘The making of peace’, for it is written, Seek peace and pursue it⁶³

(1) Though at the time his brother had divorced her she was forbidden to him as ‘his brother's divorcee’.

(2) Mishnah edd.: R. Eliezer.

(3) The reason is given infra.

(4) A minor who was given to him in marriage by her mother or brothers, and who is entitled, therefore, to exercise mi'un.

(5) Whether during her minority or after she had attained her majority.

- (6) It is the death of her husband, not his marriage with her, that subjects her to the levir; and at the hour of his death she was no longer his divorcee but his wife.
- (7) While she was still in her minority, the letter of divorce having been accepted on her behalf by her father (Rashi). (Cf. Keth. 46b) Rashi s.v. ומקבל and Sonc. ed. p. 266, n. 6.
- (8) A father, in accordance with Pentateuchal law, is entitled to give his minor daughter in marriage only once. After she has been divorced, therefore, a father has no more right to give her away in marriage than her mother or brothers in the case where the father is dead. As in the latter case mi'un cancels marriage so it does in the former. The minor thus assumes the status of 'orphan' while her father is still alive.
- (9) During her minority.
- (10) If her husband died during her minority. She has the status of a divorcee because her letter of divorce, having been accepted by her father, is valid. Her subsequent marriage has no validity since her father can no longer act for her (cf. supra p. 756, n. 12) and her own act has no legal force.
- (11) For forbidding to the levir his brother's divorced wife despite the fact that at the time of his brother's death she was married to him again.
- (12) Lit., 'she stood for him one hour in prohibition'; i.e., at the time she was divorced she was forbidden to him under the penalty of kareth as his 'brother's divorcee'. Her subsequent remarriage does not alter her status.
- (13) As any other 'brother's divorcee'.
- (14) Of the childless husband,
- (15) Lit., 'the first'.
- (16) Lit., 'behold she is thrust before him'.
- (17) Cf. supra n. 4. Hence levirate marriage is forbidden (owing to the second possibility), and halizah is necessary (owing to the first).
- (18) Should the levir, therefore, be permitted to contract with her the levirate marriage, it might be assumed by those who knew of the divorce and not of the remarriage that he married his brother's divorcee. Hence R. Eleazar's prohibition.
- (19) Certainly we do, since the Mishnah applies to all possible cases. In such a case as the one mentioned the remarriage remains unknown.
- (20) v. supra p. 757, n. 3.
- (21) The remarried women spoken of in our Mishnah.
- (22) Who, as stated in our Mishnah, may not be married by the levir because she retains the status of a divorcee.
- (23) R. Ashi's explanation.
- (24) As her father has no legal authority to give her in marriage, and as the remarriage that has been contracted by herself (a minor) has no validity, it is obvious that her previous legal status of divorcee remains in force and that she is, therefore, forbidden to the levir as 'his brother's divorcee'.
- (25) Lit. 'but not'?
- (26) That the Sages admit that the minor may not contract the levirate marriage.
- (27) Her first husband.
- (28) Her father having accepted on her behalf the letter of divorce which is thus valid.
- (29) When neither she nor her father had the right to contract the marriage (cf. supra p. 756, n. 12); and where the death of the husband occurred while she was still in her minority, so that there was no cohabitation at all when she was of age.
- (30) So that cohabitation between them could take place while she was of age.
- (31) Since the final act of cohabitation after she becomes of age constitutes a legal kinyan of marriage.
- (32) Keth. 73bf. Since it was stated that 'the Sages agree with R. Eleazar in respect of a minor . . . in her father's lifetime', it is obvious that R. Eleazar himself spoke of this case and presumably made it the cause of the prohibition of the levirate marriages with the others mentioned.
- (33) According to R. Eleazar.
- (34) A divorced minor whom the husband remarried when she was of age.
- (35) Is her rival permitted levirate marriage?
- (36) Against the possibility of contracting levirate marriage with an 'orphan' in her father's lifetime.
- (37) Lit., 'rise'.
- (38) Prohibition of the levirate marriage of the rival.
- (39) Cf. supra note 5. Obviously not.
- (40) Lit., 'but no?'

- (41) How then could it be said supra that, according to R. Eleazar, the rival may contract the levirate marriage?
- (42) The statement being obscure, and an explanation being required in any case.
- (43) And given in marriage by their mother or brothers.
- (44) So in accordance with the separate edd. of the Mishnah, The last two words are wanting in cur. edd.
- (45) Without issue.
- (46) Cur. edd., וְהָיָה 'that', is here omitted, in accordance with the reading of the separate edd. of the Mishnah, and the Palestinian Talmud, Cf. Wilna Gaon.
- (47) From levirate marriage and halizah.
- (48) Deaf and dumb, whose marriage is valid according to Rabbinic law only.
- (49) Others, 'Eleazar'.
- (50) Her husband. His marriage with her (a minor) being only Rabbinically valid, his levirate bond with the elder sister renders her forbidden to him. By the mi'un of the minor the levir is able to perform the Pentateuchal law.
- (51) The minor.
- (52) Lit., 'she refused' and the elder sister is then enabled to contract the levirate marriage.
- (53) I.e., she is not forbidden to her husband, despite his levirate bond with her elder sister which his brother's death had created, (Cf. supra 51a).
- (54) And her marriage with her husband becomes Pentateuchally binding.
- (55) The surviving brother,
- (56) He may not retain her owing to the levirate bond (cf. supra note); R. Joshua, contrary to the opinion of R. Gamaliel, holding the view that a levirate bond does cause the prohibition of the widow's minor sister; and since the levirate bond is the result of a Pentateuchally binding marriage, the marriage with the minor, which is only Rabbinically valid, must be dissolved,
- (57) Not by mi'un for the reason given in the Gemara infra.
- (58) Who is forbidden as the sister of his divorcee. (15) To instruct a minor to exercise her right of refusal.
- (59) The reasons are given infra. From this then it is obvious that mi'un is not to be encouraged. Why then is THE MINOR TO BE INSTRUCTED TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN?
- (60) As is the case in our Mishnah, where the exercise of mi'un enables the levir to observe the Pentateuchal commandment of the levirate marriage.
- (61) From ordinary mi'un; while the latter is to be avoided the former is to be encouraged.
- (62) Supra 39b.
- (63) Ps. XXXIV, 15. Pursue it רדפהו (rt. רדף).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 109b

and [in connection with this] R. Abbahu stated that deduction is made¹ by a comparison between the two expressions of 'pursuit':² Here it is written, Seek peace and pursue it and elsewhere it is written, He that pursueth³ after righteousness and mercy findeth life, prosperity and honour.⁴

'The annulment of vows', in accordance with [a statement of] R. Nathan. For it was taught: R. Nathan said, 'If a man makes a vow it is as if he has built a high place⁵ and if he fulfils it,⁶ it is as if he has offered up a sacrifice upon it'.⁷

'And keep away from three things: From mi'un', since it is possible that when she becomes of age she will change her mind.

'From [receiving] deposits' [applies to deposits made by] his fellow townsman who [regards] his house as his own house.⁸

'From acting as surety [refers to would-be] sureties in Shalzion.⁹ For R. Isaac said, 'What was meant by the Scriptural text, He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it?¹⁰ Evil after evil¹¹ comes upon those who receive proselytes,¹² and upon the sureties¹³ of Shalzion and upon him who rivets¹⁴ himself to the word of the halachah.¹⁵

That 'those who receive proselytes', [bring evil upon themselves, is deduced] in accordance with [a statement of] R. Helbo. For R. Helbo stated: Proselytes are hurtful to Israel as a sore on the skin.¹⁶

'The sureties of Shalzion [bring evil upon themselves]' because [in that place] they practice 'pull out and thrust in'.¹⁷

'Who rivets himself to the word of the halachah', [brings evil upon himself], for it was taught: R. Jose said, 'Whosoever says that he has no [desire to study the] Torah, has no [reward for the study of the] Torah'. Is not this obvious? — But [this must be the meaning]: 'Whosoever says that he has only [an interest in the study of the] Torah¹⁸ has only [reward for the study of the] Torah'. This, however, is also obvious! — But [the meaning really is] that he has no [reward] even [for the study of the] Torah. What is the reason? — R. Papa replied: Scripture said, That ye may learn them and observe to do them,¹⁹ whosoever is [engaged] in observance²⁰ is [also regarded as engaged] in study, but whosoever is not [engaged] in observance is not [regarded as engaged] in study. And if you wish I may say: [The reading is] in fact, as was said before: 'Whosoever says that he has only [an interest in the study of the] Torah has only [reward for the study of the] Torah', yet [the statement] was necessary [in the case] where he teaches others and these go and do observe [the laws of the Torah]. Since it might have been assumed that he also receives reward,²¹ hence we were taught [that he does not]. And if you wish I may say [that the statement] 'who rivets himself to the word of the halachah' [applies] to a judge who, when a lawsuit is brought before him, and he knows of an halachah [relating to a similar case], compares one case with the other²² and, though he has a teacher, he does not go to him to inquire.²³ [Such a judge brings evil upon himself] for R. Samuel b. Nahmani stated in the name of R. Jonathan: A judge should always imagine himself as if [he had] a sword lying between his thighs, and Gehenna was open beneath him; as it is said in Scripture, Behold, it is the couch²⁴ of Solomon; threescore mighty men²⁵ are about it, of the mighty men of Israel etc. because of the dread in the night:²⁶ 'because of the dread of' Gehenna²⁷ which is like 'the night'.

R. GAMALIEL SAID: IF SHE EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF MI'UN etc. R. Eleazar inquired of Rab: What is R. Gamaliel's reason?²⁸ Is it because he holds the opinion that the betrothal of a minor remains in a suspended condition²⁹ and as she grows up it grows with her³⁰ even though no cohabitation has taken place;³¹ or is the reason because he is of the opinion that when a man betroths the sister of his sister-in-law the latter procures her exemption thereby, but thereby only,³² [and consequently] only if cohabitation has taken place is the elder sister exempt,³³ but if no cohabitation has taken place she is not? — The other replied, This is R. Gamaliel's reason: Because he is of the opinion that when a man betroths the sister of his sister-in-law the latter procures her exemption thereby but thereby only³² [and consequently] only if cohabitation has taken place is the elder sister exempt,³³ but if no cohabitation has taken place she is not.

Said R. Shesheth: It seems³⁴ that Rab made this statement while he was sleepy and about to doze off;³⁵ for it was taught: If a man betrothed a minor, her betrothal remains in a suspended condition. Now, what [is meant by] 'a suspended condition' ? Obviously³⁶ that as she grows up it grows up with her³⁷ even though there was no cohabitation.³⁸ Said Rabin the son of R. Nahman to him: The matter of the betrothal of a minor³⁹ remains in a suspended condition. If cohabitation had taken place⁴⁰ it is valid, but if no cohabitation had taken place⁴⁰ it is not; for [in the absence of such cohabitation] she thinks 'He has an advantage over me'⁴¹ and I have an advantage over him'.⁴²

Is Rab, however, of the opinion that only if cohabitation had taken place is the betrothal valid,⁴³ but if there was no cohabitation it is not? Surely it was stated: Where a minor did not exercise her right of mi'un and, when she became of age, actually⁴⁴ married [another man], Rab ruled: She requires no letter of divorce from her second husband, and Samuel ruled: She requires a letter of divorce from her second husband.⁴⁵

Does not [this refer to a case] where he¹ did not cohabit [with her]?² — No; where he¹ did cohabit with her.³ If, however, he¹ cohabited [with her] what is Samuel's reason?⁴ — He holds the view that one Who performs cohabitation does so in reliance on his first betrothal.⁵ But surely they⁶ once disputed this point! For it was stated: If a man betrothed a woman conditionally,⁷ and unconditionally, Rab ruled: She⁸ requires from him a letter of divorce; and Samuel ruled: She requires no letter of divorce from him. 'Rab ruled: She requires from him a letter of divorce', because as soon as he marries her he undoubtedly dispenses with his condition.⁹ 'And Samuel ruled: She requires no letter of divorce from him', because one who performs cohabitation does so in reliance on his first betrothal!¹⁰ — [Both disputes were] necessary. For if the former¹¹ only had been stated, it might have been assumed that Rab adheres to his opinion there only because no condition¹² was attached [to the betrothal]¹³ but in the latter case,¹⁴ where a condition was attached to it, he agrees with Samuel.¹⁵ And if the latter case¹⁴ only had been stated, it might have been assumed that there only¹⁶ does Samuel maintain his view¹⁷ but in the former¹⁸ he agrees with Rab.¹⁹ [Hence both were] required.

Did Rab, however, state that only where [the husband] cohabited with her²⁰ does she require a letter of divorce²¹ but that if he did not cohabit with her none is required?²² Surely it once happened at Naresh that a man betrothed a girl while she was a minor, and, when she attained her majority and he placed her upon the bridal chair,²³ another man came and snatched her away from him; and, though Rab's disciples, R. Beruna and R. Hananel, were present on the occasion, they did not require the girl to obtain a letter of divorce from the second man!²⁴ — R. Papa replied: At Naresh they married²⁵ first and then placed [the bride] upon the bridal chair.²⁶ R. Ashi replied: He²⁷ acted improperly²⁸ they, therefore, treated him also improperly, and deprived him of the right of valid betrothal.²⁹ Said Rabina to R. Ashi: [Your explanation is] satisfactory where the man betrothed [her] with money;³⁰ what [however, can be said where] he betrothed her by cohabitation? — The Rabbis have declared his cohabitation to be an act of mere fornication.³¹

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer;³² and so did R. Eleazar state: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer.³²

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WAS MARRIED TO TWO ORPHANS WHO WERE MINORS³³ AND DIED, COHABITATION³⁴ OR HALIZAH³⁵ WITH ONE OF THEM EXEMPTS HER RIVAL.³⁶ AND THE SAME LAW IS APPLICABLE TO³⁷ TWO DEAF³⁸ WOMEN.³⁹

[IF A MAN WAS MARRIED TO] A MINOR AND TO A DEAF³⁸ WOMAN,⁴⁰ COHABITATION WITH ONE OF THEM DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL.⁴¹ [IF ONE WAS] POSSESSED OF HER FACULTIES AND THE OTHER WAS DEAF,⁴² COHABITATION WITH THE FORMER EXEMPTS THE LATTER, BUT COHABITATION WITH THE LATTER DOES NOT EXEMPT THE FORMER. [IF ONE WAS] OF AGE AND THE OTHER A MINOR, COHABITATION WITH THE FORMER EXEMPTS THE LATTER, BUT COHABITATION

WITH THE LATTER DOES NOT EXEMPT THE FORMER.

GEMARA. Is, however, a deaf⁴² woman permitted to perform halizah? Surely, we learned: If a deaf levir submitted to halizah or a deaf sister-in-law performed halizah, or if halizah was performed on a minor, the halizah is invalid!⁴³ — R. Giddal replied in the name of Rab: [This⁴⁴ applies] to COHABITATION.⁴⁵ Raba⁴⁶ replied: It⁴⁷ may be said to apply even to halizah; one⁴⁸ referring to a woman who was originally deaf,⁴⁹ and the other⁵⁰ referring to a woman who was possessed of hearing⁵¹ and became deaf afterwards. The ‘woman who was originally deaf’, leaves⁵² as she entered,⁵³ but the ‘woman who was possessed of hearing and became deaf afterwards’ cannot do so, since her inability to recite [the prescribed formulae]⁵⁴ acts as an obstacle.⁵⁵

Abaye raised an objection against him: Is, however, one who was originally deaf permitted to perform halizah? Surely, we learned: If two brothers, one of whom was in possession of his faculties and the other deaf,⁴⁵ were [respectively] married to two strangers,⁵⁶ one of whom was in the possession of her faculties and the other deaf,⁵⁷ and the deaf [brother] who was the husband of the deaf woman died, what should [his brother who was] in possession of his faculties, the husband of the woman in possession of her faculties, do? He marries her⁵⁸ and if he wishes to send her away,⁵⁹ he may do so.⁶⁰ If the [brother] who was in possession of his faculties, the husband of the woman who was in possession of her faculties, died, what should the deaf brother, the husband of the deaf woman do? He marries [the widow] and may never divorce her.⁶¹ Does not this apply to a woman who was originally deaf?⁶² And yet it was stated that he may only marry

(1) Her first husband.

(2) After she had attained her majority. And since Rab nevertheless rules that no divorce from the second husband is required it is obvious that he regards her first marriage as valid!

(3) And it is this cohabitation, not their first betrothal, that constitutes the kinyan of the first marriage.

(4) Since cohabitation renders the betrothal of the first husband valid, that of the second must be invalid; why then did Samuel require the woman to be divorced from her second husband!

(5) Which was invalid. The marriage with the second husband is therefore valid and can be annulled by divorce only.

(6) Rab and Samuel.

(7) Stipulating, for instance, that she must have no bodily defect or that she must not be subject to any restrictions due to a vow she may have made.

(8) If it was discovered that she had a defect or that she was subject to the restrictions due to a vow.

(9) And valid kinyan is effected by their first cohabitation.

(10) Which was invalid; v. Keth. 72b. Why then should they dispute the same point again?

(11) Lit., ‘that’; the dispute concerning a minor who did not exercise her right of mi’un, cited from Keth. 73a.

(12) This is the reading of Rashi, following the version in Keth. 73a. The reading of cur. edd. is given infra p. 766, n. 6.

(13) And the husband was obviously anxious to give the union all the necessary validity. Being well aware that the betrothal of a minor is Pentateuchally invalid he naturally ‘betroths’ her again by cohabitation as soon as she becomes of age.

(14) Lit., ‘that’; cited from Keth. 72b.

(15) That the original condition remains in force even after consummation of the marriage.

(16) Since the condition was attached to the original betrothal,

(17) That the marriage remains dependent on the original condition and is, therefore, invalid.

(18) v. supra p. 765, n. 13.

(19) Cur. edd. read, ‘For if that had been stated, (it might have been assumed that) in that case only did Rab maintain his view, because there existed a condition and as soon as (the man) cohabited with her he dispensed with his condition; but in this case it might have been assumed that he agrees with Samuel; and if this had been stated (it might have been assumed that) in this case only did Samuel maintain his view; but in that, it might have been said, he agrees with Rab’. [Rashi rejects this reading in view of the passage in Keth. 72a which states distinctly that Rab’s ruling was not because he held that the man dispenses with the condition on intercourse, but because he renews betrothal at the time to avoid intercourse degenerating into mere fornication. Tosaf. s.v. בההיא retains the reading of cur. edd., and explains that it is because no man would render his intercourse mere fornication that we assume that he dispensed with the condition, since he made no mention of the condition at the time. Had he, however, repeated the condition at intercourse, the condition would stand].

(20) The minor who has attained majority.

(21) Lit., 'yes'.

(22) Lit., 'not'.

(23) It is assumed that this was a ceremony similar to ordinary huppah (v. Glos.).

(24) Obviously because they regarded the first marriage. though no cohabitation had taken place (v. supra n. 10), as valid, As the disciples presumably acted in accordance with the ruling of their Master, Rab, how could it be said that Rab requires a divorce only where cohabitation had taken place?

(25) Cohabitation.

(26) And this is the reason why Rab's disciples regarded the marriage with the first husband as valid and, therefore, required no divorce from the second man.

(27) The second man.

(28) In snatching away another man's wife.

(29) All betrothals are made 'in accordance with the law of Moses and Israel' (cf. P.B. p. 298) i.e.. the Pentateuchal, as well as Rabbinic law; hence it is within the power of the Rabbinical authorities to declare certain betrothals, such, for instance, as the present one where the girl was improperly snatched away, to be invalid.

(30) One of the forms of kinyan in marriage (cf. Kid. 2a). Since the Rabbis are empowered to confiscate a man's property they might well dispose of the money of the betrothal by treating it as a mere gift to the girl.

(31) Which has no legal validity to effect a kinyan.

(32) That THE MINOR IS TO BE INSTRUCTED TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN.

(33) Marriage with whom is only Rabbinically valid.

(34) By the levir, even during her minority, for the purpose of the levirate marriage.

(35) After she has attained her majority.

(36) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(37) Lit., 'and so'.

(38) I.e., deaf-mute.

(39) Marriage with whom, like marriage with a minor, is only Rabbinically valid.

(40) Though the marriage with either, according to Rabbinic law, is of equal validity.

(41) Since it is uncertain, owing to the difference in their physical condition and age, which of them he preferred and which of them has consequently the greater claim to be regarded as his wife.

(42) I.e., deaf-mute.

(43) Supra 104b. How then could it be said in our Mishnah. AND THE SAME LAW IS APPLICABLE TO TWO DEAF WOMEN?

(44) The law in our Mishnah concerning two deaf women. V. supra n. 3.

(45) Not to halizah.

(46) Others, 'Rabbah'. Cf. infra p. 772, n. 8.

(47) V. supra note 4.

(48) Lit. , 'here'; our Mishnah which allows halizah in respect of a deaf woman.

(49) Even before her marriage.

(50) The Mishnah supra 104b which rules the halizah of a deaf woman to be invalid.

(51) At the time she married.

(52) The levir by means of halizah.

(53) The marriage with her husband. As the marriage was performed by means of signs and gestures so also is the halizah.

(54) Cf. supra 106b.

(55) As a deaf-mute she is unable to recite them and is consequently precluded from the performance of halizah.

(56) I.e., women who were not related to one another.

(57) I.e., deaf-mute.

(58) I.e., contracts the levirate marriage by means of signs and gestures. No halizah is permitted since the woman is incapable of reciting the prescribed formulae.

(59) After he has married her.

(60) Divorcing her, as he married her, by the use of signs and gestures.

(61) Infra 112b. The divorce of a man who is not in the possession of all his faculties cannot annul the marriage of his brother who was in the possession of all his faculties and whose marriage, therefore, subjects him to a levirate marriage that can never be annulled.

(62) Probably it does.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 110b

but not submit to halizah!¹ — No, this refers to a woman who was capable of hearing² and became deaf afterwards.³

Come and hear: If two brothers of sound senses were married to two strangers⁴ one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, and [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the deaf woman, died, what should the [brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the woman who was of sound senses, do? He marries [the deaf widow], and if he wishes to divorce her he may do so.⁵ If [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the woman who was of sound senses, died, what should the [brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the woman who was deaf, do? He may either submit to halizah or contract levirate marriage.⁶ Are we not to assume that⁷ as the man was originally⁸ of sound senses so was she originally⁸ deaf, and nevertheless it was stated that he may only⁹ marry her but may not submit to her halizah!¹⁰ — Is this an argument? Each one may bear its own meaning.¹¹

An objection was raised against him:¹² If two brothers, one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, were married to two sisters, one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, and the deaf brother, the husband of the deaf sister, died, what should [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of [the sister who was] of sound senses, do? — [Nothing, since] the widow is released¹³ by virtue of her being [the levir's] wife's sister. If [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of [the sister who was] of sound senses, died, what should the deaf brother, the husband of the deaf sister, do? He releases his wife by means of a letter of divorce,¹⁴ while his brother's wife is for ever forbidden [to marry again].¹⁵ And should you reply that here also [it is a case of a man] who was of sound senses and who became afterwards deaf, is [such a man, it may be retorted], in a position to divorce [his wife]? Surely, we learned: If she¹⁶ became deaf, he may divorce her; if she became insane, he may not divorce her.¹⁷ If he became deaf or insane he may never divorce her.¹⁸ Consequently it must be a case of a man¹⁹ who was originally²⁰ deaf. And since [the man spoken of] is one who was originally deaf, the woman [spoken of in the same context must] also be one who was originally deaf; and, as the sisters were such as were originally deaf, the strangers also [must be such as were] originally deaf; but in the case of the strangers we learned that [the levir] may only marry²¹ but may not submit to halizah!²² The other²³ remained silent.

When he²⁴ visited R. Joseph, the latter said to him: Why did you raise your objections against him²³ from [teachings] which he could parry by replying that the sisters [spoken of are such as were] originally deaf, and that the strangers [are such as were originally] of sound senses who became deaf afterwards? You should rather have raised your objection against him from the following: If two deaf brothers were married to two sisters who were of sound senses, or to two deaf sisters or to two sisters one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf; and so also if two deaf sisters were married to two brothers who were of sound senses, or to two deaf brothers, or to two brothers one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, behold these women²⁵ are exempt from levirate marriage and from halizah.²⁶ If [however the women] were strangers²⁷ [the respective levirs] must marry them,²⁸ and if they wish to divorce them, they may do so.²⁹ Now, how [is this ruling]³⁰ to be understood? If it be suggested [that it refers to brothers who were first]³¹ of sound senses and who became deaf afterwards,³² could they [it may be asked] divorce [their wives]? Surely, we learned: If he³³ became deaf or insane he may never divorce her!³⁴ This ruling must consequently refer³⁵ to [brothers who were] originally³¹ deaf; and since they [are such as were] originally deaf, the women [referred to must] also be [such as were] originally³¹ deaf; and it was nevertheless taught: 'If [the women, however], Were strangers [the respective levirs] must marry them',³⁶ they may thus only³⁷ marry them but may not submit to their halizah. This, then, presents a refutation of Rabbah!³⁸ — This is indeed a refutation.

A MINOR AND A DEAF WOMAN etc. R. Nahman related: I once found R. Adda b. Ahabah and his son-in-law R. Hana sitting in the market place of Pumbeditha and bandying arguments³⁹ and [in the course of these they] stated: The ruling,⁴⁰ [IF A MAN WAS MARRIED TO] A MINOR AND TO A DEAF WOMAN, COHABITATION WITH ONE OF THEM DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL applies only to a case⁴¹ where [the widows] became subject to him⁴² through a brother of his who was of sound senses, since it is not known to us whether he⁴³ was more pleased with the minor or whether he was more pleased with the deaf woman; 'whether he was more pleased with the minor' because she would [in due course] reach the age of intelligence or 'whether he was more pleased with the deaf woman' because she was fully grown and in a marriageable condition; if [the widows], however, became subject to him⁴² through a deaf brother of his, there is no doubt that he⁴⁴ was more pleased with the deaf woman, because she was of matrimonial age and of his kind. But I told them: Even if [the widows] became subject to him⁴⁵ through a deaf brother of his [the question of his preference still remains] a matter of doubt.

How do they⁴⁶ obtain redress?⁴⁷ — R. Hisda replied in the name of Rab: [The levir] marries the deaf widow and then releases her by a letter of divorce,⁴⁸ while the minor waits until she is of age, when she performs halizah.⁴⁹

From this, said R. Hisda, it may be inferred that Rab is of the opinion that a deaf wife is partially acquired,⁵⁰ [while concerning] a minor [it is a matter of doubt whether] she is [properly] acquired,⁵¹ or not acquired [at all];⁵² for were it to be suggested that concerning a deaf wife [it is uncertain whether] she is acquired⁵¹ or not acquired [at all and that] a minor is partially acquired,⁵⁰ [the question would arise] why [should the levir] marry [the deaf widow] and release her by a letter of divorce?

(1) Owing to the woman's incapability of reciting the prescribed formulae. How, then, could Raba (or Rabbah) state that in such a case halizah is permissible?

(2) At the time she married.

(3) After he has married her.

(4) I.e., women who were not related to one another.

(5) V. supra n. 5.

(6) Infra 112b.

(11) Lit., 'that as it is, and that etc.'

(12) Raba (or Rabbah).

(13) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(14) He must not continue to live with her because she is the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.) the levirate bond with whom is, as was her marriage with her husband, Pentateuchally valid, while his own marriage with his deaf wife, though valid in Rabbinic law, is invalid in Pentateuchal law. A Rabbinically valid marriage cannot override a levirate bond which is Pentateuchal.

(15) Infra 112b. She is forbidden to her brother-in-law since she is (in Rabbinic law) his wife's (or divorcee's) sister, and she is forbidden to other men since, as a deaf-mute who is unable to recite the prescribed formulae, her brother-in-law is precluded from submitting to halizah from her, and, in consequence, she remains attached to him by the levirate bond. Now, as the levir's deafness is, in this case, an affliction from which he suffered prior to his marriage, the deafness spoken of in the two previously cited cases (since all these appear in the same contexts) must similarly refer to afflictions commenced prior to the marriage. This then presents an objection against Raba (cf. supra p. 769, n. 8)!

(16) One's wife.

(17) In accordance with a Rabbinical provision safeguarding the position of the woman who, were she to be divorced and thus remain unprotected by a husband, would be subject, owing to her mental condition, to serious moral and physical danger.

(18) Infra 112b; because his marriage which took place when he was in full possession of his senses was Pentateuchally valid, while a divorce given by him while deaf or insane would have no Pentateuchal validity.

(19) Lit., 'but not?'

(20) Prior to the marriage.

(21) Lit., 'yes'.

(22) V. supra p. 769, n. 8.

(23) Raba (or Rabbah).

(24) Abaye.

(25) If their husbands died without issue.

(26) Because all these marriages having been contracted by signs and gestures, are of equal validity. Each widow is, therefore, forbidden to the respective levir as his wife's sister.

Jastrow renders, 'They were sitting and raising arguments'. Another interpretation of Rashi derives the expression from the rt קוּדָה 'to gather'; 'they were gathering round them an assembly of students'.

(43) The deceased brother.

(44) The deceased brother.

(45) Lit., 'she fell'.

(46) The minor and the deaf wife whose husband died childless and who became subject to a levir.

(47) Since one does not exempt the other (v. our Mishnah) and the deaf woman is incapable of performing halizah. Were the levir to marry the deaf widow and submit to halizah from the minor after she had attained her majority, the former would become forbidden to him by the halizah of her rival ('If a man did not build he must never build', supra), the marriage of the deaf not being Pentateuchally valid to sever the levirate bond with the minor.

(48) Cf. supra n. 4.

(49) Both widows are thus released from the levir.

(50) By her husband. Lit., 'acquired and left over'; only in a part of her person is she legally regarded as wife, Cf. infra n. 9.

(51) Completely; and she is consequently regarded as the deceased brother's proper wife.

(52) And consequently she is legally no more than a stranger. That the legal condition of relationship between the minor and her husband is different from that between the deaf wife and her husband is fairly obvious. For if they were both regarded as partially acquired, or if the acquisition of either was regarded as doubtful, their legal position would in no way differ from that of two minors or two deaf women, while, in fact, it does. (Cf. our Mishnah and the following one). From Rab's ruling, however, it is inferred that it is the deaf wife who is partially acquired and that it is the minor concerning whom it is uncertain whether she is wholly acquired or not acquired at all.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 111a

Let her¹ continue to live with him in any case. For if [a deaf woman] is acquired² then she is of course acquired,³ and if she is not acquired,⁴ then she is a mere stranger.⁵ And should you argue, 'why should the minor wait until she grows up and then performs halizah? Let her⁶ continue to live with him [for the same reason⁷ that] if she is [properly] acquired⁴ then she is of course acquired,⁸ and if she is not acquired,⁴ then she is a mere stranger';⁹ if so [it could be retorted] whereby should the deaf [widow] be released!¹⁰

R. Shesheth said: Logical deduction leads also to the interpretation R. Hisda imparted to Rab's ruling.¹¹ For it was taught: If two brothers were married to two orphan sisters,¹² a minor and a deaf woman, and the husband of the minor died, the deaf widow is released by means of a letter of divorce¹³ while the minor waits until she is of age, when she performs halizah.¹⁴ If the husband of the deaf woman dies, the minor is released by a letter of divorce¹⁵ while the deaf widow is forever forbidden [to marry again].¹⁶ If, however, he cohabited with the deaf widow¹⁷ he must give her a letter of divorce and she¹⁸ becomes permitted [to marry any other man].¹⁹ Now, if you grant that a deaf wife is partially acquired²⁰ [and that concerning] a minor [it is doubtful whether] she is [fully] acquired²¹ or not acquired [at all], one can well see the reason why when he cohabited with the deaf widow he gives her a letter of divorce and she becomes permitted [to marry any other man]. For you may rightly claim that in any case [she becomes permitted]. If the minor is acquired,²¹ [the deaf widow] is rightly released as his wife's sister;²² and if she is not acquired [at all] he has quite lawfully contracted with her²³ the levirate marriage.²⁴ If you contend, however, [that concerning] a deaf woman [it is doubtful whether] she is acquired¹⁹ or not acquired [at all], and that a minor is partially acquired,²⁰ [the difficulty arises] why should the deaf widow, if he cohabited with her and gave her a letter of divorce, be permitted [to marry again] when the cohabitation with her was unlawful,²⁵ and an unlawful cohabitation does not release a woman?²⁶ — It is possible that this statement represents the view of²⁷ R. Nehemiah who ruled that an unlawful cohabitation exempts [a widow] from halizah.²⁸

If [this statement represents the view of] R. Nehemiah read the final clause: 'If a man was married to two orphans,²⁹ one of whom was a minor and the other deaf, and died 'and the levir cohabited with the minor and then cohabited with the deaf widow, or a brother of his cohabited with the deaf widow,³⁰ both are forbidden to him.'³¹ How do they obtain redress? The deaf woman is released by a letter of divorce³¹ while the minor waits until she is of age 'when she performs halizah'.³² Now, if you grant³³ that a deaf wife is partially acquired [and that concerning] a minor [it is doubtful whether she is fully] acquired or not acquired [at all],³⁴ and [that the opinion in this statement] is that of the Rabbis,³⁵ one can well understand the reason why³⁶ 'the minor³⁷ waits until she is of age, when she performs halizah', since [otherwise]³⁸ he might cohabit with the deaf widow first,³⁹ and the [subsequent] cohabitation with the minor would [thereby] be rendered an unlawful cohabitation.⁴⁰ If you contend, however, [that the opinion in the statement is that of] R. Nehemiah,⁴¹ surely he [it may be objected] ruled that an unlawful cohabitation does exempt!⁴² Consequently it must be concluded [that the opinion in the statement is that of] the Rabbis. Our point is thus proved.

R. Ashi said: From the first clause⁴³ also it may be inferred that [the opinion expressed] is that of the Rabbis. For it was stated, 'If,⁴⁴ however, he cohabited with the deaf widow he must give her a letter of divorce and she becomes permitted [to marry any other man]', but it was not stated,⁴⁵ 'If he cohabited with the minor, he must give her a letter of divorce and she becomes permitted'!⁴⁶ — If this is all, there is not much force in the argument; since in respect of the deaf widow for whom no lawful redress is possible⁴⁷ mention had to be made of redress obtained through a forbidden act,⁴⁸ but concerning a minor, for whom lawful redress is possible,⁴⁹ no redress obtainable through a forbidden act was mentioned.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WHO WAS MARRIED TO TWO ORPHANS WHO WERE MINORS DIED, AND THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH ONE,⁵⁰ AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE OTHER,⁵¹ OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE OTHER,⁵¹

- (1) Once the levir married her.
 - (2) As the legal wife of her husband.
 - (3) And having been the proper wife of the deceased, her marriage with the levir severs the levirate bond with the minor, the subsequent halizah with whom is null and void and in no way affects the validity of her marriage.
 - (4) As the legal wife of her husband.
 - (5) To the minor, halizah with whom does not concern her at all. Consequently it must be inferred that it is the deaf wife who is partially acquired, and that the doubt as to complete acquisition or none exists in the case of the minor.
 - (6) Once the levir married her.
 - (7) Given in the case of the deaf woman.
 - (8) Cf. supra n. 1 mutatis mutandis.
 - (9) To the deaf woman, marriage with whom does not consequently affect the validity of her marriage.
 - (10) Of halizah she is incapable, owing to her inability to recite the prescribed formulae; and marriage with her after a marriage had been contracted with the minor is forbidden. Hence the necessity for Rab's ruling which provides redress for the minor as well as the deaf widow.
 - (11) That a deaf wife is partially acquired and the legality of the acquisition of a minor is altogether doubtful.
 - (12) Orphan is mentioned on account of the minor.
 - (13) She is forbidden to live with her husband as the sister of the minor who is now his zekukah (v. Glos.), since she, as a deaf woman, is only partially acquired as wife, while the minor's acquisition by her husband (and consequently her levirate bond with the levir) might possibly have been completely valid.
 - (14) And is then free to marry any other man.
 - (15) As it is possible that the minor is not acquired at all as a wife, while the levirate bond with the deaf widow is at all events partially valid, the former is forbidden to her husband as the sister of his zekukah. (V. Glos. and cf. supra n. 11).
 - (16) She is forbidden to the levir as the sister of his divorcee (it being possible that the minor was completely acquired as his wife), and she is forbidden to any other man since, owing to her inability to recite the required formulae, the levir cannot release her by halizah. Even when the minor dies, and the prohibition of 'divorcee's sister' is lifted, she remains forbidden to the levir as 'brother's wife'. Since at the time she became subject to the levir as his deceased brother's wife she was for some reason unfit to contract the levirate marriage, the prohibition of 'brother's wife' comes again into force.
 - (17) After he had divorced the minor.
 - (18) Though the cohabitation was forbidden.
 - (19) Because (a) if the minor was to be regarded as his legal wife, the deaf woman was all the time permitted to marry a stranger since, as his wife's sister, she was never subject to the levirate obligations; and if (b) the minor was not to be regarded as his legal wife, his marriage with the deaf widow, who accordingly was not his wife's sister, was a valid levirate marriage which was duly and lawfully annulled by the letter of divorce which set her free.
 - (20) V. supra p. 773, n. 7.
 - (21) Cf. supra p. 773, n. 8.
 - (22) Cf. supra n. 3 (a).
 - (23) The deaf widow.
 - (24) Cf. supra n. 3 (b).
 - (25) Since the minor is at least partially his wife and the deaf widow is forbidden to him as his wife's sister.
 - (26) From the levirate obligations. Since it is possible that the deaf woman was completely acquired as wife by the deceased brother, the levirate bond between her and the levir is also fully valid, and as the partial acquisition of the minor by her husband (the levir) cannot annul such a possibly fully valid bond, the deaf widow is precluded from marrying either the levir whose partial wife's sister she is (cf. supra n. 9) or from marrying any other man to whom she can be permitted only through halizah with the levir, which she, as a deaf person, is incapable of performing. Had she been permitted to marry the levir, his cohabitation with her would have released her from any further levirate obligation, while his divorce would have set her free to marry any other man. Since, however, cohabitation with the levir is unlawful, she cannot thereby be released from her levirate obligation and should consequently remain forbidden to all men forever!

(27) Lit., 'this, who?'

(28) V. supra 50b. Hence the permissibility for the deaf widow to marry again after she had been divorced.

(29) V. supra p. 774 n. 10.

(30) After the former had cohabited with the minor.

(31) The reason is given infra.

(32) And she is free at all events: If the minor was a lawfully acquired wife the deaf widow is exempt from the levirate marriage by the former's levirate marriage; and if the minor was not a lawfully acquired wife, the deaf widow had performed the levirate obligation by her own cohabitation with the levir through whose divorce she is now free to marry again.

(33) In respect of the two sisters spoken of in the first clause cited.

(34) Cf. supra p. 775, n. 3.

(35) Who maintain that an unlawful cohabitation does not exempt a deceased brother's widow from the levirate marriage and halizah.

(36) In the final clause, relating to a marriage with orphans who were strangers to each other.

(37) Though marriage with her by the levir should in any case be permitted. For if she was fully acquired by her husband the subsequent cohabitation by the levir with the deaf widow who was only partially acquired can have no validity to cause the minor's prohibition to him; and if she was not acquired at all she, as a stranger, should also be permitted to the levir; and in either case her divorce should set her free without the performance of halizah.

(38) If halizah were not imposed upon the minor when she attains her majority.

(39) And the minor, since it is possible that she was fully acquired, would not be exempt by the levir's cohabitation with the deaf widow who was only partially acquired.

(40) Since it followed that of the deaf widow who, having been at least partially acquired, is the minor's rival, and two rivals may not be married. As in such a case the minor could not be free before she became of age and performed halizah, a similar restriction has been imposed in the former case also.

(41) That the minor is partially acquired and that concerning the deaf woman the validity of her acquisition as a wife is in doubt.

(42) Why then should the minor have to wait until she is of age? If the deaf woman is not acquired at all the minor's cohabitation with the levir is, surely, permitted. But even if the deaf woman is acquired, and her levirate bond causes the minor to be forbidden to the levir, there should be no need for the minor to wait until she is of age and able to perform the halizah, while according to R. Nehemiah, an unlawful cohabitation also exempts a woman from the levirate marriage and halizah!

(43) Which deals with the marriage of two sisters.

(44) When the husband of the deaf sister died.

(45) In the case where the husband of the minor died.

(46) Which would be the law according to R. Nehemiah, who ruled that an unlawful cohabitation exempts the woman from the levirate obligations. The statement, consequently, must represent the view of the Rabbis, and the reason why the minor cannot be released by a letter of divorce is because cohabitation with her is unlawful since she is the sister of the levir's partially acquired wife; while she herself, in case she was fully acquired, is subject to the levirate bond, from which the marriage with her deaf sister, whose kinyan was only partial, cannot exempt her.

(47) As she is forbidden to all men including the levir, as shewn supra.

(48) It being the only possible means whereby she could marry again.

(49) She has only to wait until she is of age, when she can lawfully perform halizah and thereby obtain her freedom.

(50) Lit., 'the first'.

(51) Lit., 'the second'.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 111b

HE HAS NOT THEREBY RENDERED THE FIRST INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM];¹ AND THE SAME LAW IS APPLICABLE TO TWO DEAF WOMEN.

[IF ONE WAS] A MINOR AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH THE MINOR AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE DEAF WIDOW, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE DEAF WIDOW, HE HAS RENDERED THE MINOR INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM].² IF THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH THE DEAF WIDOW AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE MINOR, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE MINOR, HE HAS RENDERED THE DEAF WIDOW INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM].³

[IF ONE WAS] OF SOUND SENSES AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH THE FORMER AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE LATTER, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE LATTER, HE DOES NOT RENDER THE FORMER INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM]. IF THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH THE LATTER, AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE FORMER, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE FORMER, HE RENDERS THE LATTER INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM].

[IF ONE WAS] OF AGE AND THE OTHER A MINOR, AND THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH [THE WIDOW] WHO WAS OF AGE, AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE MINOR, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE MINOR, HE DOES NOT RENDER THE ELDER INELIGIBLE FOR HIM. IF THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH THE MINOR, AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH [THE WIDOW WHO WAS] OF AGE, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH [THE WIDOW WHO WAS] OF AGE, HE RENDERS THE MINOR INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM].

R. ELEAZAR RULED: THE MINOR IS TO BE INSTRUCTED TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN AGAINST HIM.⁴

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer⁵. So also did R. Eleazar⁶ state: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar.⁷ And [both statements⁸ were] required. For if the statement had been made on the first [Mishnah] only⁵ [it might have been assumed that] in that case alone did Samuel hold that the halachah is in agreement With R. Eliezer,⁹ since [the levir there] had not fulfilled the commandment of the levirate marriage,¹⁰ but in this case¹¹ where¹² the commandment of the levirate marriage has been fulfilled, it might have been assumed that both must be released by a letter of divorce.¹³ And if the information¹⁴ had been given on the latter¹¹ only, [it might have been suggested that] only in this case [is the halachah in agreement with him], because the elder is subject to levirate marriage¹⁵ with him, but not¹⁶ in the other case.¹⁷ [Hence both statements were] required.

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR WHO WAS A MINOR COHABITED WITH A SISTER-IN-LAW WHO WAS A MINOR, THEY SHOULD BE BROUGHT UP TOGETHER.¹⁸ IF HE COHABITED WITH A SISTER-IN-LAW WHO WAS OF AGE, SHE SHOULD BRING HIM UP UNTIL HE IS OF AGE.¹⁹

IF A SISTER-IN-LAW DECLARED WITHIN THIRTY DAYS [AFTER HER LEVIRATE MARRIAGE], 'HE HAS NOT COHABITED WITH ME',²⁰ [THE LEVIR] IS COMPELLED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH,²¹ BUT [IF HER DECLARATION WAS MADE] AFTER THIRTY DAYS, HE IS ONLY REQUESTED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH.²² WHEN, HOWEVER, HE ADMITS [HER ASSERTION], HE IS COMPELLED, EVEN AFTER TWELVE MONTHS, TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH.

IF A WOMAN VOWED TO HAVE NO BENEFIT FROM HER BROTHER-IN-LAW, THE LATTER IS COMPELLED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH, [IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND,²³ BUT IF AFTER THE DEATH OF HER HUSBAND,²⁴ THE LEVIR MAY ONLY BE REQUESTED²⁵ TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH. IF THIS,²⁶ HOWEVER, WAS IN HER MIND [EVEN IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND, THE LEVIR MAY ONLY BE REQUESTED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH.²⁷

GEMARA. Must it be assumed that our Mishnah²⁸ is not in agreement with R. Meir? For it was taught: A boy minor and a girl minor may neither perform halizah nor contract levirate marriage;²⁹ so R. Meir!³⁰ — It may even be said to agree with R. Meir, for R. Meir spoke only [of the levirate marriage of a sister-in-law] who was of age to a minor, and [of one who was] a minor to [a levir that was] of age, since one of these³¹ [may possibly be performing] forbidden cohabitation.³² He did not speak, however, of a boy minor who cohabited with a girl minor, in which case both are in the same position.³³ But, surely, it was stated, IF HE COHABITED WITH A SISTER-IN-LAW WHO WAS OF AGE SHE SHOULD BRING HIM UP UNTIL HE IS OF AGE!³⁴ — R. Hanina of Hozaah replied: If he had already cohabited [the law] is different.³⁵ But was it not stated: SHE SHOULD BRING HIM UP UNTIL HE IS OF AGE,³⁶ though each act of cohabitation is a forbidden one!³⁷ — The truth is clearly that our Mishnah cannot be in agreement with R. Meir.

Should not the text, To raise up unto his brother a name,³⁸ be applied here? And this minor,³⁹ Surely, is not capable of it!⁴⁰ — Abaye replied: Scripture said, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,⁴¹ whoever he may be.⁴² Raba⁴³ replied: Without this [text] also you could not say [that a minor may not contract levirate marriage]. For is there any act [in connection with the levirate marriage] which is at one time⁴⁴ forbidden and after a time⁴⁵ permitted? Surely, Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: Any sister-in-law to whom the instruction, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,⁴¹ cannot be applied at the time when she becomes subject to the levirate marriage, is indeed like the wife of a brother who has children, and is consequently forbidden!⁴⁶ But then might it not be suggested that this same [principle is applicable here] also?⁴⁷ — Scripture said, If brethren dwell together,⁴⁸ even if [one brother is only] one day old.⁴⁹

IF A SISTER-IN-LAW DECLARED WITHIN THIRTY DAYS etc. Who is it that taught that up to thirty days⁵⁰ a man may restrain himself?⁵¹ -R. Johanan replied: It is R. Meir; for it was taught: A complaint in respect of virginity⁵² [may be brought] during the first⁵³ thirty days;⁵⁴ so R. Meir. R. Jose said: If [the woman] was shut up [with him, the complaint must be made] forthwith; if she was not shut up [with him], it may be made even after many years.⁵⁵ Rabbah stated: It⁵⁶ may even be said [to represent the opinion of] R. Jose,⁵⁷ for R. Jose spoke there⁵⁵ only of one's betrothed with whom one is familiar,⁵⁸ but [not of] the wife of one's brother

(1) As the kinyan of both is of equal validity or invalidity, if the levir's kinyan of the first was valid, that of the other, coming as it does after it, is ineffective, while if his kinyan of the first was invalid, that of the other was equally invalid and both have the same status as strangers whom he never married. He may, therefore, retain the first who is in any case permitted to him, while the second must be released, since it is possible that the kinyan of a minor is valid and both were, therefore, the lawful wives of the deceased brother, who, as rivals, cannot both be married by the levir.

(2) This is a preventive measure against the possibility of marrying the deaf woman first. Cf. Gemara supra 111a — Rashi. Cf. infra p. 779, n. 1. [Mishnayoth edd.: 'he does not render the minor ineligible', the reason being if the minor is fully acquired, the act of cohabitation with the deaf-mute that followed has no validity. Should, on the other hand, the kinyan in regard to a minor be of no effect whatsoever, then she could not be considered the wife of the deceased brother, v. Bertinoro a.l.].

(3) Since it is possible that the minor is fully acquired, while in the case of the other it is certain that, as a deaf person, she is only partially acquired.

(4) Thus annulling her marriage and enabling the levir to retain the elder woman.

(5) With reference to Mishnah 109a which deals with the levirate marriage of two sisters, cf. however supra p. 760, n. 5.

(6) R. Eleazar b. Pedath, one of the Amoraim.

(7) R. Eleazar b. Shammua', the Tanna in our Mishnah.

(8) That (a) the halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar in our Mishnah and that (b) it is also in agreement with R. Eliezer's view in the Mishnah supra 109a, as stated in the Gemara supra 110a.

(9) V. supra p. 779, n. 3.

(10) There only it is permissible to teach the minor to exercise her right of mi'un, in order that the levir may be enabled to perform the commandment with the elder.

(11) Our Mishnah.

(12) The levir having cohabited with both widows.

(13) And that the minor is not to be taught to exercise her right of mi'un.

(14) That the halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar.

(15) V. supra note 2.

(16) Cf. supra note 5.

(17) Cf. supra p. 779, n. 3, where, should the minor fail to exercise her right of mi'un, the elder widow would, as his wife's sister, be altogether exempt from the levirate marriage.

(18) Lit., 'this with this'. As the divorce of a minor is invalid, they cannot be separated by a letter of divorce, should they desire to do so, before both have attained their majority.

(19) During his minority he cannot divorce her (cf. supra note 10).

(20) And he denies her statement.

(21) It being assumed that a period of thirty days sometimes elapses before a marriage is consummated, her word is accepted; v. Gemara.

(22) He cannot be compelled, because it is assumed that no one postpones consummation of marriage for a longer period than thirty days. His word is, therefore, accepted. As the woman, however, by her statement, declared herself to be still bound to him by the levirate bond it is necessary that she should perform halizah, to submit to which, however, the levir can only be asked, not compelled.

(23) When she is not likely to have had in her mind the possibility of ever marrying the levir. The vow is, therefore, presumed to have been due to some quarrel or misunderstanding between her and the levir and to be in no way due to a desire on her part to evade the precept of the levirate marriage.

(24) When her intention may have been to avoid marrying the levir.

(25) But may not be compelled.

(26) Avoidance of the levirate marriage.

(27) And if he refuses, the widow, who is alone to blame for the fact that the levirate marriage cannot be contracted with her, is forbidden to marry again; nor is she entitled to her kethubah.

(28) Which allows levirate marriage to a minor.

(29) Since it is possible that on attaining majority they may be found wanting in procreative powers, in consequence of which they will be unfit for the performance of the levirate obligations. As the Pentateuchal law is thus incapable of fulfilment, the sister-in-law remains forbidden to the levir as his brother's wife'.

(30) Supra 61b. (Cf. supra n. 6).

(31) I.e., the party that is of age.

(32) Cf. supra p. 781, n. 7.

(33) Both are not subject to punishment, even if their cohabitation is found to be a forbidden act and consequently may be allowed in a doubtful case such as this; cf. infra 114a.

(34) Which is not a case concerning two minors.

(35) Though the levirate marriage of a minor with one who is of age is forbidden, it is nevertheless valid ex post facto.

(36) Implying permissibility to continue to live with him.

(37) Which proves that our Mishnah permits directly, not only ex post facto, the levirate marriage of a minor.

(38) Deut. XXV, 7.

(39) As he is incapable of procreation.

(40) To raise up unto his brother a name. Why then is he allowed, the levirate marriage?

- (41) Deut. XXV. 5.
- (42) Even one who is incapable of fulfilling the commandment in its entirety.
- (43) Others, 'Rabbah' (cf. Tosaf. supra 20 s.v. ואהות).
- (44) Lit., 'now', while one of the parties is a minor.
- (45) When majority is attained.
- (46) Supra 30a; for all time, even when the cause of her prohibition had ceased to exist. Were not the minor then permitted the levirate marriage, this prohibition would not have been removed even after he had attained majority.
- (47) I.e., that a levir who was a minor at the time his brother died may never contract levirate marriage.
- (48) Deut. XXV, 5.
- (49) Must the levirate marriage he contracted, cf. ibid.
- (50) After his marriage.
- (51) From cohabitation. This being evidently the reason why in our Mishnah the woman's statement is accepted as true.
- (52) A husband's assertion that he found no tokens of virginity (cf. Deut. XXII, 13ff), and that, consequently, his wife is not entitled to her kethubah.
- (53) Lit., 'all'.
- (54) After marriage; and the husband is believed when he states that he had only just then discovered her defect. If his complaint is made after thirty days, he cannot deprive his wife of her kethubah, it being assumed that her defect, if any, had been discovered by him long ago and that he had acquiesced. His present complaint is regarded as a mere pretext to penalize the woman because of some new quarrel that may have arisen between them.
- (55) V. Tosef. Keth. I.
- (56) The statement in our Mishnah, which implies that for thirty days after marriage a man may restrain himself. (Cf. supra note 5).
- (57) Not only that of R. Meir.
- (58) And since he met her in privacy consummation of marriage might well be assumed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 112a

towards whom one is rather reserved.¹

Now, instead of being compelled to submit to halizah, let [the levir] be compelled to take [his sister-in-law] in levirate marriage! — Rab replied: [This is a case] where her letter of divorce was produced by her.²

An objection was raised: If within thirty days³ a sister-in-law declared, 'He has not cohabited with me,' he is compelled to submit to halizah from her, whether he says 'I have cohabited' or whether he admits 'I have not cohabited'; if after thirty days, he may only be requested⁴ to submit to halizah from her. If she declares,⁵ 'He cohabited with me,' and he states, 'I did not cohabit', behold, he may⁶ release her by a letter of divorce.⁷ If he declares, 'I have cohabited' and she states, 'He has not cohabited with me,' It is necessary for him, even if he withdrew his statement and admitted, 'I have not cohabited', [to give her] a letter of divorce⁸ and [to submit to her] halizah!⁹ — R. Ammi replied: [The meaning is that] she requires halizah together with her letter of divorce.¹⁰

R. Ashi replied: There¹¹ the letter of divorce [was given] in respect of his levirate bond;¹² while here¹³ the letter of divorce [is required in respect] of his cohabitation.¹⁴

[A couple] both of whom admitted¹⁵ [that there was no consummation of the levirate marriage] once came before Raba. 'Arrange the halizah for her', said Raba to his disciples, 'and dismiss her case'. 'But, surely', said R. Sherebya to Raba, 'it was taught: She requires¹⁵ both a letter of divorce and halizah!' 'If it was so taught', the other replied, 'well, then it was taught'.

Hon son of R. Nahman enquired of R. Nahman: What [is the law in respect of] her¹⁶ rival?¹⁷ — The other replied: Shall the rival be forbidden [to marry again] because we compel or request [the

IF A WOMAN VOWED TO HAVE NO BENEFIT etc. We learned elsewhere: At first it was held that [the following] three [classes of] women must be divorced¹⁹ and they also receive their kethubah: One²⁰ who declares, 'I am unclean for you',²¹ or 'heaven is between me and you',²² or 'May I be kept away from the Jews'.²³ This ruling was afterwards withdrawn²⁴ in order that a wife might not cast eyes upon another man²⁵ and thus disgrace her husband;²⁶ but [instead it was ordained that] one²⁰ who declared, 'I am unclean for you',²¹ must bring evidence in support of her statement;²⁷ [in respect of a woman who tells her husband] 'heaven is between me and you',²² [peace] is made between them by way of a request [addressed to the husband]; [and if a woman vowed], 'May I be kept away from the Jews' [the husband] invalidates his part [of the vow]²⁸ and she may continue connubial intercourse with him, though she remains removed from [other] Jews.²⁹ The question was raised: What [is her relation] to the levir [if a woman had vowed],³⁰ 'May I be kept from the Jews?' Is [it assumed that]³¹ it occurred to her that her husband may possibly die³² and that she might become subject to the levir³³ or not?³⁴ — Rab replied: The levir has not the same status as the husband;³⁵ and Samuel replied: The levir has the same status as the husband.

Said Abaye: Logical deduction is in agreement with Rab. For we learned, IF A WOMAN VOWED TO HAVE NO BENEFIT FROM HER BROTHER-IN-LAW, THE LATTER IS COMPELLED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH [IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND. Now, if it is [to be assumed] that it occurred to her³⁶

(1) Though he was alone with her no cohabitation may have taken place. בזיו מ'בזו rt. בזו 'to be shy', 'bashful'. Cf. גזו בזו.

(2) Lit., 'from under her hand'. After a divorce by the levir, the levirate marriage is forbidden. It is now assumed that the letter of divorce spoken of is one by which the levir had severed their union after the consummation of their marriage.

(3) After contracting levirate marriage.

(4) He cannot be compelled.

(5) After thirty days from their marriage.

(6) If they desire their union to be severed.

(7) No halizah is necessary, the woman being believed, since more than thirty days have elapsed after their marriage.

(8) Since after thirty days it is assumed that cohabitation had taken place.

(9) Because she herself by her declaration that no cohabitation had taken place and that the levirate bond was consequently still in force has caused her own prohibition to all other men until she has performed the halizah. Now, as in this case it is specifically mentioned that a letter of divorce is required, it is to be presumed that in all cases spoken of in this Baraitha the woman had no divorce; why then in the absence of a divorce, is the levir in the first case, compelled to submit to halizah and not rather to the performance of the levirate marriage?

(10) Which is already in her possession. The clause 'even if he withdrew' his statement etc., does not emphasize the necessity of giving a letter of divorce but the ruling that where the levir first declared after thirty days that he consummated the marriage he may only be requested and not compelled to submit to halizah even though he later asserted that no cohabitation had taken place.

(11) In the first clause of the Baraitha under discussion.

(12) And this has caused the woman to be forbidden to the levir, in consequence of which halizah only but no levirate marriage is possible.

(13) In the final clause.

(14) The purport of the clause 'even if he withdrew' his statement etc., being that although the levir admitted later that no cohabitation had taken place, in consequence of which it might have been presumed that halizah alone is sufficient, a letter of divorce is nevertheless required, because, more than thirty days having elapsed after the marriage, his first statement admitting cohabitation is accepted as the true one.

(15) After the levir had first declared that consummation of marriage had taken place.

(16) A sister-in-law who declared that the levirate marriage had not been consummated.

(17) Is the rival also forbidden to marry again before the other had performed the halizah?

- (18) Obviously not. The sister-in-law in question may indeed have placed herself under a prohibition as a result of her own declaration. The rival, however, since every levirate marriage is usually consummated, remains free.
- (19) Even if the husband is reluctant.
- (20) The wife of a priest.
- (21) Through outrage. A priest is forbidden to live with a wife in such circumstances.
- (22) A declaration that may be made by a woman whom her husband deprives of her connubial rights. The meaning might be: 'The distance of the heavens lies between us' or 'heaven knows (if no man does) our miserable relationship'.
- (23) I.e., a vow to have no sexual intercourse with any of them. Such a vow is assumed to be the result of the pain that connubial intercourse may cause her, and therefore justified.
- (24) Lit., 'they returned to say'.
- (25) Whom she would arrange to marry in a place where they are unknown.
- (26) By inventing the disabilities mentioned.
- (27) Otherwise her assertion is disregarded.
- (28) That part of the prohibition that concerns himself.
- (29) For fuller notes v. Ned., Sonc, ed., pp. 279ff.
- (30) During the lifetime of her husband.
- (31) Though her husband is alive.
- (32) Without issue.
- (33) Her vow was consequently meant to include the levir; and, since her husband can only invalidate his own share, she remains forbidden to the levir.
- (34) Her vow may have applied to those men only who are otherwise allowed to marry her if her husband divorced her, her object being to convince him that she had no intention of marrying any other man even after she had left him. As the levir remains in any case forbidden to her after her husband had divorced her she could not have had him in mind. Hence he should be permitted to contract levirate marriage with her.
- (35) He is excluded from the vow.
- (36) Even while her husband was alive, that he might die without issue and that she would, therefore, be subject to the levir.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 112b

it should have been [stated that he is only] to be requested!¹ — What we are dealing with here is the case of a woman who has children, so that such a remote possibility² does not occur to her.

What, however, [would be the law if] she had no children? [Would the levir in that case have] to be requested! Instead, then, of stating, IF THIS, HOWEVER, WAS IN HER MIND [EVEN IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND, THE LEVIR MAY ONLY BE REQUESTED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH,³ a distinction should have been made in the very same case:⁴ This⁵ is applicable only where she has children, but where she has no children he may only be requested!' Consequently⁶ it must be inferred that whether⁷ she has children or not, the levir is compelled [to submit to halizah], in accordance with the opinion of Rab. Thus our contention is proved.

CHAPTER XIV

MISHNAH. A DEAF⁸ MAN WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES OR A MAN OF SOUND SENSES WHO MARRIED A DEAF WOMAN MAY, IF HE WISHES TO RELEASE HER, DO SO;⁹ AND IF HE WISHES TO RETAIN HER HE MAY ALSO DO SO. AS HE MARRIES [THE WOMAN] BY GESTURES¹⁰ SO HE DIVORCES HER BY GESTURES.

IF A MAN OF SOUND SENSES MARRIED A WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES AND SHE BECAME DEAF, HE MAY,¹¹ IF HE WISHES, RELEASE HER;¹² AND IF HE WISHES HE MAY RETAIN HER. IF SHE BECAME AN IMBECILE HE MAY NOT DIVORCE HER.¹³ IF HE,

HOWEVER, BECAME DEAF OR INSANE, HE MAY NEVER DIVORCE HER.¹⁴

R. JOHANAN B. NURI ASKED: WHY MAY A WOMAN WHO BECAME DEAF BE DIVORCED WHILE A MAN WHO BECAME DEAF MAY NOT DIVORCE [HIS WIFE]? THEY¹⁵ ANSWERED HIM: A MAN WHO GIVES DIVORCE IS NOT LIKE A WOMAN WHO IS DIVORCED. FOR WHILE A WOMAN MAY BE DIVORCED WITH HER CONSENT AS WELL AS WITHOUT IT, A MAN CAN GIVE DIVORCE ONLY WITH HIS FULL CONSENT.

R. JOHANAN B. GUDGADA TESTIFIED CONCERNING A DEAF [MINOR] WHO WAS GIVEN IN MARRIAGE BY HER FATHER¹⁶ THAT SHE MAY BE RELEASED BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE.¹⁷ THEY¹⁸ SAID TO HIM:¹⁹ THE OTHER²⁰ ALSO IS IN A SIMILAR POSITION²¹.

IF TWO DEAF BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO DEAF SISTERS, OR TO TWO SISTERS WHO WERE OF SOUND SENSES, OR TO TWO SISTERS ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER WAS OF SOUND SENSES; AND SO ALSO IF TWO DEAF SISTERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO BROTHERS WHO WERE OF SOUND SENSES, OR TO TWO DEAF BROTHERS, OR TO TWO BROTHERS ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, BEHOLD THESE [WOMEN] ARE EXEMPT FROM HALIZAH AND FROM LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.²² IF [THE WOMEN, HOWEVER], WERE STRANGERS²³ [THE RESPECTIVE LEVIRS] MUST MARRY THEM,²⁴ AND IF THEY WISH TO DIVORCE THEM,²⁵ THEY MAY DO SO.²⁶

IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS WHO WERE OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE SISTER OF SOUND SENSES, DO? [NOTHING; SINCE HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] IS EXEMPT²⁷, AS BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? HE MUST RELEASE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE²⁸ WHILE HIS BROTHER'S WIFE IS FORBIDDEN FOREVER [TO MARRY AGAIN].²⁹

IF TWO BROTHERS OF SOUND SENSES WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? [NOTHING; SINCE HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] IS EXEMPT³⁰ AS HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DO? HE MUST DIVORCE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE³¹ AND [HE RELEASES] HIS BROTHER'S WIFE BY HALIZAH.³²

IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DIED, WHAT SHOULD [THE BROTHER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? [NOTHING; SINCE THE WIDOW] IS RELEASED BY VIRTUE OF HER BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DO? HE

RELEASES HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE. WHILE HIS BROTHER'S WIFE IS FOREVER FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN].³³

IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO STRANGERS WHO WERE OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF [THE WOMAN WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES, DO? — HE EITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH OR CONTRACTS LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE WOMAN WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN WHO WAS OF SOUND SENSES, DO? HE MUST MARRY HER AND HE MAY NEVER DIVORCE HER.³⁴

IF TWO BROTHERS OF SOUND SENSES WERE MARRIED TO TWO STRANGERS,³⁵ ONE OF WHOM WAS OF SOUND SENSES AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF WOMAN DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES, DO? HE MARRIES [THE WIDOW] AND IF HE WISHES TO DIVORCE HER HE MAY DO SO. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF WOMAN, DO? HE MAY EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO STRANGERS,³⁵ ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF WOMAN, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES. DO? HE MUST MARRY [THE WIDOW], BUT IF HE WISHES TO DIVORCE HER HE MAY DO SO.³⁶ IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF WOMAN, DO? HE MUST MARRY [THE WIDOW] AND HE MAY NEVER DIVORCE HER.

GEMARA. Rami b. Hama stated: Wherein lies the difference between a deaf man or a deaf woman [and an imbecile] that the marriage of the former should have been legalized by the Rabbis³⁷ while that of the male imbecile or female imbecile was not legalized by the Rabbis? For it was taught: If an imbecile or a minor married, and then died, their wives are exempt from halizah and from the levirate marriage!³⁸ — [In the case of] a deaf man or a deaf woman, where the Rabbinical ordinance could be carried into practice,³⁹ the marriage was legalized by the Rabbis; [in that of] a male, or female imbecile, where the Rabbinical ordinance cannot be carried into practice, since no one could live with a serpent in the same basket,⁴⁰ the marriage was not legalized by the Rabbis.

And wherein lies the difference between a minor [and a deaf person] that the marriage of the former should not have been legalized⁴¹ by the Rabbis while that of the deaf person was legalized by the Rabbis? — The Rabbis have legalized the marriage of a deaf person since [Pentateuchally] he would never be able to contract a marriage;⁴² they did not legalize the marriage of a minor since in due course he would be able to contract [a Pentateuchally valid] marriage. But, surely, [in the case of] a girl minor, who would in due course be able to contract [a Pentateuchally valid] marriage, the Rabbis did legalize her marriage.⁴³ — There⁴⁴ [it was legalized] in order that people might not treat her as ownerless property.⁴⁵ And why is there a difference⁴⁶ between a minor [and a deaf woman] that the former should be permitted to exercise the right of mi'un while the deaf woman should not be permitted to exercise the right of mi'un? — Because, if [the latter also were allowed to do] so,

- (1) And not compelled; since it is the woman's fault that the levirate marriage cannot be contracted.
- (2) Lit., 'that all this', i.e., that all her children as well as her husband would die, and that the death of the former would precede that of the latter.
- (3) Which, referring to a case where the woman's intention was known, is altogether different from the previous one.
- (4) Spoken of, where it is not definitely known whether the levirate marriage was or was not in her mind.
- (5) That the levir is compelled to submit to halizah.
- (6) Since no such distinction was drawn.
- (7) Lit., 'there is no difference'.
- (8) 'Deaf and dumb', as is to be understood throughout by the term 'deaf'. Marriages contracted by parties of whom one is a deaf-mute are only Rabbinically valid.
- (9) By a letter of divorce.
- (10) Which in the case of a deaf person take the place of the prescribed formulae.
- (11) Though her marriage was Pentateuchally valid.
- (12) By a letter of divorce, for the reason to be explained infra.
- (13) This is a Rabbinic provision, and the reason is given in the Gemara.
- (14) Because his marriage was Pentateuchally valid while his divorce, being that of a deaf person, has no such validity.
- (15) The Sages. divorce, being that of a deaf person, has no such validity. (8) The Sages.
- (16) Such a marriage is Pentateuchally valid since her father is empowered to act on her behalf.
- (17) Even after attaining her majority when she is no longer under her father's control.
- (18) The Sages.
- (19) R. Johanan b. Nuri.
- (20) Lit., 'this', one of sound senses that became deaf, who formed the subject of R. Johanan b. Nuri's enquiry in the preceding paragraph.
- (21) V. Git. 55a.
- (22) As the marriages of both sisters are of equal invalidity in Pentateuchal, and of equal validity in Rabbinic law, their levirate obligations and degree of relationship are also on the same legal level. Each sister, therefore, exempts the other, as in the case of marriages between normal brothers and sisters, from both the levirate marriage and halizah.
- (23) To one another; i.e., if they were not sisters or near of kin in any other way.
- (24) Since no halizah is possible with a deaf-mute (v. supra p.788, n. 1) who cannot recite the formulae.
- (25) After marriage.
- (26) By gestures, as they did in the case of the marriages.
- (27) From levirate marriage and halizah.
- (28) Because the levirate bond with his sister-in-law, whose marriage (as one between normal persons) was Pentateuchally valid, causes his wife whose marriage with him (a deaf person) was only Rabbinically valid, to be forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.).
- (29) Since, as a deaf man (cf. supra p.789. n. 8), he is incapable of participating in her halizah, while levirate marriage cannot be contracted because she is his wife's, or divorcee's sister.
- (30) From levirate marriage and halizah.
- (31) Cf. supra n. 1 mutatis mutandis.
- (32) Since both he and his sister-in-law are normal persons.
- (33) V. supra p.790. 2.
- (34) His divorce, which has only Rabbinical, but not Pentateuchal validity, cannot sever the levirate bond between him and his sister-in-law, which arose out of the pentateuchally valid marriage of his brother.
- (35) Cf. supra p.789. n. 10.
- (36) Cf. supra p.789. n. 10.
- (37) As is evident from our Mishnah. Since halizah was required it is obvious that the preceding marriage, without which the question of halizah could never have arisen, is recognized as valid despite the fact that a deaf-mute (cf. supra p.788. n. 1), owing to his inferior intelligence, is elsewhere ineligible to effect a kinyan.
- (38) Supra 69b, 96b.
- (39) Deaf-mutes might well lead a happy matrimonial life, not only when the husband or wife is deaf, but even where both are afflicted with deafness.

- (40) proverb. There can be no happy or enduring matrimonial union between an imbecile and a sane person or between two imbeciles.
- (41) As has been stated in the Baraita just cited.
- (42) And were not his marriage recognized as valid, at least in Rabbinic law, marriage for him would have become an impossibility.
- (43) Wherein does she differ from the boy minor that she should be subject to a different law?
- (44) The case of the girl minor.
- (45) Take liberties with her.
- (46) Since in the case of either, marriage is Pentateuchally invalid.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 113a

men would abstain from marrying her.¹

And why is there a difference between a minor [and a deaf woman] that the former should be permitted to eat terumah² while a deaf woman³ may not? For we learned, 'R. Johanan b. Gudgada testified concerning a deaf girl whom her father gave in marriage⁴ that she may be dismissed by a letter of divorce,⁵ and concerning a minor, the daughter of an Israelite, who was married⁶ to a priest, that she may eat [Rabbinical]⁷ terumah',⁸ while the deaf woman may not eat!⁹ This¹⁰ is a preventive measure against the possibility that a deaf man might feed a deaf woman [with such terumah]. Well, let him feed her, [since she is only in the same position] as a minor who eats nebelah!¹¹ This¹² is a preventive measure against the possibility that a deaf [husband] might feed a wife of sound senses [with it]. But even a deaf husband might well feed his wife who was of sound senses with Rabbinical terumah!¹³ — A preventive measure was made against the possibility of his feeding her with Pentateuchal terumah.

And why is the minor different [from the deaf woman] that the former should be entitled to her kethubah while the deaf woman is not entitled to her kethubah? — Because if [the latter also were] so [entitled] men would abstain from marrying her.¹⁴

Whence, however, is it inferred that a minor is entitled to a kethubah? — From what we learned: A minor who exercised the right of mi'un, a forbidden relative of the second degree,¹⁵ and a woman who is incapable of procreation, are not entitled to a kethubah;¹⁶ but [it follows¹⁷ that one] released by a letter of divorce,¹⁸ though a minor, is entitled to receive her kethubah.

And whence is it inferred that a deaf woman is not entitled to her kethubah? — From what was taught: If a man who was deaf or an imbecile married women of sound senses [the latter], even though the deaf man recovered his faculties or the imbecile regained his intelligence, have no claim whatsoever on [either of] them.¹⁹ But if [the men] wished to retain them [the latter] are entitled to a kethubah of the value of²⁰ a maneh.²¹ If, however, a man of sound senses married a woman who was deaf or an imbecile, her kethubah is valid, even if he undertook in writing to give her a hundred maneh,²² since he himself had consented to suffer the loss.²³ The reason, then,²⁴ is because he himself consented; had he not consented, however, she would receive no kethubah,²⁵ since otherwise²⁶ men would abstain from marrying her.²⁷

If so,²⁸ a kethubah should have been provided for a woman of sound senses who married a deaf man, since otherwise²⁹ [women] would abstain from marrying [deaf men]! — More than the man desires to marry does the woman desire to be taken in marriage.³⁰

A deaf man once lived in the neighbourhood of R. Malkiu [and the latter] allowed him to take a wife to whom he had assigned in writing a sum of four hundred zuz out of his³¹ estate. Raba remarked: Who is so wise as R. Malkiu who is indeed a great man. He³² held the view: Had he wished to have a maid to wait upon him, would we not have allowed one to be bought for him?³³ How much more, [then, should his desire be fulfilled] here where there are two [reasons for complying with his request]!³⁴

R. Hiyya b. Ashi stated in the name of Samuel: For [unwitting intercourse with] the wife of a deaf man³⁵ no asham talui²² is incurred.³⁶ It might be suggested that the following provides support to his³⁷ view: There are five who may not set apart terumah, and if they did so their terumah is not valid. These are they: A deaf man, an imbecile, a minor, he who gives terumah³⁸ from that which is not his own, and an idolater who gave terumah from that which belonged to an Israelite; and even [if the latter gave it] with the consent of the Israelite his terumah is invalid!³⁹ — He⁴⁰ holds⁴¹ the same view is R. Eleazar. For it was taught : R. Isaac stated in the name of R. Eleazar that the terumah of a deaf man must not be treated⁴² as profane, because its validity is a matter of doubt.⁴³ If he⁴⁰ is of the same opinion as R. Eleazar,⁴⁴ an asham talui also should be incurred!⁴⁵ — It is necessary⁴⁶ [that the offence should be similar to that of eating] one of two available pieces [of meat].⁴⁷ But does R. Eleazar require [a condition similar to that of eating] one of two pieces? Surely, it was taught : R. Eleazar stated: For [eating] the suet of a koy⁴⁸ one incurs the obligation of an asham talui!⁴⁹ — Samuel is of the same opinion as R. Eleazar in one case⁵⁰ but differs from him in the other.⁵¹

Others read: R. Hiyya b. Ashi stated in the name of Samuel: For [unwitting intercourse with] the wife of a deaf man the obligation of an asham talui is incurred.⁵² An objection was raised: There are five who may not set apart terumah!⁵³ — He⁵⁴ holds the same view as R. Eleazar.⁵⁵

R. Ashi asked: What is R. Eleazar's reason? Is he positive that the mind of a deaf man is feeble but in doubt whether that mind is clear?⁵⁶

(1) Because at any time throughout her life she could leave her husband by merely making her declaration of refusal. This does not apply to a minor who loses her right to mi'un as soon as she becomes of age.

(2) Even if only her mother or brother gave her in marriage to a priest.

(3) Who was not given in marriage by her father. V. infra.

(4) While she was in her minority.

(5) Even after she became of age, when it is she and not her father that receives it.

(6) By her mother or brothers after the death of her father.

(7) Cf. supra 902.

(8) 'Ed. VII, 9, Git. 53b. Though such marriage is not Pentateuchally valid.

(9) Since only the minor, and not the deaf woman of whom the first clause speaks, was mentioned in this, the second clause.

(11) V. Glos. Neither he nor she is subject to any punishment for the eating of forbidden food, v. infra 114a.

(12) The prohibition against the eating of terumah by the deaf woman.

(13) Since their marriage is at least Rabbinically valid.

(14) Cf. supra p.793, n. 5, mutatis mutandis. While deafness, as a rule, is an affliction for life, a minor does not forever remain in her minority.

(15) Who is forbidden in Rabbinic, though not in Pentateuchal law. Cf. supra 21a.

(16) Keth. 100b, B.M. 67a. The first mentioned, because her separation from her husband is effected even against his will; the second was penalized for contracting an unlawful marriage (cf. supra 85b); while in the case of the last the marriage is regarded as a contract under false pretenses.

(17) Since the Mishnah cited speaks only of a minor who has exercised the right of mi'un, and whose separation was, therefore, effected even without the husband's consent.

(18) Which is valid only if the husband had consented to the separation.

(19) Because, at the time the marriage had been contracted, the men were not in the possession of all their senses or faculties and were, in consequence, incapable of undertaking any monetary obligations.

(20) V. Bah. Cur. edd. omit to the end of the clause.

- (24) Why the deaf woman is entitled to her kethubah.
- (25) Even according to Rabbinic law.
- (26) Lit., 'for if so', i.e., if the Rabbis had entitled her to receive a kethubah.
- (27) Cf. supra p.793, n. 5 mutatis mutandis.
- (28) That eligibility to receive a kethubah is determined by the likelihood of the consent to marry the deaf person.
- (29) Cf. supra n. 5, mutatis mutandis.
- (30) The lack of a kethubah would not prevent a woman from marrying a man even if he was deaf.

- (33) The answer is, of course, in the affirmative.
- (34) Matrimony and service.
- (35) Though it might be argued that, since the degree of her husband's intelligence or mental capacity cannot be accurately gauged — the validity of her marriage should be deemed doubtful.
- (36) Such an offering is due only when the offence is a matter of doubt (cf. infra p.796. n. 10). In this case, however, as the marriage is valid in Rabbinic law only but remains definitely invalid in Pentateuchal law, no offering could be incurred.
- (37) Samuel's.
- (38) Without the authority of its owner.
- (39) Ter. I, 1 Shab. 153b. From this Mishnah, then, it follows, since the terumah of a deaf man is regarded as definitely invalid, that the incapacity of a deaf man is not a matter of doubt; and this apparently provides support to Samuel's view.

- (41) In regard to terumah.
- (42) Lit., 'go out'.
- (43) Shab. 153a. The invalidity of the terumah spoken of in the Mishnah cited may consequently be due to a similar reason. Hence no support for Samuel's view concerning a deaf man's wife may be adduced from it.
- (44) That the validity of the deaf man's action, and consequently also his capacity, is a matter of doubt.
- (45) In a case of intercourse with his wife. Cf. supra p.795, n. 15, mutatis mutandis.
- (46) If an asham talui is to be incurred.
- (47) One of which was definitely forbidden and the other definitely permitted, and it is unknown whether a person ate the one or the other. Only in such a case, where the doubt is due to the existence of two objects, is an asham talui incurred. Similarly in the case of intercourse with one of two women, when it is unknown whether the woman affected was his own wife or a forbidden stranger, an asham talui is incurred. If the doubt, however, relates to one object, it being unknown, for instance, whether a piece of fat one has eaten was of the permitted or forbidden kind, no asham talui is involved. Similarly, in the case of the deaf man's marriage, where the doubt relates to one woman, it being uncertain whether she has the status of a married woman or not, no asham talui is incurred.

or not clear,¹ though [in either case] it is always in the same condition,² or is it possible that he has no doubt that the [deaf man's] mind is feeble and that it is not clear,¹ but [his doubt] here is due to this reason: Because [the deaf man] may sometimes be in a normal state³ and sometimes in a state of imbecility? In what respect would this constitute any practical difference? — In respect of releasing his wife⁴ by a letter of divorce.⁵ If you grant that his mind is always in the same condition,⁶ his divorce [would have the same validity] as his betrothal.⁷ If, however, you contend that sometimes he is in a normal state³ and sometimes he is in a state of imbecility, he would indeed be capable of betrothal; in no way, however, would he be capable of giving divorce.⁸ What then is the decision? — This remains undecided.⁹

IF SHE BECAME AN IMBECILE etc. R. Isaac stated: According to the word of the Torah, an imbecile may be divorced,¹⁰ since her case is similar to that of a woman of sound senses [who may be divorced] without her consent. What then is the reason why it was stated that she may not be divorced? — In order that people should not treat her as a piece of ownerless property.¹¹

What kind [of imbecile, however, is here] to be understood? If it be suggested [that it is one] who is capable of taking care of her letter of divorce and who is also capable of taking care of herself, would people [it may be asked] treat her as if she were ownerless property! If, however, [she is one] who is unable to take care either of her letter of divorce or of herself, [how could it be said that] in accordance with the word of the Torah she may be divorced? Surely, it was stated at the school of R. Jannai, And giveth it in her hand¹² [only to her] who is capable of accepting her divorce,¹³ but this one¹⁴ is excluded since she is incapable of accepting her divorce; and, furthermore, it was taught at the school of R. Ishmael, And sendeth her out of his house,¹⁵ only one who, when he sends her out, does not return, but this one¹⁴ is excluded since she returns even if he sends her out! — This¹⁶ was necessary¹⁷ in respect of one who is capable of preserving her letter of divorce but is unable to take proper care of herself. Hence, in accordance with the word of the Torah, such an imbecile may well be divorced for, surely, she is capable of preserving her letter of divorce; the Rabbis, however, ruled that she shall not be dismissed in order that people might not treat her as a piece of ownerless property.

Abaye remarked: This¹⁸ may also be supported by deduction. For in respect of her¹⁴ it was stated, IF SHE BECAME AN IMBECILE HE MAY NOT DIVORCE HER, while in respect of him¹⁹ [the statement was]. HE MAY NEVER DIVORCE HER. In what respect [it may be asked] does he²⁰ differ [from her] that the statement [concerning him] is NEVER while in respect of her 'NEVER' is not mentioned?²¹ The inference, then, must be that the one is Pentateuchal, the other Rabbinical.

R. JOHANAN B. NURI ASKED etc. The question was raised: Was R. Johanan b. Nuri certain [of the law concerning] the man²² and his question related to that of the woman, or is it possible that he was certain concerning that of the woman²³ and his question related to that of the man? — Come and hear: Since they answered him: A MAN WHO GIVES A DIVORCE IS NOT LIKE A WOMAN WHO IS DIVORCED. FOR WHILE A WOMAN MAY BE DIVORCED WITH HER CONSENT AS WELL AS WITHOUT IT, A MAN CAN GIVE A DIVORCE ONLY WITH HIS FULL CONSENT, it may be inferred²⁴ that his question related to the man.²⁵ On the contrary; since they said to him: THE OTHER ALSO IS IN A SIMILAR POSITION,²⁶ it may be inferred that his question related to the woman! — But [the fact is this]: R. Johanan b. Nuri was addressing [them²⁷ in the light] of their own statement. 'According to my view', [he argued], 'as well as a man²⁸ is incapable of giving a divorce, so also is a woman²⁵ incapable of receiving a divorce;²⁹ but according to your view,³⁰ why should there be a difference between a man and a woman?'³¹ [To this] they replied: A MAN WHO GIVES A DIVORCE IS NOT LIKE A WOMAN WHO IS DIVORCED.

R. JOHANAN . . . TESTIFIED etc. Raba stated: From the testimony of R. Johanan b. Gudgada³² [it may be inferred that if a husband] said to witnesses, 'See this letter of divorce which I am giving lead forth some boys and girls [to the spot] and let them take a walk¹ there, for if they find [the keys] they will bring them back'. [From this] it is clearly evident that he² is of the opinion that if a minor eats nebelah,³ it is not the duty of the Beth din to take it away from him.⁴ May it be suggested that the following provides support for his view? A man must not say to a child, 'Bring me⁵ a key', or 'bring me⁵ a seal'; but he may allow him to pluck or to throw!⁶ Abaye replied: 'To pluck' [may refer] to a non-perforated plant-pot,⁷ and 'to throw' [may refer] to a neutral domain,⁸ [acts which are no more than prohibitions] of the Rabbis.⁹

Come and hear: If an idolater came to extinguish [a fire],¹⁰ he is not to be told either. 'Put it out' or 'Do not put it out', because it is not the duty of the Israelites present¹¹ to enforce his Sabbath rest. If a minor [Israelite], however, came to extinguish [the fire], he must be told, 'Do not put it out', since it is the duty of the Israelites present¹¹ to enforce his Sabbath rest!¹² R. Johanan replied: [The child is inhibited only] where he [appears to] act with his father's approval.¹³

Similarly, then, in respect of the idolater,¹⁴ [it is a case] where he acts with the approval of an Israelite? Is this, however, permitted!¹⁵ — An idolater acts on his own initiative.¹⁶

Come and hear: If the child of haber¹⁷ was in the habit of visiting his mother's father who was an 'am ha-rez,¹⁸ there is no need to apprehend that [the latter] might feed him with [levitically] unprepared foodstuffs;¹⁹ and if fruit²⁰ was found in his²¹ possession, it is not necessary [to take it from] him!²² — R. Johanan replied: The law was relaxed in respect of demai.²³

The reason, then,²⁴ is because [the fruit was] demai,²³ but [had its prohibition been] certain²⁵ it would have been necessary to tithe it;²⁶ but, surely [it may be objected] R. Johanan said²⁷ that [a child is inhibited only] where he [appears to] act with his father's approval²⁸ — But [the fact is that] R. Johanan was in doubt. When, therefore, he dealt with the one subject²⁹ he rebutted the argument³⁰ and when he dealt with the other²⁹ he [again] rebutted the argument.³⁰

Come and hear: If the child of a haber³¹ who was a priest was in the habit of visiting his mother's father who was a priest and an 'am ha-arez,³² there is no need to apprehend that [the latter] might feed him with unclean terumah; and if fruit was found in his³³ possession it is not necessary [to take it away from] him!³⁴ — [This refers only] to Rabbinical terumah.³⁵

Come and hear: An [Israelite] child may be regularly³⁶ breast fed by an idolatress or an unclean beast, and there is no need to have scruples about his sucking from a detestable thing;³⁷ but he must not be directly fed with nebeloth,³⁸ terefoth,³⁹ detestable creatures or reptiles. From all these, however, he may suck, even on the Sabbath,⁴⁰ though this is forbidden to an adult.⁴¹ Abba Saul stated: It was our practice to suck from a clean beast on a festival.⁴² At any rate it was here stated that 'there is no need to have scruples about his sucking from a detestable thing'!⁴³ — [The permissibility] there is due to [the presence of] danger.⁴⁴

If so, an adult also [should be permitted].⁴⁵ — [Permissibility for] an adult is dependent on medical opinion.⁴⁶ [Permissibility for] a child also should be made dependent on medical opinion!⁴⁷ — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: The ordinary child is in danger when deprived of his⁴⁸ milk.

‘Abba Saul stated: It was our practice to suck from a clean beast on a festival’. How is one to understand this?⁴⁹ If danger was involved, [the sucking should be permitted] even on the Sabbath also; and if no danger was involved, it should be forbidden even on a festival! — This can only be understood as a case where⁵⁰ pain⁵¹ was involved, [Abba Saul] being of the opinion [that sucking]⁵² is an act of indirect⁵³ detaching.⁵⁴ [In respect of the] Sabbath, therefore, where the prohibition⁵⁵ [is one involving the penalty] of stoning, the Rabbis have instituted a preventive measure;⁵⁶ [in respect of] a festival, however, where the prohibition⁵⁵ [is only that of] a negative precept,⁵⁷ the Rabbis have not instituted any preventive measure.

Come and hear: These ye shall not eat,⁵⁸ for they are a detestable thing⁵⁹ [is to be understood⁶⁰ as] ‘you shall not allow them to eat’,⁶¹ this being a warning⁶² to the older men concerning the young children. Does not this imply⁶³ that [minors] must be ordered, you shall not eat [such things’]!⁶⁴ — No; that [adults] may not give them⁶⁵ with their own hands.⁶⁶

Come and hear: No soul of you shall eat blood⁶⁷ implies⁶⁸ a warning⁶² to the older men concerning the young children. Does not this signify⁶³ that [minors] must be told,⁶⁹ ‘Do not eat [blood]’!⁷⁰ — No; that [adults] must not give them with their own hands.⁶⁶

Come and hear: Speak . . . and say⁷¹ conveys a warning⁶² to the older [Priests] concerning the [priests who are] minors. Does not this imply that minors must be ordered not to defile themselves!⁷² — No; that [adults] must not defile them with their own hands.⁶⁶

And [all the Scriptural texts cited are] required. For if we had been informed concerning detestable things only,

(12) Shab. 121a. Which shews, contrary to the opinion of R. Pedath, that even where a child acts in pure innocence, he must be prevented from transgressing a law.

(13) I.e., if his father is present at the time he commits the transgression. The father's silence is interpreted as approval and encouragement of the child to continue his forbidden act. Hence the rule that he must be prevented from the desecration of the Sabbath. When, however, the child acts in the absence of his father it is no one's duty to restrain him.

(14) Mentioned in the same context (Shab 121a).

(15) Surely not. Whatever an Israelite is forbidden to do on the Sabbath he must not ask an idolater to do for him.

it might have been assumed [that the law¹ applies to them], because their prohibition applies² to even the minutest [objectionable creature]³ but not to blood the minimum quantity of which⁴ must be no less than⁵ a quarter [of a log].⁶ And if we had been informed concerning blood only, it might have been assumed [that the law⁷ applies to this] because [the eating of it] involves the penalty of kareth, but not to reptiles. And if we had been informed concerning these two,⁸ it might have been assumed [that the law⁷ applies to these] because their prohibition applies equally to all but not to uncleanness.⁹ And had we been informed concerning uncleanness it might have been assumed [that the law⁷ applies only here because] priests are different [from other people], since more commandments have been imposed upon them,¹⁰ but not to these.⁸ [Hence the three Scriptural texts were] required.

Come and hear: IF TWO BROTHERS ONE OF WHOM WAS OF SOUND SENSES¹¹ AND THE OTHER DEAF WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS WHO WERE OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE SISTER OF SOUND SENSES, DO? — [NOTHING; SINCE HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] IS EXEMPT AS BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? HE MUST RELEASE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE WHILE HIS BROTHER'S WIFE IS FORBIDDEN FOREVER [TO MARRY AGAIN]. Now, why should he RELEASE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE? Let her continue to live with him [since he is only like] a minor who eats nebelah.¹² — On account of the prohibition imposed upon her.

Come and hear: IF TWO BROTHERS OF SOUND SENSES WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS ONE OF WHOM WAS OF SOUND SENSES¹³ AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER. DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? [NOTHING; SINCE HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] IS EXEMPT AS HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES. DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DO? — HE MUST DIVORCE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, AND [RELEASE] HIS BROTHER'S WIFE BY HALIZAH. But why MUST HE DIVORCE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE? Let her continue to live With him [since she is only like] a minor who eats nebelah!¹⁴ — Owing to the prohibition that is imposed upon him.

Raba said, Come and hear: IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS OF SOUND SENSES¹³ AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND

OF THE DEAF SISTER, DIED, WHAT SHOULD [THE BROTHER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? [NOTHING; SINCE THE WIDOW] IS RELEASED BY VIRTUE OF HER BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DO? HE RELEASES HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, WHILE HIS BROTHER'S WIFE IS FOREVER FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN]. Now here, surely, no prohibition is involved either for him or for her, and yet it was stated, HE RELEASES HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE!¹⁴ — R. Shemaia replied: This is a preventive measure against the possibility of allowing a sister-in-law to marry a stranger.¹⁵

CHAPTER XV

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN AND HER HUSBAND WENT TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA [AT A TIME WHEN THERE WAS] PEACE BETWEEN HIM AND HER AND [WHEN THERE WAS ALSO] PEACE IN THE WORLD, AND SHE CAME BACK AND SAID, 'MY HUSBAND IS DEAD', SHE MAY MARRY AGAIN; AND IF SHE SAID, 'MY HUSBAND IS DEAD [AND HAS LEFT NO ISSUE]' SHE MAY CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. [IF, HOWEVER, THERE WAS] PEACE BETWEEN HIM AND HER, BUT WAR IN THE WORLD, [OR IF THERE WAS] DISCORD BETWEEN HIM AND HER, BUT PEACE IN THE WORLD, AND SHE CAME BACK AND SAID, 'MY HUSBAND IS DEAD', SHE IS NOT BELIEVED.¹⁶ R. JUDAH SAID: SHE IS NEVER BELIEVED UNLESS SHE COMES WEEPING AND HER GARMENTS ARE RENT. THEY,¹⁷ HOWEVER, SAID TO HIM: SHE MAY MARRY IN EITHER CASE.¹⁸

GEMARA. Mention was made of¹⁹ PEACE BETWEEN HIM AND HER²⁰ because it was desired to speak of²¹ DISCORD BETWEEN HIM AND HER, and PEACE IN THE WORLD was mentioned²² because it was desired to mention²¹ WAR IN THE WORLD.

Raba stated: What is the reason [why a wife is not believed in a time] of war? Because she speaks from conjecture. 'Could it be imagined' [she thinks]²³ 'that among all those who were killed he alone escaped!' And should it be contended that since there was peace between him and her she would wait until she saw [what had actually happened to him]. it may sometimes happen [It may be retorted] that he was struck by an arrow or spear and she would think that he was certainly dead, while in fact someone might have applied an emollient²⁴ [to his wound] and he might have recovered

Raba was [at first] of the opinion²⁵ that famine is not like war, since [in the former case] she does not speak from conjecture. [Later. however]. Raba changed his opinion. stating that famine is like war. For a woman once appeared before Raba and said to him, 'My husband died during a famine'. 'You have acted well', he remarked to her.²⁶ 'in that you saved your own life,²⁷ since it could hardly be imagined that he would survive on the little remnant of flour that you left for him'. 'The Master then'. she replied. 'also understands that in such circumstances he could not survive'.²⁸ After this²⁹ Raba ruled: Famine²⁵ is worse than war; for whereas in the case of war it is only when the wife states, 'My husband died in the war', that she is not believed, but [if her statement is that]. 'He died in his bed', she is believed, in the case of famine she is not believed unless she states, 'He died and I buried him'.

A ruin²⁵ is regarded as war, for [in this case also] she speaks from conjecture. A visitation of serpents or scorpions²⁵ is regarded as war, for [here also a wife] speaks from conjecture. As to pestilence. some hold that it is like war, while others hold that it is not like war. 'Some hold that it is like war', because a wife, they maintain. speaks from conjecture; while 'others hold that it is not like war' because, they maintain, a wife relies upon the common saying.³⁰ 'A pestilence may rage for seven years but none dies before his time' ,³¹

The question was raised:³² What is the law if it was she who established that there was a war in the world?³³ Do we apply the argument. 'What motive could she have for telling a lie?'³⁴ since, if she wished, she could have said that there was peace in the world;¹ or, perhaps. since a war was established [by her] she speaks² from conjecture.³ and the argument. 'What motive could she have for telling a lie'⁴ cannot come and impair an established principle? — Come and hear: [If a woman states]. 'They'⁵ set our house on fire',⁶ or 'They filled the cave wherein we sheltered'⁷ with smoke, and he⁸ died while I escaped'. she is not believed!⁹ There it is different since she can be told,¹⁰ 'As a miracle happened to you. so may a miracle have happened to him'⁸ also'.¹¹

Come and hear: [If a woman states]. 'Idolaters fell upon us , or, 'robbers fell upon us',¹² and he⁸ died while I escaped'. she is believed!¹³ -There¹⁴ [her statement is believed] in accordance with the view of R. Idi. For R. Idi stated: A woman [carries] her weapons about her.¹⁵ There was once a man whose bridal chamber caught fire at the close of his wedding feast, and his wife cried, 'Look at my husband, look at my husband!' When they came near they saw a charred body¹⁶ that was prostrate [on the ground] and the hand [of a man]¹⁷ lying [by it]. R. Hiyya b. Abin intended to give his decision [that the law in this case] is the same as [that where a woman stated]. 'They set our house on fire', or 'they filled the cave wherein we sheltered with smoke'. Raba, however, said: Are [the two cases at all] similar? There, she did not say. 'Look at my husband, look at my husband'!¹⁸ while¹⁹ here [those present actually saw] the charred body that was prostrate [on the ground] and the hand that was lying by it. And R. Hiyya b. Abin?²⁰ — As to the charred body¹⁶ that was prostrate [on the ground]. it may be suggested that a stranger²¹ came to the rescue of [the burning man] and was himself burned,²² while the hand which was lying [nearby, might be that of the bridegroom who] having been caught by the fire was mutilated;²³ and²⁴ in order [to hide his] shame he may have left the place and fled into the wide world.

A question was raised: What is the law in respect of one witness²⁵ In time of war?²⁶ Is the reason why one witness is [elsewhere]²⁷ believed because no one would tell a lie which is likely to be exposed²⁸ and, consequently. here also [the witness] would not tell a lie;²⁹ or is it possible that the reason why one witness [is believed]²⁷ is because [the woman] herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries again. here. therefore.³⁰ [he would not be believed since a woman]³¹ does not make sufficient enquiries before she marries again?

Rami b. Hama replied. Come and hear: R. Akiba stated: When I went down to Nehardea to intercalate the year. I met Nehemiah of Beth Deli who said to me, 'I heard that in the Land of Israel³² no one with the exception of R. Judah b. Baba permits a [married] woman to marry again on the evidence of one witness'. 'That is so', I told him 'Tell them', he said to me. 'in my name: You know that this country is infested³³ with raiders; I have this tradition from R. Gamaliel the Elder: That a [married] woman may be allowed to marry again on the evidence of one witness'.³⁴ Now, what was meant by 'This country is infested with raiders'? Obviously that³⁵ 'although this country is in a state of confusion.³⁶ I have this tradition: That a [married woman] may be allowed to marry again on the evidence of one witness'! Thus it is evident that one witness is believed.³⁷ Said Raba: If so,³⁸ why should 'this country'³⁹ be different?⁴⁰ He should [have said]. 'Wherever raiders exist'!-Rather, said Raba, it is this that was meant: 'You know that this country is infested⁴¹ with raiders and it is impossible for me to leave my family and to come before the Rabbis; I have this tradition from R. Gamaliel: That a [married] woman may be allowed to marry again on the evidence of one witness

Come and hear: Two learned men⁴² once travelled with Abba Jose b. Simai on board a ship. which sank. And on the evidence of women, Rabbi⁴³ allowed their wives to marry again. [Now, evidence of death by] water is. surely. like [that of death in] war, and women, even a hundred of them, are legally equal to one witness,⁴⁴ and yet it was stated [that Rabbi] 'Allowed . . . ' to marry'!⁴⁵ — And do you understand this?⁴⁶ Those⁴⁷ were waters without [a visible] end,⁴⁸ and [when a man is drowned in] waters without [a visible] end his wife is forbidden [to marry again]!⁴⁹ How, then, is this to be understood? [Obviously] that they⁵⁰ stated, '[The drowned men] were cast up in our presence

(1) And as no one could have contradicted her, she would have been believed in saying that her husband was dead and

(8) Her husband.

(9) This proves that her statement that her husband is dead is not accepted although it was through her that it became known that there ever was a state of war.

(10) As she has not actually seen his death.

(11) It is for this reason, and not because she is suspected of lying. that her evidence is not regarded as sufficient proof for establishing the death of her husband. In the case of a war, however, it may well be assumed that she had actually seen the death of her husband, since, had she desired to deceive, she need not have disclosed the fact that there ever was a war.

(12) Circumstances similar to those of a war.

(13) Which proves that a wife is believed when she states that her husband died in circumstances akin to war if these become known solely through her own evidence.

(14) Since the incident did not happen in war time but only in analogous circumstances.

(15) 'A.Z 25b; i.e., her sex is her protection against murder. When, therefore, her husband is attacked, unless there was actually a state of war, she does not flee to save her own life, but remains on the spot to the very end. This, therefore, provides no proof that a wife is also believed if an actual state of war existed when her husband's death presumably occurred.

and we saw then, immediately [afterwards]',¹ and they also mention [his identification] marks. so that we do not rely upon them² but on the marks.³

A man once deposited some sesame with another, [and when in due course] he asked him, 'Return to me my sesame, the other replied. 'You have already taken it'. 'But, surely'. [the depositor remonstrated, 'the quantity] was such and such and it is [in fact still] lying [intact] in your jar'.⁴ 'Yours', the other replied. 'you have taken back and this is different'. R. Hisda at first intended to give his decision [that the law in this case is] the same as that of the two learned men,⁵ where we do not assume that those have gone elsewhere and these are others.⁶ Raba, however, said to him: Are [the two cases] alike? There, the identification marks were given; but here, what identification marks can sesame have! And in regard to [the depositor's] statement [that their quantity] was such and such, it might be said that the similarity of quantities is a mere coincidence.

Said Mar Kashisha b. R. Hisda to R. Ashi: Do we ever [in such circumstances]⁷ take into consideration the possibility that [the contents of a vessel] may have been removed?⁸ Surely we learned: If a man found a vessel on which was inscribed a Kof it is korban;⁹ if a Mem, it is ma'aser;¹⁰ 'if a Daleth it is demu'a'a';¹¹ if a Teth, it is Tebel;¹² and if a Taw, It is terumah;¹³ for in the period of danger¹⁴ they used to write a Taw for terumah!¹⁵ — Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Do we not [in such circumstances]¹⁶ heed the possibility that [the contents of a vessel] may have been removed? Read, then, the final clause: R. Jose said, Even if a man found a jar on which 'terumah' was inscribed [the contents] are nevertheless regarded as unconsecrated, for it is assumed¹⁷ that though it was in the previous year full of terumah it has subsequently been emptied!¹⁸ But the fact is, all agree that the possibility of [the contents] having been removed must be taken into consideration. Here, however, they differ only on the following principle: One Master is of the opinion that had the owner removed [the contents from the jar] he would undoubtedly have wiped [the mark] off, while the other [maintains that] it might be assumed that he may have forgotten [to remove the mark] or he may also intentionally have left it as a safeguard¹⁹.

Resh Galutha Isaac,²⁰ a son of R. Bebai's sister, once went from Cordova to Spain²¹ and died there. A message was sent from there [in the following terms]. 'Resh Galutha Isaac, a son of R. Bebai's sister, went from Cordova to Spain and died there. [The question thus arose] whether [the possibility that there might have been] two [men of the name of] Isaac is to be taken into consideration²² or not? — Abaye said: It is to be taken into consideration:²² but Raba said: It is not to be taken into consideration.²³

Said Abaye: How²⁴ do I arrive at my assertion? — Because in²⁵ a letter of divorce that was once found in Nehardea it was written, 'Near the town of Kolonia,²⁶ I, David son of Nehilais,²⁷ a Nehardean, released and divorced my wife So-and-so', and when Samuel's father sent it to R. Judah Nesiah²⁸ the latter replied: 'Let all Nehardea be searched'.²⁹ Raba, however, said: If that were so³⁰

he³¹ should [have ordered] the whole world to be searched!³² The truth is that it was only out of respect for Samuel's father³³ that he sent that message. Raba said: How³⁴ do I arrive at my assertion? Because in two notes of indebtedness that were once produced in court at Mahuza [the names of the parties] were written as Habi son of Nanai and Nanai son of Habi. and Rabbah³⁵ b. Abbuha ordered the collection of the debts on these bills. But, surely, there are many [men bearing the names of] Habi son of Nanai and Nanai son of Habi at Mahuza!³⁶ And Abaye?³⁷

(36) And yet it was not doubted that the persons who held the notes were the men named, which proves that even the definite existence of other men of the same name in the same place need not be taken into consideration. This being the rule in monetary matters, it may be inferred that in religious matters, the uncertain existence at least of men of the same name need not be taken into consideration.

(37) How' can he maintain his ruling in view' of the decision of Rabbah b. Abbuha.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 116a

What possibility can be taken into consideration!¹ If that of loss,² one is surely careful with [a note of indebtedness];³ if that of a deposit,⁴ since the name of the one is like that of the other the former does not entrust the latter with such a deposit;⁵ what then can be said?⁶ That he⁷ may only have delivered [the note] to him!⁸ 'Letters'⁹ [it may be replied] are acquired by mesirah.¹⁰

A letter of divorce was once found at Sura, and in it appeared this entry: 'In the town of Sura, I, Anan son of Hiyya. a Nehardean, released and divorced my wife So-and-so.' Now when the Rabbis searched from Sura to Nehardea [they found that] there was no other Anan son of Hiyya save one Anan son of Hiyya of Hagra¹¹ who was at that time at Nehardea, and witnesses came and declared that on the day on which the letter of divorce was written Anan son of Hiyya of Hagra was with them.¹² Said Abaye: Even according to me who hold that [the possibility of the existence of other men of the same name] is to be taken into consideration. no such possibility need be considered here,¹³ for [even in respect of the only other man known to have that name] witnesses declared that he was at Nehardea;¹⁴ how then could he [on the same day,] have been¹⁵ at Sura!¹⁶ Raba said: Even according to me who hold that [the possibility of the existence of other men of the same name] is not to be taken into consideration. [such possibility] must be considered here,¹⁷ since [the man in question] may have gone [to Sura] on a flying camel,¹⁸ or¹⁹ [got there] by a miraculous leap,²⁰ or¹⁹ he may have given verbal instructions²¹ [for the letter of divorce to be written²² on his behalf], as, [in fact] Rab said to his scribes, and R. Huna, similarly, said to his scribes: When you are at Shili²³ write [in any deed] 'At Shili', although the instructions were given to you at Hini,²⁴ and when you are at Hini,²³ write, 'At Hini', although the instructions Were given to you at Shili.²⁵

What is [the decision] in respect of the sesame?²⁶ — R. Yemar ruled: [The possibility that it was removed and replaced by another lot] is not to be taken into consideration; Rabina ruled: It is to be taken into consideration; and the law is that it is to be taken into consideration.

DISCORD BETWEEN HIM AND HER etc. What is to be understood by DISCORD BETWEEN HIM AND HER? Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: When [a wife] says to her husband. 'Divorce me!' Do not all women²⁷ say this?²⁸ Rather [this is the meaning]: When she says to her husband. 'You have divorced me!' Then let her be believed on the strength of R. Hamnuna's ruling; for R. Hamnuna ruled: If a woman said to her husband, 'You have divorced me'. she is believed, for it is an established principle that no woman would dare [to make such a false assertion] in the presence of her husband! — [Here it is a case] where she said. 'You have divorced me in the presence Of So-and-so and So-and-so', who. when asked, stated that this had never happened.²⁹

What is the reason in case Of DISCORD?³⁰ — R Hanina explained: Because she is likely to tell a lie.³¹ R. Shimi b. Ashi explained: Because she speaks from conjecture.³² What is the practical difference between them?³³

- (1) In deciding the ownership of a note of indebtedness of the nature if the notes mentioned.
- (2) That the actual creditor had lost the note and that the man who produced it, whose name is the same as that of the creditor, had found it.
- (3) The remote and unlikely possibility of loss may, therefore, be completely disregarded.
- (4) That the holder of the note is not its owner, but only keeper or trustee for another man of the same name as his.
- (5) Since he knows full well that the keeper might at any moment claim to be the creditor.
- (6) In justification of the assumption that the man producing the note is not the real creditor.
- (7) The creditor when selling the note to the man who now utters it.
- (8) But did not transfer its possession by the usual kinyan. And, since the seller may withdraw from the sale before legal transfer had taken place, it might be assumed that the creditor named in the note withdrew from the sale and that the man of the same name who now produces the note is not its owner even through purchase.
- (9) I.e., a note of indebtedness.
- (10) V. Glos. The delivery of the note completes the legal transfer after which the seller can no longer withdraw. Cf Kid. 47b. p BB 76a. 77a.
- (11) [Hagronia, a suburb of Nehardea (Obermeyer p. 266)].
- (12) In Nehardea; while the letter of divorce was written at Sura. Owing to the distance between the two towns it was impossible for him to have been in the one as well as in the other on the same day.
- (13) Where a search revealed that only one such person lived throughout that region.
- (14) V. supra n. 2.
- (15) Lit., 'what did he require'.
- (16) [The distance between Nehardea and Sura was about twenty parasangs, a travelling journey of two days. v. Obermeyer P. 251].
- (17) Where it was definitely established that another man of such a name existed.
- (18) Dromedary(?) V. Mak., Sonc. ed., P. 21, n. 4.
- (19) Lit., 'or also'.
- (20) And so it was possible for him to be in both towns on the same day.
- (21) At Nehardea.
- (22) In Sura.
- (23) Shili and Hini were situated near each other (cf. Beza 25b) on the South of Sura; v. B.B., Sonc. ed., p. 753' n. 6.
- (24) The place name entered in a legal document is not that of the locality where the transaction which it records took place or the instructions concerning its writing were given, but that of the locality where the document was written.
- (25) Which proves that it was customary for scribes to write legal documents in one place for people who gave them the necessary instruction in another.
- (26) Discussed supra 115b.
- (27) Lit., 'all of them also'.
- (28) When they are angry. They do not mean it seriously. Why, then, should a woman, because of a momentary outburst, be suspected of inventing a tale about her husband's death?
- (29) לֹא הָיוּ דְּבָרִים מְעוּלָם (abr. לֹא הָיוּ דְּבָרִים), lit., 'the things never were.
- (30) Why is not a wife in such a case believed if she states that her husband is dead?
- (31) Out of hatred she might deliberately invent the tale that her husband was dead so that by marrying again she might become forbidden to him forever.
- (32) Though she might not deliberately tell an untruth, her hatred would prevent her from finding out what exactly happened to her husband if ever he was placed in a position of danger. The likelihood of his death would be regarded by her as a certainty.
- (33) R. Hanina and R. Shimi. Is not her word mistrusted in either case?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 116b

— The practical difference between them arises in the case where [the husband] created¹ the discord.²

The question was raised: What [is the law in respect of] one witness in a case of discord? Is the reason why one witness is [elsewhere]³ believed⁴ that he would not tell a lie which is likely to be exposed.⁵ and consequently he would here also tell no lie;⁶ or is it possible that the reason why one witness is believed elsewhere⁷ is that [the woman] herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries again; here, therefore, [his evidence should not be accepted] since, as there was discord between husband and wife,⁸ she would not make careful enquiries and yet would marry again? — This remains undecided.⁹

R. JUDAH SAID: SHE IS NEVER etc. It was taught: They¹⁰ said to R. Judah: According to your statement, only a woman of sound senses¹¹ would be allowed to marry again while an imbecile¹² would never be allowed to marry again! But the fact is that¹³ the one as well as the other may be allowed to marry again.

A woman¹⁴ once came to Rab¹⁵ Judah's Beth din. 'Mourn', they said to her, 'for your husband, rend your garments and loosen your hair'. Did they teach her to simulate!¹⁶ — They themselves held the same view as the Rabbis,¹⁷ but in order that he¹⁸ also should allow her to marry they advised her to do so. MISHNAH. BETH HILLEL STATED: WE HAVE HEARD SUCH A TRADITION¹⁹ ONLY IN RESPECT OF A WOMAN WHO CAME FROM THE HARVEST²⁰ AND [WHOSE HUSBAND DIED] IN THE SAME COUNTRY,²¹ [THE CIRCUMSTANCES BEING THE SAME] AS THOSE OF A CASE THAT ONCE ACTUALLY HAPPENED. SAID BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: [THE LAW IS] THE SAME WHETHER THE WOMAN CAME FROM THE HARVEST OR FROM THE OLIVE PICKING, OR FROM THE VINTAGE, OR FROM ONE COUNTRY TO ANOTHER, FOR THE SAGES SPOKE OF THE HARVEST ONLY [BECAUSE THE INCIDENT TO WHICH THEY REFERRED] OCCURRED THEN.²² BETH HILLEL, THEREFORE, CHANGED THEIR VIEW [THENCEFORWARD] TO RULE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI.

GEMARA. It was taught: Beth Shammai said to Beth Hillel, According to your View,²³ one would only know the law concerning²⁴ the wheat harvest,²⁵ whence, however, [the law concerning] the barley harvest? And, furthermore, one would only know the law in the case where²⁴ one harvested; whence, however, [the law in the case where] one held a vintage, picked olives, harvested dates, or picked figs? But [you must admit] it is only the original incident that occurred at harvest time and that the same law is applicable to all [the other seasons]. So here also [we maintain that] the incident occurred with [a husband who died] in the same country. and the same law is applicable to all [other countries]. And Beth Hillel?²⁶ — In the case of the same country. where people freely [move about].²⁷ she is afraid;²⁸ [coming, however]. from one country to another, since people do not freely [move about].²⁹ she is not afraid.³⁰ And Beth Shammai?³¹ — Here³² also caravans frequently [move about].³³

What was the original incident?³⁴ -[It was that of] which Rab Judah spoke in the name of Samuel: It was the end of the wheat harvest when ten men went to reap their wheat and a serpent bit one of them and he died [of the wound]. His wife, thereupon, came and reported the incident to Beth din, who, having sent [to investigate]. found her statement to be true. At that time it was ordained: If a woman stated, 'My husband is dead', she may marry again; [if she said] 'My husband is dead [and left no issue]', she may contract the levirate marriage.

Must it be suggested that R. Hanania b. Akabia³⁵ and the Rabbis differ on the same principle as that on which Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel differ? For it was taught: No man shall carry water of purification³⁶ and ashes of purification³⁶ across the Jordan on board a ship, nor may one stand on [the bank on] one side and throw them across to the other side, nor may one float them upon water nor may one carry them while riding³⁷ on a beast or on the back of another man unless his [own] feet were touching the [river] bed. He may, however, convey them across a bridge. [These laws are applicable] as well to the Jordan as to other rivers. R. Hanania b. Akabia³⁵ said: They³⁸ spoke³⁹ only of the Jordan and of [transport] on board a ship, as was the case in the original incident.⁴⁰ Must it, then, be assumed that the Rabbis⁴¹ hold the same view as Beth Shammai⁴² while R. Hanania b. Akabia holds the same view as Beth Hillel?⁴³ — The Rabbis can answer you: Our ruling agrees with the view⁴⁴ of Beth Hillel also; for Beth Hillel maintained their opinion⁴⁵ only there,⁴⁶ since [the woman is believed only because] she fears [to tell an untruth, and it is only] in a place that is near that she fears while in a distant one she does not fear. Here,⁴⁷ however, what matters it whether it is on the Jordan or on other rivers!⁴⁸ R. Hanania b. Akabia can also answer you: I may uphold my view even according to Beth Shammai; for Beth Shammai maintained their opinion⁴⁹ only there⁴⁶ because [a woman] makes careful enquiries⁵⁰ and [only then] marries again. Hence, what matters it whether the locality was near or far. Here,⁵¹ however, [the prohibition] is due to an actual incident; hence it is only [against transport] on the Jordan and on board a ship, where the incident occurred, that the Rabbis enacted their preventive measure, but against other rivers where the incident did not occur the Rabbis enacted no preventive measure.

What was the incident?⁵² — [It was that] which Rab Judah related in the name of Rab: A man was once transporting Water of purification⁵³ and ashes of purification⁵³ across the Jordan on board a ship, and a piece of a corpse, of the size of an olive,⁵⁴ was found stuck in the bottom of the ship. At that time It was ordained: No man shall carry Water of purification and ashes of purification across the Jordan on board a ship.

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: SHE⁵⁵ IS PERMITTED TO MARRY AGAIN AND SHE RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH. BETH HILLEL, HOWEVER, RULED: SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY AGAIN BUT SHE DOES NOT RECEIVE HER KETHUBAH. SAID BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: YOU HAVE PERMITTED [WHAT MIGHT BE] THE GRAVE OFFENCE OF ILLICIT INTERCOURSE,⁵⁶ SHALL WE NOT PERMIT [THE TAKING OF HER HUSBAND'S] MONEY WHICH IS OF LESS IMPORTANCE!⁵⁷ BETH HILLEL ANSWERED THEM: WE FIND

(1) Lit., 'accustomed', i.e., introduced.

(2) While the wife shewed no hatred towards him. As she does not hate him she would not invent a lie in order to get rid of him but would nevertheless readily believe that he was dead should he ever have found himself in a position of danger. She would not take the trouble to ascertain whether her conjecture was not groundless.

(3) When he gives evidence that a husband died in normal circumstances.

(18) Rab Judah.

- (19) That a wife is believed when she states that her husband is dead,
- (20) The reason is explained infra.
- (21) It being thus possible to verify the woman's statement.
- (22) בהווה Lit., 'in what is', The ruling of the Sages was given in connection with a particular case where it so happened that the woman returned from a harvest. The same ruling, however, is applicable in all circumstances. [The term generally denotes 'what usually happens'. It is in this sense that it seems to be taken by the T. J. quoted by Tosaf. (s.v. ס): Why should the harvest (be different)? Said A. Mana: It is different in that an accident usually happens there on account of the scorching sun].
- (23) That a wife's evidence regarding the death of her husband may be accepted only in circumstances similar to those of the original incident. (Cf. supra n. 4).
- (24) Lit., 'I have but'.
- (25) The incident (cf. supra note 4) having occurred during the wheat harvest.
- (26) Why do they draw a distinction between a husband's death in the same, and in another country.
- (27) From place to place. Another interpretation: Many people knew the husband.

- (44) Lit., 'we (as to) what we said'.
- (45) Restricting the law to conditions exactly similar to those of the original incident.
- (46) In the case of a wife's evidence on the death of her husband.
- (47) Transporting the water and ashes of purification.
- (48) Of course it does not matter.
- (49) Trusting the evidence of the wife in all cases, even where the conditions differ from those of the original incident.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 117a

THAT ON HER EVIDENCE, THE BROTHERS MAY NOT ENTER INTO THEIR INHERITANCE.¹ SAID BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: DO WE NOT LEARN THIS² FROM HER KETHUBAH SCROLL WHEREIN [HER HUSBAND] PRESCRIBES FOR HER, 'IF THOU BE MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN, THOU WILT RECEIVE WHAT IS PRESCRIBED FOR THEE'! THEREUPON BETH HILLEL WITHDREW THIS OPINION, THENCEFORTH TO RULE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE VIEW OF BETH SHAMMAI.

GEMARA. R. Hisda stated: If she³ is taken in levirate marriage the levir enters into the inheritance⁴ on her evidence. If they⁵ made an exposition on the kethubah, shall we not make an exposition on the Torah? The All Merciful said, Shall succeed in the name of his brother,⁶ and he has surely succeeded.⁷ R. Nahman ruled: If [a woman] came before Beth din and stated, 'My husband is dead; permit me to marry again'. permission must be granted her to marry again. and she is given her kethubah. [If she demanded]. 'Give me my kethubah', she must not be permitted even to marry. What is the reason? Because she came with her mind intent on the kethubah.⁸

The question was raised: What is the ruling [where she said], 'Permit me to marry and give me my kethubah'? Has she come with her mind intent on the kethubah, since she specified her kethubah⁹ or [is it assumed that] a person [naturally] lays before the Beth din all the claims he has!¹⁰ And¹¹ should you find [a reason for deciding in her favour because] a person submits whatever claim he has to the Beth din, [the question still remains as to] what [is the law where she stated]. 'Give me my kethubah and permit me to marry'? [Is it assumed that] in this case¹² she has undoubtedly come with her mind bent on the kethubah. or is it possible [that she mentioned her kethubah] because¹³ she did not know by what means she becomes permitted [to marry again].¹³ — This is undecided.¹⁴

MISHNAH. ALL ARE REGARDED AS TRUSTWORTHY TO GIVE EVIDENCE¹⁵ FOR HER¹⁶ EXCEPTING HER MOTHER-IN-LAW. THE DAUGHTER OF HER MOTHER-IN-LAW, HER RIVAL, HER SISTER-IN-LAW¹⁷ AND HER HUSBAND'S DAUGHTER.¹⁸ WHEREIN LIES THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN [THE ADMISSIBILITY OF] A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND [THAT OF THE EVIDENCE OF] DEATH?¹⁹ IN THAT THE WRITTEN DOCUMENT²⁰ PROVIDES THE PROOF.²¹

GEMARA. The question was raised: What [is the law in regard to the eligibility²² of] the daughter of her father-in-law?²³ Is the reason [for the ineligibility] of the daughter of her mother-in-law because there is a mother²⁴ who hates her she²⁵ also hates her; here,²⁶ however, there is no mother who hates her?²⁷ Or is it possible that the reason [for the ineligibility] of the daughter of her mother-in-law is because she²⁸ believes that the other squanders²⁹ the savings of her mother; there,²⁶ then, she also believes that she squanders²⁹ the savings of her father-in-law?³⁰ Come and hear: 'All are regarded as trustworthy to give evidence for her³¹ excepting five women'; but if that were so³² [the number should] be six!³³ — It is possible that the reason [for the ineligibility] of the daughter of her mother-in-law is because she³⁴ believes that the other squanders the savings of her mother³⁵ [and, therefore] there is no difference between the daughter of her mother-in-law and the daughter of her father-in-law.³⁶ But, surely. it was taught.³⁷ 'Excepting seven women'!³⁸ — This is the view of R. Judah. For it was taught:³⁹ R. Judah adds⁴⁰ also a father's wife⁴¹ and a daughter-in-law. They⁴² said to him: A father's wife⁴¹ is, in fact, included in the expression 'a husband's daughter',⁴³ and a daughter-in-law is obviously included in the expression 'her mother-in-law'.⁴⁴

And R. Judah:⁴⁵ - Because one can well understand why a mother-in-law should hate her daughter-in-law, since the former believes that the latter squanders her Savings,⁴⁶ but why should a daughter-in-law hate her mother-in-law!⁴⁷ Similarly one may well understand why a husband's daughter hates her father's wife, since the former believes that she is squandering her mother's savings, but why should a father's wife hate her husband's daughter!⁴⁷

Why, then, does he⁴⁸ add the two?⁴⁹ — But [this is the true explanation]: Why does a daughter-in-law hate her mother-in-law? Because the latter reports⁵⁰ to her son all that she⁵¹ does. [Similarly] a father's wife also hates her husband's daughter because the latter reports⁵⁰ to her father all that she⁵² does. And the Rabbis?⁵³ — As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man.⁵⁴ And R. Judah? — The text⁵⁵ applies⁵⁶ to [the study of] the words of the Torah.⁵⁷

R. Aha b. 'Awya said: In the West⁵⁸ they asked: What is the ruling in respect of a potential⁵⁹ mother-in-law?⁶⁰ Does it occur to her that [this woman's]⁶¹ husband might die [without issue] and she⁶² would thereby be subject to the levir, and therefore. she⁶² hates her,⁶³ or does it not?

(1) Though inheritance is a monetary affair, Only in order to save her from a life-long widowhood was a woman allowed on her own evidence to marry again. In monetary matters, however, the evidence of two eligible witnesses (cf. Deut. XIX. 15) is a sine qua non.

(2) That she is entitled to her kethubah.

(3) A woman who reported the death of her husband.

(4) Of the deceased. Cf. supra 40a.

(5) Beth Shammai, and later also Beth Hillel, in our Mishnah.

(6) Deut. XXV, 6, explained Rabbinically to refer to the levir.

(7) Hence he is also entitled to the inheritance.

(8) She probably knows that her husband is alive and she has no intention of marrying again. All she aims at is the acquisition of the money.

(9) And even marriage should, therefore, be forbidden to her,

(10) But her main purpose was matrimony. Hence both her requests should be granted.

(11) Reading of Rashal, inserted in cur. edd, within square brackets.

(12) Since she mentioned her kethubah first,

(13) She may have thought that it was the kethubah that releases her from her dead husband and it is for this reason that she mentioned it first. Cf. supra note 3'

(14) Teku. v. Glos,

(15) That her husband died.

(16) Any woman.

(17) The wife of her husband's brother, who becomes her rival if levirate marriage is contracted.

(18) All these are assumed to be, for one reason or another, hostile to her and are therefore suspected of giving false evidence (cf. supra n. 8) in the expectation that she will marry again and thereby become forever forbidden to their relative, her first husband.

(19) I.e., why are the relatives mentioned accepted as qualified bearers of her letter of divorce, (v. Git, 23b) and not as eligible witnesses to testify to the death of her husband?

(20) The letter of divorce,

(21) It is mainly the document itself that constitutes the validity of the divorce and not the eligibility of its bearer.

(22) To give evidence that her husband was dead,

(23) From another wife who is not her mother-in-law.

(24) I.e., her mother-in-law.

(25) The daughter of that mother-in-law.

(26) In the case of the daughter of her father-in-law,

(27) The daughter of her father-in-law is therefore eligible as a witness.

(28) The daughter.

(29) Lit., 'eats'.

(30) Lit., 'wife's family'. In consequence of which she hates her and is, therefore, ineligible to be her witness.

(31) Cf. supra p. 824. nn. 8 and 9.

(32) That the daughter of a father-in-law is also ineligible as witness.

(33) Since our Mishnah had enumerated five others. From this then it may be inferred that the daughter of a father-in-law is eligible.

(34) The daughter.

(35) So Bah. Cur. edd., 'of the father-in-law'.

- (36) Both, therefore, may be regarded as one. Hence the number five,
- (37) Cur. edd., 'we learned'.
- (38) While our Mishnah enumerates only five.
- (39) Cur. edd., 'we learned'.
- (40) To the number of women who are ineligible to testify to the death of another woman's husband.
- (41) The stepmother of the woman in question.
- (42) The Sages.
- (43) Since a husband's daughter is ineligible as witness for a husband's wife it is obvious that the latter also, since both stand in the same relationship to one another, is equally ineligible as witness for the former. V. infra n. 6.
- (44) As a mother-in-law is precluded from giving evidence for her daughter-in-law so, it is obvious, is the latter (cf. supra n. 5) precluded from giving evidence for the former. There was no need, therefore, to enumerate all the four. The mention of two of these embraces the four.
- (45) Why in view of the explanation of the Rabbis does he enumerate seven?
- (46) As the wife of her son and heir she would in due course become mistress of her possessions.
- (47) Her ineligibility, therefore, cannot be inferred from the other. Hence it was necessary specifically to mention her.
- (48) R. Judah.
- (49) Who, as was just explained, are not hostile to the others, and should, therefore, be eligible to give evidence for them!
- (50) Lit., 'reveals', 'discloses'.
- (51) Her daughter-in-law.
- (52) Her father's wife; her stepmother.
- (53) Why, in view of R. Judah's explanation, do they omit the two from their list?
- (54) prov. XXVII, 19. Hatred is mutual. As a husband's daughter hates her father's wife so does the latter hate the former; and the same reciprocity exists between a mother-in-law and her daughter-in-law. There was no need, therefore, to mention them all. The four are covered by the two.
- (55) Lit., 'this'.
- (56) Lit., 'is written'.
- (57) Effort and success are interdependent as in water face answereth face. Or: The successful achievement of the student is dependent on the sympathy and understanding (the cheerful countenance) of the Master.
- (58) Palestine, which lay on the West of Babylon.
- (59) Lit., 'that comes afterwards'. i.e., the mother of the levir and stepmother of the husband of the woman in question, who might become her mother-in-law if her husband died childless and she had to contract the levirate marriage with the levir.
- (60) Is she eligible as witness if she testifies that her stepson is dead in consequence of which the wife of the deceased must either marry her son or perform halizah with him and marry a stranger (Rashi). [R. Hananel (v. Lewin B. M. Ozar ha-Geonim, Yebamoth p. 334) explains the problem differently. viz., can a woman give evidence on behalf of her potential mother-in-law? Where, for instance, Jacob had two wives, Leah and Rachel, the former of whom bore him a son, Reuben, and the latter, Joseph; and the question arises whether the wife of Reuben may testify as to the death of Jacob, her father-in-law, permitting the remarriage of Rachel, her potential mother-in-law. For should her own husband Reuben die, she would have to contract levirate marriage with his brother Joseph. Rachel thus becoming her mother-in-law].
- (61) For whom she tenders evidence.
- (62) As her future mother-in-law.
- (63) Hence she is ineligible as a witness for her.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 117b

Come and hear: If a woman stated. 'My husband died first and my father-in-law died after him'. she may marry again and she also receives her kethubah. but her mother-in-law is forbidden.¹ Now, why is her² mother-in-law forbidden? Is it not because it is assumed that neither her² husband died nor did her father-in-law die³ and that by her statement⁴ she intended to damage the position of her mother-in-law.⁵ hoping that [as a result]⁶ she⁷ would not in the future⁸ come to torment her!⁹ —

There¹⁰ it may be different because she¹¹ has experienced her annoyance.¹²

MISHNAH. IF ONE WITNESS STATED, [‘THE HUSBAND¹³ IS] DEAD’, AND THEREUPON HIS WIFE MARRIED AGAIN, AND ANOTHER CAME AND STATED ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’. SHE NEED NOT BE DIVORCED. IF ONE WITNESS SAID. ‘HE¹³ IS DEAD AND TWO WITNESSES SAID. ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’, SHE MUST, EVEN IF SHE MARRIED AGAIN, BE DIVORCED. IF TWO WITNESSES STATED, ‘HE¹³ IS DEAD’, AND ONE WITNESS STATED, HE IS NOT DEAD’, SHE MAY, EVEN IF SHE HAD NOT YET DONE SO,¹⁴ MARRY AGAIN.¹⁵

GEMARA. The reason¹⁶ then is because [the woman]¹⁷ MARRIED AGAIN; had she, however, not married would she¹⁸ not have been permitted to marry? But Surely. ‘Ulla stated: Wherever the Torah declared one witness credible,¹⁹ he is regarded²⁰ as two witnesses, and the evidence of one man²¹ against that²² of two men²³ has no Validity!²⁴ — It is this that was meant: IF ONE WITNESS STATED [‘THE HUSBAND IS] DEAD’ and after his wife had been permitted to marry again ANOTHER CAME AND STATED ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’, she is not to be deprived of²⁵ her former status of permissibility.²⁶

IF ONE WITNESS SAID, ‘HE IS DEAD’, Is this not obvious?²⁷ For the evidence of one man against that Of²⁸ two men²⁹ has no validity! — [This ruling’ is] required only in the case of ineligible witnesses³⁰ [this being] in accordance with the view of R. Nehemiah. For it was taught: R. Nehemiah stated, ‘Wherever the Torah declares one witness credible,³¹ the majority of statements is to be followed,³² and [the evidence of] two women against that of one man is given the same validity as that of two men against one man’.³³

And if you prefer I might reply: Wherever one eligible witness came first, even a hundred women³⁴ are regarded as one witness.³⁵ But [here it is such a case] as, for example, where a woman witness came in the first instance;³⁶ and [the statement] of R. Nehemiah is to be explained thus: R. Nehemiah stated, ‘Wherever the Torah declares one witness credible, the majority of statements is to be followed, and [the evidence of] two women against one woman is given the same validity as that of two men against one man; but [the evidence of] two women against that of one man is regarded as half³⁷ and half³⁸ .

IF TWO WITNESSES STATED, ‘HE IS DEAD’ etc. What does this teach us?³⁹ [A ruling] in respect of ineligible witnesses, [the principle being the same] as that of R. Nehemiah who follows the majority of statements⁴⁰ . But is not this exactly the same [as the previous clause]!⁴¹ — It might have been assumed that the majority is followed only when the law is thereby made more stringent,⁴² but not [where it leads] to a relaxation of the law;⁴³ hence we were taught [the final clause] ,⁴⁴

MISHNAH. IF ONE WIFE⁴⁵ SAID [‘HER HUSBAND IS] DEAD’ AND THE OTHER WIFE⁴⁶ SAID, ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’, THE ONE WHO SAID, ‘HE IS DEAD’ MAY MARRY AGAIN AND SHE ALSO RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH, WHILE THE ONE WHO SAID, ‘HE IS NOT DEAD, MAY NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR IS SHE TO RECEIVE HER KETHUBAH. IF ONE WIFE⁴⁷ STATED, ‘HE IS DEAD’ AND THE OTHER STATED. ‘HE WAS KILLED’, R. MEIR RULED: SINCE THEY CONTRADICT ONE ANOTHER THEY MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN. R. JUDAH AND R. SIMEON RULED: SINCE BOTH⁴⁸ ADMIT THAT HE⁴⁹ IS NOT ALIVE, BOTH MAY MARRY AGAIN.

IF ONE WITNESS STATED, ‘HE⁵⁰ IS DEAD’, AND ANOTHER WITNESS STATED.⁵¹ ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’,

(1) To marry again; infra 118a. The evidence as to the death of her husband is not admissible though the witness. since her own husband was dead at the time she gave her evidence, was no longer her daughter.in.law.

- (2) The witness's.
- (3) And both women are still related to one another as mother-in-law and daughter-in-law.
- (4) Lit., 'and what she said thus'.
- (5) Who if she married again would not any longer be able to live with her first husband, the father-in-law of the witness.
- (6) Cf. supra p. 827. n. 14.
- (7) Her mother-in-law.
- (8) When her husband and son returned from their foreign travels.
- (9) By reporting to her son all the doings of his wife. It is thus obvious that a daughter-in-law is not believed as a witness for her mother-in-law, though the cause of her hatred (the return of her husband and his mother's gossip) is still a thing of the future and at the time her evidence is given, potential only. From this it follows that a potential mother-in-law also is equally ineligible as a witness for her potential daughter. in-law.
- (10) Since in that case the woman for whom evidence is given was already her mother-in-law.
- (11) The daughter-in-law.
- (12) This case, therefore, provides no proof that a woman hates one who had never been her mother-in-law and whose annoyances she had never experienced.
- (13) Who had gone to a country beyond the sea.
- (14) prior to the appearance of the one witness.
- (15) Even after he tendered his evidence.
- (16) Why the woman in the first clause of our Mishnah may live with the man she married.
- (17) Whose husband's death was reported by the first witness.
- (18) Since our Mishnah only states that SHE NEED NOT BE DIVORCED and does not state that she may marry again.
- (19) As is the case here, where one witness testifies to the death of a husband (cf. supra 88b).
- (20) Lit., 'behold here'.
- (21) In our case, that of the second witness.
- (22) Lit., 'in the place of'.
- (23) In the first instance, the first witness whose evidence had been accepted as valid as that of two.
- (24) Sot. 31b, Keth. 22b, supra 88b. Why then should not the woman be directly permitted to marry again?
- (25) The original לֹא תֵצֵא lit., 'she shall (or need) not go out', may bear this meaning as well as that given in our Mishnah.
- (26) Because the decision of Beth din had been issued before the second witness appeared. Had he arrived prior to the issue of the decision, the evidence of the first witness, as it had not yet been accepted. would have had no greater validity than his,
- (27) That the woman MUST ... BE DIVORCED,
- (28) Lit., 'in the place of',
- (29) As is the case in the second clause of our Mishnah.
- (30) Where the two witnesses were, e.g.. relatives or slaves.
- (31) As in the case, e.g.. spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah.
- (32) As the accepted law of valid evidence is in such cases suspended, the evidence of any ineligible witnesses (cf. supra n. 7) is admitted,
- (33) Hence the necessity for the ruling of our Mishnah. In the absence of such a ruling it would have been assumed that the evidence of ineligible witnesses is here also inadmissible.
- (34) I.e., ineligible witnesses who, after the woman had married again, stated that her husband was not dead,
- (35) As the evidence of a single witness when it is opposed to that of a previous witness whose evidence had already been accepted (cf. supra p. 828, n. 18) is completely disregarded, so is the evidence of the hundred women if it conflicts with that of the first eligible witnesses.
- (36) And, on her evidence, the widow was permitted to marry again. As two women subsequently opposed the statement of the one, the marriage must be annulled by a letter of divorce.
- (37) Of a valid evidence, i.e., as that of one witness.
- (38) The evidence of two women against that of one man would, therefore, have the same validity as that of one witness against another, spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah. and the widow would have retained her first status of permissibility. v. supra 88b.
- (39) Is it not obvious that two witnesses are relied upon when they are opposed by one witness only!

- (40) Though the two witnesses are ineligible. their evidence against that of the one witness, since they form the majority, is accepted, and the widow is permitted to marry again.
- (41) The ruling in the second clause of our Mishnah which, as has just been explained, teaches this very principle.
- (42) As in the second clause where, owing to the majority principle, the woman is forbidden to marry again.
- (43) As in the final clause under discussion, where, by following the majority. the woman is allowed to marry again.
- (44) Of our Mishnah, to indicate that in all cases the majority is to be followed.
- (45) Of a man who has gone to a country beyond the sea.
- (46) Her rival.
- (47) V. p. 830. n. 9'
- (48) Lit.. 'this and this'.
- (49) Their husband.
- (50) V. p. 830. n. 9'
- (51) Before the Beth din, on the evidence of the first witness, had allowed the woman to marry again.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 118a

OR IF ONE WOMAN STATED. 'HE¹ IS DEAD', AND ANOTHER WOMAN² STATED,³ 'HE IS NOT DEAD', SHE⁴ MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN.

GEMARA. The reason. then,⁵ is because she said, 'HE IS NOT DEAD'; had she, however, kept silent she would presumably have been allowed to marry again; but [it may be objected], no rival may give evidence on behalf of her associate!⁶ — It was necessary [to teach the case where the OTHER WIFE SAID], 'HE IS NOT DEAD.'⁷ Since it might have been assumed that [their husband] was really dead and that by stating⁸ 'HE IS NOT DEAD' she evidently⁹ intended to inflict injury upon her rival in the spirit of¹⁰ Let me¹¹ die with the Philistines,¹² we are informed [that she is nevertheless forbidden to marry again].

IF ONE WIFE STATED, 'HE IS DEAD' etc. R. Meir should have expressed his disagreement in the first clause also!¹³ R. Eleazar replied: [The first clause] is a subject¹⁴ in dispute and it¹⁵ represents the opinion of R. Judah and R. Simeon.¹⁶ R. Johanan. however. stated that it¹⁷ may be said [to represent even the view of] R. Meir, for in such a case even R. Meir agrees,¹⁸ since in the case of testimony relating to a woman¹⁹ the evidence [of the nature of] 'He is not dead' is not [regarded as a valid] contradiction,²⁰

We learned: IF ONE WITNESS STATED, 'HE IS DEAD' AND ANOTHER WITNESS STATED, 'HE IS NOT DEAD', OR IF ONE WOMAN STATED, 'HE IS DEAD AND ANOTHER WOMAN STATED, 'HE IS NOT DEAD', SHE MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN. Now according to R. Eleazar²¹ it may well be explained that the anonymous statement [in the final clause]²² is in agreement with R. Meir. According to R. Johanan,²³ however, there is a difficulty! — This is a difficulty.

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN AND HER HUSBAND WENT TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, AND SHE RETURNED AND STATED, 'MY HUSBAND IS DEAD'. SHE MAY BE MARRIED AGAIN AND SHE ALSO RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH. HER RIVAL, HOWEVER, IS FORBIDDEN.²⁴ IF [HER RIVAL] WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE [WHO WAS MARRIED] TO A PRIEST, SHE IS PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH,²⁵ SO R. TARFON. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAID: THIS²⁶ IS NOT A WAY THAT WOULD LEAD HER OUT OF THE POWER OF TRANSGRESSION, UNLESS [IT BE ENACTED THAT] SHE SHALL BE FORBIDDEN BOTH TO MARRY AND TO EAT TERUMAH.

IF SHE STATED, 'MY HUSBAND DIED FIRST AND MY FATHER-IN-LAW DIED AFTER HIM, SHE MAY MARRY AGAIN AND SHE ALSO RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH, BUT HER MOTHER-IN-LAWS²⁷ IS FORBIDDEN.²⁸ IF [THE LATTER] WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE [WHO WAS MARRIED] TO A PRIEST, SHE IS PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH; SO R. TARFON. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAID.. THIS²⁹ IS NOT A WAY THAT WOULD LEAD HER OUT OF THE POWER OF TRANSGRESSION, UNLESS [IT BE ENACTED THAT] SHE SHALL BE FORBIDDEN BOTH TO MARRY AGAIN AND TO EAT TERUMAH.

GEMARA. And [both statements³⁰ were] necessary. For If the first only had been stated, it might have been assumed that only in that did N. Tarfon maintain [his view],³¹ since the grievance is personal.³² but that in respect of a mother-in-law, the grievance against whom is merely general,³³ he agrees with N. Akiba.³⁴ And had the latter only been stated it might have been assumed that R. Akiba maintained [his view] there only, but that in the former case he agrees with R. Tarfon. [Hence both statements were] necessary.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Tarfon. Said Abaye: We also learned the same: [If a woman³⁵ states],³⁶ 'A son was given to me in a country beyond the sea, and my son died first while my husband died after him', she is believed.³⁷ [If, however, she states]. 'My husband [died first] and my son died after him', she is not believed,³⁸ though note must be taken of her statement, and she must, therefore, perform halizah³⁹ but may not⁴⁰ contract the levirate marriage.⁴¹ [From which it follows that] 'note must be taken of her statement', but that no note need be taken of the statement of a rival. Thus our point is proved.

(1) V. supra p. 830. n. 9.

(2) Even if she is the rival of the woman concerned.

(3) V. supra note 5.

(4) Even the first.

(5) Why the second wife MAY NEITHER MARRY AGAIN.

(6) Her rival.

(7) There was no need to mention the case where she remained silent, which is obvious.

(8) Lit., 'and that which she said'.

(9) Since she went out of her way to contradict her rival and was not content to remain silent.

(10) Lit., 'she said'.

(11) נפשי v. marg. note. Cur. edd.. נפשה

(12) Judges XVI, 30. She is prepared herself to lose the right of marrying again in order that her rival also may thereby be deprived of her right.

(13) Where. as in the second clause, one woman contradicts the other.

(14) Lit., 'it was taught'.

(15) The view expressed in the first clause.

(16) [According to R. Eleazar. R. Meir would forbid in the second clause remarriage to both women, because he admits a rival's contradictory evidence, whereas R. Judah and Simeon hold that a rival's contradiction is not admitted and hence they rule that both are permitted to marry. Similarly in the first clause, on R. Meir's view the first woman would not be allowed to marry, regard being had to the contradiction of her rival. On this assumption, the reason stated in the second clause for R. Judah's and R. Simeon's ruling, that neither denied the fact of the man's death, will have been advanced by them as an argument on the hypothesis that R. Meir's view, admitting the rival's contradiction, is accepted. תוס' ישנים].

(17) The view expressed in the first clause.

(18) That the assertion of the second wife is not regarded as valid contradiction of the evidence of the first.

(19) [In connection with the death of her husband in regard to which the laws of evidence have been considerably relaxed. Var. lec. 'the testimony of a rival'].

(20) But as a mere outburst of malice, intended to injure her rival. The first evidence is, therefore, accepted.

(21) Who explained that the first clause represents the view of those who differ from R. Meir, while R. Meir maintains that the first wife also is forbidden to marry again, because a rival's contradiction is admitted, v. p. 831, n. 21.

(22) Which forbids remarriage, even where the contradictory evidence was given by the rival (v. supra p. 831. n. 7.)

- (23) Who stated that R. Meir agrees with the ruling in the first clause that a rival's contradiction is admitted.
- (24) To marry again; since a woman may not tender evidence for her rival.
- (25) As during the lifetime of her husband. The evidence of the other which is regarded as invalid to enable the rival to marry again (v. supra n. 1) is equally invalid to deprive her of her right to the eating of terumah.
- (26) To forbid the rival to marry and to allow her to eat terumah.
- (27) For whom a daughter-in-law is ineligible to tender evidence.
- (28) To marry; though, at the time the evidence in her favour was given, the witness, according to whose evidence her husband died before her father-in-law, was no longer her daughter-in-law. The reason is explained supra 117b.
- (29) Cf. supra n. 3 mutatis mutandis.
- (30) The first (relating to a rival) and the second (relating to a mother-in-law).
- (31) That the evidence of a rival is not accepted.
- (32) The deprivation of marital intercourse caused by a rival. Only 10 such circumstances, it is possible, did R. Tarfon discredit the evidence of a rival who might indeed be actuated by malice.
- (33) Lit., 'things in the world'.
- (34) That a daughter-in-law need not be suspected of deliberate lying because of some general grievance against her mother-in-law; and that consequently, though her evidence is not accepted in respect of relaxing the laws of marriage, it may be accepted in respect of enforcing the laws of terumah.
- (35) Who went to a country beyond the sea with her husband before any issue was born from their union.
- (36) On her return.
- (37) And may contract levirate marriage. Her evidence merely confirms the status in which she was already at the time of her departure. At that time as well as now she had no children to exempt her from the levirate obligations.
- (38) To be permitted to marry a stranger without previous halizah with the levir. The evidence of a woman is accepted only in respect of the death of her husband, where it is assumed that she takes all possible care to ascertain the fact of his death. It is not, however, accepted in respect of liberating her from a levir against whom she might have been nursing a personal hatred, so that she would, without making the necessary enquiries, be ready on the flimsiest of proofs to testify anything which enables her to get rid of him.
- (39) Owing to the status in which she has been confirmed.
- (40) Since note must be taken of her allegation.
- (41) Infra 118b, 119b.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 118b

MISHNAH. IF A MAN BETROTHED ONE OF FIVE WOMEN AND HE DOES NOT KNOW WHICH OF THEM HE HAS BETROTHED, AND EACH STATES, 'HE HAS BETROTHED ME. HE GIVES A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO EVERY ONE OF THEM,¹ AND, LEAVING THE KETHUBAH² AMONG THEM, WITHDRAWS;³ SO R. TARFON. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAID: THIS IS NOT A WAY THAT WOULD TAKE ONE OUT OF THE POWER OF TRANSGRESSION, UNLESS ONE GIVES TO EACH OF THEM BOTH A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND HER KETHUBAH.²

IF A MAN ROBBED ONE OF FIVE PERSONS AND DOES NOT KNOW WHICH OF THEM HE HAS ROBBED, AND EACH ONE STATES. 'HE HAS ROBBED ME', HE LEAVES THE [AMOUNT OF] THE ROBBERY AMONG THEM AND WITHDRAWS;⁴ SO R. TARFON. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, STATED: THIS IS NOT A WAY THAT WOULD LEAD ONE OUT OF THE POWER OF SIN, UNLESS ONE PAYS [THE FULL AMOUNT OF THE ROBBERY] TO EVERY ONE [OF THE PERSONS INVOLVED].

GEMARA. Since BETROTHED was stated. and not⁵ 'cohabited'. and since ROBBED was stated and not 'bought'. whose [view, it may be asked, is represented in] our Mishnah? Neither. [apparently. that of] the first Tanna⁶ nor that of R. Simeon b. Eleazar!⁶ For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar stated that R. Tarfon and R. Akiba did not differ [on the ruling that] where a man betrothed one of five women, and he does not know which of them he betrothed, he leaves the kethubah² among them and withdraws;³ they differ only in the case where cohabitation occurred, R. Tarfon ruling that the man leaves the kethubah² among them and withdraws, while R. Akiba ruled [that the man is not exempt from transgression] unless he pays⁷ everyone of them. R. Tarfon and R. Akiba. furthermore, did not differ on [the ruling that] where a person bought something from five men and does not know from which of them he bought, he may leave the price of the purchase among them and depart; they differ only in the case where a person robbed one of five men, R. Tarfon ruling that the man must deposit the amount of the robbery among them and may then depart, while R. Akiba ruled [that the man is not exonerated] unless he pays [the amount of the] robbery to everyone.⁸ Now, since R. Simeon b. Eleazar said that they⁹ do not differ in the case where a man betrothed or purchased, it may be inferred that the first Tanna is of the opinion that they⁹ did differ. Whose [view then, is presented in our Mishnah]? If it is that of the first Tanna 'betrothal' and purchase should have been mentioned,¹⁰ and if [it is that of] R. Simeon b. Eleazar cohabitation and 'robbery' should have been mentioned!¹¹ — [Our Mishnah represents] in fact [the view of] N. Simeon b. Eleazar, but the meaning of¹² BETROTHED is betrothal through cohabitation'. BETROTHED was used in order to acquaint you how far R. Akiba is prepared to go¹³, as he imposes a penalty¹⁴ even where one transgressed a Rabbinic prohibition¹⁵ only; and ROBBED was taught in order to acquaint you how far N. Tarfon is prepared to go, as he imposes no penalties¹⁶ even where one had transgressed a Pentateuchal prohibition.¹⁷

MISHNAH. A WOMAN WHO WENT WITH HER HUSBAND TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, HER SON ALSO [GOING] WITH THEM, AND WHO CAME BACK AND STATED, 'MY HUSBAND DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY SON DIED', IS BELIEVED.¹⁸ [IF, HOWEVER, SHE STATED.] 'MY SON DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY HUSBAND DIED',¹⁹ SHE IS NOT BELIEVED,²⁰ BUT NOTE IS TAKEN OF HER ASSERTION²¹ AND SHE MUST, THEREFORE, PERFORM HALIZAH²² AND MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.²³

[IF A WOMAN²⁴ STATES].²⁵ 'A SON WAS GIVEN TO ME [WHILE I WAS] IN A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA' AND SHE ALSO ASSERTS, 'MY SON DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY HUSBAND DIED', SHE IS BELIEVED.²⁶ [IF, HOWEVER, SHE STATES]. 'MY HUSBAND DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY SON DIED'.²⁷ SHE IS NOT BELIEVED,²⁸ BUT NOTE IS TAKEN OF HER ASSERTION²⁹ AND SHE MUST, THEREFORE, PERFORM HALIZAH³⁰ BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.³¹

[¹⁹ IF A WOMAN³² STATES]. 'A BROTHER-IN-LAW WAS GIVEN TO ME [WHILE I WAS] IN A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA',³³ AND SHE ALSO STATES, 'MY HUSBAND DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY BROTHER-IN-LAW DIED OR 'MY BROTHER-IN-LAW DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY HUSBAND DIED', SHE IS BELIEVED.³⁴ IF A WOMAN AND HER HUSBAND AND HER BROTHER-IN-LAW WENT TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, AND SHE [ON RETURNING HOME] STATED, 'MY HUSBAND DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY BROTHER-IN-LAW [DIED]' OR 'MY BROTHER-IN-LAW [DIED] AND AFTERWARDS MY HUSBAND [DIED]'. SHE IS NOT BELIEVED; FOR A WOMAN IS NOT TO BE BELIEVED WHEN SHE ASSERTS 'MY BROTHER-IN-LAW IS DEAD', IN ORDER THAT SHE MAY MARRY AGAIN. NOR [WHEN SHE STATES THAT] HER SISTER IS DEAD. IN ORDER THAT SHE MAY ENTER HIS³⁵ HOUSE.³⁶ A MAN ALSO IS NOT BELIEVED WHEN HE ASSERTS 'MY BROTHER IS DEAD', SO THAT HE MAY CONTRACT LEVIR' ATE MARRIAGE WITH HIS WIFE, NOR [WHEN HE ASSERTS THAT] HIS WIFE IS DEAD, IN ORDER THAT HE MAY MARRY HER SISTER.³⁷

GEMARA. Raba enquired of R. Nahman: What [is the legal position] if a husband transferred to his wife [through an agent]³⁸ the possession of a letter of divorce, where a brother-in-law³⁹ is in existence?⁴⁰ [Is the divorce], since she [usually] hates her brother. in-law, an advantage to her and

[consequently valid, because] a privilege may be conferred upon a person in his absence; or is it possible [that the divorce], since she sometimes loves her brother-in-law, is a disadvantage to her and [consequently invalid because] no disadvantage may be imposed upon a person in his absence? The other replied. We have learned this: NOTE IS TAKEN OF HER ASSERTION AND SHE MUST, THEREFORE, PERFORM HALIZAH. BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.⁴¹ Said Rabina to Raba: What [is the legal decision] if a husband transferred to his wife [through an agent]⁴² the possession of a letter of divorce at a time⁴³ when a quarrel [raged between them]? [is the divorce], since she has a quarrel with her husband, an advantage to her or [is it a disadvantage, since] the gratification of bodily desires is possibly preferred by her?⁴⁴ — Come and hear what Resh Lakish said: ‘It is preferable to live in grief⁴⁵ than to dwell in widowhood’.⁴⁶

Abaye said: ‘With a husband [of the size of an] ant her seat is placed among the great’.⁴⁷

R. Papa said: Though her husband be a carder⁴⁸ she calls him to the threshold and sits down [at his side].⁴⁹

R. Ashi said: If her husband is only a cabbage-head⁵⁰ she requires no lentils⁵¹ for her pot.⁵²

A Tanna taught: All such women⁵³ play the harlot and attribute the results⁵⁴ to their husbands. [

 - (14) That the man must pay the amount if her kethubah to each one of the five women.
 - (15) It is only Rabbinically that betrothal through cohabitation is forbidden. Pentateuchally it constitutes a proper kinyan.
 - (16) Maintaining as he does that one single sum equal to the amount of the robbery exonerates the robber from all further liability.
 - (17) Prohibition of robbery was specifically mentioned in the Pentateuch,
 - (18) And is exempt from levirate marriage and halizah. Her statement is accepted since thereby she is merely confirming the status in which she found herself before her departure. At that time she had a son who exempted her from the levirate bond; and now that her husband died before that son she is still entitled to the same exemption. Her admission of her son's death does not affect her status, since she is the only source of the information, and as her word is accepted in respect of the death it must be similarly accepted in respect of its date.
 - (19) So that she is in consequence subject to the levirate bond.
 - (20) Because her assertion would alter the status in which she was confirmed prior to her departure. Such alteration cannot be authorized in view of the possibility that her report might be due to a desire to marry the levir.
 - (21) Since, at any rate, her statement has impaired her former status.

- (27) So that, were her statement to be accepted, she would be exempt from the levirate bond to which, in virtue of her former status, she is still subject.

- (37) Cf. supra note 2 mutatis mutandis.
- (38) Whom the childless husband had asked to act on behalf of his wife, his intention being to spare her from the levirate obligations on his death. Elsewhere a divorce is invalid unless it had actually been delivered into the woman's hands or into those of an agent who was duly appointed by her.
- (39) To whom she would be subject in the absence of a letter of divorce.
- (40) Lit., 'in the place of'.
- (41) Since this is the ruling in our Mishnah both in the case where It is assumed that she loves the levir (cf. supra p. 837, n. 2) and in that where she is assumed to hate him (cf. supra p. 837. n. 10). it is obvious that it is uncertain whether a divorce given in the circumstance described by Raba is an advantage or a disadvantage to the woman. The legal position in such a case would consequently be that the woman would have to perform halizah but would not be permitted levirate marriage.

- (50) קולסא 'dull', or 'ugly' (cf. last.); 'of a tainted family' (Rashi).
- (51) Regarded as a cheap food.
- (52) For the sake of a married life, a woman willingly renounces all other pleasures. even the enjoyment of the poorest meal.
- (53) Lit., 'and all of them', those married to the unlovely types of husband mentioned.
- (54) Lit , 'and hang (it) on'.

CHAPTER XVI

MISHNAH. A WOMAN WHOSE HUSBAND AND RIVAL WENT TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, AND TO WHOM PEOPLE CAME AND SAID, 'YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD', MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN¹ NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE² UNTIL SHE HAS ASCERTAINED WHETHER HER RIVAL IS PREGNANT.³ IF SHE HAD⁴ A MOTHER-IN-LAW⁵ SHE NEED NOT APPREHEND [THE POSSIBILITY OF THE BIRTH OF ANOTHER SON];⁶ BUT IF SHE DEPARTED WHILE PREGNANT [SUCH POSSIBILITY]

MUST BE TAKEN INTO CONSIDERATION.⁷ R. JOSHUA RULED; SHE NEED NOT APPREHEND [SUCH A POSSIBILITY].⁸

GEMARA. What is implied by⁹ ‘HER RIVAL’?¹⁰ — It is this that we are told: {The possibility of a birth in respect} of that rival¹¹ need be apprehended; in respect of another rival, however, it need not be apprehended.¹²

MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE etc. It is quite proper that she shall not contract levirate marriage since it is possible that [her rival] is pregnant and that she would in consequence cause an infringement¹³ [of the prohibition against marriage] of a brother's wife, which is Pentateuchal; but why should she not marry [a stranger]? The majority of women should be taken as a criterion¹⁴ and the majority of women conceive and bear children! Must it then¹⁵ be assumed that [the ruling is that of] R. Meir who takes a minority also into consideration?¹⁶ — It may even be said [to represent the view of] the Rabbis; for the Rabbis follow¹⁷ the majority principle only where the majority is actually present¹⁸ as, for instance, in the case of ‘nine shops’¹⁹ and ‘Sanhedrin’²⁰ but in respect of a majority that is not actually present²¹ the Rabbis were not guided by the majority principle.

Behold the case of a minor boy and a minor girl, where the majority is one that is not actually present and the Rabbis nevertheless follow the majority principle; for it was taught: A minor, whether male or female, may neither perform nor submit to halizah, nor may he contract levirate marriage; so R. Meir. They said to R. Meir: You spoke well [when you ruled] that ‘He may neither perform nor submit to halizah’, since in the Pentateuchal section²² man was written,²³ and we draw a comparison between ‘woman’ and man.²⁴ What, however, is the reason why he may not contract levirate marriage? He replied: Because a minor male might be found to be a saris;²⁵ a minor female might be found to be incapable of procreation; and thus the law of incest would be violated. The Rabbis, however, maintain, ‘Follow the majority of male minors’; and the majority of male minors are not sarisin;²⁶ ‘Follow the majority of female minors’ and the majority of female minors are not incapable of procreation!²⁷ — But, clearly, [it must be admitted], our Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir.

How have you explained it?²⁸ That it is in agreement with the view of²⁹ R. Meir? Read, then, the final clause: IF SHE HAD A MOTHER-IN-LAW SHE NEED NOT APPREHEND [THE POSSIBILITY OF THE BIRTH OF ANOTHER SON]; but why? One should be guided by the majority of women, and the majority of women conceive and bear while a minority miscarry, and, since all those who bear [produce] a half of males and a half of females, the minority of those who miscarry should be added to the half [of those who bear] females, and so the males would constitute a minority which³⁰ should be taken into consideration!³¹ — It is possible that since the woman was confirmed³² in her status of permissibility to strangers³³ [the possibility of the birth of a levir] was not taken by him³⁴ into consideration. In the first clause, then,³⁵ where she was confirmed in the status of eligibility for the levirate marriage,³⁶ let her contract the levirate marriage! — R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: In the first clause where a prohibition which is subject to the penalty of kareth [is involved, the possibility of the birth of a son]³⁷ had to be provided against; in the final clause, however, where a prohibitory law [only is involved]³⁸ no [such possibility]³⁹ was taken into consideration. Said Raba: Consider: The one [prohibition] is Pentateuchal and the other also is Pentateuchal;⁴⁰ what matters it, then, whether the prohibition is one involving kareth or whether it is only a mere prohibitory law? — Rather, said Raba;

(1) Since her husband, when he departed, was known to have had no issue.

(2) It being possible that her rival had a child from their husband.

(3) If the rival is found to be pregnant the woman is free to marry again; and if she is not pregnant, levirate marriage or halizah must be performed.

- (4) Overseas.
- (5) Who, at the time of her departure, had no other son but the one who is now dead.
- (6) To her mother-in-law. It is only in respect of a rival that the possibility of a birth must be taken notice of, since a child, whatever its sex, exempts the woman from the levirate obligations. In the case of a mother-in-law, however, the birth of a female would not affect the woman's freedom to marry again, since it is only a male that subjects her to the levirate obligations. There is no need to apprehend that the mother-in-law had not only (a) given birth to a child but also (b) that that child was not a female but a male.
- (7) Since the only doubt is whether the child was a male. Cf. supra n. 6.
- (8) Because here also two possibilities must be postulated: (a) that the mother-in-law did not miscarry and (b) that the child born was not a female but a male.
- (9) Lit., 'she' or 'it'.
- (10) Emphasis on HER.
- (11) Who went with her husband to a country beyond the sea.
- (12) If witnesses testified that the known rival (v. supra n. 11) was not pregnant there is no need to apprehend the possibility of a marriage with another wife who may have given birth to a child.
- (13) Lit., 'meet'.
- (14) Lit., 'go'.
- (15) Since the majority principle is not followed.
- (16) Hul. 6a; and since some women do not conceive and bear, the possibility that the rival belonged to this minority must be provided against by forbidding levirate marriage. Would then our anonymous Mishnah represent the view of an individual!
- (17) Lit., 'when do they go'.
- (18) Lit., 'which is before us'.
- (19) Which were selling permitted meat, while one shop in their vicinity was selling forbidden meat. If between these shops a piece of meat was found and it is not known from which shop it came, it is assumed to be permitted meat, since the majority of the shops were selling meat of such a character. V. Hul. 95a.
- (20) A majority of whom (twelve against eleven) are in favour of a certain decision. V. Sanh. 40a.
- (21) The majority of women in general who are assumed to conceive and bear.
- (22) Dealing with halizah.
- (23) V. Deut. XXV, 7.
- (24) As the male must be of mature age and not a minor, so must also be the female.
- (25) V. Glos.
- (26) Pl. of saris, v. Glos.
- (27) Bek. 19b. Cf. supra 61b, 105b. The majority spoken of here is, surely, one which is not actually present, and the Rabbis are nevertheless guided by it!
- (28) Lit., 'in what did you place it', sc. the first clause of our Mishnah.
- (29) Lit., 'like'.
- (30) According to R. Meir.
- (31) And, contrary to the ruling in our Mishnah, the woman should, as in the first clause, be forbidden marriage.
- (32) When her mother-in-law departed.
- (33) Lit., 'to the market'; because there was no known levir.
- (34) R. Meir.
- (35) If a woman's confirmed status at a certain period is a determining factor.
- (36) Since her husband when he departed, had no issue.
- (37) By the rival.
- (38) The marriage of a yebamah to a stranger.
- (39) That a son was born by the mother-in-law.
- (40) Neither is a mere Rabbinically preventive measure.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 119b

in the first clause the woman's confirmed status¹ [would subject her] to the levirate marriage while the majority principle² [would enable her] to marry any stranger;³ and, though ‘confirmed status’ is not as important a factor as a majority, the minority of women who miscarry must be added to the ‘confirmed status’ so that the factors on either side are equally balanced;⁴ hence⁵ she MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. In the final clause, however, the woman's confirmed status⁶ as well as the majority principle⁷ [points] to [the permissibility of marriage with] any stranger,³ so that [viable] males⁸ constitute a minority of a minority;⁹ and a minority of a minority is not taken into consideration even by R. Meir.

MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE etc. For ever?¹⁰ — Ze'iri replied: [She waits] on account of herself three months¹¹ and on account of her associate nine,¹² and then she may, at all events,¹³ perform halizah. R. Hanina said: On account of herself [she must wait] three months, but on account of her associate¹⁴ for ever.¹⁵ But let her perform halizah¹⁶ at all events!¹⁷ — Both Abaye b. Abin and R. Hanina b. Abin replied: This¹⁸ is a preventive measure against the possibility that the child¹⁹ might be viable²⁰ as a result of which²¹ you would have to subject her to the necessity of a public announcement²² in respect of the priesthood.²³ Well, let her be subjected to the necessity! — It may happen that someone would be present at the halizah and not at the announcement,²⁴ and he would form the opinion²⁵ that a haluzah was permitted to a priest.

We learned: [If a woman states], ‘A son was given to me [while I was] in a country beyond the sea’ and she also asserts, ‘My son died and afterwards my husband died’, she is believed. [If she states, however], ‘My husband died and afterwards my son died’, she is not believed, but note is taken of her assertion and she must, therefore, perform halizah but may not contract levirate marriage.²⁶ Let it, however, be apprehended that witnesses might come and confirm her statement and that, as a result, you would subject her to the necessity of an announcement in respect of the priesthood! — R. Papa replied: [This refers to] a woman divorced.²⁷ R. Hiyya son of R. Huna replied: [It refers to one] who stated ‘I and he²⁸ were hidden in a cave’.²⁹ MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE OF] TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW³⁰ ONE OF WHOM³¹ STATED, ‘MY HUSBAND IS DEAD’, AND THE OTHER ALSO STATED, ‘MY HUSBAND IS DEAD’, THE FORMER³¹ IS FORBIDDEN³² ON ACCOUNT OF THE HUSBAND OF THE LATTER,³³ AND THE LATTER IS FORBIDDEN³⁴ ON ACCOUNT OF THE HUSBAND OF THE FORMER.³³ IF THE ONE HAD WITNESSES³⁵ AND THE OTHER HAD NO WITNESSES,³⁵ SHE WHO HAD THE WITNESSES IS FORBIDDEN,³⁶ WHILE SHE WHO HAD NO WITNESSES IS PERMITTED.³⁷ IF THE ONE HAD CHILDREN AND THE OTHER HAD NO CHILDREN,³⁸ SHE WHO HAD CHILDREN³⁹ IS PERMITTED³⁴ AND SHE WHO HAD NO CHILDREN⁴⁰ IS FORBIDDEN.³⁴ IF THEY⁴¹ CONTRACTED LEVIRATE MARRIAGES,⁴² AND THE LEVIRS DIED, THEY⁴³ ARE FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN].⁴⁴ R. ELEAZAR⁴⁵ RULED: SINCE THEY WERE ONCE PERMITTED TO MARRY THE LEVIRS⁴⁶ THEY ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY ANY MAN.

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: If the one⁴⁷ had witnesses⁴⁸ and also children, and the other had neither witnesses nor children, both are permitted [to marry again].⁴⁹

IF⁵⁰ THEY CONTRACTED LEVIRATE MARRIAGES, AND THE LEVIRS DIED, THEY ARE FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN]. R. ELEAZAR RULED: SINCE THEY WERE ONCE PERMITTED TO THE LEVIRS THEY ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY ANY MAN. Raba inquired: What is R. Eleazar's reason? Is it because he is of the opinion that a rival⁵¹ is eligible to tender evidence in favour of her associate or is it because [he holds that] she would not⁵¹ cause injury to herself?⁵² What practical difference is there [between the two assumptions]?

(1) It was an established fact that her husband had no issue and that a levir was in existence.

(2) Most women bear viable children and her rival's child would exempt her from the levirate obligations.

(3) Lit., ‘to the market’.

- (4) Lit., 'and it is a half and a half', 'confirmed status' plus minority pointing to the levirate marriage while the majority principle points to permissibility to marry any stranger.
- (5) Since neither consideration can be regarded as more weighty than the other.
- (6) As one who had no brother-in-law.
- (7) Miscarriages and the births of females constitute a majority against the minority of births of viable males.
- (8) Only a viable male child exempts a woman from the levirate obligations.
- (9) I.e., besides the fact that viable males are in a minority (v. supra n. 10) the possibility of the birth of a viable male is still less to be taken note of in view of the confirmed status of the woman (v. supra note 9).
- (10) But why! Let her perform halizah and thus at all events procure her freedom. V. infra p. 844, n. 5.
- (11) As any other woman whose husband died. V. supra 42b.
- (12) Since should her rival be pregnant, her levirate bond could not be severed by halizah but by the actual birth of a viable child.
- (13) Whether the rival gave birth to a child or not. V. infra note 5.
- (14) Her rival who might be pregnant.
- (15) Until it is definitely ascertained whether her rival had given birth to a viable child.
- (16) After a period of nine months (v. supra p. 843, n. 15), and so procure her freedom to marry again.
- (17) Since either she is exempted altogether from the levirate obligations by the birth of her rival's child (if one was horn) or (if no viable child was born) she gains her freedom by the halizah.
- (18) That no halizah must be performed; v. supra n. 3.
- (19) Of the rival.
- (20) In consequence of which the halizah would become null and void as if it had never taken place.
- (21) Lit., 'it is found'.
- (22) That the halizah was unnecessary and consequently null and void.
- (23) I.e., that she is permitted to marry a priest.
- (24) V. supra note 10.
- (25) Should she eventually be married to a priest.
- (26) Supra 118b, q.v. for notes.
- (27) From a former husband; before she was married to the one now deceased. As a divorcee she remains forbidden to marry a priest even if the halizah is subsequently found to have no validity.
- (28) She and her husband together with their son.
- (29) When death occurred. Since no one was present there is no need to provide against the possibility of the appearance of witnesses.
- (30) The wives of two brothers.
- (31) Lit., 'this'.
- (32) To marry a stranger.
- (33) Who might, in fact, be alive and with whom halizah or levirate marriage must be performed. A woman is eligible to tender evidence on the death of her husband in so far only as to enable herself to marry again. She is ineligible, however, to give evidence enabling her sister-in-law to marry again.
- (34) To marry again.
- (35) That her husband was dead.
- (36) To marry a stranger; since there are no witnesses to testify to the death of the levir. The evidence of his wife alone (cf. supra n. 4) is not sufficient for the purpose.
- (37) To marry any stranger; since she herself is believed in respect of the death of her husband while in respect of the death of the levir the evidence of the witnesses is available.
- (38) And neither had witnesses.
- (39) Who exempt their mother from the levirate bond.
- (40) And who is consequently subject to the levirate bond of a man whose death is attested only by her sister-in-law whose word cannot be accepted (cf. supra n. 4).
- (41) The two sisters-in-law spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah, neither of whom had children nor was able to produce witnesses to attest her husband's death.
- (42) With the levirs other than the absent husbands.
- (43) V. supra note 12.

(44) Any stranger. Though the evidence of each woman was valid to enable herself to contract levirate marriage, it is not valid to exempt her sister-in-law- from the levirate bond (cf. supra note 4), and the possibility that their absent levirs (the first husbands) were still alive must be taken into consideration.

(45) Var. lec. R. Eliezer.

(46) On the assumption that their husbands were dead.

(47) Of two sisters-inlaw who stated that their husbands were dead.

(48) To confirm her statement.

(49) The former because of her children who exempt her from the levirate bond; and the latter, because witnesses had testified to the death of her levir while she herself is believed in respect of the death of her husband.

(50) Cur. edd. do not indicate by the usual stops that this passage is derived from our Mishnah. Cf. however, Bomb. ed.

(51) By a statement whereby she injures her associate.

(52) Her evidence here would injure herself as it would her associate. Where, however, her associate alone would be the sufferer a rival's evidence is not accepted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 120a

That of allowing¹ her rival to marry before herself. If it is granted that a rival may give evidence in favour of her associate, her rival may be permitted to marry even if she herself did not remarry. If, however, it be maintained that the reason is because she would not cause injury to herself, the rival would be permitted to marry only if she herself had married again, but if she herself did not remarry, her rival also would not be permitted to remarry. Now, what [is the decision]? — Come and hear: R. ELEAZAR RULED: SINCE THEY WERE ONCE PERMITTED TO THE LEVIR THEY ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY ANY MAN. Now, if it be granted that [the reason is because] she would not cause injury to herself one can well see the reason why only when the one married again is the other permitted to remarry. If it be maintained, however, that the reason is because a rival is eligible to tender evidence in favour of her associate, [the associate should be permitted to marry again] even if the rival did not remarry. Consequently it must be concluded² that R. Eleazar's reason is: Because she³ herself had married again and she would not cause injury to herself! — R. Eleazar may have argued on the basis of the view of the Rabbis.⁴ 'According to my view [he may have said in effect] a rival is eligible to tender evidence in favour of her associate, and even if she herself did not remarry the other may be allowed to marry again. According to your view, however, you must at least agree with me that where she herself' remarried the other also should be allowed to marry again, since she³ would naturally not injure herself!' And the Rabbis?⁵ — She might be acting [in the spirit of] let me die with the Philistines.⁶

Come and hear: If a woman and her husband went to a country beyond the sea, and she returned and stated, 'My husband is dead', she may be married again and she also receives her kethubah. Her rival, however, is forbidden. R. Eleazar⁷ ruled: Since she becomes permitted her rival also becomes permitted!⁸ — Read: Since she was permitted and she married again. Let it, however,⁹ be apprehended that she³ may have returned with a letter of divorce and that the reason why she made her statement¹⁰ is because it was her intention to injure her rival!¹¹ — If she was married to an Israelite, this would be so indeed;¹² but here we are dealing with one who married a priest.¹³

MISHNAH. EVIDENCE [OF IDENTITY]¹⁴ MAY BE LEGALLY TENDERED¹⁵ ONLY ON [PROOF AFFORDED BY] THE FULL FACE¹⁶ WITH THE NOSE, THOUGH THERE WERE ALSO MARKS ON THE MAN'S BODY OR CLOTHING. NO EVIDENCE [OF A MAN'S DEATH]¹⁵ MAY BE TENDERED BEFORE HIS SOUL HAS DEPARTED; EVEN THOUGH THE WITNESSES HAVE SEEN HIM WITH HIS ARTERIES CUT¹⁷ OR CRUCIFIED OR BEING DEVoured BY A WILD BEAST.¹⁸ EVIDENCE [OF IDENTIFICATION] MAY BE TENDERED [BY THOSE] ONLY [WHO SAW THE CORPSE] WITHIN¹⁹ THREE DAYS [AFTER DEATH].²⁰ R. JUDAH B. BABA, HOWEVER, SAID: NEITHER ALL MEN, NOR ALL PLACES, NOR ALL SEASONS²¹ ARE ALIKE.²²

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Evidence [of identification]²³ may be tendered²⁴ only on [proof afforded by] the forehead without the face²⁵ or the face without the forehead — Both together with the nose must¹⁹ be present.²⁶

Abaye, or it might be said, R. Kahana, stated: What is the Scriptural proof?²⁷ — The shew of their countenance²⁸ doth witness against them.²⁹

Abba b. Martha, otherwise³⁰ Abba b. Manyumi, was being pressed for the payment of some money by the people of the Exilarch's house. Taking some wax he smeared it on a piece of rag and stuck it upon his forehead. He passed before them and they did not recognize him.³¹

THOUGH THERE WERE ALSO MARKS etc. Does this imply that identification marks are not valid Pentateuchally? A contradiction, surely, may be pointed out: If he³² found it³³ tied to a bag, a purse or a seal-ring³⁴ or if it was found among his furniture,³⁵ even after a long time, it³³ is valid!³⁶ — Abaye replied: This is no difficulty. The one is the view of³⁷ R. Eliezer³⁸ b. Mahebai while the other is that of³⁷ the Rabbis. For it was taught: No evidence [of identification] by a mole may be legally tendered. R. Eliezer³⁸ h. Mahebai ruled: Such evidence may be legally tendered. Do they not differ on the following principle,³⁹ that one Master⁴⁰ is of the opinion that identification marks are valid Pentateuchally⁴¹ while the other Master⁴² is of the opinion that identification marks are only Rabbinically valid? — Said Raba: All⁴³ agree that identification marks are valid Pentateuchally; but here they differ on the question whether it is common for the same kind of mole to be found on persons of simultaneous birth.⁴⁴ One Master⁴² is of the opinion that it is common for the same kind of mole to be found on persons of simultaneous birth,⁴⁵ and the other Master⁴⁶ is of the opinion that it is not common for the same kind of mole to be found on persons of simultaneous birth.⁴⁷

Others say: Their⁴⁸ point of difference here is whether a mole usually undergoes a change after one's death — One Master⁴⁹ is of the opinion that it usually undergoes a change after one's death⁵⁰ and the other Master⁴⁶ is of the opinion that it does not usually undergo a change after one's death.

Others maintain that Raba said: All⁵¹ agree that identification marks are only Rabbinically valid; but here [it is on the question] whether a mole

(1) Where a woman who went overseas with her husband leaving her rival in the home town returned and stated that her husband was dead.

(2) Lit., 'but infer from it'.

(3) The woman who reported the death of her husband.

(4) Lit., 'according to their words he said to them'.

(5) Why do they not allow the associate to marry even in the latter case?

(6) Judges XVI, 30. In order to inflict injury upon her associate she is willing to suffer injury herself.

(7) Var. Sec. R. Eliezer cf. supra p. 845, n. 16.

(8) Cf. supra 118a. This proves that, on the evidence of a rival, an associate is always permitted to marry again whether the rival who gave the evidence did or did not herself marry again.

(9) If the reason why a rival is believed in respect of her associate is not because she is eligible to tender evidence but because she would not injure herself.

(10) Lit., 'that which she said thus'. That her husband was dead.

(11) She herself would thereby suffer no disability since she herself is in any case divorced from her husband.

(12) There would be ground for suspecting that she was divorced.

(13) Who may not marry a divorcee (v. Lev. XXI, 7). Had she been a divorced woman she would not have ventured to contract such a marriage for fear lest her former husband might return and expose her.

(35) Cf. Rashi.

(36) B.M. 27b; provided he is able to identify the bag, or any of the other objects mentioned, as the original object to which the letter of divorce had been tied. Though the assumed validity of the document affects a Pentateuchal law (permitting a married woman to marry a stranger) it is nevertheless permitted to rely upon the identification marks, contrary to the implication of our Mishnah.

(37) Lit., 'that'.

(38) Pesaro ed. and MSS. read 'Eleazar'.

(39) Of course they do.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 120b

constitutes a distinct¹ identification mark² that they differ. One Master is of the opinion that it constitutes a distinct identification mark,² and the other Master is of the opinion that it does not constitute a distinct identification mark.

With reference to the version according to which Raba stated that 'identification marks are valid Pentateuchally' [the objection might be raised:] Surely it was taught, THOUGH THERE WERE

ALSO MARKS ON THE MAN'S BODY OR CLOTHING!³ — As to the BODY [the marks indicated by the witnesses were only that the corpse was] long or short;⁴ and as to one's CLOTHING [no reliability can be placed upon their identification] since borrowing might be apprehended.⁵ If, however, borrowing is to be apprehended how could we allow the return of an ass⁶ on [the strength of] the identification marks of a saddle!⁷ — People do not borrow a saddle because it makes the back of the ass sore.⁸ Where one 'found it tied to a bag, a purse or a seal-ring',⁹ how do we allow its return!¹⁰ — As to a seal-ring one is afraid of forgery;¹¹ as to one's bag and purse, people are superstitious¹² and do not lend such objects.¹³ And if you prefer I might say [that the identification marks of one's] CLOTHING [consisted in a statement] that they were white or red.¹⁴

EVEN THOUGH THE WITNESSES HAVE SEEN HIM WITH HIS ARTERIES CUT etc. This then implies that a man whose arteries have been cut may live; but this is inconsistent with the following: A person does not cause defilement¹⁵ before his soul has departed, even though his arteries had been cut and even though he is in a dying condition.¹⁶ [Thus it follows that] it is only defilement that he does not cause but that it is impossible for him to live!¹⁷ — Abaye replied: This is no difficulty. The one represents the view of¹⁸ R. Simeon b. Eleazar; the other that of¹⁸ the Rabbis. For it was taught: Evidence may be legally tendered on [the death of a person] whose arteries were cut,¹⁹ but no such evidence may be tendered concerning one crucified. R. Simeon b. Eleazar ruled: No such evidence may be legally tendered even concerning one whose arteries were cut, because [the wounds] might be cauterized and [the man] may survive.²⁰ Can this,²¹ however, be reconciled²² with the views of R. Simeon b. Eleazar? Surely in the final clause²³ it was taught: It once happened at Asia that a man²⁴ was lowered into the sea and Only his leg was brought up,²⁵ and the Sages ruled: [If the recovered leg contained the part] above the knee [the man's wife] may marry again,²⁶ [but if it contained only the part] below the knee she may not remarry!²⁷ — Waters are different since they irritate the wound.²⁸ But, surely, Rabbah b. Bar Hana related: I myself have seen an Arab merchant who took hold of a sword and cut open the arteries of his camel, but this did not cause it to cease its cry!²⁹ — Abaye replied: That [camel] was a lean animal.³⁰

Raba replied: [The operation was performed] with a glowing hot knife,³¹ and this is in agreement with the opinion of all.³²

OR BEING DEVOURED BY A WILD BEAST etc. Rab Judah stated In the name of Samuel: This has been taught only in the case [where the attack was] not on a vital organ,³³ but where it was on a vital organ, evidence may be legally tendered.

Rab Judah further stated in the name of Samuel: If a person whose two organs³⁴ or the greater part of them were cut³⁵ escaped, evidence [of his death] may be legally tendered.³⁶ But this cannot be! For, surely, Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: If a man whose two [organs]³⁴ or the greater part of them were cut³⁵ indicated by gestures, 'Write a letter of divorce for my wife', [such document] is to be written and delivered [to his wife]!³⁷ — He is alive³⁸ but will eventually die.³⁹ If this is so⁴⁰ one⁴¹ should go into exile⁴² on account of him; while, in fact,⁴³ it was taught: If a man cut [unwittingly] the two, or the greater part of the two [organs⁴⁴ of another man] he is not to go into exile! — Surely in connection with this it was stated that R. Hoshia explained: The possibility must be taken into consideration that the wind might have aggravated the wound⁴⁵ or that he himself⁴⁶ also may have brought on his death,¹ What is the practical difference between these [two explanations]? —

The case where one cut [another man's organs] in a house of marble² and the latter made some convulsive movements,³ or also where he cut his organs out of doors and the latter made no convulsive movements.⁴

R. JUDAH . . . SAID: NOT ALL etc. The question was raised: Does R. Judah b. Baba differ [from the first Tanna] in relaxing the law⁵ or does he differ from him in imposing a greater restriction?⁶ — Come and hear: A man was once drowned at Karmi and after three days he was hauled up at Be Hedyā, and R. Dimi of Nehardea allowed his wife to remarry. And again, it happened that a man was drowned in the Tigris⁷ and after five days he was hauled up to the Shebistana bridge⁸ and, on the evidence of the shoshbinim,⁹ Raba permitted his wife to marry again — Now, if you grant that he¹⁰ differs [from the first Tanna] in relaxing the law, they¹¹ might well have acted in accordance with the ruling of R. Judah b. Baba. If you should contend, however, that he¹⁰ differed in imposing a greater restriction, in accordance with whose view [it may be asked] did they¹¹ act? — Waters are different because they cause contraction.¹² But, surely, you said that ‘waters [are different since they] irritate the wound’! — That applies only where a wound exists, but where no wound exists waters cause contraction. This, furthermore, applies only where the witnesses saw the body as soon as it was brought up, but if it remains some time, it swells.¹³

MISHNAH. IF A MAN FELL INTO THE WATER, WHETHER IT HAD [A VISIBLE] END¹⁴ OR NOT, HIS WIFE IS FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN].¹⁵ SAID R. MEIR: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN FELL INTO A LARGE CISTERN AND ROSE TO THE SURFACE¹⁶ AFTER THREE DAYS.¹⁷ SAID R. JOSE: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A BLIND MAN DESCENDED INTO A CAVE.¹⁸ TO PERFORM RITUAL ABLUTION WHILE HIS GUIDE WENT DOWN AFTER HIM; AND AFTER WAITING LONG ENOUGH FOR THEIR SOULS TO DEPART, PERMISSION WAS GIVEN TO THEIR WIVES TO MARRY AGAIN.¹⁹ ANOTHER INCIDENT OCCURRED AT ASIA²⁰ WHERE A MAN WAS LOWERED INTO THE SEA, AND ONLY HIS LEG WAS BROUGHT UP,²¹ AND THE SAGES RULED: [IF THE RECOVERED LEG CONTAINED THE PART] ABOVE THE KNEE [THE MAN'S WIFE] MAY MARRY AGAIN,²² [BUT IF IT CONTAINED ONLY THE PART] BELOW THE KNEE, SHE MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN.²³

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a man fell into water, whether it had [a visible] end²⁴ or not, his wife is forbidden [to marry again];²⁵ so R. Meir. But the Sages ruled: [If he fell into] water that has [a visible] end,²⁴ his wife is permitted [to marry again],²⁶ but [if into water] that has no [visible] end²⁷ his wife is forbidden [to marry again].²⁸

What is to be understood by ‘has [a visible] end’? — Abaye replied: [An area all the boundaries of which] a person standing [on the edge] is able to see in all directions.²⁹

Once a man was drowned in the swamp of Samki, and R. Shila permitted his wife to marry again. Said Rab to Samuel: ‘Come, let us place him under the ban’.³⁰ ‘Let us first’, [the other replied,] ‘send to [ask] him [for an explanation]’. On their sending to him the enquiry: ‘[If a man has fallen into] water which has no [visible] end. is his wife forbidden or permitted [to marry again]’? he sent to them [in reply], ‘His wife is forbidden’ — ‘And [they again enquired] is the swamp of Samki regarded as water that has [a visible] end or as water that has no [visible] end?’ — ‘It is’, he sent them his reply, ‘a water that has no [visible] end’. ‘Why then did the Master [they asked] act in such a manner?’³¹ — ‘I was really mistaken’, [he replied]; ‘I was of the opinion that as the water was gathered and stationary it was to be regarded as “water which has [a visible] end”, but the law is in fact not so; for owing to the prevailing waves it might well be assumed that the waves carried [the body] away’.³² Samuel thereupon applied to Rab the Scriptural text, There shall no mischief befall the righteous,³³ while Rab applied to Samuel the following text: But in the multitude of counsellors there is safety.³⁴

It was taught: Rabbi related how it once happened that while two men were casting nets in the Jordan one of them entered a subterranean fish pond³⁵ and when the sun had set he could not find the entrance of the cave. His companion, after waiting long enough for his soul to depart, returned and reported the accident to his household. On the following day when the sun rose [the first man] discovered the entrance of the cave, and on returning he found his household in deep mourning³⁶ 'How great', exclaimed Rabbi, 'are the words of the Sages who ruled [that if a man fell into] water which has [a visible] end his wife is permitted [to marry again, but if into water] which has no [visible] end, his wife is forbidden'. If so,³⁷ then also in the case of water which has [a visible] end the possibility of having remained in a subterranean fish pond should be taken into consideration! — It is not usual for a subterranean fish pond to be found with water which has [a visible] end.³⁸

R. Ashi said: The ruling of the Rabbis [that where a man has fallen into] water which has no [visible] end his wife is forbidden [to marry again]. applies only to an ordinary person but not to a learned man for, should he be rescued.³⁹ the fact would become known.⁴⁰ This, however, is not correct; for there is no difference between an ordinary man and a learned man. Ex post facto, the marriage⁴¹ is valid; ab initio, it is forbidden.

It was taught: R. Gamaliel related, 'I was once travelling on board a ship when I observed a shipwreck and was sorely grieved for [the apparent loss of] a scholar⁴² who had been travelling on board that ship. (And who was he? — R. Akiba.) When I subsequently landed, he⁴³ came to me and sat down and discussed matters of halachah. "My son", I asked him, "who rescued you?" "The plank of a ship", he answered me, "came my way, and to every wave that approached me I bent my head" —⁴⁴ Hence the Sages said that if wicked persons attack a man let him bend his head to them.⁴⁵ At that hour I exclaimed: How significant are the words of the Sages who ruled [that if a man fell into] water which has [a visible] end, [his wife] is permitted [to marry again; but if into] water which has no [visible] end, she is forbidden'.

It was taught: R. Akiba related, 'I was once travelling on board a ship when I observed a ship in distress,⁴⁶ and was much grieved on account of a scholar who was on it. (And who was it? — R. Meir.) When I subsequently landed in the province of Cappadocia⁴⁷ he came to me and sat down and discussed matters of halachah. "My son", I said to him, "who rescued you?" — "One wave" he answered me, "tossed me to another, and the other to yet another until [the sea] cast me⁴⁸ on the dry land". At that hour I exclaimed: How significant are the words of the Sages who ruled [that if a man fell into] water which has [a visible] end, [his wife] is permitted [to marry again; but if into] water which has no [visible] end, she is forbidden'. Our Rabbis taught: If a man fell into a lion's den, no evidence⁴⁹ may be legally tendered concerning him;⁵⁰ but if into a pit full of serpents and scorpions, evidence⁴⁹ may legally be tendered concerning him.⁵⁰ R. Judah b. Bathyra ruled: Even [if he fell] into a pit full of serpents and scorpions, no evidence⁴⁹ may legally be tendered concerning him,⁵⁰ since the possibility must be taken into consideration

(2) Where no wind can penetrate.

(3) According to the first explanation. since no aggravation could have resulted from wind, the offender must be condemned to exile. According to the second explanation he is exonerated, since it is possible that the convulsive movements of the victim brought on his death.

(4) Aggravation by wind is possible, while the bringing on of death by the victim himself cannot be assumed.

(5) While the first Tanna requires the evidence to be based on an examination of the corpse within three days of death, R. Judah allows it, in certain circumstances, even after three days.

(6) Disregarding the evidence under certain conditions even within three days.

that he might be a charmer.¹ But the first Tanna?² — Owing to the pressure³ they⁴ injure him.⁵

Our Rabbis taught: [If a man] fell into a burning furnace, evidence may be legally tendered concerning him, [and also if he fell] into a boiler that was full of [boiling]⁶ wine or oil, evidence may be legally tendered concerning him. In the name of R. Aha It was stated: [If the man fell into a hot boiler] of oil, evidence may legally be tendered concerning him, because it⁷ adds fuel to the fire;⁸ [but if into one] of wine, no evidence may legally be tendered concerning him, because it⁹ extinguishes [the fire].¹⁰ They,¹¹ however, said to him: At first it⁹ extinguishes [the fire to a certain extent] but eventually it causes it to burn [with greater vehemence].¹²

SAID R. MEIR: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN FELL INTO A LARGE CISTERN etc. It was taught: They said to R. Meir, 'Miracles cannot be mentioned [as proof]'.¹³ What [did they mean by] 'miracles'?¹⁴ If it be suggested because he neither eats nor drinks, surely [it may be pointed out], It is written in Scripture, And fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink [three days]!¹⁵ — Rather because he does not sleep. For R. Johanan stated: [A man who said]. 'I take an oath that I will not sleep for three days' is to be flogged¹⁶ and he may sleep at once.¹⁷ What then is R. Meir's reason?¹⁸ — R. Kahana replied: There were¹⁹ arches above arches.²⁰ And the Rabbis?²¹ — They²² were of marble.²³

And R. Meir? — It is hardly possible that the man did not hang²⁴ on to [the arches] and doze a while.

Our Rabbis taught: It once happened that the daughter of Nehonia the well²⁵-digger²⁶ fell into a large cistern, and people went and reported [the accident] to R. Hanina b. Dosa.²⁷ During the first hour he said to them, 'All is well'.²⁸ In the second hour he again said, 'All is well'.²⁸ In the third he said to them, 'She is saved'.²⁹ 'My daughter', he asked her, 'who saved you?' — 'A ram³⁰ came to my help³¹ with an aged man³² leading it'. 'Are you', the people asked him, 'a prophet?' — 'I am', he replied, 'neither prophet nor the Son of a prophet; but should the [beneficent] work in which the righteous is engaged³³ be the cause of disaster³⁴ to his seed!' R. Abba stated: His³⁵ son nevertheless died of thirst; for it is said in Scripture, And round about Him it stormeth mightily,³⁶ which teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, deals strictly with those round about Him even to a hair's³⁷ breadth. R. Hanina said, [Proof³⁸ may be adduced] from here: A God dreaded in the great council of the holy ones, and feared of all them that are round about Him.³⁹

MISHNAH. EVEN [A MAN ONLY] HEARD WOMEN SAYING, 'SO-AND-SO IS DEAD', THIS SHOULD SUFFICE FOR HIM.⁴⁰ R. JUDAH SAID: EVEN IF HE ONLY HEARD CHILDREN SAY, 'BEHOLD WE ARE GOING TO MOURN FOR A MAN NAMED SO-AND-SO AND TO BURY HIM' [IT IS SUFFICIENT].⁴⁰ WHETHER [SUCH STATEMENT WAS MADE] WITH THE INTENTION [OF TENDERING EVIDENCE] OR WAS MADE WITH NO SUCH INTENTION [IT IS VALID]. R. JUDAH B. BABA SAID: WITH AN ISRAELITE [THE EVIDENCE IS VALID] EVEN IF THE MAN HAD THE INTENTION [OF ACTING AS WITNESS]. IN THE CASE OF AN IDOLATER, HOWEVER, THE EVIDENCE IS INVALID IF HIS INTENTION WAS [TO ACT AS WITNESS].

GEMARA. Is it not possible that they⁴¹ did not go?⁴² — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: [Our Mishnah deals with a case] where they⁴¹ Say, 'Behold we are returning from the mourning for, and the burial of So-and-so'. Is it not possible that a mere ant⁴³ had died and that the children gave it the man's name?⁴⁴ — [It is a case] where they⁴⁵ say, 'Such and such Rabbis were there' or 'such and such funeral orators were there'.

IN THE CASE OF AN IDOLATER, HOWEVER . . . IF HIS INTENTION WAS etc. Said Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: This⁴⁶ was taught only in the case where it was his⁴⁷ intention to enable [the woman] to be permitted,⁴⁸ but if his intention was merely to give evidence his testimony is valid. How could this⁴⁹ be ascertained? — R. Joseph replied: If he came to Beth din and stated, 'So-and-so is dead, allow his wife to marry again', such evidence is one where his intention was to enable [the woman] to be permitted,⁴⁸ [but if he stated], 'He is dead', and nothing more, his intention was merely to give evidence.

So It was also stated:⁵⁰ Resh Lakish said, This⁴⁶ was taught only in the case where it was his intention to enable [the woman] to be permitted,⁴⁸ but if his intention was merely to give evidence his testimony is valid.

Said R. Johanan to him:⁵¹ Did it not happen with Oshaia Berabbi,⁵² that he opposed⁵³ eighty-five elders saying to them that, 'This⁴⁶ was taught Only in the case where it was his intention to enable [the woman] to be permitted⁴⁸ but if his intention was merely to give evidence his testimony is valid', but the Sages did not agree with him!⁵⁴

But according to the ruling in our Mishnah, tha⁵⁵ IN THE CASE OF AN IDOLATER, HOWEVER, THE EVIDENCE IS INVALID IF HIS INTENTION WAS [TO ACT AS WITNESS],⁵⁶ how is it possible [for the idolater's testimony ever to be accepted]?⁵⁷ — Where he makes a statement at random,⁵⁸ as was the case where one went about saying, 'Who of the family of Hiwai is here? Who is here of the family of Hiwai? Hiwai is dead!', and R. Joseph allowed his⁵⁹ wife to marry again.

A man⁶⁰ once went about saying, 'Alas for the valiant rider who was at Pumbeditha, for he is dead'; and R. Joseph, or it might be said, Raba, allowed his wife to marry again.

A man once went about saying, 'Who of the family of Hasa is here? Hasa is drowned!' [On hearing this] R. Nahman exclaimed, 'By God, the fish must have eaten Hasa up!' Relying on R. Nahman's exclamation, Hasa's wife went and married again, and no objection was raised against her action.⁶¹

Said R. Ashi: From this⁶² it may be inferred that the ruling of the Rabbis⁶³ that [if a man had fallen into] water which had no [visible] end, his wife is forbidden [to marry again] applies only ab initio, but if someone had already married her, she is not to be taken away from him.

Others read: R. Nahman allowed his⁶⁴ wife to marry again; for he said, 'Hasa was a great man, and had he come up [out of the water] his rescue would have become known'. The law, however, is not so. For there is no difference between a great man and one who is not great — [In either case] it is permitted⁶⁵ ex post facto and forbidden⁶⁶ ab initio.

A certain idolater 'once said to an Israelite, 'Cut some grass⁶⁷ and throw it to my cattle on the Sabbath; if not, I will kill you as I have killed So-and-so, that son of an Israelite, to whom I said, "Cook for me a dish on the Sabbath", and whom, as he did not cook for me, I killed'. His wife⁶⁸ heard this and came to Abaye.⁶⁹ As he kept her waiting

(2) Why, in view of R. Judah b. Bathyra's reason, does he admit evidence of death in the latter case?

(3) Of the falling body.

- (4) The serpents and scorpions.
- (5) In a lion's den, however, there is much more space, and the body might sometimes fall to one side and the animals, if they happened to be full, would leave it untouched.

- (69) To obtain his ruling as to whether she may marry again.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 122a

for three festivals,¹ R. Adda b. Ahabah said to her, 'Apply² to R. Joseph, whose knife is sharp'.³ When she came to him he decided⁴ [her case by deduction] from the following Baraitha:⁵ If an idolater who was selling fruit in the market declared, 'These fruits are of 'orlah,⁶ of a newly broken field,⁷ or of a plantation in its fourth year',⁸ his statement is disregarded,⁹ for his intention was merely to raise the value¹⁰ of his fruit.¹¹

Abba Judah of Zaidar¹² related: It once happened that an Israelite and an idolater went on a journey together and when the idolater returned he said, 'Alas for the Jew who was with me on the journey, for he died on the way and I buried him', and [the Israelite's] wife [on this evidence] was allowed to marry again. And, again it happened that a group¹³ of men were going to Antiochia¹⁴ and an idolater came and stated, 'Alas for that group¹³ of men, for they died and I buried them', and [on this evidence] their wives were permitted to marry again. Moreover, it happened that sixty men were going to the camp¹⁵ of Bether,¹⁶ and an idolater came and stated, 'Alas for sixty men who were on the way to Bether, for they died and I buried them', and [on the basis of this statement] their wives were permitted to marry again.

MISHNAH. EVIDENCE¹⁷ MAY BE TENDERED [EVEN IF THE CORPSE WAS SEEN BY THE WITNESSES] IN CANDLE LIGHT OR IN MOONLIGHT; AND A WOMAN MAY BE GIVEN PERMISSION TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF A MERE VOICE.¹⁸ IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN WAS STANDING ON THE TOP OF A HILL AND CRIED, SO-AND-SO SON OF SO-AND-SO OF SUCH-AND-SUCH A PLACE IS DEAD', BUT WHEN THEY WENT [TO THE TOP OF THE HILL] THEY FOUND NO ONE THERE. HIS WIFE, HOWEVER, WAS PERMITTED TO REMARRY.¹⁹ AGAIN, IT HAPPENED AT ZALMON²⁰ THAT A MAN DECLARED, 'I AM SO-AND-SO SON OF SO-AND-SO; A SERPENT HAS BITTEN ME, AND I AM DYING'; AND THOUGH WHEN THEY WENT [TO EXAMINE THE CORPSE] THEY DID NOT RECOGNIZE HIM, THEY NEVERTHELESS PERMITTED HIS WIFE TO REMARRY.

GEMARA. Rabbah b. Samuel stated: A Tanna taught that Beth Shammai ruled that a woman may not be permitted to marry again on the evidence of a mere voice¹⁹ and Beth Hillel ruled that she may be permitted to marry again on the evidence of a mere voice.²¹ What does he²² teach us?²³ This,²⁴ surely, is the ruling in our Mishnah!²⁵ — It is this that he teaches us: Should an anonymous statement be found that a woman [in such circumstances] is not permitted to marry again, that [statement would represent the view of] Beth Shammai.

BUT WHEN THEY WENT . . . THEY FOUND NO ONE. Is it not possible that it was a demon [that cried]?²⁶ — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: [This is a case] where they²⁷ saw in him the likeness of a man! But they²⁸ also are in the likeness of men! — They²⁷ saw his shadow. But these²⁸ also have a shadow! They²⁹ saw a shadow of his shadow. Is it not possible that these²⁸ also cast a shadow of a shadow? — R. Hanina replied: The demon Jonathan²⁹ told me that they²⁸ have a shadow but not a shadow of a shadow. Is it not possible that it was a rival [that cried]?³⁰ — A Tanna at the school of R. Ishmael taught that at a time of danger³¹ [a letter of divorce] may be written and delivered [to the woman]³² even if [the husband who gave the instructions]³³ is unknown [to the witnesses].³⁴

MISHNAH. R. AKIBA STATED: WHEN I WENT DOWN TO NEHARDEA TO INTERCALATE³⁵ THE YEAR, I MET NEHEMIAH OF BETH DELI³⁶ WHO SAID TO ME, 'I HEARD THAT IN THE LAND OF ISRAEL NO ONE, WITH THE EXCEPTION OF R.³⁷ JUDAH B. BABA, PERMITS A [MARRIED] WOMAN TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE WITNESS'. 'THAT IS SO', I TOLD HIM. TELL THEM', HE SAID TO ME, 'IN MY

NAME: (YOU KNOW THAT THIS COUNTRY³⁸ IS IN CONFUSION BY REASON OF RAIDERS);³⁹ I HAVE THIS⁴⁰ TRADITION FROM R. GAMALIEL THE ELDER: THAT A [MARRIED] WOMAN MAY BE ALLOWED TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE WITNESS'.⁴¹ AND WHEN I CAME AND RECOUNTED THE CONVERSATION IN THE PRESENCE OF R. GAMALIEL⁴² HE REJOICED AT MY INFORMATION AND EXCLAIMED, 'WE HAVE FOUND A COLLEAGUE⁴³ FOR R. JUDAH B. BABA!' AS A RESULT OF THIS TALK⁴⁴ R. GAMALIEL RECOLLECTED THAT SOME MEN WERE ONCE KILLED AT TEL ARZA,⁴⁵ AND THAT R. GAMALIEL [THE ELDER] HAD ALLOWED THEIR WIVES TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE WITNESS.⁴⁶ AND THE LAW WAS ESTABLISHED THAT [A WOMAN] SHALL BE ALLOWED TO MARRY AGAIN [ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE] WITNESS [WHO STATES THAT HE HAS HEARD THE REPORT] FROM⁴⁷ ANOTHER WITNESS, FROM⁴⁷ A SLAVE, FROM⁴⁷ A WOMAN OR FROM⁴⁷ A BONDWOMAN. R. ELIEZER AND R. JOSHUA RULED: A WOMAN MAY NOT BE ALLOWED TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE WITNESS.⁴⁸ R. AKIBA RULED: [A WOMAN IS NOT ALLOWED TO MARRY AGAIN] ON THE EVIDENCE OF⁴⁹ A WOMAN, ON THAT OF⁵⁰ A SLAVE, ON THAT⁵⁰ OF A BONDWOMAN OR ON THAT OF RELATIVES.

GEMARA. Is R. Akiba then⁵¹ of the opinion that on the evidence of⁵⁰ a woman,⁵² [a wife is] not [permitted to marry again]? Surely, It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar stated in the name of R. Akiba, '[That] a woman is eligible⁵³ to bring her own letter of divorce⁵⁴ is Inferred a minori ad majus: If those women concerning whom the Rabbis ruled that they⁵⁵ are not believed when they state, "Her husband⁵⁶ is dead"⁵⁷ are nevertheless eligible⁵³ to bring⁵⁸ her a letter of divorce,⁵⁹ how much more reasonable is it that this woman, who is believed when she states that her own husband is dead, should be eligible⁵³ to bring her own letter of divorce.' [Thus it follows that only] those women of whom the Rabbis have spoken⁵⁷ are not believed⁶⁰ but any other⁶¹ woman is believed!⁶² — This is no difficulty. One ruling⁶³ was made⁶⁴ before the law,⁶⁵ had been established; the other,⁶⁴ after the law⁶⁵ had been established.

MISHNAH. THEY⁶⁶ SAID TO HIM:⁶⁷ 'IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A NUMBER OF LEVITES WENT TO ZOAR,⁶⁸ THE CITY OF PALMS, AND ONE OF THEM WHO FELL. ILL WAS TAKEN BY THEM INTO AN INN. WHEN THEY RETURNED THEY ASKED THE INNKEEPER⁶⁹ WHERE IS OUR FRIEND?' AND SHE REPLIED, HE IS DEAD AND I BURIED HIM". [AND IT WAS ON THIS EVIDENCE THAT] HIS WIFE WAS PERMITTED TO MARRY AGAIN. SHOULD NOT THEN A PRIEST'S WIFE⁷⁰ [BE BELIEVED AT LEAST AS MUCH] AS THE INNKEEPER!⁷¹ HE ANSWERED THEM, WHEN SHE WILL BE [GIVING SUCH EVIDENCE] AS THE INNKEEPER SHE WILL BE BELIEVED. THE INNKEEPER [AS A MATTER OF FACT] HAD BROUGHT OUT TO THEM HIS⁷² STAFF, HIS BAG⁷³ AND THE SCROLL OF THE LAW WHICH HE HAD WITH HIM.⁷⁴

(1) ריגלי, when the scholars and students who were assembled for the purpose of listening to the festival discourses, were also asked to decide difficult points of law that had arisen during the preceding months. During these gatherings the woman had an opportunity of making enquiries about her vanished husband. According to תשובות בגאונים cited by Rashi, the ריגלי were the anniversaries of the deaths of distinguished men, when scholars from the surrounding localities as well as the general public assembled round the respective graves for study and for discussions of matters of law.

'Azeka may have been, according to Rashi (a.l. s.v. לא אמר כלום) a town in Judaea (cf. Josh. X, 10), that was famous for its choice fruit, the point in doubt being whether the fruit had originally belonged to an Israelite and whether It had been tithed. If this interpretation is to be followed the sale of the fruit mentioned presumably took place outside Palestine, where locally grown produce is free from tithe. For other interpretations cf. XLI, 45, ps. CX, 4) as רבא 'great man', 'prince'. 'Should not the lady enjoy the status of the innkeeper!' Another interpretation applies כהנת to all Jewish women since any of them might become a כהנת by marrying a priest. Cf. Golds.

- (73) [Some texts add, 'his shoes'].
- (74) It was on this proof, and not on the evidence of the innkeeper, that they acted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 122b

GEMARA. What was the inferiority of the innkeeper?¹ R. Kahana replied: She was an innkeeper who was an idolatress and she said at random,² 'This is his staff, and this is his bag and this is the grave wherein I buried him'. So it was also recited by Abba the son of R. Manyumi b. Hiyya: She was an innkeeper who was an idolatress and she said at random,² 'This is his staff, and this is his bag and this is the grave wherein I buried him'. But, surely, they had asked her, 'Where is our friend?'³ — When she saw them she began to cry, and when they asked her, 'Where is our friend?' she replied, 'He died and I buried him',⁴

Our Rabbis taught: It once occurred that a man came to give evidence on behalf of a woman⁵ before R. Tarfon. 'My son', [the Master] said to him, 'what⁶ do you know concerning the evidence for this woman?' — 'I and he', the other replied, 'were going on the same road and when a raiding gang pursued us he grasped⁷ the branch of an olive tree, pulled it down, and made the gang turn back. "Lion", I said to him, "I thank you".⁸ "Whence did you know [he asked] that my name was Lion? So in fact I am called in my home town: Johanan son of R. Jonathan, the Lion of Kefar Shihaya",⁹ and after some time he fell ill and died'. And [on this evidence] R. Tarfon permitted his¹⁰ wife to marry again.

Does not R. Tarfon, however, hold that inquiry and examination¹¹ are necessary? Surely it was taught: It once happened that a man came before R. Tarfon to give evidence on behalf of a woman.⁵ My son', he said to him, 'What⁶ do you know concerning this evidence?' 'I and he', the other replied, 'were going on the same road, and when a raiding gang pursued us he grasped the branch of a fig tree, pulled it down, and drove¹² the gang back. "I thank you,¹³ Lion", I said to him, and he replied, "You have correctly guessed my name, for so I am called in my home town: Johanan son of Jonathan, the Lion of Kefar Shihaya", and after some time he died'. The Master said to him: Did you not tell me thus, 'Johanan son of Jonathan of Kefar Shihaya the Lion'?¹⁴ — 'No', the other replied, 'but it is this that I told you: Johanan son of Jonathan, the Lion of Kefar Shihaya'. Having examined him closely¹⁵ two or three times and the man's replies invariably agreeing, R. Tarfon permitted his¹⁶ wife to marry again!¹⁷ — This [is a point in dispute between] Tannaim. For it was taught: Witnesses on matrimonial matters¹⁸ are not to be subjected¹⁹ to enquiry and examination.²⁰ These are the words of R. Akiba;²¹ R. Tarfon, however, ruled: They are to be subjected.²² And they²³ differ [in respect of a ruling] of R. Hanina. For R. Hanina stated: Pentateuchally both monetary, and capital cases must be conducted with enquiry and examination,²⁰ for it is said, Ye shall have one manner of law,²⁴ what then is the reason why they have ordained that monetary cases do not require enquiry and examination?²⁰ In order that you should not lock the door in the face of borrowers —²⁵ And it is on this principle that²⁶ they²³ differ: One Master is of the opinion that since the woman has²⁷ a kethubah to receive²⁸ [such cases²⁹ are] on a par with those of monetary matters,³⁰ while the other Master is of the opinion that since we are thereby permitting a married woman to marry a stranger³¹ [such cases³² are] on a par with capital cases.³³

R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hanna: Scholars³⁴ increase peace in the world, for it is said in the Scriptures, And all thy children shall be to taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children.³⁵

(3) How then could it be said that she spoke at random?

(4) It was thus obvious that she had no ulterior motive in making her statement and that she was merely answering their enquiry. Such evidence may be regarded as given in all innocence (cf. supra p. 861, n. 14) and may be relied upon.

CHAPTER I

MISHNAH. SEVEN DAYS BEFORE THE DAY OF ATONEMENT THE HIGH PRIEST WAS REMOVED FROM HIS HOUSE TO THE CELL OF THE COUNSELLORS¹ AND ANOTHER PRIEST WAS PREPARED TO TAKE HIS PLACE IN CASE ANYTHING² HAPPENED TO HIM [THE HIGH PRIEST] THAT WOULD UNFIT HIM [FOR THE SERVICE]. R. JUDAH SAID: ALSO ANOTHER WIFE WAS PREPARED FOR HIM IN CASE HIS WIFE SHOULD DIE. FOR IT IS WRITTEN,³ AND HE SHALL MAKE ATONEMENT FOR HIMSELF AND FOR HIS HOUSE. 'HIS HOUSE THAT MEANS 'HIS WIFE'. THEY SAID TO HIM: IF SO THERE WOULD BE NO END TO THE MATTER.⁴

GEMARA. We learned elsewhere: Seven days before the burning of the [red] heifer⁵ the priest who was to burn the heifer was removed from his house to the cell in the north-eastern corner before the Birah.⁶ It was called the cell of the stone chamber.⁷ And why was it called the cell of the stone chamber? Because all its functions [in connection with the red heifer] had to be performed only in vessels made of either cobble-stones,⁸ stone or earthenware. What was the reason [for that restriction]? Since a tebul-yom⁹ was permitted to [perform the ceremony of] the heifer, as we have learnt:¹⁰ They [deliberately] rendered the priest ritually impure to remove [a false notion] from the minds of the Sadducees, who used to say: 'Only by those on whom the sun has set could it be performed', the Rabbis ordained that only vessels made of cobble-stones, stone, or earthenware which are immune to impurity — should be used in connection with the heifer, lest the ceremony thereof be treated slightly.¹¹

Why [was the ceremony performed] in the north-eastern corner? — Since the heifer was a sin-offering¹² and a sin-offering had to be sacrificed in the northern corner, whereas, on the other hand, it is written about the heifer,¹³ Towards the front of the tent of meeting,¹⁴ the Rabbis ordained [for the heifer] a cell in the northeastern corner, so that [the special importance of this ceremony] be clearly recognized.

What is Birah? — Rabbah b. Bar Hana in the name of R. Johanan said: There was a place on the Temple mount called Birah. Resh Lakish said: The whole sanctuary is called Birah, as it is written, And to build the Birah for which I have made provision.¹⁵

Whence is it proved¹⁶ that it is necessary to remove the priest [from his house]? — R. Minyumi b. Hilkiah in the name of R. Mahsiah b. Idi, in the name of R. Johanan said: The text reads:¹⁷ As hath been done this day, so the Lord hath commanded to do, to make atonement for you;¹⁸ the work la'asoth [to do] refers to the matter of the [red] heifer, the words lekapper 'alekem [to make atonement for you] refer to the work of the Day of Atonement. It is obvious that the whole of this text could not be taken as referring to the heifer, because of the words 'to atone' and the heifer has nothing to do with atonement. But let us assume that the whole text¹⁹ refers to the Day of Atonement? — They said [in answer to this suggestion]: One may infer from, the fact that the identical expression ziwwah [he commanded] is used.²⁰ Here²¹ it is written: The Lord ziwwah [commanded] to do,²² and there²³ it is written: This is the statute of the law which the Lord ziwwah [has commanded]:²⁴ just as in the latter [passage ziwwah] refers to the heifer, so does it in the former refer to the heifer, and just as the removal [of the priest is enjoined] in the one, so must the removal [of the priest apply] to the other.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 2b

But perhaps say that [the word] *ziwwah*¹ [he commanded] has reference to [the word] ziwwah which occurs in connection with the Day of Atonement,² since the verse reads,³ And he did as the Lord ziwwah [commanded] Moses?⁴ — One may infer from [the word] ziwwah used before conformity⁵ for another case in which ziwwah is used also before conformity,⁶ but one may not infer ziwwah is used before conformity⁵ for ziwwah used after conformity.⁷ Perhaps *ziwwah*¹ has reference to sacrifices,⁸ for it is written, On the day when the Lord *zawwotho*⁹ [commanded] the children of Israel?¹⁰ — One may fitly infer *ziwwah*⁶ from ziwwah,⁵ but one may not infer *zawwotho*¹¹ from ziwwah.¹² But what does it matter? Did not the school of R. Ishmael teach that [in the verse], The priest shall return or the priest shall come in,¹³ 'returning' and 'coming in' mean one and the same thing?¹⁴ — These words [of the school of R. Ishmael] apply only when there is no identical word,¹⁵ but where such a similar word is used, the inference may be made only on the basis of absolute identity of expression. — [We stated above that the word] 'lekapper' [to atone] has reference to the Day of Atonement. May it not refer [also]¹⁶ to the atonement resulting from a sacrifice?¹⁷ — How could we know which priest would happen to perform the sacrifice so that he would have to be removed [from his house]?¹⁸ But why should we not really have to postulate such separation for the whole priestly division?¹⁹ — It is proper to make inference from something for which a definite time is appointed²⁰ for something which similarly is fixed for a definite time.²¹ That excludes any inference [from the consecration of the priest, an annual event] to sacrifices which are offered up every day.²² Perhaps [the reference is to] the [three] festivals?²³ — One may infer something which takes place but once a year²⁴ from something else which took place but once a year, but inference for these festivals is excluded since they do not take place but once a year. Perhaps [the reference is] to one festival.²⁵ And if you would answer [by saying], We would not know to which [it has reference], [it would be] either the festival of Passover, which Scripture always mentions²⁶ [as the first of the three], or the feast of Sukkoth, because a great number of commandments apply to it!²⁷ — The point is, however, that you may infer the [law of the priest's] removal [from his house] for seven days before the service which he is to perform on one day²⁸ from [another case in which the priest is] removed also for seven days for the service of one day;²⁹ but one may not fitly infer that [a priest must be] removed for seven days for the service of seven³⁰ days from the fact that a law exists obliging [the priest's] removal for seven days for the service of one day.²⁹ Yet perhaps [the reference is to] the Eighth Day³¹ because there would be a service of only one day? — One may infer [laws concerning] a day which is not immediately preceded by another [festival] sanctity²⁸ from another day,²⁹ which similarly is not preceded by other [festival] sanctity,²⁹ but one may not infer for a day preceded by [festival] Sanctity³² from a day unpreceded by such.

But [even if the inference by analogy be unjustified] is there no legitimate conclusion a minori ad majus, viz., if a day unpreceded by another [festival] sanctity requires [for the officiating priest] a seven day removal [from his family], how much more should a day preceded by another [festival] sanctity require it!³³ — R. Mesharsheya answered: Scripture expressly states this day,³⁴ that means on a day like this.³⁵ R. Ashi said:³⁶ Could there be any festival the major³⁷ part of which would require no removal [of the priest], while its attachment³⁸ would require it. And even according to the one who holds that the eighth day is [not a mere attachment to Sukkoth, but] an independent festival day, that applies only to

Pe'Z'R'K'Sh'B,¹ but in matters of complementing the sacrifice of the festival, the eighth day is but a continuation of the first day, as we have learned: He who failed to offer up the festival sacrifice² on the first day of the feast [of Sukkoth], may do so during the entire festive season including the last day of the feast.³

[Perhaps] say [that the reference is to] Pentecost,⁴ because that would also mean removal of the priest for seven days preceding a one-day service?⁵ — R. Abba said: One may fitly infer a case⁶ in which one ox and one ram are offered from another⁷ case in which one ox and one ram are offered, this excludes, however, Pentecost, on which two⁸ rams are to be sacrificed. This would be right according to the opinion that on the Day of Atonement only one ram is being offered up,⁹ but what could be said according to the view that on the Day of Atonement too, two rams were to be offered up?¹⁰ For it has been taught: Rabbi¹¹ said, The ram mentioned here [in Leviticus] is the same as the one mentioned in the Book of Numbers;¹² R. Eliezer son of R. Simeon said: Two rams are here [involved], the one mentioned here and the other mentioned in the Book of Numbers!¹³ — It may be in accord even with the opinion of R. Eliezer son of R. Simeon. Because there¹⁴ one [of the rams] is offered up in fulfilment of the regular sacrifices for that day, and the other as one of the additional sacrifices, whereas in the case of Pentecost both are the regular sacrifices of that day.¹⁵ [Perhaps] say that [the reference is to] New Year¹⁶ which should also imply the removal of the priest for seven days preceding a one-day service? — R. Abbahu said, One may infer a case in which the priest offers up an ox and a ram from his own means¹⁷ from another case in which he offers up an ox and a ram from¹⁸ his own means, that excludes Pentecost¹⁹ and Rosh hashanah²⁰ on which both are offered up from public [congregational] funds. This would be right according to the opinion which holds that the words kah leka²¹ ['take thee'] mean 'take from thy own means' and

(1) This is a mnemonical acrostic for: P (payyis allotment, by counting, of the work to be done by the priests in the sanctuary. No such counting took place during the Sukkoth festival, but it was the rule on Shemini 'Azereth); Z (zeman — the blessing on the entrance of a festival referring to the return of the festive season. This benediction was repeated on the eve of Shemini 'Azereth, thus constituting it an independent holy day); R (regel-festival with its own name); K (korban — having its own number of sacrifices); Sh (shir — song — Shemini 'Azereth having its own psalm in the liturgy); B (berakah-blessing — on Shemini 'Azereth a special prayer was offered up for the life of the king.) 'aseh leka¹ ['make thee'] mean 'make from thy own means', but what could be said [in the argument above] according to the opinion [that kah leka² means 'take for thyself'] from the community funds', for we have been taught:³ The expression 'kah leka' means 'mi-sheleka [from thy own] and 'aseh leka means mi-sheleka [taken from thy own funds], but we-yikehu eleka⁴ means [they shall take for them] from community funds; these are the words of R. Josiah; R. Jonathan said, Both 'kah leka' and 'we-yikehu eleka' mean from community funds, and what is intimated by saying 'kah leka' [take thee]? As it were,⁵ 'I prefer your own [private means expended on this work] to the community's [expenditure]'. (Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eleazar: One verse reads, Make thee an ark of wood,⁶ and another,⁷ And they shall make an ark of acacia-wood,⁸ how is that?⁹ Here it refers to a time when Israel act in accordance with His will,¹⁰ there it deals with a time when they do not act in accordance with His will) — They¹¹ are disputing only as to the general meaning [of the word 'leka'] in connection with the command to 'take' or to 'do', as e.g., Take thou also unto thee the chief spices,¹² or Make thee two trumpets of silver,¹³ but in the above cases¹⁴ it is clearly indicated in the text that it is from thine own.¹⁵ For consider in [the portion of the Bible dealing with the] consecration of the priests, it is written: And unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak, saying: Take ye a he-goat for a sin-offering,¹⁶ why then the passage: And he said to Aaron: Take thee a bull-calf for a sin-offering?¹⁷ Conclude from this 'kah leka' means 'mi-sheleka', from your own. [Similarly] in connection with the Day of Atonement it reads: Herewith shall Aaron come into the holy place: with a young bullock for a sin-offering,¹⁸ etc. Why then the passage, And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel¹⁹ and And Aaron shall present the bullock of the sin-offering which is lo [for himself]?²⁰ Conclude from this that the word 'lo' implies it is to be brought from his own means.

R. Ashi²¹ said: It is legitimate to infer a case in which an ox is offered up as sin-offering and a ram as burnt-offering²² from another case in which an ox is offered up as sin-offering and a ram as a burnt-offering;²³ this excludes from analogy New Year²⁴ and Pentecost,²⁵ [as] in both cases both animals are offered up as burnt-offerings only.

Rabina said: One may infer a service performed by the high priest²⁶ from another service performed by the high priest²⁷ that excludes [the occasions mentioned] in all the questions [raised], because the services mentioned therein are not performed by the high priest.²⁸ Others have this version of Rabina's reply: One may infer [certain rules for] a service held for the first time from a service held for the first time. This excludes all the other cases [referred to above], because none of them took place for the first time. What does this 'first time' mean? — Does it mean that the high priest had first performed service there?²⁹ That would be [the argument of Rabina's in] the first version. No, it means the first service of its kind held in its place, which may fitly be inferred from another service³⁰ held for the first time in its place. When R. Dimi came³¹ [from Palestine], he said: R. Johanan taught one thing, R. Joshua b. Levi two. R. Johanan taught one thing the words 'la'asoth', 'lekapper'³² refer to the service of the Day of Atonement. R. Joshua b. Levi taught two things: 'la'asoth' means the ceremony of the [red] heifer, 'lekapper' refers to the service of the Day of Atonement. How could [you say that] R. Johanan taught [only] one thing? Have we not learnt in our Mishnah: SEVEN DAYS BEFORE THE DAY OF ATONEMENT, and in another Seven days before the burning of the heifer?³³ — That³⁴ is only a special provision.³⁵ But did not R. Minyumi b. Hilkiah in the name of R. Mahsiah b. Idi, [and the latter] in the name of R. Johanan report the [interpretation of the text], 'As hath been done this day, so hath the Lord commanded la'asoth [to do] lekapper 'alekem [to make atonement for you]'. 'La'asoth' refers to the ceremony of the heifer and 'lekapper' to the service of the Day of Atonement?³⁶ This interpretation was that of his teacher.³⁷ For when Rabina came [from Palestine]³⁸ he said: R. Johanan reported in the name of R. Ishmael that 'la'asoth' referred to the ceremony of the heifer, and 'lekapper' to the work of the Day of Atonement.

Said Resh Lakish to R. Johanan: Whence do you infer this interpretation? From the Consecration Service?³⁹ Hence, just as with the Consecration Service, the omission of any prescribed form would render the service invalid [would you say that] here too⁴⁰ the omission of anything prescribed [by inference from congruity of text] for that service, would render it invalid? And if you said: Yes, indeed, surely we learnt: ANOTHER PRIEST IS PREPARED TO TAKE HIS PLACE, not another priest is removed from his house!⁴¹ And if you would say MATHKININ [one prepares] and MAFRISHIN [one removes] mean the same thing, then the Mishnah ought to use in both passages either mathkinin or mafrishin!⁴² — [R. Johanan] said to him: And whence do you, Sir, infer it?⁴³ — He answered: From [the account concerning] Sinai. For the Scriptural text reads, And the glory of the Lord abode upon Mount Sinai, and the cloud covered him⁴⁴ six days, and He called unto Moses on the seventh day.⁴⁵ Now consider: Since it is written 'and He called unto Moses on the seventh day', what do the 'six days' mean? They establish a rule⁴⁶ for anyone who enters the camp of the Shechinah⁴⁷ that he must remove himself from his house for six days. But we have learnt SEVEN?⁴⁸ — Our Mishnah conforms to the opinion of R. Judah b. Bathyra who considers the possibility of the high priest's becoming ritually impure through family contact.¹ R. Johanan said to Resh Lakish: It is right according to me who infer² from the Consecration; for this agrees with what we are taught: 'On both of them [the Priests]³ we sprinkle throughout the seven days[water] from all the sin-offerings⁴ that were there';⁵ but according to you who infer from Sinai, was there any sprinkling done on Sinai? — But⁶ according to your own reasoning, it would not be right either, for in the consecration [ceremony the sprinkling was done with] blood, whereas here with water? — That⁷ is no difficulty. For R.

Hiyya taught: 'The water takes the place of blood', but according to you, was there any sprinkling on Sinai? — He answered: It was a mere additional provision.⁸

We have a teaching in accord with R. Johanan,⁹ and we have a teaching in accord with Resh Lakish.¹⁰ 'In accord with R. Johanan we have a teaching'; Scripture reads: Herewith [bezoth] shall Aaron come into the holy place,¹¹ i.e., with that mentioned in that section, the section of the Consecration. And what is mentioned in the section about the Consecration? Aaron was removed for seven days and then officiated for one day, and Moses handed over to him¹² throughout the seven days to train him in this service. Also for the future the high priest is to be removed for seven days and to officiate for one day, and two scholars of the disciples of Moses¹³ [this excludes Sadducees]¹⁴ transmitted to him throughout the seven days to train him in the service. Hence [the Rabbis] ruled that seven days before the Day of Atonement the high priest was removed from his house to the cell of the counsellors. And just as the high priest was removed, so was the priest burning the heifer removed to the cell lying in the north-eastern corner before the Temple and each of them was throughout the seven days sprinkled [with water] from all the sin-offerings that were there. And if you should ask: But during the Consecration the sprinkling was done with blood and here water, [remember] that the water takes the place of the blood. And it further says: 'As hath been done this day so the Lord hath commanded la'asoth [to do], lekapper [to make atonement] for you'.¹⁵ 'La'asoth' refers to the ceremony of the heifer, 'lekapper' means the service of the Day of Atonement.¹⁶ But the word 'be-zoth' is required for the verse itself,¹⁷ i.e., with a young bullock for a sin-offering and a ram for a burnt-offering? — Answer:¹⁸ If 'be-zoth' were meant to refer only to the sacrifices, the text should have said ba-zeh [with this] or ba-eleh [with these], why [was] 'be-zoth' [chosen]? So that you may learn both things from it.¹⁹ Why was it necessary to cite the other verse?²⁰ — You might have said only the first Day of Atonement requires that the high priest be removed at the Consecration, but on all future Days of Atonement no such removal is necessary; or [you might say] only the first²¹ high priest needed such removal but all future high priests do not require it; come and hear:²² 'As hath been done this day etc.'²³

'We have a teaching in accord with Resh Lakish': Moses went up in a cloud, was covered by the cloud, and was sanctified by the cloud in order that he might receive the Torah for Israel in sanctity, as it is written: And the glory of the Lord abode upon Mount Sinai,²⁴ this took place after the Ten Commandments, which were at the beginning of the forty days,²⁵ this is the view of R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba said [with reference to] 'And the glory of the Lord abode' from the beginning of the [third] month, and the cloud wa-yekasehu [covered it],²⁶ i.e., the mountain,²⁷

then 'He called unto Moses on the seventh day'. Moses and all Israel were standing there,¹ but the purpose of Scripture was to honour Moses.² R. Nathan says: The purpose of Scripture was that he [Moses] might be purged of all food and drink in his bowels so as to make him equal to the ministering angels.³ R. Mattiah b. Heresh⁴ says, The purpose of Scripture here was to inspire him with awe, so that the Torah be given⁵ with awe, with dread, with trembling, as it is said: Serve the Lord with fear and rejoice with trembling.⁶ What is the meaning of 'And rejoice with trembling'?⁷ — R. Adda b. Mattena says in the name of Rab: Where there will be joy, there shall be trembling.⁸

In what do R. Jose the Galilean and R. Akiba differ? — In the controversy of these Tannaim. For we have been taught:⁹ On the sixth day of the month¹⁰ was the Torah given to Israel. R. Jose says on the seventh. He who says that the Torah was given on the sixth day holds that on the sixth it was given and on the seventh Moses ascended the mountain;¹¹ he who holds that the Torah was given on the seventh assumes that on the seventh both the Torah was given and Moses ascended, as it is written, And He called unto Moses on the seventh day.¹² Now R. Jose the Galilean is of the same opinion as the first Tanna,¹³ who held that the Torah was given on the sixth of the month, therefore this¹⁴ happened after the giving of the Ten Commandments: 'The glory of the Lord abode on mount Sinai and the cloud covered him six days' 'him' meaning Moses- 'And He called unto Moses on the seventh day' to receive the remainder of the Torah.¹⁵ For if the thought should come to you that 'And the glory of the Lord abode' from the New Moon [of Sivan], so that 'And the cloud covered him' referred to the mountain, and 'The Lord called unto Moses on the seventh day' to receive the Ten Commandments, surely they had received the Torah on the sixth day already and also the cloud had departed on the sixth day! — R. Akiba, however, held with R. Jose that the Torah was given to Israel on the seventh.¹⁶ Quite in accord with R. Akiba's teaching is the statement¹⁷ that the Tablets were broken on the seventeenth of Tammuz, for the twenty-four days of Sivan¹⁸ and the sixteen of Tammuz make up the forty days he was on the mountain, and on the seventeenth of Tammuz he went down and came¹⁹ to break the Tablets. But according to R. Jose the Galilean who holds that there were six days of the separation²⁰ in addition to forty days [spent] on the mountain, the Tablets could not have been broken before the twenty-third of Tammuz? — R. Jose the Galilean will answer you: The six days of the separation are included in the forty days on the mountain.

The Master said: "'And He called Moses", whilst Moses and all Israel were standing' there'. This interpretation supports the view of R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar said: ‘And He called unto Moses’ whilst Moses and all Israel were standing there; the only purpose of Scripture is to do honour to Moses. They²¹ raised the following objection: [He heard the voice speaking] elaw [unto him] not lo [to him];²² hence we know that Moses heard, but all Israel did not hear?²³ - This is no difficulty. The one passage speaks of Sinai, the other of the tent of meeting.²⁴ Or, you might say, the one statement refers to the call, the other to the speech.²⁵ R. Zerika asked a question concerning the contradiction of scriptural passages in the presence of R. Eleazar, or, according to another version, he asked the question in the name of R. Eleazar. One passage reads: And Moses was not able to enter into the tent of meeting because the cloud abode thereon,²⁶ whereas another verse says: And Moses entered into the midst of the cloud?²⁷ It teaches us that the Holy One, blessed be He, took hold of Moses and brought him into the cloud. The school of R. Ishmael taught: Here²⁸ the word be-thok [in the midst] appears and it also appears elsewhere: And the children of Israel went into the midst of the sea,²⁹ just as there [the word be-thok] implies a path, as it is written: And the waters were a wall³⁰ unto them,²⁹ so here too there was a path, [for Moses through the cloud].

And the Lord called unto Moses, and spoke unto him,³¹ why does Scripture mention the call before the speech? — The Torah teaches us good manners: a man should not address his neighbour without having first called him. This supports the view of R. Hanina, for R. Hanina said: No man shall speak to his neighbour unless he calls him first to speak to him. Rabbah said: Whence do we know that if a man had said something to his neighbour the latter must not spread the news without the informant's telling him ‘Go and say it’? From the scriptural text: The Lord spoke to him out of the tent of meeting, lemor [saying] .³² At any rate it is to be inferred³³ that both hold that the omission of any detail mentioned in connection with the priest's Consecration renders the ceremony invalid, for it was said: With regard to the ceremony of Consecration R. Johanan and R. Hanina are disputing; one says: The omission of any form prescribed in connection with the ceremony renders it invalid, whilst the other holds only such matter as is indispensable on any future occasion is indispensable now, whereas such detail as is dispensable in future generations, is dispensable even the first time. One may conclude that it is R. Johanan who holds that the omission of any detail whatsoever that is mentioned in connection with the Consecration ceremony renders such ceremony invalid, because R. Simeon b. Lakish said to R. Johanan³⁴ [in the course of the argument]: ‘And just as with the ceremony of Consecration the omission of any prescribed detail renders the ceremony invalid. And R. Johanan did not retort at all’. That proof is conclusive.³⁵

What is the [practical] difference between the opinions?

- (1) Moses did not ascend the mountain nor did he separate from his circle till after the Revelation.
 - (2) All Israel were present, why then does Scripture report that the word of God came to Moses alone? — The answer is: To show him special regard.
 - (3) R. Nathan is of the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean that the call to Moses referred to in the verses was for separation after the Revelation, yet this offers no basis for necessitating separation before entering into the Sanctuary, as the object of Moses' separation was that he might be like the ministering angels.
 - (4) He too shares the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean.
 - (5) To Moses and through him to Israel.
 - (6) Ps. II, 11.
 - (7) The terms seem contradictory.
 - (8) The Torah is a source of joy. The precepts of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart, Ps. XIX, 9, cited by Rashi. But there shall also be awe, reverence for the numen, the Lord, the Lawgiver. Tosaf. cites I Chron. XVI, 27 Strength and gladness are in His Place.

- (15) The other laws (beside the Ten Commandments) and the Oral Law.
- (16) So that the 'Seventh day' refers to the seventh day on which the Torah was given.
- (17) V. Ta'an. 26a.
- (18) From the seventh to the thirtieth.
- (19) Either 'came to the camp of Israel, saw the dances and broke' or paraphrastic for 'broke'.
- (20) After the Revelation.
- (21) The teachers (students) in the academy.
- (22) The passage, Num. VII, 89 reads: Moses . . . heard the voice speaking elaw (to him, which is the longer form, lo being the normal one) from above the ark-cover etc. The use, in this passage, of the longer form, seemed to suggest a closer or exclusive communication. According to Hayyug, quoted Otzar ha-Geonim VI, 1, n. 4, there is a difference of meaning derivable in accord with grammatical principles, in 'lo' and 'elaw' respectively.
- (23) So that all Israel, indeed, did not hear God's message. If so, then the only purpose of the statement ' . . . Scripture is to honour Moses' is unjustified. For Scripture does not change the fact. It was Moses alone whom the message reached.
- (24) In the tent of meeting only Moses could hear the voice. On Mount Sinai all Israel heard it, but to honour Moses, Scripture mentions him only as having done so.
- (25) The call proper, the honour of the individual call, was vouchsafed to Moses alone, the speech following was heard by all.
- (26) Ex. XL, 35.
- (27) Ibid. XXIV, 18.
- (28) The apparent contradiction is removed by the suggestion that he entered the cloud on this occasion with divine help.
- (29) Ex. XIV, 22.
- (30) The water being piled up like a wall, Israel walked along a path. The inference is from similarity of expression.
- (31) Lev. I, 1.
- (32) Lemor here is taken to mean 'to say it (to others)', or else the next few words are illustratively, not logically implied: Speak (unto the children of Israel).
- (33) From Resh Lakish's question to R. Johanan: '... just as with the Consecration service the omission of any prescribed form would render the service invalid' and R. Johanan's tacit acceptance of this view, supra 3b.
- (34) Supra 3b.
- (35) Had he held a different view, he would surely not have permitted his opponent's statement to go unchallenged.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 5a

R. Joseph says the putting¹ of the hands [upon the head of the sacrifice] is the difference. According to the one who holds that the omission of any detail renders the ceremony invalid, [failure] to lay the hand upon the head of the sacrifice would render the ceremony invalid. According to him who holds that only the omission of what is indispensable in the future renders the ceremony invalid, [omission of] the putting of the hand on the animal's head did not render the ceremony invalid. Whence do we know that in the future [the omission of] the putting of the hands [on the animal's head] is not indispensable?— For it has been taught: And he shall lay his hand . . . and it shall be accepted for him [to make atonement for him].² Does the laying on of the hand make atonement for one? Does not atonement come through the blood, as it is said: For it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of the life!³ Why, then, is it written: 'And he shall lay his hand on . . . and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him'? To say that if he performed the laying on of the hands as an unimportant part⁴ of the commandment, Scripture would account it to him as if he had not obtained proper atonement.⁵ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: The waving⁶ is the difference. According to him who holds whatever detail is prescribed for the ceremony is indispensable, the waving is indispensable; according to him who holds that only what is indispensable for all the future is indispensable now, the waving is not indispensable. Whence do we know that for all time to come the waving is not indispensable? — For we have been taught:⁷ To be waved, to make atonement for him.⁸ Does the waving make atonement? Is it not the blood which makes atonement, as it is written, 'For it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of the life'? Then why does Scripture say, 'To be waved, to make atonement for him'? To say that if he treats the waving as an unimportant part of the ceremony, Scripture accounts it to him as if he had not obtained proper atonement.

R. Papa said: The separation for seven days is the [practical] difference between the two opinions. According to the opinion that whatsoever is prescribed for the ceremony is indispensable, the separation, too, is indispensable; according to him who holds that only what is indispensable for all time to come is indispensable now, the separation is not indispensable. Whence do we know that the separation is not indispensable for all time to come? Because the Mishnah reads, [another priest] IS MADE READY FOR HIM, instead of is 'separated for him'.⁹ Rabina said: The difference lies in the increase [in the number of garments]¹⁰ and of the anointments¹¹ necessary during the seven days. According to the opinion that whatever is prescribed in connection therewith is indispensable, the increase [in the number of garments] and anointments during the seven days, too, is indispensable. According to him who holds that only what is indispensable for all time to come, is indispensable now, these things too are not indispensable. Whence do we know that they are not indispensable for all time to come? — For it was taught: And the priest who shall be anointed and who shall be consecrated to be priest in his father's stead, shall make the atonement.¹² What does the passage come to teach?¹³ From the text: Seven days shall the son that is priest in his stead put them on [etc.],¹⁴ I would know that a priest who had put on the required larger number of garments and who had been anointed on each of the seven days¹⁵ was permitted to ['minister in the holy place']¹⁶ at the Consecration. Whence would I know that if he had put on the larger number of garments for but one day, and had been anointed on each of the seven days; or, if he had been anointed but one day, but has put on the larger number of garments for seven days, [he would also be permitted]? To convey that teaching, Scripture says, 'Who shall be anointed and who shall be consecrated', that means anointed and consecrated in whatever way.¹⁷ We have now found evidence that the larger number of garments is necessary in the first instance for the seven days. Whence do we know that anointment on each of the seven days is in the first instance required? You may infer that either from the fact that a special statement of the Torah was necessary to exclude it; or, if you wish, from the scriptural text itself, And the holy garments of Aaron shall be for his sons after him, to be anointed in them, and to be consecrated in them.¹⁸ In this passage the anointing and the donning of the larger number of garments are put on the same level. Hence, just as the donning of the larger number of garments is required for the seven days, so is the anointing obligatory for the seven days.

What is the reason of the man who holds that the forms prescribed for the ceremonies are indispensable?— R. Isaac b. Bisna said: Scripture reads And kaka [thus] shalt thou do to Aaron and his sons, — 'thus means indispensableness'.¹⁹

(5) Lit., 'as it did not atone for him and it did'. Technically the ceremony had achieved its purpose, because essentially it is the blood which makes atonement, but since laying the hands on the animal's head is part of the ceremony (although not essential to it) and he has been negligent about it, he has obtained atonement for himself, but has not attained re-atonement with his creator, whose command he has treated slightly.

form prescribed in this context. Whence do we know that forms not prescribed¹ here in this context are also indispensable? — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: We infer that from [the fact that in both contexts the same word] petah [is used].² R. Mesharsheya said: And keep the charge of the Lord³ indicates the indispensableness [of the prescribed forms]. R. Ashi said: For so am I commanded⁴ indicates indispensableness.

Our Rabbis taught:⁵ For so am I commanded,⁶ As I commanded,⁷ As the Lord commanded.⁸ [Of these passages], 'For so am I commanded' that they eat⁹ it whilst in mourning; 'As I commanded' [this] he said to them at the time¹⁰ of the occurrence;¹¹ 'As the Lord commanded', and not on my own authority.

R. Jose b. Hanina said: Breeches are not mentioned in the section.¹² But when it says, And this is the thing that thou shalt do unto them to hallow them, to minister,¹³ it includes the breeches and the tenth part of an ephah.¹⁴ It may rightly be said that breeches are included in the general term 'garments',¹⁵ but whence do we know about the tenth of an ephah? — [This we know] by inferring [the meaning of the word] zeh [used here]¹⁶ from zeh [in the verse], Zeh [this] is the offering of Aaron and his sons which they shall offer unto the Lord . . . the tenth part of an ephah.¹⁷

R. Johanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai said: Whence do we know that also the reading of the portion¹⁸ was indispensable? To teach us that it is said, This is the dabar [thing] which the Lord has commanded to be done,¹⁹ i.e., the speaking²⁰ thereof is indispensable. — In what order did he put the garments on them? — What is past, is past!²¹ Rather, [the question is] in what order will he put the garments on them in the future?²² — In the future, too,²³ when Aaron and his sons will come, Moses will come with them. But [the question is] how did he put the clothes on them [if we are] to understand the scriptural account?²⁴ — The sons of R. Hiyya and R. Johanan held different opinions about it. One said: Aaron was first clothed and afterwards his sons; whilst the other said: Aaron and his sons were clothed simultaneously. Said Abaye: With regard to the tunic and the mitre none disputes the fact that Aaron came first and his sons afterwards,²⁵ for both in the [text containing] the command and [the account of the] actual performance Aaron is mentioned first. What they are disputing is [the order of] the girdle.²⁶ He who says Aaron [came first] and then his sons [is of this opinion] because it is written, And he girded him with the girdle,²⁷ and only after this is it written, And he girded them with a girdle,²⁸ whereas he who holds that the girding took place without any interruption, [is of this opinion] because It is written, And thou shalt gird them with girdles, Aaron and his sons.²⁹ According to the opinion that Aaron and his sons were girded at the same time, does not Scripture first say, 'And he girded him with a girdle' and then only later is it written, 'And he girded them with a girdle'?³⁰ —

(1) In Ex. XXIX, 5, there are Instructions relative to the Consecration, such as putting on Aaron the tunic, the robe of the

(18) The section on the Consecration. It was to be read as part of the ceremony.

(19) Lev. VIII, 5' Dabar may mean both 'word' and 'thing'. No further reference to the ceremony being necessary, the suggestion is made that dabar, the word, the reading of the word is commanded. Support may be found in the fact that the preceding verse speaks of The congregation assembled at the door of the tent of meeting, such 'assembly' for the purpose of hearing scriptural reading being expressly enjoined in Deut. XXXI, 28 and esp. at the Sukkoth festival in the year of release.

(20) The word, i.e., the section read.

(21) There is no relevance in archaeological research.

(22) I.e., in the Messianic future.

(23) There is no need for speculation. Moses will be in charge and he knows the law.

(24) There are apparent contradictions between the command as given in Ex. XXIX and the account of the ceremony in Lev. VIII respectively. In Ex. XXIX, 9: And thou shalt gird them with a girdle, Aaron and his sons intimates that this girding of father and sons took place in close succession to one another. I.e., he girded Aaron only after he had first clothed the sons with the other garments apart from the girdle, so that the girding of Aaron and his sons were, so to speak, at the same time (v. infra); whereas in Lev. VIII, 7: And girded him with the girdle and clothed him with the robe . . . and placed the breastplate upon him and set the mitre upon his head to be followed by ibid. v. 13: And Moses brought Aaron's sons and clothed them with tunics and girded them with girdles shows the girding of Aaron took place before the clothing of the sons had even begun.

(25) [Moses clothed Aaron with the tunic and the mitre before he began to clothe the sons with these garments. These would also include the breeches, as these were always to come first, v. infra 23b.]

(26) Whether Aaron was girded before or after the sons were clothed with the tunic and mitre.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 6a

He will tell you: This is to teach you that the girdle of the high priest was not the same [material] as that of the average priest.¹ According to the opinion that Aaron was girded and afterwards his sons,² does not Scripture say, 'And thou shalt gird them with a girdle'?- He will tell you this³ informs us that the girdle of the high priest was of the same [material] as the average priest. Was it then necessary to state: 'And he girded him with a girdle' and [then] 'And he girded them'? From that we infer that Aaron came first and then his sons. But how could it have been possible simultaneously?⁴ — This only means to indicate that [Aaron] came first.⁵

THE HIGH PRIEST WAS REMOVED. Why was he removed?[You ask] why was he removed!⁶ [Is it not] as you have said, either according to the derivation of R. Johanan, or to that of Resh Lakish? — No, this is⁷ the question: Why was he separated from his house? — It was taught: R. Judah b. Bathyra said: Let his wife be found under doubt of being a menstruant and he have congress with her.⁸ Do we speak of wicked people?⁹ — Rather, perhaps he will have congress with his wife and she will then be found to be doubtfully a menstruant.¹⁰ [The Rabbis] were discussing the decision before R. Hisda: According to whom was it made?-Obviously according to R. Akiba, who said: A menstruant makes him who had congress with her impure [retrospectively].¹¹ For, according to the Rabbis, behold they say: A menstruant does not render impure him who had congress with her [retrospectively]. R. Hisda said to them: It may be in accord even with the Rabbis. For they conflict with R. Akiba only in the case in which [the blood stains are found] much later¹² [than the congress], but, [if they be found] very soon afterwards,¹³ they agree with him. R. Zera said: Hence it is evident that to one who had congress with a menstruant do not apply the same restrictions as do to the menstruant herself and he may bathe [for purification] in day time.¹⁴ For, if you were to say that to one who had congress with a menstruant applied the same laws that apply to her, when could he bathe? Only at night. How could he, then, officiate on the morrow,¹⁵ since he would have to await sunset for becoming ritually pure? Hence it must be [clear] that one who had intercourse with a menstruant is not subject to the same restrictions as the menstruant herself. Said R. Shimi of Nehardea: You might even say [that the above decision is in accord with the view] that one who has intercourse with a menstruant is like the menstruant, yet [would the high priest be able to officiate at the service] for we would separate him from his house an hour before sunset.¹⁶ An objection was raised: All those who are obliged to take the ritual bath must take the bath at night.¹⁷ A menstruant and a woman after confinement immerse during the day. A menstruant, then, only, but not one who had intercourse with her?¹⁸ — [No, it means], A menstruant and all whom one may include in that term.¹⁹ Another objection was raised: One to whom pollution has happened is like one who touched an unclean [dead] reptile. One who had intercourse with a menstruating woman is like one who was made unclean through a corpse.²⁰ Is it not concerning the bath?²¹ — No, it is concerning [the conditions of] their uncleanness.²² But [surely] concerning their uncleanness²³ there are direct statements in Scripture! In the first case it is written that it lasts for seven days,²⁴ and in the second case also the seven days' duration is prescribed.²⁵

(1) The girdle as described in Ex. XXXIX, 29 was to be made of fine twined linen, and blue and purple and scarlet, the work of the weaver in colours. The separate mention made of Aaron's girdle and that of his sons serves to indicate that they were not alike and that this description referred to the girdle of the high priest alone: the girdle of other priests was made of lesser material.

(2) From which one may infer that they are to be girded simultaneously, 'them', i.e., together.

(3) The answer is: The emphasis is not on the time or interval, but on the fact that father and son shall be girded with the same girdle, no distinction being allowed between the girdles worn by high priest and ordinary priest respectively.

(4) Taking the word simultaneously literally (cf. p. 21, n. 13), the question is, How could Moses have girded five men simultaneously?

(5) The Torah does not command any simultaneity. Aaron is mentioned in one passage and his sons in another, in order to emphasize that he must come first-whether in the clothing of the garments or in the girding.

(6) The first question was misunderstood. The answer implies that the source of the commandment to remove the priest was being sought.

(7) What was really intended was the practical motive of the enactment.

(8) Tosef. Yoma I.

(9) No good Jew (v. Sheb. 18b; Shulhan Aruk, Yoreh Deah 184, 2) would approach his wife unless her ritual purity were beyond doubt, how much less a high priest. Hence such contingency is unthinkable. Dealing with high priests, are we dealing with wicked men?

(10) Bloodstains may be found on the bed after congress and the doubt would arise, whether the discharge occurred before or after congress. Such a doubt would render her husband impure for seven days and ritually unfit to enter the sanctuary.

(11) [For twenty-four hours, so that should the stain be found after congress, the husband would be considered unclean for seven days, v. Nid. 14a.]

(12) Lit., 'after after', v. next note.

(13) [Lit., 'one after' this interval is defined in Nid. 12b as time enough to get down from the bed and rinse her face (euphemistically).]

(14) A menstruant is not permitted to bathe during the seventh day of her menstrual impurity, but only at night, after sunset, the beginning of the eighth day. But he who had congress with her would be permitted to bathe during the seventh day, without having to await the sunset of the seventh day. Hence he needs to be separated for but seven days. And if on the day of the separation he had congress and the doubt of her being a menstruant arose, he would count from the day of the separation until the day before the Day of Atonement, when he would take the bath during the day, await the sunset, and then be fit to enter the sanctuary on the Day of Atonement (Rashi).

(15) He would ritually be impure at the night of the Day of Atonement, hence there would have been no sunset before the Day of Atonement when he was pure and he would be unfit to officiate on the following day; thus the whole separation would be futile.

(16) That is, on the even before the eighth day before the Day of Atonement. One hour is a very short period and unimportant, hence the separation would still be called 'one of seven days'. He could bathe on the evening before the eve of the Day of Atonement (the seventh day after having become ritually impure) and be fit to officiate on the Day of Atonement, having awaited the sunset on the day before his bath.

(17) Meg. 20a, based on Num. XIX, 19, for the law that all may bathe during the day: And on the seventh day he shall purify him and bathe himself in water and be clean at even. — That a menstruant must not bathe before the night of the seventh day is inferred from Lev. XV,19: And if a woman have an issue, she shall be in her impurity seven days. A woman after confinement is compared to a menstruant in Lev. XII, 2: If a woman be delivered . . . , then she shall be unclean for seven days; as in the days of the impurity of her sickness shall she be unclean.; v. infra 88a (18) Here would be a Tannaitic text invalidating an Amora's inference.

(19) Since the menstruant by contact communicates her impurity, it is logical to assume that the conditions of purification would be identical. Hence the implicit statement is sufficient.

(20) Zab. V, 11.

(21) That the bath could be taken in day-time.

(22) One to whom defilement has happened is like one who touched a dead reptile in that both become clean in the evening, and are unclean in the first degree of uncleanness; and he who had intercourse with a menstruant is afflicted with uncleanness for seven days and is one of the original causes of uncleanness like him who was made unclean through a corpse.

(23) I.e., that of one who has intercourse with a menstruant.

(24) Lev. XV, 24. Her impurity be upon him, he shall be unclean seven days.

(25) Num. XIX, 11: He that toucheth the dead, even any man's dead body, shall be unclean seven days.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 6b

Must one not hence assume that the comparison concerns their bath?¹ No, indeed it refers only to [the conditions of] their uncleanness, and it was necessary to mention that only because of the latter clause [of that Mishnah, viz.,] that one who had intercourse with a menstruant is afflicted with a graver form of impurity than he [who has become unclean through a corpse] in that he causes uncleanness of couch and seat² [such uncleanness being of a lighter nature] so as to affect only foods and liquids.³

Come and hear:⁴ For R. Hiyya taught: A man or a woman afflicted with gonorrhoea or with leprosy, one who had intercourse with a menstruant, and one made unclean through a corpse, may take the bath during the day; a menstruant and a woman after confinement take their bath at night.⁵ This is [indeed] a refutation.⁶ Now whilst removing him from the [possible] impurity due to his house,⁷ remove him from the [possibility of] uncleanness through a corpse!⁸ R. Tahlifa, father of R. Huna, said in the name of Raba: This teaches that in the case of a community [the law of] corpse uncleanness is inoperative.⁹ Rabina said: You might also say that [the law of] corpse uncleanness is only suspended in case of a community,¹⁰ yet uncleanness due to contact with a corpse is infrequent,¹¹ whereas uncleanness due to marital life happens often. It has been said: As [to the law of] corpse-uncleanness R. Nahman said: It is inoperative in case of a community. R. Shesheth said: It is only suspended in case of an entire community. Whenever there are in the same priestly family-division¹² men, both clean and unclean ones, nobody disputes the fact that the clean ones do the service and the unclean ones forego it. The dispute concerns only the question as to whether one is obliged to make an endeavour to obtain, clean ones from another family-division. R. Nahman said: [The law of] corpse-uncleanness is inoperative in case of a community, hence we need make no such effort. R. Shesheth says: That law is only suspended in case of a community and hence we must endeavour [to find clean priests for the service].

Some hold that even in a case in which there are both clean and unclean priests in the same family-division, R. Nahman insists that even the unclean ones may officiate

(1) Since a statement as to the duration of their uncleanness, from its express form in the Torah, seems superfluous. But such repetition is illogical and hence the interpretation that it applies to the bathing is justified which proves that he who has intercourse with the menstruant may immerse by day.

(2) [As many couches as are under him become unclean although they had not been in direct contact with him, which is not the case with one who suffers corpse-uncleanness. He defiles only those couches which his body actually touches.]

(3) All original causes of uncleanness (אבות הטומאה) render, by touch, man and vessels unclean, whereas the derived first and second and third causes affect only foods and liquids, but neither human beings nor 'vessels' (apparel, etc.).

(4) This phrase in our case introduces a refutation.

(5) Infra 88a.

(6) This Tannaitic tradition is beyond the argument of any Amora. The refutation is complete.

(7) i.e., his wife.

(8) Keep away from him every company, lest someone die whilst in the same room with the high priest and render him unclean for seven days.

(9) Lit., 'permissible'.

(10) It is only suspended as by emergency and every effort is due to effect a proper service in its stead.

(11) Hence no precautionary measures, such as, so to speak, quarantining the priest, are necessary.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 7a

because the Torah has rendered all levitical impurity caused through a corpse inoperative in case of a community.¹

R. Shesheth said: Whence do I know that?² Because it has been taught: If the priest was standing and offering up the sheaf of the 'Omer³ and it became unclean in his hands⁴ let him tell and another one is brought in its place. And if there be none but this, one would say to him: 'Be clever and keep quiet'.⁵ At all events he teaches, He should tell about it and another one is brought in its place!⁶ — R. Nahman said: I admit⁷ that where there is a remnant to be eaten [one would have to make an effort to procure a substitute sacrifice].⁸ Another objection was raised: If he was offering up the meal-offering of the bullocks or rams or sheep, and it became unclean in his hand, he should say so and one brings another one in its place; but if there be none [available] but the first, one tells him,

‘Be wise and keep quiet’.⁹ Does this not refer to the bullocks, rams and sheep offered up on the feast [of Sukkoth]?¹⁰ — R. Nahman will answer you: No, the word ‘bullock’ refers to the bullock offered up in expiation of idolatry,¹¹ and although it is a community sacrifice, since there is no definite time fixed for it, one endeavours [to find a substitute offering]; the word ‘rams’ refers to the ram of Aaron¹² and although it is appointed to be sacrificed at a definite time, yet, since it is the offering of an individual, one endeavours [to procure a substitute]; the word ‘lambs’ refers to the lamb offered up together with the ‘Omer-sheaf, of which¹³ there are remnants to be eaten. — Another objection was raised:¹⁴ If [sacrificial] blood became unclean and one sprinkled it, if by mistake, it is accepted;¹⁵ if wilfully, it is not accepted!¹⁶ — This teaching refers to the sacrifice of an individual. Come and hear: For what [mistake at sacrifice] does the priest’s plate¹⁷ effect pardon?¹⁸ Concerning blood, flesh, fat, which become unclean, whether by mistake or wilfully, whether by accident or voluntarily,¹⁹ whether [the sacrifice] was offered up by an individual or by the entire community.²⁰ Now if it enter your mind that the law of uncleanness is inoperative in case of a community, what need is there for [the priest’s plate] to effect pardon? — R. Nahman will answer you: What has been taught about the plate’s effecting pardon, refers only to the sacrifice of an individual. Or, if you like, one might say, it refers also to such community sacrifices for which no definite time has been set. — Another objection was raised:²⁰ [Touching on] And Aaron shall bear the iniquity committed in the holy things. Does he bear any kind of iniquity? If you mean the iniquity of piggul [— a sacrifice rejectable²¹ because of the intended disposal beyond the legal limits of space], concerning this Scripture has said already, It will not be accepted.²² If you mean the iniquity of nothar,²³ concerning that Scripture has said already, It shall not be imputed!²⁴

(1) The source is Num. IX, 10: If any person . . . shall be unclean by reason of a dead body or be in a journey afar off, he could postpone the offering up of his paschal lamb until the fourteenth of the month of Iyar. From this R. Shesheth infers that a person (an individual) is suspended (postpones the celebration of Passover), but not a community. Pes. 66b.

(2) That the law is only suspended, not inoperative.

(3) V. Glos.

(4) The rendering in our text seems defective. In Men. 72a it reads: If he was standing and offering up the flour-offering of the ‘Omer and it became unclean, if there is another (available), he may say to him, — bring the other’ in its place. And if not he says to him — ‘Be clever and keep quiet’. The Tosef. reads: If he offered up the ‘Omer and it became unclean he tells it and one brings another one in its place. If there be none besides the first, one says to him, ‘Be clever and keep quiet about it’.

(5) Since no substitute is available, silence is wisdom, for the priest’s frontplate procures forgiveness for such mishap. V. infra.

(6) Hence it is clear that even in the case of a community the law concerning corpse-uncleanness is but suspended, not rendered inoperative, which contradicts R. Nahman.

(7) Although a communal sacrifice may indeed be offered up also in a state of congregational impurity, it may not be eaten in a state of impurity. V. Pes. 77b.

(8) In the case of an ‘Omer offering, where the priest takes a fistful, I admit that remnants to be consumed must be consumed in cleanliness.

(9) This text is apparently taken from the Tosef. Men. II, yet in that text the word for ‘rams’ is omitted.

(10) V. Num. XXIX, 12ff. These are community sacrifices, with a definite time appointed for them, yet the law of impurity is only suspended, for ‘one brings another one in its place’.

(11) The passage in Num. XV, 22f: And when ye shall err and not observe all these commandments, then it shall be, if done in error by the congregation . . . that all the congregation shall offer up one bullock for a burnt-offering, is assumed to refer to the main and most potent error: idolatry.

(12) Offered up on the Day of Atonement.

(13) The meal-offering brought with the ‘Omer lamb, of which a fistful was taken by the priest and the remnants eaten.

(14) V. Pes. 16b.

(15) And the flesh thereof may be eaten.

(16) [In so far that the flesh may not be eaten, though pardon is effected by means of the priest’s plate (v. infra). This proves that the law of uncleanness does operate in the case of a community (which is apparently included in the general terms of this teaching).]

(17) The source is Ex. XXVIII, 36-38: And thou shalt make a plate of pure gold and engrave upon it, like the engravings of a signet: HOLY OF THE LORD. And thou shalt put it on a thread of blue, and it shall be upon the mitre: upon the forefront of the mitre it shall be. And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead and Aaron shall bear the iniquity committed in the holy things which the children of Israel hallow.

(18) Lit., 'Make (the sacrifice) acceptable.'

(19) The word רצון (free-will) after מזיד (wilfully) is tautologous, but it is a matter of Talmudic style, since אונס (accident) is mentioned, its opposite is also included, illustratively rather than logically.

(20) Men. 25b.

(21) Lev. VII, 18: And if any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings (which according to the preceding verse may be eaten only in the day that it is offered on and on the morrow) be at all eaten on the third day, it shall not be accepted, neither shall it be imputed unto him that offereth it: it shall be an abhorred thing (piggul) and the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity. The term piggul although generally denoting the intention in the mind of the officiating priest to dispose of the sacrifice beyond the proper time (חוי' לזמנה) signifies here according to Rashi the intended disposal thereof beyond the legal limits of space, (חוי' למקומו). V. Zeb. 28a. Tosaf. explains differently.

(22) V. note 5.

(23) [Lit., 'left over', generally portions of sacrifice left over beyond the legal time and here with the special meaning of the intended disposal of the sacrifice beyond the legal time, so Rashi.]

(24) Lev. VII, 18.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 7b

Is it not hence that there is no iniquity which he bears except that concerning levitical uncleanness which has been declared inoperative in its general rule whenever a community sacrifice is involved, and the difficulty remains for R. Shesheth?¹ Concerning this matter the Tannaim differ,² for it has been taught:³ The front plate effects pardon⁴ whether it be on the high priest's forehead or not; these are the words of R. Simeon. R. Judah said: As long as it is on his forehead it effects pardon, if it is not on his forehead, it does not effect pardon. R. Simeon said to him: The case of the high priest on the Day of Atonement proves [your contention wrong], for the plate⁵ is then not on his forehead and yet it effects pardon — R. Judah answered him: Leave the case of the high priest on the Day of Atonement alone, for to him, because the community is concerned,⁶ the law of uncleanness has been rendered inoperative. Hence it is to be inferred that according to R. Simeon⁷ the law of uncleanness is only suspended in case of a community.⁸

Abaye said: If the front plate was broken there is no conflicting opinion, all agreeing that it effects no pardon. The dispute concerns only the case when it is hung up on a peg, R. Judah holding, And it shall be upon the forehead [of Aaron] and he shall bear,⁹ whilst R. Simeon bases his opinion on, And it shall be continually upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the Lord.¹⁰ Now what does 'continually' mean? Shall I say that it shall indeed be continually on his forehead? How is that possible? Must he not enter the privy¹¹ occasionally, must he not sleep at times?¹¹ Rather must it all imply that [the front plate] 'continually'¹² effects pardon. According to R. Judah,¹³ does not Scripture say 'continually'?¹⁴ — That word implies that he should never dismiss it from his mind;¹⁵ this is in agreement with Rabbah son of Huna, for Rabbah son of Huna said: A man is obliged to touch his tefillin¹⁶ every hour. This may be learned by inference ad majus from the front plate.

(1) Who holds that that law is only suspended, not abrogated, where a community sacrifice is involved.

(2) So that R. Shesheth may have the benefit of the support of the Tanna whose opinion he held.

(3) Pes. 77a.

(4) For uncleanness of a sacrifice.

(5) On that day, when the high priest enters the Holy of Holies, he doffs his golden garments, including the front plate, and wears simple linen.

- (6) He offers up the sacrifice to make atonement for the whole congregation.
- (7) Who opposes the view of R. Judah.
- (8) And it is the front plate that effects the pardon. This is the dispute of the Tannaim.
- (9) Ex. XXVII, 38.
- (10) Ibid., the pardon dependent upon the high priest's bearing the plate.
- (11) Respect for the holy garment would necessitate its removal at that time.
- (12) The evidence of the text seems to favour R. Simeon's interpretation.
- (13) Not only does his own interpretation appear wrong when confronted with R. Simeon's argument.
- (14) The word 'continually', which cannot be referred to the wearing of the plate, needs must be applied to its efficacy.
- (15) Not the outward efficacy of the plate; the attitude of the high priest towards its function is what the Torah prescribes here.
- (16) Originally the tefillin were worn all day. V. Shab. 130a.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 8a

If touching the front plate, on which the mention [of God] is but inscribed once,¹ the Torah prescribes 'And it shall be continually upon his forehead,' i.e., he shall not dismiss it from his mind, how much more does this apply to the tefillin which contain the mention [of God] many a time!² But according to R. Simeon who says the front plate effects pardon always, does not Scripture intimate [in the passage], 'On the forehead [of Aaron] and he shall bear' [that the effecting of pardon depends on his bearing the plate]?- No, that passage merely serves to indicate the place of the plate. Whence does R. Judah know that there is a definite place prescribed for the front plate?³ He infers that from 'On his forehead'. Why should not R. Simeon infer it from the passage too?⁴ -Indeed he does. Then how does he interpret 'On the forehead [of Aaron] and he shall bear'?- He will tell you: [It means to say that] whatsoever is fit to rest 'on the forehead', can effect pardon, whatsoever is not fit to rest on the forehead cannot effect it. This excludes a broken plate, which, indeed, cannot effect a pardon. Whence now does R. Judah infer the law concerning a broken plate? — He derives it from the [fact that instead of] 'the forehead' the text has 'his forehead'.⁵ R. Simeon, however, does not attach any significance to [the words] 'the forehead', [and] 'his forehead'.⁶

Are the above Tannaim disputing the principle of the following Tannaim? For it has been taught: On both of them⁷ throughout the seven days they would sprinkle from all the sin-offerings⁸ that were there;⁹ these are the words of R. Meir. R. Jose said: They sprinkled him only on the third and seventh days. R. Hanina, the deputy high priest¹⁰ said: The priest that was to burn the red heifer they sprinkled on each of the seven days, but the high priest that was to officiate on the Day of Atonement was sprinkled only on the third and seventh day.¹¹ Is it not that their difference rests on this principle: R. Meir holds the law concerning ritual uncleanness to be only suspended in the case of community, whilst R. Jose considers it inoperative in that case.¹² But how can you understand the case of a community?¹³ If R. Jose holds that the law concerning ritual uncleanness is inoperative in case of a community, why is any sprinkling necessary? — Rather, you must assume that all agree that these Tannaim hold that law to be only suspended in case of a community and the point of issue here between them is this: R. Meir holds that we say that it is obligatory¹⁴ for the ritual immersion to be taken in its proper time,¹⁵ and R. Jose holds we do not say that it is obligatory for the ritual immersion to be taken in its proper time.¹⁵ But does R. Jose hold that we do not maintain that it is obligatory for the ritual immersion to take place in its proper time? Surely, it has been taught: One who has the name [of God] inscribed on his flesh must not bathe¹⁶ nor anoint himself nor stand at a place of filth. If he happens to have an obligatory ritual bath, he should place reed grass on that part and thus bathe.¹⁷ R. Jose says: He may go down to bathe as usual, provided he does not rub that part.¹⁸ And it is established that they are disputing the question as to whether it is obligatory for a ritual immersion to take place in its proper time; the first Tanna holding we do not say that it is obligatory for a ritual immersion to be taken in its proper time, and R. Jose affirming that we do say that it is obligatory for a ritual immersion to be taken in its proper place.¹⁹ — Rather: Everybody agrees that those two Tannaim²⁰ both hold we do say that it is obligatory for a ritual immersion to be taken in its proper time, and their dispute above concerns the following principle: R. Meir is of the opinion that we compare²¹ the [law concerning] ‘sprinkling’ to [that concerning] the immersion²² and R. Jose holds we do not compare ‘sprinkling’ to immersion’. What about R. Hanina, the deputy high priest? If he compares ‘sprinkling’ to ‘immersion’, the high priest on the Day of Atonement too [should be sprinkled on every day]. And if he does not compare ‘sprinkling’ to ‘immersion’ the priest who burns the heifer [should] neither [be sprinkled on every day]? — In truth he does not make that comparison, the enactment²³ touching the priest who burns the heifer being a mere special stringency.²⁴

According to whose opinion is the following teaching: There is no difference between the priest who burns the heifer and the high priest on the Day of Atonement except

- (1) In the inscription ‘HOLY UNTO THE LORD’.
 - (2) In the four excerpts from the Torah, which they contain. Hence the obligation to touch tefillin all the time, as a reminder of the lessons they convey.
 - (3) Since he interprets ‘On the forehead and he shall bear’ as indicating interdependence of pardon and plate, whence does he know the place of the plate?— Perhaps it may be worn elsewhere too.
 - (4) The passage is simple and direct enough and untouched by the controversy.
 - (5) In the phrase ‘On his forehead continually’, R. Judah derives the law of the broken plate from the use of the possessive.
 - (6) There is nothing abnormal calling for special attention in the use of the possessive.
 - (7) V. supra p. 12 notes.
 - (8) With water from the ashes.
 - (9) Which remained from red heifers from the time of Moses until that period (Bertinoro). V. also Parah III, 5. From the ashes of every heifer some part was kept for future use.
 - (10) Segan. V. Sanh., Sonc. ed. p. 91, n. 1.
 - (11) Cf. Num. XIX, 19.
 - (12) Which shows that R. Jose and R. Meir differ on the same principle as R. Judah and R. Simeon.
 - (13) Lit., ‘Can you hold that opinion?’
 - (14) Mizwah may mean ‘commandment’, ‘good deed’, ‘ought’, ‘is obligatory’.
 - (15) [On the day prescribed by the law, and the same applies to the sprinkling which for the reason explained infra must take place every day.]
 - (16) Lest he blot out the name of God.
 - (17) Lest he blot out ‘the name of God.’
 - (18) V. Shab. 120b.
 - (19) From here it would appear that R. Jose held the ritual bath should be taken as soon as it is due.
 - (20) R. Meir and R. Jose.
 - (21) Lit., ‘analogy’, ‘comparison’, usually based on the close connection of two subjects in one and the same passage of the Torah. Arguments from Hekkesch are, in general, regarded as being more conclusive than those from Gezerah Shawah, the former not admitting of refutation. Both could be applied only for the purpose of supporting a traditional law. Mielziner, l.c.
 - (22) Cf. supra p. 12.
 - (23) That he be sprinkled on the third and fifth days.
 - (24) As to the stringency v. p. 10, n. 2, but even so the sprinkling was not indispensable on any definite day; all that was prohibited was too long an interval between the first and the second sprinkling (Rashi).

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 8b

that the latter is removed for the purpose of sanctity,¹ and his fellow priests were permitted to touch him, whilst the former is removed for purposes of ritual and his colleagues forbidden to touch him. According to whom [is this teaching]? According to the opinion either of R. Meir or of R. Jose. For if it were in accord with the opinion of R. Hanina, deputy high priest, there would be one more point of difference.²

R. Jose, the son of R. Hanina demurred to this: It is quite right that we sprinkle him on the first day,³ because that may be the third of his impurity; similarly on the second, because that may be the third day of his impurity; on the third, because that may be the third day of his impurity; on the fifth, because that may be the seventh day of his impurity; on the sixth, because that may be the seventh day of his impurity; on the seventh, because that may be the seventh day of his impurity. But on the fourth day why should there be any sprinkling at all? That day could not be in doubt as being either the third day⁴ or the seventh day⁵ of his impurity? — But, according to your own point of view, how can there be sprinkling throughout the seven days? For have we not an established rule that the sprinkling is forbidden as shebuth⁶ and as such cannot override the Sabbath?⁷ — But you must then needs say: ‘Seven days with the exception of the Sabbath’, similarly here, ‘Seven⁸ with the exception of the fourth day.’ Rabah said: For that reason since the matter of the high priest on the Day of Atonement does not depend on us but on the fixing of the calendar,⁹ he ought to be separated on the third of Tishri, and on whatever day the third of Tishri falls, we would remove him; but as to the priest who burns the heifer, since the matter depends on us,¹⁰ we should remove him on the fourth of the week, so that his fourth day would fall on the Sabbath.

TO THE CELL OF THE COUNSELLORS etc. R. Judah said, Was it the ‘cell of the parhedrin [counsellors], was it not rather the ‘cell of the buleute¹¹ [senators]’? Originally, indeed, it was called the ‘cell of the buleute’ but because money¹² was being paid¹³ for the purpose of obtaining the position of high priest and the [high priests] were changed every twelve¹⁴ months, like those counsellors, who are changed every twelve months,¹⁵ therefore it came to be called ‘the cell of the counsellors’.

We learnt elsewhere: upon the bakers¹⁶ the Sages imposed only the duty of setting apart¹⁷ enough for the heave-offering of tithe¹⁸ and hallah.¹⁹ Now, it is quite right [that they did not impose] the great heave-offering, because it has been taught:

(1) As the high priest was about to enter the sanctuary, he was removed from all, in order that he may, in solitude, take upon himself the holiness of the day, shed all pride of office and concentrate on his great responsibility viz., to obtain forgiveness of sin for Israel. As for the priest of the heifer, v. p. 2, n. 2.

(2) For according to R. Hanina, there is this additional difference that the high priest is sprinkled on the third and seventh day only, whereas the priest who is to burn the heifer is sprinkled on each of the seven days.

(3) Of the priest's separation, Num. XIX, 19: And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean person on the third day, and on the seventh day; and on the seventh day shall he purify him. Ibid. 12: But if he purify himself not on the third day and on the seventh day, he shall not be clean.

(4) For, since he became separated he did not touch a corpse.

(5) For if the fourth day of his separation were the seventh day of his impurity, then the day before his separation would needs have been the third day of his impurity, and not having been sprinkled on that day, he could not be sprinkled on the seventh day of his impurity (the fourth day of his separation) for a first sprinkling on the third day of the impurity is indispensable for the second sprinkling on the seventh day.

(6) Lit., ‘rest’, work forbidden by the Rabbis on the Sabbath and festivals as being out of spirit with the ceremony of the day.

(7) I.e., the prohibition of work on the Sabbath. Pes. 65a.

(8) ‘Seven’ must be understood to mean exceptis excipiendis, with the exception of those days on which the sprinkling is not lawful or not necessary.

(9) Lit., ‘month’. His entering the sanctuary on the Day of Atonement on the tenth of Tishri depends only on the fixing of the new moon by the Sanhedrin (Cf. Sanh. 2a), from which the tenth would be counted.

(10) There is no definite time prescribed for the burning of the red heifer.

(12) To the Hasmonean kings and their satellites.

(13) [So Rashi cur. ed. (lit.), 'they gave money for it' etc. The phrase 'for it' (לִּי) is obscure.]

(14) This is not to be taken literally. On an average, as the Talmud tells later on, these high priests lasted twelve months, no longer. [MS.M. reads: 'They were changed by Heaven'. I.e., they did not survive the twelve months. Others: 'They were removed by the king when a higher price was offered him for the priesthood.' Rashi reads: 'They changed it,' 'it' referring to the chamber. Each new priest on his accession would set up a new chamber for himself.]

(15) Rashi: The king removed his counsellors annually.

(16) Bakers who were 'Fellows' of the pharisaic order. As such they had to undertake scrupulous observance especially of the laws of levitical purity. The haberim (fellows) were distinguished from the great mass of the 'amme ha-arez, the untrained multitude, who were suspects as to levitical purity and also as to the payment of tithe. V. infra.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 9a

Because he¹ sent into all the districts of Israel and he found that they² were separating only the great heave-offering;³ [it is also right that the Sages did not impose upon these bakers] the first tithe and the poor man's tithe,⁴ because [of the principle that] the claimant must produce evidence;⁵ but the second tithe, let then [the baker] separate, take it up to Jerusalem and eat it there! 'Ulla said: Because these parhedrin⁶ were beating them all the twelve months⁷ and telling them 'sell cheap, sell cheap,' the Sages did not burden them [to set apart the second tithe and take it up to Jerusalem].⁸ What does parhedrin mean? — Porase [managers].⁹ Rabbah b. Bar Hana said: What is the meaning of the passage, The fear of the Lord prolongeth days,' but the years of the wicked shall be shortened?¹⁰ 'The fear of the Lord prolongeth days' refers to the first Sanctuary, which remained standing for four hundred and ten years and in which there served only eighteen¹¹ high priests. 'But the years of the wicked shall be shortened'¹⁰ refers to the second Sanctuary, which abided for four hundred and twenty years and at which more than three hundred [high] priests served. Take off therefrom the forty years which Simeon the Righteous served,¹² eighty years which Johanan the high priest served,¹³ ten, which Ishmael b. Fabi¹⁴ served, or, as some say, the eleven years of R. Eleazar b. Harsum.¹⁵ Count [the number of high priests] from then on and you will find that none of them completed his year [in office].¹⁶ R. Johanan b. Torta¹⁷ said: Why was Shiloh¹⁸ destroyed? Because of two [evil] things that prevailed there, immorality and contemptuous treatment of sanctified objects. [Proof that] immorality prevailed because it is written, Now Eli was very old, and he heard all that his sons did unto Israel, and how that they lay with the women that did service at the door of the tent of meeting. Notwithstanding R. Samuel b. Nahmani who said in the name of R. Johanan: Whosoever says, The sons of Eli sinned¹⁹ is but mistaken; it is

(1) Johanan, the high priest.

(2) The great mass of the people, exclusive of the Haberim. V. Glos. s.v. haber.

(3) V. Sot. 48a.

(4) The first tithe belonged to the Levite and was due annually; the second tithe was to be consumed by the owner in Jerusalem, annually; the third tithe was due every third year—it was the poor man's tithe.

(5) The heave-offering of the tithe, like the terumah (v. Glos.) itself, was, on penalty of death through divine action, forbidden to be eaten by a non-priest. With regard to the poor man's tithe, the baker could say: If you want to assert legal claim thereto, you will have to prove that the 'am ha-arez, from whom I bought it, has failed to give tithe thereof before he sold it to me. Unless such proof was forthcoming, there was no legal claim on the part of the Levite on the non-Levite poor to its possession.

(6) Paredroi-assessors, counsellors. The Mishnah J. reads paredroi. The Tosef. paredroi. These assessors had a bad reputation from their oppressive measures at the market places, over which, as commissioners, they had jurisdiction. So that, apart from the fact that the high priests, during the second Temple, were changed as often as these officials, the fact that they were dubbed paredroi indicates that there must have been more than one point of contact between these officials and the priests.

(7) Usually their office was of twelve months' duration. As the next line shows, these officials made full use of their twelve months' opportunity for abuse of power.

(8) The Sages preferred to give the baker haberim the benefit of the doubt that the 'amme ha-arez, as a rule, do give the tithe.

(14) V. Tosef. cf. Yoma 1. [High priest in the days of Agrippa II. He is not to be confused with the high priest of the same name who is reported by Josephus (Wars VI 2, 2) to have been executed in Cyrene after the destruction of the Temple. V. Buchler. op. cit. p. 98.]

(15) V. ibid. I. The Tosef. reads Harsoth. In Yoma 35b he is described as a model rich man who forsook his financial interests to devote himself to the Torah.

(16) Bah, in his marginal notes, inserts on the basis of text on parallel passages the following interpolation here: R. Johanan b. Torta said: 'And why all that? Because they bought the priestly office for money, for R. Assi reported that Martha, the daughter of Boethus, brought King Jannai two kabful of denars to nominate Joshua b. Gamala as one of the high priests. And R. Johanan b. Torta said (further). The same statement is made, infra 18a, in the name of R. Assi.

(17) An interesting account of Torta is given in the Pesik. Rab. XIV: (tortah being taken as the feminine of tora, hence cow. It occurs in this form in the Targum Num. XIX, 2.) He said: If a cow that has no speech and no mind, recognized her Creator, should I, whom my Maker created in His image, not go and acknowledge Him. He became a Jew, studied, grew efficient in the Torah and they named him Johanan b. Torta.

because they delayed offering up their sacrificial¹ birds Scripture accounts it to them as if they had lain with them. The [sacred] offerings were treated contemptuously, as it is written,² Yea, before the fat was made to smoke, the priest's servant came and said to the man that sacrificed: ' Give flesh to roast for the priest,' for he will not have sodden flesh of thee, but raw.' And if the man said unto him: 'Let the fat be made to smoke first of all, and then take as much as thy soul desireth': then he would say: 'Nay, but thou shalt give it me now, and if not, I will take it by force. ' And the sin of the young men was very great before the Lord, — for the men dealt contemptuously with the offering of the Lord.

Why was the first Sanctuary destroyed? Because of three [evil] things which prevailed there: idolatry, immorality, bloodshed. Idolatry, as it is written: For the bed is too short for a man to stretch himself and the covering too narrow when he gathereth himself up.³ What is the meaning of 'For the bed is too short for a man to stretch himself'? R. Jonathan said: It is: This bed⁴ is too short for two neighbours to stretch themselves. And [what is the meaning of] 'the covering too narrow when he gathereth himself up'? — R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: When R. Jonathan [in his reading] came to this passage, he would cry and say: To Him , concerning Whom it is written, He gathereth the waters of the sea together like a heap,⁵ the cover became too narrow! Immorality [prevailed] as it is written: Moreover the Lord said: Because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched-forth necks and wanton eyes, walking and mincing as they go, and make a tinkling with their feet.⁶ 'Because the daughters of Zion are haughty', i.e., they used to walk with proud carriage. 'And wanton eyes' i.e., they filled their eyes with kohl.⁷ 'Walking and mincing as they go', i.e. , they used to walk with the heel touching the toe. 'And make a tinkling with their feet', R. Isaac said: They would take myrrh and balsam and place it in their shoes⁸ and when they came near the young men of Israel they would kick, causing the balsam to squirt at them and would thus cause the evil desire to enter them like an adder's poison.

Bloodshed [prevailed] as it is written: Moreover Manaseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to another.⁹ They were wicked, but they placed their trust in the Holy One, blessed be He.¹⁰ For it is written, The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money; yet will they lean upon the Lord and say 'Is not the Lord in the midst of us? No evil shall come upon us'.¹¹ Therefore the Holy One, blessed be He, brought them three evil decrees as against the three evils which were their own:¹² Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps and the mountain of the house as the high places of a forest. But why was the second Sanctuary destroyed, seeing that in its time they were occupying themselves with Torah, [observance of] precepts, and the practice of charity? Because therein prevailed hatred without cause. That teaches you that groundless hatred is considered as of even gravity with the three sins of idolatry, immorality, and bloodshed together . And [during the time of] the first Sanctuary did no groundless hatred prevail? Surely it is written: They are thrust down to the sword with my people; smite therefore upon my thigh,¹³ and R. Eleazar said: This refers to people who eat and drink together and then thrust each other through with the daggers of their tongue! — That [passage] speaks of the princes in Israel, for it is written , Cry and wail, son of man; for it is upon my people,¹³ etc. [The text reads] 'Cry and wail, son of man'. One might have assumed [it is upon] all [Israel], therefore it goes on, Upon all the princes of Israel.

R. Johanan and R. Eleazar both say: The former ones whose iniquity was revealed¹⁴ had their end¹⁵ revealed, the latter ones whose iniquity was not revealed have their end still unrevealed.

R. Johanan said: The fingernail of the earlier generations¹⁶ is better than the whole¹⁷ body of the later generations. Said Resh Lakish to him: On the contrary, the latter generations are better,¹⁸ although they are oppressed by the governments, they are occupying themselves with the Torah .- He [R. Johanan] replied: The Sanctuary will prove [my point] for it came back to the former generations, but not to the latter ones.

The question was put to R. Eleazar: Were the earlier generations better, or the later ones? — He answered: Look upon the Sanctuary! Some say he answered: The Sanctuary is your witness [in this matter].¹⁹

Resh Lakish was swimming in the Jordan. Thereupon Rabbah b. Bar Hana came and gave him the hand:²⁰ Said [Resh Lakish] to him: By God! I hate you. For it is written: If she be a wall, we will build upon her a turret of silver; if she be a door, we will enclose her with boards of cedar.²¹ Had you made yourself like a wall and had all come up in the days of Ezra, you would have been compared to silver, which no rottenness can ever affect. Now that you have come up like doors,²² you are like cedarwood, which rottenness prevails over. What is erez ['cedar']?- 'Ulla said: It is sasmagor.²³ What is 'sasmagor'?-R. Abba says it is the divine²⁴ voice as it has been taught: After the later prophets Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi had died, the Holy Spirit²⁵ departed from Israel, but they still availed themselves of the Bath Kol.²⁶ — But did Resh Lakish talk with Rabbah b. Bar Hana?²⁷ Even with R. Eleazar, who was the master of the land of Israel, Resh Lakish did not converse²⁸ [for anyone with whom Resh Lakish conversed in the street could get merchandise without witnesses]²⁹ would he engage in conversation with Rabbah b. Bar Hana?-R. Papa said: 'Throw a man between them'.³⁰ It was either Resh Lakish and Ze'iri or Rabbah b. Bar Hana and R. Eleazar.³¹ When he [Resh Lakish] came before R. Johanan , he said to him: This is not the reason.³² Even if they had all come up in the time of Ezra, the Divine Presence would not have rested over the second Sanctuary, for it is written:³³ God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem, [that means], although God has enlarged Japheth,¹ the Divine Presence rests only in the tents of Shem.² Whence do we know that the Persians are derived from Japheth? — Because It is written: The sons of Japheth: Gomer, and Magog, and Madai and Javan, and Tubal, and Meshek, and Tiras.³ ‘Gomer’, i.e. Germania;⁴ ‘Magog’, i.e. Kandia;⁵ ‘Madai’, i.e. Macedonia; ‘Javan’,⁶ in its literal sense; ‘Tubal’, i.e. Beth-Unyaki;⁷ ‘Meshek’, i.e. Mysia;⁸ ‘Tiras’ — its identification is a matter of dispute between R. Simai and the Rabbis, or, according to another report, between R. Simon and the Rabbis, one holding that it is to be identified with Beth Tiryaka,⁹ and the other [authorities] declaring it is Persia. R. Joseph learnt: ‘Tiras’ is Persia, Sabtah and Raamah, and Sabteca.¹⁰ R. Joseph learnt: I.e. the inner Sakistan and the outer Sakistan.¹¹ Between the two there is [a distance] of one hundred parasangs and its circumference one thousand parasangs.¹² And the beginning of his kingdom was Babel and Erech, and Accad, and Calneh in the land of Shinar.¹³ ‘Babel’ in its usual sense; ‘Erech’ ‘i.e. Urikath;¹⁴ ‘Accad’, i.e. Baskar;¹⁵ ‘Calneh’, i.e. Nupar —¹⁶ Ninpi. Out of that land went Ashur.¹⁷ R. Joseph learnt: ‘Ashur’, i.e. Silok.¹⁸ And builded Nineveh and Rehoboth-ir, and Calah.¹⁹ ‘Nineveh in its usual Sense; ‘Rehoboth-ir’, i.e. Perath of Meshan.²⁰ ‘Calah’ i.e., Perath de Borsif.²¹ And Resen between Nineveh and Calah — the same is the great city.²² ‘Resen’, i.e., Ctesiphon.²³ ‘The same is the great city’. [From here] I do not know yet whether by ‘the great city’ Nineveh or Resen is meant. But, as Scripture says, Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city unto God, of three days’ journey,²⁴ say that by ‘the great city’ Nineveh is meant.

An²⁵ Ahiman, Sheshai, and Talmai the children of Anak, were there.²⁶ A Tanna taught: ‘Ahiman’, i.e., the most skilful²⁷ of the brethren; ‘Sheshai’,²⁸ i.e., he made the ground [he stepped on] like pits; ‘Talmai’, i.e., he made the ground full of ridges. Another comment:²⁹ Ahiman built Anath, Sheshai built Alush; Talmai built Talbush.³⁰ [They were called] ‘the children of Anak’, because they lorded it over the sun by reason of their height.³¹

R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of Rabbi said: Rome is designed to fall into the hand of Persia, as it was said: Therefore hear ye the counsel of the Lord, that He hath taken against Edom; and His purposes that He hath purposed against the inhabitants of Teman: surely the least of the flock shall drag them away, surely their habitation shall be appalled to them.³² Rabbah b. ‘Ullah demurred to this: What intimation is there that ‘the last of the flock’ refers to Persia? [Presumably] because Scripture reads: The ram which thou sawest having two horns, they are the kings of Media and Persia.³³ But say [perhaps] it is Greece, for it is written, And the rough he-goat is the king of Greece?³⁴ — When R. Habiba b. Surmaki came up,³⁵ he reported this interpretation before a certain scholar. The latter said: One who does not understand the meaning of the passage asks a question against Rabbi. What does, indeed, ‘the least of the flock’ mean? The youngest of his brethren, for R. Joseph learnt that Tiras is Persia.³⁶

Rabbah b. Bar Hana in the name of R. Johanan, on the authority of R. Judah b. Ila'i, said: Rome is designed to fall into the hands of Persia, that may be concluded by inference a minori ad majus: If in the case of the first Sanctuary, which the sons of Shem [Solomon] built and the Chaldeans destroyed, the Chaldeans fell into the hands of the Persians,³⁷ then how much more should this be so with the second Sanctuary, which the Persians built and the Romans destroyed, that the Romans should fall into the hands of the Persians.³⁸ Rab said: Persia will fall into the hands of Rome. Thereupon R. Kahana and R. Assi asked of Rab: [Shall] the builders fall into the hands of the destroyers? — He said to them: Yes, it is the decree of the King.³⁹ Others say: He replied to them: They too are guilty for they destroyed the synagogues. It has also been taught in accord with the above, Persia will fall into the hands of Rome, first because they destroyed the synagogues, and then because it is the King's decree that the builders fall into the hands of the destroyers. Rab also said: The son of David will not come until the wicked kingdom of Rome will have spread [its sway] over the whole world for nine months, as it is said: Therefore will He give them up, until the time that she who travaileth hath brought forth; then the residue of his brethren shall return with the children of Israel.⁴⁰

Our Rabbis taught: All the cells in the Sanctuary were without a mezuzah⁴¹ with the exception of the cell of the counsellors, for therein there was a residence for the high priest. R. Judah said: Were there not a number of cells in the Sanctuary which had a compartment for a dwelling, yet had no mezuzah? Rather, the [reason for the] mezuzah on the cell of the counsellors was due to a preventive measure, What was the reason for R. Judah's statement? — Rabbah said, R. Judah is of the opinion, any house which is not made to serve both as a summer-home and a winter-home, is not a house.⁴² Abaye raised an objection: But it is written: And I will smite the winter-house with the summer-house!⁴³ — He answered: They are called summer-house or winter-house, but not by the general name house. Abaye raised the following objection: 'The sukkah⁴⁴ used at the Feast [of Tabernacles] according to R. Judah renders [the fruit brought during the Feast] liable to tithe, whereas the Sages exempt it [from such duty]';⁴⁵ and it has been learnt in connection with it: R. Judah considers [a sukkah] liable to 'erub,⁴⁶ a mezuzah to tithe.⁴⁷ And if you should say he considers it liable to these duties only on rabbinic enactment, that could apply to 'erub and mezuzah, but as regards tithe, can one say that it is but a rabbinic enactment, [should we not fear]

 (46) For the purpose of regulating Sabbath limits of movement a legal community or continuity is symbolically established for the inhabitants of a city, a court etc. If the sukkah opens out into a court in which there are other dwellings too, the inhabitants of all these dwellings will contribute their share towards a dish to be deposited in one of the dwellings, by which act the dwellings are considered as common to all, and the carrying of objects across the court and from one dwelling to another will be permitted.
 (47) Only a house needs 'erub and mezuzah.

that he may come to set aside tithe from where it is obligatory for where it is exempt and from where it is exempt for where it is obligatory?¹ -Rather, said Abaye, there is no dispute concerning the seven days [of the separation], all agreeing that [the cell] is liable [to have a mezuzah];² what the dispute is concerned with is the other days of the year; the Rabbis would institute it as a precautionary measure on account of the seven days, whilst R. Judah does not see the need for such a measure. Raba said to him: But the teaching [of the Mishnah]³ reads, 'The sukkah of the Feast during the Feast'! Therefore says Raba: On all other days of the year they all agree that there is no obligation [for a mezuzah at the sukkah and cell], the dispute touches only the seven days, and there is a special ground in the case of the sukkah and there is a special reason in the case of the cell. There is a special reason in the case of the sukkah: R. Judah, holding in accordance with his own principle, that the sukkah must have the character of a permanent residence, hence considers [the sukkah] is liable to a mezuzah, whilst the Rabbis, following their own principle, hold that the sukkah must have the character of an incidental residence, and hence requires no mezuzah. There is also a special reason for the dispute in the case of the cell [of the counsellors]; the Rabbis hold that a dwelling not freely chosen is called a dwelling whilst R. Judah is of the opinion that such dwelling is not included in the term dwelling; only rabbinically it was arranged that a mezuzah be affixed at the cell lest the people say the high priest is being kept in prison.⁴

Who has taught the following which our Rabbis have taught:

- (1) He might take off the tithe from something that is liable to tithe only by rabbinic enactment for some other heap (of produce), which is liable by the law of the Torah, and vice versa, thus invalidating the former and the latter.
 (2) Even as at the sukkah.
 (3) V. supra p. 45, n. 5. And yet it is said: 'The Sages exempt it from tithe', hence even during the seven days, according to one view, there would be exemption from the duty.
 (4) Since only a dwelling not freely chosen does not need a mezuzah.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 11a

All the gates that were there¹ had no mezuzah, with the exception of the gate of Nicanor,² within which the cell of the counsellors was situated. Apparently this teaching is in agreement with the Rabbis³ and not with R. Judah. For, if it were to be R. Judah's opinion [surely] he holds that [the mezuzah at the cell] itself is only a rabbinical enactment, shall we enact a preventive measure⁴ to guard another preventive measure?⁵ — You might even say it is in accord with R. Judah. [They are not two separate enactments, rather] the whole is but one measure.⁶

Our Rabbis taught: And upon thy gates:⁷ alike upon the gates of houses, upon the gates of courts, upon the gates of provinces, upon the gates of cities rests the dutiful obligation⁸ to the Omnipresent, as it is said, 'Upon the doorposts of thy house and upon thy gates'. Said Abaye to R. Safra: Why did the Rabbis not affix a mezuzah on the city gateways of Mahoza?⁹ — He answered: They serve only as supports for the Fort of Turrets [of that city].¹⁰ But the Fort of Turrets itself should have a mezuzah, for it contains a residence-compartment for the keeper of the prison! For it has been taught: A synagogue, which contains a dwelling-place for the synagogue attendant¹¹ must have a mezuzah! Rather, said Abaye, it¹² is due to a fear of danger.¹³ For it has been taught: The mezuzah of an individual's [house] should be examined¹⁴ twice every seven years, and of public buildings twice every fifty years. It happened to an Artaban¹⁵ who was examining mezuzoth in the upper market of Sepphoris¹⁶ that a quaestor found him and took from him a thousand zuz.¹⁷ But R. Eleazar said: Messengers engaged in a mizwah do not come to harm? — Where danger is to be expected, it is different, for it is written: And Samuel said: How can I go? If Saul hear it, he will kill me. And the Lord said: Take a heifer with thee, and say: I am come to sacrifice unto the Lord.¹⁸ R. Kahana recited before Rab Judah: The straw-magazine, the stable, the wood-shed, and the store-house are exempt from the mezuzah, because the women make use of them.¹⁹ What does 'they make use [of them]' mean? — They bathe [therein].²⁰ Rab Judah said to him: The reason for the exemption is that they bathe [therein], but [had they been restricted to their] ordinary use, these places are liable to a mezuzah. But has it not been taught that an ox-stable is exempt from a mezuzah? Rather we must say that 'they make use [of them]' means they adorn themselves therein and this is what it teaches: Although the women adorn themselves therein, they are exempt from mezuzah.²¹ Said R. Kahana to him: But are the [places] wherein women adorn themselves exempt [from a mezuzah]? Surely it has been taught: An ox-stable is exempt from mezuzah, and [places] where women adorn themselves are liable to a mezuzah — What then remains now for you to say [is that] the case of [dwellings] wherein women adorn themselves is being disputed by Tannaim,²² and so on my view too²³ concerning these places [when limited to their] ordinary use, there is a dispute of Tannaim — For it has been taught: 'Thy house'²⁴ means 'a house appointed for thee', thus excluding the straw-magazine, the ox-stable, the wood-shed, and the store-house which are exempt from the mezuzah. Some however declare them liable [to have a mezuzah]. In truth, they said, the privy, the tannery, the bathhouse, the house for ritual immersion are exempt from a mezuzah. Now R. Kahana explains [this teaching] according to his view, and Rab Judah explains it according to his view. 'R. Kahana explains it according to his view' thus: 'Thy house' means 'the house appointed for thee', thus excluding a straw-magazine, ox-stable, woodshed and store-house which are exempt from a mezuzah. Some however declare them liable. In truth, they said, the privy, the tannery, the bath-house, the house for ritual immersion and the rooms which the women make use of to adorn themselves are exempt from the mezuzah. But if this is so, it is the same as merhaz? — We are informed about public and about private bath-houses. For the thought may have occurred that only public bath-houses are exempt because they are full of uncleanness, but private bathhouses, where there is less thereof, are liable to a mezuzah, therefore he lets us know [that even private bath-houses are exempt]. 'Rab Judah explains it in accord with his view': This is how it is taught: 'Thy house' means 'a house appointed for thee', that excludes the straw-magazine, ox-stable, wood-shed, and store-house as exempt from mezuzah, even though women adorn themselves [therein].²⁵ Some consider houses wherein the women adorn themselves obliged to have a mezuzah. But [when restricted to their] ordinary use, all agree that they are exempt. In truth they said: The privy, the tannery, the private or public bathhouse, even though the women adorn themselves therein, are exempt from mezuzah, because they contain a great deal of uncleanness. But would, according to Rab Judah, all agree that [these places when restricted to their] ordinary use are exempt? Surely it has been taught: 'In your gates',²⁶ that implies alike the gates of houses, of courts, of provinces, of cities, cattle-sheds, hen-roosts, shed for straw, store-house for wine, store-house for oil — they all are liable to a mezuzah — One might assume this includes also the porter's lodge,¹ a veranda² and a balcony, therefore the text reads, 'house' — [meaning] just as 'house' means a building appointed for a dwelling it thus excludes all other buildings not appointed for a dwelling. One might have wanted to include also the privy, the tannery, the bath-house and the house for ritual immersion, therefore the text says, 'house': just as a 'house is made for dignity, so only all such are implied, which also are made for dignity, to the exclusion of these, which are not made for dignity. One might have wanted to include the mountain of the Sanctuary,³ the cells and the courts.⁴ Therefore the text says 'house': just as a 'house' is for common use so are only such [houses] as are for common use [liable] to a mezuzah — to the exclusion of these which are sacred!⁵ This is a refutation.

R. Samuel son of Rab Judah recited before Raba: Six gates are exempt from the mezuzah.- [the gates of] the straw-shed, the stable, the wood-house, the store-house, the Median⁶ gate, a gate without beams and a gate that is not ten handbreadths high. He [Raba] said to him: You started by saying six and you ended up with seven?—He replied: There is Tannaitic division of opinion concerning the Median gate, for it has been taught: An arched doorway⁷ — R. Meir declares it liable to the mezuzah, while the Sages exempt it.⁸ All agree, however, that, if the posts are ten handbreadths⁹ [high], it is liable to the mezuzah.¹⁰ Said Abaye: All agree that if the [whole] doorway is ten handbreadths in height, but the post is not even three¹¹ it is considered nothing;¹² again, if the post is three handbreadths in height, but the [whole] doorway not even ten, it is also considered nothing.¹² They are disputing only concerning doorways the [whole] height of which is ten, with the posts three in height, but with a width less than four handbreadths, space however being left to extend it to four handbreadths.¹³ R. Meir holds one may extend¹⁴ it by digging [to the required minimum of four handbreadths], whilst the Sages hold that we do not extend it by digging it. Our Rabbis taught: The synagogue, the women's apartment, and the house belonging to partners are liable to mezuzah — Is that not self-evident? — You might have said [the scriptural] ‘Thy house’¹⁵ [means] her — but not [the woman's] house; ‘thy house’ but not their [partners’] house, hence we are taught [that they are included in the law of mezuzah]. But would you expound similarly: That your days may be multiplied and the days of your sons?¹⁶ Do only their [sons] need life, not the others [women and their daughters]? What then is the significance of ‘Thy house’? — It is as Raba said: For Raba said: The way thou enterest [thy house], and when a man moves, he moves with the right foot first.¹⁷

Another [Baraitha] taught:¹⁸ The synagogue, the house belonging to partners, and the women's compartment are subject to uncleanness from house plagues. Is that not self-evident? You might have said: Then shall come he who has the house to him;¹⁹ to him’ [implies] but not ‘to her’ [woman], ‘to him’ but not ‘to them’ [partners], therefore we are told [that this is not so]. Perhaps it is really so? — Scripture says, In a house of the land of your possession,²⁰ [which includes both] — Why then ‘to him’? [That means to say that] if one devotes his house to himself exclusively, refusing to lend his belongings by pretending he did not own them, the Holy One, blessed be He, exposes him as he removes his belongings.²¹ Thus ‘to him’ excludes [from the infliction of the house plague] him who lends his belongings to others.²²

But is a synagogue subject to uncleanness from house plagues? Has it not been taught: One might assume that synagogues and houses of learning are subject to uncleanness from house plagues, therefore Scripture says: ‘He who has the house to him’, i.e., he to whom alone the house belongs, that excludes those [houses] which do not belong to him alone? — This is no difficulty: The first teaching is in accord with R. Meir, the second with Rabba, for it has been taught: A synagogue which contains a dwelling for the synagogue attendant²³ is liable to a mezuzah, but one which has no dwelling apartment, R. Meir declares it liable but the Sages exempt it. Or, if you wish, you might say: Both teachings are in accord with the Rabbis. In the one case the synagogue referred to has a dwelling [apartment], in the other it has no dwelling apartment. Or, if you wish, you might say [in accounting for the discrepancy] that in both cases the synagogue has no dwelling apartment

(4) In the singular: The Temple court. In the plural the various compartments there, as the men's compartment, the women's compartment.

(5) [This proves that the places enumerated in the teaching of R. Kahana, even when restricted to their ordinary use, are also subject to a difference of opinion of Tannaim whether or not they are liable to a mezuzah, which contradicts Rab Judah.]

(6) The Median gate was usually made with an arched doorway, hence gates with such doorways came to be called Median.

- (13) Within the ten handbreadths, the minimum required height of the doorway.
- (14) By legal fiction. As long as the doorway starts on a breadth of four by three, allowing space for continued dimension up to ten, we look upon it as continuing in the same size, hence as entitled to the designation 'door', with the implication of being subject to the law of mezuzah
- (15) The possessive suffix in the Hebrew is masc. sing.
- (16) Deut. XI, 21. If you press the text so hard, excluding woman because the possessive is in the masculine form, then you should consistently expound: In order that your days, may be, where the possessive suffix, too, is masculine, that God holds out no promise for the prolongation of women's life. Perhaps benekem, which literally means 'your sons', although it is understood to include 'daughters', being usually translated as 'children' might render the consequence of such pedantic interpretation more absurd still.
- (17) Read ad hoc: instead of betheka, bi'atheka, i.e., 'thy coming in' instead of 'Thy house', to infer thence that the mezuzah should be affixed on the door-post at the right hand of him who enters. In this manner, indeed, the mezuzah is affixed, in the upper third of the post.

, the first teaching referring to big cities, the second to villages.¹ But are synagogues in big cities really not subject to uncleanness from house plagues? Has it not been taught: 'In the house of the land of your possession,'² i.e., the house of the land of your possession could become defiled through leprosy, but Jerusalem³ could not become defiled through leprosy. R. Judah said: I have heard that only the place of the Sanctuary is unaffected by the law of leprosy?⁴ Now does not that imply that synagogues and houses of learning are subject to the law of leprosy even though they be in large cities? — Read R. Judah said: I have heard that only sacred places⁵ are not subject to the law of leprosy. What principle are they disputing? — The first Tanna holds Jerusalem was not divided amongst the tribes⁶ and R. Judah holds Jerusalem was divided among the tribes, the basis of their difference being the principle on which these Tannaim differ, for it has been taught: What lay in the lot of Judah? The Temple mount, the cells, the courts. And what lay in the lot of Benjamin? The Hall,⁷ the Temple⁸ and the Holy of Holies. And a strip of land went forth from Judah's lot and went into Benjamin's territory, and on this the Temple was built — Benjamin the Righteous was longing to swallow it every day as it is written: He coveteth him all day,⁹ therefore he obtained the privilege of becoming the host of the Omnipotent,¹⁰ as it is said: And He dwelleth between his shoulders¹¹.

The following Tanna holds that Jerusalem was not divided amongst the tribes, for it has been taught: One does not rent houses in Jerusalem, because it [the city] does not belong to them, [the inhabitants]. R. Eleazar son of R. Zadok said: Nor any beds. Therefore the innkeepers take the skin of the sacrificial animals by force.¹² Abaye said: We may learn from this that it is usual for a man to leave to his host the empty wine pitcher and the hide.¹³

But are the synagogues of the villages subject to the laws of leprosy? Has it not been taught: As a possession,¹⁴ i.e., until they conquer it. If they have conquered but not yet divided it among the tribes, or even divided it among the tribes but not divided it among the families, or even divided it among the families but before each man knows where his lot is, whence do we know [that the laws of leprosy do not apply yet]? To teach us that Scripture says: 'Then he who has the house to him' i.e., he to whom alone the house is belonging, excluding these [houses] which do not belong to him [the owner] alone.¹⁵ — It is more correct as we have answered at first.¹⁶

AND ANOTHER PRIEST IS PREPARED FOR HIM: It is obvious that if any disqualifying mishap occurred to the high priest before the morning [daily] offering, that one¹⁷ initiates the other priest with the morning burnt-offering. But if the mishap should have occurred after the morning sacrifice, how could he be initiated?¹⁸ — R. Adda b. Ahabah said: With the girdle.¹⁹ That will be in accord with him who holds that the girdle of the high priest is identical with that of the common priest,²⁰ but according to the opinion that the girdle of the high priest was not the same as that of the common priest,²¹ what can be said?²² — Abaye said: He would put on the eight garments and turn²³ with the hook, in accordance with what R. Huna said. For R. Huna said: If a non-priest turns with the hook, he incurs penalty of death.²⁴ R. Papa said:

(1) In the metropolis people from many cities assemble in the synagogue, it therefore seems to belong to everybody, i.e., to nobody, whilst in the villages those who attend are known to all, being like partners in the synagogue (Rashi).

(2) Lev. XIV, 34.

(3) Jerusalem was not divided among the tribes, but was kept in trust for all Israel and could therefore not be subject to a law applying to privately owned houses only.

(4) Meg. 26a.

(5) Instead of 'Sanctuary'. 'Sacred places' include synagogues and houses of learning.

(6) V. supra p. 52, n. 6.

(7) Ulam, leading to the interior of the Temple.

(8) The Hall containing the golden altar, Mid. IV, 1.

(9) Deut. XXXIII, 12. The ad hoc translation, lit., 'to bend over', thus to be anxious, hence (Rashi): he scratched himself in despair, was anxious to conquer it.

(11) Ibid.

(12) I Tosef. Ma'as. Sh. I.

(13) Of the animal which he slaughters and consumes in the house of his host (Rashi).

(14) Lev. XIV, 34.

(15) Obviously then the synagogues in the villages are not subject to levitical uncleanness, hence the alternate answer above, 'One speaks of' synagogues in metropolises, the other of synagogues in villages', is unsatisfactory.

(16) The distinction is rather between synagogues with a dwelling for the synagogue attendant and those without it.

(17) He should officiate at the morning burnt-offering in the eight garments of the high priest.

(18) The rest of the service of the Day of Atonement is performed in four garments, how will his office of high priestly function be indicated?

(19) The high priest's girdle, which on the Day of Atonement is of fine linen (Lev. XVI, 4).

(20) [I.e. the material for the girdle prescribed for the high priest in Ex. XXXIX, 29 was also intended to be used for the girdle of the common priests, so that the girding of a linen girdle by the priest on the Day of Atonement would serve to indicate his high priestly function.]

(21) [I.e., the girdle of the common priest was of linen, the material of the girdle described in Ex. XXXIX, 29 being restricted to the high priest, so that the girding by the priest of a linen girdle on the Day of Atonement would indicate no particular high priestly function.]

(22) How would it be recognizable that he is initiated into performing the high priest's service?

(23) Rashi: Before starting on the service of the day, he puts on the eight garments, and turns on the outer altar one of the limbs of the daily burnt-offering with an iron hook. By reason of such turning that limb is more speedily consumed. He has thus done the initiative work for the office of high priest which he is to assume anon.

(24) This is only preparatory work, but since a non-priest, performing it in accord with R. Huna's opinion incurs the penalty of death, it is obviously considered as of even importance with the service proper, hence serving to initiate the newcomer into the high priest's office.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 12b

His service¹ initiates him — Has it not been taught: All the vessels which Moses made became sanctified through being anointed. From then on they become sanctified through being used at a service.² Similarly here his service initiates him.

When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he reported: Concerning the girdle of the common priest there is a dispute between Rabbi and R. Eleazar b. Simeon, one said it was of kil'ayim [wool and linen in the same web],³ the other said it was of fine linen.⁴ It may be ascertained that it was Rabbi who said the girdle was made of kil'ayim, for it has been taught: There is no difference between the high priest and the common priest except in the girdle, this is the opinion of Rabbi. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon said: Not even in the girdle is there any distinction. Of what time [does this teaching speak]? If during the rest of the year, there are many points of difference, [as e.g.] the high priest [officiates] in eight garments, the common priest in four; you must say, then, that [the time discussed is] the Day of Atonement.⁵ We can tell you: In fact the discussion deals with the other days of the year, and it refers to such garments which both wear alike⁶ [the only difference being the girdle].

When Rabin came [from Palestine] he reported: Everybody agrees that the girdle of the high priest on the Day of Atonement was made of fine linen, and during the rest of the year of kil'ayim. The discussion concerned only the common priest's girdle, both on the Day of Atonement and during the rest of the year; concerning that Rabbi said it was made of kil'ayim and R. Eleazar b. Simeon of fine linen. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: We also have: Upon his flesh.⁷ Why the repetition of 'he shall put on'? To include the mitre and the girdle for the removal of the ashes, this is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Dosa said: It is to include the provision that the [four] garments of the high priest on the Day of Atonement may be used by the common priest [during the rest of the year]. Rabbi says: There are two valid objections to this: First, that the girdle of the high priest on the Day of Atonement is different from that of the common priest; secondly, shall the garments worn for the service of most solemn sanctity be worn for ministration of lesser holiness? Rather 'he shall put on' [was repeated] to include worn-out garments.⁸ R. Dosa adheres to his principle, for it has been taught: And shall leave them there,⁹ that teaches that they must be hidden.¹⁰ R. Dosa said: [It means that] he [the high priest] shall not use them on another Day of Atonement.¹¹ Our Rabbis have taught: If a disqualifying accident occurred to him, and another was appointed in his place then the former returns [afterwards] to his office, whilst the latter has upon himself all the obligations touching the high priesthood,¹² this is the opinion of R. Meir. R. Jose says: The first returns to his office, the second becomes unfit for the office of either high priest or common priest.¹³ R. Jose said: It happened to Joseph b. Elam¹⁴ of Sepphoris that after a disqualifying accident had happened to the high priest, he was appointed in the former's place, and the Sages said: The former returns to his office, the latter is unfit to be either common priest or high priest. He cannot be high priest for the sake of preventing ill-feeling,¹⁵ nor can he any more be a common priest, for 'we may promote in [a matter] of sanctity, but not degrade'.¹⁶ Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan:

The reading there is corrupt, and to be corrected in accord with the reading in Tosef. s.v. כה and in J.Yoma 38a: It happened to Joseph ben Ulam of Sepphoris (not 'in Sepphoris', for it could have happened only in Jerusalem) who served for an hour (or: little while) as high priest and as he went out he said to the King: My lord and King: Whose were the bullock and the goat which were offered up to-day, did they come from me or from the high priest? The King understood (the trend) of his question and he replied: What is this, ben Ulam? Are you not satisfied with having served in the high priest's place for one hour before Him Who spoke and the world was created, so that you seek to obtain the high priest's office for yourself? In that moment ben Ulam understood that he was deposed from the high priesthood. V. Hor., Sonc., ed. p. 89 notes, and Meg. p. 59, n. 2.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 13a

The halachah is in accord with R. Jose, but R. Jose admits that if [the substitute high priest] transgressed that injunction and officiated, his service is valid. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: The halachah is in accord with R. Jose, but R. Jose admits that if the first [high priest] dies, the second [the substitute] returns to his service. Is that not self-evident?¹ — You might have said: This would involve for him a rivalry in his lifetime,² hence he informs us³ [that this is not so].

R. JUDAH SAYS: ONE PROVIDES FOR HIM ALSO ANOTHER WIFE. But the Rabbis, too, are considering a possibility!⁴ — The Rabbis will tell you: Levitical impurity is frequent,⁵ death is infrequent.

THEY SAID TO HIM: IF SO THERE IS NO END TO THE MATTER. They gave a good answer to R. Judah! What then about R. Judah? — He will tell you: One may consider the possibility of one death, but one would not [go so far as to] consider the possibility of two [successive wives'] deaths. And the Rabbis? — [They hold that] if enactment [on the basis of consideration of the possibility] of death is justified, such [possibility] should be considered to include also two.⁶ But the Rabbis ought to apply that consideration to themselves!⁷ The Rabbis will answer you: The high priest is careful. If he be careful, why was another priest prepared [to take his place in case of accidental impurity]? — Since 'ye make the latter his rival, he will be all the more careful.

But is this arrangement⁸ sufficient? The Divine Law said: His house⁹ and that [substitute wife] is not 'his house'.¹⁰ -He betroths her [unto himself]. — But [still] as long as he does not marry her,¹¹ she is not 'his house'? — He marries her. — But then he has 'two houses' and the Divine Law said: And make atonement for himself and for his house,¹² but not for 'two houses'? — He divorces her again. If he divorces her, our question reverts to its place?¹³ — No, the provision applies to the case that he divorces her on condition; [namely], he says to her: Behold this thy letter of divorce¹⁴ [to be valid] in case thou diest.¹⁵ But perhaps she dies and he will have 'two houses'? — Rather, the case is that he says to her: Behold this thy letter of divorce [to be valid] if thou diest. If she does not die, then she is divorced;¹⁶ and if she does die, there is [still] the other one alive. But perhaps she will not die, so that her letter of divorce is valid and the other [the first] one die, and he will stay without a ‘house’? Say rather: He says to her: Behold this thy letter of divorce [to be valid] if one of you die, so that if the one dies there is [still] the other one alive, and if the other one dies there is [still] this one alive. But perhaps neither of them will die and he will have ‘two houses’? Furthermore on such a condition¹⁷ it, [the divorce,] is really not valid; has not Raba said: If he said: Behold this thy letter of divorce to be valid if thou drinkest no wine all the days of my life and thy life, it is not valid;¹⁸ but if he said: ‘All the days of the life of So-and-so’, then it is valid?¹⁹ — Rather say that he said to her: Behold this thy letter of divorce [to be valid] if thy fellow [wife] does not die. If her fellow does not die, she [the second wife] is divorced, and if she does die, then there is still the other [the second wife] alive [to be his house’]. — But perhaps her fellow wife will die in the middle of the service and it will become

(1) Since the only reason for his disqualification was the ill-will engendered in the heart of the original high priest.

(2) Lit., ‘from life’. When the substitute might be said to have awaited jealously the death of his predecessor.

(3) We do not go so far in endeavour to prevent ill-feeling.

(4) Since they agree to the provision of a substitute high priest.

(5) It may be due to pollution, to unexpected contact with the saliva of an ‘am ha-arez, (Rashi).

(6) The death of one within a day is a rather infrequent occurrence. The only reason for considering it would be a principle, according to which we must consider possibilities, even remote. On such basis the death of two successive wives may not be said to be outside the sphere of possibility, hence: ‘IF SO, THERE IS NO END.

(7) With even logic the Sages ought to admit that, since we are considering the possibility of accidental impurity disqualifying the incumbent high priest, it is perfectly within the sphere of possibility that the substitute, too, may suffer such accidental disqualification, hence, here too there is no end to it!

(8) Of preparing a substitute wife.

(9) Lev. XVI, 6.

(10) If the first wife dies, whilst the second is not yet married to him, he has no ‘house’ to obtain atonement for.

(15) On the Day of Atonement. If she die on that day, her letter of divorce is retroactively valid, there is one ‘house’ only: and if she does not die but her fellow die, then she remains as the ‘house’, her letter of divorce being invalid. Rashi makes this significant observation: These arguments are not valid, they are answers to hypothetical questions preparing the ground for the last, satisfactory answer.

(16) And the first woman is his only ‘house’, retrospectively revealed that the letter of divorce of the other one was not valid and he would then have been officiating¹ at the service with ‘two houses’? — Rather assume, then, that he says to her: Behold this thy letter of divorce [to be valid] if thy fellow dies. — But perhaps the fellow wife will die and the letter of divorce of the first wife will be valid and he will stand there without a ‘house’? — Rather [say that] we speak of the case that he divorced them both, to the one he said: Behold this thy letter of divorce [to be valid] in case thy fellow wife does not die; and to the other one he said: Behold this thy letter of divorce [to be valid] if thou dost not enter the synagogue.² But perhaps her fellow will not die and she will not enter the synagogue, and the letter of divorce of both will be valid and he will stand without a ‘house’? — Rather: To the one he says: Behold this thy letter of divorce [to be valid] in case thy fellow does not die; and to the other one: Behold this thy letter of divorce [to be valid] if I enter the Synagogue, so that if the one die, the second be available, and if the second die the first be available. What will you say in the case that her fellow wife dies in the midst of the service and retrospectively he will have officiated at the service with two 'houses'? If he saw that she was about to die, he would at once enter the synagogue and would render the divorce retroactively valid. — R. Assi or, as some say, R. 'Awira, demurred to this: Consequently, if this be so, two widows of one brother should not be married by the brother-in-law?³ — Scripture repeats 'his sister-in-law' twice, to intimate [that even in the case of] two sisters-in-law the law of levirate marriage applies. But then a woman betrothed⁴ should not be married to her levir?⁵ — [By emphasizing] 'abroad'⁶ the betrothed woman is meant to be included.

Our Rabbis taught: The high priest may offer up a sacrifice as a mourner,⁷ but may not eat thereof. R. Judah said: Throughout the day.⁸ What does 'throughout the day' signify? — Said Raba: It means to indicate that he should be brought from his house.⁹ Abaye said to him: But now, according to R. Judah we even remove him¹⁰ [from the Sanctuary], for it has been taught: If he was standing and offering up a sacrifice on the altar, and he hears that one [of his close relatives]¹¹ died, he should leave the service and go out. This is the opinion of R. Judah; R. Jose says: He should complete his service.¹² How can you then say that we bring him from his house?¹³ — Rather, says Raba, 'throughout the day'

(1) I.e., the first part of the service.

(2) On the Day of Atonement.

(3) So shall it be done unto the man that doth not build up his brother's house. Deut. XXV, 9. Here also the word 'house' is used for 'wife' and since 'house' is taken to mean but one wife, no brother would be able to perform the levirate marriage where his dead brother had left two wives.

(4) 'Arusah', betrothed, engaged, but not 'brought home'. The betrothal carries with it almost all the legal consequences of marriage. V. Glos. s.v. Erusin.

(5) If 'house' is to be taken to refer to wife, why should a betrothed sister-in-law be subject to levirate marriage?

(6) If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the dead shall not be married abroad unto one not of his kin. The word 'abroad' here is superfluous and is taken to indicate that even one who was 'still outside', not having been married properly, but only betrothed, is included in the law of the levirate marriage, v. Yeb. 13b.

(7) 'Onen' is a mourner before the burial of his kinsman, to be distinguished from 'abel', a mourner during the seven days after burial. With regard to the high priest, Lev. XXI, 11 reads: Neither shall he go into any dead body, nor defile himself for his father or for his mother; neither shall he go out of the sanctuary, nor profane the sanctuary of his God. Scripture thus permits his officiating but he is forbidden to eat of any sacred meat whilst in mourning. This is inferred ad majus from Deut. XXVI, 14 which, referring to tithe, is of lesser sanctity than the meat of sacrifices, as the Israelites say: I have not eaten thereof in my mourning.

(8) V. Hor. 12b.

(9) He should be deliberately brought to the Sanctuary from his house, so that his pre-occupation with the sacrifices may help to lessen his grief.

(10) This refers to the common priest.

(11) Father or mother or son or daughter or brother or unmarried sister. Rabbinical enactment includes the married sister.

(12) V. Hor. loc. cit.

(13) If in the case of the common priest R. Judah would have him removed if he became a mourner, would he in the case of the high priest consider it a good deed to bring him to the Sanctuary?

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 14a

means to say that he does not officiate all that day,¹ as a preventive measure lest he eat.² Said R. Adda b. Ahabah to Raba: But did R. Judah enact a preventive measure lest he eat? Have we not learnt, R. Judah said: WE ALSO PROVIDE ANOTHER WIFE FOR HIM, LEST HIS WIFE DIE? Now when his wife dies he may perform the service [on the same day] without R. Judah becoming apprehensive lest he eat?—He replied: Now is this so?³ There, because it is the Day of Atonement, on which all the world does not eat, he, too, would not be likely to eat, but here [on any day] when all the world is eating, he would also be ready to eat — But under such conditions⁴ what mourning would be coming upon him because of her, since she is divorced from him? — Granted that no mourning would be obligatory, but he would surely be distracted.⁵ MISHNAH. THROUGHOUT THE SEVEN DAYS HE SPRINKLES THE BLOOD⁶ AND BURNS THE INCENSE⁷ AND TRIMS THE LAMPS⁸ AND OFFERS THE HEAD AND THE HIND LEG;⁹ ON ALL OTHER DAYS HE OFFERS ONLY IF HE SO DESIRES; FOR THE HIGH PRIEST IS FIRST IN OFFERING A PORTION¹⁰ AND HAS FIRST PLACE IN TAKING A PORTION.¹¹

GEMARA. Who is the authority [for our Mishnah]? — R. Hisda said: It is not in accord with R. Akiba, for if it were, R. Akiba Surely holds that if some of the sprinkling¹² fell upon a clean person, it rendered him unclean! How could he then officiate at the service?¹³ — For it has been taught: And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean,¹⁴ i.e., [if sprinkled] ‘upon the unclean’, [he becomes] clean, [if sprinkled] upon the clean [he becomes] unclean, this is the opinion of R. Akiba. But the Sages hold that these matters [concerning sprinkling]¹⁵ apply only to such things as are susceptible to uncleanness. I What is it about? — As we have learnt: If he intended sprinkling an animal and [happened to] sprinkle a man, then, if there be sufficient water on the hyssop, he may repeat [the sprinkling].¹⁶ If he intended sprinkling a man and he [happened to] sprinkle an animal, then, if there be enough water on the hyssop, he may not repeat [the sprinkling].¹⁷ What is the reason for R. Akiba's view? — Let the Divine Law write ‘And the clean person shall sprinkle upon him’, what is the meaning of ‘upon the unclean,’? Infer from this that [if sprinkled] the unclean becomes clean, and [if sprinkled] the clean becomes unclean. And [what is the reason for the view of] the Rabbis? — These words emphasize that [sprinkling is right] only upon matter susceptible to uncleanness. But this¹⁸ case can be deduced a minori ad majus: If sprinkling upon an unclean makes clean, how much more shall sprinkling upon a clean [keep or make more] clean! And R. Akiba? — It is with reference to this that Solomon said: I said, I will get wisdom, but it is far from me.¹⁹ — And the Sages? [They explain] this [passage to refer] to [the fact that] he who sprinkles and he who is sprinkled are clean, whereas he who touches them [the waters of purification] is rendered unclean.²⁰ — But is he who sprinkles clean? Surely it is written, And he that sprinkleth the water of sprinkling shall wash his clothes?²¹ — ‘Sprinkleth’ here means ‘toucheth’. — But the text reads ‘sprinkleth’ and also mentions ‘toucheth’;²¹ furthermore, he who ‘sprinkleth’ must wash his clothes, whereas he who ‘toucheth’ need not wash his clothes? — Rather ‘sprinkleth’ here means ‘carrieth’ — Then let the Divine Law write ‘carrieth’, why is ‘sprinkleth’ written? — That [is meant] to let us know that there must be a quantity sufficient for the sprinkling.²² That will be right according to him who holds that a definite minimum is necessary in the sprinkling,²³ but according to him who holds there is no required minimum in the sprinkling,²³ what is there to be said? Even according to him who holds there is no required minimum [it will be right], for that refers only to the back of the man,²⁴ but in the vessels there must be a definite quantity, as we have learnt: How much water is necessary to be sufficient for the sprinkling? Enough for dipping

(1) Until the evening.

(2) During the day he is forbidden by the Torah to eat, in the evening after burial the prohibition is only Rabbinical (Rashi).

(3) This analogy is incorrect.

(4) Since he would rush to the synagogue during her coma so that she would be divorced from him as soon as he entered it (v. infra), hence how could he be considered a mourner for his divorced wife. It is interesting to observe that sudden death does not enter among the many possibilities considered in this discussion. It would invalidate the suggestion of his leaving for the synagogue as soon as his wife was near death.

(5) upset by reminiscent tenderness, unable, as Rashi says, to be in the prescribed happy mood for eating sacrificial meat. [V. Hul. 132b, so that but for the fact that the apprehension lest he may eat does not arise on the Day of Atonement, he would not have been allowed to perform under such conditions the Temple service lest he eat of the sacrifices, Tosaf. Yesh.]

- (7) Mornings and evenings on the golden inner altar, ibid. XXX, 1-8.
- (8) Of the seven-branched candlestick, ibid. XXVII, 20-21; also XXX, 7-8. The trimming consisted of the following: Every evening the lamps were kindled by a priest, every morning cleaned, filled with oil, and provided with fresh wick. All this work during the seven days was performed by the high priest.
- (9) According to Tam. IV, 2-3, the sacrificial lamb, after being slaughtered, was divided into certain parts, which, as a rule, were brought on the altar by the priests chosen by the count. Head and hind leg always were offered up first.

- (14) Num. XIX, 19: And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean, the words 'upon the unclean' seem superfluous, 'upon him' would have been clear enough. From this R. Akiba infers that only upon the unclean has the sprinkling a cleaning effect, with opposite effect on the clean.
- (15) The Sages also consider the words superfluous, but they find in them the intimation that sprinkling has its effect only upon things susceptible to uncleanness, hence, if sprinkled upon things unsusceptible to uncleanness it has been misused, and whatever is left of the water is invalid and may no more be used for sprinkling and cleansing.
- (16) (I.e., he can use the water left on the hyssop for a second sprinkling without necessarily dipping it again (Rash).]
- (17) V. Par. XIII, 3. [The hyssop must be dipped anew if the priest desires to perform with it another sprinkling. In having been sprinkled on the animal the water on the hyssop became disqualified as water of purification with which work has been done, and can no longer be used for ritual sprinkling. Thus the Sages infer from the superfluous words 'upon the unclean' that the water of purification may be used only for such things as are susceptible to uncleanness, and by being sprinkled on things not so susceptible it becomes invalid (Rashi). R. Hananel on the basis of another reading explains differently.]

the buds therein and for the water to be sprinkled.¹ Abaye said: [The Mishnah] may be in accord even with R. Akiba: He [the high priest] officiates all day, [and] in the evening is he sprinkled, then he takes the immersion and awaits the sunset.²

AND BURNS THE INCENSE AND TRIMS THE LAMPS. Hence [you may infer that] the incense came first and the lamps afterwards. A contradiction is raised against this:³ He to whom it fell to clear the inner altar of ashes . . . he to whom it fell to clean the candlesticks . . . he to whom it fell to burn the incense?⁴ R. Huna said: Who is the Tanna of [the Tractate] Tamid?⁵ R. Simeon of Mizpah.⁶ But surely we have learnt exactly the opposite.⁷ For we have learnt:⁸ As he⁹ came to the north-eastern corner [of the altar], he sprinkled to the east and north;¹⁰ then he came to the south-western corner and sprinkled it to the west and south. And with reference to this [Mishnaic statement] it was taught: Rabbi Simeon of Mizpah has this change in Tamid.¹¹ As he came to the north-eastern corner he sprinkled it to the east and to the north; then he came to the south-western corner, and sprinkled it to the west and afterwards to the south.¹² — Rather, said R. Johanan: Who is the authority for the order [given] in [the Tractate] Yoma? R. Simeon of Mizpah. But here is a contradiction between the order [given] in [the Tractate] Yoma and the order [given] in another passage therein: The second count decided who should slaughter, who should sprinkle [the blood], who should remove the ashes from the inner altar, who should remove the ashes from the candlestick, who should take up the limbs [of the burnt-offering] to the ramp [of the altar]. The third count: 'Fresh ones, come and be counted for the incense!'¹³ -Abaye said: This is no difficulty. The one case speaks of the trimming of the five lamps, the other of the trimming of the two lamps.¹⁴ Shall we say that the incense interrupted the trimming of the lamps? But Abaye was recounting the order [of the daily Temple service] in the name of a tradition¹⁵ and he has the trimming of the lamps interrupted by the blood of the regular daily offering?¹⁶ — I will tell you: This is no difficulty, the one refers to the [order of the daily Temple service] in accord with Abba Saul, the other in accord with the Sages, for it has been taught: He should not trim the lamps and after that burn the incense, but he should offer the incense first and then trim the lamps. Abba Saul says: He should first trim and then offer [the incense] — What is the reason for Abba Saul's view? — For it is written: Every morning, when he dresseth the lamps,¹⁷ and afterwards [it says], he shall burn it?¹⁸ — And the Sages?¹⁹ What the Divine Law intends here is

(4) Here the trimming of lamps is mentioned as coming before the incense.

(5) [Ginzberg, Journal of Jewish Lore and Philosophy I, p. 200 takes this phrase to denote that the Tractate Tamid did not go through the hands of Rabbi as Redactor, but that it has come down to us in the original form with R. Simeon of Mizpah, a contemporary of R. Gamaliel II, as its compiler.]

(6) V. Pe'ah II. He was either of Mizpah or 'Governor of the Watch-tower of the Temple' (Jastrow).

(11) משנה בתמיד a difficult phrase. Rashi: 'To change the order in connection with the Tamid, the daily regular offerings'. R. Hananel: He differs with the view laid down in Tamid. Ginzberg, op. cit., p. 285 n. 1 takes it as corresponding to תמני, 'teaches', used in introducing 'variants': R. Simeon's version of Tamid is . . .]

(12) R. Simeon insists that two separate applications had to be made from the south-western corner, one to the west and another to the south, and thus opposes the order given in Tamid, v. infra 15a, hence he could not be an authority for the Tractate.

(13) From here it is seen that incense was offered after the lamps, which contradicts our Mishnah here.

(14) There were seven lamps, the trimming of which, according to this answer, was interrupted by the offering of the incense, so that five lamps were trimmed, then the incense offered, after which the last two lamps of the seven-branched candlestick were trimmed, v. infra 33a.

that at the time the lamps are being trimmed there shall — [still] be a burning of the incense. For, if you would not interpret thus, [how will you account for 'at dusk'], as it is written: And when Aaron lighteth the lamps at dusk, he shall burn it.¹ Would you say here too that he shall first light the lamps and afterwards offer up the incense due at dusk? And if you will say, 'Indeed, so it is,' but has it not been taught:² From evening to morning,³ i.e., provide a sufficient quantity [of oil] that it may burn all night from evening to morning; or, according to another interpretation: 'From evening to morning', i.e., there is no service which is proper [to be performed] 'from evening to morning' except this.⁴ What then the Divine Law intends is that at the time of the lighting there shall [still] be a burning of the incense. Here also: at the time of the trimming there shall [still] be a burning of the incense. And Abba Saul?⁵ It is different there, because Scripture Says: otho [it].⁶ R. Papa said: This⁷ is no difficulty. The one account agrees with the Sages, the other with Abba Saul.⁸ How do you place the matter now: Our Mishnah in accord with the Sages, and [the Mishnah of] the count in accord with Abba Saul? Then consider the second part:⁹ They brought to him the daily sacrifice. He made the incision and another finished the slaughtering for him. He entered to burn the incense and to trim the lamps.¹⁰ That is in accord with the Sages. The beginning and the end [is then] in accord with the Sages and the middle in accord with Abba Saul?¹¹ — R. Papa will tell you: Yes, the beginning and end are in accord with the Sages and the middle with Abba Saul.¹² It is clear why Abaye does not agree with [the interpretation of] R. Papa: because he will not explain the first and last part [of the Mishnah] as being in accord with the Sages, whilst the middle with Abba Saul. But why does not R. Papa take Abaye's point of view? He will tell you: Would he [the Tanna] teach first¹³ of the trimming of two lamps and only afterwards¹⁴ of the trimming of five lamps? And Abaye? — He will tell you: First he teaches in a general fashion [of the obligation of the high priest to be occupied during the seven days],¹⁵ and afterwards he describes the order [of the service].¹⁶

The text [above states]: He came to the north-eastern corner, and sprinkled the east and the north; then [as he came to] the south-western corner, he sprinkled the west and south, and in connection with that it was taught that R. Simeon of Mizpah had this changed in Tamid. As he came to the north-eastern corner he sprinkled the east and north; then as he came to the south-western corner he sprinkled the west and afterwards the south.¹⁷ What is the reason of R. Simeon of Mizpah? — R. Johanan in the name of one of the school of R. Jannai said: Scripture said, And one he-goat for a sin-offering unto the Lord: it shall be offered beside the continual burnt-offering, and the drink-offering thereof.¹⁸ It¹⁹ is a burnt-offering and the Divine Law²⁰ says, Deal with it as with a sin-offering — How is that to be done? He sprinkles one in such a manner as to constitute two [sprinklings], as is prescribed for a burnt-offering and he sprinkles two separate ones as is prescribed for the sin-offering. But let him make two sprinklings in such a manner as to constitute four, as is prescribed for a burnt-offering, and four full sprinklings as is prescribed for a sin-offering? — We do not find anywhere that blood brings atonement and then brings atonement again. But we do find blood, half of which is sprinkled after the manner of a sin-offering, and the other half after the manner of a burnt-offering? What you must of needs [say is] that Scripture has brought them under the same category! Here too one might say 'of needs Scripture has brought them under one category'? — Here it is a case of merely 'splitting' the sprinkling.²¹ But let him sprinkle one so as to constitute two below, as is prescribed for a burnt-offering and two separate sprinklings above as is prescribed for sin-offerings?²² — We do not find that any blood is sprinkled, half above, and half below. Not indeed? Have we not learnt: He sprinkled thereof once upwards, and seven times downwards? That was done ke-mazlif [like the movement of swinging a whip]. What does 'ke-mazlif' mean? Rab Judah showed it by [imitating the movements of] a lasher.²³ But [do we] not [find any blood sprinkled half above and half below]? surely we have learnt: He sprinkled thereof upon the tohar of the altar seven times.²⁴ Don't you think it means upon the middle [of the front] of the altar, as people say 'the noon-light' shines, meaning by 'tihara' the middle of the day? — Rabbah b. Shila said: No, it refers

(5) How does he meet this argument?

(6) Ex. XXVII, 21. Only this ('it') may be done from evening to morning and no other work, so that you are compelled to give this interpretation to the text, but with regard to the verse dealing with the trimming, no such necessity arises.

(7) He refers to the question from the apparent contradiction of the two Mishnahs in Yoma — our Mishnah and the one infra 25a.

to the top of the altar itself,¹ for it is written: And the like of the very heaven for clearness.² Why does he just sprinkle first as due with the burnt-offering, and afterwards as due with the sin-offering? Let him first sprinkle as due in case of a sin-offering and after that as due with a burnt-offering! — Because it³ is a burnt-offering, it comes first.⁴ And why does he just sprinkle north-east and south-west. Let him sprinkle south-east and then north-west? — I will tell you: The burnt-offering requires the [projecting] base⁵ [of the altar], and the south-eastern corner has no [projecting] base. — Why does he sprinkle first north-east and then south-west, let him sprinkle south-west and then northeast? — Since a master said:⁶ All the turns you make in the Temple must be to the right, the east, he comes first to that [north-east].⁷ Whence do you know that it is with the burnt-offering that the Divine Law states that it should be offered up in the manner due to a sin-offering? May it not be that it is with regard to the sin-offering⁸ that the Torah says: Offer it up after the manner of the burnt-offerings? — Let not that thought arise in you. For it is written: Beside the continual burnt-offering and the drink-offering thereof.⁹ What does the Divine Law mean by this? Apply the measures [forms] of the sin-offering to the burnt-offering.

We have learnt there: The memuneh¹⁰ said to them: Go and bring a lamb from the Cell of the Lambs.¹¹ Now the Cell of the Lambs was in the north-western corner. Four cells were there: one was the Cell of the Lambs; one the Cell of the Seals;¹² one the Cell of the Fireplace,¹³ and one cell, in which the shewbread was made.¹⁴

They raised an objection: There were four rooms in the Cell of the Fireplace, like small rooms opening into a reception room; two on holy ground, two outside of holy ground; and the ends of the flagstones [in the pavement] indicated the mark between the sacred and the secular grounds. What was their use? The south-western was the Cell of the Lambs for offerings;

He therefore goes on to the north-eastern corner, where he sprinkles. The same order is also followed with a burnt-offering, although there is no ascent of the ramp since the blood thereof was sprinkled below the line round the middle of the altar. He approaches the front of the altar from the south, then turns to the right. [The words 'the east' do not apply here, as the first sprinkling is made, as stated, in the north-east. the south-eastern was the cell wherein they made shewbread; in the north-eastern the Hasmoneans hid the stones of the altar, which the Greek kings had defiled;¹ through the north-western they went down to the chamber of immersion!² — R. Huna said: Who is the authority for [the anonymous Mishnahs in] Middoth? R. Eliezer b. Jacob, for we have learnt: The court of the women was one hundred and thirty-five cubits long and one hundred and thirty-five cubits wide. At its four corners there were four cells. What was their use? The south-eastern was the Cell of the Nazirites, where the Nazirites cooked their peace-offerings, and cut off their hair and cast it under the pot;³ the north-eastern was the Cell of the Wood-shed, wherein priests afflicted with a blemish were standing to examine the wood for worms-for any wood wherein a worm was found is unfit for the altar; the north-western was the Cell of the Lepers; as to the south-western, R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: I forget what its use was, whilst Abba Saul said: There they put wine and oil and it used to be called the Cell of the House of Oils.⁴ It may also be proved by reasoning that the authority for [the anonymous Mishnahs in] Middoth is R. Eliezer b. Jacob, for we have learnt: All the walls that were there [in the Temple] were high with the exception of the eastern wall, because the priest who burns the heifer stands on the Mount of Olives and looks towards the entrance of the Temple at the time the blood [of the heifer] is sprinkled.⁵

And we have learnt: All the entrances that were there; were twenty cubits high and ten cubits wide.⁶ And we have learnt: Inside this⁷ was the Soreg [a railing of lattice work].⁸ And we have learnt: Inside this was the Hel [rampart],⁹ ten cubits broad. There were twelve steps there,¹⁰ the height of each step was half a cubit and the depth of each step was half a cubit. [Furthermore]: Fifteen steps which led from the Court of the Israelites to the Court of the Women, the height and depth of each step being half a cubit.¹¹ [Furthermore we learnt]: Between the Hall¹² and the altar there were twenty-two cubits, there were twelve steps, the height and depth of each half a cubit;¹³ and we have learnt: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: There¹⁴ was a step one cubit high and the platform¹⁵ was set thereon and on it were three steps half a cubit high each.¹⁶ Now, if you can say that the authority for the anonymous¹⁷ [Mishnahs in Tamid] is R. Eliezer b. Jacob then it will be quite right, because according to him the door is concealed;¹⁸ but if you should say that it is in accord with [the other] Rabbis, there would be left half a cubit through which the door would be visible!¹⁹ — R. Adda b. Ahaba said: It is R. Judah, for it has been taught:²⁰ R. Judah said: The altar was placed exactly in the centre of the Temple Court, measuring thirty-two cubits;

(4) Mid. II, 5. R. Eliezer b. Jacob's statement, 'I forget what its use was indicates that he was the authority of the anonymous Mishnah.

(5) V. Mid. II, 4. (5) The following statement should make what follows clear. All the entrances of the buildings on the Temple mount were twenty cubits high. Inside the Hel were twelve steps, each half a cubit high. From the Court of the Women to the Court of Israel led fifteen steps, and twelve from the Hall to the Temple. Together thirty-nine steps, each half a cubit high, making nineteen and one half cubits in toto. According to this Tanna one need not assume that the eastern wall was lower, for since the height of the entrance is twenty cubits, there would still remain one half cubit of the door, which the steps (being only nineteen and one half cubits high) could not hide, so that the priest burning the heifer could look directly from the top of the Mount of Olives into the entrance to the Temple through the various entrances which were all exactly one against the other. But since we learnt that the eastern wall was lower, the Mishnah must be in accord with Eliezer b. Jacob, according to whom two and one half cubits were added to the height of the steps, for we have learnt in his name: There was a step, one cubit high, on which stood the platform with three steps of half a cubit height each. If we add that to the nineteen and a half cubits of the combined heights of the steps, we get twenty-two cubits (v. Tosaf. Jesh.) and that height would hide from view the entrance which was only twenty cubits high. The high priest burning the heifer looked westwards from the Mount of Olives, i.e. towards the eastern wall of the Temple, that is why, according to R. Eliezer b. Jacob, the eastern wall had to be lower, and that is the conclusive evidence that the anonymous Mishnah of Tamid is in accord with R. Eliezer.

ten cubits opposite the door of the Temple, eleven cubits toward the north, and eleven cubits toward the south. With the result that the altar was exactly opposite the Temple and its walls.¹ But, if you should consider that the authority for Middoth is in accord with R. Judah, how could the altar possibly have stood in the centre of the Temple? Surely we have learnt: The Temple Court in all had a length of a hundred and eighty-seven cubits and a width of a hundred and thirty-five cubits. From east to west it extended over a hundred and eighty-seven cubits; the space which [lay] Israelites trod was eleven cubits; eleven cubits was the space which the priests trod; the altar occupied thirty-two; between Hall and altar were twenty-two cubits; the Sanctuary a hundred cubits and eleven cubits behind the place of the mercy seat.² From north to south was a hundred and thirty-five cubits; the ramp and the altar occupying sixty-two cubits, from the altar to the rings³ eight cubits; the place of the rings twenty-four; from the rings to the tables four; from the tables to the columns four;⁴ from the columns to the walls of the Temple Court eight cubits and the remainder lay between the ramp and the wall and the place of the columns.⁵ Now if you were to consider that the authority for Middoth is R. Judah, how is it possible that the altar be in the centre of the Temple, since the bigger part of the altar lies towards the south?⁶

(1) The inside of the Temple was twenty cubits, the walls were six cubits in depth, and the height of the altar was nine cubits to which must be added the thirteen and a half cubits rise in the level of the Court of the Israelites where the altar stood making a total of twenty-two and a half cubits; thus the altar would hide the Temple door, hence the lower eastern wall. V. Zeb. 58b.

(2) [An empty space beyond the Holy of Holies, the purpose of which is not stated anywhere.]

(3) They were set in the ground in the slaughter-house, north of the altar, and the necks of the animals were placed in them. The most holy sacrifices were slain on the north side of the altar, Zeb. 47a.

(4) Low columns placed in the ground, to which iron hooks were attached, on which the animals were hung for flaying.

(5) Mid. V, 1, 2.

(6) [The figures given here as from south to north make a total of a hundred and ten cubits. To this must be added the space of four cubits occupied by the table, which is not mentioned here, then leaving a remainder of twenty-one cubits which lay equally between the ramp and the wall and the place of columns. This allows for ten and a half cubits for the space between the ramp (which was on the south of the altar) and the southern wall of the court. Deducting this from sixty-seven and a half cubits which was half the breadth of the court from south to north, we are left with fifty-seven cubits within which lay the ramp, thirty cubits in length, and twenty-seven out of the thirty-cubits of the altar proper, with the result that the larger part of the altar lay in the southern half of the court. V. Rashi.]

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 17a

Must one not rather infer that the authority [for Middoth] is R. Eliezer b. Jacob?¹ That is the right inference.

R. Adda,² the son of R. Isaac said: That cell³ was removed [from both] corners;⁴ to him that came from the north it appeared to be in the south and to him who came from the south it appeared to be in the north — It is to be proved by inference that it lay more in the south-west. Whence [can this be proved]? From a contradiction from [one statement about the] Cell of the Shewbread to [another statement about the] Cell of the Shewbread and the answer given by R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua: 'One teacher considers it as lying to the right, and the other as lying to the left'.⁵

(1) [And the entrance of the Sanctuary was covered from the sight of the priest, who burnt the heifer on the Mount of Olives, by the extra step and not by the altar, for according to him the whole altar lay in the southern half of the court. V. infra 37b.]

(2) R. Adda wishes to reconcile the two contradictory Mishnahs in regard to the position of the Cell of the Lambs.

(3) The Cell of the Lambs.

(4) [Situated on the west side it extended from north to south, though removed from both extremities.]

(5) The Tanna in Tamid (supra 15b) mentions the Cell of the Lambs in the north-west, and assuming that he is counting towards the right, the Cell of the Seals would be in the south-west, the Cell of the Fireplace in the south-east, and the Cell of the Shewbread in the north-east. Against that the objection was raised, viz., the Mishnah in Middoth places the Cell of the Shewbread in the south-east. Whereupon R. Huna said: The Tanna of Middoth counts from the right, whereas the Tanna of Tamid counts from the left. Now, if we say that the Tanna of Tamid, who says that the Cell of the Lambs lay in the north-western corner, admits that it lay more to the south-west, but that it appeared (as the Gemara above has it) to the north-west, and he started in reality counting from the south-west, that will explain the contradictory statements in Tamid and Middoth; but if you say that his statement, the Cell of Lambs lay in the north-western corner, is to be taken literally, there is no sense in the answer, for even if one counted towards the left, that cell would be lying in the south-western corner.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 17b

Now, if you say that it lay in the south-western corner, it will be right that he answers the objection raised from [one statement about] shewbread to [another statement about] shewbread; but if you say it lay in the north-western corner, what sense is there in the answer about the shewbread? Must one not hence infer that it lay in the south-western corner? That is the right inference. But the Master has said: All the turns you make must be to the right, i.e., towards the east?¹ — That [rule] applies to the Temple service, but here it is merely on account of measurement.

FOR THE HIGH PRIEST IS FIRST IN OFFERING A PORTION AND FIRST IN TAKING A PORTION [OF THE SACRIFICES]. Our Rabbis taught: How is he first in offering a portion? He can say: This burnt-offering I shall offer up, this meal-offering I shall offer up. How has he first right in taking a portion? He can say: This sin-offering I am eating, this guilt-offering I am eating. He can take one of the two loaves,² four or five of the shewbread loaves. Rabbi says: Always five, for it is written: And it shall be for Aaron and his sons³ i.e., half for Aaron and half for his sons. This [statement in] itself is difficult. You have said: 'He takes one of the two loaves'. That is in accord with Rabbi, who says: He can take one half. Now say the middle portion: 'Four or five of the shewbread loaves', that is in accord with the Sages who say that he does not take one half. Now say the last portion: Rabbi says: 'Always [he takes] five'. Does, then, the first and last part agree with Rabbi and the middle with the Sages?—Abaye said: The first and the second parts agree with the Sages, and the Sages admit that it is not a proper thing to give the high priest a piece of bread.⁴

(3) Lev. XXIV, 9.

(4) Hence he may take one of the two loaves of Pentecost.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 18a

How is 'four or five' to be taken? — According to the Sages who say:¹ The incoming Mishmar² took six and the outgoing group took six, and there is no fee for the locking of the Temple gates,³ the division is in respect of the twelve loaves. Deduct one from a half, that makes five. Whereas according to R. Judah who says: The incoming Mishmar takes seven, of which two are the fee for locking the Temple gates, and the outgoing division takes five; the division is in respect of ten⁴ loaves, take one off the half, thus he takes four. Raba said: The whole teaching is in accord with Rabbi, but he is of the opinion of R. Judah.⁵ How then does 'four' come in? He should take five? That is no difficulty: In the one case there is a Mishmar which⁶ delayed in the Sanctuary, in the other there is no such Mishmar. If there be a Mishmar which delayed,⁷ so that he would take four of them, the division is in respect of eight loaves; if there is no Mishmar which had delayed, one ought to divide ten, so that the division is in respect of ten loaves, he would take five loaves. If so, then, can Rabbi say: Always five? — That is, indeed, a difficulty. MISHNAH. THEY DELIVERED TO HIM ELDERS FROM THE ELDERS OF THE COURT AND THEY READ BEFORE HIM [THROUGHOUT THE SEVEN DAYS] OUT OF THE ORDER OF THE DAY.⁸ THEY SAID TO HIM, SIR HIGH PRIEST, READ YOU YOURSELF WITH YOUR OWN MOUTH, PERCHANCE YOU HAVE FORGOTTEN OR PERCHANCE YOU HAVE NEVER LEARNT. ON THE EVE OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT IN THE MORNING THEY PLACE HIM AT THE EASTERN GATE AND PASS BEFORE HIM OXEN, RAMS AND SHEEP, THAT HE MAY LEARN TO KNOW AND BECOME FAMILIAR WITH THE SERVICE. THROUGHOUT THE SEVEN DAYS THEY DID NOT WITHHOLD FOOD OR DRINK FROM HIM. BUT ON THE EVE OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT NEAR NIGHTFALL THEY WOULD NOT LET HIM EAT MUCH BECAUSE FOOD BRINGS ABOUT SLEEP.

GEMARA. It is quite right that [they assume] perchance he has forgotten, but that he never learnt, do we ever appoint men of that type? Surely it has been taught: And the priest that is highest among his brethren,⁹ that means he should be highest among his brethren in strength, in beauty, in wisdom, and in riches. Others¹⁰ say: Whence do we know that if he does not possess [any wealth], his brethren, the priests, endow him?¹¹ To teach us that it says: 'And the priest who is great by reason of his brethren',¹² i.e., make him great from what his brethren have?¹³ -R. Joseph said: That is no difficulty. One refers to the first Temple, the other to the second, for R. Assi said: A tarkabful¹⁴ of denars did Martha,¹⁵ the daughter of Boethus give to King Jannai¹⁶ to nominate¹⁷ Joshua ben Gamala as one of the high priests.¹⁸

ON THE EVE OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT IN THE MORNING: A Tanna taught: Also the he-goats. Why has our Tanna not taught he-goats? — Since they are meant for sin[-offerings], he might feel discouraged. If it be so: does not a bullock,¹⁹ too, come for a sin[-offering]? — Since that comes for himself and his brethren the priests, [there is this advantage] that if there be one among his brethren the priests with whom there is something the matter, he would know it and bring him back to repentance, but would he know that with all Israel? Rabina said: This is what the popular proverb means: If your sister's son has been appointed a constable, look out that you pass not before him in the street.²⁰

THROUGHOUT THE SEVEN DAYS THEY DID NOT WITHHOLD etc. It has been taught: R. Judah b. Nakussa said: One fed him [cakes] of fine flour and eggs in order to produce [speedy] elimination. They answered him: Thus you will induce the more excitement.²¹

It has been taught: Symmachus said in the name of R. Meir: One does not feed him either A'B'Y,²² and some say, neither A'B'B'Y,²² and some say neither white wine. Neither A'B'Y, i.e., neither Ethrog [citron], nor Bezim [eggs], nor Yayin yashan [old wine]. And, according to others, no A'B'B'Y, i.e., neither Ethrog, nor Bezim, nor Bassar shamen [fat meat], nor Yayin yashan, some say neither white wine because white wine induces levitical impurity in man.²³ — Our Rabbis taught: To one afflicted with gonorrhoea one assigns food or too many kinds of food as the cause²⁴ of an attack of gonorrhoea. Eleazar b. Phinehas says in the name of R. Judah b. Bathyra: One does not feed him²⁵ either H'G'B'Y or G'B'M, or any other thing that induces impurity. Neither H'G'B'Y, i.e., neither Halab [milk], nor Gebinah [cheese], nor Bezah, nor Yayin: nor G'B'M, i.e., neither megrisen shel pul [soup of pounded beans], nor Basar shamen,, nor Muries²⁶. 'Nor any other matters [foods] that induce impurity' — What is that meant to include? — It is meant to include what our Rabbis taught: Five things induce impurity in man, they are as follows: garlic,

(1) Suk. 56a.

(2) A division of priests, v. Glos. s.v. These divisions changed every Sabbath.

(3) [On Saturday evening, though the gates had been opened on that day by the outgoing division.]

(4) Not the half, as Rabbi would have it.

(5) That the two loaves are never divided.

(6) On festivals all priests irrespective of division came up for service in the Temple and shared in the shewbread. If the festival starts on a Sunday, the guest priests would have to arrive in Jerusalem on the Friday before, since travel on the Sabbath is forbidden. Similarly, if the festival closes on Friday, the priests would have to stay over the Sabbath in Jerusalem. Hence, in either case, they share equally in the shewbread with the priests of the division in service in that particular week. If however, the festival started on a Monday, so that the guest priests might have arrived on Sunday, but instead came on Friday already; or, if the festival closed on Thursday, so that the priests might have returned on Friday, but stayed in Jerusalem until Sunday, such 'delaying' divisions (or guest divisions) were allotted only two loaves whilst the remaining ten loaves were divided between the incoming and outgoing weekly divisions.

(7) And which obtained two loaves, Only eight remain for division — two having paid for the locking of the doors-and the high priest would receive but four.

pepperwort, purslane, eggs, and garden-rocket.

And one went out into the field to gather oroth [herbs]¹ — A Tanna taught in the name of R. Meir: That refers to garden-rocket. R. Johanan said: Why are they called 'oroth'? because they enlighten the eyes.² R. Huna said: If one finds a garden-rocket he should eat it, if he can, and if not he should pass it over his eyes. R. Papa said: That refers to rocket growing on the balk. R. Giddal said in the name of Rab: A guest should not eat eggs nor sleep in the garment of his host.³ Whenever Rab came to Darshis,⁴ he would announce: Who would be mine for a day?⁵ Whenever R. Nahman would come to Shekunzib⁶ he would have it announced: Who will be mine for a day? But has it not been taught:⁷ No man should marry a woman in one country and then go and marry a woman in another country lest they [their children]⁸ might marry one another with the result that a brother would marry his sister or a father his daughter, and one fill all the world with bastardy to which the scriptural passage refers: And the land become full of lewdness?⁹ — I will tell you: [The affairs of] the Rabbis are well-known.¹⁰ But did not Raba say: If one has proposed marriage to a woman and she has consented then she must await seven clean¹¹ days? — The Rabbis informed them before by sending their messenger earlier. Or, if you like, say: They only arranged for private meetings with them, because 'You cannot compare one who has bread in his basket with one who has no bread in his basket'.¹²

MISHNAH. THE ELDERS OF THE COURT HANDED HIM OVER TO THE ELDERS OF THE PRIESTHOOD AND THEY TOOK HIM UP TO THE UPPER CHAMBER TO THE HOUSE OF ABTINAS.¹³ THEY ADJURED HIM, TOOK THEIR LEAVE, AS THEY SAID TO HIM: SIR HIGH PRIEST, WE ARE MESSENGERS OF THE BETH DIN AND YOU ARE OUR MESSENGER AND THE MESSENGER OF THE COURT. WE ADJURE YOU BY HIM THAT MADE HIS NAME TO DWELL IN THIS HOUSE THAT YOU DO NOT CHANGE ANYTHING OF WHAT WE SAID TO YOU.¹⁴ HE TURNED ASIDE AND WEPT AND THEY TURNED ASIDE AND WEPT.¹⁵ IF HE WAS A SAGE HE WOULD EXPOUND, AND IF NOT, THE DISCIPLES OF THE SAGES WOULD EXPOUND BEFORE HIM. IF HE WAS FAMILIAR WITH READING [THE SCRIPTURES] HE WOULD READ. IF NOT THEY WOULD READ BEFORE HIM. FROM WHAT WOULD THEY READ BEFORE HIM? (5) Who would marry me for one day. 'This strange statement, completely contradicted by the saintly character of both Rab (v. 'Er. 100a, Hag. 5a, Keth. 48b, Sanh. 76a) and R. Nahman, has been explained through an account in Babli 76b. King Shapur entertained two guests, Bati b. Toba and Mar Judah. In accordance with Persian custom, he "honoured" them by sending to each a concubine. This gift was rejected by Mar Judah, but accepted by Bar Toba. Rab and R. Nahman, as leaders of their people would find themselves similarly embarrassed by such attention, on the occasion of their official visits to Persian cities. Some princes are known to have taken the refusal of their "gift" as a serious affront. In order to avoid complications, these Rabbis hit upon the device of declaring themselves married, i.e., provided with a wife in the city they visited, going to the length of marrying "for a day" the local wife, thus helping them to escape the royal "gift".' Talmud - Mas. Yoma 19a

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: To teach him¹ the manipulation of hafinah.² R. Papa said: The high priest had two cells. One, the Cell of the Counsellors,³ the other, the Cell of the House of Abtinah;⁴ one to the north, the other to the south. 'One to the north', as we have learnt: Six cells were in the Temple Court, three to the north, three to the south.⁵ Those to the north were the Cell of the Salt, the Cell of Parwah,⁶ the Rinsing Cell. Into the Cell of the Salt the salt for the sacrifice was put; 'The Cell of Parwah', there the hides of the animal-offerings were salted and on its roof was the place of immersion for the high priest on the Day of Atonement; 'The Rinsing Cell': there the inwards of the animal-offerings were rinsed and an incline led from it to the roof of the Parwah Cell. The three to the north were: The Wood-Cell, the Exile Cell,⁷ and the Cell of Hewn Stone. Concerning the Wood-Cell R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: I have forgotten what it was used for, but Abba Saul said: It was the Cell of the high priest and it lay behind the two and the roof of all the three was of the same height. 'The Exile Cell'; there was the Exile cistern, and a wheel was placed above it and from there they drew water for the whole Temple Court. 'The Cell of Hewn Stone'; there the Sanhedrin of Israel was sitting and judging the priests and whosoever was found unfit would put on a black dress and wrap himself in black, go out and go his way. And one in whom no blemish was found would put on a white garment, wrap himself in white, enter the Sanctuary and officiate with his brethren. 'One cell was to the south', as we have learnt.⁸ There were seven gates in the Temple Court, three to the north, three to the south and one to the east. To the south: The Gate of Kindling, next to it the Gate of the Firstlings, the third being the Gate of the Water.⁹ To the east the Nicanor Gate,¹⁰ beside which were two cells, one to the right and the other to the left; the former the Cell of Phinehas, the keeper of the garments and the latter the Cell of the Makers of the Griddle Cakes. To the north: The Gate of the Spark:¹¹ it was a kind of portico with an upper chamber built on top of it, and the priests kept watch above and the Levites below. It had a doorway to the Hel;¹² next to it was the Gate of the offering¹³ and the third was the Gate of the Cell of the Fireplace. And it was further taught: The high priest immersed himself five times and performed ten sanctifications¹⁴ on that day, all of them on holy ground on the roof of the Parwah house, with the exception of this one,¹⁵ which was on profane ground, on top of the Gate¹⁶ which latter was beside his own cell. But, [continues R. Papa], I do not know whether the Cell of the Counsellors was to the north and the Cell of the house of Abtinah to the south, or the Cell of the house of Abtinah to the north and the Cell of the Counsellors to the south. But it could be proven that the Counsellors' Cell was to the south. How? He would get up,¹⁷ relieve nature, immerse himself,¹⁸ turn northward to learn his hafinah practice,¹⁹ enter the Sanctuary and officiate all day at the service; towards evening he would be sprinkled,²⁰ return southward, immerse himself²¹ and rest. But if you were to say that the Counsellors' Cell is to the north, he would then get up, relieve nature,²² turn to the south, immerse himself and learn the hafinah, enter the Sanctuary, perform the service all day, be sprinkled towards evening, return to the south and immerse himself, and then he would have to turn and go to the north to rest. Would we trouble him so much?²³ Why should we not put him to much trouble so that if he be a Sadducee, he will give up; or in order that he become not too overbearing; for if you do not say so, let us place the two [cells] next to each other; or, let one be enough for him.

THEY SAID TO HIM: SIR HIGH PRIEST etc. Shall we say that this²⁴ will be a refutation of R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua, for R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua said: These priests are messengers of the All Merciful God. For if you were to say they are our own messengers, is there anything that we ourselves are unable to perform¹ and our messengers can perform?² — Rather this is what they said to him: We adjure you according to our mind and in the mind of the Beth din.³

HE TURNED ASIDE AND WEPT AND THEY TURNED ASIDE AND WEPT. He turned aside and wept because they suspected him of being a Sadducee,⁴ and they turned aside and wept, for R. Joshua b. Levi said: Whosoever suspects good folks will suffer [for it] on his own body.⁵ Why was all this [solemn adjuration] necessary? Lest he arrange the incense outside and thus bring it in, in the manner of the Sadducees.⁶

Our Rabbis taught: There was a Sadducee who had arranged the incense without, and then brought it inside.⁷ As he left he was exceedingly glad. On his coming out his father met him and said to him: My son, although we are Sadducees, we are afraid of the Pharisees. He replied: All my life was I aggrieved because of this scriptural verse: For I appear in the cloud upon the ark-cover.⁸ I would say: When shall the opportunity come to my hand so that I might fulfil it.⁹ Now that such opportunity has come to my hand, should I not have fulfilled it? It is reported that it took only a few days until he died and was thrown on the dunghheap and worms came forth from his nose. Some say: He was smitten as he came out [of the Holy of Holies]. For R. Hiyya taught: Some sort of a noise was heard in the Temple Court, for an angel had come and struck him down on his face [to the ground] and his brethren the priests came in and they found the trace as of a calf's foot on his shoulder,¹⁰ as it is written: And their feet were straight feet, and the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot.¹¹

R. ZECHARIAH, THE SON OF KEBUTAL, SAID etc.: R. Hanan, the son of Raba, repeated to Hiyya, the son of Rab in the presence of Rab: R. Zechariah the son of Kefutal, whereupon Rab indicated to him with [a gesture of] the hand: [that it should be] Kebutal. Why did he not speak to him? — He was reading the Shema'.¹² But is such [interruption] permitted, has not R. Isaac b. Samuel b. Martha said: He who reads the Shema' may neither blink with his eyes, nor gesticulate with his lips, nor point with his fingers; and it has also been taught: R. Eleazar Hisma said concerning him who whilst reading the Shema' blinks with his eyes, gesticulates with his lips or points with his fingers, Scripture has said: Thou hast not called upon me, O Jacob?¹³ — There is no difficulty; one view refers to the first portion of the Shema', the other to the second portion.¹⁴

Our Rabbis have taught: And thou shalt speak of them,¹⁵ 'of them', but not during prayer;¹⁶ of them thou mayest speak, but not of other things.¹⁷ R. Aha said: 'And thou shalt speak of them', i.e. make them a regular programme, and not a casual topic. Raba said: One who engages in profane talk transgresses a positive command, for it is written: 'And thou shalt speak of them', 'of them', but not of other matters. R. Aha b. Jacob said: He transgresses against a prohibition, for it is said: All things toil to weariness; man cannot utter it.¹⁸

MISHNAH. IF HE SOUGHT TO SLUMBER, YOUNG¹⁹ PRIESTS WOULD SNAP THEIR MIDDLE FINGER²⁰ BEFORE HIM AND SAY: SIR HIGH PRIEST, ARISE AND DRIVE THE SLEEP AWAY²¹ THIS ONCE ON THE PAVEMENT. THEY WOULD KEEP HIM AMUSED UNTIL THE TIME FOR THE SLAUGHTERING [OF THE DAILY MORNING OFFERING] WOULD APPROACH.

GEMARA. What is 'zeredah?' — Rab Judah said: The rival of this one, which is it? the thumb.²² R. Huna demonstrated it and its sound could be heard in the whole academy.

AND THEY WOULD SAY: SIR HIGH PRIEST, ARISE AND DRIVE THE SLEEP AWAY THIS ONCE. R. Isaac said: [Show us] something new.²³ What was that? — They said to him: Show us the kidah.²⁴

AND THEY WOULD KEEP HIM AMUSED UNTIL THE TIME FOR THE SLAUGHTERING WOULD APPROACH. A Tanna taught: They kept him amused neither with the harp nor with the lyre, but with the mouth. What were they singing? Except the Lord build a house, they labour in vain that build it.²⁵ Some of the worthiest of Jerusalem²⁶ did not go to sleep all the night in order that the high priest might hear the reverberating noise,²⁷ so that sleep should not overcome him suddenly. It has been taught: Abba Saul said: Also in the country²⁸ they used to do so²⁹ in memory of the Temple, but they used to commit sin.³⁰ Abaye, or, as some say, R. Nahman b. Isaac, interpreted that to refer to Nehardea. For Elijah said to Rab Judah, the brother of R. Sila the Pious: You have said: Why has not Messiah come? Now to-day is the Day of Atonement and yet how many virgins were embraced in Nehardea! He answered: What did the Holy One, blessed be He, say? — He answered:

(1) V. Ned. 35a. Prohibiting the making of gestures whilst reading the Shema'.

(2) Permitting the making of gestures.

(3) [He is addressed as 'Our Messenger' only in respect of this adjuration, i.e., to impress on him that he must take the oath in the sense as understood by them. (V. Ned. 24b-25a).]

(4) The Sadducees held that the high priest should prepare the incense on the fire pan before entering the Holy of Holies so that he would enter it with the pan as smoke. Many priests were suspected of adhering to that sect, hence the necessity of that solemn adjuration that the high priest would make no change.

(5) The text for this teaching is Ex. IV, I and 6. Moses had 'suspected' Israel of disbelieving the message of the Lord, when he would bring it to them, hence he was smitten with leprosy. But the leprosy there was neither meant as punishment, nor abiding, the verses are used illustratively rather than logically for the present purpose.

(6) V. infra 53a.

(7) Into the Holy 'of Holies.

(8) Lev. XVI, 2.

(9) The Sadducees interpreted the passage: For I appear in the cloud, as if it said: For I am to be seen only with the cloud (of the incense) upon the ark-cover. The whole verse, according to them is to mean: Let him not come into the holy place except with the cloud (of incense), for only thus, with the cloud, am I to be seen on the ark-cover. Hence the Sadducees' effort to enter the Holy of Holies with the fire pan as smoke, prepared and lit outside.

(10) [The high priest, in coming out of the Holy of Holies, walked backward so as not to turn his back on the Holy of Holies (v. infra 52b). When he reached the threshold and his back first emerged behind the curtain, the angel who was outside the curtain struck him on his back between the shoulders and threw him down, making him fall forward into the Holy of Holies with his face to the ground. There he lay till his brother priests came and threw him out. Cf. J. Yoma, I, 5. Lauterbach J.Z. HUCA IV, p. 193.]

(11) Ezek. I, 7. That trace is the 'evidence' that an angel had struck him, kicked him with his foot. The 'four living creatures' are identified with angels.

(12) V. Glos.

(13) Isa. XLIII, 22.

(14) In the first portion occur the words 'And these words shall be on thy heart', indicating that special devotion is necessary for such prayer to be properly read. Deut. VI, 6. The second portion, ibid XI, 13-22, contains no such special emphasis, hence no such restriction applies.

(15) Deut. VI, 7.

(16) Prayer should be silent.

(17) Loose talk, prattle.

(18) Eccl. I, 8. 'Cannot', i.e., 'ought not', i.e., 'must not',

(19) Lit., 'flowers' then 'young men' fig., in Job XXX, 12 the word is used contemptuously: Upon my right hand rises the brood.

(20) Zeredah is the middle finger, Tosef. Men, 35b as against Rashi a.l. Jastrow would derive it from zarad (be rough, in sound), thus 'the snapping finger'. Baneth (Mo'ed, a.l.) would connect it with 'strideo' (Engl. a 'strident' note). But since 'makkeh' is used for playing on a musical instrument, it may be that 'they played before him with the snapping finger', to keep him amused: or, cf. the Roman 'crepitus digitorum', it may have been a sign of command: Arise!

(21) 'Pug' means to stop. Lam. II, 18 thus 'remove', thus 'remove sleep'. The pavement was cool for his naked feet.

(22) Phonetic play: the match to this (the middle finger) or the nearest to this (the index finger), what is it? The thumb, i.e., the sound is produced with these two fingers (Jast.).

(23) על חדת lit., 'for something new explaining אחת' this once' in the Mishnah.

(24) Pressing both big toes against the floor, bowing and kissing the pavement, and rising without moving the feet — this difficult performance was called the kidah-the bowing to the ground.

(25) Ps. CXXVII, 1. By implication: Except your service will be motivated by reverence for God, it will be in vain.

(26) נקיי-הדעת שבירושלים 'the nobility of Jerusalem' designated also יקירי ירושלים v. Klein מדעי היהדות I (1926) p. 74ff.]

(27) Of the people awake around him, singing and amusing him.

(28) Lit., 'border-towns', then: the country outside Jerusalem.

(29) Stay up all night before the Day of Atonement.

(30) Intimacy developed between men and women.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 20a

Sin coucheth at the door.¹ — What about Satan? — He answered: Satan has no permission to act as accuser on the Day of Atonement. Whence [is that derived]? — Rama b. Hama said: Hasatan² in numerical value is three hundred and sixty-four, that means: on three hundred and sixty-four days he has permission to act as accuser, but on the Day of Atonement he has no permission to act as accuser.

MISHNAH. EVERY DAY ONE WOULD REMOVE³ [THE ASHES FROM] THE ALTAR AT KERI'ATH HA-GE'BER OR ABOUT THAT TIME, EITHER BEFORE OR AFTER. BUT ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT AT MIDNIGHT,⁴ AND ON THE FEASTS AT THE FIRST WATCH,⁵ AND BEFORE THE COCKCROW APPROACHED THE TEMPLE COURT WAS FULL OF ISRAELITES. GEMARA. We have learnt elsewhere: If limbs [of animal offerings] burst off from upon the altar before midnight, they must be put back and the law of Me'ilah⁶ applies to them; if they sprang off the altar after midnight, they need not be put back and the law of Me'ilah does not apply to them.⁷ Whence do we know that?⁸ — Rab said: One scriptural verse says: All night and . . . he shall make smoke⁹ and another passage says: All night . . . and he shall take up [the ashes],¹⁰ how is that? Divide [the night] half of it for smoking and the other half for taking up [of the ashes].¹¹

R. Kahana raised an objection: EVERY DAY ONE WOULD REMOVE THE ASHES FROM THE ALTAR AT COCKCROW OR ABOUT THAT TIME, EITHER BEFORE OR AFTER. BUT ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT AT MIDNIGHT AND ON THE FEASTS AT THE FIRST WATCH: Now

(1) Gen. IV, 7. Overcoming people against their better intentions.

(2) The Satan.

(3) Lev. VI, 3: And the priest . . . shall take up the ashes whereto the fire hath consumed the burnt-offering on the altar, and he shall put them beside the altar. In reality one did not remove all the ashes, but a handful. The rest was swept together on top of the altar and formed gradually a cone or 'apple', (tapuah ha-mizbeah) which was considered an ornament. It was removed only when it occupied too much room: And he . . . shall carry forth the ashes without the camp unto a clean place (ibid. 4).

(4) To keep the high priest busy. This part of the work need not have been done by him, as Tosaf. Zeb. 86b proves.

(5) As to the watch, there is a diversity of opinion in Ber. 3a, some dividing the night into three, others into four such watches.

(6) Me'ilah is the law concerning the unlawful use of sacred property; ma'al means 'commit a trespass' and refers to the use or appropriation of anything that belongs to the altar, to the Sanctuary, to God. If me'ilah has been committed by error, there is reparation and a guilt-offering: If one commit a trespass and sin through error, then he shall bring his forfeit to the Lord, a ram without blemish . . . for a guilt-offering, and he shall make restitution for that which he hath done amiss . . . and shall add the fifth part thereto (Lev. V, 15-16).

(7) Zeb. 86a.

(8) That by midnight the limbs are considered consumed and treated as ashes.

(9) Lev. VI, 2-5. It is a loose combination of passages.

(10) In reality the smoking, mentioned at the end, might be assumed to take place at the end. The argument here is from the facts back to some support in the text.

(11) Any limb bursting off after midnight is regarded as consumed and can be removed as ashes.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 20b

if the thought should arise in you that midnight is a time fixed by the Torah, how could it be anticipated [or postponed]?¹ — Rather said R. Johanan: By mere logical conclusion from the text 'All the night' would I not know that it means until the morning, why then the teaching 'until the morning'? Add another morning to the 'morning of the night',² Hence every day one would remove the ashes at cockcrow, either before or after being ample [time]. On the Day of Atonement, when the high priest is weak, we do it about midnight and on the Feasts when many Israelites are present and many sacrifices³ are offered we do it from the first watch, as indeed the reason therefore is indicated: BEFORE THE COCKCROW APPROACHED, THE TEMPLE COURT WAS FULL OF ISRAELITES. What does 'keri'ath ha-geber'⁴ mean? — Rab said: The call of a man,⁵ R. Shila: The call of the cock. Rab came to the place of R. Shila, when there happened to be no interpreter⁶ to stand next to R. Shila, so Rab took the stand next to him and interpreted 'keriath hageber' as 'the call of the man'. R. Shila said to him: Would you, Sir, interpret it as: Cockcrow! Rab replied: 'A flute is musical to nobles, but give it to weavers, they will not accept it'.⁷ When I stood before R. Hiyya and interpreted 'keriath ha-geber' as the 'call of the man' he did not object to it and you say to me: Say, perhaps, the cock's crow! He said: Sir, you are Rab, would you sit down, Sir!⁸ He replied: People say: If you have hired yourself away [to someone] pull his wool!⁹ Some say: Thus did he reply to him: One may promote a man in holy things, but not demote¹⁰ him. There is a teaching in accordance with Rab, and there is also a teaching in accord with R. Shila. There is a teaching in accord with Rab: What does Gebini the Temple crier call out: Arise, ye priests for your service, Levites for your platform, Israel for your post! And his voice was audible for three parasangs. It happened that King Agrippa who came along travelling, heard his voice from three parasangs, and as he came home, he sent gifts to him. Nevertheless, the high priest is more excellent than even he, for the Master said:¹¹ It has happened already that when he prayed 'Oh Lord' that his voice was heard in Jericho, and Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: From Jerusalem to Jericho is a distance of ten parasangs:¹² and although here there is weakness,¹³ and there none, and here it is day and there night;¹⁴ for R. Levi said: Why is the voice of man not heard by day as it is heard by night? Because of the revolution¹⁵ of the sun which saws in the sky like a carpenter sawing cedars. Those sunmotes are called 'la',¹⁶ and with reference to them Nebuchadnezzar said:¹⁷ And all the inhabitants of the world are considered as 'la'. Our Rabbis taught: Were it not for the revolution of the sun, the sound of the tumult of Rome would be heard: and were it not for the sound of the tumult of Rome, the sound of the revolution of the sun would be heard.

Our Rabbis taught : There are three voices¹⁸ going from one end of the world to the other: The sound of the revolution of the sun; the sound of the tumult of Rome, and the sound of the soul as it leaves the body. Some say also the sound of childbirth

- (1) [Since before midnight it is not considered consumed. Rashi omits 'or postponed' which is bracketed in cur. edd. Tosaf. retains it explaining it on the principle that 'the zealous perform a religious duty as early as possible'.]
- (2) The morning of the night' is the dawn. The additional morning is the margin of before and after the cockcrow.
- (3) Since there were many ashes and they had all to be removed for the 'apple' to be imposing, they started earlier on these days.
- (4) The call of 'geber'. That word means in Hebrew both 'man' and 'cock'. Hence it may mean that the work started at cockcrow or as soon as the man (officer) called them in the morning.
- (5) The officer summoned all, priests, Levites, and Israelites, to their respective duties.
- (6) Amora (v. Glos.). The Rabbi taught in Hebrew, which he spoke to the interpreter. The latter translated the lecture into Aramaic, the language of the people, as against Hebrew, more and more the language of the scholars (Rashi).
- (7) I.e., fools would criticize, where men of taste admire.
- (8) Do not continue as my interpreter. You are too big to serve me.
- (9) Having undertaken the task, I will complete it, unconcerned about questions of dignity.
- (10) The next interpreter may know very little and it would be a sort of disgrace for you to have to put up with an ignoramus after my service, The emphasis is on the ignoramus, not on any implied self-praise.
- (11) Infra 39b.

and some say also the sound of Ridya.¹ The Sages prayed for the soul as it leaves the body and achieved the stopping [of that cry].

We have learnt in accord with R. Shila: If one starts out on a journey before kerith ha-geber, his blood comes upon his own head!² R. Josiah says: [He should wait] until he has crowed twice, some say: Until he has crowed thrice. What kind of cock? The average type.³

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: When the Israelites come up to the festivals, they stand pressed together,⁴ but they prostrate themselves, with wide spaces [between them], and they extend eleven cubits behind the back wall of the Holy of Holies.⁵ What does that mean? — It means that although they extended eleven cubits behind the back wall of the Holy of Holies, standing pressed together, yet when they prostrated themselves, they prostrated themselves with wide spaces [between them]. This is one of the ten miracles which were wrought in the Temple, for we have learnt: Ten miracles were wrought in the Temple:⁶ no woman miscarried from the scent of the holy flesh; the holy flesh never became putrid; no fly was seen in the slaughter house; no pollution ever befell the high priest on the Day of Atonement; no rain ever quenched the fire of the wood-pile on the altar; neither did the wind overcome the column of smoke that arose therefrom; nor was there ever found any disqualifying defect in the 'Omer⁷ or in the two loaves,⁸ or in the shewbread; though the people stood closely pressed together, they still found wide spaces between them to prostrate themselves; never did serpent or scorpion injure anyone in Jerusalem, nor did any man ever say to his fellow: The place is too narrow for me to stay overnight in Jerusalem.⁹ — He started with [miracles in] the Temple and concludes with [those wrought] in Jerusalem! — There are two more [miracles wrought] in the Temple. For it has been taught: Never did rains quench the fire of the pile of wood on the altar; and as for the smoke arising from the pile of wood, even if all the winds of the world came blowing, they could not divert it from its wonted place. But are there no more? Has not R. Shemaya of Kalnebo¹⁰ taught that the fragments of earthenware¹¹ were swallowed up in the very place [where they were broken];¹² and Abaye said: The crop, the feathers, the ashes removed from the inner altar and from the candlestick were swallowed up in the very place [where they were taken off]? — The three¹³ [referring to] disqualifications were included under one head, hence take off two and add two! But then all [cases of] things swallowed up ought also to be included under one¹⁴ head, so that the count would be one short? — There are also other [miracles], for R. Joshua b. Levi said:¹⁵ A great miracle was wrought with the shewbread, viz., when it was removed it was as fresh as when it was put on, as it was said: To put hot bread in the day it was taken away.¹⁶ But are there no more? Has not R. Levi said: This matter has been handed down as a tradition to us from our forefathers: The place on which the ark stands is not included in the measurement;¹⁷ and has not Rabbanai in the name of Samuel said: The Cherubs¹⁴ were standing by sheer miracle? — The count refers to miracles wrought outside [the Temple], miracles wrought inside are not mentioned. If that be so, what of the shewbread which is also a miracle that happened inside the Temple? — No, that miracle happened outside, for Resh Lakish said: What is the meaning of the passage: Upon the pure table before the Lord;¹⁸ the statement that it is pure implies that it was susceptible to uncleanness.

(1) רַדִּיָּא: name of the angel of rain. In Ta'an. 25b his figure is said to be that of a calf, and according to Rashi it is from this fact that it derives its name, רַדִּיָּא being the Aramaic equivalent of חֹרֶשׁ a ploughing (ox).

(2) Which proves the phrase to mean, cockcrow.

(3) One that crows neither too early nor too late.

(4) Pressed, squeezed together in the Temple. Rashi would have it as a simile of a 'floating mass', immovable in a swaying mob.

(5) Lit., 'House of the Mercy Seat', v. supra p. 73, n. 5.

(6) Another reading has 'unto our forefathers in etc.'

(7) Of new barley offered on the second day of Passover, Lev. XXIII, 10f.

(12) Zeb. 96a.

(13) Of the 'Omer, the two loaves and the shewbread.

(14) Broken earthenware, crop, feathers, ashes. Broken earthenware was counted as one and all the other things swallowed up came as under one head, so that if they were all to be placed on one count, there would be one miracle short of the number.

(15) Hag. 26b.

(16) I Sam. XXI, 7

(17) The Cherubim which Solomon made stood on the floor next to the ark, on the right and left, The spread of their wings was twenty cubits, Since the whole room had no more than twenty cubits, the body of the Cherubs, as separate from the wings, was in the room by miraculous provision. The same applies to the ark.

(18) Lev. XXIV, 6.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 21b

[But surely] it was a wooden vessel, intended for resting, and every wooden vessel intended for resting is not susceptible to uncleanness and sets up a barrier¹ against uncleanness?² Rather does this teach us that the table would be lifted³ up for the gaze of those who came up to the Festivals, with the mark: Behold how beloved you are of God, for it is as fresh when it is taken off as it was when put on, as it was said: 'To put hot bread in the day it was taken away'.⁴

But were there no more [miracles]? Did not R. Oshaia say?⁵ When King Solomon built the Sanctuary, he planted therein all kinds of [trees of] golden delights, which were bringing forth their fruits in their season and as the winds blew at them, they would fall off, as it is written: May his fruits rustle like Lebanon,⁶ and when the foreigners entered the Temple they withered, as it is written: And the flower of Lebanon languishes;⁷ and the Holy One, blessed be He, will in the future restore them, as it is said: It shall blossom abundantly and rejoice, even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it?⁸ -Permanent miracles he does not include in his count. And now that we have come to this [conclusion], the ark and the Cherubim are also permanent miracles.⁹

The Master said: 'And the [smoke arising from the] pile of wood on the altar'. But was there smoke arising from the pile of wood? Has it not been taught: Five things were reported about the fire of the pile of wood: It¹⁰ was lying like a lion, it was as clear as sunlight, its flame was of solid substance, it devoured wet wood like dry wood, and it caused no smoke to arise from it? — What we said [about the smoke] referred to the wood from outside [of the Sanctuary].¹¹ For it has been taught: And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire upon the altar¹² — although the fire comes down from heaven, it is a proper thing to bring fire from outside too.¹³

'Lying like a lion'. But has it not been taught: R. Hanina, deputy high priest, said: I myself have seen it and it was lying like a dog? — This is no contradiction: The first statement refers to the first Temple, the second to the second Temple.¹⁴ But was the fire present at the second Temple?-Surely R. Samuel b. Inia said: What is the meaning of the scriptural verse: And I will take pleasure in it [we-ikabed] and I will be glorified?¹⁵ The traditional reading is 'we-ikabedah', then why is the [letter] 'he' omitted [in the text]? To indicate that in five¹⁶ things the first Sanctuary differed from the second: in the ark, the ark-cover, the Cherubim,¹⁷ the fire, the Shechinah, the Holy Spirit [of Prophecy], and the Urim-we-Thummim [the Oracle Plate]? — I will tell you, They were present, but they were not as helpful [as before].

Our Rabbis taught: There are six different kinds of fire: Fire which eats but does not drink; fire which drinks but does not eat; fire which eats and drinks; fire which consumes dry matter as well as moist matter; and fire which pushes fire away; fire which eats fire. 'Fire which eats but does not drink': that is our fire [water quenches it]; 'which drinks but does not eat': the fever of the sick; 'eats and drinks': that of Elijah, for it is written: And licked up the water that was in the trench;¹⁸ 'eats both dry and moist matter': the fire of the pile of wood; 'fire which pushes other fire away': that of Gabriel;¹⁹ and 'fire which eats fire': that of the Shechinah, for a Master said: He put forth His finger among them and burned them.²⁰ [It is stated above], 'But the smoke arising from the pile of wood, even all the winds of the world could not move it from its place'. But [did not] R. Isaac b. Abdimi Say: 'On the night following²¹ the last day of the [Sukkoth] Festival all were gazing upon the smoke arising from the pile of wood. If it inclined northward, the poor rejoiced and the people of means were sad, because the rains of the coming year would be abundant and their fruits would rot.²² If it inclined southward, the poor were depressed and the men of means rejoiced, for there would be little rain that year and the fruit could be preserved. If it inclined eastwards, all rejoiced;²³ if westwards all were depressed'²⁴ — It merely means that it swayed hither and thither like a tree, but it was not scattered. The Master said: [If it inclined] eastward all rejoiced: westward — all were depressed. There is a contradiction against it: The east wind is always good ' the west wind always bad, the north wind benefits wheat when it has grown to one third [of its usual height], and is bad for olives when they are budding; the south wind is bad for wheat which has grown one third [of its normal size] and good for olives when they are budding and R. Joseph or Mar Zutra said, in connection therewith, as a sign: The table was in the north, and the candlestick in the south,²⁵ i.e., the one [north wind] grows what is good for the table,²⁶ and the other [south wind] what is good for the candlestick?²⁷ — This is no contradiction: the former statement refers to us,²⁸ the latter to them.²⁹ [

(1) חוצץ. The root 'hazaz' means to cut off, to divide, to serve as an intervening object.

(2) Wooden utensils which are not intended to be moved (as e.g., a table) are not only not susceptible to uncleanness, but they form a barrier against uncleanness, effectively preventing its spread. This is inferred from the passage: And upon whatsoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it shall be unclean; whether it be any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or sack (Lev. XI, 32). In this passage sack and vessel of wood are cited together, hence our Sages infer that just as a sack is movable and moved, so uncleanness can befall only such wooden vessels as are movable and moved; whereas a wooden vessel meant to rest (or have things placed thereon) is different and hence unsusceptible.

(3) The table being taken out periodically to be shown to the pilgrims was no longer considered an immovable object and became susceptible to uncleanness, and the miracle consisted in the fact that nevertheless it never actually became unclean,

(10) Either as the simple text suggests, the fire, majestically, quietly; or, as Rashi has it: 'It' refers to a great lump of coal which fell from heaven in the days of Solomon and stayed there until the time of Manasseh; that lump having the form of a lion.

(11) Lit., 'private (man)' — not part of the altar wood, but wood which was brought in addition and unaffected by the special property of the holy fire.

(12) Lev, I, 7.

(13) Infra 53a.

(14) The first Sanctuary was held in great reverence, itself, its priests, its influence. The second came to be held in disrespect. The above tradition may well reflect the attitude towards both, as crystallized in the Aggada. Therefore the very pile of wood 'was lying like a lion' in David's Temple, and appeared 'lying like a dog' in the second.

(23) Because it meant average rain, plenty of fruit, without danger of rotting so that the merchants could charge moderate prices.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 22a

CHAPTER II

MISHNAH. ORIGINALLY WHOSOEVER¹ DESIRED TO REMOVE [THE ASHES FROM] THE ALTAR DID SO. IF THEY WERE MANY, THEY WOULD RUN AND MOUNT THE RAMP² [OF THE ALTAR] AND HE THAT CAME FIRST WITHIN FOUR CUBITS³ OBTAINED THE PRIVILEGE. IF TWO WERE EVEN, THE OFFICER⁴ WOULD SAY TO THEM [ALL:]⁵ RAISE THE FINGER!⁶ AND HOW MANY DID THEY PUT FORTH? ONE OR⁷ TWO BUT ONE DID NOT PUT FORTH THE THUMB IN THE TEMPLE.⁸ IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT TWO WERE EVEN AS THEY RAN TO MOUNT THE RAMP. ONE OF THEM PUSHED HIS FELLOW WHO FELL AND BROKE HIS LEG. WHEN THE COURT SAW THAT THEY INCURRED DANGER, THEY ORDAINED THAT THE ALTAR BE CLEARED ONLY BY COUNT. THERE WERE FOUR COUNTS. THIS IS THE FIRST COUNT.

GEMARA. But why did our Rabbis not establish the count for this service from the beginning? They thought, Since it was a night service, it would not be considered so precious and they [many priests] would not come. But when they saw that [many] were coming and incurred danger,⁹ they arranged the count. But the burning on the altar of the limbs and fat-pieces is also a night service, and yet our Rabbis arranged a count for it? — It is rather the end of the service of the day.¹⁰ But the other¹¹ too is the beginning of the service of the day, for R. Johanan said: If he sanctified his hands [by washing]¹² for clearing the ashes off the altar he need not in the morning sanctify them again,¹³ because he has sanctified them already from the beginning of the service?¹⁴ — Say: Because he has from the beginning¹⁵ sanctified his hands for the service. Some say:¹⁶ First they [the Rabbis] believed that since [many of them] are overcome by sleep, they would not come [to this night service], but when they saw they were coming and incurring danger, our Rabbis arranged for the count. But with the burning of the limbs and fat-pieces, [taking also place at a time when] they are also overcome by sleep and yet our Rabbis arranged for a count? There is a difference between going to sleep and rising from sleep.¹⁷

But was the arrangement due to that consideration, was it not rather due to another consideration, for it has been taught:¹⁸ He who obtained the task of clearing the altar of the ashes thereby also obtained the ordering of the pile of wood on the altar and of the two pieces of wood?¹⁹ — R. Ashi said: There were two arrangements. First they [the Rabbis] opined that they would not come [at night], but when they saw that the priests did come and incurred danger, they arranged for the count. When the count had been arranged, they did not come, for they said: ‘Who can tell whether the lot will fall on me’ [therefore] they [the Rabbis] arranged that he who had obtained the task of clearing the ashes off the altar, should thereby also obtain the task of arranging the piles of wood and the two pieces of wood, in order that they might come and submit to the count.

IF THEY WERE MANY etc.: R. Papa said: It is obvious to me [that within four cubits does] not [refer to] the four cubits on the floor,²⁰ because we learnt: THEY WOULD RUN AND MOUNT THE RAMP; neither does it mean the first²¹ [four cubits], because we learnt: THEY WOULD RUN AND MOUNT THE RAMP, and after that: HE THAT CAME FIRST WITHIN FOUR CUBITS; neither does it mean [four cubits] in the middle because this is not clearly indicated; hence it is self-evident that it means [four cubits] off the altar. But R. Papa asked: Do these four cubits, of which we have spoken, include the one cubit of the [projecting] base and the one cubit of the gallery,²²

(1) There were twenty-four divisions (Mishmaroth) of the priests, each division (Mishmar, v. Glos.) consisting of four to nine families (Bate Aboth). Every week another division did service in the Sanctuary, being relieved on the Sabbath. During the week they distributed the service among the families. (V. Tosef. Ta'an. II.) Any one among the family (Beth-Ab, v. Glos.) whose turn came on that day, could originally, if he so desired, remove the ashes from the altar.

(2) The ramp, at the south of the altar, led up to it. Its length was thirty-two cubits.

(3) Off the altar.

(4) Memuneh. Lit., ‘the appointed one’ general term for temple official of high rank. Here the officer in charge of the count; v. Shek. V, 1.

(5) Not to the two alone, but to all that were present.

(6) So that the decision would be reached by the count. The officer would place them in a (circular) queue, take the mitre off one of them, and after having named a number, would start counting from that man by the fingers put forth. The priest with whom the number was reached, secured the task.

(7) There may be some older, weaker, or sick priests for whom it was inconvenient to put one finger forth and hold it aloft until the count was over. Whenever one such handicapped priest was present, the officer would require all to put forth two fingers, which is less of an effort.

(8) A trickster foreseeing where the count would end, might place his index-finger at some distance from the thumb, so that the officer would count his two fingers as belonging to two people, with the result that the count would be wrong and designed to serve the trickster's end.

(9) By racing together, they might push one another down.

(10) And so considered important by the priests.

(11) The removal of the ashes.

(12) V. Ex. XXX, 19.

(13) Unless he should leave the Temple, when another sanctification by washing would be due.

(14) Hence it is the beginning of the service, and the argument is void.

(15) Interpret R. Johanan's word to mean: He sanctified himself from the beginning (during the night) for the service.

(16) In answer to the question: why was this count not arranged from the very first?

(17) A man will find it easier to postpone the hour of sleep than to rise from sleep early in the morning (for the purpose of clearing the altar of the ashes).

(18) Infra 28a.

(19) Two logs of wood, placed above the pile of wood on the altar. V. infra 26b. These being considered an important service would require a count.

(20) Before reaching the ramp.

(21) At the foot of the ramp.

(22) Sobeb. Lit., 'a ring', or 'hoop'; here a gallery round the altar for the priest to walk on.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 22b

or does it mean exclusive of the one cubit base and one cubit gallery?¹ — [The question] stands.

IF TWO WERE EVEN, THE OFFICER WOULD SAY TO THEM: RAISE THE FINGER, etc.

A Tanna taught: Put forth your fingers for the count. But let him count them?² — That supports the statement of R. Isaac, for R. Isaac said: It is forbidden to count Israel even for [the purpose of fulfilling] a commandment, as it is written: And he numbered them be-bezek [with pebbles].³ R. Ashi demurred to this: Whence do you know that the word 'bezek' is here used in the sense of being broken [i.e., pebbles], perhaps it is the name of a place, as it is written: And they found Adoni-Bezek in Bezek?⁴ — Rather it is from here: And Saul summoned the people and numbered them with telaim⁵ [sheep].

R. Eleazar said: Whosoever counts Israel, transgresses a [biblical] prohibition, as it is said: Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured.⁶ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: He would transgress two prohibitions, for it is written: 'Which cannot be measured nor numbered'. R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: R. Jonathan raised an objection: It is written: 'Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea,' and it is also written: 'Which cannot be numbered?'⁷ This is no contradiction: Here⁸ it speaks of the time when Israel fulfils the will of the Lord, there of the time when they do not fulfil His will. Rabbi,⁹ on behalf of Abba Jose son of Dosthai, said: This is no contradiction: Here it speaks of [counting done] by human beings, there of counting by Heaven.¹⁰ R. Nehilai b. Idi said in the name of Samuel: As soon as a man is appointed administrator of a community, he becomes rich — First it was written: 'And he counted them by means of pebbles,' and, in the end, 'And he counted them by means of sheep'. But perhaps these sheep were of their own? — Then what is remarkable about it?¹¹

And he strove in the valley.¹² R. Mani said: Because of what happens 'in the valley': When the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Saul: Now go and smite Amalek,¹³ he said: If on account of one person the Torah said: Perform the ceremony of the heifer whose neck is to be broken,¹⁴ how much more [ought consideration to be given] to all these persons! And if human beings sinned, what has the cattle committed; and if the adults have sinned, what have the little ones done?¹⁵ A divine voice came forth and said: Be not righteous overmuch.¹⁶ And when Saul said to Doeg: Turn thou and fall upon the priests,¹⁷ a heavenly voice came forth to say: Be not overmuch wicked.¹⁸

R. Huna said: How little does he whom the Lord supports need to grieve or trouble himself! Saul sinned once and it brought [calamity] upon him, David sinned twice and it did not bring evil upon him — What was the one sin of Saul? The affair with Agag.¹⁹ But there was also the matter with Nob,²⁰ the city of the priests? — [Still] it was because of what happened with Agag that Scripture says: It repenteth Me that I have set up Saul to be king.²¹ What were the two sins of David? — The sin against Uriah²² and that [of counting the people to which] he was enticed.²³ But there was also the matter of Bathsheba?²⁴ — For that he was punished, as it is written, And he shall restore the lamb fourfold:²⁵ the child, Amnon, Tamar and Absalom.²⁶ But for the other sin he was also punished as it is written: So the Lord sent a pestilence upon Israel from the morning even to the time appointed?²⁷ — There his own body was not punished — But in the former case, too, his own body was not punished either?²⁸ Not indeed? He was punished on his own body, for Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: For six months David was smitten with leprosy, the Sanhedrin removed from him, and the Shechinah departed from him, as it is written: Let those that fear Thee return unto me, and they that know Thy testimonies,²⁹ and it is also written: Restore unto me the joy of Thy salvation.³⁰ But Rab said that David also listened to evil talk?³¹ — We hold like Samuel [who says] that David did not do so. And even according to Rab, who says that David listened to calumny, was he not punished for it? For Rab Judah said in the name of Rab. At the time when David said to Mephibosheth: I say: Thou and Ziba divide the land,³² a heavenly voice came forth to say to him: Rehoboam and Jeroboam will divide the Kingdom.

Saul³³ was a year old³⁴ when he began to reign. R. Huna said: Like an infant of one year, who had not tasted the taste of sin. R. Nahman b. Isaac demurred to this: Say perhaps: Like an infant of one year old that is filthy with mud and excrement?³⁵ R. Nahman thereupon was shown a frightening vision in his dream, whereupon he said: I beg your pardon,³⁶ bones of Saul, son of Kish. But he saw again a frightening vision in his dream, whereupon he said: I beg your pardon, bones of Saul, son of Kish,³⁷ King in Israel.

Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: Why did the kingdom of Saul not endure? Because no reproach rested on him,³⁸ for R. Johanan had said in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: One should not appoint any one administrator of a community, unless he carries a basket of reptiles on his back, so that if he became arrogant, one could tell him: Turn around!³⁹

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Why was Saul punished? Because he forewent the honour due to himself, as it is said: But certain base fellows said: 'How shall this man save us?' And they despised him and brought him no present. But he was as one that held his peace,⁴⁰ and it is written [immediately following that]: Then Nahash the Ammonite came up and encamped against Jabesh-gilead.⁴¹ R. Johanan further said in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: Any scholar,

(1) [The altar was constructed with two rebatements of two cubits, one cubit at the base and another at the Sobeb; and R. Papa's query is whether these two cubits are to be included in the four cubits distance, so that the real distance measured in a straight line from the main structure of the altar would be six cubits.]

(6) Hosea II, 1. 'Cannot be numbered' is interpreted-and grammatically there is no solid objection as 'should not, must not be numbered', thus a positive statement becomes a prohibition. The assumption is justified that here again the ultimate basis of the prohibition is not this passage, but the passage is a peg on which to hang the idea. There are more obvious sources of the prohibition known to the disputants.

(7) Ibid. The sand of the sea, however tremendous the number of grains, yet could be counted. Why then the second part of the passage which cannot be numbered'? It is true this verse is divested of its simple meaning, which does not permit this dichotomy. But again the major purpose of the questioner is to drive home a moral.

(8) When Israel fulfils the Lord's commands, it will become infinite, beyond the possibility of a count: if it does not live up to His law, it may, nevertheless, be great in number, but it will be countable.

(9) Another reading: R. Assi. There is no valid objection to the text here.

who does not avenge himself and retain anger like a serpent, is no [real] scholar.¹ But is it not written: Thou shalt not take vengeance nor bear any grudge?² — That refers to monetary affairs, for it has been taught: What is revenge and what is bearing a grudge? If one said to his fellow: 'Lend me your sickle', and he replied 'No', and to-morrow the second comes [to the first] and says: 'Lend me your axe'! and he replies: 'I will not lend it to you, just as you would not lend me your sickle' — that is revenge. And what is bearing a grudge? If one says to his fellow: 'Lend me your axe', he replies 'No', and on the morrow the second asks: 'Lend me your garment', and he answers: 'Here it is. I am not like you who would not lend me [what I asked for]' — that is bearing a grudge. But [does] not [this prohibition apply to] personal affliction? Has it not been taught: Concerning those who are insulted but do not insult others [in revenge], who hear themselves reproached without replying, who [perform good] work out of love of the Lord and rejoice in their sufferings,³ Scripture says: But they that love Him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might?⁴ — [That means,] indeed, that he keeps it in his heart [though without taking action]. But Raba said: He who passes over his retaliations has all his transgressions passed over?⁵ — [That speaks of the case] that an endeavour was made to obtain his reconciliation, and his consent is obtained.

AND HOW MANY DID THEY PUT FORTH? ONE OR TWO. If they may put forth two, why is it necessary to mention that they may put forth one? — R. Hisda said: This is no difficulty: The one speaks of healthy persons, the other of sick ones.⁶ Thus has it been taught: One finger is put forth, but not two. To whom does this rule apply? To a healthy person, but a sick one may put forth even two. But the 'Yehidim'⁷ put forward two and one counts only one thereof.⁸ But has it not been taught: One does not put forth either the third finger or the thumb because of tricksters, and if one had put forth the third finger, it would be counted,⁹ but if one had put forth the thumb it would not be counted, and not alone that but the officer strikes him with the pekia'?'¹⁰ — What does 'it would be counted' mean? Only one. What is pekia'? — Rab said: A madra [chastising whip]. What is madra? R. Papa said: The whip of the Arabs, the head [sting] of which is taken off. — Abaye said: Originally I believed that which we have learnt: Ben Bibai was in charge of "pekia"¹¹ meant, in charge of the wicks, as we have learnt: From the outworn breeches and belts of the priests they used to make 'peki'in' and light them¹² Now that I hear that it was taught: Not that alone, but the officer would strike him with the 'pekia' I understand that 'pekia' means lash.¹³

IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT TWO WERE EVEN AS THEY RAN TO MOUNT THE RAMP. Our Rabbis taught: It once happened that two priests were equal as they ran to mount the ramp and when one of them came first within four cubits of the altar, the other took a knife and thrust it into his heart. R. Zadok stood on the steps of the Hall¹⁴ and said: Our brethren of the house of Israel, hear ye! Behold it says: If one be found slain in the land... then thy elders and judges shall come forth . . .¹⁵ On whose behalf shall we offer the heifer whose neck is to be broken, on behalf of the city or on behalf of the Temple Courts? All the people burst out weeping. The father of the young man came and found him still in convulsions. He said: 'May he be an atonement for you. My son is still in convulsions and the knife has not become unclean.' [His remark] comes to teach you that the cleanness of their vessels was of greater concern to them even than the shedding of blood. Thus is it also said: Moreover Manasseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem from one end to the other.¹⁶

Which event took place first?¹⁷ Would you say that of the bloodshed took place first? Now, if in spite of the bloodshed they did not establish the count, would they have arranged it because of the [incident of the] broken leg? Rather, the [incident of the] broken leg came first — But since they had already arranged a count how was [the affair of the bloodshed] within the four cubits possible? — Rather, the incident of the bloodshed came first, but at first [the Rabbis] thought it was a mere accident; but when however they saw that even without [such unfortunate accidents] they incurred danger, they enacted the count.

'R. Zadok stood upon the steps of the Hall and called out: Our brethren of the House of Israel, hear ye! Behold it says: If one be found slain in the land.¹⁸ On whose behalf shall we bring the heifer whose neck is to be broken, on behalf of the city or of the Temple Courts?' But does [the community of] Jerusalem bring a heifer whose neck is to be broken? Surely it has been taught: Ten things were said concerning Jerusalem and this is one of them —

(1) Maharsha interprets this statement by reference to Gen. III, 15: And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; they shall bruise thy head and thou shalt bruise their heel. The man will endeavour to crush the serpent so as to deprive it of its life: whereas the serpent retaliates by bruising only the heel, a non-vital part of the human body. Thus, 'serpent-like' the scholar should retaliate most moderately even when great wrong was done to him. — This proverb may also be a reaction to too humble a scholar, who by reason of his extreme forbearance seemingly encourages impudent and cruel people in their nefarious conduct. — Another suggested interpretation: just as great serpents swallowing their prey, moisten it with so much saliva as to be deprived of a sense of what, subjectively, they are eating, knowing only, objectively, that they are eating something, so should the scholar, against whom a wrong was committed, not endeavour to avenge himself subjectively, but to avenge objectively the wrong that was perpetrated. [Bacher (ZDMG, 1874, p. 6) relates this dictum to the one preceding: Any scholar who does not avenge himself like Nahash (which is the Hebrew for serpent) is no scholar. The reference is to a tradition preserved in a fragment of the Jerusalem Targum on Isa. XI, 2 that the condition made by Nahash for the offered covenant was that the Gileadites remove the injunction from the Torah barring the Ammonites from the congregation of Israel — an injunction which he considered an affront.]

(9) No trickiness is involved here, because the distance between these fingers is too small to mislead the officer into assuming that he saw the fingers of two different persons in the count, but with the thumb a dishonest motive seems obvious, hence both, the disregard and the punishment.

it does not have to bring a heifer whose neck is to be broken.¹ Furthermore: And it be not known who hath smitten him but here it is known who has smitten him?—Rather [he put his question rhetorically] to increase the weeping.²

'The father of the young man came and found the boy in convulsions. He said: "May he be an atonement for you."³ My son is still in convulsions, etc.'" To teach you that they looked upon the purity of their vessels as a graver matter than bloodshed!' [The Scholars in the Academy] asked this question: Was it that bloodshed became a minor matter to them, whereas the purity of their vessels remained in its original importance, or did bloodshed concern them as before but the purity of the vessels became for them of a still graver concern? Come and hear: Because the Talmud adduces 'And also innocent blood did Manasseh shed' that indicates that bloodshed had become a matter of smaller concern to them whilst the purity of the vessels retained its original importance.

Our Rabbis taught: And he shall put off his garments and put on other garments and carry forth the ashes⁴ — from this I might learn even as on the Day of Atonement,⁵ [so] that he put off his holy garments and put on profane garments.⁶ To teach us [the true law] it says: 'And he shall put off his garments and put on other garments, thus comparing the garments he put on with the garments he put off; just as the former are holy garments, so are the latter holy garments. If so, what does [the word] 'other' teach?⁷ [They shall be] inferior to the former. R. Eliezer said: [The words] 'other' and 'he shall carry forth' indicate that priests afflicted with a blemish⁸ are permitted to carry forth the ashes.

The Master said: "'Other garments", i.e. inferior to the former', as the school of R. Ishmael taught: For the school of R. Ishmael taught: One should not offer a cup of wine to one's teacher while wearing the garment wherein one has cooked a dish⁹ for him.

Resh Lakish said: Just as there is diversity of opinion about the carrying forth of the ashes,¹⁰ so there is about clearing them off the altar.¹¹ R. Johanan said: The diversity of opinion applies only to the carrying forth, but as to clearing them off the altar, all agree that this is [regular] service.¹² What is the reason for Resh Lakish's view? He will tell you: If it should enter your mind that this [the clearing of the ashes off the altar] is considered a [regular] service — then you would have a service legitimate in two garments.¹³ And R. Johanan?¹⁴ — The Divine Law revealed the regulation for tunic and breeches, but it includes also mitre and girdle.¹⁵ Then why are these [two specially mentioned]? — ‘Middo bad’ [‘linen garments’] is written [here to indicate] proper measure,¹⁶ ‘miknese bad’ [‘linen breeches’] to teach us in accord with what has been taught:¹⁷ Whence is it known that nothing may be put on before the breeches? Because it is said: ‘And he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh.’ And Resh Lakish? — That the garment must have the proper measure [he infers] from the fact that the Divine Law employs [the word] ‘middo’ [garment, not tunic]; that nothing may be put on before the breeches, he infers from the words: ‘on his flesh’. Shall we say that the point at issue is the same as between the following Tannaim: ‘[And his linen breeches shall he put] on his flesh.’ Why does Scripture say: ‘Shall he put on?’¹⁸ That is meant to include the [obligation of wearing] mitre and girdle for the clearing off of the ashes — this is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Dosa says: That means to include [the rule] that the [four white] garments worn by the high priest on the Day of Atonement may be worn by the common priest [during the remainder of the year].¹⁹ Rabbi said: There are two refutations to this matter. One: the girdle of the high priest²⁰ is different from that of the common priest.²¹ Two: shall garments used at a service of solemn holiness be worn at a service of lesser holiness? — But what, rather, is the significance of ‘yilbash’?

(1) Sot. 45a.

(2) To make them conscious of the horrible nature of the deed perpetrated.

(3) Maharsha explains that since Jerusalem is deprived of the heifer ceremony, which would normally obtain forgiveness for them, the generous father prayed for atonement by the grace of God.

(4) Lev. VI, 4.

(5) When the high priest changed his garments with every different service, cf. infra 70a.

(6) In the case of the high priest he changes from golden garments into linen garments and vice versa. With the ordinary priest however who has no alternate holy garments, the change would be from holy garments into profane ones.

(7) The word ‘other’ is connected with ‘and he shall carry forth’ to which it is placed in juxtaposition in the Hebrew text, thus referring to the priest.

(8) And thus designated ‘other’, i.e., than those who are usually fit for service.

(9) Similarly there should be different garments worn for the service proper and for the removal of the ashes respectively.

(10) As to whether blemished priests may remove them.

(11) That matter depends on the answer to the question, as to whether the removal of the ashes is considered a service or not.

(12) Requiring the putting on of four garments and the ministration of unblemished priests.

(13) Scripture says: He shall put on his linen garments and his linen breeches shall he put upon his flesh. (Lev. VI, 3.) If the removal of the ashes, whereof this passage speaks, were a service, how could Scripture demand only ‘the linen garment’ and the ‘linen breeches i.e., two garments, when a service proper requires four? Since only two garments are required, evidently the removal of the ashes is not considered a service and hence may be performed even by blemished priests, who would not be admissible to service proper!

(14) R. Johanan who considers this a proper service, requiring unblemished priests, how will he account for the contradictory fact that Scripture insists on two garments only.

(15) He explains that in reality four garments are required here, as may be inferred from the parallel passage in Lev. XVI, 4, where as a matter of course ‘mitre and girdle’ are added, the one passage supplementing implicates the other.

(16) He connects ‘middo’ which comes from a root meaning garment, with ‘madad’, which means to measure, i.e., the garment must be of proper measure, for the priest's figure. Resh Lakish infers from the fact that ‘middo’ (garment) is used instead of the usual ‘kethoneth’ (tunic) that a properly fitting garment is required.

(17) Zeb. 35a.

(18) Lev. XVI, 4: The text could have stated ‘He shall put on the holy tunic and the linen breeches on his flesh’. The word ‘yilbash’ (‘he shall put on’) is superfluous. The word ‘yilbash’ is a sort of terminus technicus for complete dress, i.e., the four garments.

(19) [He utilizes yilbash, written here, for the purpose of a gezerah shawah with yilbash mentioned in connection with the four garments put on by the high priest on the Day of Atonement. V. Lev. XVI, 4 to teach this rule.]

(20) Included in the four garments worn by the high priest on the Day of Atonement.

(21) V. supra p. 55, n. 6. So that the ordinary priests could not wear the four garments of the high priests.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 24a

It includes worn-out garments.¹ And he shall leave them there,² that teaches that they must be hidden away. R. Dosa says: They are fit for use by a common priest. What does 'And he shall leave them there' intimate? That he [the high priest] must not use them on another Day of Atonement.³ Now would you not say that this is the subject of their dispute: that one⁴ holds it [the removal of the ashes] to be a service⁵ and the other⁶ does not consider it such?⁷ — No. Everybody agrees it is a service; the point of dispute here is this: One says another scriptural passage is necessary⁸ to include also for this service [the four garments]; the other: no such passage is necessary.⁹

R. Abin asked: How much of the ashes of the altar is to be removed? Shall we infer [the quantity] from the taking off of the tithe,¹⁰ or from what was taken off from the [spoil of] Midian?¹¹ — Come and hear: For R. Hiyya taught: Here¹² the word 'herim' ['he shall take up'] is used and there¹³ the expression 'we-herim' ['and he shall take up'] is used. Just as in the latter case it means taking a handful, so in the former case it means taking a handful.¹⁴

Rab said:¹⁵ There are four services for the performance of which a non-priest [stranger] incurs penalty of death:¹⁶ sprinkling, smoking [the fat],¹⁷ the water libation, and the libation of wine. Levi says: also the removal of the ashes. Thus did Levi also teach us in his Baraitha: Also the removal of the ashes. What is the reason for Rab's view? It is written: And thou and thy sons with thee shall keep the priesthood in everything that pertaineth to the altar, and to that within the veil; and ye shall serve; I give you the priesthood as a service of gift; and the common man that draweth nigh shall be put to death.¹⁸ 'A service of gift', but not a service of removal;¹⁹ 'and you shall serve, i.e., a complete service, not a service followed by another.'²⁰ And Levi?²¹ — The Divine Law included it²² in saying: 'In every thing that pertaineth to the altar.' And Rab?²³ — That is meant to include the seven sprinklings within,²⁴ and those concerning the leper.²⁵

And Levi?²⁶ — He infers [these] from [the fact that instead of] 'the thing', [is written] 'every thing', [that pertaineth]. And Rab?²⁷ — He does not infer aught from 'every thing'.²⁸ But say this: 'In everything that pertaineth to the altar' is a general proposition; 'service of gift' is a specification.²⁹ Now: if a general proposition is followed by a specification, the scope of the proposition is limited by the specification,³⁰ hence the 'service of gift' would be included, but a service of removal would be excluded? — The scriptural text reads:

(1) They may be worn for any service as long as they are wearable, i.e., whole.

(2) Lev. XVI, 23. With reference to the garments worn by the high priest on the Day of Atonement.

(3) This is the end of the Baraitha, 46a.

(4) R. Judah.

(5) And therefore it requires for it all the four garments.

(6) R. Dosa.

(7) And therefore holds that the linen tunic and breeches are sufficient without the mitre and girdle.

(8) Lest one assume that the verse is to be taken literally, that only two garments are required, hence that this is no service proper.

(9) Since Scripture insists on the tunic and breeches it is evidently considered a service, requiring all the four garments.

(10) Num. XVIII, 25, where about one per cent is taken off.

(11) Ibid. XXXI, 28-40, where it is but one-fifth of one per cent.

- (12) Lev. VI, 3.
- (13) Ibid. 8.
- (14) [It is not inferred either from tithe or from the spoil of Midian, but from the handful taken by the priest. This however applies only to the minimum, which may however be exceeded at will (Rashi).]
- (15) Zeb. 112b.
- (16) Although the common man is forbidden to perform any service in the sanctuary, he does not incur the penalty of death in any but the following cases.
- (17) Or 'the handful of the meal-offering'.
- (18) Num. XVIII, 7.
- (19) E.g., the removal of the ashes.
- (20) The Hebrew word עבודת תמה is divided into עבודת תמה so as to read: perfect service, i.e., one complete, without additional functions such as the four services mentioned by Rab. This excludes a service such as slaughtering which is not complete without the rites connected with the sprinkling of the blood that follow it.
- (21) Rab's inferences excluding the removal of the ashes seem to be right?
- (22) The removal of the ashes for the performance of which a non-priest incurs penalty of death.
- (23) Everything that pertaineth obviously includes something else. Unless some other service is intended, Levi proves his case.
- (24) Lev. IV, 6: And sprinkle of the blood seven times before the Lord; ibid. 17. also ibid. XVI, 14.
- (25) Lev. XIV, 51: And he shall take the cedar-wood . . . and sprinkle the house seven times, which may not be considered as part of 'the altar' service; the same applies to the functions referred to in the preceding note.
- (26) Whence does he infer these?
- (27) What does 'everything' suggest to him.
- (28) Lit., 'he does not expound the thing' as everything'.
- (29) Already comprehended in the general proposition.
- (30) This is one of the principles of hermeneutics (kelal u-ferat) according to R. Ishmael, v. Shebu., Sonc. ed., p. 12, n. 9.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 24b

'And to that within the veil . . . and you shall serve',¹ [i.e.] Only within the veil is 'the service of gift'² [included] but not the 'service of removal away',³ but outside [the Temple] even a 'service of removal'⁴ [is included].⁵ But [one could] similarly [argue with regard to the exposition of] 'you shall serve' only within the veil, is a complete service⁶ [included] but not one service which is followed by another service,⁷ but outside, even a service followed by another [is also included]?⁸ — [Scripture, by saying] 'And ye shall serve' has reconnected them.⁹

Raba asked: What is the law regarding [a service of] removal within the Temple?¹⁰ Do we compare it with [a service of removal] within¹¹ [the veil] or with [one] outside [the Temple]? Then he answered the question himself: It is to be compared to [a removal service] within [the veil]. [For Scripture instead of] 'within' [says:] 'And to that within [the veil]'.¹² But then¹³ should the common man who arranged the [shewbread] table be guilty? — There is the arrangement of the censer of frankincense.¹⁴ — Then if he arranges the censers let him incur the penalty!¹⁵ — There is the removal of the censers¹⁶ and the smoking of the incense. Let the common man who put the candlestick in order incur the penalty! — That is to be followed by the putting in of the wick. Then if he put the wick in let him incur that penalty! — There is the adding¹⁶ of the oil. Then if he puts the oil in let him incur that penalty? There is the lighting.¹⁶ Then if he lights it let him incur that penalty! — Lighting is not considered a service. Is it, indeed, not [considered a service]? But it has been taught:¹⁷ And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire upon the altar, and lay wood in order upon the fire¹⁸ — this teaches that the kindling of the wood of the fig-tree¹⁹ must be performed by a priest who is fit [for service] and with garments of ministration.²⁰ The kindling of the fig-wood is considered service, but not the lighting of the candlestick. Then let the common man who puts the pile of wood [on the altar] in order, incur that penalty! — There is the arrangement of the two logs of wood.²¹ — Then if he arranged the two logs of wood, let him incur that penalty? — It is followed by the arranging of the limbs.²² But R. Assi had said in the name of R. Johanan: A common man who arranged the two logs of wood incurred the penalty of death? — In this indeed there is division of opinion,²³ one holding [the arrangement of the two logs of wood] is a complete service, the other holding that it is not a complete service.

There is a teaching in accord with Rab, and there is a teaching in accord with Levi. 'There is the teaching in accord with Rab': These are the services for the performance of which a common man incurs penalty of death: the sprinkling of the blood, both within [the Temple] and within the Holy of Holies: and he who sprinkles the blood of a bird offered as a sin-offering;²⁴ and he who wrings out the blood, and who smokes the bird offered up as a burnt-offering;²⁵ and he who makes the libation of three logs of water or of wine.²⁶ 'There is a teaching in accord with Levi': The services for the performance of which a common man incurs penalty of death are: the removal of the ashes, the seven sprinklings within [the Holy of Holies] and he who offers up on the altar a sacrifice whether fit or unfit. THERE WERE FOUR COUNTS etc.²⁷ Why do they decide by count? [You ask,] 'Why?' As we have explained. Rather: Why did they decide by count once and again?²⁸ — R. Johanan said: To stir up the whole Temple Court, as it is said: We took sweet counsel together, in the house of God we walked be-ragesh [with tumult].²⁹

What garments do they wear when taking the count? R. Nahman said: Common garments, R. Shesheth said: Sacred garments. 'R. Nahman said: Common garments'. For if you were to say these garments were sacred there would be violent men who would serve by force.³⁰ 'R. Shesheth said: Sacred garments'. For if you were to say common garments, it would happen that, out of sheer love [of the service] they would perform it in common clothes.³¹ R. Nahman said: On what ground do I hold my view? Because we have learnt: They delivered them to the Temple sextons, who stripped them of their garments and left them with their breeches only.³²

(1) These words separate the general proposition from the specification, and thus sever the connection with them and render any inference as from one to the other invalid.

(2) [E.g., the sprinkling of the blood and the burning of incense in the Holy of Holies on the Day of Atonement, v. Lev. XVI, 13-14.]

(3) E.g., the taking out of the censer on the Day of Atonement from the Holy of Holies.

(4) [E.g., the removal of the ashes.]

(5) In the services for his performance of which a non-priest incurs the penalty of death.

(6) [E.g., the putting of incense on the fire in the Holy of Holies.]

(7) E.g., the bringing in of the spoon and the censer in the Holy of Holies which must be followed by the burning of the incense.

(8) E.g., the removal of the ashes.

(9) [The waw of עֲבַדְתֶּם connects the general statement and particularization as far as the deduction made from the word itself is concerned, but it does not affect the exposition based as 'a service of gift' which is still governed by the words 'within the veil'.]

(10) E.g., the removal of the ashes of the golden altar and candlestick.

(11) According to Rab there is no difference between service within the veil or outside: a common man becomes guilty of death only if he performs a service of gift, not of removal. But according to Levi he becomes guilty also in case of a service of removal. Hence Raba's question addresses itself to Levi: Do we compare it to the service within the veil, so that the common man performing it would not incur penalty of death, or to service without, when he would incur it?

(12) The letter 'waw is superfluous. It includes also the Temple, hence in case of a gift service, he would incur that penalty there too, and with a removal service he would be exempt as within the veil.

(13) If a common man who performs in the Temple a Service of gift incurs the penalty of death.

(14) After the shewbread is arranged. V. Lev. XXIV, 7. Hence the former is not a complete service, for the performance of which a commoner incurs the penalty of death.

(15) Assuming this to be a 'complete' service, not followed by anything else.

(16) On the following Sabbath, which forms a completion of this service. V. ibid, 8.

- (17) Infra 45a.
 (18) Lev. I, 7.
 (19) Used as kindling wood on the altar, V. Tam. II, 4.
 (20) Hence it is considered a proper service and the commoner performing it should incur the penalty.
 (21) v. infra, 33a.
 (22) Of the Daily continual offering.
 (23) Between Rab who limits the liability to the four he enumerates and R. Johanan who includes the arrangement of the two logs of wood.
 (24) V. Lev. V, 9.
 (25) V. Ibid. I, 15.
 (26) Suk. 48a.
 (27) The text here is corrected in accordance with Bah.
 (28) The Mishnah speaks of four counts.
 (29) Ps. LV, 15. The word, כְּרֹנֶשׁ, usually translated as 'multitude' is here connected with רָנָה, meaning 'to stir up', thus, 'enthusiasm', 'love'.
 (30) Even without having been chosen by count, his being fitly dressed encouraging such forwardness.
 (31) If the lot fell on them.
 (32) Tam. V, 3.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 25a

Don't [you agree] that this refers to those who had obtained part in the day's services by the count?¹ — R. Shesheth said: No, it refers to those who had not obtained part in the day's service by the count.² Thus also does it appear provable by logic. For, if it were to refer to those who were allotted part in the service by count, how could it be stated that they left them the breeches only; surely it has been taught: Whence do we know that nothing may be put on before the breeches? To teach us that it says:³ And breeches of linen shall be on his flesh.⁴ — And the other?⁵ — This is no difficulty: This is what it teaches: Whilst they still wore the common clothes, they put on the holy breeches, after that they removed the common clothes and left them with the [holy] breeches.

Said R. Shesheth: Whence do I hold my view? From what has been taught: The Cell of the Hewn Stone⁶ was [built] in the style of a large basilica. The count took place in the eastern side, with the elder⁷ sitting in the west, and the priests in the form of a spiral figure. The officer came and took the mitre from the head of one of them. One would know then that the count would start from him.⁸ Now, if the thought should arise that the priests [came to the count] in common garment — is there a mitre in common dress? — Yes, there is, as Rab Judah or, as some say, R. Samuel b. Judah reported: A priest for whom his mother made a tunic, could officiate therein at an individual [not community] service.⁹ Abaye said: We can infer from this the Cell of Hewn Stone was [situated] half on holy ground, half on non-holy ground; that the Cell had two doors, one opening on holy ground, the other opening on non — holy ground. For, if the thought should arise in you that the whole of it was on holy ground — how could the elder sit to the west; has not a Master¹⁰ said: Nobody could sit in the Temple Court except the kings of the House of David.¹¹ Furthermore, if you could think that the whole cell was outside holy ground, how could the count take place on its eastern side, is it not required: 'In the house of God we walked with the throng'¹² and this would not be [the house of God]! Hence [the inference is valid]: It is half on holy ground, half on non-holy ground. And if the thought should arise in you that the Cell has but one door opening on holy ground, how could the elder sit to the west, and we have learnt: If the cells are built on non-holy ground and open on holy ground the space within them is holy.¹³ And if the thought should arise in you that it opened into unholy ground how could the count take place in the eastern part [of the Cell];¹⁴ have we not learnt: If they are built on holy ground and open out on non-holy ground, their space within is non-holy, hence you must needs say: the Cell had two doors, one opening on holy ground, the other on non-holy ground.

MISHNAH. THE SECOND COUNT!¹⁵ WHO SHOULD SLAUGHTER [THE DAILY REGULAR OFFERING],¹⁶ WHO SHOULD SPRINKLE THE BLOOD, WHO SHOULD REMOVE THE ASHES FROM THE INNER ALTAR,¹⁷ WHO SHOULD REMOVE THE ASHES FROM THE CANDLESTICK,¹⁸ WHO SHOULD TAKE UP TO THE RAMP THE LIMBS [OF THE OFFERING], THE HEAD AND THE [RIGHT]¹⁹ HIND-LEG, THE TWO FORELEGS, THE TAIL AND THE [LEFT]¹⁹ HIND-LEG, THE BREAST AND THE THROAT,²⁰ THE TWO FLANKS,²¹ THE INWARDS, FINE FLOUR,²² THE CAKES²³ AND THE WINE.²⁴ ALTOGETHER THIRTEEN PRIESTS OBTAINED A TASK.²⁵ BEN AZZAI SAID BEFORE R. AKIBA IN THE NAME OF JOSHUA: IT [THE DAILY OFFERING] WAS OFFERED UP IN THE WAY IT WALKS.²⁶

GEMARA. The question was asked: When they take the count, do they do so for one service or for each individual task? — Come and hear: Four counts were there.²⁷ Now if the thought should arise in you that there was a separate count for each task, there would be need of many counts! — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: This is what [the Mishnah] means: Four times they went in for counting, and on each occasion there were many counts.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 25b

Come and hear: R. Judah said: There was no count for the coal-pan, but the priest who had obtained the task of [smoking] the incense said to his assistant: Obtain with me the privilege of serving the coal-pan.¹ — It is different with incense and coal-pan, because they form together one service. Some argue thus: This is the case only with coal-pan and incense, because they form one service, but all other tasks require individual count!² — [No.] With regard to the coal-pan it is necessary to inform us [that no separate count is required] for the thought could have arisen that because it takes place rarely and enriches,³ therefore a special count should be arranged for it, hence we are taught [that it is not so].

Come and hear: R. Hiyya taught: There was no count for each individual task, the priest who secured the task of [the killing of] the daily burnt-offering drew twelve priests to himself [for the tasks involved]. This proves it.

THE SECOND COUNT: The question was asked: Who receives the blood?⁴ [Do we say that] he who killed? For if you were to say that the one who sprinkles the blood receives it, perhaps in his enthusiasm⁵ he may not receive the whole blood; or does the sprinkler receive it, for if you were to say that he who kills the animal receives the blood, occasionally a non-priest kills [the animal]?⁶ — Come and hear: Ben Katin made twelve spigots for the laver so that his twelve brethren, the priests, who are occupied with the daily regular sacrifice, may simultaneously wash their hands and feet.⁷ Now, if you were to think that he who kills [the animal] also receives its blood there would be thirteen.⁸ Must we not therefore infer therefrom that he who sprinkles receives the blood? This proves it.

R. Aha, the son of Raba said to R. Ashi: We have also learnt thus: He whose lot it was to slaughter it, slaughtered it; he whose lot it was to receive the blood, received it — and then he came to sprinkle it.⁹ This proves it.

BEN 'AZZAI SAID BEFORE R. AKIBA, etc.: Our Rabbis taught: What is 'THE WAY OF ITS WALKING'? The head, right hind-leg, breast and neck, the two fore-legs, the two flanks, the tail and the left hind-leg. R. Jose says: It was offered up in the order in which it is flayed. Which is the order of its being flayed? The head, the right hind-leg, the tail, the left hind-leg, the two flanks, the two fore-legs, the breast, and the neck. R. Akiba says: It was offered up in the order in which it was dissected. Which is the order of the dissection? The head, the right hind-leg, the two forelegs, the breast and the neck, the two flanks, the tail and the left hind-leg. R. Jose the Galilean says: It was offered up in the order of its best parts. Which is the order of its best parts? The head, the [right] hind-leg, the breast and neck, the two flanks, the tail and the [left] hind-leg and the two fore-legs. But is it not written: Even every good piece, the thigh and the shoulder?¹⁰ — That refers to a lean animal:¹¹ Raba said: Both our Tanna¹² and R. Jose the Galilean follow the order of quality of the meat, but one takes into consideration the size [of the limbs], the other the fatness.

Why does the head go together with the [right] hind-leg?¹³ Because the head has many bones; one attaches the [meaty] hindleg to it.

All¹⁴ agree at any rate that the head is offered up first. Whence do we derive this rule? Because it has been taught: Whence do we know that the head and the suet come before all other parts [of the animal]? To teach us that, it says: He shall lay it in order with its head and its suet.¹⁵ And as to the other 'suet',¹⁶

- (1) The incense required two priests: one who carried the incense into the Temple and smoked it, the other who took out the coals from the outer altar, brought them into the Temple, and put them on the inner altar to smoke the incense upon them. V. infra 26a. From here it appears that not every task required a count.
- (2) Which proves that every task requires a count.
- (3) V. infra 26a.
- (4) In a basin for sprinkling purposes.
- (5) Lit., 'his love (for the service)'.
- (6) As deduced from Lev. I, 5; a non-priest may kill the animal, as the priestly functions in connection with an animal-sacrifice begin with the receiving of the blood.
- (7) Infra 37a.
- (8) There were thirteen tasks according to the Mishnah. The slaughtering, however, since even a commoner might perform it, did not require washing of hands and feet even if performed by a priest. But if he who slaughtered it should also receive its blood, he would have to wash his hands too because of the subsequent receiving of the blood.
- (9) Tamid IV, 1.
- (10) Ezek. XXIV, 4. [This shows that the thigh (the hind-leg) and the shoulder (the foreleg) are among the best pieces whereas here they are mentioned last (תֹּם יְשָׁנִים); v. however p. 119, n. 2.]

- (14) Ben 'Azzai, R Jose, R. Akiba, R. Jose the Galilean, whilst basing their order on different considerations, all have the head offered up first.

what does it signify? [It has its meaning] in accordance with what has been taught: How did he do it? He placed the suet upon the open throat and offered it up thus, that being done as a sign of respect for heaven.¹

MISHNAH. THE THIRD COUNT: NOVICES² COME UP AND SUBMIT TO THE COUNT FOR THE INCENSE. THE FOURTH COUNT: NOVICES AND OLD PRIESTS, WHO WILL TAKE UP THE LIMBS³ FROM THE RAMP TO THE ALTAR.

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: Never did a man repeat that,⁴ What is the reason? — Because it enriches. R. Papa said to Abaye: Why [does the incense enrich]? Would one say because Scripture says: They shall put incense before Thee,⁵ and soon after: Bless, Lord, his substance?⁶ If so, then a burnt-offering should also enrich, for there it is written also: And whole burnt-offering upon Thine altar?⁷ He answered: The second is frequent,⁸ the first not. Raba said: You will not find any rabbinical scholar giving decision who is not a descendant from the tribe of Levi or Issachar. 'Of Levi', as it is written: They shall teach Jacob Thine ordinances,⁵ 'of Issachar', as it is written: And of the children of Issachar, men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do.⁹ But mention Judah too, for it is written: Judah is my law-giver?¹⁰ — I am speaking [only] of those [who make conclusions] in accordance with the adopted practice.¹¹

R. Johanan said: No count is arranged for the daily continual evening¹² sacrifice, but the priest who secured the task of offering the continual morning sacrifice also obtains the task of the evening sacrifice. An objection was raised: Just as one arranges a count for it in the morning so is a count arranged for it in the evening? — That was taught in application to the incense.¹³ — But it has been taught: Just as one arranges a count for it¹⁴ [masc.], in the morning, so does one arrange for it, a count in the evening. Read:¹⁵ for it [fem.] — But it has been taught: Just as one arranges a count for it [masc.] in the morning, so is a count arranged for it [masc.] in the evening, and just as one arranges a count for it [fem.] in the morning, so is a count arranged for it¹⁶ [fem.] in the evening! — R. Samuel b. Isaac said: Here we refer to the Sabbath, on which the divisions of the priests are relieved.¹⁷ But on the original assumption¹⁸ there was a larger number of counts? — All came in the morning [for the count]; to some it was allotted for the morning to others, for the evening.

THE FOURTH COUNT: NOVICES AND OLDER PRIESTS etc.: Our Mishnah does not agree with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, for we have learnt: He who brings the limbs up to the ramp also brings them up to the altar.¹⁹ What principle are they disputing? One holds: In the multitude of the people is the king's glory,²⁰ whereas the other is of the opinion that [the distribution of duties among too many] is not good form in the abode of the Shechinah.²¹ Raba said: R. Eliezer b. Jacob does not agree with the view of R. Judah, nor does the latter agree with the view of the former, for, if that were the case there would be too few counts.²² And if you find a teacher who teaches 'five [counts]',

(1) Because the throat is smeared with blood, it would not look respectful enough to offer it up in such condition. Hul. 27b.

(2) Nothing was more desired than the privilege of offering up incense. Hence priests who had already enjoyed that function were excluded from repetition until all their colleagues had the same task bestowed upon them. Hence the officer calls on novices to present themselves for the count.

(3) The limbs of the sacrifice were first placed on the lower part of the ramp, after having been dissected, (Tamid IV, 1, 2) then later carried thence to the altar and burnt there.

(4) The offering up of incense.

(5) Deut. XXXIII, 10.

(6) Ibid. 11.

(7) Ibid. 10.

(8) Sacrifices may be either private or public, hence very frequent. Incense was a community offering, hence limited by law.

(9) I Chron. XII, 33.

(10) E.V. 'sceptre'.

(11) i.e. of practical interpreters and scholars, not of law-makers.

(12) Strictly speaking 'afternoon'.

(13) Because nobody was permitted to repeat that function until all candidates had that privilege bestowed upon them once.

(14) Ketoreth (incense) is of fem. gender, hence the question asked from a text where the word 'lo' (masculine 'for him', 'to his') is used.

(15) Assume that the personal pronoun may be used loosely, or that the text misreported. 'lah' ('to her', 'to it', fem. instead of 'lo', the masculine) being intended.

(16) So that there is a special text for the incense.

(17) The division (Mishmar, v. Glos.) officiating at the continual offering of morning had left by the time the continual offering of dusk was to be attended to.

(18) That there was a special count for the evening sacrifice.

(19) Tamid V, 2.

(20) Prov. XIV, 28.

(21) It might appear as if the service was considered a burden, so that its function had to be distributed among many.

(22) R. Judah omits the count for the coal-pan; according to R. Eliezer there was no special count for the service of carrying the limbs up to the altar, hence, had both accepted each other's view, there would be only three counts. He who taught there were five counts, contradicted both of these Tannaim, each of whom omitted one, though not the same count.

he is in accord with neither R. Eliezer b. Jacob, nor with R. Judah.

MISHNAH. THE CONTInual¹ OFFERING WAS OFFERED UP BY NINE, TEN, ELEVEN OR TWELVE [PRIESTS], NEITHER BY MORE [THAN TWELVE], NOR BY LESS [THAN NINE]. HOW THAT? [THE OFFERING] ITSELF [WAS BROUGHT] UP BY NINE;² AT THE FEAST [OF SUKKOTH] WHEN ONE CARRIED A BOTTLE OF WATER,³ THERE WERE TEN. AT DUSK⁴ BY ELEVEN: [THE OFFERING] ITSELF BY NINE AND TWO MEN WHO CARRIED TWO LOGS⁵ OF WOOD. ON THE SABBATH BY ELEVEN: [THE OFFERING] ITSELF BY NINE WITH TWO MEN HOLDING IN THEIR HAND THE TWO CENSERS OF FRANKINCENSE FOR THE SHEWBREAD.⁶ AND ON THE SABBATH WHICH FELL DURING THE FEAST OF SUKKOTH ONE MAN CARRIED IN HIS HAND A BOTTLE OF WATER.

GEMARA. R. Abba, or as some say Rami b. Hama or again as some say R. Johanan, said:⁷ The water libation on the Feast of Sukkoth is offered up only at the continual sacrifice of the morning. Whence is this to be inferred? Because [the Mishnah] teaches: AND ON THE SABBATH WHICH FELL DURING THE FEAST OF SUKKOTH ONE MAN CARRIED IN HIS HAND A BOTTLE OF WATER. Now if the thought could arise in you that [also] at the continual offering at dusk is the water of libation offered up,⁸ then it would also happen during the weekday.⁹ R. Ashi said: We also have learned thus:¹⁰ One said to the priest offering the libation: Hold your hands up! For it happened once that he poured it upon his feet and all the people stoned him with their citrons.¹¹ This proves it. It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai said: Whence do we know that at the continual offering of dusk two logs of wood were to be brought up by two priests? Because it is said: And [the sons of Aaron the priest shall] lay wood in order upon the fire.¹² If it has no bearing on the morning sacrifice because it is written: And the priest shall kindle wood on it every morning, and he shall lay the burnt-offering in order upon it,¹³ make it bear on the dusk sacrifice! — But perhaps, say: Both refer to the morning sacrifice, the Divine Law enjoining: Do it! And do it! again.¹⁴ — If that [were intended] the Divine Law should have said: ‘And he shall kindle wood.’ ‘And he shall kindle wood.’¹⁵ But if the Divine Law had stated: ‘And he shall kindle [wood]’ I would have assumed it may be done by one only, not by two, therefore we are taught that both one and two shall do so?¹⁶ — If that were intended the Divine Law should have stated: ‘He shall kindle [wood]’¹⁷ . . . and ‘they shall kindle wood,’ or ‘He shall lay [wood] in order’ and ‘they shall lay [wood] in order.’¹⁸ Why the words ‘He shall kindle’ and ‘They shall lay in order’?¹⁹ That we infer from it as we have said above.

R. Hiyya taught: The [second] count at times [affects] thirteen²⁰ priests, at times fourteen,²¹ fifteen, or sixteen. But has it not been taught: [At times] seventeen?²² — That teaching is in accord not with R. Eliezer b. Jacob, but with R. Judah.²³ M I S H N A H. A RAM WAS OFFERED BY ELEVEN: THE FLESH BY FIVE, THE INWARDS,²⁴ THE FINE FLOUR,²⁵ AND THE WINE BY TWO EACH. A BULLOCK WAS OFFERED BY TWENTY-FOUR: THE HEAD AND [RIGHT] HIND-LEG²⁶ — THE HEAD BY ONE AND THE [RIGHT] HIND-LEG BY TWO [PRIESTS]. THE TAIL AND [LEFT] HIND-LEG — THE TAIL BY TWO AND THE [LEFT] HIND-LEG BY TWO. THE BREAST AND NECK — THE BREAST BY ONE AND THE NECK BY THREE. THE TWO FORE-LEGS BY TWO, THE TWO FLANKS BY TWO. THE INWARDS, THE FINE FLOUR,²⁷ AND THE WINE²⁸ BY THREE EACH. THIS APPLIES ONLY TO OFFERINGS OF THE COMMUNITY. IN PRIVATE OFFERINGS, HOWEVER, IF A SINGLE PRIEST²⁹ WANTS TO OFFER [ALL], HE MAY DO SO. BUT AS TO THE FLAYING AND DISMEMBERING OF BOTH COMMUNAL, AND PRIVATE OFFERINGS THE SAME REGULATIONS APPLY.³⁰ GEMARA. A Tanna taught: The law regarding the flaying and the dismembering is alike in both [communal and private sacrifices] in that they may be done by a non-priest. Hezekiah said: Whence do we know that the law regarding flaying and dismembering is alike [with all sacrifices] in that they may be done by a non-priest? Because it is written: And the sons of Aaron the high priest shall put fire upon the altar,³¹ i.e., priesthood is required for the putting of the fire upon the altar, but not for the flaying and dismembering.

(1) Beginning with the taking up of the limbs to the ramp.

(2) In the same manner in which the parts of the sacrificial animal were brought up to the ramp, so were they thence carried to the altar, thus six priests were required to carry the lamb's parts, and three to convey the flour and wine-offerings to the altar.

(3) For the water libation, v. Suk. 48a.

(4) Strictly speaking 'in the afternoon'.

(5) They were added to the pile of wood on the altar.

(6) Lev. XXIV, 7-8: And thou shalt put pure frankincense with each row, that it may be to the bread for a memorial-part, even all offering made by the fire unto the Lord. Every Sabbath day he shall set it before the Lord continually, it is from the children of Israel, an everlasting covenant.

(7) The report came in the name of these three, without preponderance of evidence as to the real author.

(8) The Mishnah states that only on the Sabbath of the Feast of Sukkoth was the continual offering offered up by twelve priests. But if the water libation were offered up in connection with the continual dusk offering too, twelve priests would then too be necessary: nine for the lamb itself, two for the logs of wood, one for the bottle of water.

(9) So that on a week-day too, twelve priests would be required for the offering, which contradicts the Mishnah.

(10) V. Suk. 48b.

(11) The Sadducees rejected the water libation, hence, when in charge, they would invalidate the ceremony. The people observant of such sabotage, punished the hypocrite by pelting him with their citrons (ethrog). But these citrons were used only at the morning prayer. The Mishnah in Sukkoth mentions the citrons to indicate that the libation of the water took place only at the time citrons were part of the service, i.e., in the morning. The first proof was textual, the second factual.

(12) Lev. I, 7.

(13) Ibid. VI, 5.

(14) Hence there would be no repetition and the inference as to the dusk sacrifice would be invalid.

(15) In both instances why the change of expression? That has definite significance.

(16) The double form, singular and plural, was thus necessary.

(17) For the water libation, v. Suk. 48a.

(18) In the same manner in which the parts of the sacrificial animal were brought up to the ramp, so were they thence carried to the altar, thus six priests were required to carry the lamb's parts, and three to convey the flour and wine-offerings, to the altar.

(19) But what it is meant to convey, could have been conveyed without change of phrase.

(20) V. Mishnah supra 25a.

(21) On the Sukkoth Festival; on the Sabbath; and on the Sabbath of the Sukkoth Festival, respectively.

(22) [On Sabbath of Sukkoth, cf. Rashi and MS. M. Tosaf. however refers this to ordinary days omitting the words 'at times'. The number 17 can only be arrived at by adding to the 13 priests an additional four: (1) for removal of ashes; (2) for bringing up the limbs from the ramp to the altar; (3) for smoking the incense; (4) for bringing the coal-pan. This would not be in accordance with R. Eliezer b. Jacob; v. R. Hananel's reacting in next note.]

(23) Who as stated supra 26a requests an extra priest for carrying the limbs from the ramp to the altar. Rabbenu Hananel (v. p. 123, n. 11) reads: Neither with R. Eliezer b. Jacob, nor with R. Judah. For R. Judah holds there was no count for the coal-pan, the priest who had secured the task of the incense inviting his assistant to share the function of the coal-pan. Nor with R. Eliezer b. Jacob, who omits the count of the function of the limbs being brought to the altar from the ramp; according to him the priest who carried them up to the ramp, also brought them thence to the altar. V. Rashi, Tosaf. and סוֹת יִשְׁנִים.

(24) The lamb for the continual offering must not be older than one year. The ram could be between one and two years of age, hence its inwards were much heavier.

(25) The wine-offering with the ram was heavier by one fourth, the flour-offering was twice as heavy as that of the lamb.

(26) Lit., 'as far as head and hind-leg are concerned', which usually were offered by one person here etc.

(27) Num. XV, 9.

(28) Ibid. 10.

(29) Of the division ministering that week, whom the owner of the sacrifice entrusted with the task.

(30) Non-priests, too, might either flay or dissect the sacrifices. Hence there were no counts for them. The sacrifices of the community, however, although even they could be slaughtered by non-priests, were welcome to, and sought after by priests, whence the necessity of a count in connection with them.

(31) Lev. I, 7.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 27a

But that passage is required for its own information?¹ — R. Shimi b. Ashi said: I found Abaye explaining it to his son: [It was taught]: ‘One shall kill,’² hence we infer that even a non-priest may kill [the sacrificial animal]. But whence are you coming?³ — Because Scripture says: And thou and thy sons with thee shall keep your priesthood, [in everything that pertaineth to the altar].⁴ I might have learned that even the killing [must be done by priests alone], therefore it is written: And he shall kill the bullock before the Lord,⁵ and Aaron's sons, the priests, shall present the blood,⁶ i.e., the work of the priesthood is commanded only from the receiving [‘presenting’] of the blood and so on.⁶ And he shall lay his hand . . . and he shall kill,⁷ hence we are taught that the killing [of the sacrificial animal] is permissible even to a non-priest. Now, [Abaye went on explaining to his son] since the work obligatory on the priests starts only with the receiving of the blood, what is the purpose of: And the sons of Aaron . . . shall put the fire?⁸ To exclude flaying and dismembering.⁹ But still that was necessary. For one might have thought since [the putting on of the fire] is not a kind of service, the omission of which prevents atonement, it did not require priesthood, hence we are taught [from this passage] that it requires priesthood? — Rather do we infer it from here: And Aaron's sons, the priests, shall lay it, order the pieces, and the head, and the suet.¹⁰ Now, since the work obligatory upon priests starts with the receiving of the blood, why was the passage: ‘And they shall lay in order’ [etc.] necessary? It meant to exclude the flaying and the dismemberment.¹¹ But say perhaps that it means to exclude the arranging of the two logs of wood? — It seems logical that the passage excludes [a service relating to the sacrifice itself] which is of the type referred to. On the contrary: [it seems logical that] it excludes the ‘putting in order’ of [wood], which is analogous [to the ‘laying in order’ of the pieces referred to].¹² This thought should not arise in your mind, for a Master taught: ‘And the priest shall offer the whole . . . upon the altar.’ This refers to the bringing up of the limbs to the ramp. Now only the bringing of the limbs to the ramp requires a priest, but not the bringing of the logs of wood, implying that the putting in order of the two logs of wood requires a priest.¹³ Why, then, is it necessary to state ‘And they [the priests] shall lay [the pieces] in order’? to exclude flaying and dismembering.¹⁴ But say, perhaps, that this text is necessary for its own meaning?¹⁵ --[In reality so.] What then is the purpose of [the passage], ‘And the priest shall make the whole smoke upon the altar’?¹⁶ To exclude flaying and dismembering. [So that] ‘And the priest shall offer the whole’ refers to the bringing up of the limbs to the ramp; only the bringing up of the limbs to the ramp requires a priest, but not the bringing of the two logs of wood to the ramp. Implying that the putting in order of the two logs of wood that does require the services of a priest and the words: ‘And they shall put’¹⁷ have immediate text meaning;¹⁸ the words ‘And they shall lay in order [the pieces]’¹⁹ indicate it must be two; the words: ‘The sons of Aaron’¹⁹ also indicate two; the words: ‘The priests’¹⁹ also indicate two, together we learn from them that the [offering up of the] lamb requires the services of six priests. R. Hamnuna said: To R. Eleazar it seems difficult, for this passage¹⁹ refers to the young bullock, the service in connection with which required twenty-four priests! But he found it right again, for Scripture says: Upon the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar¹⁹; now what thing is it in connection with which ‘wood’, ‘fire’ and ‘altar’ are mentioned?

(1) That a priest is required for the putting on of the fire. An inference for other matter is justified only when the text itself, or part of it, appears superfluous.

(2) ‘We-shahat’ Lev. I, 5, may mean ‘and he shall kill’, the most obvious meaning in the context; or ‘one shall kill’, ‘one’ being a term general enough to include a commoner.

(3) On what are you basing your argument, that it is necessary to bring proof that a non-priest may kill the animal; what basis is there for the assumption that he may not do so?

(4) Num. XVIII, 7. The bracketed portion is interpolated by Bah. and rightly so, for upon it rests the argument.

(5) Lev. I, 5.

(6) [Since the priests are mentioned only in connection with the presenting of the blood and not with the killing.]

(7) Ibid. 4,5. ['He shall kill' has for the subject the same person as 'he shall lay his hand' — the owner of the sacrifice (a non-priest).]

(8) Since the putting on of the fire followed the presenting of the blood, the latter signifying the commencement of the priestly function, why was it necessary to mention that the 'Sons of Aaron' perform it?

(9) That these may be performed by non-priests.

(10) Lev. I, 8.

(11) I.e., flaying and dismembering.

(12) That the putting on of the two logs of wood did not require a priest.

(13) Since the fetching of the wood is especially stated to need no priest, the inference is — obvious that the putting in order of the two logs requires a priest's service.

(14) [V. supra, note 2. The passage that follows up, ' . . . text meaning' is difficult and is omitted by Wilna Gaon. The interpretation attempted here involves no change in the text of cur. edd.]

(15) [To show that the arrangement of the pieces required a priest, as it might have been assumed that 'even a non-priest may perform it since it is not a service' indispensable for effecting an atonement.]

(16) Lev. I, 9.

(17) Ibid. 7.

(18) That a priest is required for putting on the fire, v. supra p. 126.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 27b

Say it is the lamb.¹

R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan: A non-priest who laid the pile of wood in order [on the altar] incurs the penalty [of death]. What should he do [post facto]? — Let him break it up and then put it in order again. What is the good of that? — Rather: Let the non-priest break it up again and let a priest put it in order afterwards. R. Ze'ira demurred to this: But is there not a service which may be performed also at night and which a non-priest would render invalid? Surely, there is the smoking of the limbs and the fat-pieces.² That is but the conclusion of the service of the day. But there is the removing of the ashes? That is the beginning of the work of the day, as R. Assi has reported in the name of R. Johanan: If he has sanctified his hands [by washing] in the morning for the removal of the ashes, he need not sanctify [them] on the morrow, for he has already sanctified them from the beginning of the service.³ But the difficulty remains!⁴ If this statement was made, it was stated thus: R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan: A non-priest who laid the two logs of wood in order incurs the penalty [of death] because this is a day service. Raba demurred to this: If so, a count should be required for it! — It escaped him what had been taught: He who secured the task of clearing the ashes off the altar, [thereby also] secured the task of putting in order the pile of wood and the two logs of wood.³ Shall we, then, say that only service performed during the day requires the count but service performed during the night does not require the count? Surely there is the [smoking of the] members and the fat-pieces?⁵ — That is the end of the service of the day. But there is the removal of the ashes? — That is due to a certain event.⁶ Shall we say that only for service performed during the day and for participation in which a non-priest incurs the penalty of death, a count is required, but that wherever a non-priest does not incur penalty of death for performance of a service, no count is required? But then what of the killing [of the animal]?⁷ — It is different with the killing because that is the beginning of the service.

Mar Zutra or R. Ashi said: But we have learned otherwise: The officer said to them: Go forth and see if the time for the killing [of the continual morning sacrifice] has arrived,⁸ but he is not teaching about the laying in order of the two logs of wood?⁹ It speaks only of such things as cannot be remedied¹⁰ again, but not such for which there is a remedy.¹¹ Some say¹² this is what R. Ze'ira asked: Is there any service followed by another service, which would be invalidated if performed by a non-priest?¹³

(1) The passage 'Upon the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar' is superfluous, for v. 7 contains that information already, hence the inference is right that the six priests are suggested here.

(2) V. supra 24a.

(3) V. supra 22a.

(4) Where do we find a service which may be performed at night and which a non-priest renders invalid?

(5) For which a count has been arranged.

(6) Mentioned in Mishnah supra.

(7) Which may be performed by a non-priest and yet requires a count.

(8) Infra 28a.

(9) Hence it took place during the night.

(10) The continual morning offering must not be offered before daybreak; de facto it was invalid, had to be replaced by another and be burnt in a place far from the altar like any invalidated sacrifice.

(11) If the logs of wood had been put in order before daybreak, one could break them up and put them back in order again after daybreak.

(12) [The text from this point to the end of the chapter is in disorder, consisting, according to Rashi and others, of several interpolations. The interpretation that follows is that of Tosaf. on the basis of curr. edd.]

(13) [R. Ze'ira's question has reference to R. Johanan's ruling, that a non-priest who arranges the wood pile on the altar is liable to death. Against this R. Ze'ira raises the objection that since it is followed by another service, i.e., the arranging of the two logs of wood, a non-priest should incur no penalty nor invalidate it by his performance of it. V. Tosaf. s.v. אֵיכָא.]

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 28a

Surely there is [the smoking of] the limbs and fat-pieces?¹ — That is the end of the service of the day.² But what of the removal of the ashes?³ — It is the beginning of the service of the day,⁴ for R. Johanan said: If he sanctified his hands by washing for the removal of the ashes, in the morning he need not sanctify [his hands] since he had already sanctified them at the beginning of the service. If so the difficulty⁵ remains? — Rather if this statement was made it was made thus: R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan: If a non-priest arranged in order two logs of wood [on the altar] he incurs the penalty of death, because it is a complete service.⁶ To this Raba demurred: If this is so let it require a count. But it requires no count? Surely it was taught, He who secures the privilege in respect of the removal of the ashes, secures also the privilege in respect of the arranging of the two logs of wood? This is what he means. It should have a separate count for itself? The [reason is] as we have already stated.

Are we to say that for a service which is complete, and for the performance of which a non-priest incurs the penalty of death, a count is required, but for one, for performance of which a non-priest does not incur such penalty, no count is required — but there is the killing [of the sacrificial animal]? — It is different with that killing, because it is the beginning of the service of the day. Shall we say that only a complete service requires the count, but a service followed by another does not require it — but there is the smoking of the members and the fat-pieces? — That is the end of the service of the day. — But there is the removal of the ashes? — Here [the count is due] because of what happened.

Mar Zutra or R. Ashi said: We too have learnt thus:⁷ The officer said to them: GO FORTH AND SET WHETHER THE TIME FOR THE KILLING OF THE MORNING SACRIFICE HAS ARRIVED. But he does not teach anything about the time for the laying in order of the two logs of wood?⁸ — He teaches only concerning such things as cannot be remedied again, but not concerning such for which there is a remedy.⁹

CHAPTER III

MISHNAH. THE¹⁰ OFFICER SAID TO THEM: GO FORTH AND SEE WHETHER THE TIME FOR KILLING [OF THE MORNING SACRIFICE] HAS ARRIVED. IF IT HAD ARRIVED THEN HE WHO SAW IT SAID: IT IS DAYLIGHT!¹¹ MATHIA B. SAMUEL SAID: THE WHOLE EAST IS ALIGHT.¹² EVEN UNTO HEBRON?¹³ AND HE ANSWERED ‘YES’. AND WHY WAS THAT [CONSIDERED] NECESSARY? BECAUSE ONCE WHEN THE LIGHT OF THE MOON¹⁴ ROSE THEY THOUGHT THAT THE EAST WAS ALIGHT¹⁵ AND SLAUGHTERED THE CONTINUAL OFFERING, WHICH AFTERWARDS THEY HAD TO TAKE AWAY INTO THE PLACE OF BURNING.¹⁶

THE HIGH PRIEST¹⁷ WAS LED DOWN TO THE PLACE OF IMMERSION. THIS WAS THE RULE IN THE TEMPLE: WHOSOEVER CROSSED HIS FEET¹⁸ REQUIRED AN IMMERSION, AND WHOSOEVER MADE WATER REQUIRED SANCTIFICATION BY WASHING¹⁹ HIS HANDS AND FEET.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 28b

It was taught: R. Ishmael said: The morning [star] shines. R. Akiba said the morning [star] rose.¹ Nahuma b. Afkashion said: The morning [star] is already in Hebron. Mathia b. Samuel, the officer in charge of the counts, said: The whole east even unto Hebron is alight. R. Judah b. Bathyra said: The whole east even unto Hebron is alight and all the people have gone forth, each to his work. If that were the case, it would be [too much of the day] too late! — Rather: each to hire working men.²

R. Safra said: The [afternoon] prayer of Abraham³ is due when the walls begin to grow dark.⁴ R. Joseph said: Shall we indeed learn [our laws] from Abraham?⁵ — Raba answered: A Tanna learned from Abraham and we should not learn from him! For it has been taught: And in the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised,⁶ this passage teaches that the whole of the [eighth] day is proper for the circumcision, but the zealots perform their religious duty as early as possible as it is said: And Abraham rose early in the morning and saddled his ass.⁷ — Rather, said Raba, is it this that appeared difficult to R. Joseph: For we have learnt: If the eve of Passover falls on the eve of Sabbath, the paschal lamb is to be slaughtered at one half after the sixth hour,⁸ and offered up at one half after the seventh hour.⁹ — But let it be slaughtered when the walls begin to grow dark!¹⁰ — What is the difficulty? Perhaps the walls of the Sanctuary begin to grow dark half an hour after the sixth hour because they were not exactly straight.¹¹ Or [one might say]: It was different with Abraham whose heart [mind] knew great astronomical speculation.¹² Or: Because he was an elder [zaken] who had a seat at the scholar's council,¹² for R. Hama b. Hanina said: Our ancestors were never left without the scholars' council. In Egypt they had the scholars' council, as it is said: Go and gather the elders of Israel together;¹³ in the wilderness they had the scholars' council, as it is said: Gather unto Me seventy men of the elders of Israel;¹⁴ our father Abraham was an elder and a member of the scholars' council, as it is said: And Abraham was [zaken] an elder well stricken in age;¹⁵ our father Isaac was an elder and a member of the scholars' council, as it is said: And it came to pass when Isaac was an elder [zaken];¹⁶ our father Jacob was an elder and a member of the scholars' council, as it is said: Now the eyes of Israel were dim with age [zoken];¹⁷ [even] Eliezer, the servant of Abraham was an elder and a member of the scholars' council, as it is said: And Abraham said unto his servant, the elder of his house, that ruled over all he had,¹⁸ which R. Eleazar explained to mean that he ruled over [knew, controlled] the Torah of his master.¹⁹ Eliezer of Damascus': R. Eleazar said, He was so called because he drew²⁰ and gave drink to others of his master's teachings.

Rab said: Our father Abraham kept the whole Torah, as it is said: Because that Abraham hearkened to My voice [kept My charge, My commandments, My statutes, and My laws].²¹ R. Shimi b. Hiyya said to Rab: Say, perhaps, that this refers to the seven laws?²² — Surely there was also that of circumcision!²³ Then say that it refers to the seven laws and circumcision [and not to the whole Torah]? — If that were so, why does Scripture say: 'My commandments and My laws'?

Raba or R. Ashi said: Abraham, our father, kept even the law concerning the 'erub of the dishes,'²⁴ as it is said: 'My Torahs':²⁵ one being the written Torah, the other the oral Torah.²⁶

MATHIA B. SAMUEL SAID etc. . . . AND HE ANSWERED 'YES'. Who was it that said 'yes'? the man standing on the roof! Is he the dreamer and the interpreter?²⁷ Should it, then, be he who is standing on the ground, whence would he know?²⁸ — If you like say it is he who stands on the roof, and if you like say it is he who stands on the ground. If you want to say it is he who stands on the roof; he says: THE WHOLE EAST IS ALIGHT, the one standing on the ground answering: EVEN

UNTO HEBRON? whereupon the former says: 'YES'. If you like say that it is he who stands on the ground: He says: THE WHOLE EAST IS ALIGHT? whereupon the other responds: EVEN UNTO HEBRON?²⁹ and the former answers: 'YES'.³⁰

AND WHY WAS THAT CONSIDERED NECESSARY etc. But can it be confused?³¹ Has it not been taught: Rabbi says: The rising column of the moon is different from that of the sun. The light column of the moon rises straight like a stick, the light column of the sun [the dawn] irradiates in all directions? — The school of Ishmael taught: It was a cloudy day and the light was scattered in all directions.³² R. Papa said: We can infer therefrom that on a cloudy day the sun is felt all over. What is the practical difference?³³ — In the spreading³⁴ of skins, or, as Raba expounded: A woman should not knead³⁵ either in the sun or in the heat of the sun. R. Nahman said: The sultry air of the sun³⁶ is more intense than that of direct sunlight, your analogy³⁷ being: a jar of vinegar;³⁸ the dazzling sun-light³⁹ is worse than the uncovered sun, your analogy being drippings [from the roof].⁴⁰

Unchaste imagination is more injurious¹ than the sin itself, your analogy being the odour of meat.² The end of the summer is more trying than the summer itself, your analogy being a hot oven.³ A fever in winter is severer than in summer, your analogy being a cold oven.⁴ It is harder to remember well something old than to commit to memory a fresh thing, your analogy being a cement made out of old cement.⁵ R. Abbahu said: What is the reason of Rabbi's opinion?⁶ — It is written:⁷ For the Leader, upon Aijelet ha-Shahar⁸ — just as the antlers of the hind branch off this way and that way, so the light of the dawn is scattered in all directions. — R. Zera said: Why was Esther compared to a hind?⁹ To tell you that just as a hind has a narrow womb and is desirable to her mate at all times as at the first time, so was Esther precious to King Ahasuerus at all times as at the first time. R. Assi said: Why was Esther compared to the dawn?¹⁰ To tell you that just as the dawn is the end of the whole night, so is the story of Esther the end of all the miracles. But there is Hanukkah? — We refer to those included in Scripture. That will be right according to the opinion that Esther was meant to be written,¹¹ but what can be said according to him who held that it was not meant to be written? — He could bring it in accord with what R. Benjamin b. Japheth said, for R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Benjamin b. Japheth: Why is the prayer of the righteous compared to a hind? To tell you that just as with the hind, as long as it grows, its antlers form additional branches every year, so with the righteous, the longer they abide in prayer, the more will their prayer be heard.

THEY SLAUGHTERED THE CONTINUAL OFFERING: When?¹² Would you say on one of the remaining days of the year? Had it then to be offered up? Hence [you will say that it happened] on the Day of Atonement, but is there any moon-light visible then?¹³ — This is what it means: On the Day of Atonement, when the observer said: It is daylight, they would take the high priest down to the place of immersion.¹⁴ The father of R. Abin learnt:¹⁵ Not only concerning this¹⁶ was it said,¹⁷ but also concerning the pinching of a bird's head and the taking of a fistful of the meal-offering, [was it said] that if it was done during the night, it had to be burnt. That is quite right with regard to the bird designated for a burnt-offering, since the fact can no more be undone, but touching the fistful of the meal offering,

- (2) The odour of roast meat is more injurious to the digestive apparatus even than the eating thereof.
- (3) It is easy to kindle a fresh fire in a hot oven, the ground being dry. By the end of summer the atmosphere is very hot so that any additional hot weather makes it well nigh intolerable.
- (4) It requires a great deal of wood and effort to warm up the cold oven in the cold days of winter. Thus must a fever be very severe to afflict one on a cold day.

The question hence, as to whether any book defiled the hands, implies the question as to whether it was included in the Canon and has inspiration ascribed to its contents. About the Book of Esther there is a dispute in Meg. 7a, one of the Rabbis ascribing inspiration to it, whence it was to be written and included in the Canon, the other denying it inspiration, hence declaring its touch did not defile the hands. V. Yadaim III, 5.

let him put it back and take it again when it is day? — He learnt and explained it: The vessels of ministration render what is in them sacred even outside of the proper time.¹ An objection was raised: This is the rule: Whatsoever is offered² up during the day, becomes sanctified by day and whatsoever is offered up during the night becomes sanctified both by day and by night.³ At any rate it is taught that whatsoever is offered up during the day becomes sanctified by day only, and not by night?⁴ — It may not become sanctified [enough] to be offered up, but it may become sanctified enough to be invalidated.⁵

R. Zera raised an objection: If he put in order the shewbread and the [frankincense] clip after the Sabbath and smokes the [contents of] the cups on the [following] Sabbath it is invalid.⁶ What should he do? He should leave it for the coming Sabbath, for even if it stayed for many days on the table, that does not matter. But why? It should be sanctified and invalidated?⁷ — Raba said: He who raised the objection, raised a valid one, and the father of R. Abin is also quoting a Baraita,⁸ but it is of the opinion that the night is not considered a wanting⁹ time, the day however is so considered. But when the night of Sabbath approaches, let it then become at once sanctified and invalidated?¹⁰ — Rabina said: We assume that he removed it before then. Mar Zutra, or as some say, R. Ashi said: You may set the case even if he had not removed it before [Sabbath eve], since, however, he had put it in order at variance with the regulation¹¹ it is as if a monkey had laid it there.¹²

THIS WAS THE RULE IN THE TEMPLE etc.: It is quite right that the feet must be washed because of squirts,¹³ but why must the hands be washed? — R. Abba said: This teaches us that it is

- (1) Hence it can no more be put back. Since the vessel has sanctified it for the altar, it must not be put back among the remaining part of the meal-offering.
- (2) E.g., the meal-offerings, the incense.
- (3) The text here corrected in accord with Bah. V. Tem. 14a. [Cur. ed. inserts 'and whatsoever is offered up during the night becomes sanctified by night, and whatsoever is offered up both during the day and during the night becomes sanctified both by day and by night.' As the former can refer only to drink-offerings (V. Ta'an. 2b) which however are offered up also during the day, this passage is omitted and the text corrected accordingly.]
- (4) Which means that there is no sanctification but in the proper time.
- (5) [If it carries overnight without having been offered (V. Zeb. 87a). The fistful accordingly having been placed in the vessel of ministration at night becomes invalidated with daybreak, and can no longer be put back among the remaining part of the meal-offering.]
- (6) [Because it had not been left on the table for seven days as prescribed, v. Lev. XXIV, 5ff. Var. lec. rightly omit: it is invalid, V. Rashi.]
- (7) Through having been set on the table in its proper time.
- (8) It is not the case of all Amoraic opinion, which can be refuted by argument. It is an authoritative Tannaitic teaching and a way must be found to bring the present argument in accord with it.
- (9) The day goes after the night, hence it is part of the night, hence the fistful put into the vessel at night is regarded as having been put therein in the proper time and consequently is sanctified properly. Since, however, it is a day-offering it must be burned with the shewbread; however, where there is a whole day wanting, the bread does not become sanctified.
- (10) Since the night is not considered as 'wanting time', whereas everything that is due during the day and was placed into the sacred vessels in the preceding night, becomes sanctified and invalidated, then, when the eve of second Sabbath comes, let the table sanctify the bread and invalidate it?
- (11) When it was wanting time.
- (12) Without any intention, hence the table does not sanctify it, for we consider that since it was placed there without intention, it was technically not placed there at all, hence it becomes neither sanctified nor invalidated.

the right thing to wipe off [squirtings]. This supports the view of R. Ammi who says: A man must not go out with squirtings on his feet, because he may appear as one that has his privy member cut off and he may thus cause evil talk against his children that they are bastards.¹

R. Papa said: If there be excrement in its place,² he must not read the Shema'.³ How shall we imagine this case? If to say that it is invisible, that is self-evident; if to say that it is not seen surely⁴ 'The Torah was not given to the ministering angels!' This has but reference to a situation in which it is obvious when he sits and invisible when he stands. But what is the difference between this and one who has filth on his body, for it has been stated: Where one who has filth on his body, or whose hands are in a privy,⁵ R. Huna permits the reading of the Shema' and R. Hisda forbids it?⁶ — In its place filth is most execrable, away from it, it is less so. Our Rabbis taught: This is the halachah with regard to meal-time:⁷ If a man goes forth to make water, he washes his one⁸ hand and re-enters. If he conversed with his neighbour and waited [diverting himself], he washes both his hands [again] and re-enters. When he washes his hands, he should not wash them outside and enter, because of the suspicion,⁹ but he should enter, sit at his accustomed place and wash his two hands there, then pass the pitcher¹⁰ around the guests.¹¹ — R. Hisda said: What we said refers to drinking,¹² but as to eating he may wash his hands outside and re-enter, people know that he is fastidious of taste.¹³ R. Nahman b. Isaac said: I would do the same¹⁴ before drinking as people know me to be fastidious.

— A LINEN SHEET WAS SPREAD BETWEEN HIM AND THE PEOPLE.

GEMARA. Ben Zoma was asked: What is the purpose of this immersion?¹⁷ He answered: If one¹⁸ who moves from one holy place to another and from one place [the entering of] which [in uncleanness] involves kareth¹⁹ to another place [the entering of] which [in uncleanness] involves kareth, requires immersion, how much more shall he require immersion who moves from profane ground into holy ground, and from a place [the entering of] which [in uncleanness] does not involve kareth, to a place [the entering of] which [in uncleanness] involves kareth! R. Judah said: It is only an immersion required for the sake of uniformity,²⁰ so that he may remember if there is any uncleanness on him and abstain.²¹ In what principle do they differ?

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 30b

As to whether the service is profaned.¹ According to Ben Zoma² he profanes the service, according to R. Judah he does not. But does he, in accordance with Ben Zoma's view, profane the service? Has it not been taught: If a high priest did not immerse or sanctify himself between garment and garment or between service and service, his service remains valid.³ But if either a high priest or a common priest has not washed his hands and feet in the morning and then had officiated at a service, that service is invalidated? — Rather does the dispute concern the question as to whether he transgresses a positive command or not,¹ Ben Zoma holding he transgresses a positive command, R. Judah that he does not. But does R. Judah hold this view? Has it not been taught: A leper⁴ immerses himself and stands in the Nicanor Gate. R. Judah said: He does not need to immerse himself, for he has done so already on the evening before! This has its own reason, as it was taught: 'Because he had immersed himself on the eve before'.⁵ What does he ask who asks this?⁶ — Because he wants to raise another objection, viz., [why was it called] the cell of the lepers, because lepers immerse themselves therein.⁷ R. Judah says: Not only of the lepers did they say [this] but of every man [who enters the Temple Court]?⁸ — That is no difficulty. One statement refers to the case that he immersed himself, the other to the case that he did not. But, if he did not immerse himself, he must await the setting of the sun? — Rather: In both cases he is presumed to have immersed himself, but in the one case he is presumed to have ceased to have his mind [on the necessity of preventing defilement],⁹ in the other he is presumed to have had his mind thereon all the time. But if he ceased to have his mind on it, he would need to be sprinkled on the third and the seventh day, for R. Dosthai b. Mattun said in the name of R. Johanan: Wherever attention¹⁰ [from the need to prevent uncleanness] is diverted, sprinkling on the third and the seventh day is required?¹¹ — Rather: In both cases he is presumed not to have diverted the attention, yet there is no contradiction, for in the one case he is presumed to have immersed himself for the purpose of entering the Sanctuary, in the other he is assumed to have done so without that purpose in mind.¹² Or, if you like, say: Read not of lepers did they say [this]¹³ but of every man. Rabina said: R. Judah makes his statement only on behalf [of the view] of the Rabbis: As far as my view is concerned, no leper needs [another] immersion. But according to your opinion, admit at least that this was said not of lepers alone but of all people. And the Rabbis?¹⁴ — The leper is accustomed to [his] impurity, all others are unaccustomed to it.¹⁵

Shall we say that the Rabbis who dispute with R. Judah¹⁶ are of the opinion of Ben Zoma,¹⁷ notwithstanding which they make reference to the leper,¹⁸ to inform you of the far-reaching consequences of R. Judah's opinion; or perhaps the difference in the case of the leper lies in the fact that he is accustomed to the uncleanness?¹⁹ — He answered: It is different with the leper, because he is accustomed to his uncleanness.

Said Abaye to R. Joseph:²⁰ Would an intervening object

(1) By officiating without immersing first.

(2) Who infers it from an argument a minori which has the force of Biblical law.

(3) Zeb. 19b. [Since a high priest does not profane the service by failing to take the intermediary immersions, there could be no profanation of the service in the absence of the first immersion, since on the view of Ben Zoma the latter is inferred from the former.]

(4) On the eighth day of his affliction, although he had immersed himself on the seventh, Lev. XIV, 9: And it shall be on the seventh...he shall bathe his flesh in water, and he shall be clean. Yet, when he offers up the prescribed sacrifices on the eighth day, he shall immerse himself again.

(5) R. Judah holds the purpose of the immersion of those who enter the Sanctuary in the morning is just to remind them of their former uncleanness, whereas the leper, who by reason of last night's immersion got rid of his uncleanness, is not in need of another reminder, in form of a second immersion.

(6) I.e., why ask an apparently unnecessary question? The answer is obvious. Mielziner (Introduction p. 238) cites Frankel MGWJ 1861 for a tradition according to which all passages in the Talmud introduced by this phrase belong to the additions made by the Saboraim.

(7) [Before they entered the Temple Court on the eighth day in the morning; when standing at the Nicanor Gate they thrust their thumb and toe into the Temple Court, there to receive an application of the blood of the guilt-offering and of oil; v. Lev. XIV, 14ff and supra 16a and infra p. 143, n. 10.]

(8) 'Not only of the lepers' implies the lepers at any rate, hence he would consider a re-immersion necessary, which contradicts his earlier statement.

(9) By consistent guarding of his body against touch by agents of ritual uncleanness.

(10) For he may have entered the tent in which a corpse lay.

(11) For entering the Temple.

(12) He therefore requires a second immersion in the morning.

(13) Requiring immersion on entering the Sanctuary.

(14) How would they meet R. Judah's argument?

(15) Hence he will no more pay attention to the dangers of defilement, whereas all others, unaccustomed to uncleanness and not reconciled to it, will be anxious to avoid such risk.

(16) And hold that a leper needs re-immersion on the eighth day.

(17) Who requires no morning immersion even in the case of a leper who is accustomed to uncleanness.

(18) Although they hold with Ben Zoma that every one entering the Sanctuary is by the law of the Torah obliged to immerse himself.

(19) That of leprosy, hence is accustomed to touch things unclean, whence the assumption that even after his immersion he may have done so; but other men require no morning immersion Biblically before entering the Sanctuary.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 31a render this immersion¹ invalid or not? — He replied: 'Whatever the Rabbis ordained, they endowed with the authority of a law of the Torah'.²

Said Abaye to R. Joseph: Is a partial entrance of the Sanctuary considered an entrance or not? — He answered: The thumb³ and toe will prove that, for there but a partial entrance is involved, and it was taught: A leper immerses himself and stands in the Nicanor Gate! — The question was asked: What about making for himself a long knife for slaughtering?⁴ This question is asked in accord with the view of both Ben Zoma and the Rabbis who oppose R. Judah. This question is asked on the view of Ben Zoma: Perhaps Ben Zoma does not consider the immersion obligatory except in the case of one who actually enters, but not for one who stands outside; or perhaps even for the latter, because he might gradually enter. The question is also asked according to the view of the Rabbis who oppose R. Judah: Perhaps the Rabbis hold their view only there⁵ because he does not perform a service,⁶ but where he officiates at a service they would agree,⁷ or do they make no difference? — The question remains unanswered.

FIVE IMMERSIONS AND TEN SANCTIFICATIONS: Our Rabbis taught: The high priest underwent five immersions and ten sanctifications on that day, all of them on holy ground, in the Parwah Cell, with the exception of the first, which took place on profane ground, on top of the Water Gate, lying at the side of his [private] cell.⁸ Abaye said: We infer therefrom that the Etam well was [at least] twenty-three cubits above the ground of the Temple Court.⁹ For we have learnt: All the doorways there were twenty cubits in height, ten cubits in breadth, with the exception of that of the Hall¹⁰ and it was taught: And he shall bathe all his flesh in water,¹¹ I.e., in the waters of a mikweh,¹² in water which covers his whole body. What 'is its quantity? One cubit square, three cubits high, and the Sages have calculated that the required quantity for [the contents of] a mikweh is forty se'ah.¹³

(1) An immersion, to be valid, requires utterly undisturbed touch of the water on the body of the person immersing himself, any intervening object rendering the immersion invalid. This, however, in the questioner's mind applies only to such immersion as is commanded by the Torah. R. Judah, who considers it only an immersion for the sake of uniformity, might hence hold that in this case an intervening object might not be considered sufficiently disturbing to render the immersion invalid.

(2) Pes. 30b.

(3) Lev. XIV, 14: And the priest shall take the blood of the guilt-offering and... shall put it upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot. Ibid. 17: And of the rest of the oil . . . the priest shall put . . . upon the thumb of his right hand and upon the great toe of his right foot. It is to receive of the blood and the oil that the leper stands at the Nicanor Gate and puts his hands and feet inside, v. 11 indicating that: And the priest that cleanseth him shall set the man that is to be cleansed . . . at the door of the tent of meeting.

(4) To escape the obligation of an immersion, which is due on entering. With a knife long enough he might slay the sacrificial animal from without.

[The water in the pool on top of the Water Gate had thus to rise to a height of twenty-three cubits above the level of the Temple Court twenty cubits for the height of the doorway and three cubits for the height of the pool, which would have been impossible unless the Etam well was situated on at least a corresponding height.]

But there is also one cubit of the ceiling and one cubit of the flooring?¹ — Since the gates of the Sanctuary are made of marble these were made of a small [thickness]. But there is some [additional thickness] however small? — Since it is not even as much as a cubit, he does not count it.

A LINEN SHEET WAS SPREAD BETWEEN HIM AND THE PEOPLE. Why of linen? — As R. Kahana said [elsewhere]:² So that he may perceive that the service of the day is to be performed in garments of linen. Thus here too it is that he might perceive that the service of the day is to be performed in garments of linen.

MISHNAH. HE STRIPPED OFF [HIS GARMENTS]³ WENT DOWN AND IMMERSSED HIMSELF, CAME UP AND DRIED HIMSELF.⁴ THEY BROUGHT HIM THE GOLDEN⁵ GARMENTS, HE PUT THEM ON AND SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND FEET. THEY BROUGHT HIM THE CONTINUAL OFFERING, HE MADE THE REQUIRED CUT AND SOME ONE ELSE FINISHED IT FOR HIM.⁶ HE RECEIVED THE BLOOD AND SPRINKLED IT. HE WENT INSIDE⁷ TO SMOKE THE INCENSE OF THE MORNING⁸ AND TO TRIM THE LAMPS;⁹ [AFTERWARDS] TO OFFER UP THE HEAD AND THE LIMBS AND THE PANCAKES AND THE WINE-OFFERING. THE MORNING INCENSE WAS OFFERED UP BETWEEN THE BLOOD AND THE LIMBS, THE AFTERNOON [INCENSE] BETWEEN THE LIMBS AND THE DRINK-OFFERINGS. IF THE HIGH PRIEST WAS EITHER OLD OR OF DELICATE HEALTH WARM WATER WOULD BE PREPARED FOR HIM AND POURED INTO THE COLD, TO MITIGATE ITS COLDNESS.

GEMARA. The scholars said in the presence of R. Papa:¹⁰ This [Mishnah]¹¹ is not in accord with R. Meir, for if it were in accord with him,¹² behold he said: There must be two sanctifications for the putting on of the garments, hence there ought to be here, too,¹³ two sanctifications for the putting on of the garments!¹⁴ R. Papa said unto then,: Whether on the view of the Sages or of R. Meir, one sanctification is for the stripping off of the holy garments,¹⁵ and one for the putting on¹⁵ and the reason of their dispute is [the interpretation of these words]: He shall put off, he shall bathe and he shall put on.¹⁶ R. Meir holds that Scripture compares the stripping to the putting on [of the garments], i.e., just as in the case of the putting on of the garments he first puts them on and only afterwards sanctifies himself, so also with the stripping off of the garments, he first strips off and then sanctifies himself; whereas the Rabbis hold that [Scripture] compares the stripping off to the putting on, i.e., just as with the putting on he sanctifies himself whilst dressed in the garments, so with the stripping off, he sanctifies himself whilst the garments are yet on him. Said the scholars to R. Papa: How can you say so, has it not been taught: A sheet of linen was spread between him and the people, he stripped off [his garments], went down, immersed himself, came up and dried himself. One brought the golden garments before him, he put them on, and sanctified his hands and his feet. R. Meir said: He stripped off [his garments] and sanctified his hands and his feet, went down and immersed himself, came up and dried himself. One brought the golden garments before him, he put them on and sanctified his hands and feet!¹⁷ — He answered them: If there is such teaching, it is a teaching [to be recognized]. According to R. Meir it is right, because we thus account for the

(3) His non-holy garments.

(4) Lit., 'sponged himself'.

(5) The eight garments, which the high priest puts on for service. They are: tunic, breeches, mitre, girdle, breast-plate, ephod, robe and plate. V. Ex. XXVIII, 2ff.

(6) To enable the high priest to put the knife aside and to take hold of the holy bowl in which he receives the blood. On other days one priest would slaughter, and another receive the blood. Both functions were to be performed by the high priest on the Day of Atonement.

(7) נכנס Lit., 'entered'. The word 'entered', however, does not fit the whole of what follows, as Baneth remarks. For whereas he entered the Sanctuary (Hekal) to smoke the incense and trim the lamps, he cannot be said to have 'entered' to offer up the head etc. which took place outside. Baneth therefore suggests with considerable justification that, as elsewhere, נכנס be translated 'prepared to', 'went on to'. But this change is unnecessary as one could translate: He went in to . . . trim the lamps, (afterwards) to offer up the head . . .

(8) Ex. XXX, 7.

(9) I.e., clean them, provide them with wick and oil, according to Maimonides, also light them.

(10) V. Rashi.

(11) [Which prescribes only one sanctification in connection with the first immersion when he changes from his non-holy garments into the garments of gold.]

(12) [Who teaches infra 34b that in connection with the second immersion, when he changes from the garments of gold into linen garments, he disrobes himself first and then sanctifies himself, in contradistinction to the Rabbis who place the sanctification before the disrobing.]

(13) [It is assumed that the reason of R. Meir for prescribing the disrobing before the sanctification is that he holds that the two sanctifications required on the change of garments are for the putting on of holy vestments. Whereas the Rabbis ascribe one for the stripping of holy garments and the other for the putting on of holy garments.]

(14) [On the other hand, in the view of the Rabbis, there would be no need for more than one sanctification, since the garments of which he strips himself at the first immersion are non-holy.]

(15) So that our Mishnah can be also in accord with R. Meir.

(16) Lev. XVI, 23, 24.

(17) [This shows that R. Meir requires two sanctifications also in connection with the first immersion.]

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 32a

ten sanctifications, but according to the Rabbis, they are only nine? — The Rabbis will answer you: The last sanctification is made when he strips off the holy garments and puts on the profane¹ ones.

Our Rabbis taught: And Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting² For what purpose does he enter? For no other purpose than that of taking out the censer and the coal-pan, the whole portion being reported in right order with the exception of this passage.³ For what reason?⁴ — R. Hisda said: There is a tradition: Five immersions and ten sanctifications did the high priest undergo on that day. If he had performed them in the order mentioned in the scriptures there could have been no more than three immersions and six sanctifications.⁵

It was taught: R. Judah said: Whence do we know of the five immersions and ten sanctifications which the high priest had to undergo on that day? To teach us that it is said: And Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting, and shall put off the linen garments . . . and he shall wash his flesh in water in a holy place and put on his other vestments and come forth and offer [his burnt-offering].⁶ Thus you infer that whenever one changes from one service to another,⁷ an immersion is required. Rabbi said: Whence do we know that the high priest had to undergo five immersions and ten sanctifications on that day? Because it is said: He shall put on the holy linen tunic, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with the linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall he be attired; they are the holy garments; and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and put them on.⁸ Hence you learn that whosoever changes from service to service requires an immersion. Moreover, it says, 'They are the holy garments', thus putting all the garments on the same level. Now there are five services;⁹ The continual offering of dawn, [performed] in the golden garments: the service of the day [the Day of Atonement], in linen garments; of his [the high priest's] and the people's ram, in the golden garments; [the taking out] of the censer and coal-pan, in white garments; the continual evening offering in the golden garments — Whence do we know that every immersion required two sanctifications? For it is written: And he shall put off . . . and he shall wash; and he shall wash and he shall put on.¹⁰ — R. Eliezer b. Simeon said: This can be inferred a minori ad majus: If in a case where no immersion is required,¹¹ sanctification is yet required,¹² how much more, in a place in which immersion is required,¹³ is sanctification also required — But [perhaps let us also infer] that as there only one sanctification is required, here, too, one only would be necessary? Therefore Scripture says: And Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting, and shall put off the linen garments which he put on — what is the meaning of 'which he put on'? Does not a man put off but that which he did put on? Rather [are these superfluous words written] to put the putting off on the same level with the putting on of the garments; just as the putting on of the garments requires sanctification,¹⁴ so does the putting off of the garments require it.

[The master said].¹⁵ 'R. Judah said: Whence do we know of the five immersions and ten sanctifications which the high priest had to undergo on that Day? To teach us that Scripture says: "And Aaron shall come into the tent of meeting . . . and shall wash his flesh in water in a holy place." Thus you infer that whenever one changes from one service to another, an immersion is required.' We found [this rule] for the change from the white garments to the golden ones.¹⁶ Whence do we know [that it also applies] for the change from the golden to the linen ones?

(1) At the end of the service of the Day of Atonement, as he strips off the holy garments to don profane ones.

(2) Lev. XVI, 23.

(3) Infra 70b.

(4) Did Aaron, have to interrupt the service, interpolating the offering up of his and the people's ram, between the incense and the bringing out of censer and coal-pan?

(5) One immersion each for the continual offering of the morning, for the service of the day, which includes censer — and coal-pan — function, and one between that and the offering up of the rams, which includes the additional, and the continual afternoon offering. Thus there would be three immersions only as against the five traditionally reported. Hence the necessity of a change in the programme, hence the interpolation of the offering of the rams between the service within (the day's service) and the bringing out of censer and coal-pan. So that the censer — and coal-pan — function now interrupts between the offerings of the rams and the continual afternoon-offering, with the result that there are now five immersions necessary; one for the morning's continual offering, in the golden garments; one for the service of the day in white garments; one for the offering of the two rams on the outer altar in the golden garments; one for the taking out of censer and coal-pan in white garments; and the fifth for the additional, and the continual afternoon offering in the golden garments. Thus tradition and text are harmonized, the five immersions implying ten sanctifications, one each, before each putting off, and before each putting on, of the garments required for each service.

(9) Whether on the view of Rabbi or of R. Judah.

(10) [This is the continuation of Rabbi's statement and the reference is to Lev. XVI, 23, 24. The words 'he shall wash', being placed between 'he shall put off' and 'he shall put on', are taken by Rabbi as referring both to stripping and the robing, each requiring a separate washing (sanctification), this in contradistinction to R. Judah who derives from it supra the need of all immersion between every change of service v. infra 32b.]

(11) During the rest of the days of the year (as against the Day of Atonement) the law of the Torah does not require immersion before each service, only by Rabbinic ordinance, the purpose of which is to keep the priest conscious of risks to his cleanliness, is such immersion necessary. (V. supra 30a.)

(16) The verses in question (Lev. XVI, 23, 24) occurring in connection with the stripping of the white garments.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 32b

The school of R. Ishmael taught: That can be inferred a minori: If the golden garments in which the high priest does not enter the Holy of Holies require immersion, how much more do the linen garments, in which he enters the Holy of Holies, require it? But this argument can be demolished: The case of the golden garments is different, because much atonement is obtained in them.¹ Rather, he infers it from what Rabbi said.²

[The Master said]³ 'Rabbi said, Whence do we know of the five immersions and the ten sanctifications which the high priest had to undergo on that day? To teach us that it is said: "He shall put on the holy linen tunic . . ." Hence you learn that whosoever changes from service to service requires an immersion.' We have found that [required for a change] from the golden,⁴ to the white garments. Whence do we know that [the same rule obtains for a change] from the white to the golden garments? The school of R. Ishmael taught: That can be inferred a minori: If the white garments, in which but little atonement is obtained, require an immersion, how much more will the golden garments, in which much atonement is obtained, require it? This argument can be demolished: The case of the white garments is different, because the high priest, dressed in them, enters the Holy of Holies? It is for this reason that he [Rabbi, in his statement] teaches: And it also says: 'They are the holy garments, and he shall bathe his flesh in water, and put them on'.⁵

'Now there are five services'. That of the continual afternoon offering [performed] in the golden garments; the service of the day in white garments; [the offering up of] his, and the people's ram in the golden garments; the [taking out of] the censer and coal-pan in white garments; and the continual offering at dusk, in the golden garments — And whence do we know that every immersion requires two sanctifications? To teach us that Scripture says: 'And he shall put off . . . and he shall wash . . . and he shall wash . . . and he shall put on'. But this [passage] refers to the immersions?⁶ — Since it has no reference to the immersion [the requirement of] which we infer from ‘They are the holy garments,’⁷ apply it to the sanctifications. Then the Divine Law should have written the term of ‘sanctification’?⁸ — [Scripture chooses that term] to let us know that immersion is even as sanctification, i.e., just as immersion must take place on holy ground, so must sanctification take place on holy ground. Whence does R. Judah⁹ infer [that] the sanctification [must take place on holy ground]? — He infers it from the teaching of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon.

R. Hisda said: Rabbi's view excludes that of R. Meir and that of the Rabbis.¹⁰ It excludes that of the Rabbis, for according to them he sanctifies himself [first] while he is still dressed, whereas Rabbi holds that he sanctifies himself after he is stripped; and it also excludes the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir holds that the second sanctification takes place when he is [already] dressed, whereas, according to Rabbi, he sanctifies himself whilst still stripped of the garments.¹¹ R. Aha b. Jacob said: All agree that at the second sanctification he first dons [the garments] and then sanctifies himself. What is the reason? Because Scripture said: Or when they come near to the altar,¹² i.e., only he who lacks nothing but the approach,¹³ that excludes him who lacks both dressing and approach. R. Aha, the son of Raba, said to R. Ashi: R. Hisda does not agree with R. Aha, nor does R. Aha agree with R. Hisda, for else there would be fifteen sanctifications required according to Rabbi.¹⁴

ONE BROUGHT HIM THE CONTINUAL OFFERING, HE MADE THE REQUIRED CUT etc. What does ‘KERAZO’¹⁵ mean? ‘Ulla said: It is a synonym for ‘slaying’ — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: What is the scriptural evidence? Egypt is a very fair heifer. But the kerez [gadfly] out of the north is come, it is come.¹⁶ What is the intimation?¹⁷ — As R. Joseph interpreted it: A fair kingdom is Egypt but murderous nations from the north will come upon it.¹⁸

How far shall he cut? — ‘Ulla said: The bigger part of both organs.¹⁹ Thus also said R. Johanan: The bigger part of the two organs. Resh Lakish also holds that he cuts through the bigger part of the two organs, for Resh Lakish said:²⁰ Since we have learned that the cutting through of the bigger part of an organ is as good as the cutting through the whole of it, why did we learn that ‘the bigger part of one organ [is required to be cut through] in case of a fowl ‘and the bigger part of the two organs [are required to be cut through] in case of an animal? Because we have learned: ONE BROUGHT HIM THE CONTINUAL OFFERING, HE MADE THE REQUIRED CUT AND SOMEONE ELSE FINISHED IT FOR HIM, HE RECEIVED THE BLOOD AND SPRINKLED IT—one might assume, if another one did not complete the killing for him, it would be invalid. — [You say that] ‘one could assume that if the other did not complete the killing for him, it would be invalid,’ then it would mean that the service is performed by someone²¹ else and we have learnt: All the services of the Day of Atonement are valid only if performed by him [the high priest]?²² — Rather: This is what he says: One might have assumed that it shall be considered invalidated by Rabbinic ordinance,²³

therefore we have learnt: The bigger part of an organ with a fowl, the bigger part of two organs with an animal — But since, even by Rabbinic ordinance, it would be considered not invalidated,¹ why does he [the other one] have to finish it? — It is the proper thing [a command] to finish it.²

Abaye related the order of the [daily] priestly functions in the name of tradition and in accordance with Abba Saul:³ The large pile comes before the second pile for the incense; the second pile for the incense comes before the laying in order of the two logs of wood; the laying in order of the two logs of wood precedes the removing of the ashes from the inner altar; the removing of the ashes from the inner altar precedes the trimming of the five lamps; the trimming of the five lamps precedes the blood⁴ of the continual offering; the blood of the continual offering precedes the trimming of the two lamps; the trimming of the two lamps precedes the incense; the incense precedes the limbs;⁵ the limbs come before the meal-offering; the meal-offering precedes the pancakes; the pancakes come before the drink-offerings; the drink-offerings precede the additional offerings; the additional offerings come before the [frankincense] censers, and the [frankincense] censers precede the continual afternoon-offering, as it is said: And he shall make smoke thereon the fat of the peace-offerings,⁶ i.e., herewith all the offerings are completed —⁷ The Master said: ‘The great pile precedes the second pile for the incense.’ Whence do we know that? Because it has been taught:⁸ This is the law of the burnt-offering: it is that which goeth up on its fire-wood upon the altar all night⁹ — this passage refers to the great pile. And the fire of the altar shall be kept burning thereby¹⁰ — this refers to the second pile for the incense.¹¹ But perhaps I should reverse it?¹² — It seems more logical that the great pile have preference because it brings more¹³ atonement — On the contrary: the second pile is of greater value, for it is introduced within [the Sanctuary].¹⁴ — Nevertheless, the one which causes more atonement is of greater value. And, if you like, say: If there be no wood found for the second pile, would one not bring it into [the Sanctuary] from the great pile?¹⁵

‘The second pile for the incense precedes the laying in order of the two logs of wood.’ Whence do we know that? — Because it is written: And the priest shall kindle wood¹⁶ upon it every morning,¹⁷ i.e., ‘upon it’,¹⁸ but not upon the other pile,¹⁹ hence we can infer that the other pile is arranged already. But the word ‘upon it’ has its own text meaning? — ‘Upon it’ is written twice.²⁰ ‘The laying in order of the two logs of wood precedes the removing of the ashes from the inner altar.’ Although touching the one it is written: ‘In the morning, in the morning’²¹ and touching the other it is also written: ‘In the morning, in the morning’²² nevertheless that which is preparatory [to the incense burning] has preference,²³ What would be preparatory [according to their reply], are the two logs of wood, but surely you said that the two logs of wood belong to the great pile!²⁴ — R. Jeremiah said: It is the laying in order of the wood.²⁵ — Rabina said:²⁶ Since he started with the laying in order [of the wood], he completes it also. R. Ashi said:²⁶ If he found no wood in the second pile, would he not bring it in from the great pile?

‘And the removal of the ashes from the inner altar precedes the trimming of the five lamps.’ Why? — Abaye said: I know it²⁷ by tradition, but I do not know the reason. Raba said: it is in accord with Resh Lakish, for Resh Lakish said: ‘One must not forego the occasion of performing a religious command’²⁸ and as he [the priest] enters the Hekal [Sanctuary], he comes first upon the altar.¹ For it was taught: The table was to the north two and one half cubits away from the wall, the candlestick was to the south, two and one half cubits away from the wall, the altar stood in the exact middle, extending somewhat outward.² But let it stand with them?³ — Since it is written: And the candlestick over against the table,⁴ it is required that they⁵ see each other. Said Raba: From what Resh Lakish said we infer that it is forbidden to forego the arm in favour of the forehead.⁶ How shall he do it? From the arm [he shall] proceed to the forehead.⁷

‘And the trimming of the five lamps is to precede the blood of the continual offering, and the blood of the continual offering is to come before the trimming of the two lamps.’ What is the reason? — Abaye said: [The phrases] ‘In the morning, in the morning’, [written] in connection with the two logs of wood,⁸ which are not necessary [there]:⁹ one¹⁰ applies to the trimming of the five lamps which shall precede the blood of the continual offering; the other applies to the blood of the continual offering which is to come before the trimming of the two lamps.¹¹ ‘One applies to the trimming of the five lamps which should precede the blood of the continual offering’, for here¹² are three¹³ [words], there only two. ‘And the other applies to the blood of the continual offering which should come before the trimming of the two lamps’, for, although in each case there are two,¹⁴ yet, that which obtains atonement¹⁵ has preference.

R. Papa said to Abaye: But say, perhaps, that one is to be applied to the removing of the ashes of the inner altar, which is to precede the blood of the continual offering, for here are three words,¹⁶ there but two; and one applies to the blood of the continual offering that should come before the trimming of the five lamps, for, although in both cases there are but two, the one that obtains atonement is to have preference? — If so, what shall he interrupt it with?¹⁷ It would be quite right according to Resh Lakish who said: The lamps were trimmed and [after interruption] trimmed again.¹⁸ in order to keep the whole Temple Court animated, but according to R. Johanan who interprets ‘In the morning, in the morning’,¹⁹ i.e., divide it into two mornings,²⁰ what could be said?²¹ Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Are the words ‘In the morning, in the morning’ in connection with the wood at all superfluous? Surely they are really necessary for their text meaning, the Divine Law saying that they should precede the second pile for the incense? He replied: Have we not explained: ‘Upon it’ but not upon the other pile, which indicated that the other must have been there already!²²

Why does he trim the five lamps first, let him trim the two lamps first! — Having started already, let him do the bigger part. Then let him trim six? — Scripture says: When he dresseth the lamps, he shall burn it,¹⁹ and ‘lamps’ is no less than two. — ‘And the trimming of the lamps is to come before the incense’, for Scripture says: ‘When he dresseth the lamps’, and afterwards [it says]. ‘He shall burn it’ [the incense].¹⁹

‘And the incense [shall precede] the limbs’ — For it was taught: Let that, in connection with which it is said ‘In the morning, in the morning’, precede that, in connection with which Scripture said only, ‘In the morning’ [once].²³

‘And the limbs [come before] the meal-offering’, for it was taught:²⁴ Whence do we know that nothing may precede²⁵ the continual offering of the dawn?

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 34a

To teach us that it said: And he shall lay the burnt-offering in order upon it,¹ and Raba said 'the burnt-offering' [means] this is the first burnt-offering.²

'And the meal-offering [shall precede] the pancakes' — [For Scripture reads]: Burnt-offering and meal-offering.³

'And the pancakes precede the drink-offerings', they, too, are considered a species of a meal-offering.

'And the drink-offerings [come before] the additional offerings as is written: A sacrifice and drink-offerings.⁴

'And the additional sacrifices [come before] the [frankincense] censers' — But has it not been taught: The [frankincense] censers come before the additional sacrifices? — This is a matter concerning which Tannaim are disputing.⁵ Abaye said: The view that the additional offerings precede the [frankincense] censers seems more logical, for did you not say that the words 'In the morning, in the morning' imply that it is to receive preference before all, thus do the words 'on the day . . . on the day'⁶ indicate that it is to be [offered up] last [in the day]. What is the reason of him who holds that the [frankincense] censers come before the additional offerings? — He infers it from the identical expression 'statute'⁷ which occurs with the pancakes. If he infers it hence, let him do so complete?⁸ — Here [the words] 'on the day . . . on the day' come in to intimate that they [the frankincense censers] are offered up last [in the day].

THE INCENSE OF THE MORNING WAS OFFERED UP BETWEEN THE LIMBS AND THE DRINK-OFFERINGS. According to whom [is this teaching]? If according to the Rabbis,⁹ it should come between the blood and the lamps;¹⁰ if according to Abba Saul, it should come between the lamps and the limbs?¹¹ — In truth it is in accord with the Rabbis, but he does not treat of the order here.¹²

THE INCENSE OF THE AFTERNOON WAS OFFERED UP BETWEEN THE [SMOKING OF THE] LIMBS AND THE DRINK-OFFERINGS. Whence do we know these things? — R. Johanan said: Because Scripture said: As the meal-offering of the morning, and as the drink-offering thereof, thou shalt present it,¹³ i.e., just as with the meal-offering of the morning the incense precedes the drink-offerings, so also here the incense shall come before the drink-offerings. But then, just as there the incense precedes the [smoking] of the limbs, here too the incense should come before the limbs? Is it written: 'As the limbs of the morning'? It is written: 'As the meal-offering of the morning', which means: As the meal-offering of the morning, but not as the [smoking of the] limbs of the morning.

Our Rabbis taught: And the drink-offering thereof shall be the fourth part of a hin:¹⁴ let him infer [the need of a drink-offering] for the morning sacrifice from the evening sacrifice.

(1) Lev. VI, 5.

(2) Cf. Hor. 12a.

(3) Lev. XXIII, 37: These are the appointed seasons of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to bring an offering made by fire unto the Lord, a burnt-offering, and a meal-offering, a sacrifice, and drink-offerings, each on its own day. This is the prescribed order, not to be interfered with.

(4) Ibid.

(5) Pes. 58a.

(6) Ibid. XXIV, 8: on the day of the Sabbath, on the day of the Sabbath, shall he set it in order before the Lord, continually. Just as 'In the morning, in the morning' was accepted as an intimation that it shall be early in the morning, so 'On the day, on the day' may fitly be assumed to be an indication that it is to be offered last in the day.

(7) Concerning the pancakes, the word 'statute' is used in Lev. VI, 15, as in connection with the frankincense censers, ibid. XXIV, 9. Just as pancakes take precedence over additional offerings, so do the frankincense censers.

(8) That the frankincense censers should have precedence over the drink-offerings too.

(9) [That the incense was offered between the trimming of the five lamps and the two lamps, v. supra 15a.]

(10) [I.e., before completing the trimming of the lamps.]

(11) V. supra 33a.

(12) [He was not too particular in regard to the details of the order (Rashi). On this view it could be also in accord with Abba Saul, but it is preferable to make the Mishnah in agreement with the majority of Rabbis (Rashi).]

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 34b

Rabbi said: For the evening sacrifice from the morning sacrifice!¹ It is quite right according to the Rabbis, for that is written [specifically] in connection with the continual offering of the evening,² but what is the ground of Rabbi's statement? — Rabbah b. 'Ulla said: Scripture said: 'For the one lamb'.³ Now which is the lamb in connection with which the word ehad [one] is used? Say: It is the lamb of the continual offering of the morning.⁴ And what do the Rabbis [reply]? — 'Ehad', i.e., the unique, the best of the flock. And [what is] Rabbi's [answer]? — He infers that⁵ from: And all your choice vows.⁶ And the Rabbis? — One speaks of freewill-[offerings], the other of obligatory [offerings] and both need special mention.⁷

IF THE HIGH PRIEST WAS OLD OR OF DELICATE HEALTH etc. It was taught: R. Judah said: Lumps of wrought iron were heated on the eve of the Day of Atonement and were cast into the cold water to mitigate the coldness. But was [one] not thereby hardening them?⁸ — R. Bibi said: [The heat] did not reach the hardening point. Abaye said: Even assume it did reach the hardening point, [a forbidden] act⁹ which was produced without intent, is permitted. But did Abaye say that? Has it not been taught:¹⁰ The flesh of his foreskin¹¹ — even though a white spot¹² is there may he cut it off,¹³ these are the words of R. Josiah. And we asked investigatively concerning it: Why is a Scriptural statement necessary for that,¹⁴ and Abaye said: This was in accord with R. Judah who said: A forbidden act produced without intent, remains forbidden!¹⁵ That applies only to forbidden things in the whole Torah,¹⁶ but here¹⁷ hardening is [forbidden] only by Rabbinic ordination. MISHNAH. THEY BROUGHT HIM TO THE PARWAH CELL-WHICH WAS ON HOLY GROUND.¹⁸ THEY SPREAD A SHEET OF BYSSUS [LINEN] BETWEEN HIM AND THE PEOPLE. HE SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND HIS FEET AND STRIPPED. R. MEIR SAID: HE STRIPPED, SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND HIS FEET. HE WENT DOWN AND IMMERSED HIMSELF, CAME UP AND DRIED HIMSELF. AFTERWARDS THEY BROUGHT HIM WHITE GARMENTS.¹⁹ HE PUT THEM ON AND SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND HIS FEET. IN THE MORNING HE PUT ON PELUSIUM LINEN WORTH TWELVE MINAS,²⁰ IN THE AFTERNOON INDIAN LINEN WORTH EIGHT HUNDRED ZUZ. THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. MEIR. THE SAGES SAY: IN THE MORNING HE PUT ON [GARMENTS] WORTH EIGHTEEN MINAS AND IN THE AFTERNOON [GARMENTS] WORTH TWELVE MINAS, ALTOGETHER THIRTY MINAS.²¹ ALL THAT AT THE CHARGE OF THE COMMUNITY²² AND IF HE WANTED TO SPEND MORE OF HIS OWN HE COULD DO SO.

(1) Just as the one requires drink-offering, so does the other. The practical difference: The case of a community who had enough for only one drink-offering. According to the opinion that one must infer the regulation for the afternoon-offering from the morning-offering, the latter is more important and the drink-offering would have to be allotted to the morning-offering. (Tosaf. s.v. 'ברי'.) The basis of the discussion: To which of the two continual offerings does the phrase 'for the one lamb' (Num. XXVIII, 7) refer? The Sages hold it refers to the last named, the afternoon-offering, whereas Rabbi holds that it recalls the morning-offering, where the same phrase ('one') is used (verse 4).

(2) The last named of the two.

(3) Num. XXVIII, 7.

(4) V. Ibid. 4.

(5) That particular meaning of 'ehad', as applied to the continual offering.

(6) Deut. XII, 11.

(7) As arguments may be advanced in favour of each requiring to be of the best, to the exclusion of the other.

(8) Which is forbidden on any holy day, how much more on the solemn Day of Atonement.

(9) Shab. 41b.

(10) Shab. 133a.

(11) Lev. XII, 3.

(12) Of leprosy, which normally must not be removed by surgery.

(13) The word 'flesh' here is superfluous, hence we infer therefrom that no matter how the flesh be (even leprous) he may circumcise it.

(14) Since it was a forbidden act produced without intent, it seems self-evident that it would be permitted. Why, then, was the Scriptural intimation necessary?

(15) Abaye, who held that this intimation supported the view of R. Judah, evidently agrees with him.

(16) By the Torah proper, the Five Books of Moses, as against the Torah in general, the sum total of the Jewish law and tradition. Prohibitions of the Torah are more serious, hence even unintended transgression remains forbidden.

(17) The prohibition dealt with here.

(18) The first immersion, on top of the Water Gate, took place on profane ground; this, however, had to be performed on holy ground, as part of the service of the Day of Atonement.

(19) The four garments prescribed for the special service of the Day of Atonement: the tunic, the breeches, the girdle and the mitre, Lev. XVI, 4.

(20) One mina is worth about £ 3.

(21) As long as one spends more for the morning garments than for the evening garments, there is no regulation to enforce the exact sum mentioned in the Mishnah. V. infra. The evening garment was put on by the high priest for the sole purpose of removing spoon and coal-pan from the Holy of Holies, whereas the rest of the special service of the Day of Atonement was performed by him in the morning garment, hence it has to be the better of the two.

(22) Var. lec.: So much he received from the Temple treasury. V. Bah.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 35a

GEMARA. What does 'Parwah' mean? — R. Joseph said: Parwah is [the name of] a [Persian] Magus.¹

THEY SPREAD A SHEET OF BYSSUS [LINEN] BETWEEN HIM AND THE PEOPLE. Why was it of Byssus [linen]? R. Kahana said: That he may perceive that the service of the day was [to be performed] in garments of Byssus [linen].

IN THE MORNING HE PUT ON PELUSIUM LINEN WORTH EIGHTEEN MINAS: Does the Tanna wish to teach us summing up?² — This is what he teaches us: One should spend neither more nor less than the sum total, but it does not matter whether one spends less for the one or more for the other. Now everybody, at any rate, agrees that the garments for the morning are more important, whence do we know that? — R. Huna, the son of R. Elai said: Scripture said: Linen . . . linen . . . linen . . . linen,³ i.e., the choicest linen.

(1) Rabbenu Hananel reported that according to some scholars, Parwah had dug a cave under the ground of the Sanctuary, so that he might be able to watch the high priest at the service of the Day of Atonement. The Sages, noticing the digging, sought and found the cave, and hence called the cell after him.

(2) The summing up seems superfluous, it is too simple to warrant the statement by the Tanna.

(3) Lev. XVI, 4, in connection with the putting on of the garments in the morning. Four times, as if to indicate the best of all possible linen.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 35b

An objection was raised: And they shall put on other garments and they shall not sanctify the people with their garments.¹ Would you not say that 'other' implies better garments? — No, 'other' implies inferior ones.

R. Huna b. Judah, or, as some say, R. Samuel b. Judah learnt: After the community service is over, a priest for whom his mother made a tunic, may put it on and perform therein private service,² provided he hands it over to the community. Is that not self-evident?³ You might have said: Let us fear he may not hand it over properly,⁴ therefore he teaches us that we have no such fear.

They told about R. Ishmael b. Phabi⁵ that his mother made him a tunic worth one hundred minas which he put on to officiate at a 'private' service and then handed it over to the community. They told about R. Eleazar b. Harsom⁶ that his mother made him a tunic worth twenty thousand minas and his brethren, the priests, would not suffer him to put it on because he looked like one naked. But how could it be transparent, did not a Master say the thread [of the priestly garments] was six times twisted? — Abaye said: [It was visible] even as wine shines through a [glass] cup.⁷

Our Rabbis taught: The poor, the rich, the sensual⁸ come before the [heavenly] court — They say to the poor: Why have you not occupied yourself with the Torah? If he says: I was poor and worried about my sustenance, they would say to him: Were you poorer than Hillel? It was reported about Hillel the Elder that every day he used to work and earn one tropaik,⁹ half of which he would give to the guard at the House of Learning, the other half being spent for his food and for that of his family. One day he found nothing to earn and the guard at the House of Learning would not permit him to enter. He climbed up and sat upon the window,¹⁰ to hear the words of the living God from the mouth of Shemayah and Abtalion — They say, that day was the eve of Sabbath in the winter solstice and snow fell down upon him from heaven. When the dawn rose,¹¹ Shemayah said to Abtalion: Brother Abtalion, on every day this house is light and to-day it is dark, is it perhaps a cloudy day. They looked up and saw the figure of a man in the window. They went up and found him covered by three cubits of snow. They removed him, bathed and anointed him and placed him opposite the fire and they said: This man deserves that the Sabbath be profaned on his behalf.

To the rich man they said: Why have you not occupied yourself with the Torah? If he said: I was rich and occupied with my possessions, they would say to him: Were you perchance richer than R. Eleazar? It was reported about R. Eleazar b. Harsom that his father left him a thousand cities on the continent and over against that one thousand boats on the sea. Every day he would take a sack of flour on his shoulder and go from city to city and from province to province to study the Torah. One day his servants found him¹² and seized him for public service. He said to them: I beg of you, let me go to study the Torah. They said: By the life of R. Eleazar b. Harsom, we shall not let you go. [He gave them much money so that they let him go].¹³ He had never seen them, for he was sitting all day and night, occupying himself with the Torah. To the sensual person they would say: Why have you not occupied yourself with the Torah? If he said: I was beautiful and upset by sensual passion, they would say to him: Were you perchance more beautiful than Joseph? It was told of Joseph the virtuous that the wife of Potiphar every day endeavoured to entice him with words — The garments she put on for him in the morning, she did not wear in the evening, those she had put on in the evening, she did not wear in the morning. She said to him: Yield to me! He said: No. She said: I shall have you imprisoned. He said: The Lord releases the bound.¹⁴ She said: I shall bend thy proud stature.¹⁵ He replied: The Lord raises those who are bowed down.¹⁶ She said: I shall blind your eyes. He replied: The Lord opens the eyes of the blind.¹⁶ She offered him a thousand talents of silver to make him yield to her, to lie with her, to be near her,¹⁷ but he would not listen to her; not to 'lie with her' in this world, not 'to be with her' in the world to come. — Thus [the example of] Hillel condemns the poor, [the example of] R. Eleazar b. Harsom condemns the rich, and Joseph the virtuous condemns the sensual.

MISHNAH. HE CAME TO HIS¹⁸ BULLOCK AND HIS BULLOCK WAS STANDING BETWEEN THE HALL¹⁹ AND THE ALTAR,²⁰ ITS HEAD TO THE SOUTH AND ITS FACE TO THE WEST.²¹ AND THE PRIEST STOOD IN THE EAST WITH HIS FACE TO THE WEST.²² AND HE PRESSED BOTH HIS HANDS UPON IT²³ AND MADE Confession. AND THUS HE WOULD SAY: O LORD!²⁴ I HAVE DONE WRONG, I HAVE TRANSGRESSED, I HAVE SINNED BEFORE THEE, I AND MY HOUSE. O LORD! FORGIVE THE WRONGDOINGS, THE TRANSGRESSIONS, THE SINS WHICH I HAVE COMMITTED AND TRANSGRESSED AND SINNED BEFORE THEE, I AND MY HOUSE, AS IT IS WRITTEN IN THE TORAH OF MOSES THY SERVANT: FOR ON THIS DAY SHALL ATONEMENT BE MADE FOR YOU [TO CLEANSE YOU; FROM ALL YOUR SINS SHALL YE BE CLEAN BEFORE THE LORD].²⁵ AND THEY²⁶ ANSWERED AFTER HIM: BLESSED BE THE NAME OF HIS GLORIOUS KINGDOM FOR EVER AND EVER!

(1) Ezek. XLIV, 19. [The prohibition of the use of woolen garments in verse 17 shows that the reference is to the Day of Atonement, as on other days some of the priestly garments were made of wool; further, the words 'and they shall put on other garments' are taken as applying to their return in the afternoon into the inner court after they had gone forth into the outer court to put off their garments with which they ministered in the morning, and the words 'they shall not sanctify the people with their garments' are taken as a separate command forbidding the use by the priests of the garments of ministry when not in actual service (Rashi).]

(2) The removal of the spoon and coal-pan, which may be done even when the community is absent, hence is called 'individual or private service.

GEMARA. Whom did you hear saying that the place between Hall and altar was [considered] north?¹ R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, for it was taught: What is [considered] north? From the northern wall of the altar up to the [northern] wall of the Temple court and opposite the whole altar on the north,² this is the opinion of R. Jose son of R. Judah. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon adds also the space between the Hall and the altar.³ Rabbi adds also the space for the treading of the priests and the place for the treading of the Israelites within,⁴ and all agree that from the inside of the knives' cell⁵ it was illegitimate.⁶ Shall we [then] say that the Mishnah is in accord with R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, but not with Rabbi? — You can even say that it is in accord with Rabbi, for if he adds even⁷ to what R. Jose son of R. Judah says, will he not add to [the space defined by] R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon!⁸ This is what we mean: If it were in accord with Rabbi, it⁹ could be placed anywhere in the whole Temple court! What, then [would you maintain] that [the Mishnah] is in accord with R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon! But then it ought to be placed anywhere between altar and wall?¹⁰ You must consequently say that the reason¹¹ is to avoid the high priest getting tired;¹² thus also, on the view of Rabbi, the reason¹¹ is to avoid the high priest getting tired.

ITS HEAD TO THE SOUTH, AND ITS FACE TO THE WEST. How is that possible?— Rab answered: The priest turns its head — But let him place it straight?¹³ — Abaye said: We are afraid it might drop excrements. Our Rabbis taught:¹⁴ How does one press [the hands on the head of the sacrifice]?¹⁵ The sacrifice stands to the north,¹⁶ with its face to the west, and he who presses¹⁷ [the hands] stands to the east, with his face to the west, and lays his two hands between the two horns of the sacrifice, that nothing may intervene between him and the sacrifice¹⁸ — and he makes confession. With a sin-offering [he makes confession] of the sin [committed]; with a guilt-offering, of the guilt incurred; with a burnt-offering, of the transgressions in connection with gleanings,¹⁹ the forgotten sheaf,²⁰ the corner of the field,¹⁹ and the poor tithe²¹ — these are the words of R. Jose the Galilean. R. Akiba said: A burnt-offering is offered up exclusively for transgression of a positive command or of a prohibition transformed into a command.²² In what do they differ? R. Jeremiah said:

(1) [For the purposes of slaughtering the sacrifice of the high priest, which, as belonging to the highest grade of sanctity had to be slaughtered on the north side. Such must be the view of the Mishnah which states that the bullock was placed between the Hall and the altar for confession as well as for slaughtering purposes, v. infra 41b: 'At the place where the confession was made there it was slaughtered'.]

(2) Only the thirty-two cubits to the north and facing the altar are considered part of the north, where the slaughtering of sacrifices of the highest grade of sanctity is legitimate, but not the space east and west of the altar, although lying to the north of the Temple court, for the biblical command states: And he shall kill it on the side of the altar northward before the Lord. (Lev. I, 11), for though these parts are to the north of the Temple court, they are not to the north of the altar.

(3) [He includes the space on the north side of the Temple court extending westwards, although not exactly facing the northern wall of the altar.]

(4) Eleven cubits each. He includes the whole north of the Temple court, even to the eastern wall.

(5) V. Mid. IV, 7, to the north and south of the Temple court. This cell, fifteen cubits to the north, fifteen to the south, ten from east to west, had twenty-four apertures where the twenty-four divisions of priests kept their knives.

(6) From the knives' cell within it was impossible to see the wall altar, hence it was forbidden to slaughter it there, Zeb. 20a.

(7) Surely when he declares that space which, is further away is legitimate he will not declare forbidden that which is nearer!

(8) [The text is difficult. MS. M. omits 'You can even say it is in accord with Rabbi'.]

(9) The high priest's bullock.

(10) On the north of the Temple court.

(11) For placing it between the Hall and the altar.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 36b

They differ concerning the prohibition of carrion,¹ R. Akiba holding it to be a proper prohibition,² whilst R. Jose the Galilean does not consider it a proper prohibition.³ Abaye said: Everybody agrees that the prohibition of carrion is a proper prohibition, what they differ in is the laws touching 'Thou shalt leave',⁴ R. Akiba holding 'Thou shalt leave' means from the very beginning,⁵ whilst R. Jose the Galilean holds it means 'now'.⁶ Our Rabbis taught:⁷ How does he make confession: I have done wrong, I have transgressed I have sinned — Similarly, in connection with the he-goat to be sent away Scripture says: And he shall confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions even in their sins.⁸ Similarly, with Moses, it says: Forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin⁹ — these are the words of R. Meir. The Sages, however, say: 'Wrongs' are deliberate misdeeds, thus also does Scripture say: That soul shall be utterly cut off, his wrong shall be upon him,¹⁰ 'transgressions' are rebellious deeds, as it is said: The King of Moab hath transgressed against me;¹¹ furthermore: Then did Libnah transgress at the same time; 'sins'¹² are inadvertent omissions, as it is said: If any one shall sin through error.¹³ — Should he then, after having confessed the deliberate misdeeds and the rebellious deeds, turn back and confess inadvertent omissions?¹⁴ Rather, thus did he make confession: I have sinned, I have done wrong, I have transgressed before Thee, I and my house etc. Thus also does Scripture say in connection with David: We have sinned with our fathers, we have done wrong, we have dealt wickedly.¹⁵ Thus also with Solomon: We have sinned, and have done wrong, we have dealt wickedly.¹⁶ Thus also with Daniel: We have sinned, and have dealt wrong, and have done wickedly.¹⁷ — What is the meaning, then, of Moses' saying: 'Forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin'?¹⁸ Moses said before the Holy One, blessed be He: Lord of the Universe, when Israel sin before Thee and then do penance, account their premeditated sins as errors! Rabbah b. Samuel said in the name of Rab: The halachah is in accord with the Sages. But [that is] self-evident, for 'Where the opinion of one individual is opposed to the opinion of a majority, the law follows the majority'.¹⁹ — You might have said: The reason of R. Meir appears more logical because the scriptural verse of Moses²⁰ supports it, therefore we are taught [as above].

Once a man went down²¹ before Rabbah and arranged his prayer in accord with R. Meir's view. He said to him: Do you forsake the Sages and act like R. Meir? — He answered: I hold as R. Meir, for thus it is written in the Torah of Moses.

Our Rabbis taught.²² And shall make atonement²³ — Scripture speaks of atonement through words.²⁴ You say it refers to atonement through words. But perhaps it refers to atonement [obtained] through [sacrificial] blood? I infer it thus: Here 'atonement is mentioned and there²⁵ 'atonement' is mentioned — Just as the atonement mentioned in connection with the he-goat is one through words, so the atonement mentioned with the bullock is one obtained through words. And if you wish to argue against it, then [learn from]: And Aaron shall present the bullock for the sin-offering, which is for himself and shall make atonement for himself and for his house,²³ yet the bullock has not been slaughtered!²⁶ What does 'And if you wish to argue against it' imply? — This: And if you would say: Let us infer from the he-goat prepared within the Temple, the atonement of which is obtained through blood, behold [against that argument] Scripture says: 'And he shall make atonement', and the bullock has not been slaughtered yet!

(1) Carrion-an animal that has died a natural death; also whatever has become unfit through faulty slaughtering.

(2) [For which lashes are inflicted, and for which a burnt-offering does not atone.]

(3) Because once one has eaten the carrion, it is no more possible to sell it to the stranger or give it to the sojourner as prescribed in Deut. XIV, 21, R. Akiba holding it a proper prohibition, for the transgression of which one would be punished with the prescribed thirty-nine lashes, the fact that one cannot repair the transgression notwithstanding. According to R. Jose no such punishment would here be inflicted, hence it is not a proper prohibition.

(4) Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither gather the fallen fruit of thy vineyard. Thou shalt leave them for the poor and for the stranger. (Lev. XIX, 9.)

(5) V. next note.

(6) Here is another instance of a prohibition transformed into a command: Thou shalt not glean . . . thou shalt leave them. R. Akiba holds the positive commandment is enjoined from the very first, that is, thus: do not glean but leave; hence it is not a prohibition transformed into a command, but a command from the beginning; whilst R. Jose assumes that it is a de facto command: Don't glean, but having gleaned, undo your transgression by leaving it etc.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 37a

— Whence do we know that [the confession] starts with 'O'? — Here the expression 'atonement' is used and there, in connection with Mount Horeb,¹ the expression 'atonement' is used, [hence the inference that] just as it started there with 'O' so must it start here with 'O' Whence do we know that the Name³ is to be pronounced here?—Here the word 'atonement' is used and in connection with the heifer whose neck is to be broken⁴ the word 'atonement' is used, [hence the inference that] just as there the Name is pronounced, so is it to be pronounced here. Abaye said: It is quite right that we cannot make inference for Horeb from the heifer whose neck is to be broken,⁵ because that is a past affair, but why should one not infer for the heifer whose neck is to be broken from what happened at [Mount] Horeb?⁶ — And if you will say 'indeed so', but have we not learned:⁷ 'The priests say: Forgive Thy people Israel',⁸ but they mention nothing about 'O!'— This is a difficulty.

AND THEY ANSWERED AFTER HIM: It was taught: Rabbi said, [commenting on]: For I will proclaim the name of the Lord; Ascribe ye greatness unto our God:⁹ Moses said to Israel: When I mention the name of the Holy One, blessed be He, ascribe greatness [unto Him]; Hananyah, the son of the brother of R. Joshua said [commenting on]: The memory of the righteous shall be for a blessing:¹⁰ The prophet said to Israel: When I make reference to the Righteous One of all the Worlds, say a blessing!

MISHNAH. HE THEN WENT BACK TO THE EAST OF THE TEMPLE COURT, TO THE NORTH OF THE ALTAR, THE DEPUTY HIGH PRIEST¹¹ AT HIS RIGHT AND THE HEAD OF THE FAMILY¹² [MINISTERING THAT WEEK] AT HIS LEFT. THERE WERE TWO HE-GOATS¹³ AND AN URN¹⁴ CONTAINING TWO LOTS. THEY WERE OF BOX-WOOD. BEN GAMALA MADE THEM OF GOLD AND THEREFORE HE WAS PRAISED. BEN KATIN MADE TWELVE SPIGOTS FOR THE LAVER,¹⁵ FOR THERE HAD BEEN BEFORE BUT TWO. HE ALSO MADE A MACHINE FOR THE LAVER, IN ORDER THAT ITS WATER SHOULD NOT BECOME UNFIT BY REMAINING OVERNIGHT.¹⁶ KING MONOBAZ¹⁷ HAD ALL THE HANDLES OF ALL THE VESSELS USED ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT MADE OF GOLD. HIS MOTHER HELENA¹⁸ HAD A GOLDEN CANDLESTICK MADE OVER THE DOOR OF THE HEKAL. SHE ALSO HAD A GOLDEN TABLET MADE, ON WHICH THE PORTION TOUCHING THE SUSPECTED ADULTERESS¹⁹ WAS INSCRIBED. NICANOR²⁰ EXPERIENCED MIRACLES WITH HIS GATES AND HIS MONEY WAS PRAISED.

GEMARA. Since [the Mishnah] reads: TO THE NORTH OF THE ALTAR, one infers that the altar was not standing in the north.²¹ Whose opinion represents our Mishnah? The opinion of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, for it was taught: Northward before the Lord,²² i.e., the north must be fully unoccupied — this is the opinion of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.²³ But the first part of the Mishnah is in accord with R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon? — The whole of the Mishnah is in accord with R. Eliezer b. Jacob,²⁴ but read there: In the space between Hall and altar.

THE DEPUTY HIGH PRIEST AT HIS RIGHT AND THE HEAD OF THE FAMILY AT HIS LEFT: Rab Judah said:²⁵ One who walks at his master's right hand is a boor. [But] we have learnt: THE DEPUTY HIGH PRIEST AT HIS RIGHT AND THE HEAD OF THE [MINISTERING] FAMILY AT HIS LEFT; and furthermore, it was taught:²⁶ Of three walking along, the teacher should walk in the middle, the greater of his disciples to his right, the smaller one at his left, and thus do we find that of the three angels who came to visit Abraham, Michael went in the middle, Gabriel at his right,²⁷ Raphael at his left? — R. Samuel b. Papa interpreted [the first saying] before R. Adda: [It is wrong only, if] he [the teacher] be hidden by him — But has it not been taught: One who walks in front of his teacher is a boor, one who walks behind him is arrogant? — [It is assumed here] that he turns sideways.

AND THERE WAS A CASKET WHEREIN THERE WERE TWO LOTS: Our Rabbis taught: [with reference to] And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats²⁸ — ‘lots’, i.e., made of any material. One might have assumed that he should cast two lots on the head of each,²⁹ therefore [Scripture repeats]: One lot for the Lord and the other lot for Azazel,²⁸ i.e., there is but one lot ‘for the Lord’, and there is but one lot ‘for Azazel’ — One might have assumed that he shall give upon the head of each²⁹ a lot each ‘for the Lord’ and ‘for Azazel’, therefore Scripture says: ‘One lot for the Lord’, i.e., there is but one lot ‘for the Lord’ and but one lot ‘for Azazel’ — Why then does Scripture say: [he shall cast] ‘lots’? [That means to say] that they must be alike: he must not make one of gold and the other of silver, one large, the other small; ‘lots’ [means they may be made] of any material. But that is self-evident? — No, it is necessary [to state that], as it was taught: Since we find that the [high priest's] front-plate had the name of the Lord inscribed thereon and was made of gold, I might have assumed that this too must be made of gold, hence it says [twice] ‘lot’ . . . ‘lot’, to include [permission to make it of] olive-wood, nut-wood or box-wood.³⁰ BEN KATIN MADE TWELVE SPIGOTS FOR THE LAVER: A Tanna taught: In order that his twelve brethren, the priests, who were occupied with the continual offering, may be able to sanctify their hands and feet simultaneously.³¹

A Tanna taught:³² In the morning, when the laver was full, he sanctified his hands and feet from the upper spigot; in the evening, when [the water] was low, he sanctified his hands and feet from the lower spigot.

HE ALSO MADE A MACHINE FOR THE LAVER: What machine was that? — Abaye said: A wheel which let it go down [to the pit].

KING MONOBAZ MADE ALL THE HANDLES FOR THE VESSELS etc.: He should have made [the vessels] them[selves] of gold?

Ben Katin's machine () connected the laver with the well, thus retaining for it the undisturbable freshness of the well, hence, when drawn up in the morning, by means of the wheel, it remained valid for sacred use. The heavy laver, until then, had to be filled every morning afresh, after being emptied of last night's water — a laborious, time-wasting effort.

— Abaye said: [Reference here is made to] the handles of the knives.

The following objection was raised: He also made of gold the base of the vessels, the rims of the vessels, the handles of the vessels and the handles of the knives [used on the Day of Atonement]? — Abaye explained: These are the helms of axes and adzes.

HIS MOTHER HELENA MADE A CANDLESTICK OF GOLD etc.: A Tanna taught:¹ When the sun was shining, sparkling rays proceeded from it and all knew then that the time had arrived for the reading of the [morning] Shema'.² An objection was raised: One who reads the Shema' in the morning together with the linen of the [priestly] Mishmar or the [laymen] Ma'amad,³ has not fulfilled his duty, because the men of the Mishmar read it early and the men of the Ma'amad read it too late.⁴ — Abaye said: It was for the rest of the people of Jerusalem.

SHE ALSO MADE A TABLET: Do you not conclude from this that one may write a scroll for a child for practising purposes?⁵ — Resh Lakish said in the name of R. Jannai: Alphabetically.⁶ An objection was raised: Whilst writing he⁷ looks unto the tablet and copies what is written on the tablet?⁸ — Say: He looks and writes as it is written on the tablet.⁹ He raised this objection: When he NICANOR EXPERIENCED MIRACLES WITH HIS DOORS: Our Rabbis taught: What miracles happened to his doors? It was reported that when Nicanor had gone to fetch doors² from Alexandria of Egypt, on his return a gale arose in the sea to drown him. Thereupon they took one of his doors and cast it into the sea and yet the sea would not stop its rage. When, thereupon, they prepared to cast the other into the sea, he rose and clung to it, saying: 'Cast me in with it!' [They did so, and] the sea stopped Immediately its raging. He was deeply grieved about the other [door]. As he arrived at the harbour of Acco, it broke through and came up from under the sides of the boat. — Others say: A monster of the sea swallowed it and spat it out on the dry land Touching this, Solomon said: The beams of our houses are cedars, and our panels are berothim [cypresses].³ Do not read 'berothim [cypresses] but 'brith yam',⁴ I.e., covenant of the sea'. — Therefore all the gates in the Sanctuary were changed for golden ones with the exception of the Nicanor gates because of the miracles wrought with them. But some say: Because the bronze of which they were made had a golden hue.⁵ R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: It was Corinthian bronze,⁶ which shone like gold.

MISHNAH. AND THESE WERE MENTIONED TO THEIR SHAME: THEY OF THE HOUSE OF GARMU WOULD NOT TEACH ANYTHING ABOUT THE PREPARATION OF THE SHEWBREAD;⁷ THEY OF THE HOUSE OF ABTINAS WOULD NOT TEACH ANYTHING ABOUT THE PREPARATION OF THE INCENSE; HYGROS, SON [OF THE TRIBE] OF LEVI KNEW A CADENCE⁸ IN SONG BUT WOULD NOT TEACH IT; BEN KAMZAR WOULD NOT TEACH ANYONE HIS ART OF WRITING.⁹ CONCERNING THE FORMER IT IS SAID: THE MEMORY OF THE RIGHTEOUS SHALL BE FOR A BLESSING;¹⁰ CONCERNING THE OTHERS IT IS SAID: BUT THE NAME OF THE WICKED SHALL ROT.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: The house of Garmu was expert in preparing the shewbread, but would not teach it — The Sages sent for specialists from Alexandria of Egypt, who knew how to bake as well as they, but they did not know how to take [the loaves] down [from the oven] as well as the former, for they were heating the oven from without and baked from within, whereas the latter heated the oven from within and baked from within [with the result] that the bread of the latter became mouldy, whereas the bread of the former did not grow mouldy. When the Sages heard that, they quoted: Everyone that is called by My name [and whom] I have created for My glory,¹¹ and said: Let the house of Garmu return to their office. The Sages sent for them, but they would not come. Then they doubled their hire and they came. [Until now] they used to get twelve minas for the day, [from] that day, twenty-four minas. R. Judah said: [Until then] they received twenty-four minas per day, [from] that day they received forty-eight minas. The Sages said to them: What ground did you see for refusing to teach [your art]? They said to them: In our father's house they knew that this House will be destroyed, and perhaps an unworthy man would learn it and then proceed to serve an idol with it. — For the following was their memory honoured: Never was fine bread to be found in their children's hand, lest people say: These feed from the [preparation of]¹² the shewbread — Thus [they endeavoured] to fulfil [the command]: Ye shall be clear before the Lord and before Israel.¹³

THEY OF THE HOUSE OF ABTINAS WOULD NOT TEACH ANYTHING ABOUT THE PREPARATION OF THE INCENSE. Our Rabbis taught: The house of Abtinah were expert in preparing the incense but would not teach [their art]. The Sages sent for specialists from Alexandria of Egypt, who knew how to compound incense as well as they, but did not know how to make the smoke ascend as well as they. The smoke of the former ascended [as straight] as a stick, whereas the smoke of the latter was scattered in every direction. When the Sages heard thereof, they quoted: 'Everyone that is called by My name, I have created for My glory',¹⁴ as it is said: The Lord hath made everything for His own purpose,¹⁵ and [said]: The house of Abtinah may return to their [wonted] place. The Sages sent for them, but they would not come. Then they doubled their hire and they came. Every day [thitherto] they would receive twelve minas, [from] that day twenty-four. The Sages said to them: What reason did you have for not teaching [your art]? They said: They knew in our father's house that this House is going to be destroyed and they said: Perhaps an unworthy man will learn [this art] and will serve an idol therewith. — And for the following reason was their memory kept in honour: Never did a bride of their house go forth perfumed and when they married a woman from elsewhere they expressly forbade her to do so lest people say: From [the preparation of] the incense they are perfuming themselves. [They did so] to fulfil the command: 'Ye shall be clear before the Lord and before Israel.'¹⁶

It was taught: R. Ishmael said: Once I was walking on the way and I came upon one of their children's children and I said to him: Your forefathers sought to increase their glory and to reduce the glory of the Creator, now the glory of the Creator is at its wonted place, and He has reduced their glory. R. Akiba said: R. Ishmael b. Luga related to me: One day I and one of their descendants went to the field to gather herbs and I saw him crying and laughing. I said to him: 'Why did you cry?' He answered: 'I recalled the glory of my ancestors' — 'And why did you laugh happily?' He replied: 'Because the Holy One, blessed be He, will restore it to us' — 'And what caused you to remember?' He said: 'There is smoke-raiser¹⁷ before me'. 'Show it to me!' He said to me: 'We are bound by oath not to show it to any person' — R. Johanan b. Nuri said: Once I came upon an old man, who had a scroll [containing prescriptions] for frankincense in his hand. I asked him: 'Whence are you [derived]?' He said: 'I come from the house of Abtinah' — 'What have you in your hand?' He replied: 'A scroll [containing prescriptions] for frankincense.' 'Show it to me!' He said: 'As long as my father's house was alive they would not surrender it to any one, but now here it is, but be very careful about it — When I came and told thereof to R. Akiba he said: 'Henceforth it is forbidden to speak of them in dispraise' — Referring to this¹⁸ Ben 'Azzai said: By your name you will be called, to your place you will be restored

Made of some four quarts of flour, they were about one half inch in thickness, some twenty-eight inches in length, some twelve inches in breadth. There were some artistic devices at the corners, which made the preparation a highly difficult art. They would be baked on Friday, often on Wednesday, to be eaten on the Sabbath of the following week, and extraordinary skill was required to keep them fresh and well-tasting. The secret of the baking and removing them, from the oven without breaking them was kept by the house of Garmu, for failure to reveal which they are branded here. The Talmud, however, adduces some mitigating reasons for this apparent niggardliness.

and from what belongs¹ to you will you be given. No man can touch what is prepared for his fellow and 'One kingdom does not interfere with the other² even to the extent of one hair's breadth'.³

HYGROS OF THE TRIBE OF LEVI etc. It was taught: When he tuned his voice to a trill, he would put his thumb into his mouth and place his finger [on the division line] between the two parts of the moustache, so that his brethren, the priests, staggered backward with a sudden movement.⁴

Our Rabbis taught: Ben Kamzar would not teach anything about [his art of] writing. It was said about him that he would take four pens between his fingers and if there was a word of four letters⁵ he would write it at once. They said to him: 'What reason have you for refusing to teach it?' All found an answer for their matter [attitude]. Ben Kamzar could not find one. Concerning [all] former ones it is said: 'The memory of the righteous shall be for a blessing', with regard to Ben Kamzar and his like it is said: 'But the name of the wicked shall rot' — What is the meaning of 'But the name of the wicked shall rot'? — R. Eleazar said: Rottenness enters their names, none name their children after them.

Rabina raised an objection: The story of Doeg b. Joseph whom his father left to his mother when he was a young child: Every day his mother would measure him by handbreadths⁶ and would give his [extra] weight in gold to the Sanctuary. And when the enemy prevailed, she slaughtered him and ate him, and concerning her Jeremiah lamented: Shall the women eat their fruit, their children that are handled in the hands?⁷ Whereupon the Holy Spirit replied: Shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the Sanctuary of the Lord?⁸ — See what happened to him!⁹

R. Eleazar said: The righteous man is remembered by his own [good deeds], the wicked [also] by those of his fellow. [Proof that] the righteous [is remembered] by his own [good deeds], for it is written: 'The memory of the righteous shall be for a blessing'. The wicked [is remembered also] by his associate['s wickedness], for it is written: 'But the name of the wicked [pl.] shall rot.' — Rabina said to one of the Rabbis who expounded Aggada before him: Whence is this statement, which the Rabbis mention: The memory of the righteous shall be for a blessing? — He replied: It is a scriptural verse: 'The memory of the righteous shall be for a blessing.' Whence, in the Torah, may that teaching be derived? — From what is written: Shall I hide from Abraham that which I am doing?¹⁰ And it is [there] also written: Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation.¹¹ [He asked further]: Whence do we know this matter, which the Rabbis mention: But the name of the wicked shall rot? — He replied: It is a scriptural verse: 'But the name of the wicked shall rot'. Whence, in the Torah, may this teaching be derived? — From what is written: And he moved his tent as far as Sodom,¹² and it is written: Now the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners against the Lord exceedingly.¹³

R. Eleazar said: A righteous man once lived between two wicked men and did not learn from their deeds, a wicked man lived between two righteous men and did not learn from their ways — The righteous who lived between two wicked men and did not learn from their wicked ways was Obadiah.¹⁴ The wicked man living between two righteous men and not learning from their ways was Esau.

R. Eleazar [also] said: From the blessing of the righteous you can infer the curse for the wicked and from the curse of the wicked you may infer the blessing for the righteous — From the blessing of the righteous you can infer the curse for the wicked, as it is written: For I have known him, to the end that he may command,¹⁵ and [soon] after that it is written: And the Lord said: Verily the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great.¹⁶ From the curse of the wicked you can infer the blessing for the righteous, for it is written: Now the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners against the Lord exceedingly.¹⁷ And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him . . . [all the land, which thou seest, to thee will I give . . .]¹⁸

R. Eleazar further said: Even for the sake of a single righteous man would this world have been created for it is said: And God saw the light that it was [for one who is] good,¹⁹ and 'good' means but the righteous, as it is said: Say ye of the righteous that he is the good one.²⁰

R. Eleazar said also: Whoever forgets [through neglect] any part of his study, causes his children to go into exile, as it is said: Seeing that thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I also will forget thy children.²¹ R. Abbahu said: Such a one is deprived of his greatness, as it is said: Because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me.²²

R. Hiyya b. Abba said in the name of R. Johanan: No righteous man dies out of this world, before another, like himself, is created,²³ as it is said: The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down²⁴ , — before the sun of Eli set, the sun of Samuel of Ramathaim rose. R. Hiyya b. Abba also said in the name of R. Johanan: The Holy One, blessed be He, saw that the righteous are but few, therefore He planted them throughout all generations, as it is said: For the pillars of the earth are the Lord's, and He hath set the world upon them.²⁵

R. Hiyya b. Abba said also in the name of R. Johanan: Even for the sake of a single righteous man does the world endure, as it is said: But the righteous is the foundation of the world.²⁶ R. Hiyya himself infers this from here: He will keep the feet of His holy ones²⁷ 'Holy ones' means many? — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: It is written: His holy' one.²⁷

R. Hiyya b. Abba said further in the name of R. Johanan: When the majority of a man's years have passed without sin, he will no more sin, as it is said: 'He will keep the feet of His holy ones'. In the school of Shila it was taught that if the opportunity for sin has come to a man the first and the second time and he resisted, he will never sin, as it is said: 'He will keep the feet of His holy ones'.²⁸

Resh Lakish said: What is the meaning of: If it concerneth the scorers He scorneth them, but unto the humble He giveth grace?²⁹ i.e., if a man comes to defile himself, the doors are opened to him, but if he comes to purify himself, he is helped. In the school of R. Ishmael it was taught: It is as when a man sells naphtha and balm

: If [a purchaser] comes to measure naphtha, he [the shopkeeper] says to him: Measure it out for yourself; but to one who would measure out balm he says: Wait, till I measure together with you, so that both I and you, may become perfumed.

The school of R. Ishmael taught: Sin dulls the heart of man, as it is said: Neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled thereby.¹ Read not we-nitmethem [that you should be defiled], but u-netamothem [that you should become dullhearted].² Our Rabbis taught: 'Neither shall you make yourselves unclean that you should be defiled thereby.' If a man defiles himself a little, he becomes much defiled: [if he defile himself] below, he becomes defiled from above; if he defile himself in this world, he becomes defiled in the world to come. Our Rabbis taught: Sanctify yourselves, therefore, and be ye holy:³ If a man sanctify himself a little, he becomes much sanctified. [If he sanctify himself] below, he becomes sanctified from above; if he sanctify himself in this world, he becomes sanctified in the world to come.

CHAPTER IV

MISHNAH. HE SHOOK⁴ THE URN AND BROUGHT UP THE TWO LOTS. ON ONE WAS INSCRIBED: 'FOR THE LORD', AND ON THE OTHER: 'FOR AZAZEL'. THE DEPUTY HIGH PRIEST WAS AT HIS RIGHT HAND, THE HEAD OF THE [MINISTERING] FAMILY AT HIS LEFT. IF THE LOT [HAVING] 'FOR THE LORD' [INSCRIBED THEREON] CAME UP IN HIS RIGHT HAND, THE DEPUTY HIGH PRIEST WOULD SAY TO HIM: SIR HIGH PRIEST, RAISE THY RIGHT HAND! AND IF THE LOT [WITH THE INSCRIPTION] 'FOR THE LORD' CAME UP IN HIS LEFT HAND, THE HEAD OF THE FAMILY WOULD SAY: SIR HIGH PRIEST, RAISE THY LEFT HAND! THEN HE PLACED THEM ON THE TWO HE-GOATS AND SAID: A SIN-OFFERING 'UNTO THE LORD!' R. ISHMAEL SAID: HE DID NOT NEED TO SAY: A SIN-OFFERING, BUT 'UNTO THE LORD'. AND THEY ANSWERED AFTER HIM: BLESSED BE THE NAME OF HIS GLORIOUS KINGDOM FOR EVER AND EVER!⁵

GEMARA. Why was it necessary to shake the urn? — Lest he take one intentionally.⁶ Raba said: The urn was of wood and profane and could hold no more than the two hands [at its mouth]. — Rabina demurred to this: It is quite right that [its mouth] could contain no more than his two hands, i.e., to prevent his taking one intentionally [through manipulation] but why should it be profane? Let it be sanctified? — That would result in our having a ministering vessel of wood, and we do not make ministering vessels of wood. Then let it be made of silver, or of gold? — 'The Torah has consideration for the money of Israel'.⁷

Our Mishnah is not in accordance with the following Tanna, for it was taught: R. Judah said in the name of R. Eliezer: The deputy high priest and the high priest put their hand into the urn. If the lot ['For the Lord'] comes up in the hand of the high priest, the deputy high priest said to him: Sir high priest, raise thy hand! And if it came up in the right hand of the deputy high priest, the head of the [ministering] family says to him: Say your word!⁸ -Let the deputy high priest address him? — Since it did not come up in his hand, he might feel discouraged.⁹ In what [principle] do they¹⁰ differ? — One holds, the right hand of the deputy high priest is better than the left hand of the high priest, the other holding, they are of even importance. Who is the Tanna disputing R. Judah? — It is R. Hanina, deputy high priest. For it was taught: R. Hanina, deputy high priest, says: Why does the deputy high priest stand at the right? In order that if an invalidating accident should happen to the high priest, the deputy high priest may enter [the Sanctuary] and officiate in his stead.¹¹

Our Rabbis taught: Throughout the forty years that Simeon the Righteous ministered, the lot ['For the Lord'] would always come up in the right hand; from that time on, it would come up now in the right hand, now in the left. And [during the same time] the crimson-coloured strap¹² would become white. From that time on it would at times become white, at others not. Also: Throughout those forty years the westernmost light¹³ was shining, from that time on, it was now shining, now failing; also the fire of the pile of wood kept burning strong,¹⁴ so that the priests did not have to bring to the pile any other wood besides the two logs,¹⁵ in order to fulfil the command about providing the wood unintermittently; from that time on, it would occasionally keep burning strongly, at other times not, so that the priests could not do without bringing throughout the day wood for the pile [on the altar]. [During the whole period] a blessing was bestowed upon the 'omer,¹⁶ the two breads,¹⁷ and the shewbread, so that every priest, who obtained a piece thereof as big as an olive, ate it and became satisfied with some eating thereof and even leaving something over. From that time on a curse was sent upon 'omer, two breads, and shewbread, so that every priest received a piece as small as a bean: the well-bred¹⁸ ones withdrew their hands from it, whilst voracious folk took and devoured it. Once one [of the latter] grabbed his portion as well as that of his fellow, wherefore they would call him 'ben hamzan' [grasper] until his dying day. Rabbah b. R. Shela said: What Scriptural basis [is there for this appellation]? — O my God, rescue me out of the hand of the wicked, out of the grasp of the unrighteous and homez [ruthless] man.¹ Raba said, From here [is the basis obtained]: Learn to do well, seek justice, strengthen hamoz [the oppressed]² i.e., strengthen him hamoz [who is oppressed], but strengthen not homez [the oppressor].³

Our Rabbis taught: In the year in which Simeon the Righteous died, he foretold them that he would die. They said: Whence do you know that? He replied: On every Day of Atonement an old man, dressed in white, wrapped in white, would join me, entering [the Holy of Holies] and leaving [it] with me, but today I was joined by an old man, dressed in black, wrapped in black, who entered, but did not leave, with me. After the festival [of Sukkoth] he was sick for seven days and [then] died. His brethren [that year] the priests forbore to mention the Ineffable Name in pronouncing the [priestly] blessing.⁴ Our Rabbis taught: During the last forty years before the destruction of the Temple the lot ['For the Lord'] did not come up in the right hand; nor did the crimson-coloured strap become white; nor did the westernmost light shine; and the doors of the Hekal would open by themselves, until R. Johanan b. Zakkai rebuked them, saying: Hekal, Hekal, why wilt thou be the alarmer thyself?⁵ I know about thee that thou wilt be destroyed, for Zechariah ben Ido has already prophesied concerning thee:⁶ Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars.⁷

R. Isaac b. Tablai said: Why is its⁸ name called Lebanon? Because it makes white the sins of Israel. R. Zutra b. Tobiah said: Why is it called 'Forest', as it is written: The house of the forest of Lebanon?⁹ To tell you that just as a forest produces sprouts, so does the Temple. For R. Hosea said:¹⁰ When Solomon built the Sanctuary, he planted therein all sorts of precious golden trees, which brought forth fruit in their season. When the wind blew against them, their fruits would fall down, as it is said: May his fruit rustle like Lebanon.¹¹ They were a source of income for the priesthood. But as soon as the idolaters entered the Hekal, they dried up, as it is said: And the flower of Lebanon languisheth.¹² And the Holy One, blessed be He, will restore it to us, as it is said: It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice, even with joy and singing, the glory of Lebanon shall be given to it.¹³ Our Rabbis taught:¹⁴ Ten times did the high priest pronounce the [Ineffable] Name on that day: Three times at the first confession, thrice at the second confession, thrice in connection with the he-goat to be sent away, and once in connection with the lots. And it already happened that when he pronounced the Name, his voice was heard even unto Jericho.¹⁵ Rabbah b. Bar Hana said: From Jerusalem to Jericho it is a distance of ten parasangs. The turning hinges of the Temple doors were heard throughout eight Sabbath limits.¹⁶ The goats in Jericho used to sneeze because of the odour of the incense. The women in Jericho did not have to perfume themselves, because of the odour of the incense. The bride in Jerusalem did not have to perfume herself because of the odour of the incense. R. Jose b. Diglai said: My father had goats on the mountains of Mikwar¹⁷ and they used to sneeze because of the odour of the incense. R. Hiyya b. Abin said in the name of R. Joshua b. Karhah: An old man told me: Once I walked towards Shiloh¹⁸ and I could smell the odour of the incense [coming] from its walls.

R. Jannai said: To bring the lot up out of the casket is indispensable,¹⁹ but to place [it on the bullock's head] is not.²⁰ R. Johanan said: Even to bring up the lot is not indispensable.²¹ On the opinion of R. Judah who said that services performed in the white garments outside the Holy of Holies are not indispensable there is no dispute, [all agreeing] that [the bringing up of lots] is not indispensable; they dispute only the opinion of R. Nehemiah:²² He who says it is indispensable, holds even as R. Nehemiah [does]; whereas the other who holds it is dispensable, explains [R. Nehemiah to refer to] an actual service, whereas the casting of the lots is no service. — Others say: On the opinion of R. Nehemiah, who says it is indispensable, there is no dispute, [all agreeing that] it is indispensable; the dispute touches only the opinion of R. Judah: he who holds it is dispensable, agrees with R. Judah; whereas he who holds it is indispensable [explains] that it is different here because Scripture repeats twice: On which [the lot] fell.²³ — An objection: was raised 'It is a command to cast the lots but if he has failed to do so, [the service] is, nevertheless, valid. Now that will be quite right according to the version that none disputes that on R. Judah's view it is dispensable, so that this [teaching]²⁴ is in accordance with R. Judah

(4) Men. 109b. Tosaf Sotah 38a suggests that the Ineffable Name could be pronounced only when there was some indication that the Shechinah rested on the Sanctuary. When Simeon the Righteous died, with many indications that such glory was no more enjoyed, his brethren no more dared utter the Ineffable Name.

(16) The marked-off area around a town or place within which it is permitted to move on the Sabbath. Sabbath limits i.e., two thousand cubits in every direction. The turning hinges, then, created a sound, according to this scholar, audible beyond sixteen thousand cubits.

(17) The name varies: Mikmar, Mikwar, Makvar (a district of Peraea). One version omits reference to a place, and reads 'on the mountains', which may have appropriated the מ from the next word and omitted it for want of clarity. It should be reasonably near Jerusalem to suit the context. See D.S., p. 110.

(18) The place of the tent of meeting. In the mind of the narrator the odour of incense must have been well-nigh imperishable.

(19) Without the casting of the lots no choice could be made as to the destination of the two he-goats, i.e., the service could not go on.

(20) This view considers the service of the high priest dependent on the decision of the lots, the decisive factor being the lots and not the formal putting of the lot on the animal's head.

(21) R. Johanan considers the action of the high priest the determining factor, independent of his having either had lots or having placed them on the head. His declaration as to which animal is for the Lord and for Azazel resp., validates the service.

(22) Infra 60a contains the dispute between R. Judah and R. Nehemiah as to whether any change in the prescribed order renders the service invalid. It hinges on the question as to whether the word 'hukkah' (statute) i.e., binding order, applies to the service in the Holy of Holies only, independent as to the garments wherein they are performed (R. Judah) or whether it applies to any service in the white garments, performed either in the Holy of Holies or elsewhere (R. Nehemiah). A sub-question would be whether anything in connection with the Day of Atonement, or only a service proper is covered by R. Nehemiah's view. If e.g., the casting of the lots is not considered a service, though an action in connection with it, it may not be indispensable since it is performed outside the Holy of Holies, although in white garments.

(23) Lev. XVI, 9,10 which repetition emphasizes the indispensable nature of this service.

(24) That it is a command to cast the lots, but that failure to do so does not invalidate the service.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 40a

. But according to the version that they are disputing on R. Judah's view it would again be quite right according to him who holds it is dispensable, for then [the authority for this teaching] would be R. Judah; but according to him who considers it indispensable [the question is asked]: Who [will be the authority] for this [teaching]? Read: It is a command to place [the lots on the bullock's head].¹

Come and hear: It is a command to cast the lots and to make confession. But if he had not cast the lots² or made confession, [the service is] valid.³ And should you reply that here, too' [you would read] 'to place [the lot on the bullock's head]', say then the second part: R. Simeon said: If he has not cast the lots, the service is still valid, but if he has failed to make confession, it is invalidated. Now what does 'If he has not cast the lots' mean? Would you say it means, 'He has not placed the lots',⁴ this would imply [would it not] that R. Simeon holds the casting of the lots is indispensable? But surely it was taught: If one of the two [bullocks] died, he brings the other without [new] casting of lots — these are the words of R. Simeon?⁵ — R. Simeon did not know what the Sages meant [with the Phrase 'lo higril']⁶ and thus he said to them: If by 'hagralah' you mean casting of the lots itself, I dispute with you on one matter, but if by 'hagralah' you mean the placing of the lots then I disagree with you on two counts.⁷

Come and hear: With regard to the sprinkling of the blood within the veil, [the regular service of] the bullock is indispensable for the service of the he-goat [to be valid]; but the regular service of the he-goat is not indispensable for the service of the bullock to be valid.⁸ Now, it is quite right that the regular service of the bullock is indispensable for the he-goat, e.g., if he performed the rites of the he-goat before those of the bullock, he has done nothing.⁹ But that [the regular service of] the he-goat is not indispensable to the bullock, what does it mean? Would you say [it means] that if he sprinkled the blood of the bullock in the Hekal before the sprinkling of the he-goat within [the veil]?¹⁰ But surely Scripture says 'statute'!¹¹ Rather must you say [it means that] if he sprinkled the blood of the bullock within, before the casting of the lots¹² [it is valid]. Now since the order is not indispensable [is it not to be inferred that] the casting of the lots itself is not indispensable!¹³ — No, [it means that] he made the sprinkling of the blood of the bullock on the altar before sprinkling the blood of the he-goat in the Hekal¹⁴ and this [teaching] is in accord with R. Judah, who says that anything done in the white garments outside [the Holy of Holies] is dispensable. But does it not state 'with regard to the sprinklings within'?¹⁵ Rather: It is in accord with R. Simeon who holds the casting of the lots is dispensable. Or, if you like, say: Still I say it is in accord with R. Judah,¹⁶ and although the order of the service is not indispensable, the casting of the lots is indispensable. And they follow their own principle.¹⁷ For it was taught:

(1) This ruling is generally accepted: Dejure the placing of the lots is obligatory. De facto failure to do so does not render the ceremony invalid, Scripture repeating twice 'on which the lot fell', thus creating a precedent for the casting of the lots, but it refers only once to the placing of the lots on the bullock's head.

(2) לֹא הִגְרִיל infra n. 6.

(3) Hence the casting of the lots is dispensable — a refutation of R. Jannai.

(4) Only the placing of the lots does R. Simeon consider dispensable, but the casting he considers indispensable.

(5) Infra 63b.

(6) Lit., 'He did not perform the hagrah' and rendered supra 'he has not cast lots' cf. n. 3. 'Hagrah', 'acting with lots' may mean causing lots 'to be cast' or 'to be placed', hence grammatically either application is justified: 'lo higril' he did not cause the lots 'to be cast' or 'to be placed' (on the head etc.). R. Simeon did not know which interpretation had been offered by the Sages. He knew however that both are possible.

(7) If you mean by 'hagrah' the casting of the lots, I dispute only your stand touching confession, agreeing with you that the casting of the lots is not indispensable, but if you mean by 'hagrah' the placing of the lots on the head etc. but the casting itself you consider indispensable, then I disagree with you on two counts: you hold casting indispensable, I do not; you hold confession not indispensable, I consider it indispensable.

(8) [The order of the service prescribed in Lev. XVI for the bullock and the he-goat which is offered within is as follows: (i) First confession over the bullock; (ii) Casting lots over the he-goats; (iii) second confession over the bullock; (iv) Slaughtering of the bullock; (v) Bringing the spoon and fire pan into the Holy of Holies; (vi) Burning of incense; (vii) Sprinkling of blood of the bullock on the mercy-seat; (viii) Confession over and slaughtering of the he-goat; (ix) Sprinkling of the he-goat's blood on the mercy-seat; (x) Sprinkling of the blood of the bullock on the Veil, separating the Holy, the Hekal, from the Holy of Holies; (xi) Sprinkling of the blood of the he-goat on the Veil; (xii) Mixing together the blood of the he-goat and the bullock and applying the mixture on the golden altar. Here the rule is laid down that if he performed any one of the rites in connection with the he-goat before such of the bullock as should have preceded it, that rite is invalid and must be performed again in its proper order. If, however, he performed any of the rites in connection with the bullock before such of the he-goat as should have preceded it, that rite is not invalid.]

(9) It has no validity.

(10) [I.e., he performed rite (x) before rite (ix), v. n. 1].

(11) Which has reference to the rites performed within the Veil, and which implies an inflexible rule invalidating the irregularity of the service.

(12) [I.e., he performed rite (vii) before (ii).]

(13) Hence there is one who holds that the casting of the lots is not indispensable. That contradicts the above statement that even R. Judah (and all the more R. Nehemiah) considers it indispensable.

(14) [I.e., he performed rite (xii) before rite (xi). The blood of the bullock here means that which he mixed with the blood of the he-goat.]

(15) Whereas this irregularity in connection with the bullock concerned a service performed outside the Holy of Holies.

(16) [And the irregularity consequently concerned rites (vii) and (ii), v. p. 190, n. 5.]

(17) This refers to the dispute of R. Judah and R. Simeon where he failed to make confession.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 40b

[With reference to] It shall be set alive before the Lord, to make atonement over him¹ — how long must it stay alive? Until the blood of its fellow-sacrifice is sprinkled, this is the opinion of R. Judah.² R. Simeon holds: Until the confession [of sin].³ Wherein do they differ? — As it was taught: ‘To make atonement over him’ — Scripture speaks of atonement through blood, thus does it also say: And when he hath made an end to atoning for the holy place,⁴ just as there it refers to atonement by blood, so does it refer here to atonement by blood this is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Simeon says: ‘To make atonement over him’ — Scripture speaks of atonement by words [confession].

Come and hear:⁵ The disciples of R. Akiba asked him: If it [the lot ‘for the Lord’] came up in the left hand, may he turn it to the right? He replied: Do not give all occasion for the Sadducees to rebel!⁶ The reason, then, [of his negative answer] is so as not to give an occasion for the Sadducees to rebel, but, without that, we would turn it, yet you said that the casting of the lots is indispensable, and since the left hand has determined its destination,⁷ how can we turn it? — Raba answered: This is what they said: If the lot had come up in the left hand, may one change it and the he-goat to the right?⁸ Whereupon he answered: Give no occasion to the Sadducees to rebel.

Come and hear: If [Scripture] has said: The goat, ‘upon which it [the lot] is’⁹ I would have said he must place it thereon. Therefore it says: ‘[on which it] fell’, i.e., once it has fallen upon it, he no more need [place it on its head]. Now in respect of what [was this said]?¹⁰ Would you say: In respect of a command,¹¹ which would imply that the placing of the lots is not even a command!¹² Rather must you say it means that it is in respect of indispensability;¹³ hence we learn that the casting is indispensable, and the placing of the lot [upon the head] is dispensable.¹⁴ Raba said: This is what he means: If it had said: ‘Upon which it is’, I would have said: let him leave it there until the time for the slaughtering; therefore it says: [upon which it] fell, to intimate that once it had fallen upon it, it needs nothing else.¹⁵

Come and hear: And offer him for a sin-offering¹⁶ i.e., the lot designates it for the sin-offering, but the naming¹⁷ [alone] does not designate it a sin-offering. For I might have assumed, this could be inferred a minori: If in a case where the lot does not sanctify,¹⁸ the naming does sanctify, how much more will the naming sanctify where the lot also does so sanctify? Therefore [Scripture] says: ‘And offer him for a sin-offering’ [to intimate] it is the lot which designates it a sin-offering, but the naming does not make it a sin-offering.

(1) With reference to the he-goat that is to be sent away. Lev. XVI, 10.

(2) [In accordance with his view that confession is not indispensable so that if the he-goat died after the sprinkling of the blood of the bullock (rite vii) before the confession over the he-goat (rite viii) the service is valid.]

(3) Infra 65a.

(4) Ibid. 20.

(5) Tosef. III, 2, the version in the Talmud is somewhat modified.

(6) The substitution of Sadducees for ‘Minim’ (Judeo-Christian heretics) is undoubtedly due to the censors’ dislike of any word that may appear as even an implied attack on the Church. The heretics will claim this manipulation an ‘additional proof’ of the Pharisees’ doing with the law whatever pleased them. Thus they would be helped to rebel, arguing at once in favour of their heresy and against the Pharisees.

(7) For the Lord, even before the lot was actually placed on the he-goat.

(8) If the lot ‘For the Lord’ came up in the left hand so that the he-goat standing opposite the priest at his left hand was thereby designated a sin-offering for the Lord, that on the right being designated for Azazel, may he exchange the he-goats and the lots so that whereas the lot decided which is which, the manipulation will have afforded him the comfort of knowing that without formally changing the lots, the ‘right one’ will be designated for the Lord.

(9) Intimating that it lies there for a considerable time.

(10) That once the lots are cast nothing more is necessary.

(11) I.e., there is no longer any command to be fulfilled after the casting of the lots.

(12) Surely this is impossible!

(13) I.e., that once the lots are cast there is nothing else deemed indispensable for determining the destination of the he-goats.

(14) A refutation of R. Johanan.

(15) The verse serves to indicate that once it 'fell upon it' there is not even a command to be placed there, as a sign or assurance that it will be offered up for the purpose designated.

(16) Lev. XVI, 9: And Aaron shall present the goat upon which the lot fell for the Lord, and offer it for a sin-offering.

(17) By the high priest. The above verse, in which the offering-up follows immediately 'upon which the lot fell' indicates that the coming up of the lot decides the matter, not the naming by the priest.

(18) As with the sacrificial couples of birds, where either owner or priest by verbal statement makes the designation, where, however, the casting of lots would be useless.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 41a

Now whose is the anonymous opinion in the Sifra?¹ R. Judah's, and he teaches: The lot designates the sin-offering and the naming does not make it a sin-offering. Hence we see that the casting of the lots is indispensable. This will be a refutation of the opinion that it is not indispensable. It is a refutation.

R. Hisda said: The special designation of the couples² is made either by the owner³ or by the priest's action.⁴ R. Shimi b. Ashi said: What is the basis of R. Hisda's dictum? Because it is written: She shall take [. . . for a burnt-offering]⁵ and And the priest shall offer one [as a sin-offering]⁶ i.e., [the designation is made] either at the [owner's] taking [purchasing] or at the offering-up [by the priest].

They raised the following objection: 'And make it a sin-offering'⁷ -i.e., the lot makes it a sin-offering, but the naming [alone] does not make it a sin-offering. For I might have assumed, this could be inferred a minori: If in a case where a lot does not sanctify, the naming does, how much more should the naming sanctify, where the lot does? Therefore [Scripture] says: 'And make it for a sin-offering' [to intimate] it is the lot which makes it a sin-offering, but the naming does not make it a sin-offering. Here it is neither the time⁸ of its purchase, nor of its being offered, and yet he states that it should designate? — Raba said: This is what he said: If in a case where the lot does not sanctify even at the time of the purchase and even at the time of the offering, the naming does sanctify it at the time of either purchase or offering, how much more shall the naming, at either the time of purchase or of offering, sanctify it in a case where the lot sanctifies outside the time of either purchase or offering? Therefore [Scripture] says: 'And make it a sin-offering', i.e., the lot makes it a sin-offering but the naming does not make it a sin-offering.

Come and hear: If someone defiled the Sanctuary⁹ whilst poor and put aside money for his bird-couple-offering, and afterwards became rich,¹⁰ and said thereupon: This [money] be for the sin-offering and that for the burnt-offering he adds to the money for the sin-offering to bring his obligatory offering, but he may not add to his burnt¹¹ -offering to bring his obligatory offering. Now here¹² it is neither the time of the purchase, nor the time of the offering and yet he teaches that it is designated?¹³ — R. Shesheth said: How do you reason?¹⁴ Surely R.. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hoshaia: If someone defiled the Sanctuary whilst rich, and brought the offering of a poor person, he has not done his duty. Now, since he has not done his duty, how could he have designated¹⁵ it? Must you not, rather, say that he had designated it when already poor? Thus here,¹⁶ too, the case is that he said it from the time when he set [the money] aside.¹⁷ But according to R. Hagga in the name of R. Josiah who said: He has done his duty¹⁸ —

- (9) By entering it in uncleanness, Lev. V, 2.
- (10) With the consequence that he must offer the contingent sacrifice of a rich person: a lamb as a sin-offering, whereas a poor person had to offer up two turtledoves or two young pigeons as sin- and burnt-offering resp. (Lev. V, 6 and 11.)
- (11) Ker. 28a. He may add to the original money designated for the poor man's sin-offering for his new sin-offering, but he may not use the money designated for the poor man's burnt-offering to add thereto the sum necessary for the purchase of the rich man's sin-offering (his lamb). The latter is forbidden, because once he had designated, the money for the burnt-offering, it may no more be changed for any other offering.
- (12) After the designation.
- (13) And that he may no more change it.
- (14) Do you consider the Baraitha to be in order?
- (15) The poor man's sin-offering no more applies to him, how could he have designated it a burnt-offering after becoming rich, since he does not have to bring a burnt-offering at all (only the poor man brings a burnt- and sin-offering, one pigeon each, the rich man's lamb serving as sin-offering only).
- (16) In reply to the objection raised against R. Hisda.
- (17) Correct the Baraitha to read: If someone defiled the Sanctuary whilst poor and put aside money for his couple and said at the time when he set the money aside 'This be etc.' and afterwards became rich.
- (18) So that the Baraitha as it stands need not be corrected.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 41b

what is there to be said?¹ — Do not read: 'And said thereupon', but 'And thereupon he bought and said'.²

But if 'thereupon he bought' [then it states] 'he may add and bring his obligatory sacrifice', it must mean³ that he redeems⁴ [the bird-offering]? But surely a bird-offering may not be redeemed?⁵ — R. Papa said: For instance, if he bought one single pigeon. If he bought it as the burnt-offering, then he adds to the money for his sin-offering the money for his [new] obligatory sacrifice, the burnt-offering [of the bird] becoming a freewill-offering; if he bought it as the sin-offering he may not add to the money for the burnt-offering for the purchase of his [new] obligatory sacrifice and that sin-offering is left to perish.

The text [above] states: R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Hoshai: 'If one defiled the Sanctuary whilst being rich and brought the offering prescribed for a poor person, he has not done his duty, R. Haggai in the name of R. Josiah says: He did perform it.' The following objection was raised: If a poor leper brought the offering prescribed for a rich person, he has performed his duty; if a rich person brought the offering prescribed for a poor one, he has not performed his duty?⁶ — There it is different because it is written: This [shall be the law of the leper].⁷ If that is so, then [let it apply] in the first part [of the Mishnah] too? — Surely the Divine Law includes that case through the word Torath ['law']!⁸ As it was taught: the word Torath ['the law']⁷ includes a poor leper, who brought a rich [leper's] sacrifice. One might have assumed that even a rich leper who brought a poor leper's sacrifice [might be included so as to have performed his duty], therefore it says: 'This'. Let us infer from it [for one who defiled the Sanctuary]? — The Divine Law [by saying]: And if he be poor,⁹ excludes [all but the leper].¹⁰

MISHNAH. HE BOUND¹¹ A THREAD OF CRIMSON WOOL ON THE HEAD OF THE HE-GOAT WHICH WAS TO BE SENT AWAY,¹² AND [MEANTIME] HE PLACED IT [AT THE GATE] WHENCE IT WAS TO BE SENT AWAY; AND THE HE-GOAT THAT WAS TO BE SLAUGHTERED, AT THE PLACE OF THE SLAUGHTERING.¹³ HE CAME TO HIS BULLOCK A SECOND¹⁴ TIME, PRESSED HIS TWO HANDS UPON IT AND MADE CONFESSION. AND THUS HE WOULD SAY: O LORD, I HAVE DEALT WRONGFULLY, I HAVE TRANSGRESSED, I HAVE SINNED BEFORE THEE, I AND MY HOUSE, AND THE CHILDREN OF AARON, THY HOLY PEOPLE, O LORD, PRAY FORGIVE THE WRONGDOINGS, THE TRANSGRESSION, AND THE SINS, WHICH I HAVE COMMITTED, TRANSGRESSED, AND SINNED BEFORE THEE, I AND MY HOUSE, AND THE CHILDREN OF AARON, THY HOLY PEOPLE. AS IT IS WRITTEN IN THE TORAH OF MOSES, THY SERVANT: FOR ON THIS DAY ATONEMENT BE MADE FOR YOU, TO CLEANSE YOU; FROM ALL THE SINS SHALL YE BE CLEAN BEFORE THE LORD. AND THEY RESPONDED: BLESSED BE THE NAME OF HIS GLORIOUS KINGDOM FOR EVER AND EVER.

GEMARA. They raised the question: AND THE HE-GOAT THAT WAS TO BE SLAUGHTERED AT THE PLACE OF THE SLAUGHTERING — does this refer to the tying [of the strap]¹⁵ or to the placing [of the animal]?¹⁶ Come and hear: For R. Joseph learned: He bound a crimson-coloured strap on the head of the he-goat which was to be sent away and placed it against the gate whence it was to be sent away; and the he-goat which was to be slaughtered at the place where it was to be slaughtered, lest they become mixed up one with the other, or with others. It will be quite right if you say it refers to the binding [of the strap], but If you say it refers to the placing [of the animal], granted that it would not be mixed up with its fellow [he-goat] because the one had a strap, whilst the other had none, but it could surely be mixed up with other he-goats?¹⁷ Hence we learn from here that It refers to the tying [of the strap]. This proves it. R. Isaac said: I have heard of two straps, one in connection with the [red] heifer,¹⁸ the other with the he-goat-to-be-sent-away, one requiring a definite size, the other not requiring it, but I do not know which [requires the size]. R. Joseph said: Let us see: The strap of the he-goat which required division,¹⁹ hence also required a definite size, whereas that of the heifer which does not need to be divided, does not require a definite size, either. Rami b. Hama demurred to this: That of the heifer also requires weight?²⁰ — Raba said: The matter of this weight is disputed by Tannaim.²¹ But does the strap of the heifer not have to be divided? [Against this] Abaye raised the following objection: How does he do it?²² He wraps them²³ together with the remnants²⁴ of the strips [of scarlet wool]! Say: with the tail²⁵ of the strip.

R. Hanin said in the name of Rab: If the cedar-wood and the scarlet thread were [merely] caught by the flame,²⁶ they are usable [for the ceremony]. — They raised the following objection: If the strap caught fire, another strap is brought and the water of lustration prepared.²⁷ Abaye said: This is no contradiction; one speaks of a flame which blazes²⁸ up, the other of one which is subdued.²⁹

Raba said: Concerning the weight of [the heifer's strap] there is a division of opinion among Tannaim, for it was taught: Why does he wrap them³⁰ together? In order that they form together one bunch — this is the opinion of Rabbi. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon says: In order that they have [sufficient] weight to fall into the midst of the burning heifer. — When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said in the name of R. Johanan: I heard of: three [different] straps, one, that of the [red] heifer, the other, that of the he-goat-to-be-sent-away, the third of the leper; one having a weight of ten zuz,³¹ the other a weight of two sela's,³¹ the third a weight of one shekel,³¹ and I do not know how to specify it. When Rabin came, he specified it in the name of R. Jonathan:

(1) How will R. Hisda meet the objection raised against him from the Baraita?

(2) The change implies only that one word had been omitted. Thus the question against R. Hisda is answered.

- (3) Lit., 'what is it?'
- (4) Divesting it of its sacred character by changing its purpose and adding thereto the money required for the lamb.
- (5) Tem. 23b.
- (6) Neg. XIV, 12. An objection against R. Hagga.
- (7) Lev. XIV, 2 indicating there must be no duration.
- (8) Indicating that there is ultimately one Torah, one law governing all lepers.
- (9) Ibid. 21.
- (10) 'If he be poor'; the 'he' is emphatic, indicating that this law applies only to a leper; but any other person, obliged to bring an offering of higher or lesser value, according to pecuniary condition, may bring the 'poor man's offering' and yet have its duty performed although he be rich himself.
- (11) To prevent any confusion between the he-goats, or between them and the third he-goat, to be offered up at the additional service (Num. XXIX, 11).
- (12) Destined for Azazel, in the wilderness, whence it was hurled to its death from a rock. The word Azazel has been variously interpreted, but it seems to be the name of a place (a rough rock) rather than that of a demon.
- (13) To be explained in the Gemara.
- (14) V. supra 35b: HE CAME TO HIS BULLOCK, that was the first time.
- (15) I.e., he tied the strap about its neck, the place of the slaughtering.
- (16) I.e., he placed it where it had to be slaughtered.
- (17) At the place where sacrifices were slaughtered, since it had no distinguishing mark.
- (18) v. Num. XIX, 1ff
- (19) Infra 67a: What did he (who sent the he-goat away) do. He divided the strap of crimson wool, tying one half to the rock, the other half between his horns.

- (21) V. infra.
- (22) With reference to the red heifer v. Parah III, 13.
- (23) The hyssop and cedar-wood.
- (24) There are, then, remnants of strips, hence there must have been division here, too.
- (25) Simply the end of the strap, thinned out like a tail, hence no evidence of a division.
- (26) Cf. supra n. 1.
- (27) Lit., 'and he sanctifies'.
- (28) A fire which unexpectedly rises and spreads; a fire diverted from its course. Or: a fire which unexpectedly rises and spreads;
- (29) In the former case another strap is to be brought since it did not come in contact with the fire itself; but not in the latter case.
- (30) Cedar-wood, hyssop and scarlet, Num. XIX, 6.
- (31) Zuz — the smallest silver coin corresponds to either one quarter or one half of a shekel. Sela' — is either five or ten zuzim. The shekel weighs about twelve grams. V. Krauss, T.A. II, 404.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 42a

That of the heifer had the weight of ten zuz, that of the he-goat-to-be-sent-away had the weight of two sela's, and that of the leper weighed one shekel. R. Johanan said: About the [strap used in connection with] the heifer R. Simeon b. Halafta and the Sages are disputing, one saying it weighed ten shekels, the other it weighed but one shekel. As a mnemotechnic [sign use]:¹ 'Whether one gives much, or one gives little'.² — R. Jeremiah of Difti said to Rabina: They are not disputing in regard to [the strap of] the heifer, but in regard [to that of] the he-goat-to-be-sent-away; and on the day [of their dispute] died Rabia b. Kisi, and as a sign to remember this coincidence they uttered: [The death of the righteous], Rabia b. Kisi, obtains atonement, even as the he-goat-to-be-sent-away. — R. Isaac said: I heard of two slaughterings, one of the [red] heifer, the other of his bullock,³ one being permissible to a lay Israelite,⁴ the other being invalidated if performed by a lay Israelite, and I do not know which is which. It is reported: Concerning the slaughtering of the heifer and of his bullock [there is a dispute between] Rab and Samuel, one holding the heifer to be invalidated [if killed by a lay Israelite], but that his bullock [so slaughtered] is fit, while the other holds that his bullock is invalidated [if a commoner killed], but [so killed] the heifer is fit. It may be ascertained that it is Rab who holds that [the slaughtering of] the heifer [by a lay Israelite] renders it invalid. For R. Zei'ra⁵ said: The slaughtering of the heifer by a lay Israelite is invalid and Rab said thereupon: 'Eleazar' and 'Statute'⁶ we learned in connection therewith. — But as for Rab, wherefore the difference between [the law] in the case of the heifer, because 'Eleazar' and 'Statute' is written in connection therewith, when also in connection with 'his' bullock 'Aaron'⁷ and 'Statute' is written? The slaughtering is not [regarded as a Temple] service.⁸ Then this ought to apply to the heifer as well? — It is different with the heifer, because it is [in the category of] offerings for Temple repair.⁹ — So much the more then!¹⁰ -R. Shisha son of R. Idi said: It is the same as with the [inspection of] appearances of leprosy,¹¹ which is not a service, yet requires a priest's service. Now according to Samuel, who holds the killing of 'his' bullock by a lay Israelite is invalid, wherefore the difference [in law] in the case of 'his' bullock, in connection with which 'Aaron' and 'Statute' are written, when also in connection with the heifer 'Eleazar' and 'Statute' are written? — It is different there, because it is written: And he shall slay it before him,¹² which means that a lay Israelite may slaughter and Eleazar should watch it.¹³ And [how does] Rab [explain this]? — [It means] he¹⁴ must not divert his attention from it. Whence does Samuel know that he must not divert his attention from it? — He infers that from And the heifer shall be burnt in his sight.¹⁵ And [why the repetition according to] Rab? — One refers to the slaughtering, the other to the burning;¹⁶ and it was necessary to mention both. For if the Divine Law had written it concerning the slaughtering [alone, I would have said]: There [attention is necessary] because it is the beginning of the service, but with the burning [one could] say: 'No [attention is necessary]' therefore it was necessary [for the Divine Law] to mention [it also touching burning]. And if the Divine Law had written it [only] touching the burning, one would have said [attention is necessary there], because just now the heifer is being made ready,¹⁷ but [during] slaughtering no [attention is necessary]. Therefore it was necessary [for the Divine Law] to mention [that too]. — What does this exclude?¹⁸ Is it to say to exclude the gathering of its ashes and the drawing of the water for the putting in of the ashes?

(1) Ber. 5b.

(2) The usual meaning: Whether one gives much or little, the main matter is that he direct his heart to our Father who is in heaven, is irrelevant here, the accent being put, for mnemotechnic reasons, on: the one (stands for) much, the other for little, i.e., one of the disputants ascribes the maximum, the other the minimum weight.

(3) The bullock which the high priest had to bring for himself on the Day of Atonement.

(4) I.e., a non-priest.

(5) Var. lec. 'Rab'.

(6) Num. XIX, 3: And ye shall give her to Eleazar the priest i.e., it requires a priest's service; ibid. 21: And it shall be a perpetual statute i.e., it is indispensable that the priest do so, as prescribed.

(7) Lev. XVI, 3: Herewith shall Aaron come . . . with a young bullock; and ibid. 34: And this shall be an everlasting statute unto you.

(8) Since a lay Israelite may perform it, the word 'statute', mentioned in connection with his bullock, does not refer to the slaughtering.

(9) The heifer is not offered up on the altar, as any other sacrifice, hence there is no distinction as to the services to be performed in connection with it, and all alike require a priest.

(10) On the contrary, how much more ought a lay Israelite to be permitted to slay the red heifer.

(11) Lev. XIII, 2.

(12) Num. XIX, 3.

(13) 'He' referring to a lay Israelite; 'before him' (lit., 'before his face'), to Eleazar.

(14) 'He' refers to Eleazar i.e., he shall slaughter it and keep his mind on this important ceremony.

(15) Num. XIX, 5.

(16) That is that both rites require attention.

(17) The burning for the purposes of the ashes is the central part of the ceremony, to 'prepare' the heifer for her cleansing purpose.

(18) I.e., with regard to what function is no attention essential.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 42b

Surely Scripture says: [And it shall be kept for the congregation of the children of Israel] for a water of sprinkling?¹ — Rather it excludes the casting in of cedarwood, hyssop, and scarlet, because they are not part of the heifer itself.

It was reported: If the heifer was slaughtered by a lay Israelite, R. Ammi said it is valid. R. Isaac, the Smith, said it was invalid. ‘Ulla said it is valid, whilst some there are who say [that he said] it was invalid.

R. Joshua b. Abba raised an objection in support of Rab: I know only that the sprinkling of its water is not valid if performed by a woman, as [when done] by a man; and that it is valid only [if done] by day.² Whence do I know that the slaughtering of the heifer, the reception of its blood, the sprinkling of its blood, the burning of the heifer, and the casting into the burning heifer of cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet [may not be done by night]?³ To teach us that Scripture said: [This is the statute of] the law.⁴ I might have assumed that this should include also the gathering of its ashes and the drawing of the water for the putting-in of the ashes, to teach us that Scripture said: ‘This’.⁵ — What causes you to include those, and to exclude these? — Since Scripture both extends and limits, say, we shall infer everything from the [regulations touching] the sprinkling of its water: Just as the sprinkling of its water is not proper if done by a woman, as it is [if performed] by a man, and not valid except if done by day, thus⁶ include also the slaughtering of the heifer, the reception of its blood, the sprinkling of its blood, the burning of the heifer, and the casting into the burning heifer of cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet. Since these [functions] may not be performed by a woman, so may they be performed only by day; but I exclude the gathering of its ashes and the drawing of the water for the putting-in of its ashes, which, since they may be performed by either man or woman, hence may also be performed by night. But how is this a refutation?⁶ Will you say that because [the slaughtering is stated to be] invalid [if performed] by a woman, it must be invalid, also, if performed by a lay Israelite,⁷ there would be as counterproof the sprinkling of its waters, which, whilst invalid [if performed] by a woman, yet may be done by a lay Israelite! Said Abaye: This is the refutation: Why is the woman excluded [from the slaughtering], because [Scripture said]: ‘Eleazar’, [implying] but not a woman; that [must be applied to] the lay Israelite also, for [the analogue inference]: ‘Eleazar’ [the priest], [implies] but not a lay Israelite.

‘Ulla said: In that whole section [of the red heifer] there are [texts] implying an exception from a preceding implication, and [texts] independent [of preceding or following] implications: And ye shall give her unto Eleazar the priest⁸ [implies] only this one to Eleazar, but not [the heifers] in later generations to Eleazar;⁹ some say: In later generations [you shall give it] to the high priest, others: In later generations to a common priest. It is quite right according to him who holds that in later generations [the heifer is to be handed over] to a common priest,¹⁰ but whence does he infer who holds that in later generations [it is to be given] to the high priest? — He infers it from [the identical word] ‘Statute’, ‘Statute’, used [also]¹¹ in connection with the Day of Atonement.¹²

And he shall bring it forth¹³ [implies] that he must not bring forth another one with her, as we have learnt:¹⁴ If the heifer refused to go forth, one may not send a black one with her, lest people say: They slaughtered a black [heifer], nor may another red heifer be brought forth with her, lest people say: They slaughtered two. — R. Jose said: This comes not under this title,¹⁵ but because it is written: [And he shall¹⁶ bring it forth]; ‘it’, [implies] by itself. And the [anonymous] first Tanna [surely wrote] ‘it’.¹⁷ — Who is this first Tanna? It is R. Simeon who ‘interprets’¹⁸ the reason of biblical law’. What is the difference between them? — There is a difference

- (1) Num. XIX,9 which implies that special watch must be kept with these till the sprinkling.
- (2) Because day is stated specifically, Num. XIX, 12.
- (3) No special verse is required that these may not be performed by a woman since 'Eleazar' or 'priest' is written throughout the section (Rashi).
- (4) Ibid 2, 'law' implying uniform regulations for the whole ceremony.
- (5) I.e., 'Do what is written here, but do not add to these regulations' (Rashi).
- (6) Of Samuel, 42a, who holds that a lay Israelite may slaughter the heifer, for since the objection was raised in support of Rab, it must needs be an attack on Samuel's view.
- (7) Whereas Samuel is said supra to declare it valid.
- (8) Num. XIX, 3.
- (9) Eleazar at that time was deputy high priest, and that heifer, by express statement of Scripture, was entrusted to him. In future, however, it would be given either to the high priest, or to a common priest (R. Hananel).
- (10) For, since Scripture did not expressly state that it be handed over to the high priest, or his deputy, but merely by implication, the assumption seems justified that any priest could officiate at the ceremony.
- (11) Lev. XVI, 29 and Num. XIX, 21, on which this analogy is based.
- (12) Where the service is to be performed by the high priest.
- (13) Num. XIX, 3.
- (14) Parah III, 7.
- (15) I.e., this is not the real reason, rather etc.
- (16) The bracketed portion is omitted in the Talmud and supplied from the Mishnah, Parah III, 7.
- (17) Which seemingly justified the excluding interpretation.
- (18) Kid. 68b: Such interpretation will accordingly modify the law, extending or limiting it.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 43a

if one should bring forth an ass with her.¹

And he shall slay it [implies] that one must not slaughter any other [heifer] with it. Before him¹ [implies] according to Rab that he must not divert his attention from her; according to Samuel, that a lay Israelite may slaughter, and Eleazar look on.² And Eleazar the priest shall take of its blood with his finger³ [is written] according to Samuel in order to refer it [the rite] back to Eleazar;⁴ according to Rab:⁵ this is a limitation following a limitation and a double limitation serves to widen the scope, viz., that even a common priest may do it. And the priest shall take cedar-wood, and hyssop, and scarlet,⁶ [is written] according to Samuel, that even a common priest [may take and cast it] according to Rab:⁷ it is necessary [to mention it], for you might have thought and said: Since these things do not belong to the heifer itself, they do not require any priest's service, therefore Scripture informs us [that they do]. Then the priest shall wash his clothes,⁸ [implies] in his priestly⁹ garments. And the priest shall be unclean until the even,⁸ [implies] that he shall be in his priestly garments¹⁰ even in future generations. That will be quite right according to him who holds that [the heifer ceremony] will in future generations be performed by a common priest,¹¹ but according to him who holds that in future generations [the heifer ceremony will be performed by] the high priest, now, since a high priest is required, is it necessary to state that he must be in his priestly garments? — Yes, Scripture does [occasionally] take the trouble to mention things which might have been inferred a minori.

And a man that is clean shall gather up the ashes of the heifer and lay them up¹² — 'a man,' [is written] to declare fit a lay Israelite;¹³ 'that is clean' — to declare fit a woman; and 'lay them up' [implies] one who has understanding how to lay them up, that excludes one deaf and dumb, an idiot, and a minor, who have not the understanding of how to lay them up. We learned elsewhere:¹⁴ All are fit to prepare [the waters of lustration]¹⁵ with the exception of the deaf and dumb, the idiot, and the minor. R. Judah declares fit a minor and disqualifies a woman and an hermaphrodite. What is the reason for the Rabbis' view? — Because it is written: And for the unclean they shall take of the ashes of the burning of the purification from sin [and put upon them running water in a vessel],¹⁶ i.e., they¹⁷ whom I declared unto thee unfit for the gathering [of the ashes] I also declared unto thee unfit for the preparation [of the waters of lustration], but they whom I declared fit to thee for the gathering, I have also declared unto thee fit for the preparation. And [what does] R. Judah [say]? — If that were so,¹⁸ Scripture should have said: ‘He shall take [we-lakah]’;¹⁹ what is the meaning of they shall take’? To intimate that even a minor whom I declared unto thee unfit there, is fit to act here.²⁰ — Whence does he know that a woman is unfit? — Because Scripture says: [‘he shall put’] i.e., he, but not she, shall put. — And the Rabbis? — If the Divine Law had written ‘He shall take’, ‘he shall put’, one might have assumed the same man must both give and put, therefore Scripture wrote ‘and they shall take’. And if the Divine Law had stated ‘they shall take’ and [also] ‘they shall put’, one might have assumed that there must be two to take and put, therefore Scripture wrote: ‘they shall take’ and ‘he shall put’, to indicate that even if [it is right] two take [the ashes] and one puts [the running water in a vessel]. — And a clean man shall take hyssop, and cup it in the water [and sprinkle],²¹ according to the Rabbis:²² ‘A man’ [implies] but not a woman; ‘clean’ is [written] to declare fit²³ even a minor; according to R. Judah:²⁴ ‘a man’ [implies] but not a minor; ‘clean’ to declare fit a woman.

An objection²⁵ was raised: ‘All are qualified to sprinkle except one whose sex is unknown, an hermaphrodite and a woman; but a child that is without²⁶ understanding, a woman may aid in sprinkling’

(1) According to the first Tanna that would be permitted, because the presence of the ass could not mislead people into the assumption that it was he who is sacrificed; according to Rabbi, it would be forbidden, for ‘it’ excludes permission for any other animal to be brought forth together with her.

(2) V. supra 42a.

(3) Ibid. 4.

(4) Since ‘he shall slay’ refers, according to Samuel, to the lay Israelite, it was necessary to emphasize that the sprinkling had to be done by ‘Eleazar’, otherwise it might have been assumed that it could be performed by the lay Israelite who did the slaughtering.

(5) Who refers ‘he shall slay’ to the priest, the repetition of ‘Eleazar’ here is apparently superfluous.

(6) The repetition indicating that no limitation is intended, but only exemplification.

(7) Who permits a common priest to receive the blood, this passage being independent of the preceding implication.

(8) Lev. XIX, 7.

(9) It was superfluous to state ‘the priest’ again, since we are dealing but with him, the implication therefore is that he must do it in his priestly garments.

(10) When performing the red heifer ritual.

(11) Who does not draw an analogy from the identical words ‘statute’, occurring both in connection with the Day of Atonement and with the heifer; hence it is necessary to state that in the future, nonetheless, he must then wear his official garb.

(12) Num. XIX, 9.

(13) For gathering up the ashes.

(14) Parah V, 4.

(15) I.e., to put water over the ashes.

(16) Num. XIX, 17.

(17) ‘They’ referring to such as were declared fit for the immediately preceding rite of gathering the ashes mentioned in verse 9.

(18) That ‘they’ refers to such as are mentioned in verse 9.

(19) Just as in verse 9 the singular is used.

(20) A minor is not permitted to gather the ashes, but he may put the water in the ashes.

(21) Num. XIX, 18.

(22) Who hold that the mixing of the ashes and water may be done only by such as are fit to gather the ashes, thus excluding a minor.

(23) Had the same regulation implied in verse 9 applied also to sprinkling, the phrase ‘a clean man’ would have been superfluous here.

(24) Who disqualifies a woman and declares fit a minor for the mixing of the ashes with the water.

(25) Parah XII, 10.

(26) Corrected according to the Mishnah. The Talmud here reads: a child that has understanding.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 43b

and here R. Judah does not dispute?¹ — Abaye said: Since the Master said that this chapter contains [texts] implying an exception from a preceding implication, and [texts] independent of preceding or following implications he surely disputes.

And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean,² ‘clean’ implies that he was unclean before,³ that informs us that a tebul-yom is qualified [to officiate] at the heifer [ceremony]. R. Assi said: When R. Johanan and Resh Lakish engaged in investigating questions about the heifer, they were unable to produce more than what a fox can bring up from a ploughed field, but they said this chapter contains [texts] implying an exception from a preceding implication, and [texts] independent of preceding or following implications.⁴

A tanna⁵ recited before R. Johanan: All the slaughterings may be performed by a lay Israelite with the exception of that of the [red] heifer. R. Johanan said to him: Go out and teach it in the street!⁶ We do not find that slaughtering is disqualified [if performed] by a lay Israelite. Nor would R. Johanan not listen only to a tanna [in this matter] he would not even listen to his own master, for, whereas R. Johanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: The slaughtering of the heifer by a lay Israelite is invalid [he added]: But I say, it is valid, for we do not find that slaughtering [of sacrifices] by a lay Israelite is invalid.

HE CAME TO HIS SECOND BULLOCK: Why is it that in the first confession he does not say ‘And the children of Aaron, Thy holy people’ and in the second confession he mentions: ‘The children of Aaron, Thy holy people’? — The school of R. Ishmael taught: Common sense dictates⁷ this: It is better that one innocent⁸ obtain atonement for the guilty, than that one guilty obtain atonement for the guilty.

MISHNAH. HE KILLED IT [THE BULLOCK] AND RECEIVED ITS BLOOD IN A BOWL. AND HE GAVE IT TO THE ONE WHO SHOULD STIR IT UP ON THE FOURTH TERRACE WITHIN THE SANCTUARY⁹ LEST IT CONGEAL.¹⁰ HE TOOK THE COAL-PAN AND WENT UP TO THE TOP OF THE ALTAR, CLEARING THE COALS TO BOTH SIDES, TOOK A PANFUL OF THE GLOWING CINDERS FROM BELOW, CAME DOWN AND PLACED THE COAL-PAN ON THE FOURTH TERRACE IN THE TEMPLE COURT.¹¹ ON OTHER DAYS HE WOULD TAKE OUT [THE CINDERS] WITH A SILVER COAL-PAN, AND EMPTY IT INTO ONE OF GOLD, BUT THIS DAY HE TOOK THEM OUT WITH A GOLDEN [COAL-PAN] IN WHICH HE WAS TO BRING THEM. IN [THE INNER SANCTUARY] ON OTHER DAYS¹² HE WOULD TAKE THEM UP WITH A COAL-PAN CONTAINING FOUR KABS, AND EMPTY IT INTO ONE CONTAINING THREE KABS,¹³ THIS DAY HE TOOK THEM OUT WITH ONE CONTAINING THREE KABS, IN WHICH HE BRINGS OUGHT [THE CINDERS] IN, TOO. R. JOSE SAID: ON OTHER DAYS HE WOULD TAKE THEM OUT WITH ONE CONTAINING ONE SE'AH, AND EMPTY IT INTO ONE CONTAINING THREE KABS, THIS DAY HE TOOK THEM OUT WITH ONE CONTAINING THREE KABS, IN WHICH HE ALSO BRINGS IN [THE CINDERS]. ON OTHER DAYS THE PAN WAS HEAVY, TODAY IT WAS LIGHT.¹⁴ ON OTHER DAYS ITS HANDLE WAS SHORT, TODAY IT WAS LONG.¹⁴ ON OTHER DAYS IT WAS OF YELLOWISH GOLD, TODAY OF RED GOLD. THIS IS THE STATEMENT OF R. MENAHEM. ON OTHER DAYS HE WOULD OFFER HALF A MINA [OF INCENSE] IN THE MORNING AND HALF A MINA IN THE AFTERNOON, TODAY HE ADDS ALSO HIS TWO

HANDS FULL.¹⁵ EVERY DAY IT WAS FINE, BUT TODAY THE FINEST POSSIBLE.¹⁶ ON OTHER DAYS THE PRIESTS WOULD GO UP ON THE EAST SIDE OF THE RAMP¹⁷ AND COME DOWN ON THE WEST SIDE, TODAY THE HIGH PRIEST GOES¹⁸ UP IN THE MIDDLE AND COMES DOWN IN THE MIDDLE. R. JUDAH SAYS: THE HIGH PRIEST ALWAYS GOES UP IN THE MIDDLE AND COMES DOWN IN THE MIDDLE. ON OTHER DAYS THE HIGH PRIEST SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND FEET FROM THE LAVER, THIS DAY FROM A GOLDEN LADLE. R. JUDAH SAYS: THE HIGH PRIEST ALWAYS SANCTIFIES HIS HANDS AND FEET FROM A GOLDEN LADLE. ON OTHER DAYS THERE WERE FOUR WOOD-PILES THERE,¹⁹ TODAY FIVE, THUS SAYS R. MEIR. R. JOSE SAYS: ON OTHER DAYS THREE, TODAY FOUR. R. JUDAH SAYS: ON OTHER DAYS TWO, TODAY THREE. GEMARA. But it is written: And there shall be no man in the tent of meeting?²⁰ R. Judah said: Read: Of the Hekal.²¹

Our Rabbis taught: ‘And there shall be no man in the tent of meeting’²²

(1) Tosaf s.v. Velo expresses amazement at the fact that the questioner overlooks the Tosefta, in which R. Judah actually does dispute the anonymous Mishnah. It is to be found in Parah XII, 8, which, as Tosaf suggests, the questioner may not have known the Mishnah containing no such dispute of R. Judah's.

(2) Num. XIX, 19.

(3) The word ‘tahir’ (a clean person) is superfluous, since Scripture just speaks of him, hence it must mean one who is clean again, hence was unclean before. The inference for a tebul-yom (v. Glos.) thus appears justified.

(4) Hence it is impossible to explain them on one schema, because of the particular condition of this chapter, but for the tradition, the inferences would appear incompatible.

— one could assume, not even in the Temple Court, therefore it says: ‘in the tent of meeting’. I know [this prohibition] only for the tent of meeting in the wilderness. Whence do we know thereof for Shiloh and the everlasting Sanctuary? To teach us that [Scripture] says in the holy place. I know [the prohibition] only during the time of [the smoking of] the incense, whence [do I know that it applies also] during the time of the sprinkling of the blood? To teach us that, Scripture says: until he come out and have made atonement for himself. — I know it only at the [time of] his entering.

Whence do I learn at his coming forth? To teach us that it says: until he come out. And he shall have made atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the assembly of the house of Israel, i.e., the atonement for himself precedes that for his household, and the atonement for his household precedes that for his brethren, the priests and the atonement for his brethren, the priests, precedes that for all the assembly of Israel.

The Master said: I know [of the prohibition] only for the time of [the smoking of] the incense. How is this implied? — Raba, and thus also R. Isaac b. Abdimi, and thus also R. Eleazar said: Scripture says: ‘And he shall have made atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the assembly of the house of Israel’. What atonement is there which obtains evenly for himself, his household, his brethren, the priests, and the whole assembly of the house of Israel? It is the smoking of the incense. But does the incense obtain atonement? — Indeed, for R. Hananiah cited:¹ We learn that the incense obtains atonement for what was said: And he put on the incense and made atonement for the people.² And the School of R. Ishmael taught: Why does incense obtain atonement for [the sin] of the evil tongue [evil speech]? Let that which is [performed] in secret³ come and obtain atonement for what is committed in secret!

We have learnt elsewhere:⁴ People must keep away from the place between Ulam⁵ and altar at the time of the smoking of the incense. R. Eleazar said: This was taught only during the time of the smoking of the incense in the Sanctuary, but during the time the incense was smoked in the Holy of Holies, people had to keep away from the Hekal, but not from the place between the Ulam and the altar.

A. Adda b. Ahabah, or as some say, Kadi,⁶ raised the following objection: R. Jose says: ‘Just as they keep away from the place between Ulam and altar during the [smoking of] the incense, so do they keep away at the time of the sprinkling of the blood of the anointed priest's bullock,⁷ and of the bullock offered up because of an error of the congregation,⁸ and of the he-goats [offered up] because of idolatry.⁹ What gradation of sanctity is there, then, between the Hekal and the space between Ulam and altar? [None] except that from the Hekal men keep away both during the time of the smoking of the incense, and outside of the time of the smoking of the incense, but from the space between Ulam and altar people keep away only in the time of the incense. At any rate, at the time of the smoking of the incense, they do keep away.¹⁰ Would you not say [it means] during the time of the smoking [of the incense] in the Holy of Holies?¹¹ — No, [the reference is to the time of smoking] in the Hekal.¹² If so, [how explain] ‘what then is the gradation between the two places’ etc.? Is the above the only difference in gradation?¹³ Is there not also this difference: that from the Hekal they keep away during the time both of the smoking of the incense in the Hekal itself, and of the smoking of the incense in the Holy of Holies, whereas from the place between Ulam and altar they keep away only during the time of the smoking of the incense in the Hekal itself? — This [exactly] is what he teaches: ‘Except that from the Hekal men keep away, both during the time of the smoking of incense [in the Hekal] and outside of the time of the smoking of the incense [in the Hekal],¹⁴ but from the place between Ulam and altar they keep away only in the time of the smoking of the incense [in the Hekal]. — But there is also this gradations that they keep away from the Hekal both during its own sanctification¹ and that of the Holy of Holies, whereas from the space between Ulam and altar they do not keep away except when the Hekal is being sanctified? — Raba said: The term 'keep away' includes it all in one.²

The Master said: So do they keep away at the time of the sprinkling of the blood of the anointed priest's bullock, and of the bullock offered up because of an error of the congregation, and of the he-goats offered up because of idolatry. Whence do we know that? — R. Pedath said: We infer that from the identity of the word 'atonement' [occurring also] with reference to the Day of Atonement.

R. Aha b. Ahabah said: Conclude from this that the gradations of sanctity³ are Biblical, and thus they have learnt them by tradition, for if it should enter your mind that they are only Rabbinical enactment, then what [in law] is the difference in the space between Ulam and altar [from which they must keep away] for fear that they might enter by accident, they should [analogically] keep away from the whole Temple Court out of fear that they might accidentally enter? — The space between Ulam and altar, since it is not marked off in any fashion, is not recognizable sufficiently, whereas the Temple Court, since there is the outer altar to mark it off, is sufficiently recognizable.⁴ Raba said: Conclude from this that the holiness of Ulam and Hekal is the same. For if it should enter your mind that they are of two different degrees of sanctity, then the sanctity of the Ulam itself is due only to rabbinic enactment; shall we then enact a preventive measure to prevent the violation of another preventive measure?⁵ — No, the Ulam and the space between Ulam and altar are of one degree of sanctity, the Hekal and the Ulam, however, are of two degrees of sanctity.

ON OTHER DAYS HE WOULD TAKE THEM OUT WITH A SILVER COAL-PAN: What is the reason? The Torah has consideration for the money of Israel.⁶

TODAY HE TOOK THEM OUT WITH A GOLDEN PAN IN WHICH HE WAS TO BRING THEM IN: Why? [To prevent] weakness of the high priest.⁷

ON OTHER DAYS HE WOULD TAKE THEM UP WITH A COAL-PAN CONTAINING FOUR KABS: A Tanna taught:⁸ One kab of the embers became scattered,⁹ and he swept it into the channel.¹⁰ One [Baraita] teaches one kab, and another two kabs? It is quite right according to the one which teaches 'one kab', for it is in accord with what the Rabbis said, but the one that taught 'two kabs' is in accord neither with the Rabbis nor with R. Jose?¹¹ — R. Hisda said: It is R. Ishmael, the son of R. Johanan b. Beroka, for it was taught: R. Ishmael, son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: He brought [the cinders] in a pan containing two kabs. — R. Ashi said: You can also say that it is in accord with R. Jose and he said it thus: On other days he would take them up with a pan containing a se'ah of the wilderness,¹² and pour it into one containing three Jerusalem kabs.

ON OTHER DAYS THE PAN WAS HEAVY, TODAY IT WAS LIGHT: A Tanna taught: On other days it was of thick size, but this day it was thin.

ON OTHER DAYS ITS HANDLE WAS SHORT, TODAY LONG: Why that? So that the arm of the high priest may support it. A Tanna taught: On other days it had no covering,¹³ today it had one — this is the statement of the son of the Segan.¹⁴

ON OTHER DAYS ITS GOLD WAS YELLOWISH: R. Hisda said: There are seven kinds of gold:¹⁵ gold; good gold; gold of Ophir;¹⁶ fine¹⁷ gold; spun¹⁸ gold; locked¹⁹ gold; Parwayim²⁰ gold. Gold and good gold, as it is written:²¹ And the gold of that land is good. Ophir gold: [so called] because it derives from Ophir. Fine [mupaz] gold

Locked [rare] gold, because when its sale is opened, all other shops are being locked up.¹ Gold of Parwayim, because it looked like the blood of a bullock [par]. R. Ashi said: There are but five [varieties], each having gold and good gold. Thus was it also taught:² 'On other days the gold was yellowish, this day it was red and that was the Parwayim gold, which looks like the blood of a bullock.'

ON OTHER DAYS HE WOULD OFFER UP HALF [A MINA] ETC., ON OTHER DAYS IT WAS FINE, TODAY MOST FINE: Our Rabbis taught: Why was it necessary to state 'beaten small'³ since it is written already: And thou shalt beat some of it very small?⁴ It is but to intimate that it must be most fine. ON OTHER DAYS THE PRIESTS WOULD COME UP ON THE EASTERN SIDE OF THE RAMP: Because a master said: Any turn you make shall be but to the right, i.e., toward the east.⁵

ON OTHER DAYS THERE WERE FOUR WOOD-PILES THERE: Our Rabbis taught:⁷ On other days there were two wood-piles, today three; one for the big wood-pile; one for the second pile for the incense, and one which is added for this day;⁸ this is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Jose said: On other days three, today four: one for the big wood-pile, one for the second pile of the incense, one to keep up the fire,⁹ and one which was added for this day. R. Meir said: On all days four and today five; one for the big wood-pile, one for the second pile for the incense, one to keep up the fire, and one for [the burning of] limbs and fat-pieces which had not been consumed on the eve, and one which was added on this day. At any rate all are agreed about two, whence do they know it? — Scripture says: It is that which goeth up on its firewood upon the altar all night,¹⁰ i.e., the big pile. And the fire of the altar shall be kept burning thereby,¹⁰ i.e., the second pile for the incense. Whence does R. Jose infer the [pile for] keeping up the fire? He infers that from: And the fire of the altar shall be kept burning thereby.¹⁰ And R. Judah? This [verse] refers to the kindling of the [splinters of] fig-wood,¹¹ for it was taught: R. Judah used to say: Whence do we know that the kindling of the fig-tree splinters must take place only on the top of the altar? To teach us that, it says: ‘And the fire of the altar shall be kept burning thereby’. R. Jose said: Whence do we know that a [special] pile is made up to keep the fire burning? To teach us that it says: ‘And the fire of the altar shall be kept burning thereby.’ But whence does R. Jose infer that the fig-tree splinters must be kindled [on the top of the altar]? — He infers it from whence R. Simeon infers it. For it was taught:¹² And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire on the altar¹³ — that teaches that the kindling of the fig-tree wood must be done by a priest and in a ministering vessel;¹⁴ thus, R. Judah. R. Simeon said to him: How could it enter your mind that a lay Israelite could come up to the altar? Rather does [this passage] teach that the kindling of the fig-wood must take place on the top of the altar. And R. Judah? If we had to infer it from there, we might assume he may stay on the ground and kindle it with bellows, therefore he informs us [as above]. Whence does R. Meir know about limbs and fat-pieces unconsumed from the eve before [requiring a special pile]?¹⁵ — He infers it from ‘And the fire’. And the Rabbis? — They do not interpret the ‘And’ [waw]. But, what, according to the Rabbis, does he do with the limbs and fat-pieces unconsumed from the eve before? — He returns them to the big pile, for it was taught: Whence do we know of limbs and fat-pieces unconsumed from the eve before that he lays them in order on the altar, and if the latter cannot hold them, that he lays them on the ramp, or on the gallery,¹ until the great pile is made? To teach us that, Scripture says: Whereto the fire hath consumed the burnt-offering on the altar.² And R. Meir?³ — [This is to teach] you may place back [there] unconsumed parts of the ‘burnt-offering’, but you may not place there unconsumed parts of the incense, for R. Hanania b. Minumai, of the school of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, said [with reference to]: ‘whereto the fire hath consumed the burnt-offering on the altar’ — you place back unconsumed parts of the burnt-offering, but you do not place back unconsumed parts of the incense. At any rate all agree that one adds [an additional pile] on that day; whence do they infer that? — They infer that from: ‘And the fire’, for even he who does not expound a ‘waw’, expounds ‘waw he’ [and the].⁴ What does ‘Fire shall be kept burning upon the altar continually’⁵ mean? — It is required as it was taught: ‘Fire shall be kept burning on the altar continually’; it shall not go out — that teaches concerning the second pile for the incense that it shall be laid in order only on the outer altar.⁶ Whence do we know that about fire, for the coal-pan, [on the Day of Atonement] and for the candlestick?⁷ That can be inferred as follows: The word esh [fire] is mentioned in connection with the incense,⁸ and the same word is mentioned in connection with coal-pan and candlestick; hence just as the former comes upon the outer altar, so do the latter come upon the outer altar. Or turn this way⁹ [perhaps]: the word esh [fire] is mentioned in connection with incense and is also mentioned in connection with coal-pan and candlestick; just as for the former it comes [for the altar] ‘near to it’,¹⁰ so for the latter it comes [from the altar] near to it.¹¹ To teach us [the right law] Scripture says: ‘Fire shall be kept burning on the altar,’ it shall not go out i.e., the continual fire whereof I spoke¹² to you must be nowhere else but on the top of the outer altar. We thus learned it for the fire of the candlestick, whence do we know it for the fire of the coal-pan? This can be inferred: [The word] ‘esh’ [fire] is stated in connection with the coal-pan, and ‘esh’ is used in connection with the candlestick, hence just as the former comes from the outer altar, so does the latter come from the outer altar. But, perhaps turn this way: [the word] ‘esh’ is mentioned in reference to the incense, and ‘esh’ is used in connection with the coal-pan; hence just as the former comes from [the altar] near to it, so the latter too comes from [the altar] near to it. Therefore it says: And he shall take a censer full of coals of fire from off the altar before the Lord¹³ Now which altar is [only] partly before the Lord, but not wholly before the Lord? You must say it is the outer altar.¹⁴

Now it was necessary [for Scripture] to mention both ‘from off the altar’ and from ‘before the Lord’. For if the Divine Law had written only ‘from off the altar’ I might have said: That ‘altar’ means the inner altar, hence the Divine Law said: ‘from before the Lord.’¹⁵ And if the Divine Law had written: ‘From before the Lord’ [alone], I might have said it must be exactly before the Lord,¹⁶ but not to one side or to the other,¹ therefore it was necessary [to have both phrases].

R. Eleazar said in the name of Bar Kappara: R. Meir used to say: For any of the limbs of the [daily] burnt-offering which remained over,² a special pile is to be arranged, even on the Sabbath. What is he teaching us? Have we not learnt: Every day there were four piles of wood there?³ — R. Abin said: It was necessary [to state it] for those which became [somewhat] invalidated.⁴ [This however] is only when the fire has already touched them, but not when the fire has not taken hold of them. Some there are who say: Whether they were valid or invalid⁴ [the same rule applies]: If the fire had touched them, a special pile is needed but if not, not. [You say] 'Even on the Sabbath'. [Surely] we have learnt thus: AND TODAY FIVE [PILES OF WOOD]!⁵ — R. Aha b. Jacob said: It was necessary [to mention that]. The thought might have arisen in you that this applied only when the Day of Atonement fell [immediately] after Sabbath, because the fat-pieces of the Sabbath may be offered up on the Day of Atonement, but not [if it fell] in the middle of the week, therefore he informs us [that it applies then too].

Raba said: Who is it that does not care what flour he grinds?⁶ Have we not learnt: On all other days?⁷ [These were four]-This is a real difficulty. Now he [Bar Kappara] disputes with R. Huna who holds: The continual offering suspends the Sabbath only at its beginning, but not at its end.⁸

[To turn to] the main text: The continual offering suspends the Sabbath only at its beginnings not at its end. What does it not suspend? — R. Hisda says: It suspends the Sabbath, but not the law of levitical impurity. Rabbah said: It suspends the law of levitical impurity,⁹ but not the Sabbath. Said Abaye to Rabbah: There is a difficulty on your view as well as on the view of R. Hisda. According to you, there is a difficulty: Why does it suspend the law of levitical impurity? Because Scripture said: In its due season¹⁰ i.e., even in levitical uncleanness, [it should suspend also] the Sabbath, [since] 'in its due season' [implies] even on the Sabbath? — And according to R. Hisda there is a difficulty. Wherefore the difference [in law in the case of] Sabbath touching which it is written: 'In its due season' [i.e.] even on the Sabbath; the same should apply to levitical impurity, since 'In its due season' [implies] even in levitical uncleanness.¹¹ He answered: There is no difficulty according to my view, nor is there any difficulty according to R. Hisda. There is no difficulty on my view; for the beginning is like the end

(8) This offering is sacrificed on the Sabbath day, notwithstanding the fact that the labour involved many kinds of work expressly forbidden on that day. But only at the beginning. i.e., if the beginning of that sacrifice has to be made on the Sabbath. Of the Friday dusk-offering, however, the limbs must be smoked before the Sabbath. Since it belongs to Friday it would be desecration to continue it on the Sabbath.

[consequently] in the case of the law of levitical impurity, since it is suspended at the beginning it is also suspended at the end, but with regard to the Sabbath, since it is not suspended at the beginning¹ it is also not suspended at the end. Nor is there any difficulty according to R. Hisda: He does not hold that the end is like the beginning: [consequently] with regard to the Sabbath, since it is inoperative when a community sacrifice is concerned, it is suspended also at the end of the sacrifice, whereas as regards the law of levitical uncleanness, since in the face of a community sacrifice it is only suspended,² it is suspended only at the beginning which is essential for [the obtainment of] atonement, but not at the end, which is not essential for atonement.

It was stated: If one puts out the fire of the coal-pan or of the candlestick, Abaye holds him guilty,³ Raba holds him not guilty. If he put it out on the top of the altar, all agree that he is guilty, they dispute it only if he brought it down to the ground and put it out there. Abaye holds him guilty 'because it is fire of the altar'; whereas Raba holds him guilty, 'since he snatched it away, he has snatched it'.⁴ According to whose opinion will be, then, what R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: 'One who takes an ember down from the altar and puts it out is guilty' shall we say it will be in accord with Abaye?⁵ — You may also say that it is in accord with Raba, for in the one case it was not snatched away' for its ordained use,⁶ in the other case it was snatched away' from the altar for its ordained use.

Some there are who say: None disputes the case where he took it down to the floor and put it out there, [all agreeing] that he is not guilty, the dispute concerns but the case where he put it out on the top of the altar. Abaye holds he is guilty 'because it is the top of the altar', whereas Raba holds him guilty, 'since he snatched it away, he has snatched it'. According to whose opinion, then, will be the teaching of R. Nahman in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha viz.: 'One who brings an ember down from the altar and puts it out is guilty', — will you not say it will be in accord with neither Abaye nor Raba? — [No], there it was not snatched away for its ordained use, here it was snatched away' for its ordained use. [

(1) The Friday dusk-offering must be offered before Sabbath since the blood of the offering would become useless, invalidated, if not sprinkled before sunset.

(4) And it has lost its sacred character, hence what he put out on the floor was no more a coal sanctified on the altar whence he does not become guilty of transgressing the prohibition.

(5) The adopted opinion in disputes between Abaye and Raba is in the overwhelming majority in accord with Raba, whence the question as to the meaning of his teaching an invalid opinion. V. B.M. 22b.

(6) To place it in the coal-pan.

CHAPTER V

MISHNAH. THEY BROUGHT OUT TO HIM THE LADLE AND THE PAN. [FROM THE LATTER] HE TOOK HIS TWO HANDS FULL [OF INCENSE] AND PUT IT INTO THE LADLE, A TALL [HIGH PRIEST] ACCORDING TO HIS SIZE, A SHORT ONE ACCORDING TO HIS SIZE AND THUS WAS ITS MEASURE. HE TOOK THE PAN¹ IN HIS RIGHT [HAND] AND THE LADLE IN HIS LEFT [HAND].

GEMARA. THE PAN? But was it not taught:² He took the pan and went up to the top of the altar, took out the burning coals, and went down? — There the reference is to the pan of burning coals, here to the pan of the incense. For it was taught:³ One brought out for him the empty ladle from the Cell of Vessels, and the heaped pan of incense from the Cell of the House of Abtinas.⁴

HE TOOK HIS TWO HANDS FULL AND PUT IT INTO THE LADLE, A TALL [HIGH PRIEST] ACCORDING TO HIS SIZE, A SHORT ONE ACCORDING TO HIS SIZE AND THUS WAS ITS MEASURE: For what purpose was the ladle on the Day of Atonement necessary? Surely the Divine Law said: [And he shall take] his hands full and bring it⁵ — Because [otherwise] it is impossible.⁶ For how shall he do it? Shall he bring in [the pan of burning coals] and then again bring in [the incense]?⁷ The Divine Law refers to one 'bringing in', not to two 'bringings in'. — Shall he take the incense in his handfuls and place the pan⁸ [of burning coals] on top of it, entering thus? Then when he comes [within the veil] how shall he act? Shall he take it between his teeth and set the pan [of burning coals] down? Now, if such procedure is unseemly in the presence of a mortal king, how much less seemly is it before the Supreme King of Kings, the Holy One, blessed be He? — Thus it is impossible and since it is impossible, we do it as we find it in connection with the [offerings of the] princes.⁹

He took the pan¹⁰ in his right hand and the censer into his left hand.¹¹ 'The native below and the alien in the heavens above'? This one [the ladle] is small, the other [coal-pan] large,¹² and even where both are alike, as with R. Ishmael b. Kimhith, the one is hot and the other cold. It was reported about R. Ishmael b. Kimhith that he was able to take four kabs in his two handfuls, saying: All women are valiant but the valour of my mother exceeded them all.¹³ Some interpret it¹⁴ as referring to the crumb-dough,¹⁵ in accord with Rabbah b. Jonathan who said in the name of R. Yehiel that crumb-dough is very helpful to a sick person. Others say it refers to the [healthy] semen [she received], in accordance with what R. Abbuha asked. For he raised a contradiction: It is written: For thou hast sifted¹⁶ me with strength unto the battle¹⁷ but it is also written, Who has girded me with valour [for the battle]¹⁸ [to interpret the divergence thus]: David said before the Holy One, blessed be He: Lord of the Universe, Thou hast [first] 'carefully sifted' and then strengthened me. It was told of R. Ishmael b. Kimhith¹⁹ that one day he talked in the street to an Arab, and spittle from his mouth flew on his garments,²⁰ whereupon his brother Jeshebab entered and ministered in his stead. Thus their mother saw²¹ two high priests on one day. Furthermore, it is told of R. Ishmael b. Kimhith that he went out and talked with a certain lord²² in the street, and spittle from his mouth squirted on his garments, whereupon Joseph his brother entered and ministered in his stead so that their mother saw two high priests²¹ on one day. The Sages said unto her: What hast thou done to merit such [glory]? She said: Throughout the days of my life the beams of my house have not seen the plaits of my hair.²³ They said to her: There were many who did likewise and yet did not succeed.²⁴

Our Rabbis taught: with his fists²⁵, that means that he must not make a measure for his fistful.²⁶ The question was: How about making a measure for his handfuls? Is it only there²⁵ since it is written, 'With his fist',²⁷ whereas here²⁸ where it is not written 'With his handfuls' but 'his hand full of fine incense,' [it matters] not,²⁹ or does he derive [the meaning of] 'full' from [the word], full?

[occurring in connection with] his fist?³⁰ — Come and hear: AND THUS WAS ITS MEASURE'. Would you not say that it means: If he wishes to make a measure he may do so?³¹ — No, this is what it means: In the same manner would he take the hands full within the Holy of Holies.³² May not you then conclude from this that he takes the handfuls [outside] and repeats it inside again! — [No], perhaps it means that if he wants to have a measure made, he may do so;³³ or, that he must take neither less nor more.³⁴

Our Rabbis taught: His fistfull.³⁵ One might have assumed that it may come forth on both sides, therefore Scripture says: 'With his fist'.³⁶ From 'With his fist' I might have inferred that he should just take some with his finger-tips hence Scripture says: His fistful', i.e., in the manner in which people take a fistful. How so? He bends three of his fingers³⁷ up to his wrist and takes a fistful.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 47b

In the case of the [meal-offering baked in a] griddle and the [meal-offering of the] stewing-pan¹ he makes it even with his thumb from above and with his small finger from below. And this was the most difficult service in the Sanctuary. [You say] 'this is'; and nothing else? Was there not the pinching of the bird's head² and was there not the taking of the fistfuls?³ - But say, rather, this was one of the difficult priestly functions in the Sanctuary. — R. Johanan said: R. Joshua b. Uza'ah asked: How about that which is between [the fingers of the fist]?⁴ -R. Papa answered: That which is inside needs no question for it surely belongs to the fistful. Concerning that which is on the outside, too, there is no doubt, it surely is considered a remainder.⁵ The question attaches only to such portions as are in between [the fingers]. How about these? — Said R. Johanan: R. Joshua b. Uza'ah had subsequently solved [the question] viz., concerning [the portion] in between, uncertainty prevails.⁶ How then shall he act?-R. Hanina said: He shall burn [as an offering] first the fistful and then the portions in between [the fingers]. For, if we were to burn up [the 'in between' portions] first, perhaps they are considered remainders, and it would thus be a case where the remainders became reduced between the taking of the fistful and the burning [of it on the altar], whereas the Master has said⁷ that if remainders became reduced between the taking of the fistful and the burning thereof no more fistfuls may be burnt up on their account! If that be so, then even now apply thereto the rule:⁸ Whatever had partly been used in fire offering must no more be burnt [as an offering]?⁹ Said R. Judah, son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi: He burns them [the remainders] up as wood, in accord with R. Eliezer, for it was taught:¹⁰ R. Eliezer said: For a sweet savour,¹¹ for this you must not bring them up but you may bring them up as fuel. This will be in accord with R. Eliezer, but what is there to be said in accord with the Sages?¹² R. Mari said: Fat priests¹³ take the fistful. Now that you have come to this answer, according to R. Eliezer, too, [there is a procedure which may be adopted] at the outset,¹⁴ viz., fat priests should take the fistful. R. Papa inquired: How about the middle [portions] 'in between' connection with the [two] hands full?¹⁵ — What is he inquiring about? If he derives [the meaning of the word] 'full' from 'full' [occurring] there¹⁶ it is the same [as the first question].¹⁷ — This is what R. Papa asks: [Should we say that] we require that 'he shall bring it his hands full',¹⁸ which is the case here, or is it required that he take...bring in, which is not the case here?¹⁹ — The question remains unanswered.

R. Papa said: It is obvious to me that 'his fistful' means: In the manner in which people usually take a fistful, but R. Papa asked: If he had taken the 'fistful' with his finger-tips, what is the law then, or [if he took it] from below upward, or from the sides, what then? — The questions remain unanswered.

R. Papa said: It is obvious to me that the 'handfuls' are to be taken as men usually take them, but he asked: If he took the 'handfuls' with his finger-tips, what then? or from below upward, or from the side; or if he swept it with one hand and with the other and then brought the hands together? — The questions remain unanswered.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 48a

R. Papa asked: If he stuck the fistful on to the side of the vessel, what then? Does the law require that it be put into the middle of the vessel, which is the case here, or must it be placed inside the vessel properly, and this was not done in our case? — The question remains unanswered.

Mar, the son of R. Ashi asked: If he overturned the vessel and placed the fistful on the bottom of the vessel, how then? Does the law require placing it in the vessel, which was done here, or is it to be placed properly, which has not been done? The question remains unanswered.

R. Papa asked: With regard to the 'handfuls' are they to be heaped or levelled?—R. Abba said to R. Ashi: Come and hear: The 'handfuls' whereof they spoke are to be neither levelled, nor heaped, but liberally measured. — We learned elsewhere:¹ If the blood was poured out on the pavement² and he gathered it up, it is invalidated. But if it was poured out of the vessel on the pavement and he gathered it up, it is usable. Whence do we know this?³ — For the Rabbis taught: And [the anointed priest] shall take of the blood of the bullock,⁴ i.e., from the blood of life⁵ and not from the blood of the skin, nor from the last blood oozing out.⁶ 'From the blood of the bullock' i.e., the blood from the bullock shall he receive [straight]. For if you were to interpret from the blood of the bullock' [as meaning] 'from the blood⁷ i.e.' even if only part of the blood, has not Rab Judah said: He who receives the blood must receive the whole of the bullock's blood, as it is said: And all the remaining blood of the bullock shall he pour out at the base of the altar,⁸ hence it is evident from here that from the blood of the bullock' must be interpreted as 'blood from the bullock [straight]';⁹ he¹⁰ holding the view: One may remove [a letter] and add [one] and thus interpret.¹¹

R. Papa asked: If the incense was scattered from his handfuls, how then? Is his hand to be compared to the neck of the animal¹² so that the incense would be invalidated, or is it to be compared to a ministering vessel and thus is not invalidated? — The question remains unanswered.

R. Papa asked further: If, in taking the handfuls of the incense, he had an [unlawful] intention,¹³ what then? Do we say that we infer [the meaning] of 'full' [by analogy of] 'full' occurring with the meal-offering,¹⁴ [viz.,] as in that case an [unlawful] intention effects an invalidation, so here too, an unlawful intention will effect an invalidation, or is it not so?—R. Shimi b. Ashi said to R. Papa: Come and hear: R. Akiba added [the cases of]¹⁵ the fine flour, the incense, the balm, and the embers [of the sanctuary]. that if a tebul yom¹⁶ had touched part of them, he invalidated all of them.¹⁷ Now the assumption is that since a tebul yom invalidates them¹⁸ so does their being kept overnight,¹⁹ and since their being kept overnight invalidates them, so does unlawful intention.²⁰

R. Papa asked:

- (1) Zeb. 25a.
 - (2) Before having been received into a vessel, as prescribed.
 - (3) That it is necessary for the blood to flow from the neck of the animal straight into a vessel.
 - (4) Lev. IV, 5.
 - (5) The blood coming forth in a jet, with which life leaves the body of the animal.
 - (6) Of the vein which was cut.
 - (7) The Hebrew words are Mi-dam ha-par, 'From the blood of the bullock'. The 'mi' has partitive meaning-'from the blood', part of it, not all of it.
 - (8) Lev. IV, 7.
 - (9) Meaning not from the skin, the vein, but that which is the bullock's life, with the jetting away of which his life too is gone.
 - (10) The Tanna of the cited Baraitha.
 - (11) In order to remove a contradiction. This interpretation involves a change in the Hebrew text. Instead of מִדָּם הַפָּר the ad hoc reading is: דָּם מִהַפָּר Involving a removal of one letter from the first word and its addition to the second word.
 - (12) When the blood flows from the neck of the animal to the pavement, instead of being received in a vessel, it is invalidated. Does the same law apply when the incense is scattered?
 - (13) An intention at the moment of slaying to eat of the flesh beyond the allotted time renders the animal in question 'a vile thing' (Zeb. 25a). If the priest has similar intention, i.e., to offer up the incense tomorrow instead of today, would the same consequence ensue for the incense?

 - (18) Through the union effected by the vessel of ministry.
 - (19) In virtue of the fact that they were contained in a vessel of ministry. V Me'il. 10a.
 - (20) I.e., since the incense by being placed in a vessel of ministry received a holy character in respect of contact with a tebul yom, and being kept overnight, it becomes invalidated through unlawful intention.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 48b

If he, in removing the coals [for the incense], had an unlawful intention — what then? Are preliminary¹ means of a religious act to be considered as the act itself or not? — The question remains unsolved.

The question was asked of R. Shesheth: If the blood was carried [to the altar] in the left hand, what is the law?² R. Shesheth answered: You have learnt it: He took the pan of burning coals in his right hand and the ladle in his left.³ But he could have settled that point to them from what we have learnt:⁴ [He carried] the right hind-leg in the left hand with the inside of the skin outward?⁵ — If the argument were based on that I might have assumed this applies only to a carrying [of such things] which are not indispensable to atonement,⁵ but in the case of a carrying [of things] which are indispensable to atonement,⁶ [it would] not [apply], therefore he has to bring [the above reference].⁷

(1) So that his unlawful thought in connection with the preliminary act would have the same effect as such thought in connection with the religious act in itself and so the incense is rendered invalidated. Another interpretation would limit the effects of his unlawful intention to the preliminary act, here to the embers.

(2) All the other rites in connection with the blood sprinkling must be performed with the right. V. Zeb. 16b and 24a.

(3) Whence we may infer that even in this case he is within the law.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 49a

They raised the following objection:¹ A lay Israelite, an onen,² one inebriate or one with a blemish are invalidated for the receiving, the carrying, and the sprinkling of the blood, and so is one seated, and the left hand. This is a refutation. — But R. Shesheth himself has asked this question in refutation!³ For R. Shesheth said to the Amora⁴ of R. Hisda who asked of R. Hisda: May the blood be carried by a lay Israelite? He answered: It is proper and a scriptural verse supports me: And they killed the passover lamb, and the priests dashed⁵ of their hand, and the Levites flayed them.⁶ And R. Shesheth raised this question: A lay Israelite, a mourner, an inebriate, or one blemished are invalidated for the receiving, the carrying, or the sprinkling of the blood, and so is one seated and the left hand!⁷ -After having heard it, he raised it in objection [against R. Hisda]. But R. Hisda had cited a scriptural passage [in support]? — They served only the purpose of a portico.⁸

R. Papa asked: If another⁹ [priest] took his hands full and put it into his [the high priest's] hands — how then? Is what we require that it be 'his hands full' which we have here, or is it required that he both 'take [his hands full] and bring it in', which was not the case here? — The question remains unsolved. R. Joshua b. Levi asked: If he had taken his hands full and then died, what about someone else entering [within the Holy of Holies] with his [the first one's] handfuls? — Said R. Hanina: This is a question of the older generation!¹⁰ Shall we say that R. Joshua b. Levi was older?¹¹ But R. Joshua b. Levi had said: R. Hanina permitted me to drink a cress-dish¹² on the Sabbath? [You say] to drink? That is self-evident, for we have learnt:¹³ One may eat all kinds of food for a remedy, and one may drink every kind of drink as a medicine? — Rather to grind and to drink cress-dish on the Sabbath. What case do you mean? If it be a case of danger, surely it is allowed;¹⁴ and if the case be without danger, it surely is forbidden!¹⁵ -In truth the case referred to is one dangerous and this is how the question ran: Does it cure so that one may for this purpose desecrate the Sabbath, or does it not effect a cure so that one may not desecrate the Sabbath in connection with it? And why was it R. Hanina?¹⁶ — Because he was familiar with medicine, for R. Hanina said:¹⁷ Never did a man consult me concerning a wound inflicted by a white mule and recover. But we see that people recover? -Say: And it was cured.¹⁸ -But we see them cured? -The reference here is to red mules, the end of whose feet is white. — At any rate we learn from here that R. Hanina was the older one?¹⁹ -Rather, this is what he said: Our question is like one of the former generation.²⁰ But did R. Hanina express such a view?²¹ Did not R. Hanina say: With a bullock,²² i.e., but not with the blood of a bullock;²³ and, furthermore, was it not R. Hanina who said: If he took the hands full of the incense before the slaying of the of the bullock, he has done nothing?²⁴ — This is what he [R. Hanina] said: Since he²⁵ asks the question, the inference is justified that he holds 'With a bullock' includes also 'with the bullock's blood'; now, according to [this] his view, his question is like the question of an older generation. — What about that?²⁶ — R. Papa said: If [we say that] he takes the handful first and then must take it again,²⁷ then his fellow may enter with his hafinah,²⁸ because the hafinah is still the same; but if [we say] that he takes the handfuls once but does not take them again, then your question arises. Said R. Huna son of R. Joshua to R. Papa: On the contrary! If [we say that he] performs the hafinah twice, none else should enter with his hafinah, because it is impossible that the second take not either a bit less [than the handfuls of the first]²⁹ or a bit more; but [if we say that] he performs only one hafinah, does your question arise. For the question had been raised: Must he perform the hafinah twice?- Come and hear: AND SUCH WAS ITS MEASURE. Now does not that mean that as the measure in the outside hafinah, so was it in the hafinah within the Holy of Holies? — No, perhaps the meaning here is that if he wanted to make a measure he could do so, or, that he must not take either more or less in the one case than in the other.³⁰ Come and hear:

(7) Which shows that R. Shesheth knew of the Mishnah disqualifying the carrying with the left hand, how then did he solve the question put to him contrariwise.

(8) The laymen served only the purpose of a portico, holding the bowls up to view, but not handing them to the altar.

(9) Lit., 'his fellow'.

(10) The fact that this question asked by a teacher of the older generation has been also put by myself is an implicit compliment to our learning; R. Joshua b. Levi being of the older generation.

(11) The older of the two scholars. Hence Hanina's remark about the 'older generation'.

(16) Of whom the question was asked.

(17) Hul. 7a.

(18) The first interpretation referred to the person injured by the mule,' the second to the wound.

(19) Since R. Joshua refers to Hanina as 'R. Hanina', one must assume that the former cannot have been older, for in that case he would have called him by his first name, Instead of saying 'R. Hanina etc.'

(20) He said to his pupils: This question of yours has been already asked by older scholars than you, viz., R. Joshua b. Levi, and it remained unsolved.

(21) Did he himself doubt as to whether the high priest may enter the Holy of Holies with the handfuls of incense that had been taken by someone else.

(22) Lev. XVI, 3.

(23) I.e., one priest must both slay the bullock and enter the Holy of Holies with its blood. This interpretation excludes the possibility of one's entering with the blood of a bullock slain by someone else.

(24) The ministration is invalid and must be repeated in proper form and order, infra 60b. As the taking of the hands full must not be performed before, but after the slaying of the bullock, the first high priest must have slain his bullock and the one who takes his place must slay another bullock, it is evident that he cannot use the handfuls taken by the first high priest, which took place before the slaying of the second bullock. Hence it seems impossible that R. Hanina could have asked the question attributed to him here.

(25) Since R. Joshua asked the question, he must hold that the second priest need not bring another bullock, for if that were his view, the taking of the handful of the incense before the slaying of the bullock would have been invalidated. Hence the apposite remark that others of an earlier generation who, in opposition to him hold that 'with a bullock' includes even 'with the blood of his bullock' have already asked the question.

(26) The original question: If a priest had taken the hands full of incense and thereupon had died, may another enter with his 'handfuls'?

(27) Within the Holy of Holies, v. infra and supra 47a.

(28) The handfuls taken by the high priest. V. Glos.

(29) As not all handfuls of people are of the same capacity.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 49b

How does he do it?¹ He takes hold of the dish² with his finger-tips according to some with his teeth — and pulls it with his thumb until it reaches his elbows, then he turns it over in his hands and heaps up the incense in order that its smoke may come up slowly; some say he scatters it in order that its smoke may come up fast; and this is the most difficult ministration in the Sanctuary. This alone? None other? But is there not the pinching of the bird's head? And the taking of [an exact] fistful of the incense? — Rather [say] this is one of the more difficult ministrations in the Sanctuary.³ [At any rate] infer from here that he had to perform the hafinah twice. — The inference is right.

The question was raised: If the priest slew [the animal] and died, may someone else enter with its blood? Do we say 'With a bullock' [includes] even 'with the blood of the bullock', or 'With a bullock' only but not with its blood?⁴ — R. Hanina said: 'With a bullock', but not with its blood. R. Lakish said: 'With a bullock', and even with its blood. R. Ammi said: 'With a bullock', but not with the blood of the bullock. R. Isaac the Smith said: 'With a bullock' and even with its blood. R. Ammi raised the following objection: One⁵ may be counted in⁶ for the paschal lamb, or one may withdraw from being counted in it until it be slaughtered. Now, if that view were correct,⁷ this should read: Until he sprinkles [the blood]. — There [is a special situation], because It is written: miheyoth misseh, i.e., as long as the lamb is alive.⁸

Mar Zutra raised the following objection: One must not redeem⁹ with a calf or with a beast of chase, or with what had been slaughtered or with a cross-bred, or with a koy,¹⁰ only with a lamb?¹¹ There is a different case, because [the meaning of] lamb [here] is inferred from 'lamb'¹² [mentioned in connection] with the paschal lamb. Then just as that must be male, without blemish, and one year old,¹³ this too ought to be male, without blemish, and one year old? — [To prevent such interpretation], Scripture states: Thou shalt redeem . . . thou shalt redeem,¹⁴ to include both. If [repetition of] 'Thou shalt redeem' means to include, then all ought to be included? — What value would the word 'lamb' have in that case!

(10) A kind of bearded deer or antelope (Jastrow), which belongs either to the genus of cattle or of beast of chase.

(11) V. Bek. 12a. Since the emphasis is on 'lamb' (Ex. XIII, 13) and a slaughtered lamb is excluded, the inference appears justified, that a slaughtered lamb is no more considered to be a lamb. Hence a refutation of the view that blood can be considered as of equal ritual value with the animal itself.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 50a

R. Isaac the Smith raised the following objection to R. Ammi's view: 'Even the whole bullock shall he carry forth'.¹ — [It means]: he shall take it out in its completeness.² And the bullock of the sin-offering and the he-goat of the sin-offering?³ — R. Papa answered: Nobody disputes with regard to skin, flesh, and excrement, the dispute applies only to the blood,⁴ one holding blood to be designated ‘bullock’, the other holding that blood is not designated ‘bullock’. R. Ashi said: It seems reasonable to hold with the view that blood is designated ‘bullock’, for it is written: Herewith shall Aaron come into the holy place; with a young bullock.⁵ Now does he bring it in with its horns? [Is it not] rather, with its blood, and yet it is called ‘bullock’. And the other?⁶ [It means this:] ‘How⁷ is Aaron legally permitted to enter the Sanctuary? With a young bullock for a sin-offering’. — But derive it⁸ from the fact that it is a sin-offering whose owners have died and ‘a⁹ sin-offering whose owners have died is left to die’?¹⁰ -Said Rabin the son of R. Ada to Raba: Your own disciples said in the name of R. Amram: This¹¹ is a community sin-offering and the sin-offering of the community is not left. For we learned:¹² R. Meir said: ‘Are not the bullock of ‘the Day of Atonement and the pancakes of the high priest and the paschal lamb¹³ each offerings of an individual and yet they suspend the law of Sabbath and the laws touching levitical impurity?’ Would you not infer therefrom that there must be a view according to which these are considered offerings of the congregation?¹⁴ But according to your own arguments when it states:¹⁵ R. Jacob said to him:¹⁶ But are there not the bullock to be offered for an error of the congregation, and the he-goats to be offered up for idolatry and the festive offering,¹⁷ all of which are community-offerings, and yet they suspend neither the laws of the Sabbath, nor those of levitical impurity? Would you infer from this that there must be a view that they are sacrifices of an individual?¹⁸ Rather [what you must therefore say is] he answered the first Tanna whom he heard saying that a community-sacrifice suspends the laws both of the Sabbath and those touching levitical impurity, whilst the sacrifice of an individual suspends neither the laws of the Sabbath nor those affecting levitical uncleanness, whereupon R. Meir said: ‘Is [the law concerning] the offering of an individual a general rule, is there not the bullock of the Day of Atonement? Are there not the pancakes of the high priest and the paschal lamb, all of which are private offerings, and yet they suspend both the Sabbath and the impurity laws?’ And also R. Jacob said: ‘Is the law concerning the offering of the community a rule, are there not the bullock for an error of the community, and the he-goats for idolatry, and the festive offering, all of which are community-offerings yet suspend neither the laws of the Sabbath, nor those touching levitical impurity?’ Rather accept this principle: Whatsoever has a fixed time,¹⁹ suspends both the laws of the Sabbath and those touching levitical impurity, even [though the sacrifice concerned be that] of an individual; and whatsoever has no definite time fixed suspends neither the Sabbath laws nor those affecting levitical uncleanness even if a community-offering [were involved].²⁰

Abaye raised the following objection:²¹ If the bullock and the he-goat of the Day of Atonement had been lost and other [animals] had been set aside in their stead,²² then they must all be left to die; similarly, if the he-goats [offered in expiation] for idolatry had been lost and others had been set aside in their stead,²² they must all be left to die; this is the view of R. Judah. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon hold: They should be left to go to pasture until they become unfit for sacrifice,²³ whereupon they should be sold and the money realized should go to the fund for [providing] freewill-offerings. because ‘a community-sacrifice is not left to die’.²⁴ Bullock here refers to the bullock offered up for an error of the community. — But the text reads ‘of the Day of Atonement’? — This refers to the he-goat. But it was stated: If the bullock of the Day of Atonement and the he-goat of the Day of Atonement had been lost and others were set aside in their stead,²² they must all be left to die, this is the view of R. Judah. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon hold: They should be left to go to pasture until they become unfit for sacrifice, whereupon they should be sold and the money realized for them should go to the fund for providing freewill-offerings. because a community-offering is not left to die’? — Do not read:²⁵ ‘For a community-sacrifice is not left to die’, read rather, for ‘a sacrifice belonging to partners is not left to die’.²⁶ What is the practical difference?²⁷ — That the priests will not have to bring a sacrifice for an error in a legal decision.²⁸ — Come and hear: For R. Eleazar asked:

(1) Lev. IV, 12. The animal is slain already and yet Scripture calls it a ‘bullock’.

(2) I.e., all that is left of it the emphasis being on ‘the whole’.

- (3) Ibid. XVI, 27. This shows that the body of the bullock itself after it is slain is still designated 'bullock'.
- (4) Whether blood by itself is equivalent to the whole animal so that the terms may be used indiscriminately or not?
- (5) Lev. XVI, 3.
- (6) How will he explain this verse?
- (7) with such ministrations in view is Aaron permitted to enter the sanctuary, to perform all details in connection with the bullock.
- (8) That another priest may not enter with the blood of a bullock slain by the first priest who died.
- (9) Tem. 15a.
- (10) Hence no further ministration is possible with it.
- (11) Bullock of the Day of Atonement.
- (12) V. Tem. 14a (Mishnah); v. next note.
- (13) This is omitted in Mishnah Tem. hence var. lec. 'it has been taught' instead of 'we have learnt', v. note 2.
- (14) In accord with the view of the first Tanna, whom R. Meir opposes, that only community-offerings can suspend these laws.
- (15) Tosef. Tem. I.
- (16) To the same first Tanna whom R. Meir opposes.
- (17) Brought by the pilgrims to the Temple on the occasion of a festival (Ex. XXIII, 14).
- (18) The assumption being that only thus could they fail to suspend either of the laws.
- (19) The Pancakes of the high priest are to be offered at a definite time every day, whereas the festive offering may be brought for seven days following the festival, hence having no definite time.
- (20) Hence we have no proof that any Tanna is of the opinion that the bullock of the Day of Atonement is a community-sacrifice.
- (21) Infra 65a.
- (22) When they are found again, they are deprived of food until they die.
- (23) Because of a blemish or their repulsive appearance.
- (24) Hence we see that these Tannaim consider the bullock of the Day of Atonement a community-offering, in clear contradiction of the statement above.
- (25) In the cited Baraitas.
- (26) The bullock brought by the high priest on the Day of Atonement being considered a sacrifice belonging to partners because all the priests share in the atonement effected by it.
- (27) Since in either case the animal is not left to die, whether we call it a community sacrifice or one belonging to partners?
- (28) If the Beth din by error had wrongly advised the priests, such error would not be considered 'error of the community', as when a whole tribe by mistake transgresses the law, but would be considered a sacrifice of partners, which is not left to die. Herein lies the practical difference, hence the justification of the distinction.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 50b

According to him who holds that the bullock of the Day of Atonement is a private sacrifice, is a substitute made for it valid¹ or not? Does not this imply that there is one who considers it a community-offering?² - No, the inference is that there is one who considered it an offering of partners.³

[To turn to] the main text: R. Eleazar asked: According to him who holds that the bullock of the Day of Atonement is an offering of an individual, is a substitute made for it valid or not?¹ What is his question? [Shall we say, as to] whether [the validity of a substitute] is dependent on him who consecrated it, or on him who attains atonement thereby?⁴ Obviously [it may be objected] we make it dependent on him who obtains atonement thereby.⁴ for R. Abbuha said in the name of R. Johanan: He who consecrates must add the fifth to and he who obtains atonement thereby can render valid a substitute,¹ and one who separates the priestly gift from his own produce for that of his neighbour has the benefit of the pleasure!⁵ In truth it is obvious that the matter depends on him who obtains atonement, and this is what he asked: Have his fellow-priests a definite share in the atonement⁶ or do they receive their forgiveness merely by implication?⁷ Come and hear: There are some aspects of the original sacrificial animal severer than those of a substitute animal, there are some aspects in which the substitute animal has more rigid rules than the original sacrificial animal. More severe are the regulations touching the original inasmuch as it applies both to an individual and to a community, suspends the Sabbath law, and the law concerning levitical impurity, and renders a substitute [valid,] all these things not applying to the substitute animal.⁸ More severe are the regulations touching a substitute animal than those of the original sacrificial animal, inasmuch as a substitute is effected⁹ even if it have a permanent blemish, and it cannot be made available [on redemption] for profane use, either to be shorn, or put to work,¹⁰ all these things not applying to the original animal.¹¹ Now what kind of sacrifice is meant here? If we are to assume an individual's sacrifice [is meant]. how could it suspend the laws of either Sabbath or those touching levitical impurity; if, again, the reference be to a community sacrifice, how could it be replaced? Hence the reference here must be to the [high priest's] bullock, and [it is stated that] 'it suspends both Sabbath and impurity laws' because it has a definite time; and 'renders its substitute [valid]' — because It is the offering of an individual!¹² -Said R. Shesheth: No, the reference here is to the ram of Aaron.¹³ Thus, indeed, does it also appear logical. For if we were to assume the reference is to the bullock, [the question would arise, Is it] that the substitute of the bullock does not suspend the Sabbath or the laws of impurity, but on a week-day it can be offered; surely is it not the substitute of a sin-offering,¹⁴ and 'the substitute of a sin-offering is left to die'?-No! in truth, [the reference here is to] his bullock, and what does substitute mean here? [That which goes by] the name of substitute.¹⁵ — But, if so, sacrifice here, too, should mean [that which goes by the name of] an original sacrifice?¹⁶ — No, he does not deal with [whatever goes by the name of] an original sacrifice. Whence that?-Since it states: 'There are restrictions In the law regarding substitute animals, in that even a permanently blemished animal is affected, and it cannot be made available for profane use either to be shorn or put to work'. Now if the thought should arise in you that the word 'sacrifice' here meant [whatever goes by] the name of an original sacrificial animal, surely there is

(1) V. Lev. XXVII, 10.

(2) A substitute for a congregational sacrifice is not valid. V. Tem. 13a.

(3) A substitute for a sacrifice of partners is not valid, 13a.

(4) This is the problem: If it is determined by the one who consecrated then in his case the substitute would be valid, since it is the high priest, from whose possession it comes, who consecrated it. If, however, it depends on those who obtain forgiveness, then no such substitution would be possible. There are many. i.e., his fellow-priests, who obtain forgiveness with the bullock, and no substitute can be made in the case of a sacrifice of partners. (9) If someone consecrates an animal for his fellow, whose duty is thereby to be fulfilled, and it suffers a blemish and he wishes to redeem it, the one who consecrated it is considered its owner and must add a fifth to its value (v. Lev. XXVII, 19). whereas he who is to obtain atonement thereby, would not have to add the fifth, because Scripture insists (ibid.): And he that sanctified...will redeem it, then he shall add the fifth part of the valuation.

(5) He has the privilege of bestowing it upon whatever priest he chooses. This shows that there is no question that the validity of a substitute is determined by the one who consecrated the original sacrifice. What point then was there in R. Eleazar's question?

(6) Through the bullock of the high priest, i.e., are they to be considered partners in the sacrifice from the time of its dedication.

(7) Jast.: circuit, transference in direction. Rashi: floating, unsettled condition. Goldschmidt: from Syriac: the bearer (of atonement). i.e., the high priest.

(8) No substitute for a substitute is valid.

(9) The animal itself, even though it be blemished, partakes of sacrificial holiness, although unfit for the altar.

(10) I.e., even after redemption the substitute may neither be shorn nor put to work, though its flesh may be consumed as non-holy meat.

(11) If the original sacrificial animal had been blemished the owner who consecrated it could consecrate only its value, hence the animal on redemption was made available for profane use without any reservation.

(12) Which solves the question of R. Eleazar.

(13) I.e., the ram brought by the high priest for his own atonement on the Day of Atonement, v. Lev. XVI, 3.

(14) V. Lev. ibid.

(15) The teaching speaks here of a substitute in general, not of a substitute of any particular original sacrificial animal. The restriction concerning substitutes lies in the fact that no substitute ever suspends the law of the Sabbath, even though the substitute be offered up.

(16) Without referring to any original sacrifice in particular; why then refer the term either to his bullock or the ram of Aaron?

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 51a

the first-born and the tithe of cattle, the laws of which affect even a permanently blemished animal, and which are not available [on redemption] for profane use to be subjected to shearing or work. Hence [you must say] he does not deal with [whatever goes by] the name of an original sacrifice.¹ Why is it different with substitute animals? — The substitutes all have uniform rules, whereas the original sacrificial animal includes first-born and tithe for cattle. Now, as to R. Shesheth, why does he refer the teaching to the ram of Aaron, let him rather refer to the paschal lamb, which suspends the laws of the Sabbath and of levitical uncleanness and can have a substitute because it is an individual's sacrifice?—He holds that a paschal lamb is never offered for one individual.² Then let him put the case as dealing with the second paschal lamb? — Is that able to suspend the laws of levitical impurity?

Said R. Huna the son of R. Joshua to Raba: Why does the Tanna³ designate the paschal lamb an individual's sacrifice and the festal offering a community sacrifice? Would you say because the latter is offered up by large crowds?⁴ So is the paschal lamb offered up by large crowds. — There is the second paschal lamb, which is not offered up by large crowds. Said he to him: If so, it ought to suspend the laws of Sabbath and those of levitical impurity.⁵ — He answered: Yes, he holds in accord with him who says that it suspends [them]. For it was taught: The second paschal lamb suspends the Sabbath, but not the laws of levitical impurity.⁶ R. Judah says: It suspends also the laws of levitical impurity. What is the reason for the view of the first Tanna? He will tell you: 'You have postponed it'⁷ only because of levitical impurity, how then shall it suspend the laws of levitical impurity!' And R. Judah?—He will tell you: Scripture says: According to all the statute of the passover shall they keep it,⁸ i.e., even in levitical impurity. The Torah gave him an opportunity to do it in levitical purity, but if he was not privileged to do so, let him do it even in impurity. [

(1) But with one particular type of original sacrifice.

(2) This is the view of R. Judah (Pes. 91a), there being always more than one to subscribe to the cost of the paschal lamb, which must be eaten up within its prescribed limited time, Ex. XII, 10.

(3) Supra 50a.

(4) I.e., on festivals when there are many pilgrims in the Temple.

(5) Since the reference is to the second paschal lamb. MS.M.: '(how state that) it suspends the law of Sabbath!'

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 51b

But let him infer it¹ from the words of the Divine Law: 'which is of himself',² i.e., he shall bring it from what belongs to him, for it was taught 'which is of himself', that means he must bring it of his own possession, not from community funds. One might have assumed he must not bring it from community funds, because the congregation obtains no atonement therefrom, but he may bring it from the funds of his fellow-priests, because they do obtain atonement therefrom, therefore Scripture says: 'which is of himself'. One might have assumed he must [de jure] not bring it from funds beside his own, but that if he [de facto] had done so, it would be valid, therefore Scripture says again: 'which is of himself', repeating the condition in order to render conformity with it indispensable.³ — But according to your own view: If his fellow-priests have no part in it, how can they obtain atonement, [even by implication]?⁴ Rather must you say it is different with regard to the private treasury of Aaron⁵ for the Divine Law has declared it free to his fellow-priests, thus also with regard to the [question of a] substitute sacrifice [we say] the private treasury of Aaron is different since the Divine Law has made it free for his fellow-priests.

MISHNAH. HE WENT THROUGH THE HEKAL⁶ UNTIL HE CAME TO THE PLACE BETWEEN THE TWO CURTAINS WHICH SEPARATED THE HOLY FROM THE HOLY OF HOLIES AND BETWEEN WHICH THERE WAS [A SPACE OF] ONE CUBIT. R. JOSE SAID: THERE WAS BUT ONE CURTAIN, AS IT IS SAID: AND THE VEIL SHALL DIVIDE UNTO YOU BETWEEN THE HOLY PLACE AND THE MOST HOLY.⁷ GEMARA. R. Jose gave a proper rejoinder to the Rabbis. What about the Rabbis? — They will tell you: Those things⁸ applied at the Mishkan,⁹ but in the Second Temple, because there was lacking the partition wall¹⁰ which had been in the first Temple — and the Sages were doubtful as to whether its sacredness partook of the character of the Holy or the Holy of Holies, they made two curtains.¹¹

Our Rabbis taught: He was walking between altar and candlestick.¹² This is the view of R. Judah. R. Meir says: Between the table¹³ and the altar. Some there are who say: Between the table and the wall.¹⁴ Who are the 'some'? — R. Hisda said: It is R. Jose. who said: The entrance was to the north.¹⁵ And R. Judah? — He will tell you that the entrance was to the south. According to whose view was that of R. Meir? If it agreed with R. Judah's, let him enter as R. Judah states,¹⁶ if it agreed with R. Jose, let him enter as R. Jose states! In truth he agrees with R. Jose, but he will tell you the tables¹⁷ were placed between north and south, hence they would interrupt his walk, preventing him from getting himself in.¹⁸ Or, if you like you might say: In truth, the tables were placed from east to west, but it does not seem proper

(1) The answer to the question above of R. Eleazar concerning the relation of the fellow-priests to the high priest's Day of Atonement bullock.

(2) Lev. XVI, 6 with reference to his bullock.

(3) Lev. XVI, 11 surely indicates that they have no share in the bullock, but receive atonement only by implication through the high priest's atonement, although the bullock is his own private property.

(4) So Bah.

(5) I.e., in respect of the bullock of the Day of Atonement.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) Ex. XXVI, 33.

(8) The one curtain referred to in Exodus.

(9) The Sanctuary in the wilderness.

(10) I Kings VI, 16 refers to the two cedar-covered partitions, with a vacant space between them, which separated the Holy Place from the Holy of Holies, occupying the space of one cubit, but the text: And he built twenty cubits on the hinder part of the house with boards of cedar from the floor unto the joists, leaves it undecided from which of the two holy areas the space of one cubit was to be deducted.

(11) In the second Temple that partition was replaced by two curtains with a space between them.

(12) As he entered, he moved southward between the inner altar and candlestick, which was to the south, walking toward the curtain.

(13) The table was placed next to the northern wall, the candlestick next to the southern wall, the golden altar between them. According to R. Judah the high priest walked toward the Holy of Holies between altar and candlestick, that is on the southern side. According to R. Meir between table and altar, i.e., on the northern side.

(14) According to R. Jose between table and wall, on the northern side.

(15) R. Jose held that there was but one curtain, clasped on the north side, and since the entrance was on the north side, the high priest of necessity was walking along the northern wall.

(16) R. Judah also agreed that the immediate entrance into the Holy of Holies had to be on the northern side but he held that there were two curtains, with the outer one clasped to the southern side, through which he first entered, hence the high priest was walking along the southern wall till he reached the outer entrance, then walking along between the two curtains towards the north till he reached the second entrance leading immediately into the Holy of Holies.

(17) Solomon had made ten tables arranged in two rows of five tables, to the left and right of the table of shewbread. The Sages discuss if these tables were placed lengthwise from south to north or from east to west. R. Meir held the former view, so that all the tables were placed in the northern half of the Sanctuary (Ex. XXVI, 35): And thou shalt put the table on the north side. Now the breadth of the Sanctuary was twenty cubits, its northern half ten cubits; the length of a table two cubits, so that each row of five tables filled the northern half of the Temple hall, without any free space between tables and wall. If any space were left free, then the row of the tables would to that extent encroach upon the southern half. Thus the tables would block the high priest on his walk between the table and the wall.

(18) Between the table and the wall.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 52a

to go straight ahead [towards the seat of the Divine Presence].¹ And R. Jose? — Israel is so beloved that Scripture does not wish to burden their messenger.² As to R. Judah, let him enter between the candlestick and the wall! — His garments would become blackened.³ R. Nathan said: Concerning the 'cubit of partition', the Sages did not decide as to whether its sanctity was that of the Holy of Holies or of the Holy Place outside of it. To this Rabina demurred: What was their reason? Shall we say because it is written: And the house which King Solomon built for the Lord, the length thereof was three score cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits.⁴ [Also] it is written: And the house, that is, the Temple before [the Sanctuary], was forty cubits long⁵ and it is further written: And before the Sanctuary which was twenty cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof⁶ — so that we do not know whether the [space of] a cubit of the partition was to be deducted from the twenty or the forty, — perhaps it is to be deducted from neither the twenty nor the forty, the account referring only to the free spaces, not to the walls. As a proof [is the fact] that whenever the walls are mentioned, they are mentioned separately, for we have learnt: The Sanctuary was a hundred cubits square and a hundred cubits in height. The wall of the Ulam⁷ was five [cubits thick] and the Ulam eleven. The wall of the Sanctuary six, and its interior forty cubits, the partition one cubit and the Holy of Holies twenty cubits, the wall of the Sanctuary six, the cell six and the wall of the cell five!⁸ — Rather, the question is whether the sanctity of the partition is as that of the inner part [the Holy of Holies], or the outer part, and this is as R. Johanan reported: Joseph of Huzal asked: [It is written], And a debir⁹ in the midst of the house from within he prepared to set there the ark of the covenant of the Lord.¹⁰ The question was asked [in the Academy]: What does Scripture mean to say? [Does it mean] 'a debir in the midst of the house; from within he prepared to place the ark there'; or 'a debir in the midst of the house from within'?¹¹ — But could they have any doubt? Surely it was taught: Issi b. Judah said: There are five verses in the Torah [the grammatical construction of] which is undecided:

(1) on the assumption that they were placed between east and west, so that he could walk unhandicapped along the north wall towards the Holy of Holies, the suggestion is offered that it would not be in accord with the reverence due to that sacred place for the high priest to walk straight towards it, 'feasting his eyes all the time on that most awe-inspiring place, through the opening through which he was to enter, hence R. Meir's view.

(2) The high priest, as representative of Israel, is permitted to avoid the weary detour between table and altar and to proceed straight along the north wall towards the Holy of Holies.

(3) From the smoke (soot) of the candlestick on the wall.

(4) I Kings VI, 2.

(5) Ibid. 17.

(6) I Kings VI, 20.

(7) The hall leading into the interior of the Temple.

(8) V. Mid. IV. 6 and 7. Hence the question above is answered.

(9) E.V. 'Sanctuary:' here taken to denote the space between the partition dividing the Holy from the Holy of Holies.

(10) I Kings VI, 19.

(11) According to the first interpretation the cubit partition would be excluded then from the Holy of Holies. Does the 'from within' belong to the first part of the verse, referring to the debir or to the second interpretation and refer to the Holy of Holies?

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 52b

'lifted up',¹ 'like almond-blossoms';² 'tomorrow',³ 'cursed'⁴ and 'rise up'.⁵ It was also taught:⁶ Joseph of Huzal is the same as Joseph the Babylonian, and is identical⁷ with Issi b. Judah, also with Issi b. Gur Aryeh,⁸ also with Issi b. Gamliel, also with Issi b. Mahalalel. What was his real name? Issi b. Akiba!⁹ — In the Torah there is no other,¹⁰ but in the Prophets there is. But is there in the Torah no other; surely there is for R. Hisda asked:¹¹ [It is written], And he sent the young men of the children of Israel, who offered burnt-offerings,¹² [does it mean] of lambs; and sacrificed peace-offerings unto the Lord [namely of oxen]; or [does the word] 'oxen' refer to all [sacrifices]?¹³ — R. Hisda had indeed his doubts about it, but to Issi b. Judah it was obvious.

MISHNAH. THE OUTER CURTAIN WAS HELD BACK BY A CLASP ON THE SOUTH SIDE AND THE INNER CURTAIN ON THE NORTH SIDE. HE WALKED ALONG BETWEEN THEM UNTIL HE REACHED THE NORTH SIDE. WHEN HE REACHED THE NORTH SIDE HE TURNED ROUND TO THE SOUTH AND WENT ON ALONG THE CURTAIN, TO HIS LEFT, UNTIL HE REACHED THE ARK. WHEN HE REACHED THE ARK HE PUT THE PAN OF BURNING COALS BETWEEN THE TWO BARS.¹⁴ HE HEAPED UP THE INCENSE UPON THE COALS AND THE WHOLE HOUSE BECAME FULL WITH SMOKE. HE CAME OUT BY THE WAY HE ENTERED¹⁵ AND IN THE OUTER HOUSE¹⁶ HE UTTERED A SHORT PRAYER. HE DID NOT MAKE THE PRAYER LONG SO AS NOT TO FRIGHTEN ISRAEL.

GEMARA. To what are we referring here? If it be the first Sanctuary, was there then a curtain?¹⁷ Again, if it is to the second Sanctuary, was there then an Ark? Surely it has been taught: When the Ark was hidden, there was hidden with it the bottle containing the Manna,¹⁸ and that containing the sprinkling water,¹⁹ the staff of Aaron,²⁰ with its almonds and blossoms, and the chest which the Philistines had sent as a gift to the God of Israel, as it is said: And put the jewels of gold which you return to Him for a guilt-offering in a coffer by the side thereof and send it away that it may go.²¹ Who hid it? — Josiah hid it. What was his reason for hiding it? — He saw the Scriptural passage: The Lord will bring thee and thy King whom thou shalt set over thee,²² therefore he hid it, as it is said: And he said to the Levites, that taught all Israel, that were holy unto the Lord: Put the holy ark into the house which Solomon, the son of David, King of Israel did build. There shall no more be a burden upon your shoulders now. Serve now the Lord your God and His people Israel.²³ And R. Eleazar said: We derive by analogy²⁴ between the words 'there', 'generations' and 'to be kept' occurring in these passages!²⁵ In truth we refer to the second Sanctuary and what does 'He came to the Ark' mean? I.e., he came to the place of the Ark. But the text reads: HE PLACED THE PAN OF BURNING COALS BETWEEN THE TWO BARS?²⁶ — Read [it to mean]: 'as if it were between the two bars'.

HE HEAPED THE INCENSE UPON THE COALS. We learn here in accordance with the view that he heaped it [the incense]²⁷ up. One [Baraita] taught: He begins to heap it up on the inner side, which is to him the outer side,²⁸ whereas another taught: he begins to heap it up on the outer side which is to him the inner side. Abaye said: It is a matter of dispute among Tannaim. Further said Abaye: The view of him who holds he begins to heap it on the inner side, which is to him the outer side, seems logical, for we have learnt:²⁹ One teaches him: Be careful (23) II Chron. XXXV, 3.

(24) That the other objects enumerated were hidden at the same time as the Ark.

(25) Ex. XXX, 6 and ibid. XVI, 33, the word 'there' occurs, justifying the inference that something must occur in both the Ark and the manna; in the passage referring to the latter, Ex. XVI, 33, as well as in the passage referring to the oil for anointing (ibid. XXX, 31) the priests the word 'generations' occurs, again indicating some justified inference of something in common; finally, in connection with the manna as well as in the passage about the staff of Aaron the word 'to be kept' occurs (Ex. XVI, 33 and Num. XVII, 25). From all these word analogies the inference is drawn that what manna, bottle, oil, staff of Aaron and Ark had in common is that having been placed in or near the Ark, they also were hidden together. Hence the reference in the Mishnah could not be to the second Sanctuary either.

(26) He placed it just where the two staves had been in the first Sanctuary.

(27) V. supra 49b.

(28) I.e., he commences to heap up the incense from the inside part of the coal-pan in relation to the Holy of Holies, working outwardly towards his arm. I.e., he commenced to heap up the incense on the outer side of the pan in relation to the Holy of Holies, working towards the inside, away from his arm, with the precaution suggested below.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 53a

not to start in front of thee lest thou be burnt.¹

Our Rabbis taught: And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the Lord:² i.e., he must not put it in order outside and thus bring it in. [This is] to remove the error from the minds of the Sadducees who said: He must prepare it without, and bring it in. What is their interpretation? — For I appear in the cloud upon the ark-cover³ 'that teaches us that he prepares it outside and brings it in'. The Sages said to them: But it is said already 'And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the Lord'.⁴ If so for what purpose then is it stated 'For I appear in the cloud upon the ark-cover'? It comes to teach us that he puts into it a smoke-raiser.⁵ — Whence do we know that he must put a smoke-raiser into it? — Because it is said: So that the cloud of the incense may cover the ark-cover.⁶ But if he did not put a smoke-raiser into it, or that he omitted one of its spices he is liable to death. But [why not] infer this⁷ from the fact that he effected an entrance for no purpose.⁸ R. Shesheth said: We speak here of the case that he was in error about the entrance,⁹ but deliberate in omitting the spice. R. Ashi said: You might even set the case when he was deliberate with regard to both but [here we deal with the case] where he brought in two incenses, one incomplete, the other defective, so that he is not guilty because of the purposeless entrance because he had offered up a perfect incense, but he is guilty in regard to the incense because he had offered up one defective incense.

The Master had said: 'Whence is it known that he must place a smoke-raiser into it? To teach us that, it is said: "So that [the cloud] may cover etc."¹⁰ [What need of] one scriptural verse added to another?¹¹ — Said R. Joseph: This is what is meant: From here I know only about the leaf of the smoke-raiser, whence do I know about the root?¹² To teach us that Scripture said: 'So that it may cover [etc.]'.¹³ Said Abaye to him: But the opposite has been taught; for it was taught: If when he put in the root of the smoke-raiser, it would rise up straight like a stick until it reached the ceiling beams; as soon as it reached the beams of the ceiling it would come slowly down the walls until the house became full of smoke, as it is said: And the house was filled with smoke?¹⁴ — Rather, said Abaye, this is what it means: Now I know only about the root of the smoke-raiser, whence do I know also about its leaf? To teach us that Scripture said: 'So that it may cover [etc.]'.

R. Shesheth said: I know only about the Tent of Meeting in the wilderness; whence do I know about Shiloh and the eternal Sanctuary? To teach us that Scripture said: 'So that it may cover [etc.]'. But that we infer from, And so shall he do for the Tent of Meeting, that dwelleth with them?¹⁵ — Rather is this meant: Now I know about the Day of Atonement,¹⁶ whence do I know about the other days of the year? To teach us that, Scripture said: 'So that it may cover [etc.]'. R. Ashi said: One [passage] refers to the commandment, the other to its indispensableness.¹⁷ Raba said: One refers to the penalty incurred, the other to the prohibition.¹⁸ It was taught: R. Eliezer said: That he die not,¹⁹ i.e., the penalty, For I appear in the cloud, i.e., the prohibition. I might have assumed that both were stated before the death of the sons of Aaron,²⁰ to teach us [the true fact] it is written: After the death of the two sons of Aaron.²¹ One might assume that both were said after the death of the two sons of Aaron; to teach us [the true fact] it is written: 'For I will appear in the cloud upon the ark-cover.'²² How is that [to be explained]? The prohibition [was stated] before the death, the penalty after the death. — How is this inference made? Raba said: 'For I will appear in the cloud' — but He had not appeared²³ yet. Then why were they punished? — As it was taught: R. Eliezer said: The sons of Aaron died only because they decided a question of law in the presence of Moses their Master. What was it they decided? — And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire upon the altar²⁴ [means] although the fire was coming down from heaven²⁵ yet was it obligatory to bring private²⁶ fire.

HE CAME OUT BY THE WAY HE ENTERED: Whence is this known? — Said R. Samuel b. Nahmani in the name of R. Jonathan: Scripture said: So Solomon came to the high place that was at Gibeon, [unto] Jerusalem.²⁷ What has Gibeon to do with Jerusalem?²⁸ Rather, [Scripture] compares his departure from Gibeon towards Jerusalem with his entrance from Jerusalem into Gibeon, i.e., just as when he entered Gibeon from Jerusalem his face was directed towards the high place, in the same way as he had come in; in the same manner as he left Gibeon for Jerusalem his face was turned toward the high place even in the same way as when he had come in.²⁹ In similar manner the priests as they ministered, the Levites on their service, the Israelites on their posts³⁰ — as they left they would not turn their face back, to go out, but would turn their face sideways to leave. Thus also a disciple taking leave of his master, must not turn his face back to go away, but must turn sideways to depart. As was the case with R. Eleazar, whenever he took leave of R. Johanan: if R. Johanan wanted to leave, R. Eleazar would stand on his place, the head bowed, until R. Johanan disappeared from his sight but when R. Eleazar wished to take leave he would walk backwards until he disappeared from the sight of R. Johanan. When Raba was about to take leave of R. Joseph he would go backwards, so that his feet were bruised and the threshold of the house of R. Joseph was stained with blood.

- (1) The incense which he had heaped up towards his end and which burns continually may touch his arm and burn it whilst he is working it towards the other side.
- (2) Lev. XVI, 13.
- (3) The Sadduceans in literal translation have this interpretation: 'I, the Lord, am to be visited', i.e., seen, in the Holy of Holies, in the cloud of the smoke of incense, which must be a cloud, i.e., prepared outside, so that when, in the Holy of Holies I am seen, it is in the cloud of incense, all ready and rising up, as the high priest enters.
- (4) Which clearly shows that the incense is put in the fire inside.
- (5) The name of a plant used as an ingredient of the incense and whose effect lay in achieving a straight rising smoke.
- (6) Lev. XVI, 13.
- (7) That he is culpable if he omitted one of its ingredients.
- (8) That is indicated already by the passage in Lev. XVI,2: That he come not at all times ... lest he die, which indicates that a fruitless entrance incurs such penalty, hence no additional source of that law is necessary.
- (9) To which no penalty of death is attached.
- (10) The incense without the smoke-raiser could not possibly effect such 'covering'.
- (11) From the passage 'For in the cloud, etc.' we inferred the necessity of the smokeraiser, why then an additional verse?
- (12) Whether the roots or the leaf achieved the straight smoke. R. Joseph holds that the leaves had such property, Abaye attributed that quality to the root.
- (13) 'Cover' may refer to the capacity to just cover the ark-cover, but not to rise above it.
- (14) Isa. VI, 4. This proves that the root is more effective for producing the straight smoke.
- (15) Lev. XVI, 16, i.e., wherever he shall dwell with them, shall they do this.
- (16) The portion of the Torah refers to the Day of Atonement.
- (17) 'So that it may cover' is the command. He shall not come at all times ... for in a cloud shall I appear — and not otherwise is the prohibition that the incense is indispensable.
- (18) Lit., 'warning'.
- (19) Lev. XVI, 13.
- (20) Who died in expiation of their sin; and thus assumed it was their neglect to put the smoke-raiser into the incense.
- (21) Lev. XVI, 1.
- (22) This is the literal rendering.
- (23) I.e., when this scriptural verse was uttered the Lord had not appeared yet. But if the reference were to a time after the death of the two sons of Aaron, He would have appeared already, namely on exactly that day, as it is said: And the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people. (Lev. IX, 23).
- (24) Lev. I, 7.
- (25) V. supra 21b.
- (26) Although their decision was correct, they incurred penalty for their presumptuousness in rendering a decision before their master, instead of requesting him to render it for them.
- (27) II Chron. I, 13.
- (28) The indeterminate 'Jerusalem' in the text is ambiguous and therefore invites ad hoc interpretation.
- (29) So that the text means: In the same manner as Solomon journeyed to Gibeon, so did he proceed on his return journey from Gibeon to Jerusalem.
- (30) V. Ta'an. 24a.

The people told R. Joseph that Raba did that, whereupon he said to him: May it be the will [of God] that you raise your head above the whole city.¹ R. Alexandri said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: One who prays [the 'Amidah]² should go three steps backwards, and then recite 'peace'.³ R. Mordecai said to him: Having taken the three steps backwards, he ought to remain standing, as should a disciple who takes leave of his master; for if he returns at once, it is as with a dog who goes back to his vomit. It has also been taught thus: One who prays shall take three steps backwards and then pronounce 'peace'. And if he did not do so, it would have been better for him not to have prayed at all. In the name of R. Shemaya they said: He should pronounce 'peace' towards the right, then towards the left, as it is said: At His right hand was a fiery law unto them,⁴ and it is also said: A thousand may fall at thy side and ten thousand at thy right hand.⁵ For what reason 'and it is also said'? — You might have said it is the usual thing to take a thing with the right hand,⁶ come therefore and hear: 'A thousand may fall at thy side and ten thousand at thy right hand'.⁷

Raba saw Abaye pronouncing 'peace' first towards the right and he said to him: Do you mean that your right hand is meant? It is your left hand, which is the right of the Holy One, blessed be He. R. Hiyya the son of R. Huna said: I saw Abaye and Raba who were taking all three steps with one genuflexion.

AND HE UTTERED A SHORT PRAYER IN THE OUTER HOUSE: What did he pray? Raba son of R. Adda and Rabin son of R. Adda both reported in the name of Rab: 'May it be Thy will, O Lord our God, that this year be full of heavy rains and hot'. But is a hot year an advantage? — Rather: If it be a hot one, let it be rich in rain. — R. Aha the son of Raba concluded the prayer in the name of R. Judah [thus]: May there not depart a ruler from the house of Judah, and may the house of Israel not require that they sustain one another, and permit not the prayers of travellers⁸ to find entrance before you. R. Hanina b. Dosa was walking along a road when rain came down upon him. He said: 'Lord of the Universe! All the world is comfortable and Hanina is afflicted!' The rain stopped. As he came home, he said: 'Lord of the Universe! All the world is afflicted and Hanina is comfortable!'⁹ The rain came again. R. Joseph said: Of what use is the prayer of the high priest against R. Hanina b. Dosa!

Our Rabbis taught:¹⁰ It happened with one high priest that he prolonged his prayer. His fellow priests undertook to enter after him. As they began to enter he came forth. They said to him: Why did you prolong your prayer? — He said: Is it disagreeable to you that I prayed for you, for the Sanctuary, that it be not destroyed? — They said to him: Do not make a habit of doing so, for thus have we learnt: He would not pray long lest he terrify Israel.¹¹

MISHNAH. AFTER THE ARK HAD BEEN TAKEN AWAY, THERE WAS A STONE FROM THE DAYS OF THE EARLIER PROPHETS,¹² CALLED THE SHETHIYAH,¹³ THREE FINGERS ABOVE THE GROUND, ON WHICH HE WOULD PLACE [THE PAN OF BURNING COALS]. HE WOULD TAKE THE BLOOD FROM HIM WHO WAS STIRRING IT, AND ENTER [AGAIN] INTO THE PLACE WHERE HE HAD ENTERED,¹⁴ AND STAND [AGAIN] ON THE PLACE ON WHICH HE HAD STOOD,¹⁵ AND SPRINKLE THEREOF ONCE UPWARDS¹⁶ AND SEVEN TIMES DOWNWARDS, AIMING TO SPRINKLE NEITHER UPWARDS NOR DOWNWARDS BUT KEMAZLIF [MAKING THE MOVEMENT OF SWINGING A WHIP]. AND THUS WOULD HE COUNT: ONE, ONE AND ONE, ONE AND TWO, ONE AND THREE, ONE AND FOUR, ONE AND FIVE, ONE AND SIX, ONE AND SEVEN. THEN HE WOULD GO OUT AND PUT IT ON THE GOLDEN STAND IN THE SANCTUARY. ONE WOULD BRING HIM THE HE-GOAT, HE WOULD SLAY IT, RECEIVE ITS BLOOD IN A BASIN, ENTER [AGAIN] THE PLACE HE HAD ENTERED BEFORE, STAND [AGAIN] ON THE PLACE HE HAD STOOD ON BEFORE AND WOULD SPRINKLE THEREFROM ONCE UPWARDS AND SEVEN TIMES DOWNWARDS. THUS WOULD HE COUNT; ONE, ONE AND TWO, ETC. THEN HE WOULD GO OUT AND PLACE IT ON THE SECOND GOLDEN STAND IN THE

SANCTUARY. R. JUDAH SAID: THERE WAS NO MORE THAN ONE GOLDEN STAND. HE WOULD¹⁷ TAKE THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK AND PUT DOWN THE BLOOD OF THE HE-GOAT, SPRINKLE THEREOF UPON THE CURTAINS FACING THE ARK OUTSIDE, ONCE UPWARDS, SEVEN TIMES DOWNWARD, AIMING TO SPRINKLE NEITHER UPWARDS NOR DOWNWARDS, BUT KE-MAZLIF [MAKING THE MOVEMENT OF SWINGING A WHIP]. THUS WOULD HE COUNT [AS ABOVE]. THEN HE WOULD TAKE THE BLOOD OF THE HE-GOAT, DEPOSITING THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK, AND SPRINKLE THEREOF UPON THE CURTAIN FACING THE ARK OUTSIDE ONCE UPWARDS, SEVEN TIMES DOWNWARDS [AS ABOVE]. THEN HE WOULD POUR THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK INTO THE BLOOD OF THE HE-GOAT EMPTYING THE FULL VESSEL INTO THE EMPTY ONE. GEMARA. [The Mishnah] does not teach ‘After the Ark has been hidden away’, but ‘After the Ark had been taken away’, this is in accord with him who holds that the Ark went into exile to Babylonia, for it was taught: R. Eliezer said: The Ark went into exile to Babylonia, as it was said: In the following year King Nebuchadnezzar sent and had him brought to Babel together with the precious vessels of the house of the Lord.¹⁸ R. Simeon b. Yohai said: The Ark went into exile to Babylonia, as it was said: Nothing shall be left, saith the Lord,¹⁹ i.e., the Ten Commandments contained therein R. Judah b. Ilai²⁰ said: The Ark was hidden [buried] in its own place, as it was said: And the staves were so long that the ends of the staves were seen from the holy place, even before the Sanctuary; but they could not be seen without; and there they are unto this day.²¹ Now he²² disputes ‘Ulla for ‘Ulla said: R. Matthiah b. Heresh asked R. Simeon b. Yohai in Rome:²³ Now since R. Eliezer had taught us on the first and second occasion that the Ark went into exile to Babylonia (the first was the one which we said just now: ‘And he had him brought to Babel together with the precious vessels of the house of the Lord’, but what is the second one? — Because it is written: And gone is from the daughter of Zion

(1) R. Joseph being blind would not have noticed this reverent conduct of his pupil. On learning it he pronounced a prayerful hope, which was fulfilled. For Raba did become head of the Academies of both Sura and Pumbeditha.

(2) Lit., ‘(prayer read) standing’. The prayer par excellence, v. P.B. p. 44ff.

(3) At the end of that prayer one says: May He who maketh peace in His high places, make peace for us and for all Israel. This is the pronouncement of ‘peace’.

(4) Deut. XXXIII, 2.

(5) Ps. XCI, 7.

(6) People would usually use their right hand, but there is no particular importance attached to it to bestow ceremonial preference upon it.

(7) Which suggests that the right hand is granted greater victory, hence is more significant than the left.

(8) Who would pray for dry weather, as better for their comfort on the road.

(9) As he had no fields and thus no need of rain.

(10) Tosef. Yoma II.

(11) By his delay, attributable either to his failure to obtain forgiveness or to personal mishap.

(12) According to Sot. 48b this term includes Samuel, David and Solomon.

(13) Root: shatha — to lay a foundation, thus foundation stone. From it, as the Gemara says, the world was founded or started.

(14) Into the Holy of Holies.

(15) Between the two staves.

(16) In the direction of the ‘ark-cover’.

(17) This continues R. Judah’s account. (5) V. Gemara. (6) Lev. XVI, 18: And he shall take the blood of the bullock and the blood of the goat and put it upon the horns of the altar round about. The inference is that since but one act of ‘putting’ is mentioned the two were mixed, by pouring the first into the second.

all her splendour.¹ What does 'all her splendour' mean? All that is enclosed within her.²) What do you say now? — He answered: I say that the Ark was hidden in its place, as it is said: 'And the staves were so long, etc.' Rabbah said to 'Ulla: How does it follow from this?³ — Because it is written: 'Unto this day'. But does the term 'Unto this day' mean everywhere 'forever'? Is it not written: And they [the children of Benjamin] did not drive out the Jebusites that inhabited Jerusalem; but the Israelites dwelt with the children of Benjamin in Jerusalem, unto this day.⁴ Would you say here too that they did not go into exile? Surely it was taught:⁵ R. Judah said: For fifty-two years no human being passed as it is said: For the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing, and for the pastures of the wilderness a lamentation; because they are burned up, so that none passeth through, and they hear not the voice of the cattle; both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled and gone,⁶ and the numerical⁷ value of Behemah is fifty-two. Furthermore, R. Jose said: For seven years sulphur and salt prevailed in the land of Israel, and R. Johanan said: What is the basis of R. Jose's view? He infers it from the analogy of the words 'covenant', 'covenant'. Here Scripture reads: And he shall make a firm covenant with many for one week;⁸ and in another place it is written: Then men shall say: Because they forsook the covenant of the Lord, the God of their fathers.⁹ — He answered: Here the word 'there' is used, there this expression¹⁰ is not used. — Would you say that wherever the word 'there' is used, it implies 'forever', but the following objection can be raised: And some of them, even of the sons of Simeon, five hundred men, went to Mount Seir, having for their captains Pelatiah, and Neariah, and Rephaiah, and Uzziel, the sons of Ishi. And they smote the remnants of the Amalekites that escaped, and dwelt there unto this day.¹¹ But Sennacherib, King of Assyria, had come up already and confused all the lands as it is said: I have removed the bounds of the peoples, and have robbed their treasures?¹² This is a refutation.

R. Nahman said: It was taught that the Ark was hidden away in the Chamber of the wood-shed. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: Thus were we also taught.¹³ It happened to a certain priest who was whiling away his time that he saw a block of pavement that was different from the others. He came and informed his fellow, but before he could complete his account, his soul departed. Thus they knew definitely that the Ark was hidden there. What had he been doing?¹⁴ R. Helbo said: He was playing with his axe. The school of R. Ishmael taught: Two priests, afflicted with a blemish, were sorting the woods when the axe of one of them slipped from his hand and fell on that place, whereupon a flame burst forth and consumed him.¹⁵

R. Judah contrasted the following passages: And the ends of the staves were seen¹⁶ and it is written but they could not be seen without¹⁶ — how is that possible? — They could be observed, but not actually seen. Thus was it also taught: 'And the ends of the staves were seen One might have assumed that they did not protrude from their place. To teach us [the fact] Scripture says: 'And the staves were so long'. One might assume that they tore the curtain and showed forth; to teach us [the fact] Scripture says: 'They could not be seen without'. How then? They pressed forth and protruded as the two breasts of a woman, as it is said: My beloved is unto me as a bag of myrrh, that lieth betwixt my breasts.¹⁷

R. Kattina said: Whenever Israel came up to the Festival, the curtain would be removed for them and the Cherubim were shown to them, whose bodies were intertwined with one another, and they would be thus addressed: Look! You are beloved before God as the love between man and woman.

R. Hisda raised the following objection: But they shall not go in to see the holy things as they are being covered,¹⁸ in connection with which Rab Judah in the name of Rab said: It means at the time when the vessels are being put into their cases?¹⁹ — R. Nahman answered: That may be compared to a bride: As long as she is in her father's house, she is reserved in regard to her husband, but when she comes to her father-in-law's house, she is no more so reserved in regard to him.²⁰

R. Hana son of R. Kattina raised the following objection: It happened with a priest who was whiling away his time²¹ etc. — He was answered: You speak of a woman, who has been divorced. When she is divorced, she goes back to her earlier love.²²

Of what circumstances are we treating here?²³ If we were to say the reference is to the first Sanctuary — but there was no curtain!²⁴ If, again, the reference be to the second Sanctuary, but there were no Cherubim? — In truth the reference is to the first Sanctuary and as to 'curtain' the reference here means the curtain at the entrances, for R. Zera said in the name of Rab: There were thirteen curtains in the Sanctuary, seven facing the seven gates, two [more], one of which was at the entrance to the Hekal,²⁵ the other at the entrance to the Ulam;²⁶ two to the debir; two, corresponding to them, in the loft.²⁷ R. Aha b. Jacob said: In truth the reference here is to the second Sanctuary, but it had painted Cherubim, as it is written: And he carved all the walls of the house round about with carved figures of Cherubim and palm-trees and open flowers, within and without,²⁸ and he overlaid them with gold fitted upon the graven work.²⁹ And it is written also: According to the space of each, with loyoth [wreaths round about].³⁰ What does 'according to the space of each with loyoth' mean? Rabbah son of R. Shilah said:

(1) Lam. I, 6.

(2) Hadarah (her inner chamber); i.e., all that is enclosed within Zion, in its Sanctuary, the Ark, etc.

(3) The inference that the Ark etc. was hidden in its place.

(4) Judg. I, 21.

(5) Shab. 145b.

(6) Jer. IX, 9.

(7) The numerical value serves only as 'asmakta' or intimation. Rashi goes through a closely reasoned argument to account for the fifty-two years.

(8) Dan. IX, 27.

(9) Deut. XXIX, 24; before that statement there is the reference to brimstone and salt: And that the whole land is brimstone and salt (v. 22). Thus the severe punishment for the forsaking of the covenant is that sulphur and salt cover the land. 'One week' in Dan. IX means a week of years.

(10) In the case of the Ark Scripture reads: 'There unto this day', implying for ever, whilst in the absence of 'there' in Judges I, 21, no such claim is made.

(11) I Chron. IV, 42-3.

(12) Isa. X, 13. The King of Babylon boasts of his achievements. Hence the sons of Simeon could not have dwelt there 'forever.

(13) Mish. Shek. VI, 2.

(14) To incur such punishment. The answer being that, unmindful of the reverence due to the Sanctuary, he had been playing around with his axe.

(19) This is said of the Levites in the wilderness, who, whilst carrying the vessels on their shoulders, were not permitted to look at them before they were covered. How much less would the Holy of Holies be profaned by being shown to the masses who had come to celebrate the Festival; the Cherubim being above the mercy-seat in the Holy of Holies.

(20) Before marriage there is reserve, which is given up in marriage, to be assumed again when divorce has taken place. Israel in the wilderness is comparable to the bride in her father's home; in the Temple to the bride in her husband's care.

(21) Which shews that the same reserve still obtains in the Temple.

Even as a man embracing his companion.¹ Resh Lakish said: When the heathens entered the Temple and saw the Cherubim whose bodies were intertwined with one another, they carried them out and said: These Israelites, whose blessing is a blessing, and whose curse is a curse, occupy themselves with such things! And immediately they despised them, as it is said: All that honored her, despised her, because they have seen her nakedness.²

AND IT WAS CALLED SHETHIYAH: A Tanna taught: [It was so called] because from it the world was founded.³ We were taught in accord with the view that the world was started [created] from Zion on. For it was taught: R. Eliezer says: The world was created from its centre, as it is said: When the dust runneth into a mass, and the clods keep fast together.⁴ R. Joshua said: The world was created from its sides on, as it is said: For He saith to the snow: 'Fall thou on the earth'; likewise to the shower of rain, and to the showers of His mighty rain.⁵ R. Isaac the Smith said: The Holy One, blessed be He, cast a stone into the ocean, from which the world then was founded as it is said: Whereupon were the foundations thereof fastened, or who laid the corner-stone thereof?⁶ But the Sages said: The world was [started] created from Zion, as it is said: A Psalm of Asaph, God, God, the Lord [hath spoken],⁷ whereupon it reads on: Out of Zion, the perfection of the world,⁸ that means from Zion was the beauty of the world perfected.

It was taught: R. Eliezer the Great said: These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth, in the day that the Lord God made earth and heaven.⁹ The generations [the creations] of heaven¹⁰ were made from the heaven and the generations of the earth were made from the earth. But the Sages said: Both were created from Zion, as it is said: 'A Psalm of Asaph: God, God, the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun to the going down thereof.' And Scripture further says: 'Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined forth', that means from it the beauty of the world was perfected.

 (5) Ibid. XXXVII, 6. The picture here (Rashi) is that of a skeleton or frame, which filled in, gradually solidifying from all sides towards the centre, which is last in foundation. All Scriptural verses here are used as intimation not logically but illustratively. Here is an amazing anticipation of the modern theory that the world was founded by the solidification of vapours, the Talmudic account ascribing this gradual creation to the will of God.

‘as one swinging a whip’. — A Tanna taught: As he sprinkled, he did so not upon the ark-cover,¹ but against its thickness. And when he is to sprinkle upwards he first turns his hand down, and when he is to sprinkle downwards he first turns his hand up. — Whence do we infer this?² R. Aha b. Jacob said in the name of R. Zera: Scripture says: And sprinkle it upon the ark-cover and before the ark-cover.³ Now with regard to the he-goat it need not be said [that he should sprinkle] downwards,⁴ for that can be inferred from [the procedure with] the bullock where [the sprinkling] downwards⁵ [is made], when then is it mentioned here too? To compare [the sprinkling] ‘upon’ [the ark-cover with the sprinkling] ‘before’ [it]: Just as [the sprinkling] ‘before’ does not mean ‘before’ actually,⁶ so does sprinkling ‘upon’ [here] not mean really ‘upon’.⁷ On the contrary! It was not necessary to state with regard to the bullock [that the sprinkling should be done] ‘upon’ [the ark-cover], for that could be inferred from the fact that the he-goat's blood was sprinkled upon [it], why then was it mentioned to compare the sprinkling ‘before’ [it], to the sprinkling ‘upon’ [it], viz. just as ‘upon’ means exactly, so shall ‘before’ here mean ‘upon exactly’?⁸ How can you say this? Granted, if you say that the ‘downward’ sprinkling in the case of the he-goat is mentioned for the purpose of comparison,⁹ then [sprinkling] ‘upward’ written in connection with the bullock is necessary in accord with the school of R. Eliezer b. Jacob; for the school of R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught: Upon the face of the ark-cover on the east,¹⁰ this [special case] establishes a general rule viz., that wherever Scripture says ‘before’ [‘face’] it means ‘on the east’; but if you say that the ‘upwards’ in connection with the bullock is mentioned for the purpose of comparison, then for what purpose is the ‘downward’ in connection with the he-goat mentioned?

Our Rabbis taught: ‘And he shall sprinkle it upon the ark-cover and before the ark-cover’. From this we know how often the he-goat's blood is to be sprinkled upwards, viz., once; I do not know, though, how often ‘downwards’, so that I infer that thus: The word ‘blood’ is used in connection with the downward [sprinkling] of the bullock's blood, and the same word ‘blood’ is used about the downward [sprinkling] of the goat's blood: hence just as ‘downwards’ with the bullock means seven times, so does ‘downwards’ with the goat mean ‘seven times’. Or argue it this way: The word ‘blood’ is used in connection with the ‘upward’ [sprinkling] of the goat's blood, and the word ‘blood’ is used in connection with the downward [sprinkling] of the he-goat's blood; hence just as ‘upwards’ with the he-goat means once, thus also shall ‘downwards’ with the he-goat mean ‘once’? Let us see what comparison is legitimate: One may infer ‘downwards’ from ‘downwards’; but one may not infer ‘downwards’ from ‘upwards’. On the contrary: It is legitimate to infer [one aspect of] one matter from [another aspect of] the same matter, but one may not infer one matter from an extraneous one!¹¹ To teach [the true facts] Scripture says: And [he shall] do with its blood¹² as he did with the blood of the bullock.¹³ Now it was not necessary¹⁴ to say ‘as he did’, why then was it said? To show that all the ‘doings’ of them should be alike; as there were seven sprinklings downward with the bullock, so shall there be seven sprinklings downward with the goat. We learn thus how many [sprinklings] downwards there are to be both with bullock and he-goat. But I do not know how many [sprinklings] upwards are to be made with the bullock's blood. And so I infer: The word ‘blood’ is used for the upward [sprinkling] in the case of the he-goat, and the word ‘blood’ is used for the upward [sprinkling] in the case of the bullock. Hence, [the inference that] just as the upward sprinkling in the case of the he-goat has to be made once,¹⁵ so shall the upward [sprinkling] in the case of the bullock be made once. Or argue it this way: The word ‘blood’ is used for the downward [sprinkling] in the case of the bullock, and the word ‘blood’ is used in the case of the upward [sprinkling] of the bullock: hence just as seven downward sprinklings have to be made with the bullock's blood, so must seven upward sprinklings be made with the bullock's blood! Let us see what comparison is legitimate: One may fitly infer [something about] upward [sprinklings] from [other] upward [sprinklings], but one may not infer [something about] upward [sprinklings] from downward [sprinklings]. On the contrary: It is legitimate to infer one [aspect of one] matter from [another aspect of the same] matter, but one may not fitly infer one matter from an extraneous one.¹⁶ Scripture therefore teaches: ‘And he shall do with his blood as he did with the blood of the bullock’! It was not necessary to say ‘with his blood’, why then was it said? To intimate that all the ‘doings’ of them should be alike: just as seven sprinklings downward were made in the case of the bullock, so shall seven sprinklings downward be made in the case of the goat; and just as only one upward sprinkling was made with the he-goat, so only one sprinkling upward had to be made in the case of the bullock.

ONE, ONE AND ONE, ONE AND TWO: Our Rabbis taught: [He counted] One, one and one, one and two, one and three, one and four, one and five, one and six, one and seven¹⁷ — this is the view of R. Meir. R. Judah says: One, one and one, two and one, three and one, four and one, five and one, six and one, seven and one. Yet they are not conflicting,¹⁸ each counting as is customary in his place. At any rate, both agree that the first sprinklings must be counted with each of the following. What is the reason thereof? — R. Eleazar said: In order that he make no mistake in the count.¹⁹ — R. Johanan said: Scripture said: ‘And before the ark-cover shall he sprinkle’. Now it was not necessary to say ‘shall he sprinkle’. [For what teaching purpose] why then was it said, ‘He shall sprinkle’? — To indicate that the first sprinkling shall be counted with each subsequent one. — What is the [practical] difference between the two? — In case he had not counted, but also had made no mistake.²⁰ HE WENT OUT AND PLACED IT ON THE GOLDEN STAND IN THE SANCTUARY: We have learned there:²¹ There were no money chests²² [provided] for obligatory bird-offerings, to prevent confusion. What does ‘to prevent confusion’ mean? — R. Joseph said: To prevent confusion between freewill and obligatory offerings.²³ — Abaye said to him: Let him make two and inscribe on them: This is a freewill-offering, the other obligatory. — R. Judah

(20) If counting is obligatory, he had failed to do it properly. If the only purpose is the prevention of error and he has managed to avoid it, then de facto all is right.

(21) J. Shek. VI, 6.

(22) These were special money chests into which persons who had a freewill-offering of a bird to offer would put in money in payment of the offerings which the priests would make on their behalf. No such chests were however available for obligatory offerings of a bird.

(23) There were different regulations governing the ritual of the freewill and obligatory offerings respectively, for of the obligatory birds one was offered up as a burnt-offering, the other as a sin-offering, whereas all freewill-offerings were burnt-offerings, these differences implying distinctions in the ritual. Now if one of the money chests were confused with another, so that the priest would offer a freewill-offering from the money meant for obligatory offerings and vice versa, the offering would be rendered invalid.

does not consider such inscriptions [of any value]. For we have learnt: R. JUDAH SAID: THERE WAS NO MORE THAN ONE STAND. Now why not two? Evidently because they might be mixed up! But then let him provide two and write upon them: This is for the bullock and this for the he-goat? Hence you must¹ assume that R. Judah does not consider such inscriptions [of any value]. An objection was raised in the Academy: There were thirteen money chests in the Temple, on which were inscribed: 'new shekels', 'old shekels', 'bird-offerings', 'young birds for the whole offering', 'wood', 'frankincense', 'gold for the mercy-seat', and on six of them: 'freewill-offerings'. 'New shekels': [i.e.] those shekels due each year; 'old shekels': [i.e.] one who had not paid his shekel last year must pay it the next year. 'Bird-offerings', these are turtle-doves. 'Young birds for the whole offerings', these are young pigeons; and both of these are for whole offerings. This is the view of R. Judah.² — When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said: In the West³ they said: It is a preventive measure against the case of a sin-offering whose owner has died.⁴ But do we indeed take that into consideration? Have we not learnt: If someone sends his sin-offering from a far-away province,⁵ it is offered up in the assumption that he is alive?⁶ — Rather [the preventive measure is] against the case of a sin-offering whose owner has assuredly died.⁷ But in that case let us separate four zuz⁸ and cast them into the sea,⁹ so that the rest will be available for use! R. Judah rejects the principle of Bererah.¹⁰ Whence do we know this? Would you say from what we have learnt:¹¹ If a man buys wine from the Cutheans¹² on the eve of Sabbath, as it is getting dark,¹³ he may say: Let the two logs¹⁴ which I am about to set apart¹⁵ be heave-offering

(1) Because the priest might overlook them.

(4) A sin-offering, the owner of which died, must not be sacrificed but must be left to die, v. supra 50a. Now if the owner died, then the money for the value of the sin-offering which he may have put in one of the chests must be thrown into the sea. That money, being unusable and confused with other monies in the chest, would render them all useless. This is the confusion referred to above, hence the non-provision of money chests for obligatory offerings of a bird.

R. Judah, R. Jose and R. Simeon prohibit it. Hence we see that he rejects the principle of Bererah! — How does that follow? Perhaps the matter is different there, as the motive is taught there: They said to R. Meir: Don't you admit that if the bottle burst he would be found retrospectively to have drunk untithed wine? He said to them: If it bursts.¹ — Rather is it to be derived from what Ayo taught: for he taught: R. Judah said: No man may stipulate two possibilities at the same time. But if the Sage comes from the east, his 'Erub² applies eastwards alone; if he comes from the west, his 'Erub applies westwards alone, but never in both directions. And we asked concerning it: What is the difference touching both directions that it cannot apply, it is only because the principle of Bererah is rejected,³ the same ought to apply even [where the condition was 'if the Sage comes] from the east or west'? Thereupon R. Johanan said: In this case the Sage has arrived already.⁴ But now that we maintain that R. Judah rejects the principle of Bererah whilst upholding the value of inscriptions [notices],⁵ also for the Day of Atonement let there be prepared two stands with such inscriptions! Because the high priest is fatigued, he would not pay attention to them. For should you not agree to this consideration, he could really do without any such inscriptions, for one [contains] more [blood], and the other less.⁶ And if you were to say, he does not receive the whole of it,⁷ but R. Judah said: He who slays the animal, must receive the whole blood, as it is said: The whole blood of the bullock he shall pour upon the base of the altar.⁸ And if you were to say some thereof might be spilled; — still, one [blood] is lighter [in colour], the other darker. Hence you must needs explain that the high priest, because of his fatigue, could not pay sufficient attention [to the difference in the blood]; thus is it here: because of his fatigue the high priest could not pay sufficient attention [to the inscriptions].

Once a man went down [to the praying desk] in the presence of Raba⁹ and read: Then he came forth, and placed it upon the second stand in the Temple. He took the blood of the bullock and deposited the blood of the he-goat. He said to him: In one point in accord with the Sages,¹⁰ in another with R. Judah?¹¹ Rather say: He deposited the blood of the he-goat and took the blood of the bullock.

AND HE SPRINKLED THEREOF UPON THE CURTAIN OUTSIDE OPPOSITE THE ARK: Our Rabbis taught: And so shall he do for the tent of meeting.¹² What does that come to teach? That as he sprinkles in the Holy of Holies, thus must he sprinkle in the Hekal, i.e., just as in the Holy of Holies he sprinkles once upward and seven times downward, from the blood of the bullock, thus shall he sprinkle in the Hekal. That dwelleth with them in the midst of their uncleanness¹³ i.e., even when they are unclean, the Divine Presence is among them.

A certain Sadducee¹⁴ said to R. Hanina:

- (1) This is a contingency that need not be reckoned with, since a guard may be appointed to watch out for such theoretical situations.
- (2) The word 'erub' means interweaving, mixture, confusion, conjunction. It signifies also a symbolical act, by which the legal fiction of community or continuity is established. With reference to the Sabbath limits: a person deposits, before the Sabbath (or the Holy Day), certain eatables to remain in their place over the next day, by which act he transfers his abode to that place and his movements on the Sabbath are measured from it as the centre. On the Sabbath in the area around a town or place the limits are two thousand cubits in every direction. The case here discussed is that of one who expects a scholar outside his city and is desirous of meeting him. He deposits the 'erub for this purpose. V. 'Er., Sonc. ed., pp. 252f. notes.
- (3) It being held that the choice the man made between the two Sages on the following day may not have been his choice at twilight on the previous day when the validity of the 'erub must take effect.
- (4) Sc. at twilight of the Sabbath eve he was already within the permitted Sabbath limit of that man's town though the latter was unaware of the fact. As the validity of the 'erub was made dependent on an event that, though unknown to the speaker, had actually taken place before twilight of the Sabbath eve there can be no question as to the 'erub's effectiveness. It is not the speaker's subsequent knowledge of the fact that renders the 'erub valid retrospectively, but the presence of the Sage at the crucial moment. The question of bererah, therefore, does not at all arise.
- (5) As so proved from Shek. VI, 5.
- (6) One contains the blood of the bullock which is of a larger quantity than that of the he-goat.
- (7) Sc. the blood of the bullock.
- (8) Lev. IV, 7.
- (9) He acted as deputy of the congregation (public reader) and read the order of the service of the Day of Atonement.
- (10) The reference to the second stand.
- (11) Stating that he took first the blood of the bullock and then deposited the blood of the he-goat.
- (12) Lev. XVI, 16.
- (13) Ibid.
- (14) A censorial corruption of Min (v. Glos.). A Sadducean would not have spoken of Israel as 'you'.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 57a

Now you are surely unclean, for it is written: Her filthiness was in her skirts.¹ -He answered: Come and see what is written concerning them: 'That dwelleth with them in the midst of their uncleanness', i.e., even at the time when they are unclean, the Divine Presence is among them. — But may something inferred by analogy be used as basis of another by analogy?² — The inference here came from the subject itself for which inference was made, together with another, thus cannot be considered inference by analogy.³ This will be well in accord with the view that such inference is not inference by analogy, but what can be said according to the view that even that is inference by analogy? — Only the localities are inferred here from one another.⁴ Or, if you like, say: He infers the outside [sprinklings] from the inside ones simultaneously.⁵ It was taught: When he sprinkled, he did not sprinkle directly upon the curtain, but towards it. R. Eliezer b. Jose said: I saw it⁶ in Rome and there were upon it many drops of blood both of the bullock and the he-goat of the Day of Atonement. — Perhaps these stains were those from the [blood of] the bullock [offered up] for an error of the community,⁷ or of the goats [offered in expiation] for idolatry? — He saw that they were in their regular order.⁸ It has also been taught⁹ in connection with the bullock offered up for an error of the community: When he sprinkled the drops were not to reach the curtain, but if they did, they just did.¹⁰ And R. Eleazar b. Jose said: I saw it in Rome and there were upon it many drops of blood from the bullock offered up for an error of the congregation and from the he-goats offered up for idolatry. But perhaps they came from the bullock and he-goat of the Day of Atonement? — He saw that they were not in their regular order.

If the blood [of the one] was mixed up with the blood [of the other],¹¹ — Raba holds, he sprinkles once upwards and seven times downwards, and it serves for both. When this was reported before R. Jeremiah, he said: Those foolish Babylonians, because they live in a dark country, they utter dark teachings.¹² Surely he would be giving the upward sprinkling [of the blood] of the he-goat before the downward sprinkling [of the blood] of the bullock, whereas the Torah said: And when he hath made an end of atoning for the holy place,¹³ [implying] he must complete [the sprinkling of] the blood of the bullock, then complete [the sprinkling of] the blood of the he-goat. Rather, said R. Jeremiah: He sprinkles once upward and seven times downward in the name of the bullock, and then he sprinkles once upward and seven times downward in the name of the he-goat.

If the blood of one was mixed up with the blood of the other in the midst¹⁴ of the last sprinklings, then R. Papa wanted to say before Raba, he makes seven downward sprinklings in the name of the bullock and he-goat, then makes one upward in the name of the he-goat. Said Raba to him: Now they had just called us foolish, now they might call us the most foolish of the foolish for we teach them but they learn not. Surely now he would be making the downward sprinkling [of the blood] of the he-goat before the upward sprinkling [of the blood] of the he-goat, whereas the Torah said: Sprinkle first upward, then downward.

(1) Lam. I, 9.

(2) Above (55a) we inferred the number of upward and downward sprinklings with the blood of the bullock and the he-goat respectively. Here again an attempt is made to infer through analogy the number of upward and downward sprinklings in the Sanctuary from the sprinklings in the Holy of Holies. The rule is that in the laws appertaining to sacrifices something obtained by analogy may not become the basis or source of new inference by analogy; such inference is legitimate only when based upon the Biblical text itself.

(3) In the primary analogy the main law prescribing upward and downward sprinklings is definitely taught in the Biblical text, both in the case of the bullock and the he-goat, it is only their number that is inferred from one another. In such a case the primary analogy may be made the basis for a further analogy. It is only when the very law itself is mentioned in one case only and then inferred through analogy for the other that no further inference by analogy may be made. If e.g., no reference had been made in the Biblical text to any upward or downward sprinkling, such regulation being based on inference from one to the other, it would then be wrong to endeavour to derive another law by analogy from the first law inferred by analogy.

(4) I.e., whereas in the first analogy the inference was made from one animal for the other, the second is concerned in the localities — i.e., the Holy of Holies and the Temple, extending the sprinkling regulations from the former to the latter.

(5) The second inference is not made via the animals but directly from the sprinklings within the Holy of Holies to those outside, in the Temple Proper.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 57b

Rather, said Raba, he makes seven downward sprinklings in the name of the bullock, then makes one upward and seven downward sprinklings in the name of the he-goat.

If the cups [of blood] have become confused,¹ then he sprinkles, and sprinkles again, and sprinkles once more, three times.² If part³ of the blood became mixed up and part not, then obviously when he makes the sprinklings he makes them from that part which is definitely known [to be unmixed]; but as for the other,⁴ is it to be considered a remainder and must thus be poured out at the base⁵ of the altar, or is it to be considered 'rejected' [from sacred use] and must be poured into the canal?⁶ — R. Papa said: Even according to the view that one cup renders the other a remainder,⁷ that applies only where he could make the sprinklings if he wanted to do so but in this case,⁸ even if he so desired, he would be unable to make the sprinkling. R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said to R. Papa: On the contrary! Even according to the view that one cup renders the other 'rejected', that applies only if he rejected it with his hands [deliberately], but where he had not rejected it with his hands it would not apply? For it has been taught: Above it is said: And the remaining blood thereof shall he pour out,⁹ and below: And all the remaining blood thereof shall he pour out.¹⁰ Whence do we know that, in the case of a sin-offering, if he had received the blood in four cups and sprinkled from each one cup thereof¹¹ one sprinkling, all the remaining blood must be poured out at the base? To teach us that Scripture said: 'And all the remaining blood thereof shall he pour out'. One might have assumed that even if he made the four sprinklings from one of the [cups], to teach us correctly, Scripture said: 'And the remaining blood thereof shall he pour out' i.e., only this is to be poured out at the base but they [the rest] are to be poured into the canal. R. Eliezer son of R. Simeon said: Whence do we know that if he received the blood of a sin-offering in four cups and made the four sprinklings from one of them, that they must all be poured out at the base? To teach us that Scripture said: 'And all the remaining blood thereof shall he pour out'.¹² But according to R. Eliezer son of R. Simeon is it not written: 'And the remaining blood thereof shall he pour out'? — R. Ashi said: This is meant to exclude the [blood that] remains in the neck of the animal.

HE POURED THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK INTO THE BLOOD OF THE HE-GOAT: We were taught in accordance with the view that one mixed [the blood] to sprinkle upon the horns [of the inner altar], for it has been said: R. Josaia and R. Jonathan [were disputing], one said: One mixed [the bloods], the other one did not do so. It may be ascertained that it is R. Josaia who held that one mixed [the bloods]; for he said: Although Scripture does not state: 'together',¹³ is it not written: it is as if 'together' were written. You might also say that it is R. Jonathan, but here it is different, because Scripture states 'once'.¹⁴ It has been taught contrary to this, our reply: 'And he shall take of the blood of the bullock and of the blood of the goat'¹⁵ i.e., that they are to be mixed. This is the view of R. Josaia.

(1) The priest not knowing which of the cups contained the blood of the bullock and which the blood of the he-goat.

(2) In each case he makes one sprinkling upward and seven downward from one cup then again from the second cup, finally again from the first cup, so that in any case the blood of the bullock would have been sprinkled before that of the he-goat. For, if the first cup was actually that containing the bullock's blood, and the second that containing the he-goat's blood, he has fulfilled his duty properly, with the first and second series of sprinklings. If, however, the first cup happened to be that of the he-goat, then such sprinkling was of no avail, and the second cup being that containing the bullock's blood and the third again the one containing the he-goat's blood, are in order and the service is performed in accord with the regulations which postulate that the sprinklings made with the bullock's blood came first.

(3) As e.g., when the blood contained in two cups was poured into a third, so that each of the two cups contained a quantity of blood.

(4) The mixed blood in the third cup.

(5) V. Zeb. 47a: the remaining blood was poured over the western base of the outer altar.

(6) I.e., since the sprinklings did not come from it, shall the blood be relegated, together with all waste of the Temple Court, through the canal, to the brook of Kidron.

(7) Whenever the priest has received the blood in two cups but has sprinkled from one only, the blood in the other cup is poured out over the base of the altar.

(8) Where part of the blood of the two cups was poured into a third.

(9) Lev. IV, 25.

(10) Ibid. v, 34.

(11) The blood of the sin-offering was sprinkled upon the four corners of the altar.

(12) Thus we see that the first Tanna treats the blood in the cup or cups from which no sprinkling has been made as rejected, to be poured out in the canal, whereas R. Eliezer b. R. Simeon treats it as the remainder, to be poured out over the base.

(13) In Sanh. 66a these two Sages debate the question as to whether literal direction is necessary to indicate that a prohibition does not refer to two persons together where the contrary might be assumed, R. Judah holding that such direction is necessary while R. Jonathan holds it is not. Thus, on the view of R. Josaia, even though no definite instruction is to be found in the text, the inference that the blood of the bullock and he-goat be sprinkled together, appears legitimate according to the analogous consistence of the view.

(14) Ex. XXX, 10. And Aaron shall make atonement upon the horns of it once (a year). The word is here interpreted to mean that one sprinkling is to be made of the blood of both animals.

(15) Lev. XVI, 18.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 58a

R. Jonathan said: [He sprinkled] separately from the one and from the other. Said R. Josaia to him: But was it not said already: 'Once'? To this R. Jonathan replied: But was it not said already: 'From the blood of the bullock and the blood of the he-goat'? Why then was the word 'once' stated? To tell you, [sprinkle] once, but not twice from the blood of the bullock; once and not twice from the blood of the he-goat. Another [Baraitha] taught: 'And he shall take from the blood of the bullock and from the blood of the he-goat' i.e., that the two shall be mixed together. You say that they shall be mixed together! but perhaps he should sprinkle separately from the one and from the other? To teach us the right thing, Scripture says: 'once' and the anonymous [Baraitha] is in agreement with the view of R. Joshua.

HE POURED THE [CONTENTS OF] THE FULL VESSEL INTO THE EMPTY ONE: Rami b. Hama asked of R. Hisda: If he placed one bowl into another and this received the blood, what then? Is homogeneous matter considered an interposition or not?¹ He answered: You have learnt that already: HE POURED [THE CONTENTS OF] THE FULL VESSEL INTO THE EMPTY ONE. Does this mean that he placed the full bowl into the empty one?² — No, it means that he poured the full vessel into the empty one.³ But the first part states already: HE POURED THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK INTO THE BLOOD OF THE HE-GOAT? — [It is repeated] in order [to make sure] that he will mix it very well indeed.

Come and hear: If he stood upon any vessel, or upon his fellow's foot, it is invalid!⁴ — It is different with his neighbour's foot, because he [his fellow] does not abandon it.⁵ Some there are who say: This is how he asked of him: Is such the manner of ministration or not? Come and hear: For the school of R. Ishmael taught:[And they shall take] all the vessels of ministry, wherewith they minister in the sanctuary,⁶ i.e., two⁷ vessels, but one ministry [service].

Rami b. Hama asked of R. Hisda: If he deposited bast in the bowl and he received the blood therewith, what then? Is heterogeneous matter considered an interposition⁸ or not? Is it not considered an interposition, since it penetrates [the blood], or is there no difference? — He replied to him: We have learnt that: He empties out the water until the sponge is reached.⁹ — It is different with water because it is very weak. Some there are who say: This is how he answered him: In the case of the blood¹⁰ it is permitted, but in the case of the fistful it is invalid.¹¹

(1) The priest is to receive the blood. If one bowl is considered an interposition, then the priest, whose hand does not hold the bowl containing the blood, is not really receiving the blood, the ministration then should be cancelled as invalid. (This discussion refers, as Rashi explains, not just to the Day of Atonement, but to the service on any day of the year). The two bowls are homogeneous and if they be considered as interposition, then the above question follows. With regard to heterogeneous matter, there is no doubt; it surely is considered an interposition, v. Tosaf. s.v. בין.

(2) That would indicate that homogeneous matter is not considered an interposition and would thus settle the above question in the affirmative.

(3) So that the situation is entirely different and no inference as to the interposition of homogeneous matter is possible.

(4) If the priest, in receiving the blood, stood upon a vessel, then that vessel was interposing between the floor of the Sanctuary and the priest, therefore invalidating the service. (Zeb. 24a). Similarly, if he stood upon his fellow's foot. The foot, however, is homogeneous and the fact that the service is cancelled, would seem to indicate that homogeneous matter is considered an interposition, so that the question above would appear to be answered.

(5) Homogeneous matter is not considered an interposition, but a human foot is an undeniable entity.

(6) Num. IV, 12.

(7) I.e., vessels in the plural means at least two (although the plural is indefinite as to the maximum, there is the undeniable minimum of two); whereas the word ministry refers to one ministration only.

(8) The bast is heterogeneous to the bowl, hence should be considered an interposition. But since the blood penetrates the bast and reaches the bowl, does it cancel the interposing bast, so that, as it were, the priest had received the blood in the bowl proper, as viewed retroactively, or not?

(9) Parah VI, 3: If someone was mixing the ashes (of the red heifer) in the water of a trough of stone, and there was a sponge in the trough then the water in the sponge is invalid, as a sponge is not a vessel. What should he do? The water in the trough should be poured out until the sponge is reached and the water is valid. Hence we see that a sponge is not considered interposing so as to invalidate the whole water, and similarly here, the bast should not be considered as interposing between the bowl and the blood.

(10) Because it is thin.

(11) For the fistful of the flour-offering was required to be received in the vessel after having first been taken, analogous to the receiving of the blood, hence any interposing object would render the ministration invalid.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 58b

MISHNAH. AND HE SHALL GO OUT UNTO THE ALTAR THAT IS BEFORE THE LORD,¹ — THAT IS THE GOLDEN ALTAR.² THEN HE BEGINS TO SPRINKLE³ DOWNWARD.⁴ WHENCE DOES HE COMMENCE? FROM THE NORTH-EAST HORN [OF THE ALTAR], THEN THE NORTH-WEST, THEN THE SOUTH-WEST, THEN THE SOUTH-EAST. WHERE HE COMMENCES [SPRINKLING] ON THE OUTER ALTAR,⁵ THERE HE COMPLETES [SPRINKLING] ON THE INNER ALTAR. R. ELIEZER SAID: HE REMAINED IN HIS PLACE AND SPRINKLED. AND HE WOULD SPRINKLE EVERY HORN FROM BELOW UPWARDS, WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THE HORN AT WHICH HE WAS STANDING, WHICH HE WOULD SPRINKLE FROM ABOVE DOWNWARDS. THEN HE SPRINKLED THE TOP⁶ OF THE ALTAR SEVEN TIMES AND POURED OUT THE REMAINDER OF THE BLOOD AT THE WESTERN BASE OF THE OUTER ALTAR. AND [THE REMAINDER OF THE BLOOD SPRINKLED] ON THE OUTER ALTAR HE POURED OUT AT THE SOUTHERN BASE. BOTH MINGLED IN THE CANAL⁷ AND FLOWED INTO THE BROOK KIDRON AND THEY WERE SOLD TO GARDENERS AS MANURE AND BY USING THEM ONE TRANSGRESSES THE LAW OF TRESPASS.⁸ GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: 'And he shall go out unto the altar', what does that mean to teach? R. Nehemiah said: Since we find that, in connection with the bullock offered up for [the transgression in error of] 'any of the commandments',⁹ the priest stands outside the altar and sprinkles towards the curtain,¹⁰ one might have assumed that here the same would take place, therefore Scripture said: 'And he shall go out unto the altar', hence he must have been found before on the inner side of the altar.¹¹ — Another [Baraitha] taught: 'Before the Lord'. What does that mean to teach? R. Nehemiah said: Since we find with the bullock and he-goat of the Day of Atonement that the priest stands on the inner side of the altar and sprinkles upon the curtain, as he sprinkles one might have assumed here the same would be the case, therefore Scripture has come to teach us: The altar of sweet incense before the Lord, which is in the tent of meeting,¹² that implies: the altar before the Lord, but not the priest before the Lord. How that? He stands outside the altar and sprinkles.

HE BEGAN TO SPRINKLE DOWNWARD: Our Rabbis taught: He began to sprinkle downward.

Whence did he commence? From the south-eastern horn, [proceeding to] the south-western, north-western and north-eastern horns respectively. This is the view of R. Akiba, — R. Jose the Galilean says: [He started from] the north-eastern, [proceeding to] the north-western, southwestern and south-eastern horns respectively.¹³ At the place where, according to R. Jose the Galilean, he commenced, there according to R. Akiba, he stopped. At the place where R. Akiba would have him start, there R. Jose the Galilean would have him stop. All agree at any rate that he does not start at the point he first comes to.¹⁴ What is the reason? Said Samuel: Scripture said: And he shall go out unto the altar, i.e., only after he has gone over the whole altar. But according to R. Akiba he ought to go around it to the right.¹⁵ Shall we say [then] that they are disputing a teaching of Rami b. Ezekiel? For Rami b. Ezekiel said: Concerning the sea¹⁶ which Solomon made, [Scripture states]: It stood upon twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east; and the sea was set upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.¹⁷ Hence you are taught that all the turns you make [in the Temple] must be to the right, i.e., eastward;¹⁸ one Master [R. Jose the Galilean] agreeing with Rami b. Ezekiel, the other Master [R. Akiba] disagreeing? — No, all agree with the view of Rami b. Ezekiel and the matter of dispute here is, rather, this: One Master holds that [the regulations] within¹⁹ are inferred from [those] without,²⁰ the other Master holding we do not infer [the regulations] ‘within’ from [those] ‘without’. But according to R. Akiba, granted that he does not infer ‘within’ from ‘without’, let him be permitted to do it one way if he so chooses, or the other way if he so chooses?²¹ — R. Akiba will tell you: As far as de jure regulation is concerned he ought to start at the horn to which he had come first, for Resh Lakish has said: One must not forego the occasion for performing a religious act;²² and the reason why he does not do so is because Scripture said: ‘And he shall go out unto the altar,’ i.e., until he has gone outside the whole altar. Therefore as soon as he has sprinkled the blood on this horn, he returns to the horn with which he should have started from the beginning.²³

(1) Lev. XVI, 18.

(2) Ex. XXX, I.

(3) Lit., ‘to cleanse from sin’.

(4) Lit., ‘he goes down’ i.e., he applies the blood to the horn of the altar beginning at the top and leading his finger downward.

(5) Zeb. 53a.

(6) This word is variously interpreted in the Gemara. It may mean ‘back’, i.e., top; it has been claimed as ‘the pure, real surface’ (of gold) i.e., free from coals or ashes; as the centre of the altar front.

(7) V. Shek. IV, 2.

(8) Lev. V, 15.

(9) Lev. IV, 1ff.

(10) V. infra.

(11) The text should have read: ‘He shall make atonement on the altar that is before the Lord’. ‘And he shall go out unto the altar’ has no special significance. But since we find that on the occasion of other sacrifices he was standing outside, the words ‘and he shall go out’ here indicate that in this case he was on the inner side.

(12) Lev. IV, 7. The words ‘before the Lord’ are in themselves superfluous — for obviously the altar was ‘before the Lord’ — but are to indicate that only the altar was ‘before the Lord’ but not the priest. The latter stood outside and did not interpose between the altar and the curtain either when he sprinkled the blood on the corners or against the curtains.

(13) The dispute hinges on the question as to whether there were one or two curtains before the Holy of Holies. R. Akiba holds there were two, the outer one clasped on the south side. As the priest came from the Holy of Holies from the south in order to proceed with the sprinkling against the curtain, the first horn of the altar he meets is the south-western, however, he did not sprinkle, because of the interpretation of ‘And he shall go out unto the altar’ (v. infra) so that he begins the sprinkling on the south-eastern side and then turning to the left continues with the outer corners. R. Jose the Galilean holds, in accord with R. Jose, that there was but one curtain, clasped on the north side, so that as the priest came forth from the north he reached first the north-western horn of the altar, where, however, he did not sprinkle but at the north-eastern horn, and then turning to the right he returned to the north-western horn to continue his sprinkling.

- (14) Coming from the west, he first reaches one of the western horns of the altar (v. previous note), yet does not commence with it.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 59a

Or if you like, say: If we hold that the sprinkling [on the inner altar] was done in walking around,¹ there would be general agreement that we infer 'within' from 'without', but the dispute here rests on this: one Master holds the sprinkling was done by circular movements of the hand, the other Master holding the sprinkling was done in walking around. Or if you like, say: All agree that the sprinkling [on the inner altar] was done by circular movements of the hand, the point of dispute here is: one Master holds, we may infer [the regulations touching] the hand from [those governing] the foot, the other Master holding that we do not infer the 'hand' from the 'foot'. But does R. Jose the Galilean hold that the sprinkling was done by circular movement of the hand? Surely, since the second part reads: R. Eliezer said: HE REMAINED IN HIS PLACE AND SPRINKLED,² it follows that the first Tanna did not hold so?³ Hence it is obvious, as we have answered before: One Master holds the sprinkling was done by circular movement of the hand, whereas the other Master holds it was done by walking around. And if you like to say: The dispute lies therein: that one Master holds that the [phrase] 'round about' [mentioned in connection] with the inner altar signifies the same as 'round about' [mentioned in connection] with the outer altar,⁴ whereas the other Master holds that the whole of the inner altar occupied as much space as one horn of the outer altar.⁵

It was taught: R. Ishmael said: Two high priests had survived the First Sanctuary. One said: I had done the sprinkling [in the inner altar] by circular movement of my hand; the other said: I had done the sprinkling by walking around the altar. The first advanced a reason for his procedure, so did the second. The first said: The 'round about' of the inner altar had to be as the round about' of the outer altar; the other stating: The whole of the inner altar occupied as much space as one horn of the outer altar.

R. ELIEZER SAID: HE REMAINED IN HIS PLACE AND SPRINKLED. With whom does our Mishnah agree? — With R. Judah. For it was taught: R. Meir said, R. Eliezer said: He remained in his place and sprinkled. And all the sprinklings he made from above downward with the exception of the one athwart, which he made from below upward. R. Judah said, R. Eliezer said: He remained in his place and sprinkled. All the sprinklings he made from below upward with the exception of this one right before him which he made from above downward, to prevent his garments from becoming sullied.⁶

THEN HE SPRINKLED THE TOP [TIHARO] OF THE ALTAR: What does 'TIHARO' mean? — Rabbah son of R. Shila said: The centre of the altar-front, as people say: 'The moon-light [tiharo] shines,' meaning thereby the middle of the day. An objection was raised: As he sprinkles, he sprinkles neither upon the ashes, nor upon the embers, but he removes the coal to both sides and sprinkles?⁷ — Rather, said Rabbah son of R. Shila: [It means] the cleared surface⁸ of the altar, as it is written: And the like of the very heaven for [tohar] clearness.⁹

It was taught: Hanania said: He would sprinkle¹⁰ standing on the north side.¹¹ — R. Jose said: He would sprinkle standing on the south side.¹¹ Wherein are they disputing? — One [Hanania] holds the entrance was through the curtain on the south, whereas the other [R. Jose] holds it was on the north side.¹² At any rate all agree that on the place where he completed the sprinkling on the horns there he would sprinkle on the top thereof. What is the reason? — Scripture says: And he shall cleanse it...and hallow it,¹³ i.e., where he hallows it,¹⁴ there shall he cleanse it [we-tiharo].¹⁵

AND THE REMAINDER OF THE BLOOD HE SPRINKLED UPON THE WESTERN BASE OF THE OUTER ALTAR: For Scripture said: And all the remaining blood of the bullock shall he pour out [etc.],¹⁶ and as he comes forth [from the Sanctuary] he meets this [side of the altar base] first.

AND THAT OF THE OUTER ALTAR HE POURED ON THE SOUTHERN BASE: Our Rabbis taught: ‘The base of the altar’¹⁷ i.e., the southern base. You say it is the southern base. But perhaps it is not so, but rather the western base? I will tell you: Let his coming down from the ramp be inferred from his going out of the Sanctuary: Just as when he goes out of the Sanctuary [he pours out the remainder of the blood] at [the point] nearest to him, and which is it? — the western base, so when he comes down from the ramp [he pours out the remainder of the blood] at the point nearest to him, and which is it? — the southern base.

It was taught: R. Ishmael said: Both times [blood was poured out] at the western base. — R. Simeon b. Yohai: No, [it was] at the southern base. — It is quite right, according to R. Ishmael: He holds that one may infer that concerning which no details are given from that which is thus described,¹⁸ but what is the reason of R. Simeon b. Yohai? — R. Ashi said: He holds the entrance [to the Sanctuary] was at the south.¹⁹ The teaching of the school of R. Ishmael was taught in the school of R. Simeon b. Yohai:²⁰ In both cases it was the southern base. As a mnemotechnic sign remember: The men won over the man.²¹

BOTH MINGLED IN THE CANAL AND FLOWED etc.: Our Rabbis taught: One transgresses the law of trespass with [sacrificial] blood. These are the words of R. Meir. R. Simeon and the Sages hold: One does not commit such trespass.

(1) As was the case with the sprinkling on the outer altar.

(2) So that the sprinkling was done by the circular movement of his hand.

(3) The first Tanna (anonymous) of our Mishnah is R. Jose the Galilean, in accordance with his view in the Baraita cited. Now since R. Eliezer, in disputing, states that the sprinkling was made by circular movements of the hand, it is obvious that R. Jose did not think so. Hence the statement ‘All agree that the sprinkling was done by circular movement of the hand’ is wrong.

(4) V. Lev. XVI, 18. And...he shall put it upon the horns of the altar round about. In the case of the outer altar, the sprinkling was done by walking around, the analogy would render the same procedure proper with the inner altar.

(5) One cubit square.

(6) The purpose of this procedure was practical, beyond any ritualistic significance: he sprinkled upon the horn before him from above downward, lest some blood drip into his sleeve.

(7) The first interpretation of the word ‘tiharo’ would identify it with the middle of the side of the altar. But the passage just adduced indicates it must be the top. Cf. supra, p. 69, n. 2.

(8) Lit., ‘exposed (part)’.

(9) Ex. XXIV, 10.

(10) The seven sprinklings on the top of the altar, as explained supra.

(11) I.e., on the side where he completed the round of sprinkling on the altar.

(12) V. supra p. 274, n. 1, 5.

(13) Lev. XVI, 19.

(14) On the horns, i.e., on the horn where he completes the hallowing.

(15) By means of the seven sprinklings.

(16) Lev. IV, 7.

(17) Lev. IV, 30 with reference to an individual sin-offering.

(18) With regard to blood-offerings which are sprinkled on the inner altar there is the Biblical statement: Upon the base of the altar . . . which is at the entrance to the tent of meeting (Lev. IV, 7 and 18), this being the western base; there being no such statement concerning those offerings of which the blood is on the outer altar, the inference is legitimate.

(19) [The whole of the outer altar being on the northern half of the court so that when the priest came out of the Sanctuary the first base he met was the southern, v. supra 16b.]

(20) [I.e., R. Ishmael had retracted his view so that the disciples of R. Simeon b. Yohai could report the teaching in the name of R. Ishmael (Rashi).]

(21) 'The men drew nigh', i.e., won over the man, viz., the disciples of R. Simeon prevailed upon R. Ishmael to agree with them.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 59b

Now the dispute touches only the question as to whether [there is a trespass] Rabbinically;¹ according to Biblical law, however, there is no trespass.² When [do we know] these things? — 'Ulla said: Scripture said: 'To you'³ i.e., it belongs to you. The school of R. Simeon taught: To make atonement⁴ i.e., I have given it for atonement, but not for [the law of] trespass [to apply]. R. Johanan said: Scripture said: 'It' i.e., [implying that] it is before atonement: just as after atonement one cannot be guilty of trespass concerning it,⁵ thus can one before atonement not be guilty of trespass concerning it. But perhaps say: It is after the atonement as before the atonement: just as before the atonement one may become guilty of trespass concerning it, so also after atonement may one become guilty of trespass concerning it? — There is nothing concerning which one can become guilty of trespass, once the atonement touching it has been fulfilled.⁶ But there is the removal of the ashes [from the altar]?⁷

(1) Making the offender liable to pay the capital value of the blood.

(2) And the offender is exempt from the extra payment of the fifth, v. Lev. V, 16.

(3) Lev. XVII, 11. I have given it (the blood) to you.

(4) Ibid. 'To make atonement', implies but for no other ritual purpose, such as the application of the law of trespass.

(5) Once atonement has been effected with any sacrifice the law of trespass does not apply to it, v. infra.

(6) Once it has served its purpose it is no longer considered the property of the Sanctuary for laws of trespass to apply to it.

(7) V. Lev. VI, 3. The Biblical regulation And he shall put them (the ashes) beside the altar, (ibid.), indicates that they must be hid away, are not available for private use, and are hence still the property of the Sanctuary, to which the laws of trespass apply though the commandment concerning it has already been fulfilled.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 60a

— That is because referring to the removal of the ashes and the priestly garments¹ there are two verses [written] for the same purpose² and wherever two verses have the same purpose no deduction can be made from them [for other precepts].³ That will be right according to the Rabbis who hold: 'And he shall put them there'⁴ signifies that they must be hidden away but what can be said according to R. Dosa who holds that the garments of the [high] priest may be used for a common priest? — That is because concerning the removal of the ashes and the heifer⁵ whose neck is to be broken are two verses written for the same purpose, and wherever two verses are written for the same purpose no deduction can be made from them. That will be right according to the view that holds from two identical Scriptural statements no deduction can be made; but what can be said in accordance with the view that such deduction is permissible? — There are two limiting qualifications: And he shall put them⁶ and the one whose neck was broken.⁷ For what purpose are three Scriptural verses necessary in connection with the blood?⁸ — One is to exclude [blood] from [the rule touching] left-overs,⁹ one to exclude it from the rule touching trespass,¹⁰ and one to exclude it from the rule touching ritual uncleanness.¹¹ But no verse is necessary to exclude it from the rule touching piggul¹² for we have learnt: Whatever has that which renders [the offering] permissible, whether for human beings¹³ or for service on the altar¹⁴ can make one liable on its account for piggul. And blood itself is a thing which renders the offering permissible.¹⁵

MISHNAH. CONCERNING EVERY MINISTRATION OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT MENTIONED¹⁶ IN THE PRESCRIBED ORDER IF ONE SERVICE WAS DONE OUT OF ORDER BEFORE ANOTHER ONE, IT IS AS IF IT HAD NOT BEEN DONE AT ALL. IF HE SPRINKLED THE BLOOD OF THE HE-GOAT BEFORE THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK, HE MUST START OVER AGAIN, SPRINKLING THE BLOOD OF THE HE-GOAT AFTER THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK. IF BEFORE HE HAD FINISHED THE SPRINKLINGS WITHIN [THE HOLY OF HOLIES] THE BLOOD WAS POURED AWAY, HE MUST BRING OTHER BLOOD, STARTING OVER AGAIN AND SPRINKLING AGAIN WITHIN [THE HOLY OF HOLIES]. LIKEWISE, IN MATTERS OF THE SANCTUARY AND THE GOLDEN ALTAR, SINCE THEY ARE EACH A SEPARATE ACT OF ATONEMENT.¹⁷ R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON SAY: WHEREVER HE STOPPED, THERE HE MUST BEGIN AGAIN.¹⁸

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Concerning every ministration of the Day of Atonement mentioned in the prescribed order, if one service was done [out of order] before another one, it is as if one had not done it at all. R. Judah said: When does this apply? Only with regard to service performed in white garments, within [the Holy of Holies], but any service performed in white garments without, if in connection with them he performed one out of order before the other one, then what he has done is done [valid]. R. Nehemiah said: These things apply only to service performed in white garments, whether performed within [the Holy of Holies] or without, but in case of services performed in golden garments outside, what has been done, is done. Said R. Johanan: And both expounded it on the basis of one Scriptural passage: And this shall be an everlasting statute unto you . . . once in the year.¹⁹

(1) I.e., the garments with which the high priest performed the service of the Day of Atonement, v. Lev. XVI, 23.

(2) Lit., 'that come as one', i.e., in both there is a special verse stating that the same law applies.

(3) In both cases the Biblical law stipulates that they must not be used; Lev. XVI, 23 and VI, 3 (v.infra). The Torah should have stated the law in one case, for the other to be inferred in the usual manner. The identical statement in both cases — thus ruling out the usual analogy — indicates that both deal with unusual cases, from which no deduction would be legitimate.

(4) Lev. XVI, 23.

(5) Deut. XXI, 1f. 'There' (in the valley) indicates that it shall be buried there.

(6) Lev. VI, 3.

(7) Deut. XXI, 6. The definite article (ha-'arufah) is interpreted as implying limitation. The limitation excludes other things from the operation of this law.

(8) On 59b three Amoraim had inferred that the law of trespass does not apply to blood from three special, otherwise superfluous phrases. The Gemara now suggests that since three such special phrases appear, with but one of them necessary according to each Amora, they must each serve a limiting purpose.

(9) Portions of sacrifices left over beyond the legal time must be burnt. But blood of such left-overs is not included in the principle of left-overs, and, therefore, if one ate such blood, the penalty incurred derives only from the fact that he ate blood, not any additional penalty because he has eaten of left-overs.

(10) The law of trespass does not apply to blood.

(11) If someone ate of holy sacrifices in a state of levitical impurity, the penalty, if unwittingly, is a sin-offering, as it is for eating blood. The law does not apply to the blood of sacrifices, which if eaten in a state of levitical impurity involves only one sin-offering, viz., for eating blood.

(12) Piggul i.e., vile (ness) is the term used for a sacrifice that is rejected because of an improper intention in the mind of the officiating priest at the time of the sacrificing. Such improper intention includes his intention to dispose of the same beyond its legal space or time. (Lev. VII, 18 and ibid. XIX, 7.)

(13) The priests or owners by whom portions of the offering are consumed.

(14) On which the prescribed sacrificial portions are burnt.

(15) Zeb. 43a. The sprinkling of the blood makes parts of sacrifices permissible to the owner or priests; just as it makes certain portions of the animal fit to be offered up on the altar.

(16) In our Mishnah.

(17) Therefore every act of atonement completed, even if out of order is valid, without any repetition necessary.

(18) Even if the individual act of atonement has not been completed. These Rabbis hold that one may continue, or start again, even in the midst of a service, even though this service had been started out of order.

(19) Lev. XVI, 34.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 60b

R. Judah holds: [This means] the place on which once a year atonement is obtained: whereas R. Nehemiah holds that it refers to the objects through which once a year atonement is obtained.¹ But according to R. Judah, is then 'place' written here?² — Rather is this the reason for R. Judah's view: It is written 'This', and it is written 'Once', one excludes [services performed in] white garments, the other [those performed in] golden garments.³ And R. Nehemiah?⁴ — One excludes the golden garments, the other the remaining blood,⁵ which [if done out of order] do not impair [the service]. And R. Judah? — If [an act performed in white garments out of order] impairs the service,⁶ it impairs it here too, and if it does not impair [the service] it does not impair it here either;⁷ as it was taught:⁸ And when he hath made an end of atoning for the holy place,⁹ i.e., if he has obtained atonement he has completed it, if not, not. This is the opinion of R. Akiba. R. Judah said to him: Why should we not interpret thus: If he has completed it, he has obtained atonement, if not, not, to say, that if one of the sprinklings is missing, he has done nothing? And we inquired: What is the difference between them and R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi, each gave an answer: One said: They differ only as to the interpretation of the text, while the other said: The remaining blood¹⁰ is what they differ in. But did R. Johanan hold thus?¹¹ Surely R. Johanan said: R. Nehemiah taught in accordance with the view that the remaining blood [offered not as prescribed] impairs [the service].¹² This is a refutation.

R. Hanina said: If he took the handfuls of the incense before the slaying of the bullock, he has done nothing. According to whom is this? [Presumably] not according to the view of R. Judah. Surely he said that the word 'statute' was written only in connection with ministrations performed in white garments within [the Holy of Holies]! — [No], you may say that it is even in agreement with R. Judah's view, inasmuch as what is necessary for a service performed within is considered as a service within.

We learned: IF BEFORE HE HAD FINISHED THE SPRINKLINGS WITHIN [THE HOLY OF HOLIES] THE BLOOD WAS POURED AWAY, HE MUST BRING OTHER BLOOD, STARTING OVER AGAIN AND SPRINKLING WITHIN AGAIN. Now, if this view were right [it] should read: 'He should start again with the taking of the handfuls'.¹³ —

(1) The word 'statute' denotes that the order for this day is statutory, hence any disregard would render a service out of order invalid. R. Judah holds that this 'statute'- limitation has reference to the place whence once a year atonement is obtained, i.e., the Holy of Holies, whereas R. Nehemiah assumes it refers to the objects, by means of which, or in which, once a year atonement is obtained, i.e., both place and garments. Hence according to R. Judah the order is indispensable within the Holy of Holies, but not in the rest of the Sanctuary in which atonement is obtained frequently, and not but once in the course of the year. According to R. Nehemiah both place and garments, in which atonement must be obtained, have indispensable order of regulations.

(2) That the term 'statute' should refer to it?

- (3) 'This' and 'Once' being limitations.
- (4) How does he explain these two limitations?
- (5) Even if the pouring out had been delayed beyond the order, services performed meantime remain valid. The fact that this is done in white garments has no effect on the enforcement of the order in which it is to be done.
- (6) I.e., those parts of the service that were to follow it, but which were performed before it.
- (7) And there is no reason to exclude the remainder of the blood.
- (8) [That according to R. Judah the omission of the rite in connection with the remainder of the blood impairs the service, and consequently the term 'statute' should apply to it equally with the other acts performed in white garments.]
- (9) Lev. XVI, 20.
- (10) R. Akiba holds: the omission of the rite connected with it does not impair the atonement, as the main sprinklings had been made and the atonement is complete, even if the remaining blood has not been poured away; whereas R. Judah holds: If all is completed, then he has obtained atonement, if not (and failure to pour away the remaining blood would be included in this indispensable programme) not.
- (11) That according to R. Nehemiah the remaining blood presents no handicap. Since above R. Johanan said that both used one Scriptural passage as their text and R. Nehemiah was consequently held to infer that the disposal of the remaining blood according to order was not indispensable.
- (12) V. Zeb. 11a.
- (13) Since R. Hanina holds that taking the handfuls of the incense before the slaughtering of the bullock is invalid, he would have to take afresh a new handful before slaughtering the second bullock.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 61a

He does not treat of the incense.¹

'Ulla said: If he slew the he-goat before sprinkling the blood of the bullock, he has done nothing. We learned: IF HE SPRINKLED THE BLOOD OF THE HE-GOAT BEFORE THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK, HE MUST START OVER AGAIN, SPRINKLING THE BLOOD OF THE HE-GOAT AFTER THE BLOOD OF THE BULLOCK. Now, if this view were right, [it] should read: 'He shall start over again' and slaughter?² — 'Ulla explained this to refer to the sprinklings in the Sanctuary;³ and thus also R. Afes explained it to refer to the sprinklings in the Sanctuary. LIKEWISE IN MATTERS OF THE SANCTUARY AND THE GOLDEN ALTAR: Our Rabbis taught: And he shall make atonement for the most holy place,⁴ i.e., the Holy of Holies [for] The tent of meeting, i.e., the Sanctuary;⁵ [for] the altar⁶ in the literal sense. 'He shall make atonement' — this [refers to] the courts; 'the priests' in the literal sense; 'the people', i.e., Israel; 'He shall make atonement', this refers to the Levites. Then they are all declared alike in respect of one atonement, for all other sins they⁷ obtain atonement through the he-goat-that-is-to-be-sent-away,⁸ this is the view of R. Judah. R. Simeon said: Just as the blood of the he-goat [the rites of which are] performed within obtains atonement for Israel in all matters of impurity touching the Sanctuary and its holy things,⁹ thus also does the blood of the bullock obtain atonement for the priests in all matters of impurity touching the Sanctuary and its holy things; and just as the confession over the he-goat-to-be-sent-away obtains atonement for Israel with regard to all other transgressions, so does the confession over the bullock obtain atonement for the priest for all other transgressions.¹⁰

Our Rabbis taught: 'And when he hath made an end of atoning for the holy place', this refers to the Holy of Holies; 'The tent of meeting', i.e., the Sanctuary; the altar, in its literal sense — this teaches that for all of these special [independent] atonements must be obtained. Hence they said: If he sprinkled some of the sprinklings made within, and the blood was poured away, he shall bring other blood and start again from the beginning with the sprinklings within. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon say: He shall start but from the place where he stopped. If he has completed the sprinkling due within and the blood was poured away, then he shall bring other blood and he shall start from the beginning with the sprinklings in the Sanctuary. If he had sprinkled some of the sprinklings due in the Sanctuary and the blood was poured away, he shall bring other blood and start again from the beginning with the sprinklings due in the Sanctuary. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon say: He need start but from the place where he had stopped. If he had completed the sprinklings due in the Sanctuary and the blood was poured away, he shall bring other blood and start again from the beginning with the sprinkling due on the altar. If he had made some of the sprinklings due on the altar and the blood was poured away, he shall bring other blood and he shall start again from the beginning with the sprinklings due on the altar. R. Eliezer and R. Simeon said: He shall not start except from the place where he had stopped. If he had completed the sprinklings due on the altar and the blood was poured all agree that this is no handicap. Said R. Johanan: Both¹¹ infer it from one scriptural passage: With the blood of the sin-offering of atonement . . . once a year.¹² R. Meir holds: I have spoken to thee of one sin-offering [whereby to obtain one atonement], not of two sin-offerings; R. Eleazar and R. Simeon holding, I have spoken of one sprinkling, not of two sprinklings.¹³

It was taught: Rabbi said: R. Jacob taught me a difference with regard to the logs.¹⁴ But is there no [dispute]? Surely it has been taught: If he made some of the sprinklings within [the Sanctuary],¹⁵ and the blood was poured away, he must bring another log [of oil] and start again from the beginning with the sprinklings due within. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon hold: He starts again from the place he had stopped at. If he had completed the sprinklings due within [the Sanctuary] and the log was spilt, he shall bring another log and start again from the beginning with the application on the thumbs¹⁶ and toes.¹⁶ If he had made some of the applications on the thumbs and toes and the log was spilt, he shall bring another log and start over again from the beginning with the applications on the thumbs and toes. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon hold: He shall start where he had stopped before. If he had completed the applications due on the thumbs and toes and the log was spilt, then all agree that the applications on the head are not a handicap.¹⁷ Say rather: R. Jacob taught me also [the difference of opinion] concerning the log.¹⁸

The Master had said: The applications on the head are no handicap. Why that? Shall I say because Scripture says: And what remaineth over of the oil,¹⁹ but then [when it says]: But that which is left of the meal-offering etc.,²⁰ would you say that there, too, it constitutes no handicap?²¹ — It is different there because it is written: ‘And the rest’²² and what remaineth over etc’²³

(1) He would certainly have to take anew the handfuls.

(2) [It is assumed that the reference is to the sprinklings within the Holy of Holies, with the result that the he-goat was slaughtered before the sprinkling of the blood of the bullock.]

(3) But the slaying of the he-goat took place in its proper place, after the blood of the bullock had been sprinkled within.

(4) Lev. XVI, 33.

(5) These sprinklings atone for any impurity that occurred in the Holy of Holies or the Sanctuary, if any person should have entered there unwittingly in a state of impurity. V. Shebu. 7b.

(6) If any impurity occurred to any person at the altar, he staying there for a period co-extensive with the time of one prostration.

(7) Priest, Levites and Israelites.

(8) Besides those of impurity. In the case of other transgressions the he-goat-to-be-sent-away obtains forgiveness for both priests and commoners. But for the sin implied in any impurity in the Temple, it is the bullock which obtains forgiveness for the priests, and the he-goat which brings it to Israel.

(9) Without confession. As there was no confession with that he-goat.

(10) V. Sheb. 13b.

(11) The anonymous authority who is R. Meir on the one hand, and R. Eleazar and R. Simeon on the other.

(12) Ex. XXX, 10.

(13) The word זָטַח rendered ‘sin-offering’ means also ‘purge from sin’, hence sprinkle.

(14) With regard to the log of oil used for the purification of the leper (v. Lev. XIV, 21) R. Jacob had taught that unlike the sprinklings of the Day of Atonement, there was no dispute concerning the question here where one must start again after a service had been performed out of order.

(15) This refers to the purification rite of a leper, v. Lev. XIV, 16.

(16) Lev. XIV, verse 17.

(17) Hence the dispute between the Rabbis did affect the log of oil as well.

(18) The report had been originally misread. As R. Hananel suggests, it read: 'R. Jacob had not made any difference with regard to the log'. In its original interpretation it implied: There was no difference of opinion among the Rabbis touching the log. But, since that report was now refuted, the meaning must have been: R. Jacob taught me that there was no difference between the log and the other case; in both the Rabbis are of divergent opinion.

(19) Lev. XIV, 29 which indicates that the oil used for the head is but a remainder and not an essential part of the rite.

(20) Ibid. II, 10.

(21) In reality it does, v. Men. 9a.

(22) Ibid. XIV, 17 with reference to the oil applied to the thumbs and toes.

(23) The oil applied on the thumbs and toes is thus designated 'remainder' and that applied on the head 'remainder of remainder' and therefore constitutes no handicap.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 61b

R. Johanan said: If the guilt-offering of a leper had been slaughtered not for its own purpose,¹ — therein we find a dispute between [on the one hand] R. Meir, and R. Eleazar and R. Simeon [on the other]. R. Meir, who said he must bring another one and start all over from the beginning, would here consistently hold that he must bring another [animal as] guilt-offering and slay it, whereas R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, who say: He shall start at the place he had left off before, would hold that here there is no redress.²

R. Hisda demurred to them: Surely it is written: 'It³ — This is a refutation. It was taught in accord with R. Johanan: If the guilt-offering of a leper had been slaughtered not for its own purpose, or if one had not sprinkled of its blood upon the thumbs and toes, it is considered a burnt-offering in regard to the altar and requires the [prescribed]⁴ libations and he requires another guilt-offering to render him right again.⁵ — And R. Hisda? — He will answer you: What means, he requires? — He requires, but he has no remedy [to get it]. But would a Tanna teach: 'He requires' when he has no remedy [of getting it]? Indeed, as it was also taught: [Concerning] a baldheaded nazirite Beth Shammai taught he requires to pass through a razor [over his head],⁶ whereas Beth Hillel said: He need not pass through a razor [over his head]. And R. Abina said: When Beth Shammai say: It is necessary, [they mean] he requires to [do so] but he has no remedy.⁷ He thus contradicts R. Pedath, for R. Pedath said: Beth Shammai and R. Eleazar say one and the same thing. 'Beth Shammai', as we have stated above, and 'R. Eleazar' as we have learnt.⁸ If he⁹ have no thumb or toe, he⁹ can never obtain purity. R. Eleazar said: One should place it on the place due, and thereby the duty is done. R. Simeon said: If he placed it on [the thumb and toe of] the right, he has done his duty.

Our Rabbis taught: And the priest shall take [receive] of the blood of the guilt-offering¹⁰ — one might have assumed that is to be done with a vessel, therefore the text reads: 'And he shall put it' i.e., just as the 'putting' must be done by the priest himself, so must the 'taking' be by the priest himself. One might have assumed the same applied to the blood which is to be used for [sprinkling upon] the altar, therefore the text reads: For as the sin-offering . . . so is the guilt-offering.¹¹ Just as a vessel is necessary [for receiving the blood of a] sin-offering,¹² so is a vessel necessary [for the blood of] the guilt-offering. You thus find yourself stating that in the case of the guilt-offering of the leper two priests receive the blood thereof, one in his hand,¹³ the other in a vessel.¹⁴ The first who receives it in the vessel proceeds to the altar, whereas the other who receives it in his hand goes to the leper.

We have learnt there: All of them¹⁵ render the garments levitically impure and are to be burnt in the place where the ashes are deposited. This is the opinion of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon. The Sages say: They do not render the garments ritually unclean and they are not to be burnt in the place where the ashes are deposited, except the last one because with that he completed the atonement. — Raba asked the following question of R. Nahman: How many he-goats is he to send away?¹⁶ — He answered: Should he perhaps send his flock away?¹⁷ — He said to him:

- (1) [I.e., he offered it in the name of some other sacrifice. In such a case the sacrifice is valid but is not accounted to the owner in fulfillment of his duty and the owner must consequently bring anew the offering which was due from him.]
- (2) [R. Meir, who holds that part of a service that has not been completed is of no account, would similarly regard this incomplete guilt-offering as not offered and would require another guilt-offering; whereas R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, who do not disregard that part of the service which had been performed, would hold that he cannot bring a new guilt-offering as Scripture explicitly states 'One lamb for a guilt offering' (Lev. XIV, 12) and not two.]
- (3) Lev. XIV, 12: 'And offer it as a guilt-offering', i.e., only the one which has been waved together with the oil. This unequivocal statement of the Torah R. Meir too must accept, hence the interpretation just offered is to be rejected.
- (4) V. Num. XV, 1ff.
- (5) I.e., the leper becomes pure, normal again, so that he may eat holy things (sacrificial meat). This shews that there is a view that he can bring a new guilt-offering, which supports R. Johanan.
- (6) Num. VI, 5: All the days of his vow of the Naziriteship there shall no razor come upon his head, until the days be fulfilled, i.e., but when the days are fulfilled he shall have his hair cut.
- (7) This bald-pate cannot do so. Yet it is stated 'he requires'.
- (8) Naz. 46b.
- (9) The leper.
- (10) Lev. XIV, 14.
- (11) Ibid. XIV, 13.
- (12) V. Zeb. 97b.
- (13) For sprinkling on the leper himself.
- (14) For the sprinkling on the altar.
- (15) All the bullocks and he-goats mentioned in our Mishnah, in connection with blood poured away before the completion of the individual atonement or the whole service in question, and for which substitutes are obligatory, must be burnt outside the three camps (that of the priests, the Levites, and of Israel) and they render the garments of those occupied with burning impure. Lev. XVI, 27-28.
- (16) [Where, for instance, the blood of the he-goat was poured away after the sprinklings in the Holy of Holies in which case he has to bring anew two goats and cast lots afresh.]
- (17) Obviously only one he-goat-to-be-sent-away is dealt with in Lev. XVI.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 62a

Does he not burn¹ his flock? — How compare these two? With regard to this, it is written 'it',² touching the other it is not written 'it'.

It was stated: R. Papi said in the name of Raba: He sends away the first. — R. Shimi said in the name of Raba: He sends away the last. It is quite right according to R. Shimi in the name of Raba, who said he sends the last away: that is because with him he completes the atonement, but what is the view of R. Papi in the name of Raba? — He holds with R. Jose who says: The commandment is properly fulfilled with the first one. Which view of R. Jose is referred to here? Shall I say it is R. Jose's view in the case of the baskets — for we learned: There were three baskets, each of three se'ahs, in which they took up terumah out of the [shekel] chamber³ and on them were inscribed [the letters] Alef, Beth, Gimel. And it was taught: R. Jose said: Why were Alef, Beth, Gimel inscribed upon them? So that one may know which of them was taken up first [out of the shekel chamber], so as to use it first, for the commandment properly applies to the first! But perhaps it is because at the time when the first is to be used, the others are not ready for use?⁴ Rather [do we refer to the view of] R. Jose touching the paschal sacrifice, for it has been taught:⁵ If one set aside his passover sacrifice and it was lost [went astray] and he set aside another one in his place and then the first was found again, so that both are before him, then he may offer up whichever he wants. This is the view of the Sages. R. Jose says: The commandment attaches properly to the first, but if the second be better than [the first] then he may offer it.

CHAPTER VI

MISHNAH. THE TWO HE-GOATS OF THE DAY OF ATONEMENT ARE REQUIRED TO BE ALIKE IN APPEARANCE, IN SIZE, IN VALUE, TO HAVE BEEN BOUGHT AT THE SAME TIME. BUT EVEN IF THEY ARE NOT ALIKE THEY ARE VALID. IF ONE WAS BOUGHT ONE DAY AND THE OTHER THE FOLLOWING DAY, THEY ARE VALID. IF ONE OF THEM DIED BEFORE THE LOT WAS CAST ANOTHER ONE IS BOUGHT FOR THE SECOND ONE. BUT [IF IT DIED] AFTER THE LOT WAS CAST ANOTHER PAIR MUST BE BOUGHT AND THE LOTS CAST FOR THEM OVER AGAIN. AND IF THE ONE THAT WAS CAST FOR THE LORD DIED, HE [THE HIGH PRIEST] SHOULD SAY: LET THIS ON WHICH THE LOT FOR THE LORD HAS FALLEN STAND IN ITS STEAD. AND IF THE ONE THAT WAS CAST FOR AZAZEL DIED HE SHOULD SAY: 'LET THIS ON WHICH THE LOT FOR AZAZEL HAS FALLEN STAND IN ITS STEAD. THE OTHER ONE IS LEFT TO PASTURE UNTIL IT BECOMES BLEMISHED WHEN IT IS TO BE SOLD AND ITS VALUE GOES TO THE TEMPLE FUND. FOR THE SIN-OFFERING OF THE CONGREGATION MUST NOT BE LEFT TO DIE.⁶ R. JUDAH SAYS: IT IS LEFT TO DIE. FURTHERMORE SAID R. JUDAH: IF THE BLOOD WAS POURED AWAY, THE GOAT-TO-BE-SENT-AWAY WAS LEFT TO DIE. IF THE GOAT-TO-BE-SENT-AWAY DIED THE BLOOD IS POURED AWAY.

(4) When one basketful is taken up first one would obviously use that first, but the goat of the first pair could not be sent away before all the sprinklings of blood had been made, when the second is as fitting to be sent away as the first.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 62b

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 62b

Our Rabbis taught: And he shall take. . . two he-goats,¹ now the minimum of he-goats is two; why then is 'two' mentioned? To indicate that the two be alike. Whence do we know that even if the two are not alike they are valid? Therefore the text reads: 'He-goat', 'he-goat',² which is inclusive [widens the scope]. Now the reason, then, is only that the Divine Law expressly includes it, but had the Divine Law not done so, one would have assumed that they are invalid. Whence do we derive this indispensability? — You might have thought that we say: 'Two' is written three times.³ But now that the Divine Law has twice written 'he-goat' what is the purpose of 'two' written three times? — One applies to appearance, the other to size, the third to value. It has been similarly taught in connection with the lambs of the leper: And he shall take two lambs.⁴ Now the minimum of lambs is two, then why does the text say: 'Two'? To indicate that the two be alike. Whence do we know that even if the two be not alike, they are valid? Therefore the text reads: 'Lamb', 'lamb',⁵ which is inclusive [widens the scope]. Now the reason is only that the Divine Law expressly includes it, but had the Divine Law not done so, one would have assumed that they are invalid, whence do we assume this indispensability? — You might have thought we say: It is written: [This] shall be [the law].⁶ But now that the Divine Law has said: 'Lamb', 'lamb', what purpose serves 'shall be'? — That refers to the rest of the status of the leper.⁷

It was similarly taught in connection with the [birds of] the leper: Birds;⁸ now the minimum of birds is two. Why then is 'two' mentioned? To indicate that the two be alike. Whence do we know that even if they be not alike, they are valid? Therefore the text reads: 'Birds', 'birds',⁹ which is inclusive. Now the reason then is that the Divine Law expressly includes it, but had the Divine Law not included it, one would have assumed that they are invalid. Whence do we derive this indispensability? — You might have thought that we say that it is written 'shall be'. But now that the Divine Law through 'birds', ['birds'] includes it, what purpose serves 'shall be'? — Because of the rest of the status of the leper.

If so, in the case of the daily burnt-offerings let us make a similar deduction: 'Lambs', 'lambs',¹⁰ since the minimum of lambs is two, why does the text read: 'Two'? To indicate that they shall be alike. And whence do we know that even if they are not alike they are valid? Therefore the text reads: 'Lamb', 'lamb',¹¹ which is inclusive.¹² But as far as proper performance of the precept is concerned is it indeed required¹³ [that the lambs shall be alike]? — Here we need it for what has been taught: Two for the day¹⁰ i.e., against the day.¹⁴ You say: Against the day, but perhaps it really means, the daily duty? When it says: The one lamb shalt thou offer in the morning, and the other lamb shalt thou offer at even,¹¹ behold the daily duty is already stated, hence how do I apply the words: 'Two for the day'? I.e., against the day. How is that? The continual morning offering was being slain on the north-western corner, on the second ring,¹⁵ whereas that of the even was slain on the north-eastern corner on the second ring.¹⁵ But the additional sacrifices of the Sabbath certainly must be alike.¹⁶

Our Rabbis taught: If he [the high priest] slew two he-goats of the Day of Atonement outside [the Temple court] before the lots were cast, then he is guilty in respect of both; if, however, after the lot was cast, then he is guilty¹⁷ in respect of the one cast 'for the Lord', but free in respect of the one cast 'for Azazel'.¹⁸ If before he has cast the lots, he is guilty in respect of both of them. But what [sacrifice] are they fit for?¹⁹ — Said R. Hisda: Since [each] is fit to be offered up as the he-goat [the rites of which are] performed without.²⁰ But why is it impossible to offer it up as the he-goat [of which rites are] performed within [the Holy of Holies]? presumably because it still lacks the casting of the lot? But then it ought to be unfit to be used as the he-goat [of which rites are performed] without, for the reason that it still lacks the other ministrations of the Day?²¹ — R. Hisda holds: One may not call the absence of any functions due on the same day a lack of time.²²

Said Rabina: Now that R. Hisda said that the absence of the casting of the lot has the same significance as the absence of a [direct] action,²³ then in view of what Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: 'Peace-offerings which have been slain before the doors of the Temple have been opened are invalid, as it is said: And he shall slay it at the gate of the tent of meeting,²⁴ i.e., at the time when it is open, but not when it is closed';

 - (3) Lev. XVI, 5, 7, 8 and thus indicates indispensability.
 - (4) Ibid. XIV, 10.
 - (5) Ibid. 12, 13.
 - (6) Ibid. 2. 'Shall be' implies precise instructions from which there may be no deviation.
 - (7) I.e., to the other regulations relating to the purification of the leper.

 - (9) Ibid. 5, 6.
 - (10) Num, XXVIII, 3.
 - (11) Ibid. 4.
 - (12) It is inclusive, i.e., as long as it is a lamb, even if not exactly like the other, it is included in the terms of the commandment.
 - (13) This, however, is nowhere stated.
 - (14) I.e., the morning sacrifice is to be offered up against (opposite) the sun-rise, viz., on the western side of the altar, and the evening sacrifice on the opposite, namely, the eastern side (R. Han.).
 - (15) To the north of the altar were rings, twenty four, six rows of four each, at which they slaughtered the animal offerings. (V. Mid. III, 5.). On these rings the animals were securely tied before slaying. When the morning sacrifice was slain on the western side the light of the sun poured freely in, just as in the eve, when the sacrifice was slain on the eastern side, the rays of the sinking sun were unimpeded. Always in the direction opposite to the light of the day. Tosaf. suggests that the second ring rather than the first was used to prevent the animal from polluting the altar with excrements.
 - (16) [Since in connection with this only 'two lambs' is stated (V. Num. XXVIII, 9) but not the inclusive 'one lamb'. V, Rashi and R. Han.]
 - (17) On the score of Lev. XVI, 3ff:
 - (18) The he-goat destined for Azazel would in any case be killed outside the Sanctuary hence nothing illegitimate took place, no change of place.
 - (19) That he should be liable for slaughtering them outside the Temple court.
 - (20) I.e., in the Sanctuary proper, without the Holy of Holies. The additional sacrifice for the Day of Atonement, a he-goat, is offered up, its blood sprinkled without (Num. XXIX, 11).
 - (21) i.e., the sprinkling of the blood of the bullock and he-goat and the taking and offering of the handfuls of incense, all of which must take place before the additional sacrifice is offered up.
 - (22) The absence of the ministrations of the day mentioned in n. 3 does not affect the validity of the he-goat offered as an additional offering, as these do not constitute a defect in the he-goat itself, but are absent because the time for them had not yet arrived. Whatsoever is bound to come within the day, may not be considered wanting on that day. [This distinguishes it from the casting of lots, the absence of which constitutes a lack in the very he-goat which consequently renders it unfit for use within].
 - (23) In the offering itself, rendering it unfit for Temple use.
 - (24) Lev. III, 2.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 63a

if someone had slain them outside before the doors of the Temple had been open, he would be free, because the lack of opening is like the lack of a [direct] action.¹ But does R. Hisda adopt the principle of 'since'?² Surely R. Hisda said: If someone had slaughtered the Passover sacrifice outside on any of the other³ days of the year, then, if he did it in its own name, he is free, but if he did it not in its own name, he is culpable.⁴ The reason [that he is culpable] lies in his having slaughtered it not in its own name. But if he had slaughtered it without any indication it is [as if — slaughtered] in its name, and he would be free? Why that? Let us say: Since it would be fit for a sacrifice not in its own name, within the Temple⁵ [he should be liable]? Now, how compare? There a removal is necessary,⁶ whereas this needs no such removal. Rabbah b. Shimi taught these [two statements of R. Hisda] as [emanating] from Rabbah. He then raises a difficulty from [the one view of] Rabbah against [the other given by] Rabbah; but answers [the difficulty] as we have answered. When R. Dimi [came from Palestine] he said in the name of R. Jeremiah, who said it in the name of R. Johanan: If one slaughtered a Paschal sacrifice outside on any of the other days of the year, whether in its name or not in its name, he is exempt. Said R. Dimi: I have reported this statement in the presence of R. Jeremiah [and queried]: It is all correct [in the case where it was slaughtered] in its name, since it is not fit [for the Temple], but [where it was] not in its name [why should it be exempt]? Surely it would be fit as a sacrifice not in its own name within the Temple? And he said this [in reply]: The removal [of the name of a sacrifice] outside [the Temple] is not deemed [an effective] removal.⁷ — When Rabin came [from Palestine], [he said that] R. Jeremiah said in the name of R. Johanan: If one had slain a Passover sacrifice outside on any of the other days of the year, whether in its own name or not in its own name, he is culpable. Even ‘in its own name’? But have we not learnt: A sacrifice whose time has not yet come [may be such] either because of itself or because of its owner. Which is a sacrifice whose time has not yet come because of its owner? If the owner, either man or woman, was afflicted with gonorrhoea, or was a woman after child-birth or a leper and had offered up their sin-offering or their guilt-offering outside [before the appointed time], they are free.⁸ But if they offered up their whole-offerings or their peace-offerings outside, they are culpable.⁹ And R. Hilkiyah b. Tobi said: They did not teach thus only if they were offered up in their own name, but if they were not offered up in their own name, they were not culpable.¹⁰ Now at any rate, then, when offered up in their own name, the owners are culpable. But why that? Let us say, Since they are fit to be offered up in their own name within [they should be culpable]? — How compare? There a removal is necessary, but here Passover sacrifice during the rest of the days of the year is a peace-offering.¹¹

R. Ashi taught:¹² the owner is culpable, as we had stated above. R. Jeremiah of Difti taught he is not culpable, because he is of the opinion that the Passover sacrifice during the rest of the days of the year requires a removal,¹³ and the removal outside [the Temple] is not [effective]. Therein he disputes with R. Hilkiyah b. Tobi.¹⁴

The Master said: ‘When the lot has been cast, he is culpable in respect of the one [he-goat] cast ‘for the Lord’, and free with respect to the one cast ‘for Azazel’. Our Rabbis taught: What man soever there be of the house of Israel that killeth an ox or lamb, or goat, in the camp, or that killeth it without the camp, and hath not brought it unto the entrance of the tent of meeting to present it as an offering unto the Lord.’¹⁵

(1) So that the offerings were not fit for Temple use, and thus involve no guilt when offered outside.

(2) הוּאֵיל either derived from יַעַל — עַל and אֵל interchange frequently — thus: it helps — and followed by — ‘because’ since; or אֵל + הָאֵל ‘look now, if’, i.e., once this is so, that also may be granted; or from the Biblical אֵל ‘accepted, agreed that this is so, that also ought to be accepted’, implying that because something is permitted in one case, the permission should be extended to all analogous cases.

(3) Besides the eve of Passover, the fourteenth of Nisan, which is the proper date for this sacrifice.

(4) Because in this case it is a peace-offering, which should have been slain within the Temple.

(5) It could be used within as a peace-offering.

(6) [It could not be used within as a peace-offering unless it had been expressly removed at the time of slaughtering from its original purpose as Passover sacrifice, and consequently as long as no such removal had been made it cannot be said to be fit for use within the Temple.] The he-goat offered within as well as the one without are sin-offerings in either situation.

(7) [Although a paschal lamb on any other days in the year can be removed from its original purpose and offered as a peace-offering, such a removal is effective only when it is offered within the Temple, but where it is offered outside, the paschal lamb retains its original name and purpose and consequently involves no guilt for having been slaughtered outside.]

(8) V. Lev. XV, 14, 29; XII, 6, XIV, 10.

(9) In the case of sin-offerings or guilt-offerings, which were offered up outside before they were due, no culpability is involved, because they are not acceptable within before their time has come, neither as obligatory nor as freewill-offerings. But burnt-offerings or/and peace-offerings, which are accepted even when not obligatory, are fit to be offered up within even before the appointed time, hence they involve culpability when offered up without. V. Zeb. 112b.

(10) This exemption applies only when the guilt-offering was offered up in its own name outside, in which case being before its appointed time it would be unfit for the Temple. But if it was offered up for another purpose than that originally designated, e.g., for a burnt — or peace-offering, where it would be acceptable within at any time, there is culpability when offered up without.

(11) Without the need of an express removal from its original purpose.

(12) With reference to the statement reported by Rabin.

(13) Before it can be offered as a peace-offering.

(14) Who holds that a removal outside the Temple is an effective removal.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 63b

From [the word] ‘offering’ I might have assumed that even offerings for the temple repair [are included], which are also called ‘offerings’, in accord with the Scriptural words: And we have brought the Lord's offering,¹ therefore the text reads: ‘And hath not brought it unto the entrance of the tent of meeting’, i.e., whatsoever is fit to be brought to the tent of meeting, if offered up outside, involves culpability; but whatsoever is fit to be brought to the entrance of the tent of meeting, if offered up outside, does not involve culpability. Thus I would exclude only those which are not fit to be offered up at the entrance of the tent of meeting, but I would not exclude [the cow for the sin-offering² and] the he-goat-to-be-sent-away, which are fit to be brought to the entrance of the tent of meeting, therefore the text reads: ‘Unto the Lord’ i.e., only those assigned to the Lord, to the exclusion of such as are not assigned to the Lord.

But do the words ‘Unto the Lord’ imply exclusion? I shall raise a contradiction: It may be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the Lord,³ i.e., the fire-offerings.⁴ Whence do we know that one may not dedicate it before its time has come?⁵ Therefore the text reads: ‘As an offering’. ‘Unto the Lord’, includes the he-goat-to-be-sent-away!⁶ Said Raba: There [the meaning is determined] by the context, and here too [its meaning is determined] by the context: There ‘Unto the entrance implies inclusion, therefore ‘Unto the Lord’ implies exclusion; here ‘An offering made by fire’ implies exclusion, hence ‘Unto the Lord’ has inclusive⁷ meaning. Now the only reason then is that the Divine Law included it, but if it had not done so I would have assumed that the he-goat-to-be-sent-away could be dedicated before its time.⁸ But⁹ the lot does not determine except such [an animal] as is fit ‘for the Lord’?¹⁰ — Said R. Joseph: This is in accord with Hanan the Egyptian, for it was taught:¹¹ Hanan the Egyptian says: Even if the blood is in the cup, may he bring its mate and pair them.¹² But admitted that Hanan does not accept the opinion concerning ‘rejection’¹³ you surely did not hear that Hanan does not accept the opinion as to the necessity of casting the lots? Perhaps he [the high priest] would have to bring [two] and cast lots [afresh]?¹⁴ — Rather, said R. Joseph, this [Baraita]¹⁵ is in accord with R. Simeon, for it was taught: If one of them died, he brings another one without casting lots, this is the view of R. Simeon! Rabina said: The reference [in the Baraita] is to a case in which one of them became blemished and was redeemed with another one.¹⁶ But whence will you say that a blemish renders it [the scapegoat] invalid? As it was taught: Nor make an offering by fire of them,¹⁷ this refers to the pieces of fat. From here I could infer only as to all the pieces. Whence do we know that it applies also to parts thereof? Therefore the text reads: ‘Of them’. ‘The altar’¹⁷ i.e., the sprinkling of the blood. Unto the Lord,¹⁷ that includes the he-goat-to-be-sent-away.

Now it was necessary [for the Scripture] to write [disqualifying a scapegoat], the blemished animal and one whose time has not yet come. For if the Divine Law had written only about the animal whose time has not yet come, I would have assumed there [it is disqualified] applies because its time has not yet come, but in the case of one blemished whose time had come, I might have assumed that [the disqualification does] not [apply]. And if the Divine Law had written about the blemished animal alone, I might have assumed the reason [for its being disqualified] there lies in repulsiveness, but with the animal whose time has not yet come, and where there is no repulsive feature, one might have assumed [the law] does [not] apply, hence it was necessary [to write about both].

(1) Num. XXXI, 50.

(2) The red heifer. Tosaf. supports Rashi's elimination of this reference to the red heifer, because the latter was not brought to the entrance of the tent of meeting, hence is logically excluded from the present discussion.

(3) Lev. XXII, 27.

(4) Only from the eighth day are they acceptable as offerings.

(5) I.e., that an offering cannot be dedicated before the eighth day.

(6) This shows that 'Unto the Lord' implies inclusion.

(7) The he-goat-to-be-sent-away is not 'for the Lord', but fit to be brought unto the entrance of the tent of meeting. So 'Unto the Lord' excludes whatsoever is not assigned for the Lord. In the other passage 'An offering made by fire' excludes, of course, the goat, which is to be hurled from the precipice, whereas 'Unto the Lord' is complementarily inclusive, hence the goat must not be offered up before it is eight days.

(8) I.e., before it is eight days old.

(9) V. Tem.6b.

(10) And that implies a minimum age, hence invalidation before its time.

(11) Zeb. 34b.

(12) Even if the blood of the he-goat to be sprinkled up within is in the cup, when the he goat-to-be-sent-away dies, no new casting of the lots is necessary according to Hanan, but, as is assumed at present, one may simply bring another he-goat from outside and pair it and appoint it for Azazel even without lots. Thus we see that Hanan does not hold the principle that the lot does not determine etc.; and consequently the he-goat-to-be-sent-away need not necessarily have reached its proper time hence a scriptural verse is necessary to teach that it must do so.

(13) He does not accept the view of R. Judah in our Mishnah that the scapegoat is to be rejected as unfit on account of the mishap to the other.

(14) Leaving the one, upon whom the lot 'for the Lord' now falls, to pasture until it acquires a blemish, whilst obtaining atonement through the blood of the first. At any rate, however, casting the lots is necessary, hence one whose time had not yet come would be invalidated, because the lot determines only what is 'fit for the Lord', i.e. whose time has come.

(15) Which requires a special text to teach that the he-goat-to-be-sent-away must be of minimum age.

(16) Where the he-goat-to-be-sent-away suddenly became blemished, its successor obtained by means of redemption needs no lot to determine its purpose, and, since no list was required, there is no implied obligation as to proper minimum age.

(17) With reference to blemished animals. Lev. XXII, 22.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 64a

Raba said: [It¹ was necessary] for the case that he² had a sick person in the house, for whom he killed the mother-animal on the Day of Atonement.³ But is it forbidden in such a case?⁴ Does not the Divine Law say: Ye shall not kill it⁵ and this is not killing?⁶ — In the West [Palestine] they said: Hurling it down from the [mountain] peak, that is its killing.

IF THAT 'FOR THE LORD' DIED, etc.: Rab said: The second of the first pair is to be offered up, the second of the second pair should be left to pasture.⁷ - R. Johanan said: The second of the first pair should be left to pasture, the second pair should be offered up. In what principle do they differ? — Rab holds: Living animals⁸ are not rejected [forever], whereas R. Johanan holds: Living animals are rejected [forever]. What is the reason for Rab's view? He infers it from those whose time has not yet come: An animal whose time has not yet come, although it is as yet unfit, when it later becomes fit again, will be quite in order. Thus also here. How can this be compared? There⁹ it was never fit at all. Here it was once fit and then rejected? — Rather is this the reason of Rab's view: He infers it from an animal afflicted with a passing blemish: An animal afflicted with a passing blemish surely although now unfit, yet when it is fit again, is quite in order. Thus also here. But whence do we know if touching the former? Because it is written: Because their corruption is in them, there is a blemish in them¹⁰ i.e., only as long as a blemish is in them are they not acceptable, but when their blemish passes they are acceptable. And R. Johanan? — The Divine Law stated 'in them'¹⁰ i.e., only these are acceptable after the blemish has passed, but all other animals rejected [through temporary unfitness] once they have been rejected, stay rejected. And Rab? — The words 'in them' signify that only as long as they are in their natural form are they not acceptable, but as soon as they are mixed up with others, they are acceptable; as we have learnt,¹¹ if the members of unblemished [whole-offerings] were mixed up with the members of blemished [animals], R. Eliezer says: If the head of one of them had been offered,¹² the heads of all may be offered; if the legs of one of them had been offered, the legs of all may be offered. The Sages, however, say: Even if all the members with exception of one have been offered, this one must go forth to the place of burning. And the other one [R. Johanan]? He infers that from [the fact that instead of] 'bam' [is written] 'bahem'.¹³ — And the other one [Rab]? — He does not expound from 'bahem' instead of 'bam'. But according to Rab, granted that animals cannot be rejected for ever, if he wishes let him offer this, and if he wishes let him offer the other?¹⁴ — Raba said: Rab holds to the view of R. Jose, who said: The command attaches properly to the first. — Which [view of] R. Jose are you referring to? Shall I say, You say [the view of] R. Jose concerning the baskets, for we have been taught:¹⁵ There were three baskets each of three se'ahs,¹⁶ in which they took up terumah out of the shekel-chamber, and on each of them was inscribed: Alef, Beth, Gimel. And we have been taught: R. Jose said: Why is Alef, Beth, Gimel inscribed upon them? So that one may know out of which of them the terumah was taken up [out of the shekel-chamber] first, to use it first, for the command properly applies to the first! — But perhaps it is different there because at the time when the first is to be used, the others are not ready for use yet?¹⁷ — Rather is it R. Jose['s view] concerning the Passover sacrifice, for it was taught: If someone has separated his Passover sacrifice and it is lost, and he thereupon puts aside another one in its place, and afterwards the first one is found again, so that both are standing [ready to be used], then he can offer up whichever he prefers; this is the view of the Sages. R. Jose holds the commandment attaches properly to the first,¹⁸

(1) The verse disqualifying a scapegoat that has not reached its proper time.

(2) Who was the purveyor to the community of these animals.

(3) In case of a dangerously ill person the slaying of an animal for food or remedial purpose is permitted. Raba suggests the case that the purveyor of the he-goat had, on the Day of Atonement, slain its mother for the patient. But in view of the prohibition (Lev. XXII, 28:) Whether it be cow or ewe, ye shall not kill it and its young both in one day, the he-goat would thus become an animal that was wanting in time all the Day of Atonement, after the lot had been cast.

(4) To use the young as scapegoat.

(5) Lev. XXII, 28.

(6) The prohibition is now interpreted to refer to the technical ritual slaying, whereas the scapegoat is being hurled down the precipice.

(7) Until it acquires a blemish.

(8) If they are temporarily invalidated, they can still be used by means of the substitution of another animal as pair.

(9) Because it was wanting in time and thus was never rejected.

(10) Lev. XXII, 25.

(11) Zeb. 77b.

(12) Before the confusion of the other members with the members of the whole-offerings had been noticed.

(13) From the fact that the Divine Law used the longer word 'bahem' instead of the shorter 'bam', which has the identical meaning, this inference is attempted. The rival view ignores this variation as not intended for additional inferences.

(14) Whereas the law here is stated to require only the first.

(15) V. supra 59b and notes.

(16) I.e., 144 eggs.

(17) But here although the lots had been cast, the goat could not be slain until after the blood of the bullock had been sprinkled. In the interim the he-goat with it had died, two others were brought in, and when the time for slaying the goat had come, the latter was already in readiness.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 64b

but if the second one be very much better, he shall offer it up.

Raba said: Our Mishnah points to be in accord with Rab, whereas the Baraitha is in accord with R. Johanan. Our Mishnah is in accord with Rab for it reads: IF THE ONE THAT WAS CAST FOR THE LORD DIED, HE [THE HIGH PRIEST] SHOULD SAY: LET THIS ON WHICH THE LOT FOR THE LORD HAS FALLEN STAND IN ITS STEAD' [implying] that the other remains as it is.¹ The Baraitha is in accord with R. Johanan, for it reads: As to the second.² I do not know whether [it means] the second of the first pair, or the second of the second pair. But from the words 'shall be set alive'³ [I infer: only this one] but not one whose pair has died.⁴ How does that follow? — 'It shall now be set alive', [and] not the one that has been set [alive] before [but whose pair has died].

We learned: FURTHERMORE DOES R. JUDAH SAY: IF THE BLOOD WAS POURED AWAY, THE SCAPEGOAT IS LEFT TO DIE; IF THE SCAPEGOAT DIED, THE BLOOD IS POURED AWAY. Now that is quite right according to R. Johanan, who holds living animals are rejected [permanently], — therefore the scapegoat is left to die. But according to Rab, who holds that living animals are not rejected [permanently], why should the scapegoat be left to die? — Rab will answer you: What I say, I say in accordance with the view, not of R. Judah, but of the Sages.⁵ It is quite right according to Rab: Therein lies the difference between the Sages and R. Judah; but according to R. Johanan, wherein lies the difference?⁶ — Raba said: That is what we have said [above]: The Mishnah points to be in accord with Rab.

We learned: FOR A COMMUNITY SIN-OFFERING IS NOT LEFT TO DIE. This [implies] that one of an individual, in such a case, would be left to die. Now that will be right according to R. Johanan,⁷ following R. Abba in the name of Rab, for R. Abba said In the name of Rab:

(1) In the state of holiness, without being rejected.

(2) The second mentioned in the Mishnah, that it is left to pasture.

(3) Lev. XVI, 10. One that 'shall be set alive', not one which had been set alive again, a second time.

(4) Hence the second in the Mishnah must refer to the second of the first pair.

(5) [Who, as is to be inferred from the words of R. Judah, held that the second in the first pair is to be offered, because in their view living animals are not rejected permanently].

(6) R. Johanan holds that the Sages insist that the second of the first pair must not be offered. Wherein then does R. Judah, in his additional remark ('Furthermore') differ from the Sages.

(7) Who holds that the second of the first pair is left to pasture.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 65a

All agree that if he had obtained atonement through [the animal that] had not been lost, [the animal that] had been lost must be left to die;¹ but according to Rab it would be as if someone has set aside two sin-offerings as a guarantee [that one of them should be available if the other be lost],² and R. Oshaia said: If someone had set aside two sinofferings for the purpose of guarantee, he gains atonement through one of them and leaves the other to pasture? — Since Raba said that Rab followed the view of R. Jose,³ who holds the commandment properly attached to the first, it is as if it⁴ had from the very beginning been set aside [in substitution] for the one that was lost. We learned: R. JUDAH SAYS: IT SHALL BE LEFT TO DIE. It is quite right in the view of R. Johanan who said that the second of the first pair must be left to pasture [that is, according to the Rabbis]⁵ and [it is this one which] according to R. Judah be left to die,⁶ so that he obtains atonement through the second one of the second pair; but if the view of Rab who said that the second of the second pair must be left to pasture, and [it is this one which] according to R. Judah must be left to die, then according to R. Judah⁷ through which can he obtain atonement? — Do you understand that R. Judah refers to the second of the second pair? R. Judah refers to the second of the first pair.⁸ Others framed the [above] question [against Rab]⁹ in the following manner: Furthermore did R. Judah say: If the blood was poured away, the scapegoat is left to die; if the scapegoat died the blood is poured away.

Now it is in order according to Rab: In the first part [of the Mishnah] they are disputing about the sin-offering of the community, and in the latter part about [the rejection of] living animals,¹⁰ but according to R. Johanan: What does 'Furthermore signify?'¹¹ — This difficulty remains.¹²

FURTHERMORE SAID R. JUDAH: IF THE BLOOD WAS POURED AWAY, THE SCAPEGOAT IS LEFT TO DIE. It is quite right that when the blood was poured away the scapegoat must die, because the command with it had not been fulfilled, but when the scapegoat died, why should the blood be poured away; surely the commandment therewith had been fulfilled? — The School of R. Jannai said: Scripture said: [The goat] shall be set alive before the Lord, to make atonement,¹³ i.e., how long must he stay alive? Until the time that his fellow's blood is sprinkled.

We have learnt elsewhere: If the inhabitants of a town sent their shekels¹⁴ and they were stolen or lost, then, if terumah¹⁵ has been taken up already, they¹⁶ swear an oath before the Temple treasurers; and if not they swear an oath before the people of the town; and the people of the town must pay the shekels anew. If they were found again or the thieves restored them, then both are taken as shekels¹⁷ and they do not count as prepayment for the dues of the next year. R. Judah says: They count for the next year.¹⁸ What is the reason of R. Judah's view? — Raba said: R. Judah holds that obligatory offerings of one year may be brought up in the following year. Abaye raised the following objection against him:¹⁹ If the bullock or the he-goat of the Day of Atonement were lost and he had set aside others in their place, also, if the goats offered up for idolatry [were lost] and others were set aside for them, then they must all be left to die, this is the opinion of R. Judah. R. Eliezer and R. Simeon hold: They shall be left to pasture until they become blemished, when they should be sold and the money realized for them should go for freewill-offerings, for the sin-offerings of the community must not be left to die.²⁰ — He [Raba] answered:

(1) [If one had set aside an animal as sin-offering and the animal got lost, and after setting aside another in its stead, the lost animal was found, then according to Rabbi he obtains atonement with whichever he chooses and the other is left to die. The Sages, however, hold that it is left to pasture, as the law which requires that a sin-offering, the owner of which has obtained atonement by another, is to be left to die applies only if it was found after the atonement rites had been performed, but not if found before the atonement (V. Tem. 23a). Now in connection with this R. Abba said that there is no disagreement between Rabbi and the Sages where the atonement was obtained through the one which had not been lost, i.e., through the second, all agreeing in such a case that the first one is left to die. (In accordance with the established old law that if a sin-offering had been lost and the owner obtained atonement through another, when it is found again it is left to die). The dispute concerns a case where atonement was obtained through the first, after it had been lost and found again, Rabbi holding that what is set aside in substitution for that which had been lost is subject to the same law as the lost animal itself and hence must be left to die, whereas the Sages do not share the view. Now in our

Mishnah on the view of R. Johanan, who holds that the second of the first pair is left to pasture, it rightly gives as reason 'For no community sin-offering is left to die'; for had it been of an individual it would be left to die, since the atonement is being obtained through the one which had suffered no mishap, and had never been rejected.]

(2) [According to Rab who rules that the atonement is being obtained through the second of the first pair which had been rejected, how could the Mishnah state by implication that if it had been the sin-offering of an individual it would under similar circumstances be left to die? Not only would this not be the case according to the Sages, who rule that whatever is set aside in substitution for that which had been lost is not subject to the same law as the lost animal itself (v. previous note), seeing that he has obtained atonement through the one that had been rejected; but even according to Rabbi (v. ibid) it would not have to be left to die, since the second of the second pair has never been set aside as substitution for the one that had been lost, seeing that its predecessor is still alive. It was merely set aside as a companion to the other which had to be brought in place of the one (the first goat cast for Azazel) that had died. But since living animals cannot be permanently rejected, he should in such a case be able to offer either, just as in the case where one sets aside two offerings as a guarantee for each other.]

(3) V. supra 64a.

(4) [I.e., the second of the second pair, and hence but for the fact that it was a public sacrifice it would have been left to die.]

(5) The authority of the first view reported anonymously in the Mishnah.

(6) [It is now assumed that R. Judah's rule that it must be left to die has reference to the one which, according to the Rabbis, is left to pasture, since R. Judah perforce is of the opinion that living animals are permanently rejected as has been established, supra 64b.]

(7) [He surely cannot obtain atonement by means of the first, seeing that he holds that living animals are permanently rejected.]

(8) [For in the view of Rab, R. Judah differs from the Rabbis also on the question of the fitness of the second of the first pair for sacrifice; whilst the Rabbis hold that it is offered, R. Judah holds that it is left to die.]

(9) Raised supra 64b.

(10) The Rabbis holding that they are not permanently rejected, hence atonement is obtained through the second of the first pair, whereas R. Judah (as has just been explained) holds that the second in the first pair is left to die and the second in the second pair is offered up.

(11) The Rabbis, too, agree that the second in the first pair remains rejected.

(12) Even as stated supra 64b that the Mishnah is in support of Rab.

(13) Lev. XVI, 10.

(14) Through messengers to Jerusalem to pay their Temple dues.

(15) Lit., 'heave-offering', here denoting the contribution of Shekels taken up at stated times from out of the shekel-chamber in the Temple from which public sacrifices were bought, v. Shek. III, 1ff

(16) The messengers take the oath of bailees in accord with Ex. XXII, 10.

(17) For the current year.

(18) For notes v. Shek., Sonc. ed., II, 1.

(19) Shebu. 11a.

(20) Hence we see that R. Judah does not permit the obligation of one year to be kept in order to be brought up the following year, otherwise he would not have ruled that this should be left to die, which contradicts the view just expressed.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 65b

You speak about community sacrifices? It is different with community sacrifices, even as R. Tabi said, in the name of R. Josiah. For R. Tabi said in the name of R. Josiah: Scripture said: This is the burnt-offering of every new moon throughout the months of the year.¹ The Torah indicates: Renew and bring Me an offering of the new terumah.² That will be right concerning the he-goat.³ But can it be said in the case of the bullock? Preventive measure attaches to the bullock because of the he-goat. And because of preventive measure shall they be left to die?⁴ And, furthermore, the statement of R. Tabi in the name of R. Josiah characterizes the action as merely a meritorious deed, for R. Judah said in the name of Samuel: It is a meritorious deed to offer the community sacrifices, which are due in Nisan, from the new terumah. If he had offered them from the old, he has fulfilled his duty, but has omitted a meritorious deed! — Rather, said R. Zeira: [The reason why they cannot be offered in the following year is] because the lot of one year cannot determine for the following year. But let us cast lots again? — There is the fear that people might say the lots do determine from one year for the next. That will be reasonable as far as the he-goat is concerned, but what can be said about the bullock? — The prohibition attaches to the bullock because of the he-goat. And because of a preventive measure shall they be left to die? — The Rabbis before Abaye said that to be a preventive measure on account of a sin-offering whose owner had died.⁵ That will be right in the case of the he-goat, but what of the case of the bullock? — The restriction in the case of the bullock derives from the he-goat. And because of a preventive measure shall they be left to die? — Rather is it a restriction because of a sin-offering whose year is past.⁶ Is that [but] a preventive measure? This is itself a sin-offering whose year is past.⁷ This is no difficulty, in accord with the view of Rabbi. For it was taught:⁸ A full year,⁹ one counts three hundred and sixty-five days according to the year of the sun, this is the view of Rabbi. The Sages say: One counts twelve months from day to day.

(1) Num. XXVIII, 14.

(2) V. R.H., Sonc. ed., p. 25, nn. 8 — 9.

(3) Which was provided from the funds of the shekel-chamber.

(4) It would seem sufficient that they be left to pasture.

(5) If the priest should die that year.

(6) I.e., the fear that by the next Day of Atonement it may be more than a year old. All the he-goats offered up as sin-offerings are invalidated after they have reached the age of one year.

(7) Obviously this sin-offering will be past one year this time next year.

(8) R. H. 6b.

(9) Lev. XXV, 30. The reference here is to the time (one year) during which the seller of a dwelling house in a walled city may redeem the property sold by cancellation of contract.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 66a

And if the year be a prolonged year, the advantage belongs to the seller.¹ That is right as far as the he-goat is concerned. But what can be said in the case of the bullock? — The preventive measure attaches to the bullock because of the he-goat. And because of a preventive measure shall he be left to die? And, furthermore, a sin-offering, whose [first] year is past, is left to pasture,² for Resh Lakish³ said: As to a sin-offering which has passed its year, we look upon it as if it were standing on the cemetery⁴ and it is left to pasture? — Rather, said Raba, is the restriction due to the fear of an offence,⁵ for it was taught:⁶ One may neither consecrate anything, nor vow any 'valuation',⁷ nor declare anything as devoted⁸ nowadays.⁹ And if one had consecrated or vowed a 'valuation', or declared anything as devoted, if an animal, it should be uprooted;¹⁰ if fruits, vessels or covers, one should let them rot; if money or metal vessels, they are to be taken to the Salt [Dead] Sea.¹¹ And what does 'uprooting' mean? Locking the door before it, so that it die of itself. What kind of offence [is here contemplated]? If an offence in connection with the offering up, that ought then to apply to other cases of pasturing animals also?¹² If an offence in connection with shearing or working it, then that ought to apply to other pasturing animals too? In truth the offence contemplated is one in connection with the offering-up, but with those which are not to be offered up¹³ one is not pre-occupied, whereas with this one, since it is to be offered up, he would be pre-occupied. Now as to the question itself whether we fear the possibility of an offence, Tannas are disputing. For it was taught in one [Baraitha]: A Paschal lamb which was not offered up on the first Passover may be offered up on the second,¹⁴ and if not offered up on the second, may be offered up in the following year. And another [Baraitha] taught: It must not be offered up. Is it not then that they dispute touching [the fear of] an offence? — No, all agree we are not apprehensive as to a possible offence; but here they are disputing in the matter at issue between Rabbi and the Sages,¹⁵ and there is no contradiction [between the two Baraithas]; the one is in accord with Rabbi, the other with the Rabbis [Sages].¹⁶ — But was it not taught: The same applies to the money?¹⁷ Hence rather infer from here that they are disputing in regard to the fear of the offence. — That inference is accepted.

MISHNAH. HE THEN CAME TO THE SCAPEGOAT AND LAID HIS TWO HANDS UPON IT AND HE MADE CONFESSION. AND THUS WOULD HE SAY: I BESEECH THEE, O LORD, THY PEOPLE THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL HAVE FAILED, COMMITTED INIQUITY AND TRANSGRESSED BEFORE THEE. I BESEECH THEE, O LORD, ATONE¹⁸ THE FAILURES, THE INIQUITIES AND THE TRANSGRESSIONS WHICH THY PEOPLE, THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL, HAVE FAILED, COMMITTED AND TRANSGRESSED BEFORE THEE, AS IT IS WRITTEN IN THE TORAH OF MOSES, THY SERVANT, TO SAY: FOR ON THIS DAY SHALL ATONEMENT BE MADE FOR YOU, TO CLEANSE YOU; FROM ALL YOUR SINS SHALL YE BE CLEAN BEFORE THE LORD. AND WHEN THE PRIESTS AND THE PEOPLE STANDING IN THE TEMPLE COURT HEARD THE FULLY-PRONOUNCED NAME COME FORTH FROM THE MOUTH OF THE HIGH PRIEST, THEY BENT THEIR KNEES, BOWED DOWN, FELL ON THEIR FACES AND CALLED OUT: BLESSED BE THE NAME OF HIS GLORIOUS KINGDOM 'FOR EVER AND EVER. THEY HANDED IT OVER TO HIM WHO WAS TO LEAD IT AWAY. ALL WERE PERMITTED TO LEAD IT AWAY,¹⁹ BUT THE PRIESTS MADE IT A DEFINITE RULE NOT TO PERMIT AN ISRAELITE²⁰ TO LEAD IT AWAY. R. JOSE SAID: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT ARSELA OF SEPPHORIS LED IT AWAY, ALTHOUGH HE WAS AN ISRAELITE. AND THEY MADE A CAUSEWAY FOR HIM BECAUSE OF THE BABYLONIANS, WHO WOULD PULL ITS HAIR, SHOUTING TO IT: 'TAKE²¹ AND GO FORTH, TAKE AND GO FORTH'.

GEMARA. But he did not say: 'The sons of Aaron, thy holy people'; which Tanna is of this opinion? — R. Jeremiah said: This is not in accord with R. Judah, for if it were in accord with R. Judah, surely he said: They, too, obtain atonement from the scapegoat?²² Abaye said: You might even say that it is in accord with R. Judah: Are the priests not included in 'Thy people Israel'? Our Rabbis taught: A man²³ [means] to declare a non-priest eligible;²⁴ appointed²³

(1) According to Rabbi, the count always goes according to the number of the days of the solar year, independent as to intercalation or non-intercalation of the extra month, so that the sin-offering need not necessarily have passed its first year by the next Day of Atonement.

(2) And not to die.

(3) Pes. 97a.

(4) Which no priest is permitted to enter, i.e., the animal must not be slaughtered.

(5) Lit., 'stumbling-block'.

(6) That the fear of an offence is taken into consideration.

(7) V. Lev. XXVII, 3.

(8) Ibid. 28.

(9) After the destruction of the Temple, things consecrated, valued or devoted in favour of it, since not available for the Sanctuary to which they are properly assigned, must be destroyed.

(10) This is soon explained.

(11) [So MS.M. Cur. edd.: he should take the value of the benefit derived from them to the Salt Sea.]

(12) If the offence lies in the possibility that it may be offered up instead of being left to pasture until it acquires a blemish, the same apprehension would be justified with regard to any other animal which is ruled to be left to pasture.

(13) In other cases where animals are ruled to be left to pasture, these animals themselves will never become fit for offering, since they are left to pasture till they become blemished, when they are sold and with the proceeds another animal is bought for offering. Hence he would not be preoccupied with the thought of offering them, as in the case of the animal which is to be offered up on the next Day of Atonement and which he might thus offer up before.

(14) The second Passover for those who were far away or ritually unclean on the fourteenth of Nisan. To some such person this lamb may be sold .V. Num. IX,9.

(15) As supra 65b, whether a complete year denotes a solar year or exactly twelve months.

(16) [According to Rabbi it would perforce be past its first year on the following Passover, when it would be disqualified for a Paschal lamb, hence it cannot be offered in the coming year; whereas, according to the Sages, it might still be under a year, hence it may be retained for the coming year.]

(17) [I.e., the same dispute which is found in connection with the Paschal lamb applies also to money which had been set aside for one year's Paschal lamb, whether it may be used for the next year. Now in the case of money, surely the point at issue between Rabbi and the Sages does not apply.]

(18) Lit., 'wipe off'.

(19) Var. lec., high priests.

(20) I.e., a non-priest.

(21) Sc. our sins.

(22) V. supra 61a.

(23) V. Lev. XVI, 21.

(24) For taking away the scapegoat into the wilderness.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 66b

[means] that he must be prepared [from the previous day]; 'appointed' [means] that [it is to send away]; even on the Sabbath 'appointed', even if in a state of uncleanness.¹ [You say]: 'Man [means] to declare a non-priest eligible', but that is obvious? — You might have thought that since [the term] Kapparah [atonement] is written in connection therewith,² therefore he informs us [as above]. — 'Appointed', i.e., even on the Sabbath. What does this teach?³ — R. Shesheth said: It is to say that if it is sick, he may make it ride on his shoulder. According to whose view is this? Not according to R. Nathan, for R. Nathan said: A living being carries itself!⁴ — You may even say that this is in accord with R. Nathan: when it is sick it is different,⁵ however.

Rafram said: This is to say that [the laws of] 'erub⁶ and carrying out⁷ apply on Sabbath, but do not apply on the Day of Atonement.⁸ 'Appointed', i.e., even in a state of uncleanness.⁹ What does that teach? — R. Shesheth said: It is to say that if he who is to carry it away became unclean, he may enter in impurity the Temple Court¹⁰ and carry it away.

R. Eliezer was asked: What about his carrying it on his shoulder? — He said: He could carry you and me.¹¹ If he who is to take it away became sick, may he send it away through someone else? — He said: I wish to keep well, I and you!¹² If he pushed it down and it did not die, must he go down after it and kill it? — He said to them: So perish all Thine enemies, O Lord.¹³ But the Sages say: If it became sick, he may load it on his shoulder; if he pushed it down and it did not die, he shall go down and kill it. They asked R. Eliezer: 'What about So-and-so¹⁴ in the world to come'? — He replied, 'Have you asked me only about this one'?¹⁵ 'May one save the lamb from the lion'? — He said to them: 'Have you asked me only about the lamb'?¹⁵ 'May one save the shepherd from the lion'? — He said to them: 'Have you asked me only about the shepherd'?¹⁶ 'May a mamzer¹⁷ inherit'? — [He replied]: 'May he marry the wife of his brother who died without issue'?¹⁸ 'May one whitewash his house'?¹⁹ — [He replied]: 'May one whitewash his grave'? — [His evasion was due] not to his desire to divert them with words [counter-questions], but because he never said anything that he had not heard from his teacher.²⁰

A wise woman asked R. Eliezer: Since with regard to the offence with the golden calf all were evenly associated, why was not the penalty of death the same?²¹ — He answered her: There is no wisdom in woman except with the distaff. Thus also does Scripture say: And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands.²² It is stated: Rab and Levi are disputing in the matter. One said: Whosoever sacrificed and burned incense died by the sword; whosoever embraced and kissed [the calf] died the death [at the hands of Heaven];²³ whosoever rejoiced in his heart died of dropsy. The other said: He who had sinned before witnesses and after receiving warning,²⁴ died by the sword; he who sinned before witnesses but without previous warning, by death; and he who sinned without witnesses and without previous warning, died of dropsy.

Rab Judah said: The tribe of Levi did not participate in the idolatry, as it is said: Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp.²⁵ Rabina was sitting and reporting this teaching, whereupon the sons of R. Papa b. Abba objected to Rabina: Who said of his father and of his mother: 'I have not seen him, etc.'?²⁶ — 'His father', that is the father of his mother, an Israelite; 'brother', the brother of his mother, an Israelite; 'sons', that means the sons of his daughter [which she had] from an Israelite.

AND THEY MADE A CAUSEWAY FOR HIM etc. Rabbah b. Bar Hana said: These were not Babylonians but Alexandrians, and because they [the Palestinians] hated the Babylonians,²⁷ they called them [the Alexandrians] by their [the Babylonians'] name. It was taught: R. Judah said, They were not Babylonians, but Alexandrians. — R. Jose said to him: May your mind be relieved even as you have relieved my mind!²⁸

MISHNAH. SOME OF THE NOBILITY OF JERUSALEM USED TO GO WITH HIM UP TO THE FIRST BOOTH. THERE WERE TEN BOOTHS FROM JERUSALEM TO THE ZOK²⁹

(1) This is soon explained.

(2) And this term as a rule occurs only in connection with a rite performed by priests.

(3) What Sabbath desecration could the taking of the scapegoat to the wilderness involve?

(4) V. Shab. 90a. Hence no transgression would be involved in carrying it.

(5) A sick being, unable to 'carry itself', might logically be assumed to be an exception to R. Nathan's rule.

(6) v. Glos.

(7) I.e., transferring an object from public to private grounds and vice versa, both of which were prohibited on the Sabbath.

(8) Since the word 'anointed' is here interpreted as referring to the suspension of the Sabbath law, the inference is justified that no such prohibition existed on the Day of Atonement, or else it would be illogical to say that a special statement permits the suspension of these laws on the Day of Atonement which fell on a Sabbath, since they would be operative on any Day of Atonement, even if it fell on a weekday. The laws of 'carrying out' and 'erub belong together, hence strictly speaking, the Gemara need not have mentioned both; when one is applied, the other automatically applies too.

(9) How should the laws on levitical uncleanness apply to the taking of the scapegoat to the wilderness?

(10) When he receives it from the high priest.

(11) R. Eliezer made a point of not answering any question concerning which he had not received a definite tradition or interpretation from his teachers.

(12) This, too, is an evasive answer: You and I are well, hope to keep well, why trouble about such hypothetical situations?

(13) Judg. V, 31.

(14) Peloni. It may have been a general question concerning 'John Doe', or it may refer to Solomon's (Rashi), or to Absalom's (R. Han.) regard for the Davidic Dynasty being responsible for the substitution of the vague Peloni. [Some see in Peloni a reference to Jesus, Finkelstein L. to Philo. Bokser, B.Z. Pharisaism in Transition pp. 18ff, rightly regards these identifications as hardly supported by any facts.]

(15) Ali his answers are evasive.

(16) Some see in the question about the shepherd a reference to David, who as lion (King) or as shepherd had taken the lamb (Bathsheba) from her husband. Others see the lamb in Uriah, Bathsheba's husband, whom the lion (David) sent to his death.

(17) May a bastard (the issue of a union forbidden under the penalty of extinction) inherit his father?

(18) Why don't you ask the whole question: How far does he participate in the rights and duties of normal Jews?

(19) May one whitewash one's house in spite of the fact that one ought to remain conscious all the time of the destruction of the Temple, etc.

(20) [V. Suk., Sonc. ed., p. 122. Bokser, op. cit. pp. 108f sees in these questions differences of opinion on important points of law. The question about sheep concerned the ban against cattle-raising which the Rabbis wished to enforce (v.

B.M. 84b) and which R. Eliezer opposed as having no precedent in tradition. The questions relating to the mamzer involved the imposition of certain discriminations against the mamzer of which R. Eliezer did not approve, and similarly he refused to accept the prohibition of the other Rabbis of plastering one's house in sad remembrance of the destruction of the Temple, not finding any support for it in tradition].

(21) Scripture mentions three forms of penalties: Some died by the sword (Ex. XXXII, 27), others by the plague (ibid. 35), the rest by dropsy as the result of their drinking the water containing the gold dust, which Moses had offered them in expiation (ibid. 20).

(22) Ex. XXXV, 25.

(23) I.e., died by the plague.

(24) Penalty could be imposed only when the offence had been committed in the presence of two witnesses who accuse the defendant, after he had been warned as to the consequences of his offence.

(25) Ex. XXXII, 26. (cont.) and said: 'Whoso is on the Lord's side, let him come unto me'. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him.

(26) Deut. XXXIII, 9. Here seems scriptural proof that the Levites, in punishing the guilty, ignored relationships, such as father or mother, but executed punishment on all. Thus their relatives, other Levites, must have been guilty.

(27) This hatred caused them to look down upon the Babylonians as remiss in their religious duties, and to father upon them other people's wrongs.

(28) R. Jose was a Babylonian. He welcomes the interpretation, which freed his fellow-countrymen from the charge of such boorish conduct.

(29) Lit., 'the peak', the mountain top from which the scapegoat was precipitated. Also used to denote the precipice itself.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 67a

[A DISTANCE OF] NINETY RIS, SEVEN AND A HALF OF WHICH MAKE A MIL.¹ AT EVERY BOOTH THEY WOULD SAY TO HIM: HERE IS FOOD AND HERE IS WATER. THEY WENT WITH HIM FROM BOOTH TO BOOTH, EXCEPT THE LAST ONE.² FOR HE WOULD NOT GO WITH HIM UP TO THE ZOK,³ BUT STAND FROM AFAR, AND BEHOLD WHAT HE WAS DOING.

WHAT DID HE DO? HE DIVIDED THE THREAD OF CRIMSON WOOL, AND TIED ONE HALF TO THE ROCK, THE OTHER HALF BETWEEN ITS HORNS, AND PUSHED IT FROM BEHIND. AND IT WENT ROLLING DOWN AND BEFORE IT HAD REACHED HALF ITS WAY DOWN HILL IT WAS DASHED TO PIECES. HE CAME BACK AND SAT DOWN UNDER THE LAST BOOTH UNTIL IT GREW DARK. AND FROM WHEN ON DOES IT RENDER HIS GARMENTS UNCLEAN?⁴ FROM THE MOMENT HE HAS GONE OUTSIDE THE WALL OF JERUSALEM. R. SIMEON SAYS: FROM THE MOMENT HE PUSHES IT INTO THE ZOK.⁵

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: There were ten booths and twelve mils⁶ [distance] — this is the view of R. Meir. R. Judah says Nine booths and ten mils; R. Jose says: Five booths and ten mils. And they are all available by means of an 'erub.⁷ R. Jose said: My son Eliezer suggested to me: As long as I have an 'erub, two booths would do even for ten mils.⁸ With whose view will agree what was taught: But not from the last booth, for nobody would go with him up to the Zok, but standing afar, would behold what he was doing? According to whom [is this]? According to R. Meir.⁹

AT EVERY BOOTH THEY WOULD SAY TO HIM: HERE IS FOOD AND WATER: A Tanna taught: Never did any one [who carried the goat away] find it necessary to use it, but¹⁰ [the reason of this provision is because] you cannot compare one who has bread in his basket with one who has no bread in his basket.¹¹

WHAT DID HE DO? HE DIVIDED THE THREAD OF CRIMSON WOOL: But let him tie the whole [thread] to the rock? — Since it is his duty [to complete his work with] the he-goat, perhaps the thread might become fast white, and he would be satisfied.¹² But let him tie the whole thread between its horns? — At times its head [in falling] is bent and he would not pay attention.¹³ Our Rabbis taught:¹⁴ In the beginning they would tie the thread of crimson wool on the entrance of the Ulam¹⁵ without: if it became white they rejoiced; if it did not become white, they were sad and ashamed. Thereupon they arranged to tie it to the entrance of the Ulam within. But they were still peeping through and if it became white, they rejoiced, whereas, if it did not become white, they grew sad and ashamed. Thereupon they arranged to tie one half to the rock and the other half between its horns. R. Nahum b. Papa said in the name of R. Eleazar ha-Kappar: Originally they used to tie the thread of crimson wool to the entrance of the Ulam within, and as soon as the he-goat reached the wilderness, it turned white. Then they knew that the commandment concerning it had been fulfilled, as it is said: If your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white wool.¹⁶

BEFORE IT HAD REACHED HALF ITS WAY DOWN HILL: The question was raised: As to those limbs [pieces] are they permitted for general use?¹⁷ Rab and Samuel are in dispute on this point, one saying: They are permitted, the other they are forbidden. The one who holds they are permitted [argues thus]:

(1) [So that ninety ris is the equivalent of twelve mils.]

(2) I.e., the one who accompanied him to the last booth, the one before the Zok.

(3) [Because according to calculation there was a distance of two mils between the last booth and the Zok which was beyond the walking limits of the Sabbath or Festivals.]

(4) V. Lev. XVI, 26.

(5) Cf. p. 312, n. 6.

(6) [V. n. 1. This allowed for one mil(=2000 cubits) the permissible walking distance between one booth and another and two mils from the last booth to the Zok].

(7) This 'erub signified the transferring of one's abode to the place where certain foods were deposited, with the consequence that his movements on the Sabbath would be assumed to start from that abode and were permitted within 2000 cubits in every direction.

(8) Suppose some Jerusalemites deposited on the eve of the Day of Atonement some eatables at the end of the 2000 cubits which are the legal maximum for walking out of the city on the Sabbath. Then they are permitted to accompany the man appointed to take away the scapegoat a distance of 2000 more cubits (the maximum as from the present fictitious abode). The guard of other booths eight and four mils off Jerusalem could do the same, in every direction. Now one may go 2000 cubits with him from Jerusalem, where guards from the first booth join him up to the second and so on, until his destination is reached.

(9) According to R. Jose and R. 'Judah even the last reaches the Zok.

(10) V. supra 18b.

(11) The craving of him who lacks the opportunity to gratify it is much more intense than the craving of him who has such opportunity.

(12) If the thread should turn white suddenly before the goat had yet been hurled down, the appointed man might be so happy with the sign of forgiveness obtained as to neglect going through with the prescribed ceremony of pushing the he-goat downward, thus leaving the command unfulfilled.

(13) To the change in colour, since the thread would be out of his sight.

(14) V. R.H. 31b.

(15) The Hall leading to the interior of the Temple.

(16) Isa. I, 18.

(17) I.e., may they e.g., be sold so that the profit therefrom be enjoyed. Hana'ah (general use) stands for any enjoyment except akilah, eating for human consumption, therefore using it for profit, as a gift, etc.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 67b

For it is written: 'in the wilderness';¹ the one who holds they are forbidden [argues]: Because Scripture says: cut off.² But as for him who considers them forbidden, for what purpose does he use the word 'wilderness'? He needs it in accord with what was taught: 'Into the wilderness', 'to the wilderness', 'in the wilderness',³ that means to include Nob, Gibeon, and Shiloh and the Permanent House.⁴ And what does the other [teacher] do with 'cut off'? — He needs it, in accord with what was taught: Gezerah,⁵ [the term] 'gezerah' means something that is 'cut off';⁶ another explanation: Gezerah means something that goes to pieces as it goes down; another interpretation: 'gezerah'⁷ — perhaps you might say this is a vain thing? Therefore the text reads: I am the Lord, I have decreed⁷ it and you are not permitted to criticize it.

Raba said: The view of him who says they are permitted is more reasonable, for the Torah did not say 'Send away'! to create [possibility of] offence.⁸ Our Rabbis taught: Azazel — it should be hard and rough.⁹ One might have assumed that it is to be in inhabited land, therefore the text reads: 'In the wilderness'. But whence do we know that it [is to be in] a Zok?¹⁰ — Therefore the text reads: 'Cut off'.¹¹ Another [Baraita] taught: Azazel, i.e., the hardest of mountains, thus also does it say: And the mighty [ele] of the land he took away.¹² The School of R. Ishmael taught: Azazel — [it was so called] because it obtains atonement for the affair of Uza and¹³ Aza'el.-

Our Rabbis taught: Mine ordinances shall ye do,¹⁴ i.e., such commandments which, if they were not written [in Scripture], they should by right have been written and these are they: [the laws concerning] idolatry [star-worship], immorality and bloodshed, robbery and blasphemy. And My statutes shall ye keep,¹⁴ i.e., such commandments to which Satan objects, they are [those relating to] the putting on of sha'atnez,¹⁵ the halizah¹⁶ [performed] by a sister-in-law, the purification of the leper, and the he-goat-to-be-sent-away. And perhaps you might think these are vain things, therefore Scripture says: I am the Lord,¹⁴ i.e., I, the Lord have made it a statute and you have no right to criticize it.

FROM WHEN ON DOES IT RENDER HIS GARMENTS UNCLEAN? Our Rabbis taught: Only he who is to take the goat away renders his garments unclean, but he who sends the appointed man away¹⁷ does not render his garments unclean. One might have assumed that [he does so] as soon as he goes forth outside from the wall of the Temple court, therefore the text reads: He that letteth go.¹⁸ If [you derive from] 'he that letteth go' [one might infer that] only when he reaches Zok, therefore the text reads: 'And he that letteth go'.¹⁹ How then is it? R. Judah says: As soon as he goes out of the walls of Jerusalem. R. Jose says: Azazel and wash [are written in close proximity] i.e., only when he reaches the Zok. R. Simeon says: And he that letteth go the goat for Azazel shall wash his clothes, i.e., he flings it down headlong and his garments become then unclean.

MISHNAH. HE [THE HIGH PRIEST] CAME TO THE BULLOCK AND THE HE-GOAT THAT WERE TO BE BURNT,²⁰ HE CUT THEM OPEN AND TOOK OUT THE SACRIFICIAL PORTIONS²¹ AND PUT THEM ON A TRAY, AND BURNT THEM UPON THE ALTAR. HE TWISTED THEM [THE BEASTS] AROUND CARRYING POLES AND BROUGHT THEM OUT TO THE PLACE OF BURNING. FROM WHAT TIME DO THEY RENDER GARMENTS UNCLEAN?²² AFTER THEY HAVE GONE OUTSIDE THE WALL OF THE TEMPLE COURT. R. SIMEON SAYS: FROM THE MOMENT THE FIRE HAS TAKEN HOLD OF MOST OF THEM.

GEMARA. And he burnt them up? How could that thought arise in you?²³ — Rather say: To burn them [later] on the altar.

HE TWISTED THEM AROUND CARRYING POLES: R. Johanan said: So in the form of a net-work. — A Tanna taught: He did not cut them up as one cuts up the flesh of a burnt-offering, but [he left] the skin on the flesh. Whence do we know this? Because It was taught:²⁴ Rabbi said: It is said here: skin . . . flesh . . . and dung²⁵ and it is said there: skin . . . flesh . . . and dung²⁶

just as above it is [carried forth] by means of cutting up and not by flaying, so here also it is by means of cutting up and not by flaying. Whence do we know it there? — For it was taught: 'And its inwards, and its dung, and he shall carry forth',¹ that teaches that he must carry it forth complete.² One might have assumed that he must also burn it complete, therefore it is said here: 'with its head and with its legs' and there also it is said: its head and its legs,³ hence just as there it is [offered] by means of cutting up, so here also it is [carried forth] by means of cutting up. One might assume that just as there it is by means of flaying, so here too, therefore the text reads: 'And its inwards and its dung'. How is this implied [in the Scriptural text]? — R. Papa answered: Just as the dung is enclosed in the inwards, so shall the flesh be enclosed in the skin.⁴

FROM WHAT TIME DO THEY RENDER GARMENTS UNCLEAN? [etc.] Our Rabbis taught:⁵ [And the bullock and . . . the he-goat] he shall carry forth without the camp and they shall burn. There⁶ you allot them three⁷ camps and here only one camp?⁸ Then, why does it read: 'without the camp'? To tell you: As soon as he goes outside the one camp, the garments are rendered unclean. Whence do we know it there?⁹ — For it was taught:¹⁰ Even the whole bullock shall he carry forth without the camp,¹¹ i.e., without the three camps. — You say: Without the three camps, but perhaps it means [only] 'without one camp'? When Scripture says, in connection with the bullock of the congregation: 'without the camp', whereas no such statement [of the text] is necessary, for it is said already: And he shall burn it as he burned the first bullock,¹² why then was 'without the camp' stated? To allot it another camp; and when Scripture says, Without the camp', in connection with the removal of the ashes whereas no such statement is necessary,¹³ since it is said already: Where the ashes are poured out,¹¹ this means to allot it a third camp. What does R. Simeon¹⁴ do 'Without the camp'?¹⁵ He needs it, as it was taught: R. Eliezer says: It is said here: 'Without the camp', and it is said there: Without the camp.¹⁶ Just as here it means outside the three camps, so does it mean there outside the three camps; and just as there it means to the east of Jerusalem,¹⁷ so does it mean here to the east of Jerusalem. But according to the view of the Sages where were they burnt? In accordance with what was taught: Where were they burnt?

(1) Lev. IV, 11-12.

(2) But the skin of the bullock, and all its flesh, with its head, and with its legs, and its inwards, and its dung, omitting no part of the animal's anatomy, hence justifies the statement that 'shall he carry forth', in the following verse, means he shall carry it forth complete.

(3) Lev. I, 8, 9. With reference to a burnt-offering of the flock.

(4) The skin of the bullock and all its flesh, occurring in the same passage with and its dung justifies the analogy: as the dung is enclosed, etc.

(5) Zeb. 105b.

(6) In connection with the bullock which the congregation or the anointed priest had to offer up as a sin-offering for an offence committed in error.

(7) Three camps, outside of which it is to be burnt, are 'allotted', designated in connection with it: the priestly camp, the camp of the Levites, the camp (the city) of Israel as shown infra.

(8) This bullock would apparently be burnt outside of the first camp (as 'without the camp' is mentioned only once). What difference justifies such discrimination? The difference would lie in the nature of the sacrifice, but there is practically no such difference, both being offered up inside and having the same regulation with regard to their burning and to their defiling of the garments.

to the north¹ of Jerusalem, and without the three camps. R. Jose says: They were burnt in the place² where the ashes of the sacrifices were deposited.

Raba said: Who is the Tanna disputing with R. Jose. It is R. Eliezer b. Jacob, for it was taught: [The bullock shall he carry forth to] where the ashes are poured out, and burn it, i.e., there shall be ashes [from before].³ R. Eliezer b. Jacob says: It means that its place shall be sloping. Said Abaye: Perhaps they are disputing as to whether the place shall be sloping!⁴ — Our Rabbis taught: And he that burneth them⁵ i.e., he that burneth renders his garments unclean, but not he who kindles the fire, nor he who puts the wood in order. And who is 'He that burneth'? He who assists at the time of the burning. One might have assumed that even after they have become ashes, they shall still defile the garments, therefore Scripture says: 'them, i.e., only as long as they [are 'they'] do they defile the garments, but not once they have become ashes. R. Eliezer son of R. Simeon says: The bullock [itself] defiles the garments, but when the flesh is burnt to hard lumps it no more defiles the garments. What is the difference between the two views? — If it has been reduced to lumps of charred flesh.⁶

MISHNAH. THEY SAID TO THE HIGH PRIEST: THE HE-GOAT HAS REACHED THE WILDERNESS. AND WHENCE DID THEY KNOW THAT THE HE-GOAT HAD REACHED THE WILDERNESS? THEY USED TO SET UP GUARDS AT STATIONS⁷ AND FROM THESE TOWELS WOULD BE WAVED, THUS WOULD THEY KNOW THAT THE HE-GOAT HAD REACHED THE WILDERNESS. R. JUDAH SAID: BUT DID THEY NOT HAVE A GREAT SIGN? FROM JERUSALEM TO BETH HIDODO⁸ WAS THREE MILS. THEY COULD WALK A MIL, RETURN THE MIL, THEN TARRY THE TIME IT TAKES TO WALK A MIL, AND THUS KNOW THAT THE HE-GOAT HAD REACHED THE WILDERNESS. — R. ISHMAEL SAID: BUT THEY HAD ANOTHER SIGN TOO: A THREAD OF CRIMSON WOOL WAS TIED TO THE DOOR OF THE TEMPLE, AND WHEN THE HE-GOAT REACHED THE WILDERNESS THE THREAD TURNED WHITE, AS IT IS WRITTEN: THOUGH YOUR SINS BE AS SCARLET THEY SHALL BE AS WHITE AS SNOW.⁹

GEMARA. Abaye said: One may infer from here that Beth Hidodo is in the wilderness and this is what he [the Tanna of the Mishnah] informs us: that R. Judah holds: As soon as the he-goat has reached the wilderness the commandment concerning it is fulfilled.

CHAPTER VII

MISHNAH. THE HIGH PRIEST [THEN] CAME TO READ. IF HE WISHED TO READ IN LINEN GARMENTS HE COULD DO SO, OTHERWISE HE WOULD READ IN HIS OWN WHITE VESTMENTS. THE SYNAGOGUE ATTENDANT¹⁰ WOULD TAKE A SCROLL OF THE LAW AND GIVE IT TO THE HEAD OF THE SYNAGOGUE,¹¹ AND THE HEAD OF THE SYNAGOGUE GAVE IT TO THE SEGAN,¹² AND THE SEGAN GAVE IT TO THE HIGH PRIEST, AND THE HIGH PRIEST STANDS AND RECEIVES IT, AND READS [THE SECTION] BEGINNING] 'AFTER THE DEATH . . .'¹³ AND 'HOWBEIT ON THE TENTH. . .'¹⁴ THEN HE WOULD ROLL UP THE SCROLL OF THE LAW AND PUT IT IN HIS BOSOM AND SAY, 'MORE THAN WHAT I HAVE READ OUT BEFORE YOU IS WRITTEN HERE. AND ON THE TENTH . . .'¹⁵ WHICH IS IN THE BOOK OF NUMBERS HE RECITES BY HEART. THEN HE RECITES IN CONNECTION THEREWITH EIGHT BENEDICTIONS: FOR THE LAW, FOR THE TEMPLE SERVICE, FOR THE THANKSGIVING, FOR THE FORGIVENESS OF SINS AND FOR THE TEMPLE SEPARATELY,¹⁶ AND FOR ISRAEL SEPARATELY AND FOR JERUSALEM SEPARATELY,¹⁷ FOR THE PRIESTS SEPARATELY AND FOR THE REST OF THE PRAYER.¹⁸ HE WHO SEES THE HIGH PRIEST WHEN HE READS DOES NOT SEE THE BULLOCK AND THE HE-GOAT THAT ARE BEING BURNT, AND HE THAT SEES THE BULLOCK AND THE HE-GOAT THAT ARE BEING BURNT DOES NOT SEE THE HIGH PRIEST WHEN HE READS: NOT THAT HE WAS NOT PERMITTED BUT BECAUSE THE DISTANCE APART WAS GREAT AND BOTH RITES WERE PERFORMED AT THE SAME TIME.

GEMARA. Since it states: IN HIS OWN WHITE VESTMENT,¹⁹ the inference is that reading is not a [Temple] service, and then it states: IF HE WISHED TO READ IN THE LINEN GARMENTS HE COULD DO SO, from which one may learn that priestly garments may be enjoyed for private use!²⁰ Perhaps it is different with reading, because it is a necessity for the [Temple] service. For the question was raised: Are the priestly garments allowed for private use or not allowed! — Come and hear: They would not sleep in the holy garments.²¹ Now they could not sleep in them, but they could eat in them!²² — Perhaps it is different with the eating, because it is necessary for the service, for it was taught: And they shall eat those things wherewith atonement was made;²³ this teaches that the priests eat and the owner obtains atonement. ‘They could not sleep in them’, but could they walk around in them? — In truth they might not walk around in them either

(1) For all the ceremony in connection with the sin-offering took place in the north.

(2) Before Beth ha-Deshen; when ashes have been deposited there it is Beth ha-Deshen. After they have been deposited it is Shefek ha-Deshen, the place where ashes have been poured out. (v. Rashi).

(3) V. Lev. IV, 12.

(4) I.e., the discussion may concern only the question as to whether the place must be sloping, and not whether ashes must have been deposited there first, R. Eliezer b. Jacob agreeing that ashes must have been deposited there before.

(5) Lev. XVI, 28.

(6) In this case the flesh has been dissolved without having become ashes. According to the first Tanna they render the garments unclean as long as they are not ashes, hence, in this case would still have this defiling effect. According to R. Eliezer son of R. Simeon it is only as long as they are bullocks, i.e., whole, that they render garments impure, whereas as charred flesh they are no more bullocks, hence do not affect the garments any more.

but it is necessary [to make special mention of sleep] on account of the last clause:¹ they may take them off, fold them, and put them under the head.

‘They may take them off, fold them, and put them under the head’! You may infer, then, hence that priestly garments may be enjoyed for private use? — R. Papa said: Do not say, ‘Under their heads’, but rather say, ‘Next to their heads’. R. Mesharsheya said: You may infer, thence, that one may keep the tefillin next to oneself whilst asleep. It is also logical that [the meaning here is] next to their heads’. For if the thought should arise in you that [it means] ‘under their heads’, surely you ought to derive [the prohibition of that] on account of the mixed texture [of wool and linen], for among [the garments which consisted of a mixed texture] is also the girdle, so that even if the private enjoyment [of priestly garments] is permitted, surely here he is deriving benefit from a mixed texture! — That will be right according to the view that the girdle of the high priest [on the Day of Atonement] is identical with the girdle of the common priest during the rest of the year; but what can be said according to the view that the girdle of the high priest is not identical with that of the commoner?² — And if you were to say mixed textures are forbidden only for wearing and putting on, but not for lying on, surely was it not taught: Neither shall there come upon thee,³ i.e., but you may spread it under you; but the Sages declare that this too is forbidden, because a fringe [of the mattress etc.] might wind itself round the flesh. And if you were to say: Something was placed in between, but did not R. Simeon b. Pazzi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi say on the authority of Rabbi, in the name of the Holy Community of Jerusalem: Even if there were ten mattress covers, one on top of the other, with mixed textures under them, it would still be forbidden to sleep on them. Rather, therefore, must you say [the meaning is]: ‘Next to their heads’. This is conclusive. R. Ashi said: In reality, read: ‘Under their heads’. [And as to the question]² But he would enjoy mixed textures? [the answer is], Priestly garments are stiff, for even so did R. Huna, son of R. Joshua say: The shrunk felt-cloth of Naresh⁴ is permitted.⁵

Come and hear: As to priestly garments, it is forbidden to go out in them in the province,⁶ but in the Sanctuary whether during or outside the time of the service, it is permitted to wear them, because priestly garments are permitted for private use. This is conclusive. But in the province [it is] not [permitted]? Surely it was taught: The twenty-fifth of Tebeth is the day of Mount Gerizim,⁷ on which no mourning is permitted. It is the day on which the Cutheans demanded the House of our God from Alexander the Macedonian so as to destroy it, and he had given them the permission, whereupon some people came and informed Simeon the Just.⁸ What did the latter do? He put on his priestly garments, robed himself in priestly garments, some of the noblemen of Israel went with him carrying fiery torches in their hands, they walked all the night, some walking on one side and others on the other side, until the dawn rose. When the dawn rose he [Alexander] said to them: Who are these [the Samaritans]? They answered: The Jews who rebelled against you. As he reached Antipatris,⁹ the sun having shone forth, they met. When he saw Simeon the Just, he descended from his carriage and bowed down before him. They said to him: A great king like yourself should bow down before this Jew? He answered: His image it is which wins for me in all my battles. He said to them: What have you come for? They said: Is it possible that star-worshippers should mislead you to destroy the House wherein prayers are said for you and your kingdom that it be never destroyed! He said to them: Who are these? They said to him: These are Cutheans who stand before you. He said: They are delivered into your hand. At once they perforated their heels, tied them to the tails of their horses and dragged them over thorns and thistles, until they came to Mount Gerizim, which they ploughed and planted with vetch, even as they had planned to do with the House of God. And that day they made a festive day.¹⁰ If you like say: They were fit to be priestly garments, or, if you like, say: It is time to work for the Lord: they have made void Thy law.¹¹

THE SYNAGOGUE ATTENDANT WOULD TAKE A SCROLL OF THE LAW. One may infer from here that one may shew honour to the disciple in the presence of his master?¹² — Abaye said: It is all done for the sake of the high priest.¹³

AND THE HIGH PRIEST STANDS. From this you can infer that he was sitting before, but surely we have learnt:¹⁴

(1) Which permits the sleeping on them, independent of any fear that impurity may occur in the sleep, since the garments were taken off the body.

(2) According to the first view both are of linen, without any mixture, hence may be worn. But according to the second view, the commoner did wear a different kind of belt, made up of mixed texture, v. supra 6a notes, hence the difficulty.

(3) Lev. XIX, 19.

(4) Near Sura.

- (5) That felt-cloth was so hard that one could not have worn a garment of that material. The prohibition of mixed texture, however, applies only to such material as may be worn as garments and warm the body.

- (9) Antipatris, in Judah, on the way from Jerusalem to Caesarea, was built by King Herod and called after his father, Antipater.
- (10) Prohibiting every public mourning. This shews that Simeon wore the priestly garments outside Jerusalem.
- (11) Ps. CXIX, 126. [In Megillath Ta'anith the day of the destruction of the Temple on Mount Gerizim is 21st Kislev. According to Josephus it was destroyed by Hyrcanus in the year 128 B.C.E. For the literature on the subject v. Lichtenstein, H., HUCA, vol. VIII-IX, p. 288].
- (12) The question is, shall we consider this an answer to the problem propounded elsewhere and not answered (B.B. 119b; Sotah 40b) as to whether it is legitimate to shew honour to a subordinate in the presence of his superior, (disciple in presence of master). The solution, inferred from here, would be the affirmative.
- (13) I.e., what happens here serves but to indicate how many subordinates the high priest has, i.e., how exalted his position is. The problem is still unsolved as to a situation in which the honour would be intended exclusively for the benefit of the disciple or subordinate.
- (14) [Read with var. lec.: 'A Master said', as what follows is no Mishnah].

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 69b

Nobody may sit down in the [Temple] Court except the kings of the house of David alone, as it is said: Then David the king went in and sat before the Lord?¹ — It is as R. Hisda had explained [elsewhere]: In the women's court, so also here. 'In the women's court'. — Where was R. Hisda's statement made? — In connection with the following: An objection was raised, it was taught: Where did they read therein?² In the Temple. R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: On the Temple Mount, as it is said: And he read therein before the broad place that was before the water gate;³ and R. Hisda said: In the women's court.⁴ And Ezra blessed the Lord, the great God.⁵ What does 'great' imply? — R. Joseph said in the name of Rab: He magnified Him by [pronouncing] the Ineffable Name.⁶ R. Giddal said: [He recited], Blessed be the Lord, the God of Israel, from everlasting even to everlasting.⁷ Said Abaye to R. Dimi: But perhaps it means that he magnified Him by [pronouncing] the Ineffable Name? — He answered: One does not pronounce the Ineffable Name outside [the limits of the Temple]. But may one not? Is it not written: And Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit of wood, which they had made for the purpose. [. . . and Ezra praised the great God].⁸ And R. Giddal [commenting thereupon] said: He magnified Him by [pronouncing] the Ineffable Name?—That was a decision in an emergency.⁹ And [they] cried with a great [loud] voice unto the Lord, their God.¹⁰ What did they cry? — Woe, woe, it is he¹¹ who has destroyed the Sanctuary, burnt the Temple, killed all the righteous, driven all Israel into exile, and is still dancing around among us! Thou hast surely given him to us so that we may receive reward through him.¹² We want neither him, nor reward through him! Thereupon a tablet fell down from heaven for them, whereupon the word 'truth'¹³ was inscribed. (R. Hanina said: One may learn therefrom that the seal of the Holy One, blessed be He, is truth). They ordered a fast of three days and three nights, whereupon he¹¹ was surrendered to them. He came forth from the Holy of Holies like a young fiery lion. Thereupon the Prophet said to Israel: This is the evil desire of idolatry, as it is said: And he said: This is wickedness.¹⁴ As they took hold of him a hair of his beard fell out, he raised his voice and it went [was audible] four hundred parasangs. Thereupon they said: How shall we act? Perhaps, God forbid, they might have mercy upon him from heaven! — The prophet said unto them: Cast him into a leaden pot, closing its opening with lead. Because lead absorbs the voice, as it is said: And he said: This is wickedness. And he cast her down into the midst of the measure, and he cast the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof.¹⁴ They said: Since this is a time of Grace, let us pray for mercy for the Tempter to evil.¹⁵ They prayed for mercy, and he was handed over to them. He said to them: Realize that if you kill him, the world goes down. They imprisoned him for three days, then looked in the whole land of Israel for a fresh egg and could not find it.¹⁶ Thereupon they said: What shall we do now? Shall we kill him? The world would then go down. Shall we beg for half-mercy?¹⁷ They do not grant 'halves' in heaven.¹⁷ They put out his eyes and let him go. It helped inasmuch as he no more entices men to commit incest.¹⁸ In the West [Palestine] they taught it thus: R. Giddal said: [And Ezra praised...the] great [God]:¹⁹ i.e., he magnified Him by pronouncing the Ineffable Name. R. Mattena said: He said: The great, the mighty, and the awful God.²⁰ The interpretation of R. Mattena seems to agree with what R. Joshua b. Levi said: For R. Joshua b. Levi said: Why were they called men of the Great Synod? Because they restored the crown of the divine attributes to its ancient completeness.²¹ [For] Moses had come and said: The great God, the mighty, and the awful.²² Then Jeremiah came and said: Aliens are destroying²³ His Temple. Where are, then, His awful deeds? Hence he omitted²⁴ [the attribute] the 'awful'. Daniel came and said: Aliens are enslaving his sons. Where are His mighty deeds? Hence he omitted the word²⁵ 'mighty'. But they came and said: On the contrary! Therein lie His mighty deeds that He suppresses His wrath,²⁶ that He extends long-suffering to the wicked. Therein lie His awful powers: For but for the fear of Him, how could one [single] nation persist among the [many] nations! But how could [the earlier] Rabbis²⁷ abolish something established by Moses? R. Eleazar said: Since they knew that the Holy One, blessed be He, insists on truth, they would not ascribe false [things] to Him.²⁸

AND HE READ: AFTER THE DEATH' AND 'HOWBEIT ON THE TENTH DAY': A question was raised: One may skip in reading from the Prophets, but one may not skip in reading from the Torah!²⁹ — That is no difficulty: The one [prohibition] applies where [the passage skipped is] sufficiently long to interrupt the interpreter, the other where it is not sufficiently long to interrupt the interpreter.³⁰ — But surely it is in connection therewith that it was taught: One may skip in reading from the Prophets, but one may not skip in reading from the Torah; and how much may be skipped [in the Prophets]? So much as is not sufficiently long to interrupt the interpreter. This implies that in reading from the Torah one may not skip at all? — Said Abaye: There is no difficulty: [The permission applies] here, where one theme is concerned, [the prohibition] there, where two themes are concerned.³¹ Thus also it was taught: One may skip in the reading from the Torah, if the theme be one and same, in reading from the Prophets, even if two themes be involved; in each case, however, only when it is not sufficiently long to interrupt the interpreter. Nor may one skip from one Prophetic Book to another, but in case of one of the twelve Minor Prophets one may skip even [from one Book to another],

- (12) For resisting him successfully Israel would be rewarded.
- (13) I.e., I agree with you: you spoke the truth.
- (14) Zech. V, 8.
- (15) The evil desire, for idolatry is also the evil desire for immorality. The two were found to go hand in hand.
- (16) Whereas there is no good in idolatry there is at least some good in the desire for sex indulgence. Perpetuation of the race depends upon it. So does human food. The people who found themselves with the opportunity to destroy the temptation of flesh-love discovered that, when the genius of sex-love is cancelled, no eggs are available.
- (17) To ask that temptation or the tempter should live, but not tempt, is to ask a thing that Heaven will not grant. The tempter lives to tempt. But by depriving its flame of its major glare, by keeping it within lawful limits, one promotes domesticity and prevents depravity.

- (30) The interpreter would follow immediately the reader. If the rolling did not involve so much time that, at the end of his interpretation of the passage just read, the interpreter would have to stop to await the reading of the new Hebrew passage, well and good. For to keep the congregation waiting for the continuation of the service is unseemly. But 'Howbeit on the tenth day' is so near Lev. XVI, that before the interpreter would have concluded his Aramaic interpretation of the last Hebrew passage, the new passage would have been started and read, for him to interpret without loss of time.
- (31) This distinction is not technical, but pedagogical. If both passages although near — so that the interpreter need not keep the congregation waiting — deal with two subjects, one shall not skip from one to another, because closer attention is necessary for an understanding of the laws of the Torah. But where one subject only is involved, as in the reading on the Day of Atonement, such skipping is permitted. Meg. 24a.

provided one does not skip from the end of the Book to its beginning.

THEN HE WOULD ROLL UP THE SCROLL OF THE LAW etc.: Why all that?¹ — So as not to discredit the scroll of the Law.²

AND ON THE TENTH, WHICH IS IN THE BOOK OF NUMBERS, HE RECITED BY HEART: Why that? Let him roll up [the scroll] and read from it [again]? — R. Huna the son of R. Joshua said in the name of R. Shesheth: Because it is not proper to roll up a scroll of the Law before the community, because of respect for the community.³ Then one should bring another scroll and read therefrom? — R. Huna, son of R. Judah said: Because it would discredit the first [scroll]. Resh Lakish said: Because of an unnecessary blessing.⁴ But we do take into consideration [the reason that it would] discredit [the first scroll]? Has not R. Isaac, the Smith, said: If the beginning of the month of Tebeth falls on the Sabbath, one brings three scrolls of the Torah, and reads from one about the affairs of the day,⁵ in the second about the new moon, in the third about Hanukkah?⁶ — Three men [reading] from three scrolls do not imply a discredit [for the first and second scroll], one man reading from two scrolls does.⁷

THEREUPON HE PRONOUNCED EIGHT BLESSINGS: Our Rabbis taught: For the Torah, as one pronounces it in the Synagogue;⁸ for the Temple service; for the thanksgiving;⁹ for the forgiving of iniquity, as usual;¹⁰ for the Sanctuary separately; for the priest separately; for Israel separately; and for the rest of the prayer.

Our Rabbis taught: The rest of the prayer: [Accept my] song, petition, supplication before Thee for Thy people Israel, which are in need of salvation.' He would conclude with: '[Blessed art Thou, O Lord] who hearkenest unto prayer.' Thereupon each would bring a scroll of the Torah from his house and read therefrom, in order to shew the multitude its beauty.¹¹ HE WHO SEES THE HIGH PRIEST . . . NOT THAT IT WAS NOT PERMITTED etc.: That is self-evident? — You might have thought as Resh Lakish does: For Resh Lakish said: One must not permit a mizwah to pass by unnoticed; and what mizwah is there here? In the multitude of the people is the king's glory.¹² Therefore we are informed¹³ [that it was permitted].

MISHNAH. IF HE READ IN THE GARMENTS OF LINEN, HE WOULD THEN SANCTIFY HIS HANDS AND FEET, STRIP OFF HIS CLOTHES, GO DOWN AND IMMERSE HIMSELF, COME UP AND DRY HIMSELF. THE GOLDEN VESTMENTS WOULD BE BROUGHT TO HIM, HE PUT THEM ON, SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND FEET, WENT OUT, OFFERED UP HIS OWN RAM AND THE RAM OF THE PEOPLE,¹⁴ AND THE SEVEN UNBLEMISHED, ONE-YEAR-OLD-LAMBS.¹⁵ THIS IS THE VIEW OF R. ELIEZER. R. AKIBA SAID: THESE WERE OFFERED UP TOGETHER WITH THE DAILY WHOLE-OFFERING OF THE MORNING, WHEREAS THE BULLOCK FOR THE WHOLE-OFFERING¹⁵ AND THE HE-GOAT WHICH IS OFFERED UP OUTSIDE¹⁶ WERE OFFERED UP TOGETHER WITH THE DAILY WHOLE-OFFERING OF THE AFTERNOON. HE THEN SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND FEET, STRIPPED OFF HIS CLOTHES, WENT DOWN AND IMMERSED HIMSELF, CAME UP AND DRIED HIMSELF. THE WHITE VESTMENTS WOULD BE BROUGHT TO HIM, HE PUT THEM ON AND SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND HIS FEET. THEN HE WOULD GO IN TO BRING OUT THE LADLE AND THE FIRE-PAN. HE WOULD SANCTIFY HIS HANDS AND FEET, STRIP OFF HIS CLOTHES, GO DOWN AND IMMERSE HIMSELF, COME UP AND DRY HIMSELF. THE GOLDEN GARMENTS WOULD BE BROUGHT TO HIM. HE PUT THEM ON, SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND FEET, AND WENT IN TO BURN UP THE AFTERNOON INCENSE, AND TO TRIM THE LAMPS. HE SANCTIFIED HIS HANDS AND FEET AND STRIPPED. THEN HE WENT DOWN, IMMERSED HIMSELF, CAME UP AND DRIED HIMSELF. THEY WOULD THEN BRING TO HIM HIS OWN GARMENTS, HE PUT THEM ON. THEY WOULD ACCOMPANY HIM TO HIS HOUSE. HE WOULD ARRANGE FOR A DAY OF FESTIVITY FOR HIS FRIENDS WHENEVER HE HAD COME FORTH FROM THE SANCTUARY IN PEACE.

GEMARA. The question was raised: How does he [R. Akiba] mean: They [the seven lambs] were offered up together with the daily whole-offering of the morning, whereas the bullock for the whole-offering and the he-goat which is offered up outside were offered up together with the daily whole-offering of the afternoon; or did he mean, perhaps, this: they were offered up together with the daily whole-offering of the morning and together also with them the bullock for the whole-offering, whereas the he-goat which is offered up outside is offered up together with the daily whole-offering of the afternoon?¹⁷ Furthermore, when, according to R. Eliezer who omits reference to him, is the bullock for the whole-offering being sacrificed? Furthermore, according to both R. Eliezer and R. Akiba, when are the sacrificial portions of the sin-offering¹⁸ smoked? — Raba said: You have no properly arranged order [of the service] except you adopt either the view of R. Eliezer, as taught in the School of Samuel, or the view of R. Akiba as reported in the Tosefta. For the School of Samuel taught: R. Eliezer said, He went forth, prepared his own ram, and the ram of the people and the sacrificial portions of the sin-offering, but the bullock for the whole-offering and the seven lambs, and the he-goat that was offered up outside were offered up together with the daily whole-offering of the afternoon. What is the teaching of R. Akiba as recorded in the Tosefta?¹⁹ — For it was taught: R. Akiba said, The bullock for the whole-offering, and the seven lambs were offered up together with the Daily whole-offering of the morning, as it is said: [Ye shall offer these] beside the burnt-offering of the morning which is for a continual burnt-offering.²⁰ After that the service of the day

- (1) Why was it necessary for him to say: More than I have read before you is written here?
- (2) His reciting by heart may suggest to the congregation that the passage in question is missing from the scroll.
- (3) Whom one should not keep waiting for the continuation of the service.
- (4) Any unnecessary mention of His name is a transgression of the third command, wherefore in doubtful circumstances a blessing should rather be unpronounced than repeated. A new scroll would require a new blessing and is therefore to be avoided, as leading to an unnecessary, i.e., unlawful mention of His name.

- (11) To 'adorn oneself' before Him in the performance of His commandments, i.e., to perform them in a manner aesthetically satisfactory is a duty which our Rabbis derived from Ex. XV, 2: He is my God and I will glorify Him. In pursuit of that ideal, a pious Jew would build his tabernacle in most careful and beautiful form, would have his scroll written by excellent scribes, would have his prayer shawl adorned, or made from costly wool or silk. To shew his scroll to the people would be an exhibition of his natural pride in that precious possession.

and after that the he-goat which is to be offered outside, as it is said: One he-goat for a sin-offering, beside the sin-offering of atonement;¹ and after that his own ram and the ram of the people, after that the sacrificial portions of the sin-offering, and after that the Daily whole-offering of the afternoon.

What is the reason for R. Eliezer's view? — He [the high priest] performs [the service] in accord with the order written [in Scripture's text]: first he performs what Leviticus enjoins and then he performs what Numbers prescribes.² And R. Akiba? — It is in accord with the reason he himself states: Beside the burnt-offering of the morning, which is for a continual burnt-offering which shews that the additional sacrifices were offered up together with the Daily whole-offering of the morning. What does R. Eliezer do with the passage: Beside the sin-offering of atonement?³ He uses it [for the teaching]: Both⁴ atone for similar kinds of sins.⁵ R. Judah said in his [R. Akiba's] name: One⁶ is offered up together with the Daily whole-offering of the morning, and six⁶ with the Daily whole-offering of the afternoon. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said in his name: Six were offered up with the Daily whole-offering of the morning and one together with the Daily whole-offering of the evening. What is [the reason] of the Rabbis? — There are two verses written: It is written: ‘Beside the burnt-offering of the morning’⁷ and it is written: ‘And he come forth and offer his burnt-offering’.⁸ He therefore prepares one part with the one, and the other with the other. Wherein are they disputing? — R. Judah holds: He offered one first, as it is written: ‘Beside the burnt-offering of the morning’, and then he performed the service of the day, because of a [possible] weakness of the high priest. R. Simeon b. Eleazar holds: Since he once started, he performs the service of the six, lest he be negligent [and will not offer them after the service of the day]. But as to the service due that day, he is zealous.⁹

All, at any rate, agree that it was but one ram;¹⁰ according to whose view is that? — In accord with Rabbi. For it was taught: Rabbi says:¹¹ [The] ‘one ram’¹² spoken of here is the same ram which is mentioned in the Book of Numbers.¹³ R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon says: Two rams are involved, one mentioned here, the other in the Book of Numbers. What is the ground of Rabbi's view? Because Scripture says: ‘One’. — And R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: ‘One’ here means, the [unique] outstanding one of his flock. And Rabbi? — He infers that from, and all your choice vows.¹⁴ And R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon? — One refers to obligatory offerings, the other to voluntary ones and [a statement concerning both] is necessary.¹⁵

HE WOULD SANCTIFY HIS HANDS AND FEET. Our Rabbis taught: And Aaron shall come in to the tent of meeting.¹⁶ For what purpose does he enter? To fetch ladle and fire-pan

(2) [Hence the additional offerings and the Daily afternoon whole-offering prescribed in Numbers are offered last].

(3) [Which implies that the he-goat offered outside is offered before his own ram and the ram of the people].

(4) [The he-goat whose blood is sprinkled outside and the he-goat, the sin-offering of the atonement, whose blood is sprinkled within].

(15) One could not have inferred the law that the choicest of animals have to be brought in the case of voluntary offerings from the obligatory ones, or vice versa, because to one view the former is preferable, more pleasing because spontaneous, whereas to the other the performance of one's duty takes preference. Hence two texts are necessary to include both kinds of offerings.

for the whole portion here follows the order with the exception of this verse.¹ Why? — R. Hisda said: We have it on tradition² that the high priest underwent five immersions and ten sanctifications on that day. And if you were to say that they are recorded in their normal order, you would find but three immersions and six Sanctifications.³ To this R. Zera demurred: But perhaps⁴ he interrupted [the service of the day] with the he-goat that was to be offered up outside? — Abaye replied: Scripture said, ‘He come forth and offer his burnt-offering’⁵ i.e., on his first coming forth he is to offer his burnt-offering, and that of the people.⁵ Raba said: Scripture said, And shall put off the linen garments [etc.].⁶ . Now it was necessary [to add] ‘which he put on’, for can a man put off except what he had put on before? What then is the purpose of stating ‘which he put on’? I.e., which he had put on before.⁷ — To this Rabba son of R. Shila demurred: But perhaps he interrupted with the he-goat to be offered up outside? — Surely it is written: ‘He come forth and offer, etc.’ — But is the rest of the section written in accord with the actual order? Surely the verses say: And the fat of the sin-offering shall he make smoke on the altar,⁸ and then: And the bullock of the sin-offering and the goat of the sin-offering,⁹ whereas we learned: HE WHO SEES THE HIGH PRIEST WHEN HE READS DOES NOT SEE THE BULLOCK AND THE HE-GOAT THAT ARE BURNT,¹⁰ whereas the sacrificial portions of the sin-offering were smoked up afterwards?¹¹ — Read: From this passage on.¹² But what makes you find fault¹³ with the verses, why don't you find fault with the Mishnah rather? — Said Abaye: Scripture states: And he that letteth go... and he that burneth,¹⁴ i.e., just as the letting go takes place before, so does the burning.¹⁵ — On the contrary! [Say:] Just as the burning takes place now,¹⁶ so does the letting go take place now!¹⁷ — ‘And he that letteth go’ implies [to that which was referred to] before.¹⁸ Raba said, Scripture says: [But the goat . . . for Azazel] shall be set alive.¹⁹ How long must it needs be set alive? Until the time of Atonement — Now when is the time of Atonement? At the time when the blood is sprinkled, not beyond it.²⁰

When he who was to take [the he-goat] away came back and met the high priest in the street, he would say to him: Sir high priest, we have fulfilled your request. If he met him in his house, he would say to him: We have fulfilled the request of Him Who grants life to all who live.

Rabbah said: When Rabbis in Pumbeditha would take leave of each other, they would say: May He Who grants life to all who live, grant you a long, happy, and right life! — I shall walk before the Lord in the lands of the living.²¹ Rab Judah said: That means the place of markets [public thoroughfare].²² For length of days, and years of life, and peace, will they add to you.²³ But are there years, which are years of life, and years, which are not years of life? — R. Eleazar said: These are such years of man as have changed from evil to good.²⁴

Unto you, O men, I call.²⁵ R. Berekiah said: They are the disciples of the wise, who resemble women, and do mighty deeds like man.²⁶

R. Berekiah also said: If a man wishes to offer a libation upon the altar, let him fill the throat of the disciples of the wise with wine, as it is said: ‘Unto you, O men, [ishim]²⁷ I call’. Furthermore did R. Berekiah say: If a man sees that Torah ceases from his seed, let him marry the daughter of a disciple of the wise, as it is said: Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground

(1) The whole of chapter XVI of Leviticus describes the service of the Day of Atonement, as it actually took place, with the exception of v. 23 which, followed by the statement, And he shall bathe . . . and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering and the burnt-offering of his people (v. 24), would cause one to infer that the high priest had first entered to fetch the ladle and the fire-pan, and afterwards had offered up his burnt-offering and that of his people; whereas actually he fetched ladle and fire-pan after having offered up these burnt-offerings. V. Supra 32b notes.

(2) The Mishnah cites the traditional number of immersions and sanctifications, supra 19a, 30a and 31a. Every change of garments necessitated two sanctifications and one immersion.

(3) And if one were to assume that the order is exactly described also in vv. 23-24 i.e., that the offering of the two burnt-offerings did not interrupt the service of the Day of Atonement by taking place before the fetching of ladle and fire-pan, then only three changes of garments would be involved, viz., the offering of the continual sacrifice of the morning, performed in the golden garments, the service of the day including the fetching of ladle and fire-pan, in white garments, and the offering up of the two burnt-offerings and the rest of the service, in golden garments again, thus three changes involving but three immersions and six sanctifications. The Biblical account would thus contradict, or render impossible, the tradition as preserved in the Mishnah. To harmonize the two the interpretation is offered that in reality the offering of the burnt-offerings came between the service of the day and the fetching of censer and fire-pan, implying two more changes of garments; for the high priest would offer the two burnt-offerings in white garments, into which and from which he would change from and into the golden garments, so that the five traditional changes and immersions as well as the ten sanctifications traditionally reported are thus established: the continual offering of the morning, due in the golden garments, the service of the day in white ones, the offering up of the two burnt-offerings in the golden garments, the fetching of censer and fire-pan in the white ones, and finally, the additional sacrifices and the continual offering of the evening, in the golden ones.

(4) Since all that is required is harmony between the Mishnaic statement as to five immersions and six sanctifications, it is not necessarily the last suggestion that must be adopted. The he-goat to be offered up outside, prescribed in Num. XXIX, 11 ('the sin-offering of the atonement') too, required two immersions and four sanctifications, hence the number of sanctifications and immersions could be harmonized on this assumption too. The interruption of the service of the day with the he-goat of which no mention is made in the service of the day prescribed in Leviticus, would involve no rearrangement of the Biblical text, such as the first suggestion implied.

(5) Lev. XVI, 24 states that he offers up the two rams, his own and the people's, as soon as he has left the Holy of Holies. Whereas, if he were to have fetched the ladle and the coal-pan first, he would have offered them after his second coming forth from the Holy of Holies.

(6) Lev. XVI, 23. Raba does not endeavour to answer the question propounded by R. Zera, he endeavours to explain the Baraitha, which would emend the Scriptural account by having the order of the service interrupted as above.

(7) That was thus the second stripping off of the garments. Hence there must have been a change of garments between the service of the day and the fetching of the censer and coal-pan, whence it follows that this verse refers to the second stripping off of garments, and comes after the offering up of the two rams by the high priest.

(8) Lev. XVI, 25.

(9) Ibid. v. 27.

(10) Because the burning and the reading took place at the same time, which is when the priest is still wearing the white garments, in which as the Mishnah states he reads.

(11) I.e., at the third immersion when he offers the two rams, i.e., after changing into the golden garments (v. Mishnah supra 70a). This clearly contradicts the order of Biblical verses.

(12) Read, instead of 'except this verse', 'except from this verse on', when the Scriptural verses no more take into account the actual order.

(13) Why don't you rather emend the Mishnah and say that the burning of bullock and he-goat did not take place at the time the high priest read the portion from the Torah, but after the portions of the sin-offering had been smoked, as the Scriptural verses have it.

(14) Lev. XVI, 26 and 28.

(15) Scripture here uses the same participial form in referring to him that letteth go and to him that burneth. That implies a certain analogy. In both passages follows the statement: And the fat of the sin-offering shall he make smoke on the altar. (Ibid. v. 25.) Now the sending away of the he-goat for Azazel preceded that, as v. 21 reads: And he shall send him away by the hand of an appointed man into the wilderness. Of necessity 'He that letteth go' refers to previous passages, as to say: With reference to the letting go of which you were commanded before, i.e., before the smoking of the sacrificial portions of the sin-offering (he that letteth go defiles the garments). The above-mentioned analogy justifies the inference that 'he that burneth' similarly refers to the burning done before.

(16) I.e., after the smoking of his sacrificial portions.

(17) One could also argue just to the contrary, for the analogy could be made in either way: just as the burning takes place after the sacrificial pieces of the sin-offering have been smoked, thus is the reference to him that letteth go, for now. The statement in v. 21 'And he shall send it away' then means, now that the time for this has arrived.

(18) As explained in n. 3.

(19) Lev. XVI, 10: alive, to make atonement for him.

(20) Hence it could not be maintained that the he-goat was to be sent away after the portions of the sacrifice were smoked. That disposes of the last question.

yet through the scent of water it will bud, and put forth boughs like a plant.¹

AND A FESTIVE DAY HE WOULD ARRANGE FOR HIS FRIENDS: Our Rabbis taught: It happened with a high priest that as he came forth from the Sanctuary, all the people² followed him, but when they saw Shemayah³ and Abtalion, they forsook him and went after Shemayah and Abtalion. Eventually Shemayah and Abtalion visited him, to take their leave of the high priest. He said to them: May the descendants of the heathen come in peace!⁴ — They answered him: May the descendants of the heathen, who do the work of Aaron, arrive in peace, but the descendant of Aaron, who does not do the work of Aaron, he shall not come in peace!⁵

MISHNAH. THE HIGH PRIEST PERFORMS THE SERVICE IN EIGHT PIECES OF GARMENTS, AND THE COMMON PRIEST IN FOUR: IN TUNIC, DRAWERS, MITRE, AND GIRDLE. THE HIGH PRIEST ADDS THERETO THE BREASTPLATE, THE APRON, THE ROBE AND THE FRONTLET. IN THESE WERE THE URIM AND THUMMIM⁶ INQUIRED OF. BUT THEY WERE NOT INQUIRED OF EXCEPT FOR THE KING, FOR THE AB BETH DIN⁷ OR FOR ONE WHOM THE COMMUNITY NEEDS.⁸

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: [All] things, in connection with which the word shesh ['fine linen'] is said, had their threads sixfold: 'twined' [denotes] eightfold [threads]; the robe [had its threads] twelvefold; the curtain,⁹ twenty-four-fold; the breastplate and apron twenty-eight-fold. Whence do we know that they had their threads sixfold? — Scripture said: And they made the tunics of fine linen, the mitre of fine linen and the goodly headtires of fine linen, and the linen breeches of fine twined linen.¹⁰ Here are five Scriptural references: One is necessary for the subject itself, that they must be made of flax; one, that their thread shall be sixfold; one to indicate that they must be twisted; one, that this applies also to other garments in connection with which the term 'shesh' is not used, and once, that it is indispensable. What indicates that the word 'shesh' means flax? — R. Jose b. Hanina said: Scripture says: Bad [linen] i.e., whatever comes out of the soil singly.¹¹ But say, perhaps, it is wool? — Wool splits off.¹² But flax also splits? Flax splits into branches through beating.¹³ Rabina said: [I infer it] from this. They shall have linen tires upon their heads, and shall have linen breeches upon their loins.¹⁴ Said R. Ashi to him: But whence did they know that before Ezekiel came? — But, according to your argument, what of R. Hisda's statement: This matter¹⁵ we have learnt not from the Torah of Moses, but from the words of Ezekiel b. Buzi: No alien, uncircumcised in heart and uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into My sanctuary?¹⁶ Who taught this before Ezekiel came? Rather must you say that it was traditionally handed down and when Ezekiel came he strengthened it by attaching it to Scripture; in our case [here] too it was a traditional teaching and Ezekiel strengthened it by attaching it to Scripture.

Whence do we know that 'twined' [denotes] eightfold [threads]? — Scripture says: And they made upon the skirts of the robe pomegranates of blue, and purple, and scarlet, twined.¹⁷ One may infer from the analogy of 'twined' used in connection with the curtain: just as there [each twined thread] was twenty-four-fold,¹⁸ so also here was it twenty-four-fold, the thread of each kind of material being eightfold.¹⁹ - But one should infer from breast-plate and apron: just as there it was twenty-eightfold, so also here twenty-eight-fold?²⁰ — One may infer a thing in connection with which gold is not mentioned from another thing, in connection with which gold is not mentioned;²¹ that excludes the breast-plate and apron in connection with which gold is mentioned. On the contrary! One should, rather, infer concerning one garment from another garment, which would exclude the curtain, because that [in a sense] is a tent! — Rather, if it is inferred from the girdle,²² thus inferring concerning a garment, in connection with which gold is not mentioned from another garment, in connection with which gold is not mentioned; but not inferring concerning anything, in connection with which gold is mentioned from something in connection with which gold is mentioned. R. Mari said: Scripture said: Thou shalt make it,²³ i.e., only, nothing else.²⁴ R. Ashi said: And thou shalt make,²⁵ i.e., all the work in connection therewith must be the same. Now how is that possible? If he were to make the three kinds tenfold each, there would be thirty [threads]. And if one made two ninefold and one tenfold, but Scripture said: ‘And thou shalt make’, i.e., all the work in connection therewith must be alike.

Whence do we know that the robe [had its threads] twelvefold? Because Scripture said: And thou shalt make the robe of the ephod plaited of blue.¹ And one may infer from the analogy of 'blue', used also in connection with the curtain, just as there [each of the materials had its threads]² sixfold, so also sixfold here.³ But let us infer from the skirt and the pomegranates, just as there it was eightfold thus also here eightfold? — One may infer for one garment from another, but one may not infer for a garment from an adornment to a garment. On the contrary! One may infer concerning a matter from the matter itself,⁴ but one may not infer for a thing from something outside thereof. For that reason we said:⁵ One, to inform us concerning other garments in connection with which 'shesh' is not used. The curtain twenty-fourfold. Four [strands of material] each of sixfold [threads], there being here neither controversy nor decision.⁶

Whence do we know that [each twined thread of] breast-plate and apron was twenty-eightfold? Because it is written: And thou shalt make a breast-plate of judgment, the work of the skillful workman; like the work of the ephod thou shalt make it; of gold, of blue and purple, and scarlet and fine twined linen⁷ — four kinds of material, each sixfold, amount to twenty-four threads, and of the gold, one thread to each of the sixfold threads of the four materials, four [threads], together twenty-eightfold [twine]. Perhaps the gold too was sixfold? — R. Aha b. Jacob said: Scripture said: And they [did beat the gold into thin plates and] cut it into threads — that means four.⁸ R. Ashi said: Scripture states: To work it in the blue and in the purple.⁹ How should that be done? Shall one make [the gold] four times in twofold, that would amount to eight [fold gold threads]! Shall one make it twice twofold and twice a one single thread? — Surely the word 'make' indicates that all the work in connection therewith must be alike!

Rehaba said in the name of R. Judah: One who makes a tear in priestly garments is to be punished with lashes, for Scripture said: That it be not rent.¹⁰ R. Aha b. Jacob demurred to this: Perhaps this is what the Divine Law Says: Make a hem lest it be torn?¹¹ — But is it written: Lest it be torn?

R. Eleazar said: One who removes the breast-plate from the apron, or who removes the staves of the ark receives the punishment of lashes, because it was said: That it be not loosed from the ephod,¹² and [the staves] they shall not be removed from it.¹³ — To this R. Aha b. Jacob demurred: But perhaps this is what the Divine Law says: Fasten them and arrange them properly [by forcing the chords through the ring], so that they 'be not loosed', or that they 'be not removed'? — Is it written: 'that they be not loosed' or 'that they be not removed'?

R. Jose b. Hanina pointed out a contradiction. It is written: The staves shall be in the rings of the ark: they shall not be taken from it,¹² and it is also written: The staves thereof shall be put into the rings.¹⁴ How is that possible? They were movable, but could not slip off.¹⁵ Thus also was it taught: 'The staves shall be in the rings of the ark'. One might have assumed that they could not be moved from their place. Therefore the text reads: 'And the staves thereof shall be put into the rings'. If I had this verse [to go by] one might have assumed that they could be taken out and put in again. Therefore the text says: 'the staves shall be in the rings of the ark'. How that now? They were movable but could not slip off.

R. Hama b. Hanina said: What is the meaning of the verse: [Thou shalt make the boards of the tabernacle] of acacia wood, standing up,¹⁶ i.e., they should stand up, even as they grow.¹⁷ Another interpretation: 'Standing up — i.e., they kept up [the gold] they were overlaid with.'¹⁸ Another interpretation: 'Standing up' — one might assume; Their hope [of restoration] is gone,¹⁹ their expectation is frustrated, therefore the text says: 'Standing up, i.e., standing up for ever and ever.

garments for ministering in the holy place.¹ But for the priestly garments, there would not have remained of the haters² of Israel one to remain or to escape.³ R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: In the school of R. Simeon it was taught: [They were] webs which they cut off the looms in the shape required, leaving a small portion of the unwoven thread.⁴ What was that? — Resh Lakish said: It was needle-work.⁵

An objection was raised⁶ 'All priestly garments must not be made by needle-work, but by weaving', as it is said: woven work!⁷ — Abaye said: This applies only to their sleeves, as it was taught: The sleeves of the priestly garments were woven apparently and then attached to the garment.⁸ They reached up to the wrist.

Rehaba said in the name of Rab Judah: Three arks did Bezalel make: the middle one of wood, nine [handbreadths] high; the inner one of gold, eight high, the outer one of gold,⁹ a little more than ten high. But it was taught: A little more than eleven [high]?— That is no contradiction: the one opinion agrees with the view that the thickness thereof¹⁰ was one handbreadth, the other was in accord with the view that the thickness thereof was not one handbreadth.¹¹ And what purpose served the 'little more'?¹² — It is the space of the crown.¹³

R. Johanan said: There were three crowns: that of the altar, that of the ark, and that of the table.

The one of the altar Aaron deserved and he received it. The one of the ark, David deserved and received. The one of the ark is still lying and whosoever wants to take it, may come and take it.¹⁴ Perhaps you might think it is of little account, therefore the text reads: By me kings reign.¹⁵

R. Johanan pointed out a contradiction. It is written: Zar [alien] and we read it: zir? i.e., [crown] — If he deserves it, it becomes a wreath unto him; if not it remains alien to him.¹⁶ R. Johanan pointed out another contradiction. It is written: Make thee an ark of wood,¹⁷ and it is also written: And they shall make an ark of acacia wood?¹⁸ Hence one learns that the inhabitants of his city are obliged to do the work of the scholar for him.

Within and without shalt thou overlay it.¹⁹ Raba said: Any scholar whose inside is not like his outside, is no scholar.²⁰ Abaye, or, as some say, Rabbah b. 'Ulla said: He is called abominable, as it is said: How much less one that is abominable and impure, man who drinketh iniquity like water.²¹ R. Samuel b. Nahmani, in the name of R. Jonathan: What is the meaning of the scriptural statement: Wherefore is there a price in the hand of a fool, to buy wisdom, seeing he hath no understanding,²² i.e., woe unto the enemies of the scholars,²³ who occupy themselves with the Torah, but have no fear of heaven! R. Jannai proclaimed: Woe unto him who has no court, but makes a gateway for his court!²⁴ Raba said to the Sages: I beseech you, do not inherit a double Gehinnom!²⁵

R. Joshua b. Levi said: What is the meaning of the Scriptural verse: And this is the law which Moses set [before the children of Israel]?²⁶ — If he is meritorious it becomes for him a medicine of life, if not, a deadly poison. That is what Raba [meant when he] said: If he uses it the right way it is a medicine of life unto him; he who does not use it the right way, it is a deadly poison.

R. Samuel b. Nahmani said: R. Jonathan pointed out the following contradiction: it is written: The precepts of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart,²⁷ but it is also written: The word of the Lord is tried?²⁸ If he is meritorious, it rejoices him; if not, it tries him.²⁹ Resh Lakish said: From the body of the same passage this can be derived: If he is meritorious, it tests him unto life; if not, it tests him unto death.³⁰ The fear of the Lord is pure, enduring forever.³¹ R. Hanina said: This refers to one who studies the Torah in purity. What does that mean? — He marries a woman and afterwards studies the Torah.³²

The testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.³³ R. Hiyya b. Abba said: It [the Torah] may be entrusted to testify as to those who study it. 'The work of the skillful workman³⁴ . . . the work of the skillful embroiderer.³⁵ R. Eleazar said: Those embroidered over what they had traced. It was taught in the name of R. Nehemiah: The embroiderer's is needle-work, therefore it has only one [visible] figure. The designer's is weaving work, therefore it has two different figures.³⁶

IN THESE WERE THE URIM AND THUMMIM INQUIRED OF. When R. Dimi came [from Palestine] he said: In the garments wherein the high priest officiates, the [priest] Anointed for Battle officiates, as it is said: And the holy garments of Aaron shall be for his sons after him,³⁷ i.e., for him who comes after him in greatness [of office]. R. Adda b. Ahabah, some say Kadi, raised an objection: One might have assumed that the son of the Anointed for Battle succeeds him in service, even as the son of the high priest succeeds him in service,

(1) Ex. XXXV, 19.

(2) Euphemistic for Israel — a calamity is foreshadowed only in indirect fashion.

(3) The root sarad (to plant) also means 'leaving over', hence the interpretation: the garments of escape, because they brought atonement for Israel, thereby preventing their extinction.

(4) Here the term is explained as the garments, one part of which was left over unwoven, or unmade.

(5) [This is difficult, nor is the text apparently quite in order. According to Rashi the meaning is, what is done with the unwoven remnant? And the answer is that it is cut off, woven separately and then sewn on to the main garment].

- (6) Zeb. 88a.
- (7) Ex. XXVIII, 32.
- (8) According to Resh Lakish, then, the unwoven remnant would be used in connection with the sleeves.
- (9) Reading with Bah.
- (10) Of the outer ark.
- (11) [In order to understand the distinction thus drawn, it is well to remember that the three arks were open at the top; consequently if the thickness of the outer one was less than one handbreadth, a height of ten handbreadths and a little more would suffice: nine handbreadths corresponding to the height of the middle ark (when measured from without) and a fraction of a handbreadth to allow for the thickness of the outer ark at the bottom, while one extra handbreadth was necessary for the mercy seat which was inserted between the two side boards of the outer ark to rest upon the thickness of the sides of the two smaller arks. If, however, the thickness of the outer ark was one handbreadth, its height, measured from outside would then have to be at least ten handbreadths whilst for the purpose of the mercy seat an extra handbreadth would be necessary, making a total of eleven. As to the need of the 'little more' this will be explained soon. V. Rashi].
- (12) Mentioned in the Baraitha, v. supra n. 1.
- (13) [V. Ex. XXV, 11. The side boards of the outer ark projected beyond the mercy seat that was inserted between them (cf. n. 1), a kind of rim (crown)].
- (14) Aaron, the first high priest, obtained the crown of priesthood, symbolized by the altar; David, the crown of kingdom; but there is no hereditary crown of learning, it must be acquired by each individual. The aspirants, however, are not many, hence it is still lying unclaimed.
- (15) Prov. VIII, 15. Wisdom is identified with Torah, through which it is acquired.
- (16) The Hebrew spelling of wreath may include the letter 'yod', without it the word might be read 'zar', stranger, hence the illustrative suggestion.
- (17) Deut. X, 1.
- (18) Ex. XXV, 10.
- (19) Ibid. II.
- (20) Inside and outside there should be the same golden character.
- (21) Job XV, 16; rendered, one who drinketh the water of the Torah and yet has iniquity in him.
- (22) Prov. XVII, 16. Wisdom is knowledge of the Torah, understanding is moral rightness, based on fear of heaven. Hence this interpretation.
- (23) Euphemism for 'scholars'.
- (24) Fear of the Lord is the court, the goal. Learning should lead to it. Learning (the gateway) without reverence (the goal) is wasteful, sinful.
- (25) The Mishnah, Aboth VI, indicates that acquisition of the Torah depends upon a frugal way of living, a reduction of the margin of joy to a minimum. The reward is to come in after-life. Such reward depends upon reaching the goal of study; fear of heaven. One who now engages in Torah-study without possessing fear of heaven, suffers in this world, wherein he denies himself pleasure for the sake of his study, as well as in the other world, where because he had no fear of heaven, reward will be denied, punishment inflicted.

therefore the text reads: Seven days shall the son that is priest in his stead put them on, even he who cometh into the tent of meeting [etc.],¹ i.e., he who is worthy of entering the tent of meeting. Now if this were the case,² then he too would be fit [to enter the tent of meeting]? — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: This is what it means: Whosoever was mainly anointed for the [purpose of] the tent of meeting, that excludes him who was anointed mainly for Battle.

The following objection was raised: The Anointed for Battle officiates neither in four garments, like a common priest, nor in eight like a high priest? — Abaye said: Would you render him then a common man?³ Rather: Neither like a high priest, for the sake of preventing ill-feeling;⁴ nor like a common priest, because one promotes to a higher degree of sanctity, but one must not degrade'. R. Adda b. Ahabah said to Raba: But there is a Tanna who pays no attention to the prevention of ill-feeling, yet according to him, he does not officiate?⁵ For it was taught:⁶ In the following points a high priest differs from a common priest: the bullock of the priest anointed;⁷ and the bullock due in case of [unwitting] transgression of any commandment;⁸ the bullock of the Day of Atonement; the tenth of the ephah;⁹ he does not unbind his hair, nor rend his clothes.¹⁰ But he [the high priest] tears his garments from below, and the common priest tears his from above; he must not defile himself for his [deceased] relatives;¹¹ he is under obligation to marry only a virgin;¹² is prohibited from marrying a widow;¹³ causes the slayer to return;¹⁴ as onen [mourner]¹⁵ he may offer up a sacrifice but may not eat or take a share thereof; he receives his portion first and takes first part in the offering [of the sacrifice]; he officiates in eight garments; is exempt¹⁶ [from a sacrifice] for [an unwitting transgression of] defilement relating to the Sanctuary and its hallowed thing, and the whole service of the Day of Atonement is legitimate only when performed by him. All these [laws] apply also to priests consecrated by a larger number of official garments, with the exception of the bullock to be offered up for the transgression of any commandment. All these apply to the high priest who has passed from his high priesthood,¹⁷ with the exception of the bullock of the Day of Atonement and the tenth of the ephah. All these things do not apply to the priest Anointed for Battle, with the exception of five matters mentioned in that portion of the section: he does not unbind his hair, nor rend his clothes; nor defile himself with any [deceased] relative; is obliged to marry a virgin; forbidden to marry a widow; and causes the slayer to return-according to R. Judah; whereas, according to the Sages, he does not cause him to return.¹⁸ Whence does he [the Tanna] consider [the question of] enmity [to arise]? Only with regard to one of similar rank.¹⁹ But with one of inferior rank he does consider it.²⁰

R. Abbahu was sitting and reporting this teaching in the name of R. Johanan, whereupon R. Ammi and R. Assi averted their faces.²¹ (Some say it was R. Hiyya b. Abba who reported this teaching, whereupon R. Ammi and R. Assi averted their faces). To this R. Papa demurred: Granted [that they could not say anything against] R. Abbahu, because of the high regard the Imperial house had for him, but as for R. Hiyya b. Abba, they should have told him explicitly that R. Johanan had not said so!

When Rabin came, he said: This²² was stated with reference to the time when he is consulted.²³ Thus also was it taught: The garments which the high priest wears when he officiates the Anointed for Battle wears when he is consulted.

Our Rabbis taught: How were [the Urim and Thummim] inquired of? — The inquirer had his face directed to him who was consulted, and the latter directed himself to the Divine Presence. The inquirer said: Shall I pursue after this troop?²⁴ He who was consulted answered: 'Thus saith the Lord: Go up and succeed'! R. Judah said: He need not say, 'This saith the Lord' but only 'Go up and succeed' — One does not inquire in a loud voice, as it is said: Who shall inquire for him;²⁵ neither shall one but think thereof in one's heart, as it is said: 'Who shall inquire for him';²⁵ but rather in the manner in which Hannah spoke in her prayer, as it is said: Now Hannah, she spoke in her heart.²⁶

One should not put two questions at the same time; if one has done so, only one [question] is answered; and only the first [question] is answered, as it is said: Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? Will Saul come down,²⁷ etc. . . . and the Lord said.' He will come down.²⁷ But you said: Only the first [question] is answered? — David had asked

(19) The substitute enjoyed the same rank as the high priest.
(20) The Anointed for Battle is of inferior rank to the high priest, and the donning of eight garments would arouse ill-feeling in the high priest.

in wrong order and received his answer in right order.¹ And as soon as he knew that he had asked in wrong order, he asked again in right order, as it is said: Will the men of Keilah deliver up me and my men in to the hand of Saul? And the Lord said.' They will deliver thee up.² But if the occasion required both questions, both were answered, as it is said: And David inquired of the Lord, saying: Shall I pursue after this troop? Shall I overtake them? And He answered him: pursue; for thou shalt surely overtake them and shalt without fail recover all.³ And although the decree of a prophet could be revoked, the decree of the 'Urim and Thummim' could not be revoked, as it is said: By the judgment of the Urim. Why were they called 'Urim and Thummim'? 'Urim' because they made their words enlightening.⁴ 'Thummim' because they fulfil their words. And if you should ask: Why did they not fulfil their words in Gibeah Benjamin?⁵ It is because they did not inquire⁶ [whether the result would be] victory or defeat.⁷ But at last, when conquered, they [the Urim and Thummim] approved their action, as it is said: And Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, stood before it in those days, saying: 'Shall I yet again go out to battle against the children of Benjamin my brother, or shall I cease?' and the Lord said: Go up, for tomorrow I will deliver him into thy hand.⁸

How was it effected? — R. Johanan said: [The letters] stood forth.⁹ Resh Lakish said: They joined each other. But the 'Zade' was missing?¹⁰ R. Samuel b. Isaac said: They contained also the names of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. But the 'Teth', too, was missing? — R. Aha b. Jacob said: They contained also the words: The 'tribes'¹¹ of Jeshurun.

An objection was raised: No priest was inquired of who does not speak by means of the Holy Spirit and upon whom the Divine Presence does not rest, for Zadok inquired and succeeded, whilst Abiathar inquired and failed, as it is said: But Abiathar went up until all the people had done passing out of the city?¹² — He helped along.¹³

AND ONE INQUIRED ONLY FOR A KING. Whence do we know these things? — R. Abbahu said: Scripture said, And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall inquire for him by the judgment of the Urim;¹⁴ 'he' i.e., the king, 'and all the children of Israel with him', i.e., the [priest] Anointed for Battle, 'even all the congregation', that is the Sanhedrin.

CHAPTER VIII

MISHNAH. ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT IT IS FORBIDDEN TO EAT, TO DRINK, TO WASH, TO ANOINT ONESELF, TO PUT ON SANDALS,¹⁵ OR TO HAVE MARITAL INTERCOURSE.¹⁶ A KING OR BRIDE¹⁷ MAY WASH THE FACE, AND A WOMAN AFTER CHILDBIRTH¹⁸ MAY PUT ON SANDALS. THIS IS THE VIEW OF R. ELIEZER. THE SAGES, HOWEVER, FORBID IT. IF ONE EATS THE BULK OF A LARGE DATE, THE LIKE THEREOF, WITH ITS STONE INCLUDED, OR IF HE DRANK A MOUTHFUL, HE IS CULPABLE.¹⁹ ANY FOODS COMPLEMENT ONE ANOTHER IN MAKING UP THE BULK OF A DATE, AND ALL THE LIQUIDS COMPLEMENT ONE ANOTHER IN MAKING UP A MOUTHFUL, BUT WHAT A MAN EATS AND DRINKS DOES NOT GO TOGETHER.²⁰

GEMARA. [Merely] FORBIDDEN? But surely punished with extirpation?²¹ — R. Ela, or as some say, R. Jeremiah, said: This refers only to less than the legal quantity.²² That will be right according to the view that even less than legal quantity is for — bidden by the law of the Torah, but what can be said according to the view that less than the legal quantity is permitted by the law of the Torah? For it was said: As for less than the legal quantity, R. Johanan holds it forbidden by the law of the Torah, but Resh Lakish considers it permitted by the law of the Torah. Now [the above answer] would be right according to R. Johanan, but what can be said according to Resh Lakish? — Resh Lakish would agree that [less than the legal quantity] is forbidden by [decree of] the Rabbis.²³ If that be the case, one should not be liable on account thereof to offer a sacrifice for an oath,²⁴ why then did we learn:²⁵ [If one had sworn] an oath not to eat carrion, trefah things,²⁶ abominable²⁷ or creeping things, and then had eaten thereof, he is culpable? R. Simeon holds him not culpable. And we raised the point in connection therewith: Why should he be culpable? Surely he stands committed to the oath²⁸ from Mount Sinai on! [And] Rab, Samuel and R. Johanan [in reply] said [it is a case] when he includes things permitted in the oath touching foods forbidden,²⁹ whereas Resh Lakish said: This cannot be explained except where he either expressly refers to less than the legal quantity, and that in accord with the view of the Sages,³⁰ or that he made a general statement

(1) He should have asked first: Will Saul come down? Then, Will they deliver me up?

(2) I Sam. XXIII, 12.

(3) Ibid. XXX, 8.

(4) Etym. 'Urim' - lights. 'Thummim' - tam-to be complete, perfect; here true, fulfilled.

- (5) Judg. XX.
- (6) [The text of cur. edd. is not clear and the rendering follows the reading of MS.M. Rashi, on the basis of the present text, explains: They (the Urim and Thummim) did not state clearly, etc.].
- (7) The single question was who should lead them.
- (8) Judg. XX, 28.
- (9) The names of the twelve sons of Jacob were inscribed on the Urim and Thummim. The answer always came through the letters which stood in relief.
- (10) The names of the twelve sons did not include that letter.
- (11) The Hebrew of which includes a teth.
- (12) II Sam. XV, 24. [This is explained, that he retired from the priesthood because he received no reply from the Urim and Thummim. This in turn would indicate that it is the Holy Spirit resting on the priest that gives that reply and not the letters of the Oracle].
- (13) By the priests' merit the oracle came forth.
- (14) Num. XXVII, 21.
- (15) Or any shoes of leather. Tosef. Yoma IV: 'Even cloth-shoes'.
- (16) The term literally means 'use of the bed'.
- (17) Within the first month after the wedding.
- (18) Lit., 'one reconvalescing', whose health is still delicate and to whom a cold may prove dangerous. Leather shoes will protect her against such contingency.
- (19) V. Lev. XXIII, 29.
- (20) To make up the culpable quantity.
- (21) The term forbidden may mean: either unlawful but, de facto, unpunished; or normally: punished with lashes. But transgression by eating would be punished with extirpation, kareth (v. Glos.).
- (22) Lit., 'half the standard'. The usual legal quantity of forbidden foods is the bulk of an olive; on the Day of Atonement, the bulk of a big date. Any less than that, though the eating thereof does not involve one in the prescribed punishment, nevertheless constitutes a transgression. That is what the Mishnah indicates by the term 'forbidden' i.e., in any quantity.
- (23) Even though less than the legal minimum does not involve punishment according to Biblical law, or indeed, may not be forbidden at all, Rabbinical law, as a fence around the laws of the Torah, may declare less than a minimum forbidden, or punishable, too. The dispute between R. Johanan and Resh Lakish would hinge on the question as to whether forbidden foods are so considered in any quantity, however small, or whether the term 'eating' etc. implies a definite minimum below which no transgression at all can be said to have taken place.
- (24) I.e., if someone has sworn that he would not eat less than the legal quantity of a forbidden food. Since that food is forbidden, he has, as it were, already sworn on Mount Sinai, not to eat it; the present oath, therefore, has no force, for the transgression of which no sin-offering is necessary (v. Shebu. 27a).
- (25) Shebu. 21a.
- (26) The word trefah. lit., 'torn', means any kind of abnormal, irregular, ritually inadmissible food. Nebelah 'carion' refers to the flesh of animals which had died a natural death, or in connection with the ritual slaughtering of which a basic mistake or irregularity had been committed.
- (27) Lev. XI, 11, 31, 42, 46.
- (28) Israel swore their allegiance to the Torah, and that oath binds every Israelite.
- (29) Had he sworn not to eat forbidden things, such oaths would imply his non-culpability in case of transgression, i.e., as far as the oath is concerned. But, by including things permitted, he swears an oath, the effect of which is to prohibit for him the eating of otherwise permissible foods. Hence the transgression implies the obligation of sacrifice.
- (30) The Sages hold that an oath 'I will not eat a certain thing' implies 'I will not eat as much as the legal minimum', hence he could be guilty in the case of having eaten less than that only if he had expressly stated: I shall not eat anything at all of that food, his special declaration investing his oath with validity in the case of an infinitesimal amount of the food now forbidden to himself.

and in accord with R. Akiba, who said that a man may prohibit to himself anything in any quantity,¹ however small.² And if you would say that since it is permitted by the Torah, [the law relating to the] sacrifice for an oath is operative,³ surely we learned: An 'oath of testimony'⁴ applies only to those qualified to bear witness;⁵ and we raised the point: what does that mean to exclude, whereupon R. Papa said: This excludes a king, and R. Aha b. Jacob said: This excludes a professional dice-gambler.⁶ Now a dice-player, as far as Biblical law is concerned, is qualified to bear witness and only the Rabbis declared him unfit, and yet an oath does not apply to him?⁷ There it is different, for Scripture said: If he do not utter it,⁸ and this man cannot make a [valid] utterance.⁹

Now would you say that wherever the punishment is extirpation the term 'forbidden' is not used?¹⁰ Surely it was taught: Although the term 'forbidden' was used in connection with all of them,¹¹ the punishment of extirpation applies only to him who eats or drinks, or engages in labour? — This is what is said: When the term 'forbidden' is used, it is applied but to less than the legal minimum, but where the legal minimum has been transgressed the punishment involved is extirpation; and also extirpation is the penalty, that is the case only with him who eats or drinks or engages in labour. Or, if you like, say: When [the Mishnah] uses the term 'forbidden', it refers to the rest [of the transgressions],¹² for Rabbah and R. Joseph taught in the other books of the School of Rab:¹³ Whence do we know that it is forbidden on the Day of Atonement to anoint oneself, to wash, to put on shoes, and to have marital intercourse? Therefore the text reads: [It] is a Sabbath of solemn rest [unto you].¹⁴ [To turn to] the main text: As for the matter of less than the legal minimum, R. Johanan said: It is forbidden by Biblical law, whilst Resh Lakish said: It is permitted by Biblical law. R. Johanan said, It is forbidden by Biblical law; since it could be joined [to form a minimum] it is forbidden food that he is eating. Resh Lakish said: It is permitted by Biblical law, for the Divine Law speaks of eating and this is not [eating].¹⁵ — R. Johanan raised the following objection against Resh Lakish: I know only that whatsoever involves punishment is subject to a prohibition; but in the case of the koy,¹⁶ and what is less than the legal minimum, since they do not involve punishment, I might say that they are not subject to a prohibition either, therefore the text reads: No fat.¹⁷ — This is only Rabbinical and the text [adduced] is but a mere support. And that is also logical. For if one should assume that the prohibition is Biblical, surely [the status of] the koy is doubtful and no Scriptural text is necessary to cover a doubtful¹⁸ case! — Were it only for this there would be no argument, they would hold

(1) R. Akiba, on the other hand, holds that a legal minimum exists only in the case of foods etc. forbidden by the Torah, whereas a man who forbids himself by oath any kind of permitted food, implies that he would not partake of any quantity, however small, thereof.

(2) Now, if Resh Lakish held that even less than the legal minimum is forbidden by Rabbinical decree, then how could he endeavour to explain the case of the man taking the oath as applying to one eating less than the legal minimum? For, since he is interdicted to eat by the law of Deut. XVII, 11: According to the law which they shall teach thee ... thou shalt do . . . thou shalt not turn aside... to the right hand or to the left, from eating food Rabbinically forbidden, his oath is inoperative, hence does not oblige him to offer a sacrifice for his transgression thereof.

(3) Shebu. 30a. The answer of Resh Lakish would endeavour to make a distinction between things forbidden by the Torah, the oath re-forbidding the same to oneself would be considered inoperative and would free the swearer, in the case of transgression, from the obligation to offer up a sacrifice — and things permitted by the Torah, to which the oath could apply, so that if one swore not to eat less than the legal minimum which, because below the legal quantity, would be permitted by the law of the Torah and forbidden only by Rabbinic decree, the oath would operate, and in the case of transgression he would have to bring a sacrifice.

(4) Lev. V, 1f.

(5) V. Shebu. 30a.

(6) The king can neither testify, nor be testified against, because of his exalted position; the gambler cannot testify, because his profession renders him, hence his statements or pledges, untrustworthy.

(7) By Biblical law one is considered a robber only if one actually robs from one's hand, as in II Sam. XXIII, 21 where the technical term 'gazal', rob, is used: He (plucked — lit., 'robbed') the spear out of his hand; v. also B.K. 79b. So that, if the oath does not apply to a gambler, although by Biblical law, he is not prevented from testifying, the proposed distinction is unjustified.

(8) Lev. V, 1.

(9) It means: One whose utterance not merely means speech, but words of meaning, words to be trusted, whereas this gambler's words, since he is untrustworthy, are, legally speaking, no utterance at all.

(10) As insufficient, hence misleading; this being the reason for the first question here in the Gemara.

(11) All the things forbidden, as enumerated in our Mishnah.

(12) Not eating and drinking.

(13) From the School of Rab emanated halachical commentaries not only on Leviticus, but on Numbers and Deuteronomy as well.

(14) Lev. XVI,31 interpreted here as solemn rest not only from work, but from the usual occupations, such as eating, drinking, washing, anointing and having marital intercourse. Just as the term 'solemn day of rest' in connection with the Sabbath is, by the Sages, interpreted as including all manner of work, even not employed in connection with the building of the Sanctuary, so does that term here imply affliction by rest, as above.

(15) Since below the minimum it may be nibbling, but it is eating that is forbidden.

(16) A kind of bearded deer or antelope (Jast.). It is left undecided as to whether it belongs to the genus of cattle, the tallow of which is forbidden, or to beasts of chase, the tallow of which is permitted.

(17) Lev. VII, 23. This proves that less than a legal minimum is prohibited by the Torah.

(18) Since there is no doubt before the Divine Lawgiver, no Scriptural text would be necessary to cover a doubtful situation.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 74b

the koy is a creature by itself. For if you were not to say so, how could R. Idi b. Abin say: 'Also all' includes the koy,¹ since the koy is a doubtful case and surely no Scriptural text is necessary to cover doubtful cases. Hence [what you must say is] a 'creature by itself' is a different case, thus also here [say] 'a creature by itself' is a different case.

Our Rabbis taught: Ye shall afflict your souls.² One might assume that one must sit in heat or cold in order to afflict oneself, therefore the text reads: And ye shall do no manner of work;² just as the [prohibition of] labour [means]: sit and do nothing, so does [the enjoinder of] affliction [signify]: sit and do nothing.³ But say perhaps: If one sit in the sun and is warm, one may not say unto him: rise and sit in the shade; or, when he sits in the shade and is cool, one may not tell him: rise and sit in the sun?⁴ — It is as with labour: Just as you have made no distinction with regard to labour, so in connection with the [prescribed] affliction⁵ is no distinction to be made. Another [Baraita] taught: 'Ye shall afflict your souls'. One might assume that one must sit in heat or cold to afflict oneself, therefore Scripture said: 'And ye shall do no manner of work'. Just as in connection with work [the reference is to] something for which one may become culpable also in another connection,⁶ so with affliction it is to something for which one might become culpable in another connection, and what is that? 'An abhorred thing',⁷ or that which remaineth.⁸ I shall then include only 'the abhorred thing' or that which remaineth, because the penalty there is extirpation but not include tebel,⁹ since the penalty involved therein is not extirpation, therefore the text reads: 'Ye shall afflict', 'and ye shall afflict your souls',¹⁰ which is inclusive. I might then include tebel, the punishment in connection with which is death,¹¹ but not include carrion, the penalty for eating which is not death, therefore the text reads: 'Ye shall afflict', 'and ye shall afflict your souls', which is inclusive. I might then include the [eating of] carrion, which involves a [transgression of a] prohibition, but not profane food, [the eating of] which is not prohibited at all, therefore Scripture said: 'Ye shall afflict', 'and ye shall afflict your souls', which is inclusive. I might then include profane food, the eating of which is not commanded, but exclude terumah,¹² the eating of which is commanded, therefore Scripture said: 'Ye shall afflict', 'and ye shall afflict your souls', which is inclusive. I might then include terumah, which is not subject to the law concerning remaining over, but exclude holy sacrifices, in connection with which the law concerning remaining over applies, therefore the text reads: 'Ye shall afflict', 'and ye shall afflict your souls', which is inclusive. And if you should have any remark [in objection thereto], [I can reply], Behold Scripture said: And I will destroy that soul,¹³ i.e., an affliction which causes a destruction of life, and what is that but [the denial of] eating and drinking? What is [meant by]: And if you should have any remark [in objection thereto]? — One might have said Scripture speaks here of marital intercourse,¹⁴ therefore the text reads: ‘And I will destroy that soul’, i.e., an affliction which causes the destruction of life, and that is [the abstention from] eating and drinking. The School of R. Ishmael taught: Here the phrase ‘affliction’ is used, and there¹⁵ the term ‘affliction’ is used; just as there an affliction through hunger is meant, so is here an affliction through hunger meant. But let us infer from: ‘If thou shalt afflict my daughters’?¹⁶ — One should infer concerning the affliction of a community from another affliction of a community, but not for the affliction of a community from the affliction of an individual. But let us infer it from the ‘affliction’ in Egypt, as it is said: And [the Lord] saw our affliction,¹⁷ and in connection with which we said: This is the enforced abstinence from marital intercourse? — Rather [answer thus]: One infers for a heavenly affliction from another heavenly affliction, but one should not infer concerning a heavenly affliction from an affliction through human beings.¹⁸

Who fed thee in the wilderness with manna . . . that He might afflict thee.¹⁹ R. Ammi and R. Assi [are disputing], one said, You cannot compare one who has bread in his basket with one who has none,²⁰ the other said: You cannot compare one who sees what he eats with one who does not see what he is eating.²¹ R. Joseph said: This is an allusion to [the reason] why blind people eat on without becoming satisfied. Abaye said: Therefore let him who has a meal eat only in daylight. R. Zera said: What Scriptural verse intimates that? Better is the seeing of the eyes than the wandering of the desire.²² Resh Lakish said: Better is the pleasure of looking at a woman than the act itself as it is said: ‘Better is the seeing of the eyes than the wandering of the desire’.

When it giveth its colour in the cup, when it glideth down smoothly.²³ R. Ammi and R. Assi [dispute concerning it], one said: Whosoever fixes

(3) The affliction enjoined is negative; deny to yourself certain things, abstain from them. It does not demand self-affliction by specific activity, such as sitting in the sun on a hot day.

(4) In this case affliction would take the negative form of abstaining from comfort, in accord with the proposition suggested.

(5) Labour, in any form, is prohibited. Just as one is not obliged to engage in positive work of affliction, the negative form of abstention from getting comfort. his eye in the cup,¹ all incestual intercourse appears to him like a plain;² the other said: One who indulges in his cup, the entire world appears to him like a plain.³

Care in the heart, boweth it down.⁴ R. Ammi and R. Assi [explained it differently], one said: One should force it down,⁵ the other said: One should tell thereof to others.⁵

And dust shall be the serpent's food.⁶ R. Ammi and R. Assi [disputed its meaning], one said: Even if the serpent were to eat all the delicacies of the world, he would feel therein but the taste of dust; the other said: Even though he ate all the delicacies of the world, his mind would not be at ease until he had eaten dust.

It was taught: R. Jose said, Come and see how different the action of human beings is from that of the Holy One, blessed be He. If one of flesh and blood is angry with his neighbour he persecutes him as far as depriving him of his livelihood, but it is different with the Holy One, blessed be He. Although He cursed the serpent, yet when he goes up to the roof, there is his food; if he goes down, there is his food. He cursed Canaan:⁷ yet he eats what his master eats, drinks what his master drinks. He cursed the woman,⁸ all are running after her. He cursed the earth,⁹ all are feeding from it.

We remember the fish which we were wont to eat in Egypt for nought.¹⁰ Rab and Samuel [were disputing its meaning], one said: [Fish here means] real fish; the other said: Illicit intercourse.¹¹ One who said it means real fish [explains it so because of] 'which we were wont to eat'; the other who interprets it as 'illicit intercourse', does so because the term 'for nought' is used.¹² But according to him who said it means 'intercourse', does not Scripture read: 'Which we were wont to eat'? — Scripture uses an euphemism, as it is written: She eateth and wipeth her mouth and saith: I have done no wickedness.¹³ What does 'for nought' mean according to him who says they were real fish? — They were brought to them from public property, for a Master taught: When the Israelites were drawing water, the Holy One, blessed be He, prepared for them in the water little fish for their pitchers. According to him who said 'real fish', but with regard to illicit intercourse [he holds] they were not dissolute, it will be quite right that Scripture said: A garden shut up is my sister, etc.¹⁴ but according to the view that fishes mean 'illicit intercourse', what 'fountain sealed' is here? — They were not dissolute with regard to forbidden relations.¹⁵ It will be right according to him who interprets it as 'illicit intercourse', hence Scripture said: And Moses heard the people weeping for their families,¹⁶ i.e., because of the families [relations] with whom they were forbidden to have intercourse; but according to him who interprets it as 'fish', what does 'weeping for their families' mean? — Both¹⁷ are implied.

The cucumbers and the melons.¹⁸ R. Ammi and R. Assi [were disputing its meaning], one said: They found in the manna the taste of every kind of food, but not the taste of these five;¹⁹ the other said: Of all kinds of food they felt both taste and substance, but of these the taste only without the substance.

Now the manna was like gad [coriander] seed.²⁰ R. Assi said [it was] round like a seed [of coriander] and white like a pearl.

Our Rabbis taught: ‘Gad’ i.e., the manna resembled the seed of flax in its capsules. Others say: ‘Gad’ i.e., it was like a tale, which draws the heart of man, even like water.²¹ Another [Baraita] taught: ‘Gad’, because it revealed to Israel whether the child was one of nine months’ pregnancy from the first husband, or of seven months’ [pregnancy] from the second.²² ‘White’,²³ because it makes white [cleanses] the sins of Israel.

It was taught: R. Jose said: Even as the prophet would tell Israel what is to be found in clefts or holes so would the manna reveal to Israel what is to ‘be found in clefts or holes’. How that? If, e.g., two men came before Moses with a law-suit, one saying: You have stolen my servant, the other saying: You have sold him to me, Moses would say to them: To-morrow judgment will be pronounced. To-morrow, then: If his [the slave's] ‘omer was found in the house of his first master, it was evidence that the other one had stolen him; if it was found in the house of his second master, that was proof that the former had sold him to the latter. Similarly, if a man and a woman came before Moses with a suit, he saying: She acted offensively against me, and she asserting: He acted offensively against me, Moses would say to them: To-morrow judgment will be pronounced. On the morrow: If her ‘omer was found in her husband's house, that was proof that she had acted offensively, but if it was found in her father's house, that was evidence that he had acted offensively towards her.²⁴

It is written: And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it,²⁵ and it is also written: And the people shall go out and gather,²⁶ and it is written too: The people went about and gathered it.²⁷ How all that?²⁸ — Unto the righteous it fell in front of their homes; the average folk went out and gathered, whereas the wicked ones had to go about to gather it. It is written: ‘bread’,²⁶ and it is written, [dough of] ‘cakes’,²⁹ and it is written, ‘they ground it’.²⁹ How that? — The righteous received it as bread, the average Israelites as [dough of] cakes, and the wicked ones had to grind it in the handmill. Or beat it in mortars.³⁰ Rab Judah said in the name of Rab, or as some say, R. Hama b. Hanina: That teaches that there came down to Israel with the manna the cosmetics for women, i.e., a thing that is ground in a mortar. And seethed it in pots.³⁰ R. Hama said: This intimates that with the manna there came down to Israel the ingredients for pudding.

And they brought yet unto him freewill-offerings every morning.³¹ What does ‘every morning’ mean? — R. Samuel b. Nahmani, in the name of R. Jonathan said: [This:] Of those things which came down every morning intimates that, together with the manna, there came down to Israel precious stones and pearls, as it is said: And hanesi'im brought the onyx stones;³² [and] it was taught: [nesi'im here means]: clouds literally, as it is said also: As clouds [nesi'im] and winds, without rain.³³ And the taste of it was as the taste of a cake baked with oil.³⁰ R. Abbuha said: [Do not read le-shad (cake), but shad (breast)]³⁴ viz: Just as the infant finds very many a flavour in the breast, so also did Israel find many a taste in the manna as long as they were eating it. Some there are who say: [‘Le-shad’ means] a real demon; even as the demon changes into many colours, so did the manna change into many tastes.³⁵

And Moses said: This shall be when the Lord shall give you in the evening flesh to eat, and in the morning bread to the full.³⁶ A Tanna [taught] in the name of R. Joshua b. Karhah: The flesh for which they asked improperly was given to them at an improper time;³⁷

(1) The Talmud takes the passage in this sense: When he puts his eye i.e., devotes his attention to the cup, when he is drunk.

(2) ‘Mesharim’ (‘smoothly’) is connected with meshor, ‘a plain’.

(3) In his drunken state the man overlooks all handicaps to his desire, be they directed against illicit intercourse or against his neighbour's property.

suh, 'to speak'.

(7) Gen. IX, 26. God did not really curse him, it was Noah who did so. But by decreeing that Canaan be a slave, He seems to confirm Noah's curse.

(8) Here, too, God did not really curse the woman, unless the punishment He meted out to her may imply a curse. All the passages here adduced are connected either by the fact that R. Ammi and R. Assi discussed them or by association of ideas.

(9) Gen. III, 17.

(10) Num. XI, 5.

(11) [I.e., they chafed under the new restrictions in matters of intercourse that had been imposed on them.]

(12) The suggestion is that whereas regular marriage implied widowhood (kethubah), before that mohar (dowry, Ex. XXII, 16), no such financial responsibility is necessary in the case of illicit intercourse.

(13) Prov. XXX, 20, referring to an unchaste woman.

(17) The one (fish) is obvious, the other (illicit intercourse) is suggested.

(18) V. p. 361, n. 4.

(19) The Israelites remembered sadly these foods, cucumbers, melons, leeks, onions, garlic. which they had enjoyed in Egypt and which they now missed. Evidently the manna substituted for all other foods, but these five. The latter were 'absent' because these foods do not agree with women in pregnancy.

(20) Num. XI, 7.

(21) Connecting it with rt. negad, draw, pull, attract.

(22) The 'omer per head in each household (v. Ex. XVI, 16) being arranged miraculously in accord with the true state of affairs, would be found in the house of the true father and thus would reveal whose child the infant was. Gad is thus connected with the causative of nagad, meaning to 'reveal', 'tell'.

(23) Being dependent for their daily food on God's bounty, the children of Israel would reflect on their conduct and continually improve it in order to deserve God's food.

(24) In either situation the 'omer would be found in the home of him who deserved it. The master of the slave would have an additional 'omer bestowed upon himself; the husband whom his wife had offended would have the measure in his house, where she belonged; if the husband had ill-treated her, so that her father's house was a legitimate refuge, her 'omer would be found there. Thus would the gad (to which the manna was compared) reveal the true state of affairs. In the case of the slave he would be restored, on the evidence of the 'omer, to his master; in the case of the wife, either the husband would have to pay her her marriage settlement (kethubah) or, if she had been guilty, she would forfeit it.

(25) Num. XI, 9.

(26) Ex. XVI, 4.

(27) Num. XI, 8.

(28) These three statements seem incompatible with one another; according to Num. XI, 9 the manna fell into the camp; according to Ex. XVI, 4 outside thereof, whereas according to Num. XI, 8 it was so far away from the camp that the people had to go far to find it.

(29) עוגות, Num. XI, 8; this denotes cakes while yet unbaked (Rashi).

(30) Num. XI, 8.

(34) Supplemented from Bah.

(35) The word le-shad may mean cake, as the simple text has it. It may also be connected with shad, 'breast', or with shed, 'demon'. Thus the two following interpretations. The different tastes of the milk depend on the food the mother has eaten.

(36) Ex. XVI, 8.

(37) They had enough cattle to feed their lust for flesh, their importune prayers for flesh, hence, were improper, and they would in punishment receive the flesh at night when, because of the need for preparation, it came too late, 'at an improper time', because usable only the next day.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 75b

whereas the bread for which they asked properly was given to them in its proper time.¹ Here the Torah intimates a matter of good form; that one should eat meat but at night. But surely Abaye said: One who has a meal should eat it only during the day? — We mean: as in day-light.²

R. Aha b. Jacob said: At first Israel were like hens picking in the dunghill, until Moses came and fixed for them a definite meal-time.³

While the flesh was yet between their teeth,⁴ yet it is also written: But a whole month,⁵ how is that? — The average people [died] at once, the wicked ones continued to suffer a whole month. And they spread them all abroad.⁶ Resh Lakish said: Do not read 'wayishtehu' [they spread abroad], but 'wa-yishahtu' [they were slaughtered], which [reading] intimates that the enemies of Israel had incurred the punishment of being slaughtered.⁷ 'Spread abroad'; it was taught in the name of R. Joshua b. Karhah: Do not read 'shatoah', but 'shahut' [ritually killed], which would intimate that there came down to Israel together with the manna something requiring ritual killing.⁸ Rabbi replied: So must you infer it from here. Was it not stated before: He caused flesh also to rain upon them as the dust, and winged fowl as the sand of the sea?⁹ And was it not taught: Rabbi said, Then thou shalt kill [of thy herd and of thy flock]. . . as I have commanded thee.¹⁰ This teaches that Moses received commandments concerning the gullet, and the windpipe, and concerning the larger part of one [organ] in the case of a fowl, and the larger part of two in the case of cattle?¹¹ What then does 'shatoah' [read, shahut] intimate? — That they [the quails] came down so as to form layers.

It is written: 'bread', but it is also written, 'oil' and it is also written, 'honey'?¹² — R. Jose b. Hanina said: Bread for the youths, oil for the aged, honey for the infants. It is written 'shlaw' and we read: slaw?¹³ — R. Hanina said: The righteous eat it at ease,¹⁴ whereas when the wicked eat it, it is unto them like thorns.¹⁵ R. Hanan b. Abba said: There are four kinds of slaw [quails]: thrush, partridge, pheasant and quail proper; the best of all is the thrush, the worst of all is the quail proper, which is like a small bird. [One stuffs it],¹⁶ places it in the oven, and it swells up, and becomes so big that it fills the oven. Thereupon one places it on top of twelve loaves of bread, and [even] the lowest one of them cannot be eaten without [some other food] in combination.¹⁷ Rab Judah would find them among his jars; R. Hisda among the twigs. Unto Raba his field labourer used to bring them from the meadow¹⁸ every day. One day he did not bring them. He wondered: Why this? He went up to the roof and heard a child which read: When I heard, my inward parts trembled.¹⁹ Thereupon he said: One knows from this that R. Hisda is dead.²⁰ It is for this reason that people say: By the merit of his master eats the pupil. It is written: And when the layer of dew was gone up,²¹ but it is also written: And when the dew fell?²² — R. Jose b. Hanina said: There was dew above, and dew below it; it resembled something placed in a box. A fine scale-like thing [mehuspas];²³ Resh Lakish said: It is something that melts on the wrist [palm] of the hand.²³ R. Johanan said: [It means] something which is absorbed by the two hundred and forty-eight parts [of the human body].²⁴ But [the numerical value] of mehuspas is much more?²⁵ — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: The word is written defective. Our Rabbis taught: Man did eat the bread of the mighty,²⁶ i.e., bread which ministering angels eat. This was the interpretation of R. Akiba. When these words were reported to R. Ishmael he said to them: Go forth and tell Akiba: Akiba, thou hast erred. For do, indeed, the ministering angels eat bread? Was it not said long ago: I did neither eat bread, nor drink water?²⁷ How, then, do I interpret 'the bread abbirum [of the mighty]'? I.e., bread which was absorbed by the two hundred and forty-eight parts [ebarim]. Then how do I apply: And thou shalt have a paddle among thy weapons?²⁸ That refers to what [foods] the foreign merchants were selling unto them. R. Eleazar b. Perata said: Even of the foodstuff which merchants of other nations sold them, the manna would counteract the effect. What then is the meaning of 'And thou shalt have a paddle among thy weapons'? — That applied to the time after their offence.²⁹ The Holy One, blessed be He, said: I thought they shall be like ministering angels, but now I shall burden them with the walk of three parasangs³⁰ as it is written: And they pitched by the Jordan, from Beth-jeshimoth even unto Abel-shittim.³¹ And Rabbah b. Hana had said: I have seen this place, it is three parasangs in extension.³² And furthermore it was taught when they went to relieve nature they went neither forward, nor sideways, but rearwards.³³

But now our soul is dried away: there is nothing at all.³⁴ They said: This manna will swell up their bowels, for is there one born of woman who absorbs food without eliminating it too? But when these words were reported before R. Ishmael he said to them: Do not read abbirim [mighty] but ebirim [parts of the body], i.e., something which is absorbed by the two hundred and forty-eight parts. But how do I then interpret: 'And thou shalt have a paddle among thy weapons'? — That refers to food that came to them from the distant parts.³⁵ Another interpretation of: Man did eat the bread of the mighty:

(1) Nobody can live without bread, hence that prayer was proper.

(2) By the light of torch, or candle.

(3) Morning and evening, the manna and the quails respectively.

(4) Num. XI, 33.

(5) Ibid. v. 20.

(6) Ibid. v. 32. This suggestion, although aggadic, is not ungrammatical, metathesis being frequent, as in kesseb, kebess (sheep).

(7) Perhaps because of their unrighteous clamour for flesh, when they had cattle of their own. 'Enemies of Israel' is an euphemism for 'Israel'.

(8) Hence we infer that quails were of a species that require ritual killing.

(9) Ps. LXXVIII, 27. 'Before' means, before this indirect inference there was a clear text to convey this teaching.

(10) Deut. XII, 21.

(11) The windpipe and the gullet, one in the case of fowl, both in the case of cattle, must be cut according to the ritual. There is no commandment anywhere in the Pentateuch as to the details of ritual slaughtering of animals or birds, called shechitah. Hence 'as I have commanded thee' must needs refer to another source of law: the unwritten or oral one.

(12) In reference to the manna. Ex. XVI, 29, 31 and Num. XI, 8. Three different tastes are ascribed to this food.

(13) The spelling is ש, the pronunciation ש. The deviation indicates another aspect.

(14) The Hebrew word (with ש) may be traced to a root meaning 'ease'. Thus the homiletical interpretation.

(15) The Aramaic equivalent of the reading means 'thorn', hence the suggestion that slaw in addition to the simple text meaning, has also other implications.

(16) Supplemented from Bah.

(17) It is so greasy that without some other dry food added it would be indigestible.

(18) Bah.

(19) Hab. III, 16.

(20) This story is very satisfactorily explained in Schatzkes' Mafteah I, Warsaw, 1866. R. Hisda, in spite of his great riches, was very frugal in his habits and so economical that he would not entrust even the management of wood to any servant, but himself every day handed wood to the cooks (Git. 56a). Although he would find the quails among his twigs, he would prevent anyone from laying his hands upon these delicacies. His son-in-law Raba, therefore, arranged with a tenant-farmer to bring them. His failure to bring them one day Raba rightly attributed to the thought that something had happened which rendered such service unnecessary. To this inference he added, according to widespread custom, the additional reliance on the implications of a text the first child he met would be studying. When that text suggested evil news the 'evidence was complete'.

(21) Ex. XVI, 14.

(22) Num. XI, 9. The passage in Ex. suggests that the dew covered the manna, whereas the verse in Num. indicates that the dew was below the manna.

(23) There is a play on 'mah', 'melt', and 'pas', 'palm'.

(24) The numerical value of 'Mehuspas': Mem = 40, heth = 8, samek = 60, pe = 80 and samek = 60, together 248. V. Mak., Sonc. ed., p. 169, n. 5.

(25) The part. pass. is usually spelt with a waw, which makes its numerical value plus 6 =254; whereas the reading is plene, the text is without the waw מַחֲסַפִּים, hence 248; and the inference as to the 248 parts of the body is supported.

(26) Ps. LXXXVIII, 25.

(27) Deut. IX, 18.

(28) Ibid. XXIII, 14. The paddle is to serve thus: And it shall be, when thou sittest down abroad, thou shalt dig therewith, and shalt turn back, and cover that which cometh from thee. But, if the manna was completely absorbed, there was nothing 'coming from the Israelite', hence no need for the paddle.

(29) In complaining of the manna as Num. XXI, 5; Our soul loatheth this light bread.

(30) To get outside the confines of the camp for the call of nature.

(31) Num. XXXIII, 49.

(32) 'Er. 55b.

(33) None would turn backwards, therefore there was no offence against common decency involved.

(34) Num. XI, 6.

(35) Lit., 'province of the sea'.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 76a

That is Joshua for whom manna [specially] fell down as it did to¹ all Israel, [for] it is written: here, 'man',² and also there it is written: Take thee Joshua, the son of Nun, a man in whom is spirit.³ But perhaps it is Moses, of whom it is said: Now the man Moses was very meek?⁴ — One may infer ish from ish, but not ish from we-ha-ish.⁵

R. Simon b. Yohai was asked by his disciples: Why did not the manna come down unto Israel once annually? He replied: I shall give a parable: This thing may be compared to a king of flesh and blood who had one son, whom he provided with maintenance once a year, so that he would visit his father once a year only. Thereupon he provided for his maintenance every day, so that he called on him every day. The same with Israel. One who had four or five children would worry, saying: Perhaps no manna will come down to-morrow, and all will die of hunger. Thus they were found to turn their attention to their Father in Heaven. Another interpretation: They ate it whilst it was yet warm.⁶ Another interpretation: Because of the burden of the way.⁷

And it long ago happened that R. Tarfon, R. Ishmael and the Elders were seated and occupied with the portion referring to the manna, and also R. Eleazar of Modiim was seated among them. R. Eleazar of Modim commenced [to expound] and said: The manna which came down unto Israel was sixty cubits high! R. Tarfon said to him: Modite! How long will you rake words together and bring them up against us?⁸ — He answered: My master! I am expounding a Scriptural verse.

Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail; and the mountains were covered.⁹ Were there indeed fifteen cubits [high] in the valley, [fifteen cubits in the lowlands],¹⁰ fifteen cubits on the mountains?¹¹ Were the waters standing like a series of walls? And, furthermore, how could the ark come to the top [of the mountains]? Rather, all the fountains of the great deep came up first until the water was even with the mountains, then the water rose fifteen more cubits. Now which measure is larger, that of reward or punishment? You must needs agree that the measure of goodness [reward] is larger. Now with the measure of punishment it is written: The windows of heaven were opened,¹² with the measure of goodness, however, it is said: And he commanded the skies above, and opened the doors of heaven; and caused manna to rain upon them for food, and gave them of the corn of heaven.¹³ [And a Tanna taught]:¹⁴ Now how many windows has a door? Four; hence 'doors' [imply] eight.¹⁵ Thus it is found that the manna which fell upon Israel was sixty cubits. It was taught: Issi b. Judah says: The manna which fell down for Israel rose so high that all the kings of the east and the west could see it, as it is said: [Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of my enemies. . .] my cup runneth over.¹⁶ (Abaye said: It is evident from this that the cup of King David in the future world will hold two hundred and twenty-one logs, as it is said: My cup is rewayah [overflowing], and this is the numerical value of rewayah).¹⁷ But there is no comparison: there it took forty days, here only one hour;¹⁸ or there for all the world, here for Israel alone;¹⁹ and it should have been higher still! — [Rather]: R. Eleazar of Modim infers it from the analogy of ‘opened’, ‘opened’.²⁰

[ON YOM KIPPUR] EATING IS FORBIDDEN. To what do the five afflictions correspond? — R. Hisda said: To the five afflictions mentioned in the Torah: And on the tenth day:²¹ howbeit on the tenth day;²² a sabbath of solemn rest;²³ it is a sabbath of solemn rest,²⁴ and it shall be unto you.²⁵ But these are only five, whereas [in our Mishnah] we learned of six [afflictions]? — Drinking is included in eating. For Resh Lakish said: When do we know that drinking is included in eating? Because Scripture said: And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God . . . the tithe of thy corn, of thy [tirosh] wine, and of thine oil;²⁶ ‘tirosh’ is wine and yet Scripture reads: ‘And thou shalt eat’. Whence this proof? Perhaps it means that he used it as all admixture to elaiogarum?²⁷ For Rabbah b. Samuel said: Elaiogarum contains the juice of beets; oxygarum the sauce of all kinds of boiled vegetables? — Rather, said R. Aha b. Jacob, is that inferred from here: And thou shalt bestow thy money for whatever thy soul desireth, for oxen, for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink.²⁸ [To] wine and strong drink [applies the term] drinking and yet the Divine Law reads: ‘And thou shalt eat’. How is that [conclusive]? — Perhaps here, too, the implication is that he uses it as an admixture to elaiogarum?— Scripture says ‘Strong drink’, i.e., something which intoxicates.²⁹ But perhaps the reference here is to preserved figs from Keilah, for it was taught: If one [a priest] ate preserved figs from Keilah,³⁰ and drank honey and milk, and thus entered the Sanctuary

(5) Analogy should be built upon exact similarity, almost identity, not on relative similarity of expression; according to this rigid rule no analogy from ‘ish’ to ‘ha-ish’ or vice versa could be argued.

(15) At least two are implied in ‘doors’ hence at least eight windows. But the measure of goodness surpasses the measure of punishment (as e.g., Ex. II, 6, 7). There were at least two ‘windows’ of heaven at the flood, as implied in ‘windows’ which poured forth fifteen cubits of rain; the eight windows (of the two doors of heaven) must have produced at least no less, i.e., sixty cubits of manna, since the measure of goodness is surely no smaller than that of punishment. So that ‘sixty’ here is to be taken as minimum.

(16) Ps. XXIII, 5, 6. This reckoning is stimulated by the preceding one.

(17) The psalm is taken as prophetic of restoration — either in this world (then ‘in the future’ at the time of the Messiah) or in the world to come (usual interpretation).

(18) Between the flood and manna.

(19) Here the argument is in favour of a higher measure for the manna. For since the space wherein it fell was limited, whilst the windows of heaven presumably were capable of pouring out the same quantity, the manna confined to a small area should have risen very much higher than the waters, which covered all the earth.

(20) Gen. VII, 11 and Ps. LXXVIII, 23; he does not employ the argument of a greater measure in store for reward than for punishment; but merely from the fact that in each case two windows produced a height of fifteen cubits — whether of manna or water.

he is culpable?¹ — Rather, he infers it by analogy of ‘strong drink’ from the Nazirite.² Just as there it means wine, so here too is wine involved. But is ‘tirosh’ wine? Was it not taught: One who takes a vow to abstain from ‘tirosh’ is forbidden to use any sweet drink but may use wine? — But is [‘tirosh’] not wine? Surely it is written: And tirosh makes the maids flourish!³ The thing which is derived from ‘tirosh’ makes maids flourish.⁴ But it is written: And thy vats shall overflow with tirosh?⁵ — Thy vats shall overflow with what is derived from ‘tirosh’. But it is written: Harlotry, wine and tirosh take away the heart?⁶ — Rather, everybody agrees that ‘tirosh’ is wine, but with regard to vows we go after common parlance.⁷

Why is it [wine] called ‘yayin’ and ‘tirosh’? — It is called ‘yayin’ because it brings lamentation into the world, and ‘tirosh’ ‘because he who indulges in it becomes poor.’⁸

R. Kahana pointed out a contradiction: It is written ‘tirash’ and we read ‘tirosh’! — If he is meritorious he becomes a head [rosh] through it; if not, he becomes poor [rash] through it.⁹ Raba pointed out this contradiction: The text reads, ‘yeshammah’, whilst we read ‘yesammah’?¹⁰ — If he is meritorious it makes him happy, if not, it makes him desolate. That is why Raba said: Wine and odorous spices made me wise.¹¹

Whence do we know that [abstention from] bathing and from anointing oneself is considered an affliction? — Because it is written: I ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in my mouth, neither did I anoint myself at all.¹² What does ‘I ate no pleasant bread’ mean? — Rab Judah, in the name of R. Samuel b. Shilath said: He ate not even bread made of pure wheat. Whence do we know that [the abstention from anointing] was considered an affliction? Because it is written: Then he said unto me: Fear not, Daniel, for from the first day that thou didst set thy heart to understand, and to afflict¹³ thyself before thy God, thy words were heard; and I am come because of thy words.¹⁴ We have found it now with regard to [abstention from] anointing oneself. Whence do we know it about [abstention from] washing? — R. Zutra, son of R. Tobiah said: Scripture reads: And it is come into his inward parts like water, and like oil into his bones.¹⁵ But perhaps that applies to drinking it? — It is compared to oil; just as the oil is applied externally, so also the water [is such as is applied] externally. But a Tanna teaches just the reverse, for we learned: Whence do we know that anointing oneself is like drinking on the Day of Atonement? Although there is no conclusive evidence for this, there is some intimation, for it is said: ‘And it is come into his inward parts like water, and like oil into his bones’?¹⁶ — Rather, said R. Ashi: [That abstention from] washing [is considered an affliction] is evident from the verse itself, for it is written: ‘Neither did I anoint myself at all’.¹⁷ What does: ‘And I am come because of thy words’ mean?¹⁸ — It is written: And there stood before them seventy men of the elders of the House of Israel, and in the midst of them stood Jazaniah, the son of Shapan, every man with his censer in his hand; and a thick cloud of incense went up.¹⁹ [Furthermore]: And the form of a hand was put forth, and I was taken by a lock of my head; and a spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me into the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the gate of the inner court that looketh toward the north; where

(4) The argument is not too obvious. According to Rashi the point under consideration is whether 'tirosh' is the name for wine (new wine) or for the grapes themselves. If the latter is accepted wine is 'that which is derived from tirosh (berries)'.

(5) Prov. III, 10 and into vats the wine is poured, not the berries!

(6) Hos. IV, II. Surely grapes would not fit into this context.

(7) And in common parlance 'tirosh' and 'yayin' are separated.

(8) The first is a play on 'ya, ya' exclamation of woe, the second on the second syllable of 'tirosh', which is connected with 'rash', to become poor, as if 'tirosh' meant, You will become poor.

(9) The text connected with the root meaning 'poor', the reading with the noun 'rosh', head.

(10) Ps. CIV, 15. Again a difference between text and pronunciation with a significance attached to both; samah means 'rejoicing', 'shammah' is connected with 'shammah', desolation, the 'he' and 'heth' interchanging.

(16) Here water in the verse is taken to refer to 'drinking' from which 'anointing' is derived, contrary to the conclusion just arrived at whereby the meaning of 'water' is derived from its juxtaposition to 'oil'.

(17) Lit., '(as to) anointing I did not anoint myself at all'. 'At all' means, not even washing, which may be preparatory.

(18) When was he driven out, so that he had to re-enter? The reference is to 'the man clothed in linen', (v. ibid. verse 5) identified infra with Gabriel.

there was the seat of the image of jealousy, which provoketh to jealousy.¹ [Furthermore]: And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east; and they worshipped the sun toward the east.² Now from the implication of the text: 'And their faces toward the east', do I not know that their backs were toward the temple of the Lord? Why then does the text state: 'With their backs toward the temple of the Lord'? It teaches that they uncovered themselves and committed a nuisance toward that which is below.³ The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Michael:⁴ Michael, your nation has committed sin. Michael answered: Lord of the Universe! Let the good ones among them be considered sufficient! He replied: I shall burn both them and the good ones among them! Immediately then: And he spoke unto the man clothed in linen, and said: Go in between the wheelwork, even under the cherub, and fill both thy hands with coals of fire from between the cherubim, and dash them against the city. And he went in my sight.⁵ Thereupon: And the cherub stretched forth his hand between the cherubim unto the fire that was between the cherubim, and took thereof and put it into the hands of him that was clothed in linen, who took it and went out.⁶ R. Hana b. Bizna said in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: Were it not for the fact that the coals of the hand of the cherub became cold [in the process of coming] into the hands of Gabriel,⁷ there would not have been left over from the 'enemies of Israel'⁸ one to remain or one to escape, for it is written: And behold the man clothed in linen, who had the inkhorn on his side, reported, saying: 'I have done according to all that Thou hast commanded me'.⁹ R. Johanan¹⁰ said: In that hour Gabriel was led out behind the curtain and received forty fiery strokes, he being told: If you had not executed the command at all, well, you simply would not have executed it.¹¹ But since you did execute it, why did you not do as you were commanded?¹² Furthermore: Don't you know that:¹³ 'One brings no report about mischief'?¹⁴ Thereupon Dubiel,¹⁵ the guardian angel of the Persians, was brought in and placed in his stead, and he officiated for twenty-one days. This is what is written: But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days; but lo, Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me; and I was left over there beside the kings of Persia.¹⁶ Twenty-one provinces and the port of Mashmahig¹⁷ were given to him. Thereupon he said: Put down for me Israel for the polltax! They did so. Put down the Sages for the poll-tax! They did so. When they were about to sign, Gabriel came forth from behind the curtain and said: It is vain for you that ye rise early, and sit up late, ye that eat the bread of toil; so He giveth unto His beloved in sleep.¹⁸ (What does 'So He giveth unto His beloved in sleep' signify? R. Isaac said: This refers to the wives of the scholars who deny themselves sleep in this world, and acquire the world to come).¹⁹ No attention was paid to him. He said before Him: Lord of the Universe, if all the wise men of other nations were in one scale of the balance, and Daniel, the man of pleasant parts, in the other, would he not be found to outweigh them all? — The Holy One, blessed be He, said: Who is it that pleads the merit of my children? They replied: Lord of the Universe, it is Gabriel. He said: Let him come in, as it is written: 'And I am come [in] because of thy words'. Having commanded that they bring him in, they brought him in. He noticed that Dubiel held the document in his hand, and he wanted to take it from him, but the former swallowed it. Some say: [The document] was written out, but not signed. Others say: It was also signed, but as he swallowed it, the signature was blotted out. Hence there are some people in the kingdom of Persia who are obliged to pay poll-tax, while others are free from it. And when I go forth, lo, the prince of Greece shall come.²⁰ He cried and cried and none minded him.

Or, if you like, that [abstention from] washing is considered an affliction is deducible from here. For it is written: And unto Abiathar the priest said the king: 'Get thee to Anathoth, unto thine own fields; for thou art deserving of death; but I will not at this time put thee to death, because thou didst bear the ark of the Lord God before David my father, and because thou wast afflicted in all wherein my father was afflicted'.²¹ And concerning David it is written: For they said: 'The people is hungry, and faint and thirsty in the wilderness'.²² 'Hungry' because of no bread; 'thirsty' because of no water; 'faint' because of what? Would you not say: Because of no washing?²³ — But perhaps 'faint' [means] because of no sandals? — Rather said R. Isaac, [it is to be deducted] from this: As cold water to a faint soul.²⁴ But perhaps it means: [Faint] from [lack of] drink? — Does Scripture read: 'Into a faint soul'? Upon a faint soul is written! And whence is to be inferred that [abstention from wearing] sandals [is considered an affliction]? Because it is written: And David went up by the ascent of the Mount of Olives and wept as he went up; and he had his head covered, and went bare.²⁵ 'Bare' of what? Obviously 'of shoes'. Perhaps it means bare because without horse and whip? — Rather, said R. Nahman b. Isaac, the inference comes from: Go and loose the sack-cloth from off thy loins, and put thy shoe from off thy foot,²⁶ and it is written: And he did so, walking naked and bare.²⁶ 'Bare' of what? Obviously bare of sandals. But perhaps [it means he went] in patched shoes. For, if you were not to interpret thus, 'naked' would also have to be explained as stark naked? Rather, must you here too explain: [naked] i.e., in shabby garments, thus also 'bare' in patched sandals! — Rather, said R. Nahman b. Isaac: [It is derived] from here: Withhold thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst,²⁷ i.e., withhold thyself from sin lest thy foot become unshod; withhold thy tongue from idle speech, lest thy throat become dry [faint with thirst].

Whence do we know that [abstention from] marital intercourse is considered an affliction? — Because it is written: If thou shalt afflict my daughters, and if thou shalt take wives beside my daughters,²⁸ [i.e.,]

'if thou shalt afflict' by denying conjugal duty, 'if thou shalt take' refers to rivals. But say [perhaps]: Both [afflictions due] to rival women? — Does Scripture say: 'If thou shalt take',¹ it reads: 'And if thou shalt take'. But perhaps both refer to affliction through rivals; one through rivalries among them, the other through rivalries of new wives, so that ['if thou shalt afflict'] would be the same as 'if thou shalt take'.² Does Scripture say: 'If thou wilt take and afflict'? It reads: If thou shalt afflict and thou shalt take.³ R. Papa said to Abaye: But intercourse in itself is described as affliction, for it is written: And he lay with her and afflicted her?⁴ He answered: He afflicted her through other [forms of] intercourse.

Our Rabbis taught: It is forbidden to wash part of the body [on the Day of Atonement], as [it is forbidden to wash] the whole body. But if one was soiled with mud or excrement, he may wash in his usual way without any fear.⁵ It is forbidden to anoint part of the body [as it is forbidden to anoint] the whole body. If, however, one was sick or had scabs on his head, he may anoint himself in his usual way without any fear. The School of R. Menasseh taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: A woman may wash one of her hands in water to give bread to an infant without any fear. It was reported about the older Shammai⁶ that he would not [hand food] to be eaten even with one hand, whereupon the Rabbis decreed that he must do so with both hands.⁷ Why that? Abaye said: Because of Shibta.⁸

Our Rabbis taught: One who goes to visit his father or his teacher, or his superior,⁹ may walk through water up to his neck without any fear. They asked: How about a master who visits his disciple? — Come and hear: For R. Isaac b. Bar Hana said: I saw Ze'iri who went to R. Ashi, his disciple. R. Ashi said: That was R. Hiyya b. Ashi, who went to Ze'iri, his master. Raba permitted the people of 'Ibar Jemina¹⁰ to walk through water for the purpose of guarding [fruits] the crop.¹¹ Abaye said to Raba: I know a teaching that supports you [your decision]: Those who guard the crop may walk up to the neck through water without any fear. R. Joseph permitted the people of Be Tarbu¹² to walk through the water in order to go to the lecture [of the Day of Atonement] but he did not permit them to return [in the same fashion]. Abaye said to him: If so, you will put a stumbling-block in their way for the future.¹³ Some say: He permitted them to go and to return [through water], whereupon Abaye said: Quite right [to permit them] to do so on the way to the lecture, but why the permission on their return? — Lest you put a stumbling-block in their way for the future.

Rab Judah and R. Samuel son of R. Judah were standing at the bank of Nehar Papa,¹⁴ at the ford of Hazdad, and Rami b. Papa was standing on the other bank. He shouted across: How about going over to you to inquire about a decision of the Law? Rab Judah answered; Rab and Samuel both agree: One may come over, provided one take not one's hand out of the bosom of his shirt.¹⁵ Some say: It was R. Samuel, son of Rab Judah who said: We were taught, He may come over, provided he take not his hand out of the bosom of his shirt.

R. Joseph demurred: But, even on a weekday is such action permitted?¹⁶ Does not Scripture say: He measured a thousand cubits and he caused me to pass through the waters, waters that were to the ankles;¹⁷ hence we infer that it is permitted to pass through water up to the ankles. Again he measured a thousand, and caused me to pass through the waters, waters that were up to the knees;¹⁸ hence we learn that it is permitted to pass through waters up to the knees. Again he measured a thousand, and caused me to pass through waters that were to the loins;¹⁸ hence we know that it is permissible to pass through water up to the loins. Henceforth: Afterward he measured a thousand, and it was a river that I would not pass through.¹⁹ Abaye said: It is different with a river whose waters run rapidly.²⁰ One might have assumed that it is permissible to swim across such a river, therefore the text reads: For the waters were risen, waters to swim in.¹⁹ What does 'sahu' mean? —

‘Swim’, for a swimmer is called ‘sayaha’. One might have assumed that it is permissible to pass through such [river] in a small Liburnian boat, therefore the text reads: Wherein, shall go no galley with oars.²¹ One might have assumed that one may cross it in a big Liburnian ship, therefore Scripture says: Neither shall gallant ship pass thereby.²⁰ How does that follow from the text? — As R. Joseph interprets it: No fisher's boat goes thereon, no big boat traverses it.²² R. Judah b. Pazzi said: Even the Angel of Death has no permission to cross it, for here it is said: ‘Wherein shall go no galley with oars [shayit].’²³ and there it reads: From going [shut] to and fro in the earth.²³ R. Phinehas in the name of R. Huna of Sepphoris said: The spring that issues from the Holy of Holies in its beginning resembles the antennae of locusts; as it reaches the entrance to the Sanctuary it becomes as the thread of the warp; as it reaches the Ulam,²⁴ it becomes as the thread of the woof; as it reaches the entrance to the [Temple] court, it becomes as large as the mouth of a small flask, that is meant by what we learned: R. To emphasize that they imposed upon him the obligation to wash both his hands before handing food to his infant.

which will bubble forth from under the threshold of the Sanctuary.¹ From there onwards it becomes bigger, rising higher and higher, until it reaches the entrance to the House of David.² As soon as it reaches the entrance to the house of David, it becomes even as a swiftly running brook, in which men and women afflicted with gonorrhoea, menstruating women, and women after childbirth bathe, as it is said: In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for purification and for sprinkling.³ Said R. Joseph: Hence there is an intimation that a menstruating woman [at her purification] must sit in water [that reaches in height] up to the neck. But the law is not in accord with him.

(That will be right on the Day of Atonement, on which no sandal is worn). But what about the Sabbath on which sandals are worn?⁴ — R. Nehemiah, the son-in-law of the Prince,⁵ said: I saw R. Ammi and R. Assi who reached a pool of water and crossed it dressed.⁶ That is all right in shoes, but what can be said in the case of sandals?⁷ R. Rihumi said: I saw Rabina, who crossed it in sandals. R. Ashi said: One must not do so at the outset in sandals. The Exilarch once came to Hagronia to the house of R. Nathan. Rafram and all the Rabbis attended his lecture, Rabina did not. Next day Rafram wanted to remove Rabina from the mind of the Exilarch,⁸ so he said to him: 'Why did you not come to the lecture, Sir?' He answered: 'My foot hurt me'. 'You should have put shoes on!' 'It was the back of the foot'. 'You should have put sandals on'. He answered: 'A pool of water was in the way'. 'You should have crossed it in them,'. He replied: 'Don't you hold, Sir, the view of R. Ashi, that one must not at the outset do so in sandals'!

Judah b. Gerogeroth taught: It is forbidden to sit on moist muddy ground on the Day of Atonement. R. Joshua b. Levi said: This refers to mud which makes wet [those sitting on it]. Abaye said: If it is moist enough to moisten other subjects.

Rab Judah said: It is permitted to cool off [by sitting] on fruit on the Day of Atonement. Rab Judah would cool off through squash, Raba through fresh twigs, Rabbah through a silver cup. R. Papa said:⁹ On a silver vessel one may not cool oneself if it is full; it is permissible only when it is not full. On an earthen vessel it is forbidden in either case, because [the unglazed vessel] lets the moisture ooze through. R. Papa¹⁰ said: A silver vessel, if not full, is also forbidden for use as a cooler-off, because it may be upset.¹¹ Ze'iri b. Hama was the host of R. Ammi and R. Assi, and R. Joshua b. Levi, and of all the Rabbis of Caesarea. He said to R. Joseph the son of R. Joshua b. Levi: O, son of a great man,¹² come and let me tell you a fine custom that your father had. He had a towel from the eve of the Day of Atonement, which he soaked in water, made it into a kind of dry vessel, and on the morrow would wipe his face, hands and feet with it. On the eve of the ninth of Ab he would soak it in water and on the morrow he would stroke his eyes with it. Similarly¹³ when Rabbah b. Mari came he reported: On the eve of the ninth of Ab a towel was brought to him, he soaked it in water, and put it under his head. On the morrow he would therewith wipe his face, hands and feet. On the eve of the Day of Atonement one brought him a towel, which he soaked in water and made it into a kind of dry vessel, and on the morrow he stroked his eyes with it. Said R. Jacob to R. Jeremiah b. Tahlifa: You had told us the matter in just the opposite fashion and we refuted you by reference to prohibition of wringing out.¹⁴

R. Menashiah b. Tahlifa, in the name of R. Amram, on the authority of Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said: The following question was propounded to R. Eleazar: Must a scholar, who is a member of an Academy, obtain special permission to declare a firstborn animal allowed,¹⁵ or does he not need that special permission? What was it that appeared doubtful to them? — This is what they wanted to know: In accord with the statement of R. Iddi b. Abin that 'this matter was left in the hands of the Prince as a special distinction for himself', the question is: Must [the elder] receive permission, or, since he is an elder and a member of an Academy, he need not? R. Zadok b. Haloka thereupon stood up and said: I saw R. Jose b. Zimra who was both an elder and a member of an Academy, and indeed was superior to the grandfather of this our Prince,¹⁶ yet obtained permission to declare firstborn animals for profane use! — R. Abba replied to him: It was not like this, but rather, this was the fact:

R. Jose b. Zimra was a priest, and this was his problem: Is the halachah in accord with R. Meir, who said: One who is suspected concerning a matter¹⁷ may neither judge nor offer testimony in connection therewith; or is the halachah in accord with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who said: Such a one would be trustworthy in a case concerning his neighbour, but not in a case concerning himself? The answer given was: The halachah is in accord with the view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. Furthermore did they ask [R. Eleazar]: How about

(1) Mid. III, 6. A play on pakh (pitcher) as if derived from pakhakh (to bubble forth).

(2) I.e., Zion, outside Jerusalem, the fortress in the wall of the Holy City.

(3) All of which need a ritual immersion to regain their purity. Zech. XIII, 1.

(4) Some commentators, among them Rashi, omit the bracketed portion. The question taken up again is: Whether, as apart from the prohibition to wear shoes, which applies on the Day of Atonement as a form of affliction, on a Sabbath such crossing would be permissible, since the possibility of their falling off, and being carried, should involve a preventive prohibition of such crossing. They might slide off easily, and thus lead the wearer to carrying them.

(5) Perhaps R. Judah II.

(6) I.e., with their feet dressed in shoes.

(7) The difference between the two lies in this: that shoes, as a rule, are laced or worn tight, whence the danger of their falling off is minimized. Therefore the Rabbis above were seen wearing shoes. But sandals which are but lightly attached, might slide off.

(8) I.e., to find out from Rabina the reason for his absence and thereby remove the suspicion of deliberate negligence in his friend's part from the mind of the Exilarch.

(9) Asheri: Rab.

(10) Alfasi and Asheri: R. Ashi.

(11) The silver vessel, being smooth, may be upset and the liquid spilt, thus offering unlawful flow.

(12) Lit., 'son of a lion'.

(13) [Wilna Gaon Glosses deletes 'Similarly'].

(14) Wringing out is forbidden on the Day of Atonement; the towel had therefore to be dried on the eve of the Day of Atonement. Abba Mari was wrong and rejected this important detail, hence the version reported by R. Jeremiah b. Tahlifa.

(15) According to Sanh. 5a no Sage was permitted to declare a firstborn animal free, i.e., defective and hence permitted for profane use, unless he had received special authorization from the Prince in Palestine. The question here posed is whether a member of an Academy may be considered a privileged person in this respect or not. This problem is not germane to the present discussion and is introduced only because it leads to another (the next) question, touching the Day of Atonement, which was submitted at the same time.

(16) [R. Judah II, whose grandfather was R. Judah I, the Prince].

(17) Since the destruction of the Temple a firstborn animal must be left to pasture under priestly control until it acquired a blemish. To avoid such inconvenience many a priest felt tempted to discover a blemish before its actual appearance, hence the priests were suspected of undue laxity in this matter. V. Bek. 35a.

going forth [on the Day of Atonement] in sandals of bamboo? — Thereupon R. Isaac b. Nahmani stood up and said: I saw myself R. Joshua b. Levi going forth in sandals of bamboo on the Day of Atonement. I asked him: How about [on public rain] fast?¹ He answered: There is no difference. Rabbah b. Bar Hanah said: I saw R. Eleazar of Niniveh² who was going forth in sandals of bamboo on a public [rain] fast, and I asked him: How about the Day of Atonement? He answered: There is no difference. Rab Judah went forth in [sandals made of] reeds; Abaye in [such made of] palm-branches; Raba in [such made of] twisted reeds; Rabbah b. Bar Hanah tied a piece of cloth around his legs and went thus forth.

Rami b. Hama raised an objection: 'A cripple may go forth with his artificial foot', according to R. Meir, whilst R. Jose forbids it. Both agree, however, that he must not go forth with it on the Day of Atonement.³ Said Abaye: There, the reference is where it [the wooden leg] has pads, and [the prohibition to go out with them on the Day of Atonement is] due to the comfort [they bring]. Said Raba to him: But if it be no object of wear [without them], would the pads make it one? And, furthermore, is any comfort not coming from shoes forbidden on the Day of Atonement? Did not Rabbah b. Bar Hanah tie a cloth around his legs and thus go forth? Furthermore, since the conclusion [of that teaching] reads: 'If it [the artificial leg] has a receptacle made of pads, it is capable of acquiring ritual uncleanness',⁴ it follows that the first portion deals with a wooden leg without such pads? — Rather, said Raba: In truth, all agree that an artificial leg is not considered a shoe, but in the case of the Sabbath they differ on the following point: One Master holds, We decree [the prohibition for fear] it may fall off and cause him to carry it four cubits in a public thoroughfare;⁵ whereas the other Master holds, We do not decree [any prohibition because of such fear].

Our Rabbis taught: Children are permitted all these [matters],⁶ with the exception of the putting on of shoes. Wherein is the putting on of shoes different? [Presumably] because people might say: Adults made them [wear them]. In all other cases, too, they might say: Adults made them for them? Bathing and anointing can be performed on the preceding day. But sandals, too, may be assumed to have been put on yesterday? It is impossible for sandals to have been put on yesterday, for Samuel said: Let one who would experience a taste of death put on shoes and sleep in them! But it is stated that [the other matters] are permitted [implying] for them at the very outset? — Rather, those things which have nothing to do with their natural growth,⁷ the Rabbis have interdicted, these however, which are needed for their health,⁸ the Rabbis have not forbidden. For Abaye said: Mother⁹ told me the proper treatment for a child consists in [bathing in] warm water and [rubbing with] oil. If he has grown a bit, in egg with kutah;¹⁰ if he grows up still more, the breaking of clay vessels.¹¹ Thus did Rabbah buy clay vessels in damaged condition for his children who would break them.¹²

THE KING AND THE BRIDE MAY WASH THEIR FACES. According to whom is our Mishnah? According to R. Hananiah b. Tradion. For it was taught: [Even] the king and the bride may not wash their faces. R. Hananiah b. Tradion said in the name of R. Eliezer: The king and the bride may wash their faces. The woman after childbirth may not put on a sandal. R. Hananiah b. Tradion said in the name of R. Eliezer: A woman after childbirth may put on a sandal. Why [may] a king [wash his face]?—Because Scripture said: Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty.¹³ Why [may] a bride [wash her face]? — Lest she become unattractive to her husband. Rab said to R. Hiyya: How long [does] a bride [enjoy this privilege]? He replied: As it was taught: One must not withhold her adornment from the bride during the full thirty days [after the wedding].¹⁴ The woman after childbirth may put on shoes to avoid a cold. Samuel said: If there is danger of a scorpion it is permitted [for all to wear shoes].

ONE WHO EATS AS MUCH AS THE BULK OF A BIG DATE. R. Papa asked:

(1) V. Ta'an. 12b.

(2) [Probably Nawa in the Golan Province (Transjordan). V. Klein JQR (NS) II, 550ff]

(3) Shab. 65b. It is assumed at present that although the artificial leg is not considered a shoe, it is yet forbidden to walk out with it on the Day of Atonement. Hence sandals of bamboo should also be forbidden on that day.

(4) V. loc. cit.

(5) The minimum constituting a transgression of the prohibition to carry anything in a public thoroughfare. No minimum is necessary for transferring an object from a private to public thoroughfare and vice versa.

(6) Prohibited in our Mishnah on the Day of Atonement.

(7) As wearing shoes.

(8) As washing and anointing.

(9) V. Kid. 31b.

(10) A preserve consisting of sour milk, bread-crusts and salt.

(11) The breaking of the glass is not a concession to their youthful fury, but an excellent outlet for emotional surplus energies, cheaper than anything else on which they might wreak themselves.

(12) V. Kid. 31b.

(13) Isa. XXXIII, 17.

(14) The bride or young matron retains her privilege for thirty days, even if she becomes a mourner after father or mother, her ornaments would be left to her (v. Keth. 4a). Similar consideration is lawful for the weak mother after childbirth, and for any person in danger of contracting a disease. Hence the 'menace of a scorpion' applies to all, even healthy persons.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 79a

Does the [size of] the date spoken of include the kernel or does it not?¹ R. Ashi asked: Does 'a bone as big as a barley-corn' include the husk or does it not?² [Is the reference to] a moist one or to a dry one? — R. Ashi did not ask the question posed by R. Papa: For 'a big date' was said, which means a date in its complete size.³ R. Papa did not ask the question propounded by R. Ashi, because a moist one would be called 'shiboleth' and one without its husk 'ushla'.⁴

Rabbah said in the name of Rab Judah: The big date spoken of is bigger than an egg, and our Rabbis had established the fact that with such a quantity [a hungry person] becomes satisfied,⁵ but with less than that he does not become satisfied.

An objection was raised: Once they brought to R. Johanan b. Zakkai a dish to taste and to Rabban Gamaliel two dates and a bucket of water, whereupon they said: Take them up to the Sukkah.⁶ (In connection therewith it was taught:)⁷ [They ordered so], not because that was the legal decision, but because they desired to take a severer view for themselves. And⁸ when someone gave R. Zadok a piece of food smaller than an egg, he would take it with a towel, eat it outside the Sukkah, and pronounce no blessing after it.⁹

(1) The Mishnaic text 'kamoha u-kegarinatha' may mean either, date and its kernel; or, date or its kernel (Rashi). Cf. Ex. XXI, 6 where the word 'o' also means 'either' and/or 'or'. V. Mecklenburg, ha-kethab we-hakabbalah a.l. [The question is nevertheless not clear. Var. lec., however, read: Does the size of the date (spoken of) with its kernel (refer to) a dry or moist one, v. D. S. a. l. Cf. the next question].

(2) Ber. 41a. The reference is to a bone as small as a barley-corn, of a corpse which renders him who touches it ritually unclean.

(3) I.e., including the kernel.

(4) And not 'se'orah'.

(5) Comes to himself.

(6) This happened on a Sukkoth day, when meals are to be taken in the booth (sukkah).

(7) The bracketed portion is omitted in some texts.

(8) Hul. 107a.

(9) R. Zadok showed a less severe attitude in three things: (a) He did not wash his hands but would take the food with a towel — only because of his fastidiousness. (b) He ate it outside the Sukkah. (c) He did not pronounce the customary blessing after it (Rashi).

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 79b

This [implies that] if it were as big as an egg it would require [to be eaten] in the Sukkah, and if the thought should occur to you that the big date referred to is larger in size than an egg — now if two dates¹ without kernels are not even as large as one egg, how could a large date with its kernel be bigger in size than an egg? — R. Jeremiah said: Yes, two dates without their kernel are not as large as an egg, but a large date with its kernel is bigger than an egg. R. Papa said: Therefore do people say: Two kabs of dates contain as much as one kab of kernels, with a bit left over.² Raba said: The reason there was that they were fruits, and fruits do not require [to be eaten in] a Sukkah.³ An objection was raised: Rabbi said, 'When we were studying the Torah with R. Eleazar b. Shammua,' figs and wine-berries were brought before us and we ate them outside the Sukkah as an incidental meal'. That means only as an incidental meal [is it permitted to eat fruit] outside the Sukkah, but as a proper meal not?⁴ — Say: 'We ate them as [if we had partaken of] an incidental meal outside the Sukkah'.⁵ Or, if you like say: 'We ate them for a regular meal and we ate bread with them outside the Sukkah [in a quantity small enough to be considered only for] an incidental meal'. Shall we say that the following supports his view: 'Therefore if he made up the number [of meals] by means of delicacies, he has done his duty'.⁶ Now if you should think that fruits must be eaten in the Sukkah, he should have stated 'fruits' [instead of 'delicacies']? What does he mean by 'delicacies'? 'Fruits'. Or, if you like, say: [The reference is to] a place wherein fruits are not to be found.

R. Zebid said: The big date whereof they spoke is smaller in size than an egg, for we learned: Beth Shammai say: 'Of leaven as much as an olive, or leavened bread as much as a date'.⁷ And thereon we were debating; what is the reason of Beth Shammai? [And were given this]: Let the Divine Law write about hamez [leavened bread] alone, without needing a reference to leaven, and I would say: If the eating of an olive-size of hamez the leaven whereof is not so intensive is forbidden, how much more is such size forbidden in the case of leaven which is so much more leaven! But since the Divine Law nevertheless mentioned them separately, it teaches you that the minimum size of the one is not the same as of the other, viz., in the case of leaven it is that of an olive, in the case of hamez that of a date. Now if you should think that the big date mentioned is bigger than an egg, since Beth Shammai are looking for a quantity bigger than an olive, let them teach that of an egg; and even if the two be of the same size let them teach 'that of an egg'. Hence one must infer therefrom that the date spoken of is smaller than an egg! How does that follow? In truth I may say to you, perhaps, that the big date referred to is bigger than an egg, but the normal one is as big as an egg, and (even though they be of the same size)⁸ Beth Shammai just mentions one of the two! Rather, may one infer it⁹ from here: 'How much must one have eaten to be obliged to make an appointment for common [saying of] grace [after meals]? The size of an olive, according to R. Meir. According to R. Judah: The size of an egg'.¹⁰ [And in connection therewith it was said:] Wherein are they differing? R. Meir holds: And thou shalt eat,¹¹ refers to eating. 'And be satisfied',¹¹ refers to drinking. And the minimum of 'eating' is the size of an olive whereas R. Judah holds: 'And thou shalt eat and be satisfied', i.e., an eating which brings satisfaction, and that is [at least as much] as an egg. And if you should think that the big date referred to is bigger than an egg — how if the quantity of an egg even satisfied one, would it not help one to come to? Thence the inference is proper that the big date referred to is smaller than an egg: the quantity of an egg will satisfy one, the size of a big date will help one to come to. It was taught: Rabbi says,

(1) Which R. Gamaliel had eaten in the Sukkah and in connection with which it was stated 'not that the law required it', which means they were less than the legal minimum — one egg.

(2) Because the kernels are larger in bulk than the dates.

(3) The argument from the Sukkah is misleading, because fruits, no matter what their quantity, are not required to be eaten in the Sukkah.

(4) Which would signify, as against R. Papa, that fruits in proper quantity would have to be eaten in the Sukkah.

(5) Because they were fruits, no matter how many of them, they would be considered a mere incidental meal, permissible to be had outside the Sukkah.

(6) V. Suk. 28a. R. Eliezer holds fourteen to be the required minimum number of meals that must be taken in the Sukkah during the feast of Tabernacles. If someone now made up the number of prescribed meals by means of delicacies etc.

(7) The minimum, the possession of which during Passover causes one to transgress the prohibition. Ex. XII, 19: Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses, and XIII, 7: And there shall be no leavened bread seen with thee, neither shall there be leaven seen with thee, in all thy borders. V. Bez. 2a.

(8) [The bracketed words are best left out with var. lec.].

(9) That the big date spoken of is less than an egg.

(10) Ber. 45a.

(11) Deut. VIII, 10.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 80a

All the legal standards [for foods] are the size of an olive, with the exception of that of the ritual defilement of foods, because there Scripture has used a different expression and the Sages accordingly have altered the standard. The proof for this view is furnished by the Day of Atonement.¹ What is the change in the usual expression in connection therewith? — [It follows] from: [For whatsoever soul it be that] shall not be afflicted.² And what is the change in the usual quantity the Sages have decreed here? — ‘As much as a date’. And what constitutes the proof from the Day of Atonement?³ One could have replied: Here it is the usual Scriptural expression.⁴

Whence do we know that the minimum for the ritual uncleanness of foods is the size of an egg? — Said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: Scripture says, All food therein which may be eaten,⁵ i.e., food⁶ derived from food, and that is an egg of a hen. But say it is a kid? That still requires slaughtering.⁷ But say it is an animal taken alive out of the slaughtered mother's womb?⁸ — That still requires cutting open.⁹ Then say: the egg of bar-yokani?¹⁰ — If you take hold of too large a thing, you may lose your hold, but if you take hold of the lesser thing, you will retain your hold.¹¹ But say: the egg of a little bird, that is very small? — R. Abbahu said in his own name: ‘All food there in which may be eaten’, i.e., food which you may eat in one swallowing; and the Sages measured that the esophagus cannot hold more than the size of a hen's egg.

R. Eleazar said: If one has eaten tallow in these times,¹² he must put down [make a note of] the quantity, because another Rabbinical Court may come and increase the measures.¹³ What does increase the measures mean? Would say you that they would declare one obliged to bring a sin-offering for having eaten the size of a small olive, but it was taught: When a ruler sinneth, and doeth through error any one of all the things [which the Lord his God hath commanded] not to be done, and is guilty.¹⁴ i.e., only he who repents when he finds out his transgression must bring a sacrifice, because of his error, but he who does not repent when he finds out his transgression, does not bring a sacrifice for his error.¹⁵ Rather, therefore, must [‘increase the measures’] signify that they would declare a sacrifice obligatory only when he had eaten a quantity as large as a large olive. But according to the first view, viz., that they could impose a sacrifice even for the quantity of a small olive, what does ‘increase the measure’ mean? — It might mean increase the number of sacrifices’ required because of the reduced minimum of the quantities. R. Johanan said: Standard measures and penalties are fixed by laws [communicated] to Moses on Sinai. But the penalties are written out in Scripture? — Rather: The minimum required for penalties is fixed by laws [communicated] to Moses on Sinai. It was also taught thus: The minima required for penalties are fixed by laws [communicated] to Moses on Sinai. Others say: The Court of Jabetz¹⁶ fixed them. But Scripture said: These are the commandments,¹⁷ which means that no prophet is permitted to introduce any new law from then on? — Rather: They were forgotten and then they established them anew.

OR IF HE DRANK A MOUTHFUL. Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: Not really a mouthful, but so much that if he moves it to one side it looks like a mouthful. But we learned: A MOUTHFUL. — Say: ‘As much as A MOUTHFUL’!

An objection was raised: ‘How much must one have drunk to become culpable? Beth Shammai say: One fourth [of a log], Beth Hillel say: One mouthful. R. Judah in the name of R. Eliezer says: As much as a mouthful. R. Judah b. Bathyra says: As much as can be swallowed at a time! Is this one better than our Mishnah which we explained as meaning: ‘That it look like a mouthful’, and this, too, we can explain: That it look like a mouthful. But if so, it is the same opinion as that of R. Eliezer? — There is a difference in the case of an exact mouthful.¹⁸

R. Hoshaiah demurred to this: If so, there would be a [another] case in which Beth Shammai took the more lenient view, and Beth Hillel the severer one?¹⁹ — He replied to him:

- (1) Where a change in expression on the part of the Bible involved a change in the fixed minimum standard.
- (2) Lev. XXIII, 29. The usual expression would be: Whosoever eateth on the day. The Rabbis, then, would have applied the normal measure, the olive, the legal minimum with every forbidden food.
- (3) There seems to be no difference between the law touching ritual impurity of foods and that covering the prohibition of food on the Day of Atonement. In both cases change in expression is responsible for change in measure. Wherein, then, lies the reason for the Day of Atonement text being chosen as a proof?
- (4) In the text relating to the uncleanness of foods the expression 'All foods therein which may be eaten' (which is the change in the usual expression alluded to, v. infra) would not appear an unusual expression. But 'that shall not be afflicted' for 'that shall eat' is indeed, unusual and thus accounts best for the change in measure determined by the Rabbis.
- (5) Lev. XI, 34.
- (6) Interpreted: that (coming) from food, which is also eatable.
- (7) Before it can be designated food.
- (8) Lit., 'the young one of an animal which is ripped open'. Such a young animal, where the mother in whose womb it still was, was slaughtered in accord with the rite, is considered ready food, since it does not require ritual slaughtering.
- (9) It is not considered ready food since it requires not, indeed, the ritual slaughter, but cutting open and removal of the blood.
- (10) A bird of fabulous size, the eggs of which are very large, v. Bek. 57b.
- (11) A proverb: v. R.H. 4b. In the case of two possible interpretations, always choose the smaller as the more likely one.
- (12) I.e., when the Temple is no longer in existence.
- (13) R. Eleazar suggested that if the Sanctuary be rebuilt in his days and a new Rabbinical Court were in session, they might render such decision. Hence one who is conscious of having eaten tallow may well take the precaution of putting down the exact quantity so as to be sure that his transgression does, or does not, involve the obligation of a sin-offering, in accord with the new enactment of the revived court.
- (14) Lev. IV, 22.
- (15) As he became conscious of his transgression, the new enactment was still unknown, the quantity of a small olive to him, hence, was below the minimum required for a transgression to be constituted, hence he has not 'found out his transgression', and is not required to offer up a sacrifice in atonement of his sin.
- (16) Identified with Othniel, the son of Kenaz; after the death of Moses he revived the forgotten portions of the law, v. Tem. 16a.
- (17) Lev. XXVII, 34: These are the laws, i.e., no others may ever be offered.
- (18) According to the Hillelites who insist: a mouthful, it is enough if it looks like a generous mouthful when moved to one cheek; according to R. Eliezer the appearance of an exact mouthful is required.
- (19) In the fourth chapter of 'Ed. all cases are enumerated in which, as against the usual norm, Beth Shammai take the more lenient, and Beth Hillel the more severe, view. If our text were right it should have been enumerated as an additional exception, because here too the usual attitudes of these two conflicting schools of learning are reversed, since Beth Hillel make him liable for what appears like a mouthful, which is less than the minimum required by Beth Shammai.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 80b

When this came up for discussion, it came up in connection with 'Og, king of Bashan',¹ so that Beth Shammai will be found to take the severer view. — R. Zera asked a strong question: To what difference is it due that, with regard to eating, the minimum of a date was fixed for every one, whereas in the case of drinking each has [his minimum] in accord with his own [mouthful]? — Abaye replied to him: Regarding² food the Rabbis established that with [the quantity of] a date a person may come to, but with a smaller quantity he will not come to; but with regard to drinking [they have found] that a man will come to with the quantity of his own [mouthful], but not with less than that. — R. Zera then asked another strong question: ‘All the world’ with a date and Og, the king of Bashan, also with a date? — Abaye replied: The Rabbis have ascertained that [touching food] the quantity [of a date] helps one to come to, but with a smaller quantity he will not come to; but, whereas all the world [can come to] more so, Og, king of Bashan, [only] somewhat so. R. Zera again asked another strong question: Fat meat in the quantity of one date and wine-branches also in the quantity of one date? — Abaye replied: The Rabbis have ascertained that one comes to with so much, but not with less; with [this quantity of] fat meat one becomes, however, more satisfied, whilst with the same quantity of wine-branches one becomes less so. Raba asked a strong question: The quantity of an olive, during the time one could eat a peras,³ — and the quantity of a date during the time required for eating a peras!⁴ — Abaye replied: The Rabbis have ascertained that if it [the eating of the quantity of a date] takes so long [as one could eat a peras] a person will come to, but if longer he will not come to. Raba asked another strong question: The quantity of a date, during the time required for the eating of a peras, and half a peras during the time required for the eating of a peras?⁵ — R. Papa answered: Leave alone the uncleanness of the body, which is not determined by Biblical law.⁶ But could R. Papa have answered thus? Is it not written: Neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled thereby.⁷ and R. Papa said that from here is derived the Biblical origin of the [laws concerning] the body's becoming defiled [through unclean foods]? — It is really Rabbinical, and Scripture is quoted only as mere [mnemotechnical] aid.⁸

ALL FOODS COMPLEMENT ONE ANOTHER IN MAKING UP THE BULK OF A DATE. R. Papa said: If one ate a piece of raw meat with salt, they are joined;⁹ and although [salt] in itself is no food, since people eat [the two] together, they are joined. Resh Lakish said: The juice on the green [vegetables] joins so as to make up [with the vegetable] the [quantity of a] date in connection with the Day of Atonement. But that is self-evident? You might have said: It is drink,¹⁰ therefore he informs us that whatever is used for seasoning food is considered as food. Resh Lakish said: If one eats an excessive meal on the Day of Atonement, he is free from punishment. Why? Scripture said: That shall not be afflicted,¹¹ and that excludes whatever causes harm.¹² R. Jeremiah said in the name of Resh Lakish: If a non-priest eats excessively of terumah,¹³ he need pay but the principal, but not the [fine of the] additional fifth, for Scripture says: And if a man eat,¹⁴ which excluded one causing harm.¹⁵ R. Jeremiah said in the name of R. Johanan: A non-priest

(1) I.e., this teaching refers to the case of men as gigantic as Og, king of Bashan (Ber. 54b); in such cases Beth Shammai will be found to have taken, as usual, the severer view. For according to that school the minimum incurring penalty for any man is a fourth of a log, whereas according to the Hillelites it is for each according to his mouthful. According to Beth Shammai, therefore, an ‘Og, king of Bashan’ would become culpable on drinking, what to him would be less than a drop, whereas according to Beth Hillel he would incur penalty only when drinking the generous measure of his own mouthful.

(2) Corrected according to Bah.

(3) Peras, lit., ‘a piece (of bread)’ is in the Tosef. Neg. VII, 10 defined as half a loaf, three of which make a kab. The time it takes to eat such a quantity is the maximum within which morsels of food smaller than the minimum measure are considered to join in order to make up the minimum incurring penalty.

(4) Ought not a longer period to be allowed for the quantity of a date?

(5) If one has eaten half a peras of ritually unclean food during the time it takes to eat a peras of food, one is considered unclean and may not partake of sacred foods. Half a peras is (‘Er. 83a) as two ‘friendly’ (generous sized) eggs, equal in size to three ordinary eggs.

(6) And consequently is not governed by such strict standards.

(7) Lev. XI, 43.

(8) As far as Biblical law is concerned, a person could become defiled by food only by swallowing the meat of a ritually clean fowl that has died a natural death. The reference to this verse is used by R. Papa only to lend support to the more severe rabbinic law.

(9) To make up together the legally required minimum of the big date.

(10) And, according to the Mishnah, foods and drinks do not combine to make up the required minimum.

(11) Lev. XXIII, 29.

(12) The man causes harm to himself by excessive eating and thus is also afflicting himself, or at least not enjoying himself. Rashi suggests that since Jews eat lavishly on the eve of the Day of Atonement, a meal taken immediately thereupon, i.e. after the incidence of the fast, would constitute excessive eating.

(13) V. Glos.

(14) Lev, XXII, 14.

(15) The offence here was committed in error, whence the capital and the fifth as fine is to be repaid by the offender. Such fine would be dispensed with in case this food was taken as an excessive meal, where the eating is but sheer waste of the terumah.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 81a

who chews¹ barley-corns of terumah must pay the principal, but not the additional fifth, for Scripture said: 'If a man eat', that excludes one causing harm. R. Shezbi said in the name of R. Johanan: If a non-priest swallowed jujubes of terumah, and spat them out, and another one ate them, then the first pays the principal, and the fifth, whereas the second does not pay more than their wood [fuel] value.²

BUT WHAT A MAN EATS AND DRINKS DOES NOT GO TOGETHER. Who is the Tanna [of this part of the Mishnah]? — R. Hisda said: This has been taught under a controversy of opinion, and it is in accord with R. Joshua, for we learned: R. Joshua pronounced with principle: All foods are equal regarding the [duration of] their uncleanness and the quantity of them [required to convey uncleanness] combine; if they be equal only concerning the [duration of] their uncleanness, but not concerning the quantity of them [required to convey uncleanness]; or only regarding quantity, but not in the duration of uncleanness; or if they be equal neither in respect of [duration of] uncleanness nor quantity, they do not combine [to make up the minimum quantity which constitutes the transgression].³ R. Nahman said: You may even say that [this part of our Mishnah is] in accord with the Rabbis. For the Rabbis [opposing R. Joshua] hold their view only touching uncleanness, because all are designated as 'uncleanness', but here the point involved is 'coming to', and this⁴ does not enable one to come to. Thus also did Resh Lakish say: This has been taught under the controversy of an opinion and our Mishnah is in accord with R. Joshua, for we were taught: R. Joshua pronounced a principle etc. but R. Johanan said: You may even say that our Mishnah is in accord with the Rabbis: There the Rabbis present their view only in connection with uncleanness, but here 'coming to' is the point, and this⁴ does not enable one to come to.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN ATE AND DRANK IN ONE STATE OF UNAWARENESS, HE IS NOT OBLIGED TO BRING MORE THAN ONE⁵ SIN-OFFERING, BUT IF HE ATE AND PERFORMED LABOUR WHILE IN ONE STATE OF UNAWARENESS HE⁶ MUST OFFER UP TWO SIN-OFFERINGS. IF HE ATE FOODS UNFIT FOR FOOD, OR DRANK LIQUIDS UNFIT FOR DRINKING, OR DRANK BRINE OR FISH-BRINE, HE IS NOT CULPABLE.

GEMARA. Resh Lakish said: Why is no explicit warning⁷ mentioned in connection with the commandment to afflict oneself? — Because it is impossible. For how shall the Divine Law word it? Were the Divine Law to write: 'He shall not eat'? But 'eating' implies [the minimum size of] an olive.⁸ Shall the Divine Law write: 'He shall not afflict himself'?⁹ That would mean: Go and eat! — R. Hoshaiah asked a strong question: Let the Divine Law write: 'Take heed, lest thou dost not afflict thyself'! — That would mean several prohibitions.¹⁰ To this R. Bibi b. Abaye demurred: Let the Divine Law write: Take heed concerning the commandment of affliction! 'Take heed' implies a command, if attached to a command, and a prohibition, if attached to a prohibition.¹¹ R. Ashi asked a strong question: Let the Divine Law write: Do not depart from affliction! — This is a difficulty.

The following Tanna derives it [the prohibition relating to affliction] from here: And ye shall afflict your souls: ye shall do no manner of work.¹² One might have assumed that the punishment¹³

[of extirpation] is involved for one who disregarded the addition¹⁴ by doing a labour, therefore Scripture said: For whatsoever soul it be that doeth any manner of work in that same day he shall be cut off,¹⁵ i.e., only for the [disregard of] that day itself is one punished with extirpation, but for labour performed during the additional time one is not punished with extirpation. One might have assumed that one does not incur punishment of extirpation by doing labour during the additional time, but that one does incur punishment of extirpation for failure to afflict oneself during the additional time, therefore the text reads: For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day he shall be cut off;¹⁶ that means for [failure of] afflicting [oneself on] the day itself does the penalty of extirpation come, but the penalty of extirpation does not result from failure to afflict oneself during the additional time. One might have assumed that one is not included in the penalty, but that one is under a warning against performing work during the additional time, therefore the text reads: And ye shall do no manner of work in that same day,¹⁷ i.e., one is warned concerning the day itself but not concerning [work done] during the additional time. One might have assumed that one is not under a warning concerning labour performed during the additional time, but one is under a warning concerning [failure of] affliction during the additional time; but a logical inference cancels that. For if in the case of labour, the prohibition of which applies on Sabbath and festival days, one is not under a warning [concerning additional time] then with regard to [the commandment of] affliction, which does not apply on Sabbath and festival days, how much more should one not be under a warning against it [during the additional time]! But we have not learnt [so far] of any explicit warning with regard to the [obligation to] affliction on the day itself, whence then do we derive [that required 'warning']? [From the following]: There was no necessity for stating the penalty resulting from the performance of labour, for that is inferable from the [commandment of] affliction. If [for failure of] affliction, which is not commanded on the Sabbath and festival days, one is punished with extirpation, then for the performance of labour [the prohibition of] which does apply on Sabbath and festival days, how much more shall [one be punished with extirpation]! Why then was [the penalty] stated? It is free¹⁸ for interpretation, hence it serves for comparison, to derive thence an inference from analogy of expression: the penalty is stated in connection with [the commandment of] affliction, and the penalty is stated in connection with the [prohibition of] labour, hence just as the performance of labour was punished only after warning,¹⁹ so also is [failure of] affliction punished only after warning. But against this it may be objected:²⁰ The specific condition with affliction [which attaches a penalty to it] lies in the fact that no exception against the general rule was made here; but would you apply [the same] to the performance of labour seeing that in its case exceptions from the general rule were made?²¹ Rather [argue thus]: Let Scripture not mention any penalty in connection with [failure of] affliction, inferring it from the [prohibition of] labour. If [the performance of] labour, from the general prohibition of which some exceptions were made, involves the penalty of extirpation, how much more must [failure of] affliction, from the general prohibition of which no exception was made, involve such penalty? Then why does Scripture mention it? It is free for interpretation, hence it serves for comparison, to derive thence an inference from analogy of expression: the penalty is mentioned in connection with [failure of] affliction, and the same penalty is mentioned in connection with [the performance of] labour, hence just as [performance of] labour is punished only after warning, so is [the failure of] affliction punished only after warning. Against this may be objected: There is a specific condition in connection with labour [to which a penalty is attached] in that it is forbidden on Sabbath and festival days, but would you apply the same to [the commandment of] affliction seeing that does not apply on Sabbath and festival days? Rabina said: This Tanna infers it from the word 'self-same'.²² Now it must be free,²³ for if it were not free, the objection as above could be raised against it. Hence it indeed must be free.

[Consider] there are²⁴ five Scriptural verses written in connection with labour:²⁵ one indicating the prohibition for the day, one the prohibition for the night, one the warning for the day, one the warning for the night, one remains free for inference from [the prohibition of] labour for [the commandment of] affliction, touching both day and night.

The School of R. Ishmael taught: Here the word 'affliction' is used and there the word 'affliction'²⁶ is used; hence just as there the penalty is incurred only after warning, so here too the penalty is incurred only after warning. R. Aha b. Jacob said: One can infer that from the phrase 'Shabbath Shabbathon' ['solemn day of rest']²⁷ which occurs in connection with the ordinary Sabbath,²⁸ and just as there penalty is incurred only after warning, so here too, penalty is incurred only after warning. R. Papa said:

- (1) 'Chewing' which is the term. techn. for irregular eating.
 - (2) The first, having eaten them, must pay both principal and fine, a complete offence having been committed by him; but not the second, who ate something which could have been used only as fuel.
 - (3) Two half olives from two corpses, or two pieces of the size each of one half of a lentil, coming from a dead creeping thing, share the duration of uncleanness and the minimum quantity; a creeping thing and the carcase of an animal that died a natural death, are alike with regard to duration of the uncleanness they cause (in each case up to the evening of the day), but differ as to the minimum quantity which causes defilement; the former has the standard of an olive, the latter that of a lentil. A human corpse and the carcase of an animal again are alike in the minimum required for defiling a person, viz., an olive, but are different with regard to the duration of the uncleanness caused: the former causing one lasting seven days, the latter one lasting up to the evening only; v. Me'il. 17a.
 - (4) The quantity of a big date, composed of food and drink does not enable one to come to, whereas food alone of that quantity would. The only matter in connection with the minimum required on the Day of Atonement is that it enables one to come to, hence the Rabbis could agree here, whilst disputing R. Joshua in the matter of the combination of various unclean foods.
 - (5) He did not know all the time that it was the Day of Atonement. Because whereas two offences took place, both belong to one head: eating includes drinking.
 - (6) But eating and working are two different forms of activities prohibited on the Day of Atonement, derived from two Scriptural verses, Num. XXIX, 7 and Lev. XXIII, 29.
 - (7) The usual form of which is: 'Thou shalt not'.
 - (8) The usual minimum (to render one culpable of having eaten forbidden food) is the quantity of an olive. Had the Torah therefore used the phrase 'He shall not eat', the inference would have been that one who ate the quantity of an olive had thereby transgressed the law; whereas the quantity on the Day of Atonement is dependent on one's coming to, which is the result of having eaten as much as the size of a big date.
 - (9) The form would be negative, but the meaning just the opposite of what is required!
 - (10) 'Take heed' and 'lest' are phrases each implying a separate negative command, v. 'Er. 96a.
 - (11) Deut. XXIV, 8: 'Take heed in the plague of leprosy' implies the prohibition of cutting off the bright spot (Lev. XIII, 2) whereas 'Take heed that you do a certain thing', i.e., not neglect it, has affirmative exhortatory meaning. The phrase here would therefore imply a positive command.
 - (12) Num. XXIX, 7.
 - (13) Reading with Bah.
 - (14) The prohibitions and positive commandments in connection with the Day of Atonement become valid some time before the actual commencement of the day — before the night of the tenth of Tishri, and extend for some minutes after the end of the Day of Atonement — the night of the eleventh day. The validity for this additional time of the laws governing the Day of Atonement is Biblical, v. infra 81b.
 - (15) Lev. XXIII, 30.
 - (16) Lev. XXIII, 29.
 - (17) Ibid. v. 28.
 - (18) Lit., 'being free', or 'vacated', here unnecessary for the context, hence available for hermeneutical purposes.
 - (19) Lev. XXIII, 28.
 - (20) The comparison is superficial, because in spite of similarity of expression, basic difference of prevailing conditions render the comparison unjustified, and but for an explicit statement of penalty in the case of 'labour' one would not be able to derive it from 'affliction'.
 - (21) None is exempted from the affliction, whereas as regards labour the priests in the Sanctuary were permitted to perform all work in connection with the ceremonial of the Day of Atonement.
 - (22) This word occurs both with the prohibition of labour in Lev. XXIII, 30 and with the commandment of affliction in

v. 29 ibid., hence appears available for inference from analogy of expression.

(24) So Bah.

(25) Lev. XVI, 29; XXIII, 28, 29, 30 and Num. XXIX, 7.

(26) In connection with the rape of a betrothed maiden, Deut. XXII, 24.

(27) Lev. XXIII, 32.

(28) Lit., 'with the Sabbath of creation', i.e., the Sabbath, the observance of which is due to the first Sabbath, a tech. term. for any ordinary seventh day Sabbath, as against other days of rest, viz., the Holy Days.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 81b

This day itself is also called Sabbath, for Scripture said: [In the ninth day of the month, from even to even], shall ye keep your Sabbath. R. Papa did not [well] interpret as R. Aha b. Jacob, because it is preferable to use a Scriptural text mentioned in connection with the subject itself. But why did not R. Aha b. Jacob expound as R. Papa did? — That¹ is necessary for the following teaching: And ye shall afflict your souls, in the ninth day of the month. One might have assumed that such affliction commences on the ninth of the month already. Therefore the text reads: 'At even'. If from 'at even', one might have inferred that one must afflict oneself only after it gets dark, therefore the text reads: 'In the ninth'. How is [this to be explained]? He should commence to afflict himself whilst it is yet day. From here we learn that we add from the profane time to the sacred one. Thus I know it only at its beginning. Whence do I know it at its end? Therefore Scripture said: 'From even unto even'. Thus I know it only for the Days of Atonement, whence do I learn the same for the Sabbath days? Therefore the text reads: 'Your Sabbath'. How is that? Wherever the word 'shebuth' [rest] is mentioned, we add from the profane time to the sacred one.

How does the Tanna who infers from the word-analogy of 'self-same',² 'self-same' interpret the words: 'In the ninth of the month'? — He uses it in accord with what Hiyya, the son of Rab, of Difti taught, for Hiyya, the son of Rab, of Difti learned: 'And you shall afflict your souls in the ninth [day of the month]'. But is one fasting on the ninth? Do we not fast on the tenth? Rather, it comes to indicate that, if one eats and drinks on the ninth, Scripture accounts it to him as if he had fasted on the ninth and the tenth.³

IF HE ATE FOODS UNFIT FOR FOOD. Raba said: If one chewed pepper on the Day of Atonement, he is not culpable. If one chewed ginger on the Day of Atonement, he is not culpable. An objection was raised: R. Meir used to say: By mere implication from the text: Then you shall count the fruit thereof as forbidden.⁴ I could understand that fruit trees are meant. Why then does Scripture say: 'trees for food'? It means a tree the taste of whose wood and fruit are alike. Say: This is pepper. That teaches you that the plant of pepper is subject to the law of 'orlah',⁵ and that the land of Israel lacks nothing, as it is said: Thou shalt not lack anything in it.⁶ — That is no difficulty; The one case deals with green pepper, the other with dry pepper.⁶ Rabina said to Meremar: But R. Nahman has said that preserved ginger coming from India is permitted,⁷ and the blessing . . . Who createst the fruit of the ground' is obligatory [before eating it].⁷ — This is no difficulty: The one case deals with fresh one, the other with dry one.

Our Rabbis have taught: If one ate the leaves of calamus, he is culpable. If he ate the leaves of vine, he is culpable. What vines are meant here? — R. Isaac of Magdala said: Such as sprouted forth between New Year and the Day of Atonement.⁸ R. Kahana said: During the first thirty days,⁹ it was taught in accord with R. Isaac of Magdala: If one ate the leaves of calamus, he is not culpable. If he ate the leaves of vines, he is culpable. The vines meant here are those that sprouted forth between New Year and the Day of Atonement.

IF HE DRANK BRINE OR FISH-BRINE HE IS NOT CULPABLE. But [if he drank] vinegar, he is culpable — according to whom is our Mishnah? — According to Rabbi. For it was taught: Rabbi said, Vinegar restores the soul.¹⁰ R. Giddal b. Menasseh of Bari of Naresh¹¹ reported that the halachah is not in accord with Rabbi, whereupon in the following year all went forth to drink [on the Day of Atonement] vinegar [mixed with water]. When R. Giddal heard that he became angry and said: I spoke only of a de facto case, did I say at all that one may do so at the outset? I referred only to a small quantity, did I speak at all of a large one? I spoke only of raw vinegar, did I refer at all to [vinegar] mixed [with water]? [

(1) The Scriptural text adduced by R. Papa.

(2) Who infers the additional time from the words of the text, which are free for interpretation (v. supra). To him the words ‘And ye shall afflict yourself on the ninth’, which to us suggest the additional time, must convey a different meaning.

(3) The feasting on the ninth of Tishri helps to emphasize the solemnity and the self-affliction due on the morrow, indeed, starting at the eve of the same day. The more feasting on the eve of the Day of Atonement, the more pronounced the affliction on the day itself.

(4) Lev. XIX, 23.

(5) Which forbids for the first three years the fruit of trees, v. ibid.

(6) Deut. VIII, 9. Hence pepper is considered fruit, and as such should involve the eater thereof on the Day of Atonement in the penalty of extirpation, whereas Raba had taught that one who ate thereof is not culpable. R. Meir speaks of green pepper which can be eaten, hence subject to the law of ‘orlah, whereas Raba speaks of dry pepper, which cannot be considered a food, hence one who has eaten thereof, in the best case has not partaken of eatables, in the worst case has harmed himself, in either case is not culpable.

(7) Preserved ginger therefore is considered a food. The blessing due emphasizes that it is considered such.

(8) But if they sprouted forth before the New Year, they are considered stale and ‘even as wood’, i.e., no food.

(9) The same principle, though in different terms.

(10) I.e., has the effect of satisfying one, of helping one to come to, on the Day of Atonement.

(11) I.e., Bari, which was near Naresh, north of Sura. V. Obermeyer, p.308.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 82a

MISHNAH. ONE SHOULD NOT AFFLICT¹ CHILDREN AT ALL ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT. BUT ONE TRAINS THEM A YEAR OR TWO BEFORE² IN ORDER THAT THEY BECOME USED TO RELIGIOUS OBSERVANCES.

GEMARA. Since [the Mishnah has taught already that] two years before [their attaining majority] they must be trained, is it necessary to state that one must do so a year before that time? R. Hisda said: This is no difficulty: the one refers to a healthy³ child, the other to a sickly one. R. Huna said: At the age of eight and nine years one trains them by hours,⁴ at the age of ten and eleven they must fast to the end of the day, by Rabbinic ordinance. At the age of twelve they must fast to the end of the day by Biblical law, [all this] referring to girls. R. Nahman said: At the age of nine and ten one trains them by hours, at the age of eleven and twelve they must fast to the end of the day by Rabbinic ordinance, at the age of thirteen they must fast to the end of the day by Biblical law, [all this] referring to boys. R. Johanan said: There is no Rabbinic ordinance about the obligation of children to fast to the end of the day. But, at the age of ten and eleven one trains them by hours, at the age of twelve they must fast to the end of the day by Biblical law.

We learned: ONE SHOULD NOT AFFLICT THE CHILDREN AT ALL ON THE DAY OF ATONEMENT, BUT ONE TRAINS THEM A YEAR OR TWO BEFORE. That will be right according to R. Huna and R. Nahman: A YEAR OR TWO BEFORE [means] a year before, according to Rabbinic law, or two years before, according to Biblical law.⁵ But according to R. Johanan, there is a difficulty!⁶ R. Johanan will tell you: ‘One or two years before means: before their reaching maturity.’⁷

Come and hear: For Rabbah b. Samuel taught: One does not afflict children on the Day of Atonement, but one trains them a year, or two, before their attaining maturity. That will be right according to R. Johanan, but according to R. Huna and R. Nahman this presents a difficulty. — [These] Rabbis will tell you: ‘Training’ here means ‘fasting to the end of the day’. But has ‘training’ the meaning of ‘fasting to the end of the day’? Was it not taught: What is training? If he was accustomed to eat at the second hour [eight o'clock],⁸ one feeds him now at the third hour [nine o'clock]; if he was accustomed to eat at the third hour, one feeds him now at the fourth.⁹ Raba b. ‘Ulla said, There are two kinds of training.¹⁰

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN WITH CHILD SMELT,¹¹ SHE MUST BE GIVEN TO EAT UNTIL SHE FEELS RESTORED. A SICK PERSON IS FED AT THE WORD OF EXPERTS.¹² AND IF NO EXPERTS ARE THERE, ONE FEEDS HIM AT HIS OWN WISH UNTIL HE SAYS: ENOUGH.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a woman with child smelt the flesh of holy flesh, or of pork, we put for her a reed into the juice and place it upon her mouth. If thereupon she feels that her craving has been satisfied, it is well. If not, one feeds her with the juice itself. If thereupon her craving is satisfied it is well; if not one feeds her with the fat meat itself, for there is nothing that can stand before [the duty of] saving life, with the exception of idolatry, incest¹³ and bloodshed [which are prohibited in all situations]. Whence do we know that about idolatry? For it was taught: R. Eliezer said: Since it is said, With all thy soul,¹⁴ why is it said: With all thy might?¹⁴ And since it is said: ‘With all thy might’, why is it said: ‘With all thy soul’? [It but comes to tell you that]¹⁵ if there be a man whose life is more cherished by him than his money, for him it is said: ‘With all thy soul’; and if there be a person to whom his money is dearer than his life, for him it is said: ‘With all thy might’.¹⁶ Whence do we know it about incest and bloodshed? — Because it was taught: Rabbi said, For as when a man rises against his neighbor, and slayeth him, even so is this matter.¹⁷ What matter do we infer for [the rape of] a betrothed maiden from a murderer? — Rather: What was meant to teach, learns itself.¹⁸ Just as in the case of a betrothed maiden it is lawful to save her at the expense of his [the would-be raper's] life, thus also in the case of a murderer. And just as in the case of [an order to] shed blood one should rather be killed oneself than transgress [the prohibition of murder], thus also in the case of a [command to rape a] betrothed maiden, one should rather be killed than transgress [the prohibition of violating her].

(1) To make them fast, to deny them food. Concerning other afflictions, v. supra 78b.

(2) The connotation of this is discussed in the Gemara.

(3) With a healthy child the training may be started at an earlier year than with a sick or sickly one.

(4) Extending the hours of fasting from one hour to another.

(5) So Rashi, v. Bah; v. next note. Cur. edd. according to rabbinic law. On interpretation of this reading v. Wilna Gaon, Glosses.

(6) Whereas R. Huna and R. Nahman could explain ‘BEFORE’ as meaning ‘before they are obliged by Rabbinic law’ to fast to the end of the day. R. Johanan holds there is no Rabbinic ordinance compelling children to fast to the end of the day, and would be unable to account for this text.

(7) His answer is simple; ‘before’ means ‘before maturity’, when yet the obligation to fast to the end of the day does not apply.

(8) According to the Jewish calculation for ritual purposes, every day, summer and winter, has twelve hours, every night twelve hours. The hours, however, vary in duration. In December an hour may consist of forty minutes, in June of ninety minutes. In Tishri (usually September) an hour would have about sixty minutes. The first hour of the day would be from six to seven, the second from seven to eight. ‘At the second hour’ would thus correspond to ‘about eight o'clock’.

(9) This indicates, at any rate, that ‘training’ means ‘training by the extension of hours’, not ‘fasting to the end of the day’.

(10) Raba replies that the term ‘training’ is being used in both senses.

(11) Smelt a dish on the Day of Atonement and has a morbid desire for it.

(12) Physicians.

(13) Including adultery.

(14) Deut. VI, 5. The word 'meod', usually translated as 'might', is here interpreted as 'economic might', money.

(15) Life is more important than 'money' or 'might'. Why then the mention of both? If one is commanded to love the Lord even with all one's soul, viz., so that one would surrender life in the service of Him, it is self-evident and therefore superfluous to mention the obligation to love Him with all one's money, viz., to be willing to surrender one's possessions to Him.

(16) Scripture takes account of people's idiosyncrasies, the Lord, Who gave the Torah to Moses, knoweth the heart of man.

(17) Deut. XXII, 26 referring to the rape of a betrothed maiden.

(18) Lit., 'Behold this one comes to teach and turns out a learner'. This passage is intended to throw light on another one, whereas it receives light therefrom.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 82b

Rut whence do we know that this principle applies in the case of a murder? — This is reasonable. For there was a man who came before Raba and said to him: The lord of my village told me: Kill so-and-so, and if you will not, I shall kill you! — He [Raba] answered: Let him kill you, but do not kill! What makes you see that your blood is redder than his? Perhaps the blood of that man is redder than yours?¹

There was a woman with child who had smelt [a dish]. People came before Rabbi [questioning him what should be done]. He said to them: Go and whisper to her that it is the Day of Atonement. They whispered to her and she accepted the whispered suggestion, whereupon he [Rabbi] cited about her the verse: Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee.² From her came forth R. Johanan. [Again] there was a woman with child who smelt [a dish]. The people came to R. Hanina, who said to them: Whisper to her [that it is the Day of Atonement]. She did not accept the whispered suggestion. He cited with regard to her:

(1) The Lord wants you to save your own life, because the life of any one of His children is clear to Him. But your neighbour's life is as clear to Him as your own; and no blood is 'redder than the other'. Hence you must not kill someone else, in order to save life. But if someone comes to murder you, self-defence is not only permissible, but mandatory.

(2) Jer. I, 5.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 83a

The wicked are estranged from the womb.¹ From her came forth Shabbatai, the hoarder of provisions² [for speculation].

A SICK PERSON IS FED AT THE WORD OF EXPERTS. R. Jannai said: If the patient says, I need [food], whilst the physician says: He does not need it, we hearken to the patient. What is the reason? The heart knoweth its own bitterness.³ But that is self-evident? You might have said: The physician's knowledge is more established; therefore the information [that we prefer the patient's opinion]. If the physician says: He needs it, whilst the patient says that he does not need it, we listen to the physician. Why? Stupor seized him.⁴

We learned: A SICK PERSON IS FED AT THE WORD OF EXPERTS. [That implies]: Only upon the order of experts, but not upon his own order? [Further it implies]: Only upon the order of 'experts,' but not upon the order of a single expert?⁵ — This refers to the case that he says: I do not need it. But one should feed him upon the order of one expert? — This refers to the case when someone else is present who agrees that he does not need it. [If so, wherefore state that he] is FED

AT THE WORD OF EXPERTS. Surely that is self-evident, for it is a possibility of danger to human life and ‘in the case of the possibility of danger to human life we take a more lenient view’!⁶ — It refers to a case in which two more people are present who say that he does not need it.⁷ And although R. Safra said that ‘Two are as a hundred and a hundred are as two’⁸ applies only to witnesses, but with regard to opinion we go according to the number of opinions, all that applies only to opinions concerning money matters, but here it is a case where there is a possibility of danger to human life. But since in the second part [of the Mishnah] it states: AND IF NO EXPERTS ARE THERE, ONE FEEDS HIM AT HIS OWN WISH, it is to be inferred that in the first part we deal with the case that he said he needed it? There is something missing [in the Mishnah] and this is how it reads: These things are said only for the case that he says: I do not need it; but if he says: I need it, then if two experts are not there, but one who says: He does not need it, then ONE FEEDS HIM AT HIS OWN WISH.

Mar son of R. Ashi said: Whenever he says. ‘I need [food]’, even if there be a hundred who say, ‘He does not need it’, we accept his statement, as it is said: ‘The heart knoweth its own bitterness’. We learned in the Mishnah: If no experts are there one feeds him at his own wish. That means only if no experts are there, but not if such experts were there? — This is what is meant: These things are said only for the case that he says, ‘I do not need it’, but if he says, ‘I need it’, then there are no experts⁹ there at all, [and] one feeds him at his own wish, as it is said: ‘The heart knoweth its own bitterness’.

MISHNAH. IF ONE IS SEIZED BY A RAVENOUS HUNGER,¹⁰ HE MAY BE GIVEN TO EAT EVEN UNCLEAN THINGS UNTIL HIS EYES ARE ENLIGHTENED.¹¹ IF ONE WAS BIT BY A MAD DOG, HE MAY NOT GIVE HIM TO EAT THE LOBE OF ITS LIVER, BUT R. MATTHIA B. HERESH PERMITS IT.¹² FURTHERMORE DID R. MATTHIA B. HERESH SAY: IF ONE HAS PAIN IN HIS THROAT, HE MAY POUR MEDICINE INTO HIS MOUTH ON THE SABBATH,¹³ BECAUSE IT IS A POSSIBILITY OF DANGER TO HUMAN LIFE AND EVERY DANGER TO HUMAN LIFE SUSPENDS THE [LAWS OF THE] SABBATH. IF DEBRIS FALL ON SOMEONE, AND IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER OR NOT HE IS THERE, OR WHETHER HE IS ALIVE OR DEAD, OR WHETHER HE BE AN ISRAELITE OR A HEATHEN, ONE SHOULD OPEN [EVEN ON SABBATH] THE HEAP OF DEBRIS FOR HIS SAKE. IF ONE FINDS HIM ALIVE ONE SHOULD REMOVE THE DEBRIS, AND IF HE BE DEAD ONE SHOULD LEAVE HIM THERE [UNTIL THE SABBATH DAY IS OVER].

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: How did they know that his eyes are enlightened again? When he distinguishes between good and bad [food]. — Abaye said: In the taste thereof. Our Rabbis taught: If one was seized by a ravenous hunger, one feeds him with the less forbidden things first; as between tebel [untithed food] and carrion,¹⁴ one should feed him carrion first; between tebel and fruit of the seventh year, one should give him the fruit of the seventh year first.¹⁵ As between *terumah*¹⁶ and tebel, Tannaim are of divided opinion. For it was taught: One should feed him tebel, but not terumah. Ben Tema holds: Terumah, but not tebel. Rabbah said: If it is possible [to feed him] with common food,¹⁷ there is general agreement that one should prepare it¹⁸ for him and feed him with it; the dispute concerns the case when it is not possible [to feed him] with common food; one holds that [the prohibition of] tebel is more severe, the other assuming that the prohibition¹⁹ of terumah is the more severe. The one holds that [the prohibition of] eating tebel is more severe because terumah is permissible to priests. the other holding [the prohibition of] terumah more severe, whereas tebel may be rendered right [by tithing].

(1) Ps. LVIII, 4.

(2) The suggestion throughout the page of a woman with child who smells a dish and develops a morbid longing for it, is that it is the embryo, and not the mother, who has the desire. If the mother accepted the whispered suggestion, it was due to the noble piety of the unborn child, hence, R. Johanan as the child of the first woman. None is more contemptible than the speculator in foodstuffs who corners the markets for his sordid gain and who causes great affliction among the poor. Such a person, even in the embryonic stage, would not be influenced by the information that it is the Day of Atonement. He would crave his food, unresponsive to any law or sentiment.

(3) Prov. XIV, 10.

(4) So that he does not feel the lack of food.

(5) Which refutes R. Jannai.

(6) V. Shab. 129a.

(7) Two witnesses are considered sufficient evidence (Deut. XIX, 15) and no increase of their number either strengthens, or if they were counter-witnesses, by reason of superior numbers, weakens their original testimony.

(8) And yet on the strength of the two experts who say 'he needs it', he is fed.

(9) Such experts, opposing the patient's own view, would be ignored: 'They are not present at all'.

(10) , bulimy, ox-hunger.

(11) Cf. I Sam. XIV, 27. Such ravenous hunger renders the eyes dull.

(12) That was considered a cure: a fore-runner of modern homeopathics. The Tanna who forbids it denies its curative value, hence its use is forbidden. Matthia b. Heresh believed in this cure, hence permitted it.

(13) The dispute here concerns not the principle, but the efficacy, of the proposed medicines.

(14) Whenever the permitted and forbidden food alone are insufficient to restore the patient, one should proceed by eliminating as far as possible the more forbidden foods. Untithed food involves punishment of death by divine hand, whereas the eating of carrion involves only the castigation by stripes.

(15) Similarly is the fruit of the seventh year less 'forbidden', its eating implies much less penalty than the eating of untithed food, because there only the transgression of a positive commandment is involved.

(16) V. Glos.

(17) [Probably it means that the hungry person can wait for the priestly dues to be duly set aside, v. D.S. a.l. p. 50].

(18) By setting aside the prescribed dues.

(19) In each case that food which is considered less forbidden, or involving less of a penalty, would be given first.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 83b

'If it be possible with common food [etc.]'. Surely it is self-evident?—This refers to the case [that it would have to be done] on the Sabbath.¹ But on the Sabbath, too, It is self-evident, because moving is forbidden only by Rabbinic decree?² — We deal here with a pot without a hole, the obligation³ on which, too, is only Rabbinic.⁴ ('One holds [the prohibition of] tebel is more severe, the other holding [the prohibition of] terumah more severe).⁵ Shall we say that Tannaim have been disputing this matter already?⁶ For it was taught: If one was bitten by a snake, one may call for him a physician from one place into another,⁷ or tear open a hen for him, or cut leak from the ground for him, give it to him to eat, without having separated the tithe thereof; this is the view of Rabbi. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: He must not eat until tithe has been separated. Shall we say that it is in accord with R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, and not with Rabbi?⁸ — You may even say that it is in accord with Rabbi's view. Rabbi [one may say] makes his statement only here because the tithe of vegetables is in question and that is due but Rabbinically, but in the case of the tithe of corn, which is obligatory by Biblical law, even, Rabbi would agree that if you permit him to eat without [due tithing] in the case of a pot without a hole, he would come to eat likewise even in the case of a pot with a hole.⁹

Our Rabbis taught: If one was seized with a ravenous hunger, he is given to eat honey and all kinds of sweet things, for honey and very sweet food enlighten the eyes of man. And although there is no proof for the matter, there is an intimation in this respect: See, I pray you how mine eyes are brightened. because I tasted a little of this honey.¹⁰ What does 'although there is no proof for the matter' mean? Because there no ravenous hunger has seized him. Abaye said: This applies only after a meal, but before the meal, it even increases one's appetite, as it is written: And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him, to David, and gave him, bread, and he did eat,' and they gave him water to drink,' and they gave him a piece of cake of figs, and two clusters of raisins,' and when he had eaten, his spirit came back to him,' for he had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water, three days and three nights.¹¹

R. Nahman said in the name of Samuel: If one was seized by a ravenous hunger, one should give him to eat a tail with honey. R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua said: Also pure flour with honey. R. Papa said: Even barley-flour with honey [is effective]. R. Johanan said: Once I was seized by a ravenous hunger, whereupon I ran to the eastern side of a fig-tree, thus making true in my own case: Wisdom preserveth the life of him who hath it,¹² for R. Joseph learned: One who would taste the [full] taste of a fig, turns to its eastern side, as it is said: And for the precious things of the fruits of the sun.¹³

R. Judah and R. Jose were walking together when a ravenous hunger seized R. Judah. He seized a shepherd and devoured his bread. R. Jose said to him: You have robbed the shepherd! As they entered the city, a ravenous hunger seized R. Jose. They brought him all sorts of foods and dishes. Whereupon R. Judah said to him: I may have deprived the shepherd, but you have deprived a whole town. Also, R. Meir and R. Judah and R. Jose were on a journey together. (R. Meir always paid close attention to people's names, whereas R. Judah and R. Jose paid no such attention to them). Once as they came to a certain place. they looked for a lodging, and as they were given it, they said to him [the innkeeper]: What is your name? — He replied: Kidor. Then he [R. Meir] said: Therefrom it is evident that he is a wicked man, for it is said: For a generation [ki-dor] very forward are they.¹⁴ R. Judah and R. Jose entrusted their purses to him;¹⁵ R. Meir did not entrust his purse to him, but went and placed it on the grave of that man's father. Thereupon the man had a vision in his dream [saying]: Go, take the purse lying at the head of this man! In the morning he [the innkeeper] told them [the Rabbis] about it, saying: This is what appeared to me in my dream. They replied to him: There is no substance in the dream of the Sabbath night¹⁶. R. Meir went, waited there all day, and then took the purse with him. In the morning they [the Rabbis] said to him,: 'Give us our purses'. He said: There never was such a thing!¹⁷ R. Meir then said to them: Why don't you pay attention to people's names? They said: Why have you not told this [before]. Sir? He answered: consider this¹⁸ but a suspicion. I would not consider that a definite presumption! Thereupon they took him [the host] into a shop [and gave him wine to drink].¹⁹ Then they saw lentils on his moustache. They went to his wife and gave her that as a sign, and thus²⁰ obtained their purses and took them back. Whereupon he went and killed his wife. It is with regard to this that it was taught:²¹ [Failure to observe the custom of] the first water²² caused one to eat the meat of pig, [failure to use] the second water slew a person. At the end they, too, paid close attention to people's names. And when they called to a house whose [owner's] name was Balah, they would not enter, saying: He seems to be a wicked man, as it is written: Then said I of her that was [balah] worn out by adulteries.²³

IF SOMEONE WAS BITTEN BY A MAD DOG. Our Rabbis taught: Five things were mentioned in connection with a mad dog. Its mouth is open, its saliva dripping, its ears flap, its tail is hanging between its thighs, it walks on the edge of the road. Some say, Also it barks without its voice being heard. Where does it²⁴ come from? — Rab said: Witches are having their fun with it. Samuel said: An evil spirit rests upon it. What is the practical difference between these two views? — This is the difference

(1) On the Sabbath it is not usually permitted to separate the terumah.

(2) [The prohibition to set aside on Sabbath any of the priestly dues is of Rabbinical origin, in the same category as moving about on the Sabbath articles that are unfit for use (cf. Bez. 36b)].

(3) To tithe the fruit grown therein.

(4) [I.e., the tebel under consideration grew in a pot without a hole, and consequently not subject biblically to priestly dues. Nevertheless where it can be rendered right by setting aside the dues, we are told one should rather override the shebuth (v. Glos.) involved than feed him with what is regarded as tebel only Rabbinically (Rashi)].

(5) [On the interpretation of Rashi which is followed in these notes, the bracketed passage is best omitted, as it is in various MSS. V. D.S.]

(6) [I.e., Rabbah's principle that we override the shebuth rather than to feed him, with produce which is tebel only

Rabbinically, v. p. 408, n. 10].

(7) On the Sabbath, as a rule, that would not be permitted, but in the case of a possible danger to human life, that restriction would be inoperative.

(8) [I.e., Rabbah's principle is in agreement with R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, who likewise holds that the vegetables must be first tithed even on Sabbath, although they are subject to tithes only Rabbinically].

(9) In which case the obligation is Biblical, which involves the penalty of death by divine decree. [MS.M. has an entirely different reading of the whole passage. v. D.S. a. l.]

(14) Ibid. XXXII, 20. The name 'kidor' suggested to R. Meir one who does not deserve confidence. That, as he later explained, was an idiosyncrasy of his own, amounting at best to an intuitive caution.

(15) It was on the eve of the Sabbath,

(16) The Sabbath rest gives rise to idle thoughts which are then reflected in dreams.

(17) Lit., 'these things never happened'.

(18) The suggestion conveyed by the sound of a man's name.

(19) Supplemented from Bah.

(20) Telling him the husband had sent them for the purses and giving her as a proof the fact that lentils had been the last meal in her house.

(21) Corrected in accord with marginal gloss.

(22) The washing of hands before meals implies 'the first water', as against the latter water-washing of the hands after meals, to remove any fat, grease, crumbs, from the meal. The one precedes the blessing before the meal, the other the grace after meals. Failure to wash his hands before meals caused one to eat pork. A certain innkeeper, who served both Jews and heathens, guided himself by the attitude of the guests as to 'first waters'. Once a non-conforming Jew entered, asked for a meal, without washing his hands; the innkeeper taking him for a heathen, placed pork before him (Rashi). In our case, had Kidor washed his hands after meals, and as is usual in such a case, wiped his upper lip, the traces of his repast would not have been visible, the Rabbis would have had no clue as to how to restore their purses to themselves, and the enraged thief would not have killed his wife.

(23) Ezek. XXIII, 43. A play on 'balah', viz., one worn out by wrong living.

(24) The madness of the dog.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 84a

as to killing it by throwing¹ something at it. It was taught in accordance with Samuel: When one kills it, one does so only with something thrown against it. One against whom it rubs itself is endangered; one whom it bites, dies. 'One against whom it rubs itself is endangered'. What is the remedy?—Let him cast off his clothing, and run. As happened with R. Huna, the son of R. Joshua, against whom one mad dog rubbed itself in the market-place: he stripped off his garments and ran, saying: I fulfilled in myself. 'Wisdom preserveth the life of him who hath it'.²

'One whom it bites, dies'. What is the remedy? — Abaye said: Let him take the skin of a male hyena.³ and write upon it: I, So-and-so, the son of that-and-that woman, write upon the skin of a male Hyena: Hami, kanti, kloros. God, God, Lord of Hosts, Amen, Amen, Selah,⁴ Then let him strip off his clothes, and bury then, in a grave [at cross-roads],⁵ for twelve months of a year. Then he should take them out and burn them in an oven, and scatter the ashes. During these twelve months, if he drinks water, he shall not drink it but out of a copper tube, lest he see the shadow⁶ of the demon and be endangered. Thus the mother of Abba b. Martha, who is Abba b. Minyumi, made for him a tube of gold [for drinking purposes].

FURTHERMORE DID R. MATTHIA SAY. R. Johanan suffered from scurvy. He went to a matron, who prepared something for him on Thursday and Friday. He said to her: How shall I do it on the Sabbath? She answered him,: Then you will not need it [any more]. He said: But if I should need it, what then,? She replied: 'Swear unto me by the God of Israel⁷ that you will not reveal it' [to others]; whereupon he swore: 'To the God of Israel I shall not reveal it'. She revealed it to him, and he went forth and expounded it in his lecture. But he had sworn to her? — [He swore]: 'To the God of Israel I shall not reveal it' [which implies] but to His people I shall reveal it! But this is a profanation of the Name?⁸ — It was so that he had explained it [the meaning of his oath] to her from the very beginning. What did she give to him? R. Aha, the son of R. Ammi said: The water of leaven, olive oil and salt. R. Yemar said: Leaven itself, olive oil and salt. R. Ashi said: The fat of a goose-wing. Abaye said: I tried everything without achieving a cure for myself, until an Arab recommended: 'Take the stones of olives which have not become ripe one third, burn them in fire upon a new rake, and stick them into the inside of the gums'.⁹ I did so and was cured. Whence does [scurvy] come? — From [eating] very hot wheat [-en bread], and from the [overnight] remnants of a pie of fish-hash and flour. What is its symptom? — If he puts anything between his teeth, his gums will bleed.

When R. Johanan suffered from scurvy, he applied this [remedy] on the Sabbath and was healed. How could R. Johanan do that?¹⁰ — R. Nahman b. Isaac said: It is different with scurvy, because whereas it starts in the mouth, it ends in the intestines. R. Hiyya b. Abba said to R. Johanan: According to whom is it? According to R. Matthia b. Heresh who said that if one has pains in his throat one may pour medicine into his mouth on the Sabbath?¹¹ — I say: In this case, but in no other.¹² Shall we say that the following [teaching] supports his view? If one is attacked by jaundice one may give him to eat the flesh of a donkey; if one was bitten by a mad dog, one may give him to eat the lobe of its liver; and to one who has pains in his mouth may be given medicine on the Sabbath — this is the view of R. Matthia b. Heresh; but the Sages say: These are not considered cures — Now what does 'these' mean to exclude? Won't you say it is meant to exclude medicine?¹³ No, it is meant to exclude blood-letting in case of asphyxia.¹⁴ Thus also does it seem logical. For it was taught: R. Ishmael son of R. Jose reported three things in the name of R. Matthia b. Heresh: One may let blood in the case of asphyxia on the Sabbath, and one whom a mad dog has bitten may be given to eat the lobe of its liver, and one who has pains in his mouth may be given medicine on the Sabbath, whereas the Sages hold: These are not considered cures. Now what does 'these' exclude? Would you not say 'these' excludes the two latter one, and not the first one?¹⁵ — No, it means to exclude the first two ones, and not the last one.

(1) If it were killed by something held in one's hand the contact with the dog's body might cause the evil spirit to attack the dog's assailant. If madness is the result of witches' fun, no such danger would seem to inhere.

(2) Eccl. VII, 12.

(3) Or, leopard.

(4) V. Blau, Altjud. Zaubewesen, p. 80f

(5) Supplemented from Bah.

(6) Which might have jumped over from the dog, and would endanger him.

(7) The Hebrew proposition 'I' may be interpreted as 'by' (the God of Israel), as the matron meant it; or, 'to' the God of Israel, as the Rabbi took it: I swear that 'to the God of Israel I shall not reveal it'.

(8) If a scholar deceives a non-Jew he profanes the Name of the Lord, Who is associated with the Torah and Israel, much more than when an ordinary Jew does so although it is a grave offence in any case.

(9) Lit., 'inside the row of teeth'.

(10) Since that does not seem to be a dangerous disease, justifying the application of medicine on the Sabbath day. By Rabbinic ordinance that is forbidden, as a fence around the law (Aboth I, 1) to prevent its leading to the grinding of spices for medicinal purposes, grinding being one of the thirty-nine kinds of labour prohibited by Biblical law on the Sabbath.

(11) But the Sages oppose R. Matthia, hence he remains in the minority and his permission is invalid.

(12) Here the Sages will agree with him, because of the ultimately dangerous character of the disease.

(13) As being permissible owing to their curative properties.

(14) Which is permitted.

(15) Which the Rabbis consider a cure. Which proves that the Sages, while they regard bloodletting as a cure for asphyxia and permissible on Sabbath, do not extend this sanction to medicine in general.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 84b

Come and hear: For Rabbah b. Samuel learned: If a woman with child has smelt [food], one feeds her until she is restored; and one who was bitten by a mad dog is given to eat from the lobe of its liver, and one who has pains in his mouth may be given medicine on the Sabbath — these are the words of R. Eleazar b. Jose in the name of R. Matthia b. Heresh. But the Sages say: In this case, but not in another. Now what does 'in this case' refer to? Would you say to the woman with child? That is self-evident; for is there anyone to say that in the case of a woman with child it would not be permitted? — Hence it must refer to the medicine.¹ This is conclusive.²

R. Ashi said: Our Mishnah too justifies this inference. R. MATTHIA B. HERESH SAID FURTHERMORE: IF ONE HAS PAINS IN HIS MOUTH ONE MAY GIVE HIM MEDICINE ON THE SABBATH.³ And herein the Rabbis⁴ do not dispute him. For if it were that the Rabbis dispute him, he should teach these together,⁵ and afterwards mention that the Rabbis dispute it. This is conclusive evidence.

BECAUSE IT IS A POSSIBILITY OF DANGER TO HUMAN LIFE. Why was it necessary to add 'AND WHEREVER THERE IS DANGER TO HUMAN LIFE, THE LAWS OF THE SABBATH ARE SUSPENDED'?-Rab Judah in the name of Rab said: Not only in the case of a danger [to human life] on this Sabbath, but even in the case of a danger on the following Sabbath.⁶ How that? If e.g., the [diagnosis] estimates an eight-day [crisis] the first day of which falls on the Sabbath. You might have said, let them wait until the evening, so that the Sabbaths may not be profaned because of him, therefore he informs us [that we do not consider that]. Thus also was it taught: One may warm water for a sick person on the Sabbath, both for the purpose of giving him a drink or of refreshing him, and not only for [this] one Sabbath did they rule thus, but also for the following one. Nor do we say: Let us wait, because perchance he will get well, but we warm the water for him immediately, because the possibility of danger to human life renders inoperative the laws of the Sabbath, not only in case of such possibility on this one Sabbath, but also in case of such possibility on another Sabbath. Nor are these things to be done by Gentiles or minors,⁷ but by Jewish adults.⁷ Nor do we say in this connection: We do not rely in such matters on the opinions of women, or of Samaritans, but we join their opinion to that of others.⁸

Our Rabbis taught: One must remove debris to save a life on the Sabbath, and the more eager one is, the more praiseworthy is one; and one need not obtain permission from the Beth din. How so? If one saw a child falling into the sea, he spreads a net and brings it up — the faster the better, and he need not obtain permission from the Beth din though he thereby catches fish [in his net]. If he saw a child fall into a pit, he breaks loose one segment [of the entrenchment] and pulls it up — the faster the better; and he need not obtain permission of the Beth din, even though he is thereby making a step [stairs]. If he saw a door closing upon an infant,⁹ he may break it, so as to get the child out — the faster the better; and he need not obtain permission from the Beth din, though he thereby consciously makes chips of wood. One may extinguish and isolate [the fire] in the case of a conflagration — the sooner the better, and he need not obtain permission from the Beth din, even though he subdues the flames.¹⁰ Now all these cases must be mentioned separately. For if only the case of the [infant falling into] the sea had been mentioned [one would have said, it is permitted there] because meantime¹¹ the child might be swept away by the water, but that does not apply in the case [of its falling into] the pit, because since it remains [stays] therein, one might have thought, one may not [save it before obtaining permission], therefore it is necessary to refer to that. And if the teaching had confined itself to the case of the pit, [one would have thought, there no permission is required] because the child is terrified but in the case of a door closing upon it, one might sit outside and [amuse the child] by making a noise with nuts, therefore it was necessary [to include that too].

For what purposes is the 'extinguishing' and 'isolating' necessary? — Even for the benefit of another [neighbouring] court.

R. Joseph said on the authority of Rab Judah, in the name of Samuel: In the case of danger to human life one pays no attention to majority. How is that? Would you say [in the case of] nine Israelites and one heathen among them? But then the majority consists of Israelites! Or, even if there were half and half, in the case of danger to human life, we take the more lenient view? Again, if you say that it is a case of nine heathens and one Israelite, that too is self-evident, because it is stationary and whatever is stationary is considered¹² half and half? — No, it refers to a case in which [one has]¹³ gone off into another court.¹⁴ You might have said: Whosoever has gone off, has gone off from the majority which consisted of heathens, therefore the information that in case of danger to human life, we are not concerned with question of majorities which consisted of heathens. But that is not so, for R. Assi said in the name of R. Johanan: In the case of nine heathens and one Israelite, [if a building collapsed upon them while they were all] in that court, one must remove debris, but not if [a building collapsed] in another court?¹⁵ — This is no contradiction: In the one case all had gone off, in the other only a few had gone off.¹⁶ But could Samuel have said that? Have we not learnt: If one finds therein¹⁷ a child abandoned, if the majority of the inhabitants are heathens, it is to be considered a heathen; if the majority are Israelites, it is to be considered an Israelite; in the case of half and half it is to be also considered an Israelite.¹⁸ And in connection therewith Rab said: This was taught only in relation to sustaining it,¹⁹ but not for the purpose of legitimizing²⁰ it;

(8) If e.g., two say it is necessary, three say it was not, and a woman or a non-Jew assert it is necessary, the opinion of the latter is joined to that of the others, who are in the affirmative, thus presenting a divided opinion, in which case, since danger to human life is involved, the more lenient view is adopted.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 85a

whereas Samuel said: [It was taught] with reference to removing the debris for its sake?¹ — The words of Samuel refer to the first clause, 'If the majority are heathens, it is considered a heathen'. It is in connection therewith that Samuel said that it did not apply to the saving of life.²

'If the majority are heathens, it is considered a heathen'. For what practical law [is this taught]? — Said R. Papa: To give it to eat carrion.³ 'If the majority are Israelites, it is considered an Israelite' — For what practical purpose [is this taught]? To restore to it lost property.⁴ 'In the case of half and half, it is considered an Israelite'. For what practical purpose [is this taught]? Resh Lakish said: With regard to damages⁵ How that? Shall we say that one ox of ours gored one of his?⁶ Let him bring proof and collect!⁷ — No, It is necessary for the case that an ox of his had gored one of ours; then he must pay one half, and concerning the other he can say: Prove that I am not an Israelite and collect!⁸

IF DEBRIS HAD FALLEN UPON SOMEONE [etc.]. What does he teach herewith?⁹ — It states a case of 'not only'.¹⁰ Not only must one remove the debris in the case of doubt as to whether he is there or not, as long as one knows that he is alive if he is there; but, even though it be doubtful whether he is alive or not he must be freed from the debris. Also, not only if it is doubtful whether he be alive or dead, as long as it is definite that he is an Israelite; but even if it is doubtful whether he is an Israelite or a heathen, one must, for his sake, remove the debris.

IF ONE FINDS HIM ALIVE, ONES SHOULD REMOVE THE DEBRIS. But that is self-evident if one finds him alive? — No, the statement is necessary for the case that he has only a short while to live.

AND IF HE BE DEAD, ONE SHOULD LEAVE HIM THERE. But that, too, is self-evident? — It is necessary because of the teaching of R. Judah b. Lakish. for it was taught: One may not save a dead person out of a fire.¹¹ R. Judah b. Lakish said: I heard that one may save a dead person out of a fire. Now even R. Judah b. Lakish says that only because¹² 'a person is upset about a dead relative' and if you will not permit him [to save his dead] he will ultimately come to extinguish the fire, but here, if you do not permit it, what can he do?¹³

Our Rabbis taught: How far does one search?¹⁴ Until [one reaches] his nose. Some say: Up to his heart. If one searches and finds those above to be dead, one must not assume those below are surely dead. Once it happened that those above were dead and those below were found to be alive. Are we to say that these Tannaim dispute the same as the following Tannaim? For it was taught: From where does the formation of the embryo commence? From its head, as it is said: Thou art he that took me [gozi] out of my mother's womb,¹⁵ and it is also said: Cut off [gozi] thy hair and cast it away.¹⁶

Abba Saul said: From the navel which sends its roots into every direction!¹⁷ You may even say that [the first view is in agreement with] Abba Saul, inasmuch as Abba Saul holds his view only touching the first formation, because 'everything develops from its core [middle]', but regarding the saving of life he would agree that life manifests itself through the nose especially, as it is written: In whose nostrils was the breath of the spirit of life.¹⁸

R. Papa said: The dispute arises only as to from below upwards,¹⁹ but if from above downwards, one had searched up to the nose, one need not search any further, as it is said: 'In whose nostrils was the breath of life'.

R. Ishmael, R. Akiba and R. Eleazar b. Azariah were once on a journey, with Levi ha-Saddai²⁰ and R. Ishmael son of R. Eleazar b. Azariah following them. Then this question was asked of them: Whence do we know that in the case of danger to human life the laws of the Sabbath are suspended? — R. Ishmael answered and said: If a thief be found breaking in.²¹ Now if in the case of this one it is doubtful whether he has come to take money or life; and although the shedding of blood pollutes the land, so that the Shechinah departs from Israel, yet it is lawful to save oneself at the cost of his life — how much more may one suspend the laws of the Sabbath to save human life! R. Akiba answered and said: If a man come presumptuously upon his neighbour etc. thou shalt take him from My altar, that he may die.²² I.e., only off the altar, but not down from the altar.²³ And in connection therewith Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: That was taught only when one's life is to be forfeited,

- (2) Samuel holds that even in that case life must be saved, majority or minority not influencing such a duty.

The Jewish owner of an ox which has gored an ox owned by a heathen, is not obliged to pay damages, whereas the heathen would have to pay full damage, whether the owner had been forewarned or not. The Jewish owner of an ox who has gored an ox owned by a fellow-Jew, if not forewarned must pay half of the damage; if forewarned, full damage.
- (6) I.e., the abandoned child. The suggestion is that we would make him pay damage.
- (7) The damages due to you.
- (8) He pays one half, as any Jew not forewarned would if his ox gored the ox of a fellow-Jew. The owner in this case would wait to collect full damages, claiming the owner of the goring ox to be a heathen, hence obliged to repay full damages, even if not forewarned. The latter would say: One half I have paid because I am a Jew. If you wish to collect the other half, it is upon you to adduce evidence that I am not a Jew. Only thus could you collect.

but to save life¹ one may take one down even from the altar. Now if in the case of this one, where it is doubtful whether there is any substance in his words or not, yet [he interrupts] the service in the Temple [which is important enough to] suspend the Sabbath, how much more should the saving of human life suspend the Sabbath laws! R. Eleazar answered and said: If circumcision, which attaches to one only of the two hundred and forty-eight members of the human body, suspends the Sabbath,² how much more shall [the saving of] the whole body suspend the Sabbath! R. Jose son of R. Judah said: Only ye shall keep My Sabbaths,³ one might assume under all circumstances, therefore the text reads: 'Only' viz, allowing for exceptions.⁴ R. Jonathan b. Joseph said: For it is holy unto you;⁵ I.e., it [the Sabbath] is committed to your hands, not you to its hands.

R. Simeon b. Menassia said: And the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath.⁶ The Torah said: Profane for his sake one Sabbath, so that he may keep many Sabbaths. Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: If I had been there, I should have told them something better than what they said: He shall live by them,⁷ but he shall not die because of them. Raba said: [The exposition] of all of them could be refuted, except that of Samuel, which cannot be refuted. That of R. Ishmael — perhaps that is to be taken as Raba did, for Raba said : What is the reason for the [permission to kill the] burglar? No man controls himself when his money is at stake, and since [the burglar] knows that he [the owner] will oppose him, he thinks: If he resists me I shall kill him, therefore the Torah says: If a man has come to kill you. anticipate him by killing him! Hence we know it [only] of a certain case; [but] whence would we know it of a doubtful one? That of R. Akiba's, there too [there may be a refutation]. Perhaps we should do as Abaye suggests, for Abaye said: We give him⁸ a couple of scholars, so as to find out whether there is any substance in his words. Again we know that only in the case of certain death, [but] whence would we know it of a doubtful case? [And similarly with the exposition of] all of them we know it only of a certain case; whence do we know of a doubtful case? But of Samuel, as to that there is no refutation. Rabina, or R. Nahman b. Isaac said: 'Better is one corn of pepper than a whole basket full of pumpkins.'⁹

MISHNAH. THE SIN-OFFERING AND THE GUILT-OFFERING [FOR THE] UNDOUBTED COMMISSION OF CERTAIN OFFENCES¹⁰ PROCURE ATONEMENT, DEATH AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT PROCURE ATONEMENT TOGETHER WITH PENITENCE.¹¹ PENITENCE PROCURES ATONEMENT FOR LIGHTER TRANSGRESSIONS: [THE TRANSGRESSION OF] POSITIVE COMMANDMENTS AND PROHIBITIONS. IN THE CASE OF SEVERER TRANSGRESSIONS IT [PENITENCE] SUSPENDS [THE DIVINE PUNISHMENT], UNTIL THE DAY OF ATONEMENT COMES TO PROCURE ATONEMENT. IF ONE SAYS: I SHALL SIN AND REPENT, SIN AND REPENT, NO OPPORTUNITY WILL BE GIVEN TO HIM TO REPENT.¹² [IF ONE SAYS]: I SHALL SIN AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT WILL PROCURE ATONEMENT FOR ME, THE DAY OF ATONEMENT PROCURES FOR HIM NO ATONEMENT. FOR TRANSGRESSIONS AS BETWEEN MAN AND THE OMNIPRESENT THE DAY OF ATONEMENT PROCURES ATONEMENT, BUT FOR TRANSGRESSIONS AS BETWEEN MAN AND HIS FELLOW THE DAY OF ATONEMENT DOES NOT PROCURE ANY ATONEMENT, UNTIL HE HAS PACIFIED HIS FELLOW. THIS WAS EXPOUNDED BY R. ELEAZAR B. ALARIAH: FROM ALL YOUR SINS BEFORE THE LORD SHALL YE BE CLEAN,¹³ I.E., FOR TRANSGRESSIONS AS BETWEEN MAN AND THE OMNIPRESENT THE DAY OF ATONEMENT PROCURES ATONEMENT, BUT FOR TRANSGRESSIONS AS BETWEEN MAN AND HIS FELLOW THE DAY OF ATONEMENT DOES NOT PROCURE ATONEMENT UNTIL HE HAS PACIFIED HIS FELLOW.¹⁴ R. AKIBA SAID: HAPPY ARE YOU, ISRAEL! WHO IS IT BEFORE WHOM YOU BECOME CLEAN? AND WHO IS IT THAT MAKES YOU CLEAN? YOUR FATHER WHICH IS IN HEAVEN, AS IT IS SAID: AND I WILL SPRINKLE CLEAN WATER UPON YOU AND YE SHALL BE CLEAN.¹⁵ AND IT FURTHER SAYS: THOU HOPE OF ISRAEL, THE LORD!¹⁶ JUST AS THE FOUNTAIN RENDERS CLEAN THE UNCLEAR, SO DOES THE HOLY ONE, BLESSED BE HE, RENDER CLEAN ISRAEL.

GEMARA. Only the undoubted guilt-offering [atones], but not the suspensive one? But is not the word 'forgiveness' written with regard to it too?¹⁷ — These [others] procure complete atonement, the suspensive guilt-offering does not procure complete atonement. Or else, As for these [others]¹⁸ another can effect their atonement, whereas in the case of the suspensive guilt-offering nothing else can effect their atonement. For it was taught: If those who were liable to sin-offerings, or guilt-offerings [for the] undoubted [commission of offences] permitted the Day of Atonement to pass, they are still obliged to offer then, up; but in the case of those who were liable to suspensive guilt-offerings, they are exempt.¹⁹

DEATH AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT PROCURE ATONEMENT TOGETHER WITH PENITENCE. Only TOGETHER WITH PENITENCE, but not in themselves! — Shall we say that this teaching is not in accord with, Rabbi? For it was taught: Rabbi said, For all transgressions [of commands of] the Torah, whether one had repented or not, does the Day of Atonement procure atonement, except in the case of one who throws off the yoke²⁰ [of the Torah], interprets the Torah unlawfully.²¹ or breaks the covenant of Abraham our father.²² In these cases, if he repented, the Day of Atonement procures atonement, if not, not! — You might even say that this is in accord with Rabbi: Repentance needs the Day of Atonement, but the Day of Atonement does not need repentance.

PENITENCE PROCURES ATONEMENT FOR LIGHTER TRANSGRESSIONS: [THE TRANSGRESSION OF] POSITIVE COMMANDMENTS AND PROHIBITIONS. If it procures atonement for the transgression of negative commandments, is it necessary [to state that it procures it for the transgression of] positive ones?²³ — Rab Judah said: This is what he means, [It procures atonement] for [the transgression of] a positive commandment , of a negative commandment that is to be remedied into a positive one.²⁴ But not [for the transgression] of an actual negative commandment? Against this the following contradiction is to be raised: These are light transgressions [for which penitence procures atonement: transgression of] positive commandments and negative commandments

(1) If one had been sentenced to death, there is ample provision for a revision, if even at the last moment someone claims to have found evidence of the accused's innocence. If a priest has such evidence, or is only believed to have it, he would be taken down from the altar even after he had commenced, and before having completed, his service.

(2) The circumcision must take place on the eighth day, even if that day falls on the Sabbath, suspending the law of the Sabbath, which prohibits operation, as well as preparations leading to it.

(10) Cf. Lev. V, 15 and VI, 6, as opposed to the suspensive guilt-offering, due in the case of doubtful commission of sin, which postpones punishment until that doubt is removed, when a sin-offering is due to procure atonement. Among the guilt-offerings due for undoubted commission of certain offences are: one for illegal appropriation of private property, after reparation has been made; one for misappropriation of sacred property; one for carnal connection with a bondswoman betrothed to another man; the offering of a nazirite who had interrupted the days of his avowed naziriteship by levitical impurity.

(11) Penitence is essential; it consists of genuine regret, and determination to improve one's conduct. In the case of any offering (sin or guilt) such penitence is taken for granted, for without it no sacrifice has any meaning or value.

with the exceptions of: Thou shalt not take [in vain]¹ — 'Thou shalt not take' and others of the same kind.²

Come and hear: R. Judah said: For everything from 'Thou shalt not take' and down repentance procures atonement, for everything from 'Thou shalt take' and up.³ penitence procures suspension [of punishment] and the Day of Atonement procures atonement? — 'Thou shalt not take' and others of the same kind.

Come and hear: Since in connection with Horeb⁴ penitence and forgiveness are stated,⁵ one might assume, that includes the [transgression of] 'Thou shalt not take', therefore it says: He will not clear the guilty.⁶ Then I might have assumed that with all others guilty of having transgressed negative commandments the same is the case, therefore the text reads: '[Will not clear the guilt of him who taketh] His name [in vain].'⁷ i.e., He does not clear the guilt in [the taking in vain of] His name, but He clears the guilt in the transgression of other negative commandments?⁸ -This is indeed a point of dispute between Tannam; for it was taught: For what transgression does penitence procure atonement? For that of a positive commandment. And in what case does repentance suspend punishment and the Day of Atonement procure atonement? In such as involve extirpation, death-penalty through the Beth din and in actual negative commandments.

The Master said: In connection with Horeb [penitence and]⁹ forgiveness is stated. Whence do we know that? Because it was taught : R. Eleazar said: It is impossible to say. 'He will not clear the guilt'¹⁰ Since it says: 'He will clear the guilt'; nor is it possible to say: 'He will not clear the guilt' since it is said: 'He will clear the guilt'; how is that to be explained? 'He clears the guilt' of those who repent, and does not 'clear the guilt' of those who do not repent.

R. Matthia b. Heresh asked R. Eleazar b. Azariah in Rome: have you heard about the four kinds of sins, concerning which R. Ishmael has lectured? He answered: They are three, and with each is repentance connected — If one transgressed a positive commandment , and repented , then he is forgiven, before he has moved from his place; as it is said: Return, O backsliding children.¹¹ If he has transgressed a prohibition and repented, then repentance suspends [the punishment] and the Day of Atonement procures atonement, as it is said : For on this day shall atonement be made for you ... from all your sins.¹² If he has committed [a sin to be punished with] extirpation or death through the Beth din, and repented, then repentance and the Day of Atonement suspend [the punishment thereon], and suffering finishes the atonement,¹³ as it is said: Then will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with strokes.¹⁴ But if he has been guilty of the profanation of the Name, then penitence has no power to suspend punishment, nor the Day of Atonement to procure atonement, nor suffering to finish it, but all of them together suspend the punishment and only death finishes it , as it is said : And the Lord of hosts revealed Himself in my ears; surely this iniquity shall not be expiated by you till ye die.¹⁵ What constitutes profanation of the Name? — Rab said: If, e.g., I take meat for the butcher and do not pay him at once.¹⁶ Abaye said: That we have learnt [to regard as profanation] only in a place wherein one does not go out to collect payment, but in a place where one does not go out to collect, there is no harm in it [not paying at once]. Rabina said: And Matha Mehasia¹⁷ is a place where one goes out collecting payments due. Whenever Abaye bought meat from two partners, he paid money to each of them, afterwards bringing them, together and squaring accounts with both. R. Johanan said: In my case [it is a profanation if] I walk four cubits without [uttering words of] Torah or [wearing] tefillin.¹⁸

Isaac, of the School of R. Jannai, said: If one's colleagues are ashamed of his reputation, that constitutes a profanation of the Name. R. Nahman b. Isaac commented: E.g., if people say, May the Lord forgive So-and-so. Abaye explained: As it was taught: And thou shalt love the Lord thy God,¹⁹ i.e., that the Name of Heaven be beloved because of you. if someone studies Scripture and Mishnah, and attends on the disciples of the wise, is honest in business,²⁰ and speaks pleasantly to persons, what do people then say concerning him? 'Happy the father who taught him Torah, happy the teacher who taught him Torah; woe unto people who have not studied the Torah; for this man has studied the Torah look how fine his ways are, how righteous his deeds! . Of him does Scripture say: And He said unto me: Thou art My servant, Israel, in, whom I will be glorified.²¹ But if someone studies Scripture and Mishnah, attends on the disciples of the wise, but is dishonest in business, and discourteous in his relations with people, what do people say about him? ' Woe unto him who studied the Torah, woe unto his father who taught him Torah; woe unto his teacher who taught him Torah!' This man studied the Torah: Look, how corrupt are his deeds, how ugly his ways; of him Scripture says: In that men said of them,: These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of His land.²²

R. Hama b. Hanina said: Great is penitence, for it brings healing to the world, as it is said: I will heal their backsliding, I will love them, freely.²³ R. Hama b. Hanina pointed out a contradiction: It is written : Return, ye backsliding children,²⁴ I.e., you who were formerly backsliding; and it is written: I will heal your backsliding?²⁵ This is no difficulty: in the one case the reference is where they return out of love, in the other, out of fear.²⁶

Rab Judah pointed out this contradiction: It is written: 'Return ye backsliding children, I will heal your backsliding', but it is also written: For I am a lord unto you. and I will take you one of a city. and two of a family?²⁷ This is no contradiction: The one verse speaks [of a return] out of love or fear; the other, when it comes as a result of suffering.

R. Levi said: Great is repentance, for it reaches up to the Throne of Glory, as it is said: Return, O Israel, unto the Lord thy God.²⁸

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 86b

R. Johanan said: Great is repentance. for it overrides a prohibition of the Torah, as it is said: . . . saying: If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, may he return unto her again? Will not that land be greatly polluted? But thou hast played the harlot with many lovers; and wouldest thou yet return to Me? Saith the Lord.¹ R. Jonathan said: Great is repentance, because it brings about redemption, as it is said And a redeemer will come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob,² i.e., why will a redeemer come to Zion? Because of those that turn from transgression in Jacob. Resh Lakish said: Great is repentance, for because of it premeditated sins are accounted as errors, as it is said: Return, O Israel, unto the Lord, thy God,' for thou hast stumbled in thy iniquity.³ 'Iniquity' is premeditated, and yet he calls it 'stumbling' But that is not so! For Resh Lakish said that repentance is so great that premeditated sins are accounted as though they were merits, as it is said: And when the wicked turneth from his wickedness, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall live thereby!⁴ That is no contradiction: One refers to a case [of repentance] derived from love, the other to one due to fear. R. Samuel b. Nahmani said in the name of R. Jonathan: Great is repentance, because it prolongs the [days and]⁵ years of man, as it is said: 'And when the wicked turneth from his wickedness . . . he shall live thereby'. R. Isaac said: In the West [Palestine] they said in the name of Rabbah b. Mari: Come and see how different from the character of one of flesh and blood is the action of the Holy One, blessed be He. As to the character of one of flesh and blood, if one angers his fellow,⁶ it is doubtful whether he [the latter] will be pacified or not by him. And even if you would say, he can be pacified, it is doubtful whether he will be pacified by mere words. But with the Holy One, blessed be He, if a man commits a sin in secret, He is pacified by mere words, as it is said: Take with you words, and return unto the Lord.⁷ Still more: He even accounts it to him as a good deed, as it is said: And accept that which is good.⁷ Still more: Scripture accounts it to him as if he had offered up bullocks, as it is said : So will we render for bullocks the offerings of our lips.⁷ Perhaps you will say [the reference is to] obligatory bullocks. Therefore it is said: I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely.⁸

It was taught: R Meir used to say, Great is repentance. for on account of an individual who repents, the sins of all the world are forgiven, as it is said: I will heal their backsliding. I will love them freely, for mine anger is turned away from him.⁸ 'From them' it is not said, but 'from him,'.

How is one proved a repentant sinner? — Rab Judah said: If the object which caused his original transgression comes before him on two occasions, and he keeps away from it. Rab Judah indicated: With the same woman, at the same time, in the same place. Rab Judah said: Rab pointed out the following contradictions. It is written: Happy is he whose transgression is covered,⁹ whose sin is pardoned;¹⁰ and it is also written: He that covereth his 'transgression shall not prosper?'¹¹ This is no difficulty, one speaks of sins that have become known [to the public], the other of such as did not become known.¹² R. Zutra b. Tobiah in the name of R. Nahman said: Here we speak of sins committed by a man against his fellow, there of sins committed by man against the Omnipresent.¹³ It was taught: R. Jose b. Judah said: If a man commits a transgression, the first, second and third time he is forgiven, the fourth time he is not forgiven, as it is said: Thus saith the Lord.' For three transgressions of Israel, Yea for four, I will not reverse it;¹⁴ and furthermore it says: Lo, all these things does God work, twice, yea, thrice, with a man.¹⁵ What does 'furthermore' serve for? — One might have assumed that applies only to a community, but not to an individual, therefore: Come and hear [the additional verse]: 'Lo, all these things does God work, twice, yea, thrice with a man'.

Our Rabbis taught: As for the sins which one has confessed on one Day of Atonement, he should not confess them on another Day of Atonement; but if he repeated them, then he should confess them, on another Day of Atonement — And if he had not committed them again, yet confessed them again, then it is with regard to him that Scripture says: As a dog that returneth to his vomit, so is a fool that repeateth his folly.¹⁶ R. Eleazar b. Jacob said: He is the more praiseworthy, as it is said: For I know my transgressions, and my sin is even before me.¹⁷ How then do I [explain]. 'As a dog that returneth to his vomit, etc.'? In accord with R. Huna; for R. Huna said: Once a man has committed a sin once and twice, it is permitted to him. 'Permitted'? How could that occur to you? — Rather, it appears to him as if it were permitted.¹⁸

It is obligatory to confess the sin in detail [explicitly], as it is said: This people have sinned a great sin, and have made them a god of gold.¹⁹ These are the words of R. Judah b. Baba. R. Akiba said: [This is not necessary],²⁰ as it is said: 'Happy is he whose transgression is covered, whose sin is pardoned.'²¹ Then why did Moses say: 'And have made them a god of gold'? That is [to be explained] in accord with R. Jannai, for R. Jannai said:²² Moses said before the Holy One, blessed be He: The silver and gold which Thou hast increased unto Israel until they said 'enough !'²³ has caused them to make golden gods.

Two good administrators arose unto Israel, Moses and David. Moses begged: let my sin be written down, as it is said: Because ye believed not in me to sanctify me.²⁴ David begged that his sin be not written down, as it is said; 'Happy is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is pardoned'. This case of Moses and Aaron may be compared to the case of two women who received in court the punishment of stripes; one had committed an indecent act, the other had eaten the unripe figs of the seventh year.²⁵ Whereupon the woman who had eaten unripe figs of the seventh year said: I beg of you, make known for what offence I²⁶ have been punished with stripes, lest people say: The one woman was punished for the same sin that the other was punished for. They brought unripe fruits of the seventh year, and hanged them on her neck, and they were calling out before her: This woman was punished with stripes because she ate the unripe figs of the seventh year.

One should expose hypocrites to prevent²⁷ the profanation of the Name,²⁸ as it is said: Again, when a righteous man doth turn from righteousness. and commit iniquity, I will lay a stumbling-block before him.²⁹ The repentance of the confirmed sinner delays punishment, even though the decree of punishment for him had been signed already. The careless ease of the wicked ends in calamity. Power buries those who wield it. Naked did man come into the world, naked he leaves it. Would that his coming forth be like his coming in.³⁰ Whenever Rab went to the court, he used to say thus: Out of his own will he goes³¹ towards death, the wishes of his household he is unable to fulfil, for he returns empty to his home. Would that the coming forth be like the going in.³²

The stipend was insufficient to meet the needs of his household, the only fruit was the fear that he may leave the court less righteous than he entered it. There were no salaries for the judges in antiquity. Like the office of the Rabbi, it was a post of honour. But every scholar who spent his time exclusively in the study of the Torah was freed from taxes and received public and private privileges.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 87a

Out of his own will he goes towards death, the wishes of his household he is unable to fulfil, for he returned empty to his house. Would that the coming forth be like the going in).¹ And when he [Rab]² saw a crowd escorting him, he would say: Though his excellency mount up to heaven, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet shall he perish forever like his own dung, they that have seen him shall say: 'Where is he?'³ When R. Zutra was carried shoulder-high⁴ on the Sabbath before the Pilgrimage festivals,⁵ he would say: For riches are not forever; and doth the crown endure unto all generations?⁶

It is not good to respect the person of the wicked.⁷ It is not good for the wicked that they are being favoured [by the Holy One, blessed be He] in this world. It was not good for Ahab that he was favoured in this world, as it is said: Because he humbled himself before Me, I will not bring the evil in his days.⁸ So as to turn aside the righteous in judgment⁹ — it is good for the righteous that they are not favoured in this world. It was good for Moses that he was not favoured in this world, as it is said: Because ye believed not in Me, to sanctify Me [etc.]. But had you believed in Me your time to depart this world would not yet have come. Happy are the righteous! Not only do they acquire merit, but they bestow merit upon their children and children's children to the end of all generations, for Aaron had several sons who deserved to be burnt like Nadab and Abihu, as it is said: 'That were left';¹⁰ but the merit of their father helped them. Woe unto the wicked! Not alone that they render themselves guilty, but they bestow guilt upon their children and children's children unto the end of all generations. Many sons did Canaan have, who were worthy to be ordained¹¹ like Tabi, the slave of R. Gamaliel, but the guilt of their ancestor caused them [to lose their chance].

Whosoever causes a community to do good, no sin will come through him, and whosoever causes the community to sin, no opportunity will be granted him to become repentant. Whosoever causes a community to do good, no sin will come through him'. Why? Lest he be in Gehinnom, and his disciples in Gan Eden [Paradise], as it is said: For Thou wilt not abandon my soul to the nether world, neither wilt Thou suffer thy godly one to see the pit.¹²

'And whosoever causes the community to sin, no opportunity will be granted him for repentance', lest he be in Gan Eden and his disciples in Gehinnom, as it is said: A man, that is laden with the blood of any person shall hasten his steps unto the pit; none will help him.¹³

IF ONE SAYS: I SHALL SIN, AND REPENT, SIN AND REPENT. Why is it necessary to state I SHALL SIN AND I SHALL REPENT twice? — That is in accord with what R. Huna said in the name of Rab; for R. Huna said in the name of Rab: Once a man has committed a transgression once or twice, it becomes permitted to him. 'Permitted'? How could that come into your mind — Rather, it appears to him like something permitted.

I SHALL SIN AND THE DAY OF ATONEMENT SHALL PROCURE ATONEMENT; THEN THE DAY OF ATONEMENT DOES NOT PROCURE ATONEMENT. Shall we say that our Mishnah is not in accord with Rabbi, for Rabbi said: It was taught, For all transgressions of Biblical commandments, whether he repented or not, whether positive or negative, does the Day of Atonement procure atonement? — You may even say it will be in agreement with Rabbi. It is different when he relies on it.¹⁴

FOR TRANSGRESSIONS COMMITTED BY MAN AGAINST THE OMNIPRESENT. R. Joseph b. Helbe pointed out to R. Abbahu the following contradiction: [We learned]:¹⁵ FOR TRANSGRESSIONS COMMITTED BY MAN AGAINST HIS FELLOWMAN THE DAY OF ATONEMENT PROCURES NO ATONEMENT, but it is written: If one man sin against his fellow-man, God [Elohim] will pacify him?¹⁶ 'Elohim' here means 'the Judge'. But how then is the second half of the clause to be understood, 'But if a man sin against the Lord, who shall entreat for him'? — This is what he means to say: 'If a man sins against his fellow-man, the judge will judge him, he [his fellow] will forgive him';¹⁷ 'but if a man sins against the Lord God, who shall entreat for him'? Only repentance and good deeds.

R. Isaac said: Whosoever offends his neighbour, and he does it only through words, must pacify him, as it is written: My son, if thou art become surety for thy neighbour, If thou hast struck thy hands for a stranger — , thou art snared by the words of thy mouth. . . do this, now, my son, and deliver thyself, seeing thou art come into the hand of thy neighbour; go, humble thyself, and urge thy neighbour.¹⁸ If he has a claim of money upon you, open the palm of your hand to him,¹⁹ and if not, send many friends to him.²⁰ R. Hisda said: He should endeavour to pacify him through three groups of three people each, as it is said: He cometh before me and saith: I have sinned and perverted that which was right, and it profited me not.²¹ R. Jose b. Hanina said: One who asks pardon of his neighbour need do so no more than three times, as it is said: Forgive. I pray thee now . . . and now we pray thee.²² And if he [against whom he had sinned] had died, he should bring ten persons and make them stand by his grave and say: I have sinned against the Lord, the God of Israel, and against this one, whom I have hurt. R. Abba had a complaint against R. Jeremiah. He [R. Jeremiah] went and sat down at the door of R. Abba and as the maid poured out water, some drops fell upon his head. Then he said: They have made a dung-heap of me, and he cited this passage about himself: He raiseth up the poor out of the dust.²³ R. Abba heard that and came out towards him, saying: Now, I must come forth to appease you, as it is written: 'Go, humble thyself and urge thy neighbour'. When R. Zera had any complaint against any man, he would repeatedly pass by him,²⁴ showing himself to him, so that he may come forth to [pacify] him. Rab once had a complaint against a certain butcher, and when on the eve of the Day of Atonement he [the butcher] did not come to him,²⁵ he said: I shall go to him to pacify him. R. Huna met him and asked: Whither are you going, Sir? He said, To pacify So-and-so. He thought: Abba²⁶ is about to cause one's death.²⁷ He went there and remained standing before him [the butcher], who was sitting and chopping an [animal's] head. He raised his eyes and saw him [Rab], then said: You are Abba, go away. I will have nothing to do with you. Whilst he was chopping the head, a bone flew off, struck his throat, and killed him.

Talmud - Mas. Yoma 87b

R. Hiyya, whereupon Rab started again from the beginning; as Bar Kappara entered, he started again from the beginning; as R. Simeon, the son of Rabbi entered, he started again from the beginning. But when R. Hanina b. Hama entered, he said: So often shall I go back? And he did not go over it again. R. Hanina took that amiss. Rab went to him on thirteen eves of the Day of Atonement, but he would not be pacified. But how could he do so, did not R. Jose b. Hanina Say: One who asks pardon of his neighbour need not do so more than three times?¹ — It is different with Rab.² But how could R. Hanina act so [unforgivingly]? Had not Raba said that if one passes over his rights, all his transgressions are passed over [forgiven]? — Rather: R. Hanina had seen in a dream that Rab was being hanged on a palm tree, and since the tradition is that one who in a dream is hanged on a palm tree will become head [of an Academy] he concluded that authority will be given to him, and so he would not be pacified, to the end that he departed to teach Torah in Babylon.³

Our Rabbis taught: The obligation of confession of sins comes on the eve of the Day of Atonement, as it grows dark. But the Sages said: Let one confess before one has eaten and drunk, lest one become upset⁴ in the course of the meal. And although one has confessed before eating and drinking, he should confess again after having eaten and drunk, because perchance some wrong has happened in the course of the meal, And although he has confessed during the evening prayer, he should confess again during the morning prayer; [and although he has confessed] during the morning prayer, he should do so again during the Musaf [additional prayer]. And although he had confessed during the Musaf, he should do so again during the afternoon prayer; and although he had done so in the afternoon prayer, he should confess again in the Ne'ilah [concluding prayer]. And when shall he say [the confession]? The individual after his 'Amidah Prayer',⁵ the public reader in the middle thereof. What is it [the confession]? — Rab said: 'Thou knowest the secrets of eternity'.⁶ Samuel said: From the depths of the heart.⁷ Levi said: And in thy Torah it is said . . .⁸ R. Johanan said: Lord of the Universe, [etc.].⁹ Rab Judah: 'Our iniquities are too many to count, and our sins too numerous to be counted'. R. Hamnuna said: 'My God, before I was formed, I was of no worth, and now that I have been formed, it is as if I had not been formed. I am dust in my life, how much more in my death. Behold I am before Thee like a vessel full of shame and reproach. May it be thy will that I sin no more, and what I have sinned wipe away in Thy mercy, but not through suffering'.¹⁰ That was the confession [of sins] used by Rab all the year round, and by R. Hamnuna the younger, on the Day of Atonement. Mar Zutra said: All that [is necessary only] when he did not say: 'Truly, we have sinned'.¹¹ but if he had said: 'Truly, we have sinned', no more is necessary, for Bar Hamdudi said: Once I stood before Samuel, who was sitting, and when the public reader came up and said: 'Truly, we have sinned', he rose. Hence he inferred that this was the main confession.

We learned elsewhere: On three occasions of the year the priests raise their hands [in benediction] four times during the day; at the morning prayer, at Musaf, at Minhah [afternoon prayer] and at the closing of the [Temple] gates. Viz., on fast days, at the ma'amads and on the Day of Atonement.¹² What [is the prayer at] 'the closing of the [Temple] gates'? — Rab said: An extra prayer.¹³ Samuel said: 'Who are we, what is our life, etc.'?¹⁴

The following objection was raised: On the evening of the Day of Atonement one reads seven [benedictions]¹⁵ and then makes the confession, in the morning prayer one reads seven [benedictions] and makes confession, at Musaf one reads the seven [benedictions] and makes confession, at Minhah one reads the seven [benedictions] and makes confession, and at Ne'ilah one reads the seven [benedictions] and makes confession?¹⁶ [And further was]¹⁷ it taught: On the Day of Atonement as it becomes dark one reads the seven benedictions and makes confession, and concludes with the confession¹⁸ — that is the view of R. Meir, whereas the Sages say: He should read the seven [benedictions], and if he wishes to conclude with the confession, he may do so. That would be a refutation of Samuel?¹⁹ — It is a refutation.

'Ulla b. Rab came down [to the reader's desk] before Raba, commencing the Ne'ilah prayer with 'Thou hast chosen us and concluding with 'What are we, what is our life', and he praised him. R. Huna b. Nathan said: The individual should say it²⁰ after his prayer.

Rab said: The concluding prayer exempts from evening prayer [to follow]. Rab goes according to his idea that it is all extra prayer, and since one has said it already [at dusk] it is not required any more. But did Rab say so? Did not Rab say: The halachah is according to the view that the evening Prayer is not obligatory?²¹ He said this on the view that it is obligatory.²²

An objection was raised: On the evening of the Day of Atonement he should read seven [benedictions] and make confession, in the morning also seven and make confession, at Musaf also seven and make confession, at Minah also seven and make confession,²³ at Ne'ilah also seven and make confession, at the evening Prayer he reads seven benedictions [the seventh consisting of] the substance of the eighteen benedictions.²⁴ R. Hanina b. Gamaliel said in the name of his ancestors: One must read the complete prayer of eighteen benedictions,

(3) After the death of Raba, R. Hanina became head of the Academy (v. Keth. 103b) and he interpreted the dream to mean that he would die soon, to make place for Rab. In order to allow for another interpretation, with less fatal results to himself of that vision, he refused to become reconciled to Rab, forcing the latter to go to Babylon, where in accord with that dream he did become before long head of the School of Sura.

But the Sages say he need not read the seven (benedictions), which would be in support of Samuel. Thus the view of Samuel is 'a point of' dispute among Tannas'. Talmud - Mas. Yoma 88a because one must make mention of Habdalah¹ in the benediction [commencing with] 'Thou favourest'.² That is a dispute of Tannaim, for it was taught in a Baraitha: All those obliged to immerse themselves may do so in their usual manner on the Day of Atonement, the menstruating woman, and the woman after childbirth immerse themselves in their usual manner on the evening of the Day of Atonement. One who had a pollution may do so until the afternoon prayer.³ R. Jose said: He may do so throughout the day. But the following contradiction is to be pointed out: A man or woman afflicted with gonorrhoea, or with leprosy, one who had had intercourse with a menstruant, or one rendered unclean by contact with a dead person, may immerse themselves in their usual manner on the Day of Atonement. A menstruating woman, and a woman after childbirth may immerse themselves in their usual manner on the night before the Day of Atonement. One who had experienced a pollution may immerse himself throughout the day.⁴ R. Jose said: From the Minhah onwards, he may not immerse himself? — This is no difficulty: The one refers to the case that he had read the Ne'ilah prayer,⁵ the other that he had not read the Ne'ilah. If he had prayed, what is the reason for the view of the Rabbis?⁶ — The Rabbis hold: It is obligatory to take the ritual bath at the proper times.⁷ This implies that R. Jose would not hold this not to be obligatory, but surely it was taught: If he has had the name [of God] inscribed on his body he must not bathe, nor anoint himself, nor stand in an unclean place; if it happens that he is obliged to immerse himself, he should tie some reed around, go down and immerse himself, R. Jose said: He may go down and immerse himself in the usual manner, provided he does not rub it off. And we know that they are disputing the principle as to whether it is obligatory to take the ritual bath at its definite time!⁸ [The Tanna of] that [former Baraitha]⁹ is R. Jose b. Judah, for it was taught: R. Jose b. Judah said: The [one] immersion at the end suffices for her.¹⁰ Our Rabbis taught: One who experiences a pollution on the Day of Atonement should go down and immerse himself and in the evening he should rub himself off properly. 'In the evening'? What is passed, is it not passed?¹¹ Rather say: He should rub himself off on the eve before!¹² He holds it is obligatory to rub oneself off. A tanna¹³ recited before R. Nahman: To one who experienced a pollution on the Day of Atonement, all sins will be forgiven. But it was taught: All his sins will be arranged before him? — What does 'arranged' mean? Arranged to be forgiven. In the School of R. Ishmael it was taught: One who experienced a [night-] pollution on the Day of Atonement, let him be anxious throughout the year, and if he survives the year, he is assured of being a child of the world to come. R. Nahman b. Isaac said: You may know it [from the fact that] all the world is hungry, and he is satisfied. When R. Dimi came, he said: He will live long, thrive and beget many children.¹⁴

(1) Lit., 'division'. The reference to the distinction between holy and profane recited in the Amidah on the termination of the Sabbath and Festivals.

(2) V. P.B., p. 46.

(3) That means, if he had experienced pollution before then, he may immerse himself until Minhah, so that he may pray the afternoon prayer. But if it happened after the afternoon prayer, he should not immerse himself, but await until dark therewith. The Sages hold that the Ne'ilah is to be said at night, and therefore in agreement with Rab's teaching, renders exempt the evening prayer; whereas R. Jose, who holds that the man who had experienced pollution may immerse himself throughout the day, so that even if he had experienced after the afternoon prayer, he may immerse himself in order that he might pray the concluding prayer, is of the opinion that the Ne'ilah prayer is not said at night, and therefore does not exempt the evening service.

(4) V. supra 6b.

(5) Before he experienced the pollution, and therefore R. Jose holds that he may not immerse himself after the Minhah.

- (6) In the second Baraitha, allowing immersion after Minhah.
- (7) And since the time of the immersion of those who experienced pollution is during the day, they may do so even after Minhah.
- (8) V. supra 8a.
- (9) Who does not permit immersion after Minhah because he does not regard it as an obligation to immerse at the proper time.
- (10) V. Shab., Sonc. ed., p. 598, n. 11.
- (11) How can a later action influence something completed before?
- (12) So that his body be sufficiently clean, and in the case of a pollution the immersion will touch every part of his body. An immersion is ritually effective only if the waters reach unimpeded the whole surface of the body.
- (13) V. Glos. s.v. (b).
- (14) His experience indicates that his seed will multiply.

Mishna - Mas. Zavim Chapter 1

MISHNAH 1. IF A MAN HAS SEEN ONE ISSUE OF THE FLUX,¹ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HE IS TO BE COMPARED TO [A WOMAN] WHO AWAITS DAY AGAINST DAY;² BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: HE IS TO BE COMPARED TO ONE WHO HAS SUFFERED [NOCTURNAL] POLLUTION.³ SHOULD HE SEE AN ISSUE [ONE DAY]. AND ON THE SECOND IT STOPPED, AND ON THE THIRD DAY HE SAW TWO [ISSUES], OR ONE [ISSUE] THAT WAS AS COPIOUS AS TWO,⁴ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HE IS A REAL ZAB;⁵ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: HE DEFILES THOSE OBJECTS ON WHICH HE SITS OR LIES, AND MUST ALSO OBTAIN IMMERSION IN RUNNING WATER, BUT HE IS EXEMPT FROM THE OFFERING.⁶ R. ELEAZAR B. JUDAH SAID: BETH SHAMMAI CONCUR THAT IN SUCH A CASE HE CANNOT BE DEEMED A REAL ZAB;⁷ WHERE THEY DO DISPUTE IS IN THE CASE OF ONE WHO HAD SUFFERED TWO [ISSUES], OR ONE [ISSUE] THAT WAS AS COPIOUS AS TWO [ON ONE DAY], AND STOPPED ON THE SECOND DAY, AND ON THE THIRD DAY HE SAW ANOTHER [ISSUE]. IN SUCH A CASE BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HE IS A REAL ZAB;⁸ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: HE ONLY DEFILES THOSE OBJECTS ON WHICH HE SITS OR LIES, AND MUST OBTAIN IMMERSION IN RUNNING WATER, BUT IS EXEMPT FROM THE OFFERING.⁹

MISHNAH 2. IF ONE SUFFERS AN ISSUE OF SEMEN ON THE THIRD DAY OF COUNTING AFTER HIS FLUX,¹⁰ BETH SHAMMAI SAY: IT RENDERS VOID THE TWO CLEAN DAYS THAT HAVE PRECEDED;¹¹ BUT BETH HILLEL SAY: IT RENDERS VOID ONLY THAT DAY.¹² R. ISHMAEL SAYS: IF HE SUFFERED IT ON THE SECOND DAY,¹³ IT RENDERS VOID THE PRECEDING DAY;¹⁴ BUT R. AKIBA SAYS: IT MATTERS NOT WHETHER HE SUFFERED IT ON THE SECOND OR THIRD DAY¹⁵ — [IN EITHER CASE] BETH SHAMMAI SAY, IT RENDERS VOID THE TWO PRECEDING DAYS, AND BETH HILLEL SAY, IT RENDERS VOID ONLY THAT DAY ITSELF. BUT THEY¹⁶ CONCUR THAT IF HE SUFFERED IT ON THE FOURTH DAY [OF COUNTING] IT RENDERS VOID ONLY THAT DAY [OF THE COUNTING],¹⁷ PROVIDED IT WAS A DISCHARGE OF SEMEN; BUT IF IT HAD BEEN AN ISSUE OF FLUX, THEN EVEN IF THIS HAD OCCURRED ON THE SEVENTH DAY, IT RENDERS VOID ALL THE DAYS THAT HAD PRECEDED.¹⁸

MISHNAH 3. IF HE SAW ONE ISSUE ON ONE DAY AND TWO ON THE NEXT DAY, OR TWO ON ONE DAY AND ONE ON THE MORROW, OR THREE ON THREE [CONSECUTIVE] DAYS, OR THREE NIGHTS, HE IS DEEMED A REAL ZAB.¹⁹

MISHNAH 4. IF HE SAW ONE [ISSUE] AND A PAUSE TOOK PLACE OF SUFFICIENT DURATION TO ALLOW AN IMMERSION AND A DRYING,²⁰ AND AFTER THAT HE SAW TWO ISSUES, OR ONE AS COPIOUS AS TWO,²¹ OR IF HE SAW TWO [ISSUES] OR ONE AS COPIOUS AS TWO, AND AN INTERVAL TOOK PLACE OF SUFFICIENT DURATION TO ALLOW AN IMMERSION AND A DRYING, AND AFTER THAT HE AGAIN SAW AN ISSUE, HE IS A REAL ZAB.

MISHNAH 5. IF HE SAW ONE ISSUE WHICH WAS AS COPIOUS AS THREE, LASTING AS LONG [AS IT TAKES TO GO] FROM GAD-YAWAN²² TO SILOAH,²³ IN WHICH TIME ONE CAN BATHE AND DRY TWICE,²⁴ HE BECOMES A REAL ZAB. IF HE SAW ONE ISSUE WHICH WAS AS COPIOUS AS TWO, HE DEFILES [OBJECTS] ON WHICH HE LIES OR SITS AND MUST OBTAIN IMMERSION IN RUNNING WATER, BUT IS EXEMPT FROM BRINGING A SACRIFICE. R. JOSE SAID: THEY HAVE NOT SPOKEN OF ONE ISSUE AS COPIOUS UNLESS THERE WAS SUFFICIENT THEREIN TO MAKE UP THREE.²⁵

MISHNAH 6. IF HE BEHELD ONE ISSUE AT DAY-TIME AND ANOTHER AT TWILIGHT,

OR ONE AT TWILIGHT AND THE OTHER ON THE MORROW, THEN IF IT WERE KNOWN²⁶ THAT PART OF THE ISSUE²⁷ OCCURRED AT DAY-TIME AND PART THEREOF ON THE MORROW,²⁸ HIS STATUS IS CERTAIN IN RESPECT OF A SACRIFICE AND UNCLEANNESS;²⁹ BUT IF IT IS IN DOUBT WHETHER PART [OF THE ISSUE] OCCURRED DURING THE DAY AND PART THERE OF [ON WHAT IS] THE DAY FOLLOWING,³⁰ HE IS IN A STATUS OF CERTAINTY IN RESPECT OF DEFILEMENT,³¹ BUT IN ONE OF DOUBT IN RESPECT OF A SACRIFICE.³² IF HE HAD SEEN ISSUES ON TWO SEPARATE DAYS AT TWILIGHT,³³ HIS STATUS IS IN DOUBT BOTH IN RESPECT OF DEFILEMENT³⁴ AND IN RESPECT OF A SACRIFICE.³⁵ IF [HE HAD SEEN ONLY] ONE ISSUE AT TWILIGHT, THERE IS A DOUBT [ALSO] IN RESPECT OF [HIS] DEFILEMENT.³⁶

- (1) A zab is one who is afflicted with gonorrhoea as distinct from a semen discharge.
 - (2) Who, though not treated as a real zabah until she has had three issues (as defined), nevertheless defiles objects on which she sits or lies after the first issue; cf. Nid. 39a. cf., however, ibid. 72b.
 - (3) Cf. Lev. XV, 16ff. Such a one does not convey uncleanness to objects lain or sat upon; neither does it defile by carriage but only by contact.
 - (4) I.e., the issue lasted as long as he could traverse during its duration a distance of fifty cubits. The measure of time usually employed is the time taken by man to immerse and dry himself.
 - (5) Subject to all laws enumerated in Lev. XV, 12-15. When one has seen two issues on one day, or on two consecutive days, he must begin to count seven clean days, but is exempt from bringing a sacrifice; but if he has suffered three issues on one day, or on three consecutive days, he becomes a real zab and he must count seven clean days and bring a sacrifice (Lev. XV, 2-3). In the case of a woman, however, these three issues had to occur on three consecutive days.
 - (6) The differentiating points of view between the two rival schools are these: Beth Shammai say a real zab is one who has beheld three issues, even if there was an interval of a fluxless day between the first and third, but according to Beth Hillel, the fluxless second day neutralizes the issue of the first.
 - (7) Since the fluxless second day neutralizes the issue beheld on the previous day.
 - (8) Maintaining that since the counting of seven clean days has begun with the appearance of two issues on the first day, the fluxless second day is of no account, and it is as if he had beheld three issues; accordingly a sacrifice must be brought.
 - (9) Due to the absence of issue on the second day, he cannot be pronounced as a real zab; hence no offering is brought.
 - (10) Having suffered two issues of flux and thereupon commenced the counting of seven clean days.
 - (11) And another counting of seven days must commence; Nid. 22a.
 - (12) On which he suffered an issue of semen, and only five further days are to be counted; the first two being included in the total of seven.
 - (13) I.e., he had counted one clean day and had beheld an issue of semen on the second day.
 - (14) Even Beth Hillel agree that in such a case the preceding day is rendered void.
 - (15) Maintaining that in such an instance the dispute holds good.
 - (16) Beth Shammai.
 - (17) Since three clean days had transpired.
 - (18) For the Bible lays emphasis on seven clean days; viz., until all the seven consecutive days are free from flux; v. Nid. 33b.
 - (19) V. supra I, 2.
 - (20) Less than this time is not accounted an interval, and the second flux is included with the first. To count it as two distinct issues, this lapse of time must ensue.
 - (21) I.e., there is sufficient time between the commencement and conclusion of the flux for immersion and drying the body.
 - (22) Gad (the God of Fortune) of the Greeks cf. Isa LXV, 11. Probably the name of a pool connected with Siloah, near Jerusalem; cf. Sanh. 63b. V. 'Er. 22b; Toh. VI, 6. Aliter: the shrine of a pagan idol (Bert.).
 - (23) Siloam; Isa. VIII, 6.
 - (24) I.e., in which a distance of one hundred cubits can be traversed.
 - (25) Only then was the sacrifice obligatory. According to R. Jose, no issue, copious as it was, could be deemed as more than one, unless quantitatively it contained the amount of three separate issues.

- (26) I.e., theoretically, as in point of fact this can not be ascertained.
- (27) Which was seen at twilight.
- (28) Even if there be not the stipulated time of immersion and drying between; the reason being that twilight is at the parting of two distinct days a day dying and a day awaiting birth.
- (29) Having witnessed three issues; for the one at twilight, being at the parting of two days, is deemed as two.
- (30) For the issue may have terminated while it was yet day, or commenced only after nightfall.
- (31) Having at least beheld two issues.
- (32) Since it is questionable whether the issue at twilight is to be deemed one or two.
- (33) The first issue was when twilight commenced, and the second when twilight ended. An Illustration: If he had seen an issue on Friday eve, with the appearance of twilight, and the second issue at the termination of the Sabbath — the Sabbath Day itself being issue-less — accordingly, he had not experienced two issues on two consecutive days. If, however, twilight is reckoned either as belonging to the day or night, there are two issues on two consecutive days, and the counting of seven clean days must commence, though no sacrifice is brought. On the other hand, if twilight be divided as partly belonging to day and partly to night, then the issue beheld is deemed as two, and together with the one witnessed in that day, constitute three issues, and sacrifice must be brought, though he must not eat thereof on account of doubt of its liability (Bert.).
- (34) Lest one clear day had elapsed between the two issues.
- (35) Since the twilight's issue may have been bipartite, belonging both to this day and the day following.
- (36) Lest it be only of sufficiency for one issue.

Mishna - Mas. Zavim Chapter 2

MISHNAH 1. ALL PERSONS¹ BECOME UNCLEAN THROUGH A FLUX, ALSO PROSELYTES AND SLAVES WHETHER FREED OR NOT, A DEAF-MUTE, AN IMBECILE OR MINOR, A EUNUCH WHETHER [HE HAD BEEN EMASCULATED] BY MAN, OR WAS A EUNUCH FROM [THE TIME OF SEEING] THE SUN.² UPON ONE WHOSE SEX WAS UNKNOWN, OR UPON A HERMAPHRODITE,³ THE STRINGENCIES APPERTAINING TO BOTH MAN AND WOMAN ARE IMPOSED: THEY DEFILE THROUGH BLOOD LIKE A WOMAN, AND THROUGH FLUX⁴ LIKE A MAN. THEIR UNCLEANNES, HOWEVER, STILL REMAINS IN DOUBT.⁵

MISHNAH 2. ALONG [THE FOLLOWING] SEVEN LINES IS A ZAB EXAMINED AS LONG AS HE HAD NOT ENTERED THE BOUNDS OF ZIBAH:⁶ [ENQUIRIES] AS TO [WHAT WAS] HIS FOOD,⁷ DRINK,⁸ AS [TO WHAT] HE HAD BORNE, WHETHER HE HAD JUMPED, WHETHER HE HAD BEEN ILL, WHAT HE HAD SEEN,⁹ OR [WHETHER HE HAD] OBSCENE REFLECTIONS. [IT DIFFERED LITTLE] WHETHER HE HAD REFLECTED [OBSCENELY] PRIOR TO SEEING [A WOMAN], OR WHETHER HE HAD SEEN [A WOMAN] PRIOR TO HIS [OBSCENE] REFLECTIONS.¹⁰ R. JUDAH ADDS: EVEN IF HE HAD WATCHED BEASTS, WILD ANIMALS OR BIRDS HAVING INTERCOURSE WITH EACH OTHER, AND EVEN WHEN HE HAD SEEN A WOMAN'S DYED GARMENTS. R. AKIBA ADDED: EVEN IF HE HAD EATEN ANY KIND OF FOOD, BE IT GOOD OR BAD, OR HAD DRUNK ANY KIND OF LIQUID.¹¹ WHEREUPON THEY EXCLAIMED TO HIM: ['ACCORDING TO YOUR VIEW] THERE WILL BE NO ZABIM IN THE WORLD HENCEFORTH!'¹² HIS RETORT TO THEM WAS: YOU ARE NOT HELD RESPONSIBLE FOR THE EXISTENCE OF ZABIM!'¹³ AS SOON, HOWEVER, AS IT HAD ENTERED THE BOUNDS OF ZIBAH,¹⁴ NO FURTHER EXAMINATION TOOK PLACE.¹⁵ [HIS FLUX] RESULTING¹⁶ FROM AN ACCIDENT, OR THAT WAS AT ALL DOUBTFUL,¹⁷ OR AN ISSUE OF SEMEN, THESE ARE UNCLEAN,¹⁸ SINCE THERE IS WHEREON TO RELY.¹⁹ IF HE BEHELD A FIRST [ISSUE] HE IS EXAMINED; ON THE SECOND [ISSUE] HE IS EXAMINED,²⁰ BUT ON THE THIRD [ISSUE] NO EXAMINATION TAKES PLACE.²¹ R. ELIEZER SAYS: ALSO ON THE THIRD [ISSUE] HE IS EXAMINED TO ASCERTAIN HIS LIABILITY TO A SACRIFICE.

MISHNAH 3. IF ONE SUFFERED [A DISCHARGE OF] SEMEN HE DOES NOT CONVEY UNCLEANNESS BY REASON OF A FLUX²² FOR TWENTY-FOUR HOURS.²³ R. JOSE SAYS: [ONLY] THAT DAY. IF A GENTILE EXPERIENCED A DISCHARGE OF SEMEN, AND HE BECAME A PROSELYTE, HE BECOMES IMMEDIATELY UNCLEAN BY REASON OF A FLUX.²⁴ IF [A WOMAN] HAD [AN ISSUE] OF BLOOD,²⁵ OR HAD EXPERIENCED DIFFICULTY [IN CHILDBIRTH],²⁶ [THE TIME PRESCRIBED] IS TWENTY-FOUR HOURS.²⁷ IF ONE SMITES HIS SERVANT, THE 'DAY OR TWO'²⁸ IS TWENTY-FOUR HOURS. IF A DOG ATE A CORPSE'S FLESH, THE THREE DAYS [DURING WHICH IT CONTINUES WITHIN] IN A NATURAL STATE ARE OF TWENTY-FOUR HOURS.²⁹

MISHNAH 4. A ZAB³⁰ DEFILES THOSE OBJECTS ON WHICH HE LIES³¹ BY FIVE WAYS, WITH THE RESULT THAT THEY [IN TURN] DEFILE MEN AND GARMENTS.³² [THESE ARE:] BY STANDING, SITTING, LYING, LOUNGING OR LEANING. WHAT HE LIES UPON DEFILES MAN BY SEVEN WAYS, SO THAT HE [IN TURN] DEFILES GARMENTS.³² [THESE ARE:] BY STANDING, SITTING, LYING, LOUNGING, OR LEANING UPON IT, OR BY TOUCHING OR CARRYING IT.³³

(1) The term 'all' is always inclusive in sense; here it serves to include even a child of a day old.

(2) I.e., a eunuch by nature, v. Yeb. VIII, 4.

(3) Cf. Bik. IV.

(4) Lit., 'white'.

(5) As a man he should be clean on experiencing a flow of blood; as a woman he should be clean on suffering a discharge of flux. If, however, he experienced a flow of both (blood and flux) then he is certainly unclean; and if he had touched terumah it has to be burnt.

(6) If he had not yet suffered two issues that make it necessary for him to begin the seven days' counting, he is examined as to whether that second issue was not due to some accidental external cause, and hence treated like semen.

(7) Solid meals of oily foods often precipitated a discharge of semen.

(8) So did excessive drinking, and the carrying of heavy burdens.

(9) The mere sight of a very attractive woman would also often be a cause.

(10) For each independently could have been a cause of semen, and consequently it is not treated as flux.

(11) Even such that do not usually suffuse the body with a glow of warmth.

(12) Since few, if any, would as a result be declared as zabim.

(13) Who says there must be zabim in the world!

(14) I.e., after he had beheld two issues not accidentally.

(15) Even if the third issue resulted from accidental causes he has to bring the prescribed sacrifice on becoming clean. Similarly, if during the counting of the seven clean days he had beheld a flux, though accidental, the counting must commence anew.

(16) As enumerated above.

(17) Whether it was semen or a flux. V. Nazir 66a.

(18) Defiling also by contact, v. Kel. I, 3.

(19) Lit., 'the matter has feet (to stand on)'. No further evidence is necessary since we have already established the fact that he is a zab.

(20) Whether or not it was accidental and thereby determine his obligation to bring a sacrifice should he have two more issues. Even if the first issue was pronounced as a result of accidental causes, but the second was natural, he defiles objects on which he sits or lies, requires immersion in running water, and the counting of seven clean days.

(21) Neither for uncleanness nor for sacrifice.

(22) On the second issue.

(23) Attributing the flux to some external cause, as in Mishnah 2.

(24) A proselyte assumes the legal status of a newly-born child. Accordingly the flux beheld now that he is an Israelite has no connection with that experienced prior to his conversion.

(25) The following instances are not germane to our theme, but are cited here to include these instances in which twenty-four hours is a criterion.

- (26) Outside the period of menstruation such blood-issue is not unclean.
(27) For the former case v. Nid. 2a, and for the latter, ibid 36b.
(28) Ex. XXI, 21.
(29) V. Ohol. XI, 7. The examples above by no means exhaust all cases of twenty-four hours.
(30) The zab is cited but it refers to a menstruant, a leper, or one who has given birth to a child.
(31) Or sits upon.
(32) I.e., the men in turn defiling the garments which they touched while still in contact with the unclean object.
(33) Viz., the object which the zab had used as a couch.

Mishna - Mas. Zavim Chapter 3

MISHNAH 1. IF A ZAB AND ONE THAT WAS CLEAN SAT TOGETHER IN A BOAT, OR ON A RAFT, OR RODE TOGETHER ON A BEAST, THEY,¹ THOUGH THEIR GARMENTS HAD NOT ACTUALLY TOUCHED,² SUFFER MIDRAS³ UNCLEANNESS. IF THEY SAT TOGETHER ON A PLANK, A BENCH OR A BEDFRAME,⁴ OR ON A BEAM, WHEN THESE WERE NOT FIXED TIGHTLY,⁵ [OR] IF THEY HAD BOTH CLIMBED A TREE OF INFERIOR STRENGTH,⁶ OR [WERE SWAYING] ON A BRANCH OF INFERIOR STRENGTH⁷ OF A FIRM TREE; OR IF THEY WERE BOTH [CLIMBING] ON AN EGYPTIAN LADDER,⁸ NOT SECURED BY A NAIL,⁹ OR IF THEY SAT TOGETHER ON A BRIDGE, RAFTER OR DOOR, NOT SECURED BY CLAY, THEY¹⁰ ARE UNCLEAR. ACCORDING TO R. JUDAH THEY ARE CLEAN.

MISHNAH 2. IF THEY WERE BOTH¹¹ CLOSING OR OPENING [A DOOR], [HE THAT WAS CLEAN AND HIS GARMENTS BECOME UNCLEAR]. BUT THE SAGES SAY: [UNCLEANNESS IS NOT CONVEYED]¹² UNLESS ONE WAS SHUTTING AND THE OTHER OPENING [IT].¹³ IF ONE WAS LIFTING THE OTHER OUT OF A PIT [UN CLEANNESS IS CONVEYED]. BUT R. JUDAH SAID, ONLY IF HE THAT WAS CLEAN WAS PULLING OUT HIM THAT WAS UNCLEAR.¹⁴ IF THEY WERE TWISTING ROPES TOGETHER [UNCLEANNESS IS CONVEYED]. BUT THE SAGES SAY, UNLESS THE ONE PULLED ONE WAY AND THE OTHER PULLED THE OTHER WAY. IF THEY WERE BOTH WEAVING TOGETHER, WHETHER THEY WERE STANDING OR SITTING, OR GRINDING WHEAT, [UNCLEANNESS IS CONVEYED]. R. SIMEON DECLARES [THE CLEAN MAN] IN EVERY CASE UNDEFILED, EXCEPT WHERE THEY [BOTH] WERE GRINDING WITH A HAND-MILL. IF THEY [BOTH] WERE UNLOADING OR LOADING AN ASS, THEY¹⁵ ARE UNCLEAR IF THE LOAD WAS HEAVY, BUT CLEAN IF THE LOAD WAS LIGHT. IN BOTH CASES,¹⁶ HOWEVER, THEY ARE CLEAN FOR MEMBERS OF THE SYNAGOGUE,¹⁷ BUT ARE UNCLEAR FOR HEAVE-OFFERING.¹⁸

MISHNAH 3. IF THE ZAB AND THE CLEAN PERSON SAT TOGETHER IN A LARGE BOAT (WHAT IS A LARGE BOAT? R. JUDAH SAID: ONE THAT DOES NOT SWAY WITH A MAN'S WEIGHT), OR IF THEY SAT ON A PLANK, BENCH, BED-FRAME, OR BEAM WHEN THESE WERE FIRMLY SECURED;¹⁹ OR IF THEY BOTH CLIMBED A STRONG TREE, A FIRM BRANCH, OR A TYRIAN²⁰ LADDER, OR AN EGYPTIAN LADDER FIXED BY A NAIL; OR IF THEY SAT ON A BRIDGE, RAFTER OR DOOR, WHEN THESE WERE FASTENED WITH CLAY, IF ONLY AT ONE END, THEY REMAIN CLEAN. IF THE CLEAN MAN STRUCK THE UNCLEAR, HE STILL REMAINS CLEAN;²¹ BUT IF THE UNCLEAR STRUCK HIM THAT WAS CLEAN, HE BECOMES DEFILED; FOR [IN THAT CASE] IF HE THAT WAS CLEAN DREW BACK, THE UNCLEAR WOULD HAVE FALLEN.²²

(1) The clean man and his garments.

(2) The clean person, by his weight, causes the boat, raft or beast to sink to one side and rise at the other, thereby causing the zab to be lifted up or suspended by him.

(3) v. Glos.

(4) A frame on which a couch is spread; it used to be placed in a little bed-chamber and taken apart; or it was placed against the wall in day-time. Aliter: boards placed under a bed to prevent its rotting owing to the humidity of the ground below.

(5) With the result that they both swayed and each leaned against the other.

(6) The tree's strength was determined by ability to hollow out of its stem the size of a quarter of a kab (Bert.).

(7) Which could be hidden in the palm of a man's hand; B.M. 105a.

(8) Of the small variety; B.B. III, 6.

(9) With the result that it bent.

(10) The man that was clean and his garments.

(11) The zab and the clean person.

(12) From the zab to the clean man.

(13) At the same time. The clean person thus bearing the counter-weight of the zab.

(14) In that case, the clean person is bearing the weight of the zab. This would not be so if the reverse was the case.

(15) The man who was clean and his garments.

(16) Be the load heavy or light.

(17) Who eat hullin in purity, since doubt is attached if the clean person actually bore the weight of the zab.

(18) This being a Rabbinic injunction even in the case of uncertain defilement.

(19) Cf. supra III, 1.

(20) Of a larger variety than the Egyptian ladder; v. B.B. III, 6.

(21) From midras uncleanness, since he does not bear the weight of the zab. He and his garments do suffer hesset uncleanness, having been 'shifted' by the zab; v. infra V, 1.

(22) In his attempt to strike, hence it is as if the zab had actually leaned against him.

Mishna - Mas. Zavim Chapter 4

MISHNAH 1. R. JOSHUA SAID: IF A MENSTRUANT¹ SAT IN ONE BED WITH ONE THAT WAS CLEAN, [EVEN] THE CAP ON HER² HEAD SUFFERS MIDRAS UNCLEANNESS; AND IF SHE SAT IN A BOAT, THE VESSELS ON THE TOP OF THE MAST [ALSO] CONTRACT MIDRAS UNCLEANNESS.³ IF SHE TOOK A TUB FULL OF CLOTHES AND THEIR WEIGHT WAS HEAVY, THEY BECOME UNCLEAR,⁴ BUT IF THEIR WEIGHT WAS LIGHT, THEY REMAIN CLEAN. IF A ZAB KNOCKED AGAINST A BALCONY AND THEREBY CAUSED A LOAF OF TERUMAH TO FALL DOWN, IT REMAINS CLEAN.⁵

MISHNAH 2. IF HE KNOCKED AGAINST A JOIST, A RAFTER-FRAME, WATER-SPOUT, OR SHELF, THOUGH FIXED WITH ROPES,⁶ OR IF [HE KNOCKED AGAINST] AN OVEN, OR A FLOUR CONTAINER,⁷ OR THE LOWER MILL-STONE, OR THE JACK⁸ OF A HAND-MILL, OR THE SE'AH MEASURE⁹ OF AN OLIVE-GRINDER, [THE LOAF REMAINS CLEAN].¹⁰ R. JOSE ADDS: ALSO [IF HE KNOCKS] AGAINST THE BEAM OF THE BATH-KEEPER.¹¹ IT REMAINS CLEAN.

MISHNAH 3. IF HE KNOCKED AGAINST A DOOR, DOORBOLT,¹² LOCK, OAR,¹³ MILL-STONE FRAME,¹⁴ OR AGAINST A WEAK TREE, OR WEAK BRANCH OF A STRONG TREE, OR AGAINST AN EGYPTIAN LADDER UNSECURED BY NAILS, OR AGAINST A BRIDGE, BEAM OR DOOR, NOT MADE SECURE WITH CLAY, THEY BECOME UNCLEAR.¹⁵ [IF HE KNOCKED] AGAINST A CHEST,¹⁶ BOX OR CUPBOARD, THEY BECOME UNCLEAR. R. NEHEMIAH AND R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, PRONOUNCE THEM CLEAN IN SUCH CASES.¹⁷

MISHNAH 4. A ZAB WHO LAY LENGTHWISE ACROSS FIVE BENCHES, OR FIVE MONEY-BAGS, [MAKES THEM] UNCLEAR,¹⁸ BUT [IF HE LAY ACROSS] THEIR BREADTH, THEY ARE CLEAN.¹⁹ IF HE SLEPT [ON THEM],²⁰ AND IT WAS FEARED LEST

HE HAD TURNED HIMSELF ABOUT²¹ ON THEM, THEY ARE UNCLEAR. IF HE WAS LYING ON SIX SEATS, WITH TWO HANDS ON TWO [SEATS]. TWO FEET ON ANOTHER TWO, HIS HEAD ON ONE, WITH HIS BODY ON ANOTHER ONE, ONLY THAT ONE ON WHICH HIS BODY LAY²² IS RENDERED UNCLEAR. IF [A ZAB] STOOD ON TWO SEATS, R. SIMEON SAYS: IF THESE WERE DISTANT ONE FROM THE OTHER, THEY REMAIN CLEAN.²³

MISHNAH 5. IF THERE WERE PILED TEN CLOAKS ONE ON TOP OF THE OTHER AND HE SAT ON THE UPPERMOST ONE, ALL ARE UNCLEAR.²⁴ IF THE ZAB WAS IN ONE SCALE OF THE BALANCE AND IN THE OTHER SCALE OPPOSITE THERE WERE OBJECTS FIT TO SIT OR LIE UPON, AND THE ZAB OVERWEIGHED, THEY ARE CLEAN;²⁵ BUT IF THEY OVERWEIGHED, THEY ARE UNCLEAR. R. SIMEON SAYS:²⁶ IF THERE WAS BUT ONE [PLACE]²⁷ IT BECOMES UNCLEAR;²⁸ BUT IF THERE WERE MANY²⁹ THEY REMAIN CLEAN, SINCE NONE OF THEM HAD BORNE THE GREATER PART [OF THE ZAB'S WEIGHT].³⁰

MISHNAH 6. IF A ZAB [SAT] IN ONE SCALE OF THE BALANCE, WHILST FOOD AND LIQUIDS WERE IN THE OTHER SCALE, [THE LATTER BECOME] UNCLEAR;³¹ IN THE CASE OF A CORPSE,³² HOWEVER, EVERYTHING³³ REMAINS CLEAN,³⁴ SAVE A MAN.³⁵ THIS IS [AN EXAMPLE OF] THE GREATER STRINGENCY APPLYING TO A ZAB THAN TO A CORPSE; AND THERE IS ALSO ANOTHER INSTANCE OF GREATER STRINGENCY IN THE CASE OF A ZAB THAN A CORPSE.³⁶ FOR WHEREAS THE ZAB DEFILES ALL OBJECTS ON WHICH HE SITS OR LIES UPON, SO THAT THESE LIKEWISE CONVEY UNCLEANNESS TO MEN AND GARMENTS,³⁷ AND CONVEY, MOREOVER. TO WHAT IS ABOVE HIM A MIDDAF UNCLEANNESS,³⁸ SO THAT THESE IN TURN DEFILE FOOD AND LIQUIDS. IN THE CASE OF A CORPSE NO SUCH UNCLEANNESS TAKES PLACE.³⁹ GREATER STRINGENCY IS ALSO FOUND IN THE CASE OF A CORPSE, SINCE IT CAN CONVEY UNCLEANNESS BY OVERSHADOWING,⁴⁰ AND IMPOSES SEVEN DAYS' DEFILEMENT, WHEREAS IN THE CASE OF A ZAB NO SUCH UNCLEANNESS IS CONVEYED.

MISHNAH 7. IF HE SAT ON A BED AND THERE WERE FOUR CLOAKS UNDER THE FOUR LEGS OF THE BED, ALL BECOME UNCLEAR, SINCE THE BED CANNOT STAND ON THREE LEGS;⁴¹ BUT R. SIMEON DECLARES THEM CLEAN.⁴² IF HE RODE ON A BEAST⁴³ AND THERE WERE FOUR CLOAKS UNDER THE LEGS OF THE BEAST, THEY ARE CLEAN, SINCE THE BEAST CAN STAND UPON THREE LEGS.⁴⁴ IF THERE WAS ONE CLOAK UNDER ITS TWO FORELEGS OR ITS TWO HINDLEGS, OR UNDER A FORELEG AND A HINDLEG, IT BECOMES UNCLEAR.⁴⁵ R. JOSE SAYS: A HORSE CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS THROUGH ITS HINDLEGS. BUT AN ASS THROUGH ITS FORELEGS, SINCE A HORSE LEANS UPON ITS HINDLEGS AND AN ASS UPON ITS FORELEGS. IF HE⁴⁶ SAT ON A BEAM OF AN OLIVE-PRESS, THE VESSELS IN THE OLIVE-PRESS⁴⁷ ARE UNCLEAR; BUT IF HE SAT ON A FULLER'S PRESS, THE GARMENTS BENEATH IT ARE CLEAN;⁴⁸ R. NEHEMIAH, HOWEVER, DECLARES THEM UNCLEAR.⁴⁹

(1) Applies also to the zab and the clean person.

(2) The clean person.

(3) Defilement is contracted, though it be impossible for unclean persons to tread there.

(4) Cf. supra III, 2.

(5) Since its fall was not actually due to direct pressure of the zab, but to his vibration.

(6) I.e., not with nails, as is usually done, to secure more firmness.

(7) To collect the flour when wheat is ground.

(8) The receptacle which harbours the hand-mill.

- (9) A large measure fixed in the ground.
- (10) Being considered firm enough to withstand the knocking of the unclean person; and since the falling of the loaf is only due to vibration, no defilement takes place.
- (11) On which he sits.
- (12) A door-pin fitting into sockets top and bottom.
- (13) Cf Ezek. XXVII, 29.
- (14) A hopper to receive the flour dust. It was of a portable nature.
- (15) Being unsteady they bore the full weight of the zab.
- (16) A strong box; v. Git. 68a.
- (17) Referring to the last three objects, on account of their massive character.
- (18) Since the greater part of each had borne his weight as he lay on his back or stomach.
- (19) In this position his weight was not felt on each.
- (20) Across their breadth.
- (21) Lengthwise;
- (22) And which had borne his weight. The other seats also suffer minor uncleanness for having touched the zab, but they do not carry uncleanness to man and object.
- (23) For none had borne his full weight.
- (24) Not necessarily ten cloaks; for even if the zab sits on a large stone on top of one hundred cloaks, all the cloaks below become unclean, as objects on which the zab had sat.
- (25) I.e., from midras uncleanness, due to the absence of direct pressure from the zab; but they do contract minor uncleanness, middaf uncleanness (v. Glos.).
- (26) Following his view in Mishnah 4.
- (27) At the opposite end of the scale to sit or lie upon.
- (28) If that end went down the scales; in that case it bears the zab's full pressure.
- (29) Places opposite the zab fit to sit or lie upon.
- (30) Each of the places bearing only a minor part of his full weight.
- (31) Through pressure (hasset), regardless of the fact which overweighed the other, as above.
- (32) I.e., if a corpse was in one of the scales.
- (33) In the other scale, whether food, liquids, or objects serving as seats or couches.
- (34) A corpse does not defile through pressure.
- (35) Who is defiled when he overweighs a corpse at the other end of the scale; cf. Nid. 69a.
- (36) Var. lec.: 'and there is greater stringency in the case of a corpse than a zab'.
- (37) V. supra II, 4.
- (38) Heb. נָדַח ('driving', 'breathing'). Hence slight or indirect contact. Middaf is not a 'father of uncleanness' but a minor grade, infecting only foods and liquids, but not men and vessels. Maimonides explains middaf as the stench arising from the corpse, thereby contaminating all surrounding objects.
- (39) The objects beneath the corpse do not defile man so that he should defile garments.
- (40) Levitical uncleanness arising from being under the same roof with, or forming a shelter over, a corpse.
- (41) Each leg, therefore, can be said to support the whole weight of the zab.
- (42) Cf. supra IV, 5.
- (43) The beast remaining at a standstill; for were it trotting along, the cloaks would become unclean. For the animal always has in trotting one leg up, and really stands on three legs.
- (44) Each foot being regarded only as a help, but not as essential to bear the full weight of the zab.
- (45) Since an animal cannot remain standing on two legs, the cloak bore at one time the full weight of the zab.
- (46) The zab.
- (47) עֲקֵי is variously explained as a rope-basket in which olives are kept during the pressing process (Bert.); or a basket into which the pressed olives are thrown (so Maim.); cf. Meg. I, 7; Toh X, 8.
- (48) By sitting on a corner of the press, the garments that are being creased within do not bear his full weight (v. Bert.).
- (49) For it is impossible that some of the garments should not bear his full weight.

Mishna - Mas. Zavim Chapter 5

MISHNAH 1. HE WHO TOUCHES A ZAB, OR WHOM A ZAB TOUCHES, WHO MOVES¹ OR WHOM A ZAB MOVES, DEFILES FOOD AND LIQUIDS AND VESSELS THAT ARE RINSED² BY TOUCH, BUT NOT BY CARRIAGE.³ THIS WAS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE WHICH R. JOSHUA FORMULATED: ALL THOSE THAT DEFILE GARMENTS⁴ WHILE STILL IN CONTACT [WITH THEIR SOURCE OF UNCLEANNESS] ALSO DEFILE FOODS AND LIQUIDS SO AS TO BECOME [UNCLEAN] IN THE FIRST GRADE, AND THE HANDS⁵ SO THAT THEY BECOME [UNCLEAN] IN THE SECOND GRADE; BUT THEY DO NOT DEFILE MEN OR EARTHENWARE VESSELS. ONCE, HOWEVER, THEY HAVE BEEN SEPARATED FROM THEIR SOURCE OF UNCLEANNESS THEY DEFILE LIQUIDS SO AS TO BECOME [UNCLEAN] IN THE FIRST GRADE,⁶ AND FOOD AND THE HANDS SO THAT THEY BECOME [UNCLEAN] IN THE SECOND GRADE,⁷ BUT THEY DO NOT DEFILE GARMENTS.

MISHNAH 2. YET ANOTHER GENERAL PRINCIPLE DID THEY FORMULATE: ALL THAT IS CARRIED ABOVE A ZAB BECOMES DEFILED,⁸ BUT ALL THOSE THINGS ABOVE WHICH HE IS CARRIED ARE CLEAN;⁹ EXCLUDING SUCH OBJECTS ON WHICH HE CAN SIT OR LIE UPON,¹⁰ AND A MAN. HOW SO? IF A ZAB HAD HIS FINGER¹¹ BENEATH A LAYER OF STONES AND ONE THAT WAS CLEAN WAS ABOVE,¹² HE CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS AT TWO [REMOVES]. AND RENDERS UNFIT [TERUMAH] AT ONE [FURTHER REMOVE]. IF HE SEPARATED [FROM THE SOURCE OF UNCLEANNESS].¹³ HE STILL DEFILES WITH FIRST-GRADE UNCLEANNESS AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT YET ONE [FURTHER REMOVE]. IF THE UNCLEAN WAS ABOVE, AND THE CLEAN PERSON BELOW,¹⁴ HE CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS AT TWO [REMOVES],¹⁵ AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT YET ONE [FURTHER REMOVE]. IF HE SEPARATED [FROM THE SOURCE OF UNCLEANNESS], HE DEFILES AT ONE [REMOVE] AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT YET ONE [MORE REMOVE]. IF FOODS OR LIQUIDS, OR OBJECTS ON WHICH HE COULD SIT OR LIE UPON OR OTHER ARTICLES¹⁶ WERE ABOVE,¹⁷ THEY DEFILE AT THE TWO REMOVES,¹⁸ AND RENDER [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [FURTHER REMOVE]. IF THEY HAD BECOME SEPARATED [FROM THE SOURCE OF UNCLEANNESS], THEY DEFILE AT ONE [REMOVE] AND RENDER [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE]. ALL OBJECTS FIT TO SIT OR LIE UPON THAT WERE BELOW¹⁹ DEFILE AT TWO [REMOVES], AND RENDER [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE]. FOODS AND LIQUIDS AND OTHER ARTICLES²⁰ THAT ARE BELOW, REMAIN CLEAN.²¹

MISHNAH 3. SINCE IT WAS SAID²² THAT WHATSOEVER CARRIES OR IS CARRIED BY OBJECTS ON WHICH ONE SITS OR LIES UPON REMAIN CLEAN, EXCLUDING THE CASE OF A MAN,²³ WHATSOEVER CARRIES OR IS CARRIED BY CARRION IS CLEAN,²⁴ SAVE HIM THAT MOVES IT.²⁵ R. ELIEZER ADDS: ALSO HE THAT CARRIES IT.²⁶ HE WHO CARRIES OR IS CARRIED UPON A CORPSE REMAINS CLEAN, SAVE WHEN OVERSHADOWING TAKES PLACE,²⁷ OR A MAN WHEN HE MOVES IT.²⁸

MISHNAH 4. IF PART OF AN UNCLEAR PERSON²⁹ RESTS UPON A CLEAN PERSON, OR PART OF A CLEAN PERSON RESTS UPON AN UNCLEAR PERSON, OR IF THE CONNECTIVES³⁰ OF AN UNCLEAR PERSON REST UPON A CLEAN PERSON, OR THE CONNECTIVES OF A CLEAN PERSON UPON ONE UNCLEAR, HE³¹ BECOMES UNCLEAR. R. SIMEON SAYS: IF PART OF AN UNCLEAR PERSON IS UPON A CLEAN PERSON, HE IS UNCLEAR;³² BUT IF PART OF A CLEAN PERSON IS UPON ONE THAT IS UNCLEAR, HE IS CLEAN.

MISHNAH 5. IF AN UNCLEAR PERSON³³ RESTS UPON PART OF AN OBJECT FIT TO LIE UPON, OR A CLEAN PERSON³³ RESTS UPON PART OF AN OBJECT FIT TO LIE

UPON,³⁴ IT BECOMES UNCLEAN.³⁵ IF PART OF AN UNCLEAN PERSON RESTS ON AN OBJECT FIT TO LIE UPON, OR PART OF A CLEAN PERSON RESTS UPON SUCH AN OBJECT,³⁴ IT REMAINS CLEAN.³⁶ THUS WE FIND THAT UNCLEANNESS IS CONTRACTED AND CONVEYED BY THE LESSER PART THEREOF.³⁷ SIMILARLY,³⁸ IF A LOAF OF TERUMAH WAS PLACED UPON AN OBJECT FIT TO LIE UPON [THAT WAS UNCLEAN]. AND THERE WAS A LAYER OF PAPER BETWEEN, WHETHER IT³⁹ WAS ABOVE OR BELOW, IT REMAINS CLEAN. SIMILARLY, IN THE CASE OF A STONE SMITTEN WITH LEPROSY⁴⁰ IT⁴¹ REMAINS CLEAN;⁴² BUT R. SIMEON PRONOUNCED SUCH A CASE UNCLEAN.⁴³

MISHNAH 6. HE WHO TOUCHES A ZAB, OR A ZABAH, A MENSTRUANT, OR A WOMAN AFTER CHILDBIRTH, OR A LEPER, OR ANY OBJECT ON WHICH THESE HAD BEEN SITTING OR LYING, CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS AT TWO [REMOVES]. AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [FURTHER REMOVE].⁴⁴ IF HE HAD BECOME SEPARATED,⁴⁵ HE STILL CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS AT ONE [REMOVE], AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [FURTHER REMOVE]. THIS IS THE CASE WHETHER HE HAD TOUCHED, OR HAD MOVED, OR HAD CARRIED, OR WAS CARRIED.⁴⁶

MISHNAH 7. IF ONE TOUCHES THE FLUX OF A ZAB, HIS SPITTLE, SEMEN OR URINE, OR THE BLOOD OF A MENSTRUANT, HE CONVEYS UNCLEANNESS AT TWO [REMOVES], AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE]; BUT IF HE BECAME SEPARATED,⁴⁷ HE DEFILES AT ONE [REMOVE] AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE]. THIS IS THE CASE WHETHER HE HAD TOUCHED OR MOVED IT.⁴⁸ R. ELIEZER SAID: ALSO IF HE HAD LIFTED IT.⁴⁹

MISHNAH 8. IF HE CARRIED THAT WHICH WAS RIDDEN UPON,⁵⁰ OR IF HE WAS CARRIED THEREON, OR HAD MOVED IT, HE DEFILES AT TWO [REMOVES], AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE]; BUT IF HE BECAME SEPARATED [FROM THE UNCLEANNESS], HE DEFILES AT ONE [REMOVE] AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE]. IF HE CARRIES CARRION, OR THE WATER OF THE SIN-OFFERING OF WHICH THERE WAS SUFFICIENT FOR A SPRINKLING,⁵¹ HE DEFILES AT TWO [REMOVES], AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE]; BUT IF HE BECAME SEPARATED,⁴⁷ HE DEFILES AT ONE [REMOVE] AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE].

MISHNAH 9. HE WHO ATE OF THE CARRION OF A CLEAN BIRD, AND IT STILL IS IN HIS GULLET,⁵² HE DEFILES AT TWO [REMOVES], AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE]. IF HE PUT HIS HEAD WITHIN THE AIR-SPACE OF AN OVEN,⁵³ BOTH HE AND THE OVEN ARE CLEAN;⁵⁴ BUT IF HE VOMITED OR SWALLOWED IT, HE DEFILES AT ONE [REMOVE] AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE].⁵⁵ BUT AS LONG AS IT IS STILL IN HIS MOUTH, THAT IS PRIOR TO SWALLOWING IT, HE REMAINS CLEAN.⁵⁶

MISHNAH 10. HE WHO TOUCHES A DEAD REPTILE, OR SEMEN, OR HIM THAT HAS SUFFERED CORPSE UNCLEANNESS, OR A LEPER DURING HIS DAYS OF COUNTING,⁵⁷ OR WATER OF SIN-OFFERING OF INSUFFICIENT QUANTITY WITH WHICH TO PERFORM THE SPRINKLING,⁵⁸ OR CARRION, OR AN OBJECT RIDDEN UPON,⁵⁹ DEFILES AT ONE [REMOVE] AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE].⁶⁰ THIS IS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE: ALL WHO TOUCH ANY OBJECT REGARDED BY THE TORAH AS A 'FATHER OF UNCLEANNESS'⁶¹ DEFILE AT ONE [REMOVE] AND RENDER [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE], WITH THE EXCLUSION [OF THE CORPSE] OF A MAN.⁶² IF HE⁶³ HAD BECOME SEPARATED,⁶⁴ HE DEFILES AT ONE [REMOVE] AND RENDERS [TERUMAH] UNFIT AT ONE [MORE REMOVE].

MISHNAH 11. HE WHO HAS SUFFERED A [NOCTURNAL] POLLUTION IS LIKE ONE WHO HAS TOUCHED A DEAD REPTILE,⁶⁵ AND HE THAT HAS HAD CONNECTION WITH A MENSTRUANT IS LIKE ONE WHO HAS SUFFERED CORPSE UNCLEANNESS.⁶⁶ HE WHO HAS HAD CONNECTION WITH A MENSTRUANT, HOWEVER, HAS THE MORE STRINGENT IMPOSITION IN THAT HE CONVEYS MINOR GRADES OF UNCLEANNESS TO WHAT HE LIES OR SITS UPON, SO AS TO MAKE FOODS AND LIQUIDS UNCLEAR.⁶⁷

MISHNAH 12. THE FOLLOWING RENDER TERUMAH UNFIT:⁶⁸ ONE WHO EATS FOODS OF FIRST OR SECOND GRADE UNCLEANNESS, AND WHO DRINKS UNCLEAR LIQUIDS,⁶⁹ AND THE ONE WHO HAS IMMERSED HIS HEAD AND THE GREATER PART OF HIM IN WATER WHICH HAD BEEN DRAWN,⁷⁰ AND A CLEAN PERSON UPON WHOSE HEAD AND GREATER PART OF HIM THERE FELL THREE LOGS OF DRAWN WATER,⁷¹ AND A SCROLL [OF SCRIPTURES],⁷² AND [UNWASHED] HANDS,⁷³ AND ONE THAT HAS HAD IMMERSION THAT SAME DAY,⁷⁴ AND FOODS AND VESSELS WHICH HAVE BECOME DEFILED BY LIQUIDS.⁷⁵

(1) By causing the board on which the zab stands to shake.

(2) Which need only to be rinsed (immersed) in order to regain levitical purity. Made usually of wood or metal; those of earthenware must be broken when defiled; Lev. XV, 12.

(3) If at the time of his contact with the zab he was carrying garments which had not been touched, they are clean.

(4) Viz., those that are in contact with a zab or zabah.

(5) Sc. of a clean person not touched by the zab.

(6) Liquids suffer first-grade uncleanness even when touched not by those who are 'fathers', on account of their susceptibility to defilement, unlike foodstuffs which require special preparation to render them susceptible.

(7) On account of their separation from the source.

(8) Including such things not usually borne above a zab, and even if there were many things blocking the way between them.

(9) Provided they are untouched.

(10) Specially designated for this purpose. Also objects on which he can ride.

(11) The bulk of the zab's body pressure being required only when he lies upon an object.

(12) With such a layer thickness, the clean person cannot be said to be exerting pressure on the zab; yet he is here deemed to be carried by the zab and becomes a 'father of uncleanness'.

(13) Either by removal of the zab's finger from beneath the layer of stones, or by the departure of the clean person from his stone seat. His uncleanness is then only of the first grade.

(14) Having only his finger beneath the layer.

(15) Since the zab is, as it were, carried by him.

(16) Heb. middaf, i.e., the uncleanness of objects arising from their indirect contact with sources of impurity; such uncleanness was deemed to be only of a minor degree. Hence other articles not fit for sitting or lying on.

(17) I.e., above the layer of stones beneath which was the zab's finger.

(18) Objects on which he sits or lies upon always being deemed 'fathers of uncleanness'.

(19) And that bore the brunt of the zab's pressure above.

(20) V. p. 517, n. 8.

(21) In accordance with the principle enunciated above which declared objects above which a zab was borne clean, save those things on which a man sits or lies.

(22) This Mishnah explains the rule laid down in the one preceding, and gives a reason for proclaiming clean the foods and liquids below the layer of stones under which the zab had his finger. Var. lec. delete the words SINCE IT WAS SAID.

(23) Who becomes defiled by carrying objects used for sitting purposes, even without touching or moving them.

(24) Even if it were a man who was the carrier.

(25) He becomes defiled.

- (26) Cf. Hul. 124b where this is emended to read: 'that is, if he carries it', and not just by moving it.
- (27) There can be a case of carrying without overshadowing, i.e., if there is a top storey intervening in which there are vessels weighing down boards of the ceiling of a room in which there is a corpse.
- (28) But if the corpse is not moved from its place, he is clean.
- (29) I.e., a zab, whose very finger defiles by the touch.
- (30) These are hair, nails or teeth.
- (31) Namely, the person that was clean. The point reemphasized is that the full pressure of the bulk of the zab's body is required only when he is lying on an object.
- (32) Maintaining that even in this case it is essential for the bulk of a zab's body to be upon the clean person, if defilement was to be the result.
- (33) Viz., the greater part of him.
- (34) Which was unclean.
- (35) Namely, that which had been clean.
- (36) Viz., the person or object hitherto clean.
- (37) Of what is fit to lie on.
- (38) In illustration of the first ruling in Mishnah 3.
- (39) I.e., the source of defilement.
- (40) Either below or above the loaf of bread separated by a piece of Paper.
- (41) The loaf.
- (42) The leprous stone does convey uncleanness through overshadowing only to objects that are under the same roofing as itself.
- (43) Maintaining that a leprous stone defiles through overshadowing in the same way as a corpse.
- (44) The five sources of uncleanness enumerated are of so rigid a nature that their mere touch is sufficient to cause the defilement of garments and vessels. They are all 'fathers of uncleanness'.
- (45) From the original course of uncleanness.
- (46) Even without touching; a law derived by the Rabbis from the Bible; cf. Pes. 67b, Shab. 3b.
- (47) From the source of uncleanness.
- (48) V. Mishnah 3, n. 5.
- (49) Bert. renders R. Eliezer's meaning thus: 'Provided he had lifted it', maintaining that touching and moving alone are insufficient. The halachah does not concur with his point of view.
- (50) By the unclean enumerated in Mishnah 6.
- (51) This water defiles garments by carrying, but not by touch. If it is of insufficient quantity, it defiles by contact and not by mere carrying.
- (52) I.e., as long as it remains in his gullet he is regarded as a 'father of uncleanness'; V. Toh. I. 1.
- (53) And the carrion is still in his gullet.
- (54) Though he defiles garments, he cannot contaminate man or earthenware vessels.
- (55) Since he is no longer a 'father of uncleanness'; cf. Shebu. 9b.
- (56) And not even the slightest uncleanness attaches to him; for the Bible makes the actual 'eating' the criterion; V. Lev. XXII, 8.
- (57) I.e., during the seven intermediate days between his first and second shaving.
- (58) Cf. Mishnah 8, n. 6.
- (59) By a zab.
- (60) All the things hitherto enumerated defile garments only with carrying, but not by touch; hence he who touches them, though still connected with the source of uncleanness, is not a 'father of uncleanness'.
- (61) I.e., a zab, menstruant, woman after childbirth, one who has suffered corpse-uncleanness and others not enumerated in the Mishnahs above.
- (62) He who touches it becomes a 'father of uncleanness' and remains so even after he had separated from the corpse, and consequently defiles at two removes, etc.
- (63) Sc. who touched a dead reptile etc.
- (64) From the source of defilement.
- (65) Who does not become a 'father of uncleanness' but suffers first-grade uncleanness only.
- (66) Who is a 'father of uncleanness' suffering seven days' defilement.

- (67) Unlike the case of one who suffers corpse-defilement. V. Lev. XV, 7 with its insistence that only the zab renders vessels which serve as a seat or couch unclean; cf. Kel. I, 3.
- (68) V. Shab. 13bff.
- (69) In these three instances second-grade uncleanness is contracted. The Rabbinic precaution was lest he eat of the terumah whilst these things are still in his mouth.
- (70) A further precaution lest the law of the ritual bath (mikweh) be forgotten from Israel.
- (71) For until he has obtained complete immersion his touch invalidates terumah.
- (72) Cf. Toh. XV, 6; Yad. III, 2.
- (73) A precautionary measure in favour of terumah, v. Shab. 24a.
- (74) He must await sunset to be wholly pronounced clean. If in the meantime he touches terumah it must be burnt.
- (75) Being more susceptible to contract uncleanness they became impure at a first remove.
